6. ‘On the right, above the sweep of the wing, was an image of an eagle’s head’, and you saw it had ‘eyes of fire in which there appeared the brilliance of angels as in a mirror’. At the heights of triumphant subjection, then, when a person submits to God and conquers the devil, she is carried aloft in the joy of divine protection. And, fired by the Holy Spirit, when she raises up her mind and fixes her gaze upon God, then the blessed spirits appear in her in plain sight and offer to God the devotion of her heart. The eagle thus symbolizes the spiritual men and women who in full devotion of mind and in contemplation frequently gaze upon God like the angels. Therefore the blessed spirits, who ceaselessly contemplate God, rejoice in the good works of just people, and they show these works to God with their own natures, and so they continue their praise of God and never come to an end, for they will never exhaust his fullness. Could anyone ever count all the innumerable wonders which God brings about through his power and might? Indeed for the angels there is a brightness as of many mirrors, and through this brightness they see, but no one is as active or as powerful as God, since no one is like him, and he is not subject to time.

7. Before the beginning of time, God held in his foreknowledge everything that he has since made. Outside of any moment or passing of time before eternity, all things visible and invisible appeared in the pure and sacred godhead, as trees and other created things when close to water are reflected in it; and though they are not actually in the water physically, nevertheless an accurate shape appears there. When God said ‘Fiat, let there be...’,¹ at once all those things that did not have bodies assumed a physical shape - all those things which he had seen in his foreknowledge before the beginning of time. Just as in a mirror all things are reflected that stand before it, so all his created works appeared in holy divinity outside the passage of time. And how could God be empty of the foreknowledge of his works, since each of his creatures — once it has assumed physical form — is whole and perfect in its designated function; for the holy Divinity knew in advance how he would be present as thought, knowledge and function. A beam of light reveals the form of a created thing through its shadow, and likewise God’s pure foreknowledge perceives the form of every creature before it is embodied. Each thing that God intended to create in his foreknowledge, before it was bodied forth, shone out according to his likeness; and in the same way a man or woman will catch sight of the sun’s splendour before they actually see its substance. And just as the splendour of the sun indicates the sun itself, so also the praise of the angels reveals God, for it cannot ever be that the sun is without its light, and in the same way neither can the deity be without the praise of the angels. So the foreknowledge of God came first, and his work of creation followed; and if his foreknowledge had not preceded, then his work would not have appeared, for you can tell nothing by looking at a person’s body until you see their face: but when you see the person’s face, then you can praise their body. In this way a human being contains within him or her both the foreknowledge of God and the activity of God.

Visiones pulcherime cuiusdam religiose femine que Scultas in titulatur.

A

et incipit qui est in deus in
et incipit qui est in
deus in
et incipit qui est in
deus in

et incipit qui est in
deus in
et incipit qui est in
deus in
et incipit qui est in
deus in

cell.

MANFRED
LAUTENSCHLÄGER
STIFTUNG

12 res parte

 In pma p
 In qru p tudine &
 de amore de et qd dm nich n u de beatis an rethone inq in conugio & cau de paradyso d da de duaru ca n m de posito lune stellaru ue motu et qd ista n m de tabern tione anime de de meglu per canis q de scisu rectu de uolu de libu di ad h o n v de forma et synagoge & q n vi de mirabil de habitu et mu dnu & qd sign n seda parte vi ru pma etunc c igna m patu p tione pme ma ha et reliq p amice et secreto te scputura res nu de trib pson quarias similit nu de forma & sponse di De ap cordob De sa

res partes sūt huius libri.

In p̄ma parte vi. s̄ uisiones.
In q̄rū p̄ma p̄tinet de fortudine & cōtinate regni dī. de amore. de custodia paup̄ū spū.
et q̄d dīm nichil latet.

In ii. de beatis anglis. de luciferi de-iectione in q̄ infernus factus ē de coniugio & causis ei. de pollutione. de paradiso. de ada. et aliis quib.
dā. de duarū excellentia uirtutū.

In iii. de positione firmamēti. solis. lune. stellarū. uentorū. elemētū. de t̄re motu. et q̄d ista significēt.

In iiii. de tabernaculo et p̄grinatione anime. de scientia dī. de idolis. de ineq̄li p̄tatione hominū. & causis ei. de sensu. de anima. de intellectu. de uoluntate. de ratione. de uerbis dī ad ho. i. & de aliis q̄b. dā.

In v. de forma et colore & cecitate synagoge & q̄d ista significēt.

In vi. de mirabili p̄dicatione creature. de habitu. et mira laude. viii. or-dinū & q̄d significēt.

In sēda parte vii. sūt uisiones. in q̄ rū p̄ma cōtinet de in cōphensibili ignea ui. pat̄is. De uerbo. de distinctione p̄me mat̄is. De ada et abrahā. et reliq̄s. p̄ & ioh̄e baptista. De amīc. et secreto cōsilio dī. de morte. sepultura. resurrectione. ascensioe.

In ii. de trib. p̄sonis in una essentia. p̄ uarias similitudines.

In iii. de forma & generatione eccl̄e sponse dī. De apl̄s. martyrib. sacerdotib. De sacramento uere tri-nitatis et filius alienis.

In iiii. de dulcedine flagrami donorū. s. sp̄s. Et de multimoda diuersitate filiorū eccl̄e.

In v. de apl̄s et p̄gmatariis & re-gularib. & uirginitatis multi-plici corona. De his q̄ odor ui-uentis dñs. et nouitate uestiū. de trina eccl̄astica institutione. De infantib. et aliis q̄ plurimis.

In vi. de x̄ in cruce pendente et eccl̄e desponsatione. de obsequio anglorū et corusca luce & ap̄to celo sup altare dī sacerdos misteria celebrat. De v. diuinitatib. cōmunicantiū. De corpore dñi.
De introitu & castitate ministrorū eccl̄e et eunuchis de diuinitatib. pec-catis hominū. et aliis multis.

In vii. cōtinet de iusticia et fide lib. de lege dī de horribili serpente. De foro sēli de diuinitate sp̄u aliu et sēlariū in foro cōsami.

In octa parte s̄ xiiii. uisiones i q̄rū p̄ma cōtinet de in m̄so lapide. et de nube candida sup ipsū de throno rotundo sup nubē existente. De uiuente lucido in throno sedente. de circulo in cō-phensibili ab ipso p̄cedente. De stella magna & semillis eā se-quentib. et extinguis & q̄d significēt.

In ii. de monte lato cōiuncto p̄ dicto lapidi. De quadrangulo edificio sup eundē obliq̄ posito. et de muro int̄rupto. de ppugnaculis. In iii. de v. imaginib.

uirtutū in turri stantib. singulis marci suo. hē de duab. uirtu stantib. qd statū et habuit earū significet. In iiii. de colūna tribi li tres acutos angulos habent.
 De patarchis pphs de aplis et martirib. de multitudine & hu mana. De scientia dī de tplici fla gello. De modis castigationū et cō solationū dī. In v. de capite mira bilis forme & tribilis. De querimo nia elemōx de ecclā & dedicatio ne de decimis et reb. ecclāsticis & de aliis quā plurimis. In vi de spūali magisterio. et de poten tia sc̄lari t̄p̄ta. hē de spūalib. et sc̄larib. in quatuor & uii. diui sis. De diuisis causis et differentiis eorū. De vii uirtutib. et qd stat et habuit earū significet.

In vii. de mirabili colūna inesti mabilis q̄ntitas de trinitate et differentia triū psonarū.

In viii. de colūna maxima et umbrosa. De ubis octo uirtutū. et p̄cipue de melliflua et sua admonitione gr̄e dī. De vii. do nis sc̄i sp̄s. et qd statū et habuit p̄dictarū uirtutū significet.

In viii. cūctis turris lucidissi ma et uerba. uii. uirtutū et mul ta de cūctis in ecclā & statū et habuit p̄dictarū uirtutū. et qd significet. In x. gradus.
 & sup hos sedes posita. sup qm iuuenis. & ei ūba dulcisona ad hoies ī mundū. De iiii. ūba. v. uirtu tū. qd statū et habuit earū signif & alia quedā. In xi. de v. bestis. p̄fy nes. v. ad apices. v. sup collē ligatis.

 De p̄dicto iuene et muliebri ima gine de capite monstruoso. De filii p̄ditionis crudeli p̄secutione. & mi raculis et potestate de helia et enoch. et fine mundi. In xii. de cūssione elemōx de t̄pore fulgurū tonitrū. de casu mortū et siluarū. et resur rectione. De signatis & n̄ signatis. de florib. dī. De iudicatis et iudi candis. de mutatione elemōtorū.

In xiii. cūctis de lucidissimo ae re. De mirabili et diuiso genere musicorū. De simphonia ī laudib.
 s. marie & cūctis supnōx gaudiōx et omnīū scōx.

INCIPIT
EVANGELIUM
SECUNDUM
IOHANNEM
OMNIS

INCIPIT
NO CAP
ITULA
RIOME
PARCIS

CAPITULA p^{ri}me uisionis p^{ri}me patris.

- i. De formidine et stabilitate c^{on}titatis regni dⁱ.
- ii. De timore d^{omi}ni.
- iii. De his qui paupes sp^{iritu}s s^{an}cti.
- iiii. Q^{uod} uirtutes a d^{eo} uenientes t^{em}p^{or}ales d^{omi}ni et paupes sp^{iritu}s custodiunt.
- v. Q^{uod} agnitioni dⁱ abscondi n^{on} possunt studia actiui hominu^m.
- vi. Salomon de eade^m re.
- i. Cap^{itu}la sc^{ilicet} uisionis p^{ri}me patris.
Q^{uod} beati angeli pullo impulsu iniusticie t^{em}p^{or}is ab amore & laude dⁱ abstrahunt.
- ii. Q^{uod} lucifer decorē & uim fortitudinis sue cōsiderans supbiuit. et idō cū sibi p^{re}sensentib^{us} a celesti gl^{ori}a cecidit ē.
- iii. Q^{uod} d^es iniustus ē. si cū n^{on} deiecit^{ur}.
- iiii. Verba iob ad eandē rē.
- v. De inferno q^{uod} in uocatione sua sub mersione animarū tenet.
- vi. Q^{uod} in deiectione diaboli infern^{us} purgandis cetera tormenta posita s^{un}t.
- vii. Q^{uod} gehenna i penitentib^{us} obuia ē.
- iiii. Verba ezechielis de eade^m re.
- v. De diabolica fraude p^{ri}mu^m hoīem p^{er} serpente^m decipiente.
- x. Q^{uod} diabolus nesciuit arbore illa m^{ul}dicta ēē n^{on} ex responsione que tenenda ē que uitanda sunt in coniugio.
- iiii. Verba apli de eade^m re.
- iiii. Cur ante incarnationē d^{omi}ni q^{uod}da plures uxores haberent.
- iiii. Cur nec homo nec ang^{eli}s homi-nē liberare possunt. s^{ed} solus dⁱ fili^{us}.

Verba sapientie de eade^m re. Item.
Q^{uod} ē sanguineus in coniugio n^{on} copulatus de lacte. Item.
Q^{uod} in uet^{er}i testam^{en}to cōgiuū u^{er}it ē sanguineos cōcessū sit in nouo p^{ro}hibitū. Q^{uod} uir n^{on} n^{on} in foru^m citat. n^{on} n^{on} nubilē uxore^m ducat. Item pollutione.
De uandā illicita et libidinosa Q^{uod} mulier post partū. t^{em}p^{or}e a uiro corrupta in occulto maneat. et ab in-gressu tēpli abstineat.
Qui in concu^piscentia se polluit homicide s^{ed}. Item inuit.
O se de eade^m re. Item posuit.
De cōm^{en}datiōe castitatis.
Ioh^{annis} eade^m re. Item in celo.
Q^{uod} expulso adā d^es paradysū Q^{uod} q^{uod} homo d^{eo} rebellis exiit creatura ei p^{ri} subiecta se illi op^{er} De am^{en}nitate paradysi que sucū & u^{er}it t^{em}p^{or}is tribuit. ut aīa corpori.
Q^{uod} d^es hominē tale fecit q^{uod} pec-care possit. Item de ad hominē.
Q^{uod} ho^{mo} n^{on} debet sūma p^{ro}seruari. cū nec infimā ualeat examinare.
Q^{uod} ho^{mo} n^{on} ē clarior fulget q^{uod}m p^{ri}us.
Similitudo horti. ouis & margari-De cōm^{en}datiōe humilitatis & caritatis. que clariore^s ceteris iⁿimib^{us} ex-Cap^{itu}la t^{er}cie uisionis Item istunt.
p^{ri}me partis.
i. Q^{uod} p^{ro}u^{er}sibilia et tēp^{or}alia que in uisibilia & cōtⁱⁿua s^{un}t manifestant^{ur}.
ii. De firmam^{en}to ad similitudinē ouis facto. & q^{uod} sigⁿificet. Item q^{uod} sigⁿificet.
iii. De lucido igne & de ūbrosa pelle

Depo
De as De de
Verb
De p signi
De u
De te accu
De p lunc
De po
De u
De ad
De u
De ha
Verba
De tr
De m orien
De h ra ser
Q^{uod} d
Parab
Cū sal
fuert Verba
Verba
Q^{uod} d
am
De stu
Simil
Conpa
Verba
Cap
p^{ro}g^{ra}m

- | | | | |
|---------|--|----------------|--|
| iii. | Depositione solis ⁊ triū stellarū ⁊ qd. | De pennis aīe. | ¶ sio inmittit. |
| v. | De ascensu solis ⁊ qd significet. | iii. | De tabnaculo qd ingressa ē. |
| vi. | De descensu eīde ⁊ qd significet. | iiii. | Querela aīe diabolicis t̃bimib; |
| vii. | Verba act̃ ap̃lōx ad idē. | | auxilio dī fortit̃ repugnantis. |
| viii. | De p̃mo uento ⁊ turbimib; eī ⁊ qd | v. | De turbimib; q̃s diabolica p̃ sua |
| | significent. | vi. | Qua de causa errores isti excitant̃ |
| ix. | De ii uento ⁊ t̃bimib; eī ⁊ qd sign. | vii. | Qua ratione ira odiū supbia ēp̃sent̃. |
| x. | De tenebroso igne ⁊ sonitu ⁊ de | viii. | Querela aīe d̃ tabnaculo suo cū |
| | accus lapidib; et qd significent. | | timore egrediens. |
| xi. | De purissimo ethere ⁊ de positione | ix. | Qd sciencia dī nulla obscuritate. |
| | lune ⁊ duarū stellarū ⁊ qd sign. | | ullī rei obnubilat̃. ostend̃. |
| xii. | De positione aliarū stellarū ⁊ qd | x. | Qd in pulchritudine iusticie dī |
| xiii. | De iii uento ⁊ t̃bimib; eī ⁊ qd signific. | | nulla iniusticia inueniri pot̃. |
| xiiii. | De aq̃so aere ⁊ alba pelle ⁊ qd sig. | xi. | De sculptilib; ⁊ qd deferenda s̃. |
| xv. | De iiii uento ⁊ t̃bimib; eī ⁊ qd signific. | xii. | Ezechiel p̃pha de eodē. ¶ suas ostendit. |
| xvi. | De harenoso globo t̃re ⁊ qd sign. | xiii. | De ineq̃litate humani seminis ⁊ |
| xvii. | Verba d̃ ad ad eandē rē. | | dediuitate hominū in peccatox. |
| xviii. | De t̃re motu ⁊ qd signific. | xiiii. | Ṽba moỹsi ad eandē rē. ¶ t̃at̃. |
| xix. | De maximo monte int̃ aq̃lonē ⁊ | xv. | Q̃re ⁊ t̃ch et distorti nascent̃. |
| | orientē ⁊ qd significet. ¶ eā artē. | xvi. | Quom̃ ifans iūto mat̃ uiuificat̃ |
| xx. | De his q̃ p̃usa arte in creat̃is futu | | ⁊ in eq̃ssus ab aīa solidat̃ ⁊ susten |
| | ra seruant̃. Verba eug̃li. | xvii. | Qm̃ aīa scdm̃ uires corp̃is uires |
| xxi. | Q̃t̃ diabol̃ hōib; illudit p̃magi | xviii. | Qd hō tres seminas in se h̃t. |
| xxii. | Parabola de eadē rē. | xix. | De intellectu. |
| xxiii. | Cū salus hōis et uoluntas cōpleta | xx. | De uoluntate. |
| | fuerit sc̃lm̃ mutabit̃. | xxi. | Similitudo de igne ⁊ pane. |
| xxiv. | Verba iob de eadē rē. | xxii. | Quādmōdū in tabnaculo uo |
| xxv. | Verba dī de eodē. | | luminatis. i. i. aīo os uires aīe calefi |
| xxvi. | Qd d̃s auguria ī stellis ⁊ i cētis cre | xxiii. | De ratione. |
| | aturis ampl̃ tolerare ñ uult. | xxiiii. | De sensu. |
| xxvii. | De stulticia ⁊ r̃umacia hōis. | xxv. | Qd aīa ē magist̃ caro ancilla. |
| xxviii. | Similitudo d̃hedo ⁊ ceruo ⁊ lupo. | xxvi. | Similitudo de arbore ad aīam. |
| xxix. | Conpacio d̃ medico. | xxvii. | Qd aīa ad pecc̃a īclinata p̃ dony |
| xxx. | Verba ioh̃is. | | dī op̃uncta peccata deserit. |
| | ¶ sum̃is. | xxx. | Qd aīa diabolicis insidiis t̃p̃. |
| | ¶ sum̃is. | | tata sup̃na īsp̃ratione a se ia |
| | ¶ sum̃is. | | cula diaboli expellit. |
| | ¶ sum̃is. | | Qd aīa habñaculū corp̃is sui d̃ |

50
iudicis expectat.
iii.

xix.

serens eū multo timore semencia ista. Verba dī ad hoīes qd di-uinis pceptis obediunt & malū abiciunt bonū ī amore dī fide lū pficiant. iudicis expectat.
De fide catholica. ii. Vba esay.

Capla qm̄ uisionis p̄me parus.
De synagoga mat̄ ī carnationis filii dī. Vba salomonis. ii.

Vba esayē pphē. iii.

iiii. De diūso calore synagoge.

v. De decore ei & q̄ ī corde abrahā inspectore moȳses ī uentre ei reliq̄ pphē qd signific.

vi. Qd magna ut t̄s h̄ns ēculū ī cap̄te simile aurore.

vii. Vba cherubim.

viii. Cōparatio desamsonē & de saul & de dā ad eandē rē. Nonc.

Capla sexte uisionis ī parus.
i. Qd d̄s creaturā suā mirabiliter condidit & disposuit.

ii. De habitu angloz & ei signifi.

iii. De habitu archangloz & ei sign.

iiii. De habitu iūmū & ei significat.

v. De habitu potestātē & ei signifi.

vi. De habitu p̄ncipatū & ei signific.

vii. De habitu dñationū & ei signif.

viii. De habitu thronoz & ei signific.

ix. De habitu cherubin & ei signif.

x. De habitu seraphin & ei signific.

xi. Qd he os acies mirabilib; uocib; miracula illa resonant q̄ d̄s ī beatīs animab; opat̄. Incipit li.

xii. Psalmista de eadē rē. ber sa.

Expt̄ capt. ī uisionis. uas.

Simplicis homine

INCIPIT
LIB. SEPTIMUS

PRIMA PAR

PROLOGUS

*ficatio ueratum uisionum. a deo fluentium. *amaw

DE
E
E
E

quadra
sus mei magnu temor mū sp uox d fragili do put uides e ad loqu ponen dū tad os hoī mane uolunt
nis. f. se
desup audis.
quadr pcepto tenore lente o ppalat ta que ta n̄ se mine. f
tū. et d tū mist
m uoce
g mira ta hoc factū e quadra
api me quadra
maxim lūm ap

quadragesimo t^{er}cio tēporalis cursus mei anno. cū celesti uisioni magno timore & tremula intemione inherere. uidi maximū splendore in quo facta ē uox de celo ad me dicens. O hominū fragilis et cinis cineris. & putredo putredinis. dic & scribe que uides et audis. S; q̄a timida es ad loquendū. et simplex. ad ex-ponendū. et indocta adscriben-dū. ea. dic & scribe illa n̄ scdm os hoīs nec scdm intellectū humane adinventionis. nec scdm uoluntatē humane cōpositionis. s; scdm id. qd ea in celestib; desup in mirabilib; dī uidet et audis. ea sic edisserendo pferens. quēadmodū et auditor ūba pceptoris sui p̄cipiens. ea scdm tenore locutionis illi. ipso uo-lente ostendente. & p̄cipiente p̄palat. Sic ḡ & tu o homo dic ea que uidet et audis. & scribe ea n̄ scdm te nec scdm aliū ho-minē. s; scdm uoluntatē scien-tis. et disponētis om̄a in secretis misterior suor. Et iterū audi ui uocē de celo m̄ dicentē. Dic ḡ mirabilia. hec. et scribe ea hoc modo. edocta & dic. factū ē in millesimo centesimo quadragesimo p̄mo filii dī ih̄y xpi incarnationis anno. cum quadraginta duor annor esse. maxime coruscationis igneū lum̄ ap̄to celo ueniens totū rebrū meū transfudit & totū cor-tūq; pect̄ meū. uclit flama. n̄ tñ ardens. s; calens ita inflamauit. ut sol rē aliquā calefacit sup quā radios suos ponit. Et repente in tellectū expositionis librorū uide-licet psalterii eugli et alior ca-tholicor. tā uetis quā noui testa-m̄ti. uoluminū sapiebā. n̄ autē. im̄itationē uerborū. text̄ eor. nec diuisionē sillabarū. nec cognitionē casū aut tēporū. habebā. Virtutē autē & mȳsteriū secretarū. et admirandarū uisionū apuellari. etate. scilicet a tēpore illo cū q̄nquennis esse usq; ad p̄sens tēpus mirabili m̄ in. senserā. sic & adhuc. qd tam nulli hominū exceptis quib; dā paucis et religiosis q̄ in eadē cōuisione uiuēbant. qua & ego etā mani-festau. s; int̄m usq; ad id tēpis cū illud d̄s sua grā manifestari uoluit. b̄ quieto silentio dep̄ssi-uisionē ū quas uidi n̄ eas in som-nis nec dormiens nec in frenesi nec corporeis oculis. aut aurib; extioris hoīs nec in abditis locis p̄cepi. s; eas uigilans et circumspecta. in pura m̄te oculis & au-rib; interioris hominis in ap̄tis lo-cis scdm uoluntatē dī accepi. Qd quom̄ sit. carnali homini p̄grere difficile ē. S; puellari metā transacta. cū ad p̄fata etatē p̄fecte fortitudinis puenisse. audiui uocē de celo dicentē. Ego lux uiuens et obscura illuminans. ho-minē quē uolui. et quē mirabilē scdm qd in placuit excussi in magnis mirabilib. transiētiā amiquorū hominū q in me multa secreta uiderē posui. s; mīā stiam illū qd se n̄ erigeret in ulla clatione mīs sue.

Mundus quoq. n̄ habuit in eo gaudiū nec lasciuia nec exer-citationē in reb. illis que ad mundū p̄ueniunt. q̄a cū de punaci audacia abstraxi timo-rē habentē. & in laborib. suis paucitē. Ipse enī in medullis et in uenis carnis sue doluit constrictū animū et sensū ha-bens. atq. multā passionē corporis sustinens. ita qd in eo diuersa securitas n̄ latuit. s; in omib. causis suis se culpabilē estimauit. Nā rimas cordis ei circūsepsi. ne mens ipsi p̄sup-biā aut p̄glām se eleuaret. s; ut magis in omib. his timorē et dolorē quā gaudiū aut quā petulantia haberet. Unde in amore meo scrutatus ē in animo suo. ubi illū inueni-ret q̄ uia saluus curreret. Et quendā inuenit et eū amauit agnoscens qd fidelis hocēt. & similis sibi in aliqua parte laboris illi q̄ ad me tendit. Tenensq. eū. simul cū illo in omib. his p̄supnū stu-diū comendit. ut absconsa miracula mea reuelarent. Et idē homo sup̄ semetipsū se n̄ posuit. s; ad illū in ascensione humi-litas et in intentione bone uoluntatis quē inuenit se in multis suspiriis inclinauit. Tu ḡ o homo q̄ hec n̄ iniquitudine deceptionis. s; in puritate simpli-citatis accipis. ad manifestationē absconditorū directa. scribe que uides & audis. s; ego quamuis hec uiderē & audirē. tamen p̄pt̄ dubietatē et malā opinionē et p̄pt̄ diuinitatē uerborū hoīy. tā diu n̄ in p̄tanaia. s; i humilitatis officio scribere recusauit. quousq. in lectū egredimur flagello dī de p̄ssa caderē. ita qd tandē multas i firmantib. ep̄p̄ssa. testi-monio cui dā nobilis. & bonorū morū puelle & hoīs illi quē occulte ut p̄fatu ē quesierā & iuenerā. manū ad scribendū apposui. qd dū facerē. alia p̄funditate ex-positiois librorū ut p̄dixi senties. uirib. q. recepi de egredine me eriges uix op̄ istud decē annis ē sumans ad finē p̄duci. In dieb. ayē.

Henrici magni archi ep̄i. & Conradi romanorū regis & Cononis abbatis i monte. beati. Disibodi pontificis. sub papa eugenio he-uisiones & ūba facta s. Et dixi & sc̄psi hec n̄ scdm ad inuentionē cor-dis mei aut ulli hoīs. s; ut ea i celestib. uidi audiui & p̄cepi p̄secreta m̄ysteria dī. Et iterū audiui uoce de

ce de
scrib mei tra q ut a tudi ad r go n cui ocul ista pall tis u clar fede tuer te u seu gine uola q̄si p inqu que apar
te u tiss
que
cui
trou quan

cē de celo in dicentē. Clama g̃ et scribe sic. Prima uisio prime partis.

IDS QVAS
montē magnū fer reū colorē haben tē & sup ipsū quen dā tantē clarna tis sedentē. ut cla rnas ipsi uisum meū reuerberaret. de quo abu traq. parte sui. leuis umbra. ue lut ala mirē latitudinis et longi tudinis extendebat. Et ante ipsū ad radicē eidē montis quedā na go undiq. plena oculis stabat. cui nullā humanā formā p̃ ipsis oculis discernere ualebā. & ante istā imago alia. puerilis etatis. pallida tunica. s. albis calciā tis indita. sup cui caput tanta claritas de eodē sup montē ipsū sedentē descendit. ut faciē ei in tueri n̄ possē. s. ab eodē q̃ sup mon tē illū sedebat. multae uiuentis scintille exierūt. que easdē ima gines magna suauitate circū uolabant. In ipso autē monte q̃si plurime fenestelle uidebant. in quib. uelut capita hominum quedā pallida. et quedā alba aparuerūt. Et ecce idē q̃ sup mon tē illū sedebat. fortissima. et acu tissima uoce clamabat dicēs. O ho que fragilis es de puluere t̃re. & cinis decinere. clama et dic. de in tronu incorrupte saluationis. quatin⁹ hi erudiant q̃ medullā litterarū uidentes. eā nec dicere nec p̃dicare uolunt. q̃a tepidi et hebetes ad cōseruandū iusticiā dī s. quib. clausurā mysticorū re sera quā ipsi timidi in abscondi to agro sine fructu celant. Ergo in fontē abundantiē ita dilata re & ita in mystica eruditione efflue. ut illi ab effusione irri gationis tue concueiant. q̃ te p̃p̃t p̃uaricationē eue. uolunt comēpibile ēē. Nā tū acumen hui⁹ p̃funditatis ab hōie n̄ ca pis. s. a supno & tremōdo iudice illud. de sup accipis. ubi p̃cla ra luce hec serenitas int̃ lucen tes forat. lucebit. Surge g̃ cla ma et dic. que fortissima uir tute diuini auxiliū manife stant. quō ille q̃ omī creature sue potēt. et benigne unpat ipsū timēs & ipsi suauī dilec tione in spū humilitatis famu lantes. claritate supne illustra tionis p̃fundit. et ad gaudia cō ne uisionis in uia iusticie p̃se uerantes p̃ducat. *V*nde etiā ut uides. mons iste magn⁹ fer reū colorē habens designat for titudinē & stabilitatē cōnatis regni dī. que nullo impulsu labentis mutabilitatis potest eximinari. et sup ipsū q̃dā tan tē claritatis sedens. ut clarnas ipsi uisū tuū reuerberet. offen dit in regno beatitudinis ipsū qui in fulgore i deficiens sere

1.

70
natus totu orbi terrarū impans. supna diuinitate humanis mī-bus inconphensibilis ē. s; abūq; partē sui lenis umbra uelut ala mire latitudinis et longitudinis extendit. qd ē & in admo-nitione et in castigatione beatę defensionis. suauis et lenis pte-tio. ineffabile iusticiā in pteue-ramma uere cōgratis iuste & pie demonstrans. Et ante ipsū ad radicē eīdē montis quedā imago undiq; plena oculis stat. quia corā dō in humilitate regnū dī inspiciens timor dñi. uallatus pspicuitate bone et iuste intentionis studiū & stabilitatē suā in hoīb; exercet. ita qd ei nul-lā humanā formā pipsis. oculis discernere uales. quō omnē obliuionē iusticie dī quā sepi ho-mines in medio mīas sue semper pacatissimā acie in spectionis sue na abiecit qd mortalis in q stuo. uigilantiā ei in debilitate sua n̄ discunt. Vnde & an istā imago alia puerilis etatis pal-lida tunica. s; albis calciamentis induta apparēt. qā pcedente timore dñi. illi q paupes spū s subsequunt. quō timor dñi in deuotione humilitatis. beatitu-dinē paupertatis sps forat tenet que n̄ iactantiā nec elationē cordis appetit. s; simplicitatē et sobrietatē mīas diligit. n̄ sibi s; dō uelut in pallore subiec-tionis iusta opa sua. qsi indu-mentū pallide tunice tribuens. et serena uestigia filii dī fidelit subsequens. Sup cui caput tan-ta claritas de eodē sup montē ipsū sedente descendit ut faciē ei intueri n̄ possis. qā potestātē et fortitudinē eīdē beatitudi-nis. tanta serenitas iustitiationis illi. q omī creature laudabilit impat infundit ut intentionē ipsi mortali & infirma. cōsideratione cape n̄ ualeas. quō et il-le q celestes diuitias habet pauptati humilit se subdidit. Sed qd ab eodē q sup montē illū sedet. multe uiuentes scintille ex-eunt que easdē imagines magna suauitate circūuolant. hoc ē qd ab omīptē dō diuise et fortissime uirtutes in diuina. clari-tate fulminantes ueniunt. que illos q dñm ueracit timent. et q paupertatē sps fidelit amant suo adiutorio & custodia. cir-cūdantes ardent amplectunt et delinunt. Vnde & in ipso monte qsi plurime fenestelle uident in qb; uelut capta hominū quedā pallida quedā alba apparent. qā in summa altitudine. pfundissime & acutissime agnitioni dī nec celari nec abscondi possunt studia actiū hominū cū & tēpore & candorē in semetipsis sepiissi-me demonstrent. quō & modo hom

as su dorm honor cuig in u Ege man a lem e et q iniqu mire atari ante
us. u salien simas bi pa inspu iste a
dar. f plecto
E
que
ma se
st. Et nis et uelut fumi
de qu ceter tabile clara homines et in cordib; et in factis suis fatigati in contumelia dormitant modo exsuscitati ^{honore} euigilant: quēadmodū salomon in uoluntate mea testat̃: dicens:

VI. Egestatē opata ē manū remissa: manū autē ^{diuitias} fortis parat. Qd dī: Uebi-lem et pauperē se homo ille fecit: q̄ noluit iusticiā opari: nec iniquitatē delere: nec debitū re-mittere: ubi miraculis opū be-atitudinis ociosus p̄mansit. Q̄ autē opat̃ fortissima opa salu-tis: uia uernans currens: fonte salutis gl̄e caput: in q̄ p̄ciosissimas diuitias in t̄ra & in celo sibi parat. Vnde quicūq; sciētia in spū scō. et p̄cinas infide habet: iste admonitiōe meā n̄ t̄scendat: s; cā ingustu anime sue amplexendo p̄cipiat. Sedā uisio p̄me par-

DE DI VE VE
D maximā multitu- dinē uiuentiū lā-padarū. multā claritatē habentiū que igneū fulgorē accipientes: ita serenissimū splendorē adepti sūt. Et ecce lacus multe latitudi-nis et p̄funditatis apparuit: os uelut os putei habens: & igneū fumū cū multo fetore emittens: de quo etiā t̄r̄ima nebula se extendens: q̄si uenā uisū de ceptibile habentē t̄ngit: et in q̄dā clara regione candidā nubē que de quadā pulchra forma hōis plurimas plurimasq; stellas in se continens exierat: p̄ eā affla-uit: ac illa eandēq; formā hōis de eadē regione ita eiecit. Quo facto lucidissimū splendor eandē regionē circūdedit: & ita om̄a elem̄ta mundi que p̄r̄ in magna quiete constiterant in maximā inquietudinē ūsa horribiles t̄rores ostenderūt. Et iterū audiui illū. qui p̄r̄ in locut̄ fuerat dicentē:

Deū fidei deuotione subsequentes: et in dilectione ei⁹ dig-no amore ardentes: a gl̄a sup̄ne beatitudinis nullo impulsu in-iusticie t̄m̄i abstrahunt: cū illi qui dīm fidei attendunt: n̄ solū ad maiora n̄ p̄moueant̃: s; etiā ab his que se habere fallacit̃ pu-tant: iusta examinatione deici-ant̃. Qd & hec maxima multitu-do uiuentiū lampadarū multā claritatē habentiū ostendit: que ē plurimū exercit̃ sup̄noꝝ spūum in beata uita fulgentiū: ac in multo decore & ornatu existentiū: quō cū a dō creati s̄ n̄ sup̄bā cla-tione arripuerūt: s; in diuino amore fortit̃ p̄stiterūt. Nā ipsi igneū fulgorē accipientes: ita serenissimū splendorē splendorē adepti s̄: q̄a cū lucifer cū suis sup̄no creatori rebellare conaret̃ isti heli dī in casu illi⁹ et sibi con-sentientiū habentes: uigilan-tiā diuine dilectionis induerūt.

cū illi torporē ignorantie qua dñm scire noluerūt amplexati sint.
Quomodo. In casu diaboli. in il lis angelicis sp̃itib. qui cū dō in rectitudine pseuerauerūt. maxi ma laus exorta ē. qm̃ acutissimo uisu cognouerūt. qd̃ d̃s immobi lis sine ulla mutatione. ulli mu tabilitatis impotencia sua pse uerat. na qd̃ a nullo bellatore superari poterit. Et na in amore ei exardescerent. et in rectitu dine pseuerantes. omnē pulue rē iniusticie contēpserūt. Sed lucifer. q̃ ob supbiā suā de cele sti gl̃a cecidit. in initio creatio nis sue talis actantus exiit. qd̃ nullū defectū nec in decore nec in fortitudine sua sensit.
Vnde cū decorē suū inspiceret et cū uim fortitudinis sue in semet ipso consideraret. supbiā inuenit. que ipsi p̃misit ut in cipet qd̃ uellet. quia p̃ficere posset qd̃ incepisset. Et uidens locū ubi se subsistere posse pu tauit. ibi decorē et fortitudinē suā ostendere uolens. in semet ipso sic de dō dicebat. Volo ful gere illic. quēadmodū & iste hic. Cui om̃is acies ei assensū de dit dicens. Qd̃ tu uis. hoc & nos uolumus. Et cū in supbiā elat. illud p̃ficere uellet qd̃ cogni uerat. helus dñi se extendens in ignea ingredine illū cū oī conatu suo deiecit. na qd̃ ipsi feruidi. contra fulgorē. & ni gri contra serenitatē quā habu erant effecti s̃. Qd̃ ē hoc. Quia si d̃s p̃sūptionē illorū n̄ deieisset. iniustus ēēt. quō illos foueret qui in integritatē diuinitatis di uidere uolebant. s̃. eos deiecit et impietate ipsorū ad nihilū re degit. sic etiā & om̃s a conspectu claritatis sue aufert. q̃ se ipsi opponere conant. ut seruus m̃s iob ostendit dicens. Lucerna im piorū extinguēt. et sup̃ ueniet eis mundatio. & dolores diuider furoris sui. Et sic palea ante faciē ueni. et sic familla quā turbo disp̃git. Qd̃ d̃r. flagrans spurcicia. petulantis neque fal se p̃sūptis. q̃si lūm̃ honoris in uoluntate carnis illorū p̃cedens. qui dñm n̄ timent. s̃. qui illū in puersa rabie sp̃nunt contēpnen tes scire qd̃ ullus eos ualeat ex pugnare. cū in igne ferocitatis sue uolunt exurere quēcūq. ex agitant. hec in hora ultionis dī uelut trā conculcat. et de sup̃no iudicio sup̃ eosdē. impios cadet abiectio indignationis om̃iū que sub celo s̃. na qd̃ et dō & ho minib. molesti erūt. Vnde q̃a d̃s n̄ sunt. eos habere qd̃ uolunt. idō undiq. cū dolore macerari. in hominib. spargunt. p̃rabie insanie sue. cū ardere hoc pos sidere. qd̃ d̃s n̄ p̃mittit eos de uorare. Et cū hoc modo a dō re cedu simi

hom
ualer ocu pp̃t tur
rum entē
Sed
et p̃ inf̃ p̃fui inse pum mut raen mar dulo nē t p̃du one te m qm̃ cū si bon aut
s̃. ur n̄ q̃a in m ē ho res
inse
mal fis p̃ pen rma

cedunt magne multitudinis afsimulant. ita qd nec in dō nec in hominib. quicquā boni facere ualent. de grano uite in puidem oculo inspectionis dī abeisi. Qua ppter et huiusmodi cūmioni tradun-tur qd in tepido sapore in qui-rumoris dissipant. cū sup ueni-entē umbrē sps scī n̄ suscipiunt.
Sed lacus ille multe latitudinis et profunditatis q̄ tibi apparet ē infernus latitudinē uicior et profunditātē pdmionū ut uidet in se continens. os etiā uelut os putri habens. et igneū fumū cū multo fetore emittens. q̄a inuo-racitāte sua submersione am-marū tenens. cū eis sua uirtutē et dulcedinē ostendit. eas ad pdmio-nē tormētō puerſa deceptione pducit. ubi ardor ignis cū fusione tētrūmi fumi et cū ebullien-te mortifero fetore emanat. qm̄ hec dira tormēta diabolo & cū subsequētib. q̄ se de sumo bono auerterēt. nec illud scire aut intelligere uoluerēt. pparata s̄. unde & de omī bono abieci s̄. n̄ q̄a illud nescierēt s̄. qm̄ illuc in magna supbia contēpserēt. Qd ē hoc. ^{diaboli} Indeiectionē. he exterio-res tenebre omē genus penarū in se habentes posuit s̄. quia hi maligni sps contra glām que ipsis pparata fuit. miserā diuisarū penarū suscepērēt. et contra claritatē quā habuerēt. densissimā tenebras acceperēt. Quomodo.

 Cū supb. angls coluber se sursum erexit. carcerē inferni accepit. quia cū n̄ potuit. ut ullus dō pualeret. Et quomodo conueni-ens ēēt. ut in uno pectore duo corda ēēt. Sic nec in celo duo ēēt debuerēt. S; quō idē diabolus cū suis supbā p̄sūptionē arripuit. idō lacū pdmionis sibi paratū inuenit. Sic et hoīes isti q̄ eos in actib. suis imitant. participes penarū eorū scdm̄ merita sua efficiunt. Sed quedā aīe s̄ que cumulū dāpnationis habentes a sciētia dī p̄iecte s̄. et idō infernales penas sine consolatione ereptionis habebunt. quedā autē in obliuione dī n̄ existentes. s̄. tantū in superiorib. examinationib. purgationē peccatorū suorū in quib. p̄lapsi s̄ recipien-tes. tandē absolūtionē uinculorū suorū sentiunt ad requiē erepte puenientes. Qd ē hoc. Gehenna his obuia ē. qui dīm in obliuio-ne cordis sui sine penitentia habent. cetera y tormēta. his qui quāuis mala opa faciunt. s̄. tandē addīm in gemitib. suis respiciunt. Qua ppter fideles dia-bolū fugiant et dīm diligant mala opa abiciunt. et bona cū decore penitentie ēplentes. ut seruus m̄s ezechiel p me in spiratus hortat̄ dicens. Conuertimini et agite peniten-

vii.

in eis usq;
 ad finē uite
 n̄ p̄fuerant

viii.

92 ciā ab omib; iniquitatib; uris. & n̄ erit uobis in ruinā iniquitas.
Qd̄ dīr. O uos homines q̄ haec in peccatis iacuistis. recordami ni xp̄iani nominis ur̄i conuer tent̄es uos ad uia salūtis et faci te alia opa in fonte penitentie qui pri fecistis multa scelera in innumerabilib; uicis. et ita a mala consuetudine ur̄a surgen tes. n̄ deprimet uos in ruinam mortis iniquitas illa. in qua sor dueratis. quia illa in die salua tionis ur̄e abieciſtis. Unde etiā hoc modo gaudiū angloꝝ sup uos erit. quō ad diabolo recessi ſtis. et addm̄ cucurristis. cū sic melius in bonis actib; cognosce tes quā pri cū sciretis. cū in irri sione antiqui seductoris fuistis.
Qd̄ v̄ de eodē lacu de t̄rima ne bula se extendens. q̄si uenā uisū deceptibile habentē tangit. hoc ē qd̄ de profundissima p̄di tione diabólica fraus emanans. serpentē. uirulentū nefas frau dulente intentionis in se com nentē. ad decipiendū hominē inuasit. Quom̄. Quia cū diabo lus hominē in paradiso uidit. cū magno horrore exclama uit dicens. O quis tangit me in mansionē uere beatitudinis.
Et ita in semet ipso sciebat. q̄a maliciā suā quā in se habuit n̄dū malia creatura c̄pleuerat. s; adā et euā puerili innocen tia in orto deliciarū ire uidens. cū magno stupore extulit se ad decipiendū eos p̄ serpentē. Quare.

Qm̄ serpentē magis sibi assimilari quā aliud animal intellexit. studet ut in dolose suat illi hoc occulte p̄ficeret. qd̄ in forma sua apte complere n̄ posset. Unde cū adā & euā ab interdita sibi arbore se auer tere. et aīa & corpore conspexit. in semet ipso intellexit eos ibi diui nū p̄ceptū habere qd̄ in p̄mo ope qd̄ incipere ipsos facillime deice ret. Nesciebat enī eis arbore il lam interdita ēē. n̄ qd̄ hoc scdm̄ p̄bationē dolose interrogacionis sue. et scdm̄ responsa eor̄ adinue nit. Qua p̄pt̄ in ipsa clara regione candi dā nubē. que de quadā pulchra forma hoīs plurimasq; stellas in se continens exierat p̄ eā afflauit. qm̄ in eodē loco ame natis euā innocentē animū ha bentē. que de innocente adā om nē multitudinē humani generis in p̄ordinationē dī lucentē. in suo corpore gestans. sup̄ta fue rat. p̄seductionē serpentis ad de iectionē ei inuasit. Cur hoc. Q̄a sciebat mulieris molliciē. facili uincendā. quā uiri fortitudinē. uidens etiā. qd̄ adā incarnate eue tā formē ardebat. ut si ipse di abolus euā uicisset. q̄cqd̄ illa ade diceret. adā idē p̄ficeret. Unde diabolus illā eandēq; formā ho minis de eadē regione ita eiecit.

VIII.

quō idē antiquus seductor eua atq; ada de sede beatitudinis sua deceptione expellens. eos in tenebras subūisionis misit. Quom̃. videlicet eua p̃mū seduxit. ut ipsa ade blandiret. quatiñ ei as sensū p̃beret. q̃a ipsa cicius ada quā alia creatura ad inobedien tā pducere potuit. qm̃ de costa illī facta fuerat. Qua p̃p̃t mulier uirū ei deicit. cū ille eā n̄ abhor rens uerba ei facile assumit. Sed. xi. sicut n̄ paruo puero s; p̃fecto ui ro. scilicet ade p̃fecta mulier da ta ē. na etiā modo cū uir in p̃fec ta etate sua fertilis ē. p̃fecta ei my lier coniungenda ē. uelut cū ar bor flores incipit emittere. debi ta cultura ei adhibenda ē. Nā de costa in suo calore & suco ade eua formata ē. ac idō nunc de forti tudine uiri et de calore ei semen mulier concipit. p̃tē in mundū pducere. Vir enī seminator ex istit mulier autē susceptrix semi nis ē. unde & mulier sub potesta te uiri manet. qm̃ ut duricia la pidis ad tēritudinē trē ē. na etiā et fortitudo uiri ad molliē mulieris ē. Qd̃ autē p̃ma mulier de uiro formata ē. hoc ē coniunc tio desponsationis mulieris ad uirū. Et hoc sic intelligendū ē.
Coniunctio ista n̄ ē uana. nec in obliuione dī exercenda. q̃a q̃ mulierē de uiro tulit coniunc tionē istā bene et honeste con stituit. uidelicet carnē de carne formans. Qua p̃p̃t ut ada et eua caro una existerēt. sic et nūc uir et mulier caro una in coniuncti one carnis. ad multiplicandū genus humanū efficiunt. Et idō p̃fecta caritas in his duob; eē de bet. quāmodū et in illis priorib;.

Ada enī uxore suā culpāre pos set. qd̃ ei consilio suo mortē in tulit. s; tam eā n̄ dimisit. quādiu in hoc seculo uiuit. quō illā sibi p̃diuinā potentia datā eē cog nouit. Vnde p̃p̃t p̃fectā caritatē n̄ relinquat homo uxore suā. nisi p̃p̃t rationabilē causā illā. quā sibi fidelis ecclā pponit.
Nec omnino diuisio in illis sit. nisi ambo in una m̃te in filiū meū uoluerint respicere. sic in ardente amore illi dicentes.
Volum⁹ mundū relinquere. et illū sequi q̃ p̃ nobis passus ē. Qd̃ si hi duo in una deuotione dis seruiunt. ut mundū relinquax tē se omnino abinice n̄ sepa rent. q̃a ut sanguis a carne sepa rari n̄ potest quādiu sp̃s in illa manet. na etiā nec marit⁹ nec uxor se abinice diuidant. s; simul in una uoluntate ambu labunt. S; si ibi in fornicatione p̃uaricatio legis aut in uiro aut in uxore ē. tē aut a semet ipsis aut a sacerdotib; suis publicā censurā sp̃alis magistrū scdm̃ qd̃ iustū ē sustinebunt. Marti⁹

104 enī de uxore et uxor de marito corā ecclā et p̄lati ipsi de trans gressione coniunctionis sue scdm iusticiā dī inelamabit. n̄ tam ita qd aut marit⁹ aut uxor aliā copulā querat. s; ipsi aut simul in rectitudine coniunctionis p manebunt. aut se a coniunctio ne ista simul abstinebunt. iux ta id qd eis p̄ disciplinā ecclāstice institutionis demonstrat. nec se uice laceratione dilaniabunt. s; pura dilectione diligente. qm et uir & mulier eē n̄ possunt nisi ista copulatione perire. quā d modū paulus amicus m̄s testat dicens. Sic mulier de uiro. ita et uir p̄ mulierē. om̄a autē ex dō. Qd dī. Mulier p̄p̄t uirū creata ē & uir p̄p̄t mulierē fact⁹ ē. qm ut illa de uiro. ita et uir de illa ne alterū ab altero disce dat in unitate factorū natoꝝ suoꝝ. quia in uno ope unū opant. quēadmodū aer et uent⁹ opa sua inuicē complicant. Quom̄.
Aer de uento mouet. et uentus aeri implicat. ita qd in ambitu eoꝝ queq; uiridia illis subdita s; qd ē hoc. Mulier uiro et uir mu lieri in ope filioꝝ coopat. vnde maxima crimina flagitioꝝ ibi s; ubi fornicatio indicib; creatio nis filioꝝ diuisione facit. quō ppriū sanguinē de fundam̄to loei sui uir et mulier ibi ab scidunt. in alienū locū cū ab icientes. His certe fraudulenta dia boli et ira dī relinquēt. q̄a sedus illud p̄uariatu s; qd ipsis dī con stituit. Qua p̄p̄t ut ipsis q̄ndo peccata ipsoꝝ eis n̄ remittunt. s; qm uis uir et mulier innatus suis ut ostensū ē sibi coopeant. om̄a tam uidelicet tā uir quā mulier & ce tere creature ex diuina dispositi one & ordinatione s; qm dī ea scdm uoluntatē suā fecit. Ante incarnationē autē filii mei qdā in antiquo p̄p̄to plurimas uxo res scdm uoluntatē suā simul ha bebant q̄a n̄ dū ap̄te de monstra tionis phibitionē inde audierant quā fili⁹ m̄s in mundū ueniens ostendit. rectissimo germine hui⁹ copulationis in marito et uxore quādiu flatū expirationis in se haberent scdm coniunctionē ade et eue p̄palatā. qm coniunctio ista n̄ scdm uoluntatē hominū s; scdm timorē dī exercenda ē. q̄a meli⁹ ē rectū coniugū iuxta dispositio nē ecclāstice discretionis habere. quā fornicationē appetere. cū tā uos hoīes hoc negligentes. uirā ly bidinē n̄ solū scdm hoīes. s; etiā scdm peccata exercetis. fides autē recta et pura dilectio agnitiois dī in ma ritū & uxore sit. ne semine eoꝝ dia bolica arte polluto. diuina ultio ipsos p̄cuniat cū se inuicē mordentes dilaniant. cū semina sua i huma ne scdm petulantia peccatoꝝ semi nat. vnde cū i uiridia uirgo ^{cruciat} mortē eos, et cū maculosa supflunas seminis ipsorū absq; amore dī et absq; humana disciplina in ipsis est. multociens ad castigationē hui' pueritatis ipsorū recto iudicio dī qui ex ipsis nascuntur ad contrarietate membris suis defluunt. et a pspitate uite sue deiciunt. nisi penitentiā il-lorū suscipiens placabile me istis ostendā. Nā q; in peniten-tia peccatorū suorū me inuocauerunt. penitentiā ipsorū ppter amorem filii mei suscipiā. quō qui dignū suū ad me penitendo leuauerit. idē q; gemitū cordis sui ad me in penitencia extendit. dicens. peccaui dñe corā te. peniten-ciā illā mī fili' mī ostendit q; sacerdos sacerdotū ē. qā penitencia que sacerdotib; in amore filii mei offert. purga-tionē peccatorū eā facientib; concedit. Unde penitentiā suā digne facientes. a maxilla diaboli exeunt hoīes. quō ille hamū diuine potencie deglutire uolens. maxillam suā fortit uulnerauit. ubi etiā nunc fideles anime appitione transeunt. ad saluationē pueniunt. Quom. Quia sacerdotes in altari inuocatores nominis mei existens. confessionē pplorū suscipiens. ubi eis remediū salutis de monstrabunt. Qua ppter ut dī placabile hant. sem suū induersitate uiciorū nō contaminent. quō q; in fornicatione et in ad-ulterio sem suū eiciunt filios suos q; hoc modo ex ipsis nascuntur negligentiores reddunt.

Quomodo. Qui puro limo lu-tū uel stercore admiscet. nūqd uas stabile facit. Sic q; sem suū in fornicatione uel adulterio contaminat nūquid filios fortitudinis gignit. S; multi ex his indiuersitate morū ac medulla-rū suarū laborant. multi autē ex eis prudentes. et ad scīm & ad dīm efficiunt. Et tam cū his celestis ierlm implet. cū ipsi ui-cia deserentes. et uirtutes aman-tes. in castitate ac in magnis la-borib; filiū meū imitant. martyriū ipsi in corpore suo scdm possibilitatē suā gestantes. Vbi autē infantes de hoīe nasci nolo. ibi uiriles uires seminis au-fero. ne in uentre matris coa-gulet. quēadmodū etiā trefructiferas uires de nego. ubi hoc iusto iudicio meo facere uolo. S; qd miraris o homo. qd in adulteris & in ceteris hui' modi criminib; infantes nasci pmitto. Iudiciū meū iustū ē. Nā a lapsu ade nō inueni in humano semine iusticiā que in eo eē debuit. ubi eā diabolus in gustu pomi fugauerat.

xiii.

Idcirco nisi filiū meū in mun-dū sine ullo peccato de uirgine natū. quatinus in sanguine suo cui nulla pollutio carnis inerat diabolo spolia illa quę in homine rapuerat auferret.

Nā nec homo conceptus in peccato. nec angls regnū carnis n̄ habens. hominē in peccatis iacentē & corporali grauedine laborantē a diabolica potestate eripe potuit. p̄ter illū q̄ sine peccato ueniens. et corpus mun-dū sine peccato habens. cū sua passione liberauit. vnde hoīes quā uis in peccatis nati sint. tam̄ eos ad sup̄nū regnū colligo. cū illud fidelit̄ querit. Nec tos enī meos nulla p̄uersitas mibi abstrahere potest. ut sa-piencia testat̄ dicēs. Sustox aīe in manu dī s̄. et n̄ tangit illos tormentū mortis. Qd̄ dī. Illox qui uia rectitudinis complectunt̄ aīe. cū deuoto affectu in opib. sup̄ni auxiliatoris s̄. ita ut p̄p̄t bona opa quib. celū in altitudine iusticie adtendunt. n̄ confringat illas cruciamētū p̄ditionis. q̄a uerū lūm eas in timore & in amore pascit. s̄. postquā adā et eua de loco amentis ex-pūsi s̄. opus concipiendi et pariendi filios in semet ipsis cognouerūt. Et ita de inobedi-entia sua in mortē cadentes.

xv.

dulcedinē peccati conceperūt. cū se posse peccare cognouerūt. s̄. ip-si hoc modo rectā constitutionē meā in libidinē peccati uertē-tes. cū cōmotionē uenarū suarū n̄ in dulcedine peccati. s̄. in amore filiorū scire deberent eā diabolica suggestionē in libidinē de-derūt. quia innocentia genitricis sue p̄dentes. in peccatū miserūt. vnde quō hoc n̄ sine diabolica p̄suatione pactū ē. idcirco et idē diabolus ad hoc opus iacula sua emisit ne sine suggestione ipsi p̄ficiat̄ cū dicit. O ea for-tudo in conceptu hominū ē. et idcirco homo m̄s ē. Et uidens qd̄ homo particeps penarū suarū ē. debuit q̄a ei consenserat. iterū in semet ipso dicebat. fortissimo dō om̄s iniquitates contrarie s̄. quō omnino inuult⁹ n̄ ē. Et hoc idē deceptor in corō suo maximū sigillū posuit. uidelicet qd̄ homo q̄ sibi spon-te consenserat ipsi auferri n̄ posset. Quia p̄p̄t secretū consiliū in me fuit ut filiū meū ad redēpti-onē hominū mitterē. q̄ten⁹ celesti-ierm redderet hō. Et huic consi-lio nulla iniquitas resistere potuit. cū fili⁹ m̄s in mundū ue-niens. om̄s ad se collegit q̄ ip-sū audire & imitari peccata deserendo uolebant. Ego enī iustus et rectus sū nullā uo-lens iniquitatē. quā tu homo amplecteris. cū te malū posse facere cognoscis. Nā lucifer & homo in initio creationis sue mibi rebellare temptauerūt et sta re n̄ potuerūt. de bono caden tes et malū eligentes. Lucifer autē totū malū cōphendit. et omne bonū eiecit. nec illud om nino gustauit. s; in morte ceci dit. adā ū bonū gustauit. cū obediētiā suscepit. s; malū concupiuit. et in concupiscen tia sua illud p̄fecit. cū in obedi entia dō exiuit. Qd̄ q̄re factū sit. n̄ ē atq; o homo p̄quirendū. uel quid ante cōstitutionē sc̄li fu erit. t̄ qd̄ nouissimū diē fiat. mortalis homo scire n̄ potest. s; solus d̄s hoc nouit. nisi q̄mā illud electos suos d̄s scire p̄mit tit. s; & fornicatio illa que se cōmunē hominib; facit. ab ho minabilis corā me ē. qui ab in itio masculū et feminā in hone state & n̄ in turpitudine con stituit. unde illi ypocritae q̄ di cunt sibi licitū ēē. sedm̄ appe titū peccō fornicari cū quo cūq; uoluerint. indigni oculo lis meis s̄. quō honorē et af finitudinē ratio nā. Inanis sue despicientes. in pecora respici unt. et se illis similes faciunt.

Ite illis q̄ sic uiuentes. in hac turpitudine pseuerant. Nec etiā uolo. ut noticia sangui nis in coniugio se cōmisceat.

12 ū ardor amoris in consanguini tate n̄ dū attenuatus ē. ne in pudens amor in recordatione consanguinitatis ibi oriat̄. s; sanguis alieni ppli confluat. qui iā nullā noticiā consanguini tatis in se ardē semit. quaten humana disciplina in ope illo sit. Quia lac semel t̄ bis coctū. saporē suū n̄ dū p̄didit. cū septima uel octaua uice coa gulatū et coctū uires suas de serens. iā delectabilem saporē n̄ nisi in necessitate habeat. Et ut noticia consanguinitatis in p̄pria coniugē. nescienda est. ita etiā et noticia consan guinitatis ei dē coniugis. mali ena copula abhorrenda ē. nec se homo ad huiusmodi copulā n̄ coniungat. sicut et eccl̄a in doctōrib; suis p̄hibet. qui ipsā in multitudine sollicitudi ne et honore stabiliēt. Qd̄ autē in uicā testam̄to homi nes in consanguinitate san guinis sui p̄cepto legis con iuncti s̄ hoc p̄pt̄ duriciā illorū factū ē. ut in uicē pacē haberēt. et ut tā firma caritas in eis ēēt. ne ille trib; diuise coniunctio ni paganorū se miscētes. fedus meū dirūperēt. usq; dū illud t̄p̄ uenit ī q̄ fili m̄s plenitudinē caritatis af ferēs. cōiunctionē cōsanguinitatis car nalis copulē. ī alienū pplm̄ cū pu dore uerecundie t̄stulit. Unde qm̄ sponsa ei dē fili mei uinculū timo ris mei & rectā iusticiā ī scō baptis xvii.

xviii.

xviii.

xx.

mo modo habet. idcirco etiā huiusmodi consanguinitas ē iunctio nō a se longe sit. q̄a fornicatio sine uerrecundia & sine cessatione libidinis. in amplexib. uiri et mulieris. in noto sanguine magis quā in alieno ad tēp̄e opus accendere tur. Ego enī opus istud p̄ hunc hominē edissero. cui idē op̄ in hōīe ignotū ē. et q̄ sermonē istū nō ab homine s. a scientia dī accepit. S. q̄d nō. Cū autē masculus inforti etate ē. ita q̄d uene illi sanguine plene
s. tunc fertilis in semine suo ē. et tunc mulierē in desponsa tione legitime in institutionis accipiat. que etiā in feruente etate existens. sem̄ illi cū ue recundia concipiat. et illi plē in uia rectitudi nis gignat. Sed uir ante annos fortitudinis sue. sem̄ suū in supfluitate libidinis nō eiciat. q̄a hoc p̄batio pec cati suggerente diabolo ē. si sem̄ suū in concupiscentia libidinis seminare tēptaue rit. ante quā idē sem̄ rectā coagulationē in feruente calore habere possit. Et cū uir iā fortissimus in libidi ne ē. tunc uires suas scdm̄ q̄d potest in eodē ope nō ex erceat. quō sit tunc ad diabo lū respicit opus diabolicū opat corpus etiā suū contēp tibile faciens. q̄d omnino il licitū ē. Vir autē scdm̄ q̄d cū humana natura docet. in for titudine caloris et in suco se minis sui rectū iter in uxore sua querat. et hoc cū huma na disciplina ob studiū filioꝝ faciat. S. nolo ut idē opus fi at in diuisione mulieris. cū iā fluxū sanguinis sui patit̄ q̄d ē aptio occultoꝝ m̄broꝝ uen tris ipsius. ne fluxus sangui nis eius susceptū sem̄ matū effundat. et ita sem̄ effusū peat. ū se mulier in dolore & in car cere posita uidet portionē sei uēt doloris partus sui tangens.

S. hoc tēpus doloris in mulie re nō abicio. quō illud eue de di q̄ndo in gustu pomi pec catū concepit. unde et muli er in hoc eodē tēpore in mag na medicina m̄ie habenda ē. ipsa etiā se continente in ab sconso discipline. nō autē na ut ab incesso tēpli mei se con tineat. s. fidei p̄missione ip sū in officio. humilitatis p̄sa lute sua ingrediat̄. Quia aū sponsa filii mei semp̄ integra ē. uir apud uulnerib. si inte gritas m̄broꝝ ipsi in tactu p̄cussionis diuisa ē tēplum meū nisi cū timore magne necessitatis nō intrabit ne uio letur. sicut in tegra membra

13 abel. qui templū dī fuit. eam fr̄ suus crudeliter fregit. Sed & xx.1. mulier. cū plē pēp̄t fractis oculis m̄bris suis templū meū. n̄ nisi scdm̄ legē p̄me sibi da tā ingrediat. quaten̄ scā sa cramenta eiusdē templi mei ab omī pollutione & dolore uiri ac mulieris inuolabilia sint. quia filiū meū purissima uir go genuit. que integra absq̄ ullo uulnere peccata fuit. Lo cus enī qui in honore eiusdē unigeniti mei consecratus ē. integer ab omī corruptione liuoris ac uulneris eē debet. quō idē unigenitus m̄s inte gritatē uirginis partus in se nouit. Vnde et mulier. que integritatē uirginitatis sue cū uiro corrūpit. in liuore plage sue qua corrupta ē. ab ingressu templi mei se comine at usq̄. dū plaga uulneris ip sius sanct. scdm̄ qd̄ ecclastica disciplina ipsi de eadē causa certissime de monstrat. Nā cū filio meo in ligno crucis spon sa ipsi conuincta fuisset ipsa usq̄. dū idē filius m̄s discipu lis suis p̄cepit ut ueritatē in euglū protā mundū disse minarent in occulto se con tinuit. ac de inde apte sur rexit. et glām sponsi sui in regeneratione sp̄s et aque pasā p̄dicauit. Sic & uirgo que uirgo coniungit̄ fa ciat cū pūdica scilicet uerecun dia usq̄. ad tēpus illud qd̄ sibi ecclastica censura pponit. in oc culto maneat. et hoc pacto. de occultatione sua se transferens. ad dilectionē sponsi sui apte pcedat. Nolo enā ut p̄dictū opus uiri ac mulieris exerceat. cū iā radix infanti in mulie re posita ē ne coagulatio eidē infanti supfluo et p̄dito semi ne polluat. usq̄. ad purgationē partus ipsius. cū nerū deinde ob amorē filioꝝ in rectitudine et n̄ impetulantia fieri n̄ phibēt.

Sic genus humanū in p̄creati one sua. in honestate humane discipline pcedere positi ē. et n̄ sicut loquacitas stultoz ho minū clamat. qui dicunt sibi licitū ē libidinē suā scdm̄ uo luntatē suā exercere dicentes.
Quomodo possum? nos tā cru deliter continere. Oho si respi cis ad diabolum. ipse te ad omē malū excitat et mornifero ueneno suo te int̄ficet. si autē ad dīm uideris. ipse tibi ad uir ritū p̄bet. & te castū facit. Non ne in ope tuo magis libidinē quā castitatē appetis. O mulier. uiro subiecta ē in qua ipse semen suū seminet. sicut enā trā opat. ut fructū afferat. Nū qd̄ uir trā opat. ut spinas et t̄by los gignat. Ne quaquā. sicut dig num fructū det. Ita etiam xx.ii.

hoc studiū hominis in amore filiorum et in impetulantia libidi-nis esse debet. Ergo o homines plorate & ululate dñm ur̃m. quē multociens in peccatis ur̃is contēpnitis. cū in pessima fornica-tione sem̃ ur̃m eicitis. ibi n̄ solū fornicatores. s; etiā homicide existentes. q̃a speculū dī abici-tis. et libidinē ur̃am scdm̃ uo-luntatē ur̃am complētis. Unde etiā diabolus in hoc ope semp̃ psequit̃ uos. sciens qđ magis concupiscentiā ur̃am appeti-tis. quā gaudiū filiorum inspi-atis. Audite g̃ qui in iurib; ecclesie estis. In fornicatione ur̃a nolite me accusare. s; uos met ipsos inspicite. quō cū ad dia-bolū curratis me contēpnentes. illicita opa facitis. et idō casti eē n̄ uultis. ut seruis m̃s osce de contaminato pp̃lo loquūt̃ dicens. Non dabunt cogi-tationes suas ut reuertamur ad dñm suū. q̃a sp̃s fornicatio-nis in medio eorū. et dñm n̄ cog-nouerūt. Qđ dī. Maligni hōies dñm n̄ cognoscentes. faciē cor-dis sui abscondunt. n̄ dantes eā in diuersis ob uoluntatib; machinationis sue. ut redeant ad uerā claritatē. scilicet uidente oculo n̄ discernentes. quē dī s; s; malū in semet ipsis nutriunt. qm̃ afflatio petulantis in mundicie p̃ diabo xx.iii.

licā suggestionē uirile fortitu-dinē quā in se habere deberet emollit n̄ sinens eos. ut indm̃ bonā conscientia suā ponant cū ipsos a uita felicitatis avertit.
Sed nē ad amantissimas oues meas quē in corde meo plan-tate s; me conuertā. sem̃ castitatis existentes. Virginitas enī p̃ me plantata ē. quia etiā fili-m̃s de uirgine natus ē. Et idō uirginitas ē pulcherrimū po-mū. int̃ om̃a poma conuallū. et magna p̃sona in om̃ib; p̃sonis. quē in palatio in deficientis regis s; quō ipsa p̃cepto legis subiugata n̄ ē quia unige-nitū meū mundo edidit. Qua pp̃t audiant qui filiū meū se-qui uolunt in innocentia libere castitatis. et in separatione meritis uiduantis. quō nobilior ē uirginitas n̄ pollu-ta ab initio quā uiduitas opp̃sa uirili iugo. cū tam̃ uiduitas post dolorē suū in quo uirū suū pdidit. uirginitatē subsequit̃. filius enī m̃s plurimos dolores in corpore suo p̃tulit. et mortē crucis subiit. unde & uos in amore ipsius multas angustias patiemini. cū in uobis met ipsis sup̃a-tis. qđ in libidine peccati exgustu pomi seminati ē.
S; tam̃ ibi ab incendio li-bidinis effluentes riuulos

in se-
castihum-
tur-
labitariresis-ms-gumuntulaabie-
mag-ynd-core-sup-aronqua-
rib;
libi-
mu-p̃se-ind-tis-
me-rayqđpol-cor-
con-
for-mi-
ap-sic-cū-
et u-ur̃i

140
xxvii.

memer et miditer abolenda est. Et ita omnia elementa mundi que prius in magna quiete constiterant in maxima in-quietudine uersa. horribiles tiores ostenderunt. quia creatura illa que ad seruitutem homi-nis creata fuerat. nec ulla aduersitatem in se senserat homi-nem inobedientiam arripiente. ita quod deo inobediens fuit. et ipsa tranquillitatem suam reliquit et inquietudinem susce-pit. maximas & plurimas et varietates hominibus inferens. quoniam homo se ipsum addeteriora inclinauerat. ut per illam coerceretur.
Quid est hoc? Quia homo in loco deliciarum deo rebellis exiit. idcirco et creatura illa que homini in seruitio subiecta fuit. se homini opposuit.

xxviii.

Sed paradysus est locus ame-nissimus qui floret in uiri-ditate florum et herbarum. & deliciis omnium aromatum. re-pletus optimis odoribus. dota-tusque in gaudio beatarum animarum dantis fortissimum succum. aride terre quia fortissima uim terre tribuit. uelut anima corpori uires prebet. quoniam ipsa pa-radysus in umbra et in penumbra peccatorum non obscuratur.

xxviii.

Quia propter auditum et intelligentiam me. uos qui in cordibus uestris dicitis. Quid sunt et cur sunt hec? Ocur tam stulti estis in cordibus uestris. uos qui ad imagi-nem et similitudinem dei facti estis.

Quomodo tam magna gloria et tantus honor qui uobis datus est. posset esse sine probatione. quasi nichil et inanis causa. Aurum inigne debet probari. et preciosi lapides in purgatione poliri. et huiusmodi omnia in omnibus per-quiri. Unde ostult homines. hoc quod ad imaginem et simili-tudinem dei factum est. quomodo sine probatione posset subsiste-re. Nam homo super omnem creatu-ram examinandus est. & idcirco per omnem creaturam expurgandus est.
Quomodo. Spiritus per spiritum probandus est. caro per carnem terra per aquam. ignis per frigus. pugna per repulsionem. bonum per malum. pulchritudo per deformem. paupertas per diuitias. dulcedo per amaritudinem. sanitas per infirmitatem. longum per breue. durum per molle. altitudo per profunditatem. lux per tenebras. uita per mortem. paradysus per penas. celestis regnum per gehennam. terra cum terris. celestia cum celestibus. Sic homo in omni creatura probatus est. uidelicet in paradysus uita et in inferno. postea colloca-tus in celum. Aperte enim uidemus pauca de multis. que ante oculos uestris abscondita sunt.
Et cur derideatis ea. que recta.

plan
bon
digi
hom
tor
do obo
n di
Tu u fil. S
ul. p con
et si ma
qm
cor
ere
S: u ge
mi
lib ta
mi
m rn po sa di dy er cu
di
ta u
in po
s p

15 plana. et iusta. ac bona. in omib. bonis corā dō s. Quare his in dignāmini. Ds iustus ē. s. genus hominū in p̄uaricatione p̄cep torū dī iniustū ē cū sapiens dō eē commendit. Nunc dic mihi. xxx. o homo. Quid putas te fuisse. cū n̄ dū eras in anima et corpore.
Tu uero nescis. quomodo creat sis. s. nunc o homo celū et t̄ram uis p̄scrutari. et iusticiā eorū in constitutione dī di iudicare. et sūma dinoscere. cū nec in fi ma ualeas examinare. q̄a nesci q̄m uiuas ī corpe t̄ q̄m exuaria corpe q̄ te in primo homine creauit. ille hec om̄ia p̄uidit.
s. idē inuissim̄ pat̄ misit uni genitū suū mori p̄p̄lo. ut ho minē de diabolica potestate liberaret. Et sic homo libe. xxx. ratus fulget in dō. et ds in ho mine. consortiū homo habet in dō. fulgentiorē scilicet. cla ritatē. quā prius haberet possidens in celo. Qd̄ n̄ fuis set si idē filius dī carnē n̄ in diuisset. quō si homo in para dyso p̄mansisset filius dī in cruce passus n̄ fuisset. Sed cū homo p̄callidū serpentē deceptus ē. ds in uera midia tactus ē. ita qd̄ unigenitū su um in integerrima uirgine incarnari constituit. et sic post ruinā hominis eleuare s. plurime uirtutes in celo fulgentes. uelut ē humilitas re gina uirtutū. que in uirgineo partu floruit. et ut etiā ceterē uirtutes que electos dī ad cele stia p̄ducunt. Nā cū ager mul to labore colit̄ multū fructū p̄fert. sicut in humano gene re ostensū ē. quia post ruinā hominis. plurime uirtutes ad subleuationē eī surrexerunt.

Sed o homines uos grauari cor porali grauedine. n̄ uidetis il lā magnā gl̄am que uobis sine macula et sine ulla indig natione in plena iusticia dī p̄parata ē. ita qd̄ nullus eī deicere potest. Prius enī q̄m fabrica mundi constituta fuisset. hec om̄ia ds in uera iusticia p̄uidit. Unde o ho mo similitudinē hanc con sidera. Dñs qui sine tedio in multo studio ortū facere uult. primitus aptū locū eī de horti ponit. ac deinde locū cuiq; plantationis dis ponens. fructū bonarū ar borū atq; utilitatē. sapore odore et bonā famā diuersorū aromatū in eo considerat. Et sic idē dñs magnus philoso phus. et p̄fundus artifex. ex istens. quāq; plantationē suā in eo disponit. ut bene dis cerni in utilitate sua possit. ac deinde excognat. q̄ma munitione cū circūdet. ut nullus inimicorū suorū plantatio nes ei dissipare ualeat. Tunc etiā pignitarios suos constitu it. qui eundē hortū rigare sci ant. et qui fructū ei colligant. et exinde diuisa pignita faci ant. Qua ppter o homo diligen ter considera quia si dñs ille pūdet. qđ hortus suus nullū fructū nec ullā utilitatē pferēs fruendus ē. quare tunc tam philosophus. et tam artifex hortū illū unā magno studio. et unā magnis laborib; facit. plantat. rigat. et munit. Au di g et intellige. Ds qui sol iusticie ē. splendorē suū sup lutū qđ puaricatio hominis ē misit. et splendor ille in mul ta claritate resplenduit. quō lutū illud ualde fedū fuit.

 Sol enī in sua claritate efful sit. et lutū in sua fednate pu truit. unde sol maiori dilecti one audientib; amplexabat. quā si lutū ei oppositū n ēet.
 Sed sicut. lutū ad similitudi nē solis fedū ē. sic etiā trans gressio hominis ad iusticiā dī iniqua ē. unde iusticia quia pulchra ē diligenda ē. et iniquitas quō fedā ē abicien da ē. In hanc fednatē cecidit ouis hui dñi. qui talē ortū plantauerat. S; ouis hēc eidē dño n ppter ignauā ei. s; p con sensū eidē ouis abatra ē. quā postea idē dñs immutuo studio et iusticia requisuit. Qua ppter tunc chorus angloz in maxi mo honore illuminatus ē. cū hominē angli in celo uiderent.

 Quid ē hoc. Cū innocens agn in cruce suspensus ē. elēnta tremuerūt. quia nobilissimū fili uirginis de manib; homicida rū corporalit occisus ē. in cui morte pđna ouis ad pascua uitę reportata ē. Nā antiquus psecutor p quā uidit. qđ ouē uitā ppter sanguinē innocentis agni quē idē agnus in remis sionē peccatorū hominū effu derat. dimittere debuit. tunc primū cognouit. qđ agnus il le ēet. quō prius scire n potu it. quomodo idē celestis pa nis sine uirili semine et sine ulla concupiscentia peccati de uirgine in obumbratione spē scī incarnatus ē. Idē enī psecutor in initio creationis sue inflatus supbie crexit se in mortē se ipsū dēiciens. et hominē de glā parady si ex pellens. cui dñs in potestate sua resistere noluit. s; cū in humilitate p filiū suū supa uit. Et quia lucifer iusticiā dī subsannauit. iusto iudi cio dī incarnationē unige niti dī scire n potuit. Nam in hoc abscondito consilio. pđna ouis ad uitā reporta ta ē. l cur

 m
 l
 c b
 u
 m
 a
 b
 e f
 a d
 e
 e r
 e
 l
 e
 s h
 d
 f
 q g
 s
 e
 c
 S
 n t
 q
 u
 a
 m
 h
 l
 r
 s
 l
 e
 Q

ta ē. Unde o rebelles homines. cur tamā duriciā uobis assumitis. Dñs hominē deserere noluit. s; filiū suū ad saluationē ei misit. quō sic dñs caput superbie in antiquo serpente contriuit. In reptione enī hoīs de morte infernus claustrū suū apuit. satana clamante heu heu quis me adiuuabit. Sed & omīs diabolica turba in fremitu magno decerpit se admirans quē tanta potestas ē. cui ipsa cū principe suo resistere n̄ possit. cū sibi fideles animas auferri uideret. Sic homo super celos elcatus ē q̄a dñs in homine et homo in dō p filiū dī apparuit. Idē enī dñs qui ouē istā pdiderat. s; eā tā glōse adunā reducere. p̄cio s̄a margaritā in similitudinē ei dē ouis habuit. quē ipsi decidentis in multas sordes corrunt. Sed ipse eā ita in sorde iacere n̄ p̄mittens eā clementer exuauit. ac eā de sorde illa in qua iacuerat ita expurgauit. ut aurū in fornace expurgat. atq; illā in pristinū honorem maiori glā reposuit. Nā dñs hominē creauit s; ipse diabolica p̄suasione in mortē corruit. de qua eū filiū dī p sanguinē suū eripuit. et eū & eū ad celestē glām glōse p̄duxit.

Quomodo. In humilitate & caritate simul opant. sicut nec aīa caritate. Humilitas enī filiū dī de uirgine nasci fecit. ubi ipsa humilitas nec in auarīs amplexibus. nec in pulcritudine carnis. nec in diuitiis tēnis. nec in auris ornatis. nec in sclari bus honorib; inuenta ē. s; filiū dī in p̄sepio iacuit q̄a mat̄ ei paup̄cula fuit. S; & humilitas semp gemit. plorat. et omīa crimina interimit. q̄d opus ipsi ē. Unde quisq; diabolu uult expugnare se munit. et armat. cū humilitate. quō lucifer eā ualde fugit. et uelut coluber se corā ea incauernā abscondit. quia ubi ipsa illū apprehenderit eū quasi uilissimū filiū. citius frangit. Carnas quoq; unigenitū dī in sinu patris in celo tulit. et eū in uterū matris int̄a posuit. q̄m ipsa nec peccatores. nec publicanos sp̄nit. s; omīs saluari ē tendit. Qua p̄pt̄ & fontē lacrimarū ab oculis fidelū sepius educens. duriciā cordis emoluit. In hoc humilitas et caritas clariores cētis uirtutib; s; q̄m humilitas et caritas sūt. uelut anima & corpus. quē fortiores uires cētis uirib; anime et membris corporis habent. Quomodo. Humilitas ē quasi anima. & caritas uelut corp⁹. nec ab inuicē separari possunt.

164 nec corpus disuungi ualent: s; sibi coopantē quādiu homo in corpore uiuit. Et sicut animę et corpori diuersa mēbra cor poris scđm uires suas subiecta s: ita etiā humilitati et carna ti ceterę uirtutes scđm iusticiā suā coopantē. Et idō o homines ad glām dī et p salūtē urā hu militatē & caritatē scđm amim; cū quib; armati diabolicas in sidias n̄ timebitis: s; indeficientē unā possidebitis. Vnde quicūq; sciētiā in spū scō et pennas in fide habent. iste admonitio nē meā n̄ transcendat: s; cā in gustu anime sue amplecten do percipiat. Tercia uisio p̄me parit.

POST HEC
VIDI MAXIMV
instrumentū ro tundū et umbro sū scđm similitu dinē oui supius artū et in medio amplum ac inferius constrictū in cuius extiori parte per cūm lucidus ignis fuit quasi pellē umbrosā sub se habens. Et in igne isto erat globus rutilans ig nis tantęq; magnitudinis qđ idē instrumentū totū ab eo illu strabat. sup se tres faculas sur sū ordinate positas habens. quę suo igne eundē globū ne laberēt continebant. Et idē globus se aliquando sur sū ele uauit. et plurimus ignis ei oc currit ita qđ exinde flāmas su as longius pduxit. ac se aliqn do deorsū inclinauit. multūq; frigus ei obuiā uenit. ita qđ & ex hoc flāmas suas eiūs sub duxit. S; & de igne illo qui idē instrumentū circūdederat fla tis quidā cū suis turbib; ex iebat. et de pelle illa quę sub eo fuit alius flatus cū turbib; suis ebulliebat. qđ se in ipso in strumento hac et illac diffunde bant. In eadē quoq; pelle qđā tenebrosus ignis tanti horro ris erat qđ cū intueri n̄ pote rā. qui totā pellē illā sua for titudine concutiebat. plenus sonitū tēpestati. et acutissi morū lapidū maior et minor.

Quidū sonitū suū elenaret il le lucidus ignis et uentū & aer cōmoueant. ita qđ fulgura sonitū ipsū puenert. qđ ignis ille primū cōmotionē eiusdē sonitus in se semiebat. S; sub eadē pelle purissimus ether erat sub se nullā pellē habens. in quo etiā quendā globum candentis ignis plurimęq; magnitudinis uidebā sup se duas faculas sur sū clare posi tas habentē ipsūq; globū ne modū cursus sui excederet continentes. Et in eodē ethe re m fite f inter ans-sub recu resta spera re qu

mb;
tū m bat;
sū ac habe dens re d te co mā dū uā qui exie
se u istox glob eran eūd illa
ead se m glo tuli
di
uel uer
bra
luc

re multe et clare sperere ubiq: po site fuerant. in quas idē globus interdū se aliquantulū euacu ans. clarnatē suā emisit. et ita sub p̄fatu rubeū igneū globū recurrent. et ab eo flamas suas restaurans. iterū illas in easdē speras efflaunt. S; & ab ipso ethe re quidā flatus cū suis turbi nib; se effundebat. qui se in p̄fa tū instrumentū ubiq: dilata bat. Sub eodē autē ethere aq sū aerē indebā albā pellē sub se habentē. q̄ se hac et illac. diffun dens. omī instrumēto illi humo rē dedit. Quidū se mūdū repen te congregaret. repentinā plu uiā multo fragore emisit. et dū se lenit. diffudit. blanda plu uiā leni motu dedit. S; & exco quidā flat. cū turbib; suis exiens. p̄p̄dictū instrumentū se ubiq: diffudit. Et in medio istōz elemētōz quidā arenosus glob; plurime magnitudinis erat. quē eadē elemēta ita cir cūdederant qd nec hac nec illac labi poterat. S; dū mūdū eadē elemēta cū p̄dictis flamb; se inuicē concuterent. eundē globū sua fortitudine. aliqn tulū moueri faciebant. Et ui di inter aquilonē et orientē uelut maximū montē. qui uersus aquilonē multas tene bras. et uersus orientē multā lucē habebat. ita tam qd nec lux illa ad tenebras nec te nebre illę ad ipsā lucē p̄tinge re potuerūt. Audiuq: iterū uocē de celo dicentē m̄. Ds qui .1. omā sua uoluntatē condidit. ea ad cognitionē & ad honorē nominis sui creauit. n̄ solū aū ea que uisibilia & tēporalia s̄ in ipsis ostendens. s; etiā illa que inuisibilia et cōia s̄ in eis ma nifestans. Qd & uisio hec quā cernis demonstrat. Nā hoc .11. maximū instrumentū qd ui des rotundū et umbrosū scdm similitudinē oui sup̄ius artū.

 & in medio amplum. ac inferi constrictū. declarat fideliter. om̄ptem dīm in maiestate sua in cōphensibile. & in m̄ysteri is suis inestimabile. & sp̄e omniū fidelū existentē. cū primitus homines rudes et simplices in actib; suis cōtē. s; postea inueni ac. in nouo testamēto se dilatan tes. tandē circa finē mundi multas erumnas in angustis suis passuri sunt. In cui' exteri .111. ori parte percussū lucidus ignis ē. quasi pellē umbrosā sub se habens. qui de signat. qd d̄s illos q̄ extra uerā fidē s̄ ubiq: pignē ultionis sue ex urens. hos qui intra fidē cātho licā manent. ubiq: pignē con solationis sue. purificat. ita diabolice p̄uersitatis tenebro sitatē p̄sternens. sicut & fac tū ē cū diabolus q̄ndo a dō crea-tus ē dō se opponere uolens. in pdmōnē de uictus corrumpit. Et in igne isto glob. rutilantis ignis tamq. magnitudinis qd idē instrumentū totū ab eo illustrāt. q̄ splendorē claritatis sue ostendit. q̄a in dō patre ē ineffa-bilis unigenit. ei sol. iusticie ful-gorē ardentis carnis habens. tamq. glē existens. qd omīs ereamia. claritate lucis ei illuminat. sup se tres faculas sursum ordinate positas habens. que suo igne eundē globū ne labat continent. uidelicet sua admi-nistratiōe demonstrantes qd idē fili. dī. de celo ad t̄ras descen-dens. anglis in celestib. relictis. hominib. etiā q̄ in anima et corpore subsistunt. celestia manifestauit. qui suē claritas obsequio ipsū glificantes. omnē nociuū errorē abiciunt. cū cū uerū dī filiū de uera uirgine incarnatū magnificant ubi ipsi eū anglis p̄nunciant. et ubi homo in anima et corpore uiuens. cū fidei gaudio suscepit. Qua p̄pt. et idē glob. se aliquādo sursum eleuat plurimusq. ignis ei occur-rit ita qd exinde flāmas suas longius pducit. significans. viii quia ubi tēpus illud uenit. qd unigenitus dī p̄deptione et subleuatione humani generis p̄ uoluntatē patris incarnari debuit. spiritus

sēs. in uirtute. patris supna mysteria in beata uirgine mirabili opatus ē. ita qd eodē filio dī in uirginali pudicia. fecunda uirginitate. mirificū fulgorē dante uirginitas glo-sa effecta ē. quō in nobili uirgine exoptabilis incarnatio demonstrata ē. Et ita etiā se aliquādo deorsū inclinat. multumq. frigus ei obuiā uenit. ita qd & ex hoc flāmas suas ei eius subducit. declarans. quō idē unigenitus dī ex uirgine natus. et ita ad paupertatē hominū elementē inclinat. plu-rimis miseris ipsi occurrentib. multas corporales angustias sustinens. cū se mundo corporali ter ostenderat. de mundo transiens ad patrē rediit. discipulis etiā ipsius astantibus nescit scriptū ē. Videmib. illis eleuatus ē. & nubes susce-pit eū ab oculis eor. Qd dī. filiis eccle. in uiterio. scientia cor-dis sui filiū dī suscipientib. scītas corporis ei eleuata ē in po-tencia diuinitatis ipsius. et in mystico miraculo nubes secreti misterii suscepit eū mor-talib. oculis regens ipsū. flabisq. uentor. ipsi famulatū. ex-hibentib. S. et ut uidet de igne illo qm idē instrumentū circūdederat flatus quidā cū suis turbinib. exiebat. qui ostend

 potm potest mario dit. u homi stratu sub co suis eb rabie pessim
 locum instru dum dis in inter
 de q sus ig cū in qd m infid mū b erup
 inter
 qui t dinc omī suo b prin uen font mox
 hom
 et eb dur eban is-qu

ostendit p̄tendens. quō ab omni potente dō totū mundū sua potestate cōplente. uera disfamatio cū iustis sermonib; p̄cedit. ubi ipse uiuus et uerus d̄s hominib; in uernate demonstratus ē. Et de pelle illa que .ix. sub eo ē alius flatus cū turbimib; suis ebullit. q̄a etiā de diabolica rabie que d̄m n̄ ignorans timer pessima infamia. cū nequissimis locutionib; exit. qui se in ipso instrum̄to hac et illac. diffundunt. quō in seclō diuersis mo-dis utiles & inuitiles rumores inter p̄p̄los se dilatant. In ea .x. de quoq; pelle quidā tenebrosus ignis. tanta horroris ē q̄d eū intueri n̄ potes. q̄ declarat q̄d in pessimis et in nequissimis insidus am̄qui p̄ditoris. t̄trimū homicidiū tantū feruoris erūpit. q̄d insaniā illi humanū intellectus discernere n̄ ualet. qui totā pelle illā sua fortitudine concutit. quō homicidiū om̄s diabolicas malignitates suo horrore cōplectitur. cū in primogenitas ab ira odiū ebullens. fr̄icidiū p̄petrauit. plenū sonitū tēpestatū. et acutissi-mōz lapidū maiōz & minōz q̄a homicidiū plenū ē auaricia. et ebrietas. atq; acutissimis duriciis. que sine midia bachant tā in magnis homicidiis. quā in minorib; uicis. Qui dū sonitū suū eleuat. ille lucidus ignis. et ueni & ac̄r cōmouent. quō dū homicidiū in auaricia effusionis sanguinis stri-det. supna iudicia et expiran-ones uolantū rumor. & expan-siones fluentū dispositionū in uoluntate recti iudicii suscitant. ita q̄d fulgura sonitū ipsū p̄ueniunt. q̄a ignis ille primū cōmotionē eiusdē sonitus in se sentit. q̄a dignitas ostensionis diuini ex animis idē nefas p̄- cellendo opprimit. cū etiā diuina maiestas. ante quā fremitus eiū infamie publice manifestet. uidetur oculo cui oīa nuda s̄ cū p̄uideat. Sed sub .xvi. eadē pelle purissimus ether ē. sub se nullā pellē habens. quō sub insidus am̄qui p̄ditoris serenissima fides lucet. in qua nulla incertitudo infidelita-tis latet. a se met ipsa n̄ fundata. s; ad xpm̄ suspensa. in quo etiā quendā globū. cadentis ignis. plurimeq; magnitudinis uidet. qui ueraciter desig-nat in uictā ecclesiam in fide candorē innocentis clarnas. plurimiq; honoris ut tibi demonstrat p̄tendens. et sup se duas faculas sursū clare positas habent. ipsūq; globū ne modū cursus sui excedat continentes. que sua significatione s̄ ostendentes. quod ecclesiam. de supernis edita duo testamenta. uidelicet ueteris et noue auctoritatis. addi uina precepta celestium secretorum tabularum. scilicet cum ipsa eadem ecclesiam ne inuarietate diuersorum morum se precipitantem extendat continent. quia et ueteris et noua testificatio beatitudinem superne hereditatis ipsi ostendunt.

xii. Qua propter etiam in eodem ethere multe et clare sperere ubique positae sunt in quas idem globus inter dum se aliquantulum euacuans. claritatem suam emittit. quomodo in puritate fidei plurima et splen-dida opera pietatis ubique apparent inque eadem ecclesia con-gruo tempore concubatio-ne uerborum aliquantulum sustinet. decorum miraculorum suorum tradit cum ipsa uelut in merore iacet. tam claritatem operum in perfectis hominibus. palios admirant et ita sub prefatu rubeum ignemque globum recurrentes et ab eo fla-mas suas restaurans. iterum il-las in easdem speras efflat quomodo ipsa in commotione posita. sub protectione unigeniti propter et ab eo sufferentias diuine confortationis accipiens. ita etiam amorem supernorum in beatissimis operibus declarat. Vnde et ab ipso ethere quidam flatus cum suis turbis. se effundit. qui se in prefatu instrumentum ubique dilatatur. quia abundantie fidei fortissima fama cum ueris et perfectis assertionibus. in auxilium hominum emanans. fines totius orbis multa celeritate permebat. Sub eodem autem ethere aquosum aerem uidetur albam pellem sub se habentem. qui se hac et illac diffundens. omni instru-mento illi humorem dat. quomodo sub fide que tam antiquis quam in nouis patribus erat. baptis-mus in ecclesia ad salutem creden-tium ut et uerissime manifestat.

in innocentia beatissime stabilis fundatus. se diuina inpiratione ubique dilatans. uniuerso orbi irrigatione salutis incredentibus. attulit.
Quidum se interdu repente con-gregat. repentina pluuiam. multo fragore emittit. et dum se leniter diffundit. blanda plu-uiam leni motu. dat. quia dum bap-tismus aliquando passiores ueritatis in uelocitate predicationis. et in profunditate mentis ipsorum coadunat. ceteri copia uerborum in inundatione predicationis eorum attonitis hominibus. manifestat. interdu etiam idem bap-tismus suauiter tepamento in ipsis predicatoribus. dilatatus. suauem irrigationem cum discretionis adunatorio populi attrahit. propter latum. Qua propter et ex eo quidam flatus cum turbi-

19
mb. suis creans. p̄ p̄dictū instru-mentū se ubiq. diffundit. quō abundatione baptismatis. salutē credentib. asserens. ue-rissima fama cū uerbis fortissi-morū sermonū egrediens. omnē mundū manifestatione beattūdinis sue pfudit. ut iā in p̄p̄tis infidelitātē deserentib. et fidē catholicā appetentib. apte declarat. Et in medio istorū ^{xvii.} elementorū quidā arenosus glob. plurimē magnitudinis est. quē p̄fata elem̄ta ita circūdant qd nec hac nec illac labi potest. qui manifeste ostendit informidinem creaturarū dī. homīnē p̄funde consideratio-nis de limo t̄re mirabili modo. multe gl̄e factū de gente. et uirtute earundē creaturarū ita obuolūtū. qd ab eis nullomodo se-parari ualet. quia elem̄ta mundi adseruntur hominis creatura. ipsi famulatū exhibent. dū ho-uelit in medio eorū sedens. ipsis diuina dispositione p̄sident. ut etia p̄me inspiratus dauid dic.
Gl̄a et honore coronasti eū. ^{xvii.} & constituisti eū sup opa manuū tuarū. Qd dī. O tū d̄s qui om̄a mirabiliter fecisti. aurea et purpurea corona intellexit.
& dignissimo in dūm̄to uisibilis speciei coronasti hominē. ita ponens eū quasi principē sup altitudinē p̄fectorū opū tuorū que increaturis tuis iuste & bene disposuisti. Tu enī p̄alūs creaturis tuis. magnas et admiran-das dignitates homini inuixisti.

Sed ut uides dū in t̄dū eadē ^{xviii.} elem̄ta cū p̄dictis flamb. se in uicē concucunt. eundē globū sua fortitudine aliquātulum moueri faciunt. quia dū con-gruo t̄pore creature dī cū fa-ma miraculorū ipsius creatoris se in uicē cōplectunt. ita qd mi-raculū miraculo magno tonitro uerborū innectitur. homo corundē miraculorū magni-tudine p̄cussus. concussione men-tis et corporis sui sentit. dū in eisdē mirabilib. attonitus. in becillitatē fragilitatis sue con-siderat. Et uides in t̄ aquilo ^{xix.} nē & orientē uelut maximū montē. qui uersus aquilonē multas tenebras. et uersus orien-tē multā lucē habet. quō in t̄ diabolicā impietate & diuinā bonitate magnus casus homi-nis apparet. p̄ pessimā deceptionē in reprobis multas miseras damnationis. et p̄ exoptabile salutē in electis plurimā felicitate redemptionis tenens. ita ta-men qd nec lux illa ad tenebras. nec tenebre ille ad ipsam lucē p̄tingere possunt. quia opa lucis opib. tenebrarū se n̄ int̄serunt. nec opa tenebra-rū ad opa lucis ascendunt.

19^v quāuis diabolus ea multociens p malos homines obfuscare la boret. uelut ē in paganis. hereti cis. et in pseudo pphīs. et quos isti sua fallaci deceptione post se t̄here conant. Quomodo. Quia uolunt ea scire que ipsis scienda n̄ s̄. il lū imitant. qui se altissimo si milē ē anhelant. Et quō illū subsecunt. et ipse mendaciū q̄si ueritatē eis scdm uoluntatē ip sorū demonstrat. Unde meū n̄ s̄. nec ego cū illis. quia uias meas n̄ ambulant. s̄. extraneas semitas amant. inquirentes q̄d eis stul ta creatura de futuris causis fal laciū ostendat. et hoc ita uo lunt habere. scdm q̄d illud p uerse exquir̄t me contēpnen tes et scōs meos abicientes. qui sincero corde me diligunt.

xv. Sed isti homines qui puer sa arte tā punaciū me tēptant ita q̄d creaturā illā que ad ser uitutē ipsorū facta ē seruiant. scissantes ut rē illā quā ipsi scire uolunt eis scdm uolunta tē ipsorū ostendat. numq̄d possunt in seruatione sue ar tis elongare t̄ ad breuiare tē pus. q̄d eis a creatore suo con stitutū ē uiuere. Certe hoc. nec diē nec horā facere p̄ualeant.
Aut nūquid possunt p̄desti nationē dī post ponere. Nul lo modo. Omiseri. nonne p mitto creaturas uobis passio nes uias m̄dū de monstrare. que signa tunc idō habent. quā me dīm timent. uelut ser uus facultatē dīm sui. aliqn̄ do ostendit & ut bos et asin⁹ ac cetera animalia uoluntatē dn̄orū suorū manifestant. cū eā in seruitutē sua fidelit̄ ad im plent. Ostuln. cū me obliuioni traditis. nec ad me respicien tes. nec me adorantes. s̄. aspici entes ad subiectā uobis creatu rā. q̄d ipsa portendit & ostē dat. tunc punaciū me abiciens. infirmā creaturā per creatore urō colentes. Quā p̄pt̄ et ego dico. O homo. cur creaturā illā colis que te nec consolari nec tibi auxiliari potest et que tibi nullā p̄spicit infelicitā te confert. uelut mathemati ci moris instructores. et de in credulitate paganorū sequaces eorū affirmare solent. ita q̄d dicunt stellas uobis hominib. uitā tribuere. et om̄s actus urōs disponere. Omiseri. q̄s stellas fecit. S̄. stelle m̄dū ex pmissione mea. cū quib. dā signis hominib. declarant. ut etiā filius m̄s in euanglio ostendit ubi dic̄. Erum signa in sole. et luna & stel lis. Qd̄ dī. In lumine horū luminū hominib. ministrat. et circum ipsorū tempora tēporū ostendunt. Unde etiam in nouissimis temporibus laetabilia et piculosa tempo-ra promissione mea in ipsis demonstrantur. ita quod radius solis et splendor lune et clarmas stellarum aliquando subtrahit. ut corda hominum ex hoc concueiant. Sic et per stellam ex uoluntate mea in carnatio filii mei ostensa est. Homo autem propria stella que una ipsi disponat non habet uelut stultus et errans populus asserere conatur.

Sed omnes stelle omni populo cum seruitute sua communes sunt. Sed quod stella illa ceteris stellis preclarior est fuit. hoc est quod unigenitus meus per alius hominibus uirginali par-tu sine peccato natus est. ipsa nullum subleuam eadem filio esse rens. nisi solum incarnationem et populo fideliter denuntians. quomodo omnes stelle et creature me timet. iussione mea tantum perficiunt nec ullius rei in ulla creatura noticia ulla habent. Nam cum mihi placuerit creature iussione mea ostendunt. uelut cum faber nummum faciens in eo congruentem formam celat. sic quod idem nummum formam sibi impositam declarat. sed de hoc nulla potestate ha-bens non nouit quando faber aliam formam sibi imponere uelit. quomodo nec longum nec breue tempus sue forme discernit. Quod est hoc. O homo. si lapis coram te iaceret. in quo aliqua signa passionum tuarum diligenter cum intueris de notares. tunc secundum fallacem estimationem tuam aut de infelicitate tua contristatus aut de prosperitate tua gausius in deceptione diceres.

Ach moriar. uel. Wach uiuam. aut heu quanta infelicitas seu Wach quanta prosperitas mea est. Et quod te lapis ille tibi conferret. Num quicquam tibi auferret et daret.
Sed nec tibi ob id nec potest ualere.
Sic etiam nec stelle nec ignis. nec aues nec alia huiusmodi creatura insignis seruitutionis tue quicquam te ledere. uel uiuare possunt. Quod si in creaturam hanc que ad seruitutem tuam facta est confidis abiciens me. tunc et ego iusto iudicio meo exoculis meis te precipio felicitatem reg-ni mei tibi auferens. Nam ego nolo ut stellas. aut ignem aut uolatilia seu alias tales crea-turas de futuris causis seruite-ris. quomodo si illas peruenire inspec-eris oculi tui mihi molesti sunt. et te uelut perditum angelum deicio. qui uenerat deseruit. et se ipsum in damnationem precipitauit. O homo. cum stelle et ceteris creature facie subi fueris. Numquid de institu-tione earum deo consilium dedisti.
Sed presumptio huiusmodi sciscitatio-nis orta est in primo sciscitatu. in delictis cum homines deum ita obliuioni dedissent quod genus

xx.ii.

et genus diuersas creaturas superbe insperxit. et de futuris causis uaria signa in eis que sunt. Et sic etiam error ille in baal exortus est. scilicet quod ho- xx.ii. mines creaturam dei pro deo decepti colebant. ad quod eos etiam diabolica irrisio excitauit. quia post creaturam magis quam pro creatore suum respexerunt. hoc scire cupientes. quod scire non de-buerunt. Vnde etiam peiora his appa- xx.ii.
 ruunt. cum homines per diabolum magica arte in sa-nitate ceperunt. ita quod diabolum ui-dent. et audiunt. ipse eis falla-citer loquens et ostendens. quod uelut creaturam hanc inspiciat. et alia existat. Nolo autem dicere.
 quomodo per diabolum primi se-ductores edocti sunt. ita quod cum uident et audiunt. qui cum hoc modo querunt. scilicet ipsi de hac ne-quicia sua ualde culpabiles existunt. cum me dominum suum hoc modo denegant. et antiquum seductorem imitantur. O homo. ego in sanguine filii mei te requi-siui. non cum maliciosa iniquitate. sed cum magna caritate. scilicet tu me uerum dominum deseris. et illum qui mendax est imitaris. Ego sum iusticia et ueritas. et ideo admonco te in fide et exhortor in amore. ac reduco te in penitentia. ut quamuis sanguinolentus sis in pollutionibus peccatorum tam exurgas de casu ruine tue. quod si me subsannaueris. parabola huius similitudinis senties. que dicit. Quidam dominus multos seruos si Qui subiectos habens. unicuique eorum de seruis suis plurima arma bellica dedit dicens. Estote probi et uiles. tarditate et tempore abicientes.

 Sed dum quiddam inter eos agerent idem serui quendam illusorem. et diuersas artes pessimum ad inuentorem secus uiam uiderunt. unde et quiddam ex eis decepti dixerunt.
 Huius hominis artes discere uolumus.
 Et arma que habebant abici-entes. ad illum cucurrerunt. Quibus alii dicebant. Quid facitis hunc illusorem imitantes. et dominum nostrum ad uacundiam pro-uocantes. Et illi responderunt. Quod hoc domino nostro ob erit. Et dominus eorum illis ait. O serui nequa. cur arma que uobis deditis abiciistis. Et cur carnis estis uobis hanc uanitatem amare. quam in domino uro cui serui estis famulari. hec ergo per illusorem istum ut cupitis. quia in seruire non uultis. et uidete quod est stulticia uobis profuit.
 Et abiicit eos. Quod dicit. Dominus iste est deus omnipotens omnes populos sub po-tate sua regens. ita quod quicunque hominem intellectu armauit. mandans ei ut strenuus et uigilans in instrumentis uirtutum sit. prauidens et neglegen-

21 nā a se excutens. S; dū homines mā uentis arripunt. indui nis mandatis ire disponentes. ipsis multe tēptationes occur runt. ita qđ diabolu totius or bis seductore & multipliciū uicioꝝ nequissimū artificē. n̄ in uia uentis s; pdeceptionē in fidiū positi attendunt. unde & quidā ipsos in iusticie magis quā rectitudinis ama tores. peiundē diabolu seducti. plus student ei dē antiqui se ductoris uicia imitari. quā uirtutes dī amplecti. Et intel lectū quē ad diuina mandata conuertere deberent. ad uicia tēne iniquitatis retorquentes. diabolo se subponunt. Quib; doctores eoz uelut consodales. ipsos p sacras scripturas mul tociens occurrentes. facta eoz imppant. et cur diabolica fig menta sequentes diuinā ubi onē sibi inducant uociferant.
S; illi admonitiones eoz sepi sime subsannantes. se in pau cis peccare et dīm suū minime offendere p supbiā affirmant.
Vnde cū in obduratione ista pseuerant diuinā sententiā accipiunt. quō ipsis seruis in iquitatis existentib; cur in tellectū de sup sibi datū suf focauerint. & cur magis de ceptiones antiqui seducto ris susceperint quā creatore suū cui strenue famulari de buerant dilexerint obiect. ita qđ ipsi contempti. diabolicis illusionib; scđm opa sua qđ dō seruire noluerit de putant. ubi considerare cōpellunt. qđ nequissima seductio ipsis p fuerit. quō hoc modo abiecti dampnationē incurrunt.

quia diuina pcepta post po nentes plus diabolu quā dīm sequi contenderit. Ego enim nolo ut me homines contēp nant qui me infide scire debent. quō si me abiecerint et creaturā sibi subiectā in spexerint. antiquū seducto rē in hoc imitantes. tunc et ego pmitto. ut eis & cū crea tura et cū diabolo scđm con cupiscentiā cordis sui fiat. quatinus ita expiant. qđ ip sis p sit creatura quā adora uerunt. uel qđ eis diabolus conferat quē sub secum s.
Et o stulti homines. cur creaturā de tēpore uite urē inquiras. Nullus enī ur̄m potest tēpus uite sue scire aut illud deuitare aut tēsilire. n̄ ut p me sibi constituti ē uiuere. qđ o homo cū salus tuā in scē rib; quā in spūalib; cōple ta fuerit p sens scēlin muta bis. et ad illud qđ terminū n̄ inueniet. transibis. Nā xx. m.

cū homo tantę fortitudinis ē. qđ palus pplis ardent in me ardet na qđ in conscientia tē in liquoris fermentū peccatę n̄ torpens. insidias amqui ser pentis deunat. hui spm a cor pore suo n̄ excutio ante quā dulces fructus suos insuaissi mo odore ad bonū finē pdu cat. Illū autē quē tantę fragi litatis confido. qđ tener ē in gravi dolore sui corporis. et in horrore pessimi insidiato ris iugū meū ferre. de hoc scō subtraho. ante quā in tempore marcescentis animi sui incipi at arescere. Om̄a enī scio. Volo autē humano generi quāq. iusticiā ad suā cautelā dare. na ut nullus hominū se pos sit excusare. cū homines mo neo et exhortor iusticiā facē. qđdo ipsis iudiciū mortis in curo. uclut iā sint morturi. cū adhuc diu uicturi sint. quō nemo nisi scđm utilitatē quā in hoīe uideo & scđm uoluntatē meā qua ei uiuere concedo. aliud tēpus habere uel sibi disponere poterit. quēadmodū etiā iob testat cū dicit. Construisti tmi nos ei. qui pteriri n̄ poterit.
Qđ dī. Tu qui sup om̄s es. et oīa ante quā fiant puides. etiā in secreto maiestatis tuę con struisti terminos humane uite. na qđ nec scientia nec prudentia. nec astutia ullius rei pteriri poterit nulla uti litate seu in infamia. seu in in uaniute. seu in senectute homi nū transgressi. nisi scđm pui dentia secretę tuę. quī hoīes ad glām nominis tui fieri ius sisti. Ego enī o homo ante constitutionē mundi te noui.

s. tam dies tuos in opib. tuis uolo considerare et utilitatē eę discernere. & quęq. opa tua diligent et acutissime ex aminare. Quēcūq. autē subi to de tēporali uita subtraho hui uite utilitas cōpleta ē. na ut si uita ipsius longius ptra beret nullā uiriditatē bonę fructuū ampli afferret s. ue lut tēporē carnee fidī habes. tantū quasi uacuo sono uer borū fumū emitteret nec in tamo tactu cordis sui me tan geret. unde ipsi inducias hu ius uite n̄ tribuo. s. ante quā in tēporē huiusmodi infertili tatis cadat. cū ab hoc scō sub duco. S. t o homo dico. Cur me contēpnis. Nonne pphetas meos ad te misi. et filiū meū psalutē tuā in lignū crucis dedi. et aplos meos ut tibi uia uernatis p euāgīm ostenderes ad te destinari. Unde n̄ po tes te excusare. quin om̄a bona habcas p me. Et grē xxv.

tunc
hui actu aut
di
toler re h mū tes p und
sup
dum
mū
ma
am
di
O
fū tri et om ha
fū
ut pe nē op
m fo
m
m et te fi
un
h
fi

tunc pponis me. Sed errore huius pueris. scilicet qd signa actuum tuorum in stellis aut igne aut in auri. seu in alia huiusmo di creatura queris. ampli nolo tolerare. quo omnes isti qui erro re hunc diabolica suasionem pri mi adinuenerunt dominum contempnen tes precepta illi omnino abiecerunt. unde et ipsi contempti sunt. Ego autem super omnem creaturam in claritate diuinitatis mee fulgeo. ita qd miracula mea in sanctis meis tibi manifestata sunt. quia propter nolo ut amplius hunc errorem augurandi exerceas. sed ut in me aspicias.

Ostende quis sum ego. Videlicet summi boni. Unde omnia bona tibi tribuo. cum diligenter quesieris me.
Et que credis me esse. Deus sum super omnia. et in omnibus. Sed tu uis me habere uelut rusticum qd dominum suum timet. Quomodo. Tu uis ut uoluntatem tuam faciam. cum tu precepta mea contempnas. Sic deus non est. Quid est hoc. Ipse enim nec opinionem inueni. nec timorem fi nis habet. Celi in laudibus meis sonant me inspicientes. et secundum iusticiam illam qui pro me posita sunt. mibi obediunt. Sol enim luna et stelle in nubibus. • celi secundum temperamentum suum apparent. nec non flabrum uenti. et pluuie in aere ut eis constitutum est currunt. et hec omnia creatori suo secundum ius sionem ipsius obediunt. Tu autem

xxviii.

o homo precepta mea non impleris. uoluntatem tuam sequeris. uelut iusticia legis tibi nec posita nec offensa sit. In tanta enim contu matia es. quamuis cunissis. qd tibi non sufficit iusticia legis mee. que exarata et culta est in sanguine filii mei. et bene tua in sanctis meis. ita uenis quam noui testamenti.

Sed et in magna stulticia uis me apprehendere. cum mihi hoc modo minaris dicens. si deo placet ut iustus et bonus sim. quare non facit me rectum. tu ita me cape uolens. uelut si petu lans hedus ceruicem uelit cape. qui fortissimis cornibus ceruicem ualide trudit et perforat. Sic et ego cum mecum petulant in mo ribus. tuis uis ludere. in preceptis le gis mee quasi cornibus meis. iudicio meo te conminuo. Hec enim sunt tibi in aures tuas re sonantes. sed tu illas non sequeris. sed per lupum curris. quem te pinas ita domasse. qd te ledere non pos sit. Sed idem lupo deuorat. te dicens. O uis ista secus uiam erra uit nec pastorem suum sequi uo luit. sed per me cucurrit. unde etiam illam uolo habere. quia me de git. et pastorem suum deseruit.
O homo. deus iustus est. et ideo omnia que in celo et in terra sunt. iusta ordinatione disposuit.

xxviii.

Ego enim sum magnus me dicus omnium languorum

xxx.

faciens uelut medicus qui languidū uidet qui medela ardemer desiderat. Quid ē hoc? Si languor paruus ē cū facile curat. si ū grauis ē. languido dicit. Ego argenti et aurū atē exigo. Qd si illa m dederis. te uiuabo. Sic et ego ob homo facio. Minora peccata ingemū et lacrimis ac in bona uoluntate hominū abstergo. grauiorib; autē culpis dico. Ob homo. age penitentiā et correctionē. et ostendā tibi mīdīam meā. et uitā etnā tibi dabo. Et stellas et alias creaturas de causis tibi occurrentib; ne inspicias. nec diabolu adores. nec eū inuoces. nec quicquā ab eo p̄q̄ras. quō si plus uolueris scire. qm te oporteat nosse ab antiquo seductore decipis q̄a cū prim⁹ homo plus quesuit quā querere deberet ab illo deceptus est. et impditiōe iux. S; tam diabolus nesciunt hominis redemptionē. ubi filius dī mortē occidit. et infernū fregit. Diabolus enī in initio p̄ mulierē deiecit hominē. s; d̄s in fine temporis p̄ mulierē. contriuit diabolū que filiū dī genuit. qui diabolica opa opa mirabiliter ad nihilum duxit. quāmodū ioh̄s dilectus m̄s testat̄ dicens. In hoc apparuit fili⁹ dī. ut dissoluat opa diaboli. Quid ē hoc? P̄p̄ salutē et saluationē homi nū apparuit maxima claritas. scilicet fili⁹ dī paupertatē humani corporis induens. s; uelut ardens stella in umbris nubib; fulgens. ita posuit in torculari. ubi uinū sorde fermentū exprimēdū erat. quō ipse lapis angularis sup torcular cecidit. et tale uinū fecit. qd maximū odorē suauitatis dedit. Ipse enī absq; inmundatione polluti sanguinis inhumano genere clarus homo effulgens. pede milicie sue os antiqui serpentis concuicauit. et dissoluens alicore iniquitatis illi omnia iacula que & furore & libidine plena erant. eū omnino contemptibile reddidit. Unde quicūq; scientiā in spū scō et pennas infide habet. iste admonitiōe meā n̄ transcendat. s; eā in gustu anime sue amplectendo p̄cipiat.

Quarta uisio. p̄me parte.

qua
part secre
um stac sim fulg
rum
mu
seof spū
ti s deb par
qua
uid reg suo dis
cad tion nea
m
for tu fui
for
mi
eg

Goede

uidi maximū serenissimūq;
splendorē ue
lut plurimis oculis flāmantē quatuorq; angulos ad quātor partes mundi uersos habentē q; secretū supni creatoris designans uimaximo misterio in manife statis ē. in quo etiā alī splendor similis aurore in se purpurei fulgoris claritate tenens appa ruit. Et ecce uidi uirā homines inuasit fac portantes. et inde ca seos facientes. cui quedā pars spissa fuit. unde fortes casei fac ti s. pars quedā tenuis. de qua debiles casei coagulati sunt. et pars quedā tabe p̄mixta. de qua amari casei effecti s. Et ita uidi quasi mulierē. uelut in tegrā formā hominis in utero suo habentē. Et ecce p̄secretam dispositionē supni conditoris. eadē forma motū inuide mo tionis dedit. ita qd uelut ig nea spa nulla linamēta huma ni corporis habens. cor eīdē forme possedit. et cerebrū eī tetigit. et se p̄ omnia membra ip sius transfudit. S; de inde eadē forma hominis de utero eīdē mulieris hoc modo uiuificata egrediente. scdm motus q̄s ipsa spa in eadē forma homi nis habuit scdm illos etiā et colore suū mutauit. Et uidi qd quanda huiusmodi sperā. inhumano corpore manentē. multi turbines inuadentes. eā usq; ad terram incuruabant. s; illa resupus uirib; se uiriliter erigens. eis fortit̄ resistit. et cū gemitu sic dixit. Ego p̄gri na ubi sū. In umbra mortis.

Et qua uia eo. In uia erroris.
Et quā consolationē habeo. quā p̄grini habent. Ego enī debui habere tabernacu lum quinq; quadris lapidib; sole et stellis lucidiorib; orna tū. q̄a occidens sol et occiden tes stelle n̄ debebant in eo lu cere. s; in eo debuit ēē anglica glā. quō topalius debuit ēē fundamentū ipsi et om̄s gēne structura eī. scilicet eī cristallo positis. et platis ipsi auro strā tis. Nā ego debui ēē consorti anglorū. quia sū uiuens spira culū qd d̄s misit in aridū li mū. Unde deberē d̄m scire. et ipsū sentire. S; heu cū taberna culū meū intellexit se posse oculis suis in om̄s uias uidere. instrumentū suū ad aquilo nē posuit. ach ach. ubi capita sū. et spoliata oculis et gau dio sciencie. ueste mea tota scissa. Et sic de hereditate mea pulsa. ducta sū in alienū lo cū qui omī pulchritudine et honore carebat. ubi pessimo ser-uicio subiecta sū. S; & hi qui me ceperant colaphis percutientes cū porcis fecerūt me manducare. ac ita in desertū locū me mittentes amarissimas etiā herbas melle intinctas mihi ad manducandū dabant. Postea quoq; suptorcular me ponentes. multis torturis me affligebant. De ino-cū autē uestib; meis me exuentes. et multas plagas mihi inferen-tes. uenatū me miserūt. ubi pes-simos et uenenosos uermes. uide-licet scorpionū. aspidū. et aliorū similiū uermiū me capere fecerūt. qui me totā suo ueneno ita conspuerūt. qđ inde debilis efficiebar.

Vnde illi me deridentes dixerūt. ubi ē honor tuus nē. Ach. s; ego tota contremui. et magno gemitu meroris silentē dixi. O ubi sū. Ach unde huc ueni. Et quē consolatorē huius captiuitatis querā. Quomodo has catenas dirūpā. O quis oculus uulnera mea uidere poterit. Et quē na-res fetorē hunc egrū sufferre poterūt. Aut quē manus ea oleo pungent. Ach qđ dolori meo mediam impendet. Celsū g; clamore meū exaudiat. & ira de merore meo tremiscat. ac omī qđ uiuit ad captiuitatē meā se miserando inclinet. quia amarissimus dolor me pīnit.

quō sine consolatione et sine adiutorio pegrina sū. O quis consolabit me. quō et mat̄ mea dereliquit me. quia a uia salutis erravi. Quis me iuuabit nisi d;.
Cū autē recordor. tu o mater syon. in qua habitare debui. a-marissima seruitia quib; subiecta sū inspicio. Et cū omī genus musicorū qđ in te ē ad memoriā duxero. uulnera mea adtendo.
Sed & cū recordor gaudiū et le-ticie gl̄e tue. tunc uenena illā quib; polluta sū de testor. O quo me uertā. Et quo fugiā. Dolor enim m̄s innumerabilis ē. quō si in malis istis pseuerauero. socia illorū ero. cū quib; uirā babilonia turpiter conuersata sū. Et ubi es o mat̄ mea syon. Ach in quia ate infeliciter recessi. quō si te nescirē leuius dolerē. Nunc autē pessimos sodales meos fugiā. quia infelix babilonia in plūbā flatterā me posuit. ac maximis tribus. me opprēssit. ita qđ uix suspirare possū. S; cū lacrimas meas ad te o mat̄ mea cū gemitib; meis effundo. tantos strepitus sonantiū aquarū infelix babilonia emittit. qđ uocē meā n̄ adtendis. Ergo multa sollicitudine artas uias querā. in quib; pessimos sōdales meos et infelicē captiuitatē meā effugere possim. Et cū hec dixissē. uui angustā semina. ubi me ab contra fieri ubi co meu effu fieri

et om mis simu tre m git. C
laci confo tanti
p̄gar
meu
inde ōma
num
qua
exp blan
mis
mea clam bani fort habi
uola
edie n̄a eta tes
ca n mu sequ

me abscondi in paruo foramine contra septentrionē amarissime flens. quō matrē meā pdideram. ibi etiā considerans omnē dolorē meū. et omīa uulnera mea. Tamasq. effusiones lacrimarū flendo et flendo ibi emisi. qđ omīs dolor et omīs luor. uulnerū meorū lacri mis istis pfusus ē. Et ecce suauis simus odor uelut lenis aura ama re mea emissus. nares meas ten git. O quātos gemitus et quātas lacrimas tunc effudi. cū paruam consolationē istā adesse sensi. Et tamōs ululatus cū tamis fleib. p̄ gaudio dedi. qđ etiā mons ille in cui foramine me absconderā inde commotus ē. Et dixi. O matrē omāt syon. qđ fiet de me. Et ubi nunc ē nobilis filia tua. O quādiu quādiu matrē dulcedinis tue exp̄sū. quē in multis deliciis me blande enutrieras. Et in his lacri mis ita delectabar. uelut matrē meā uidere. S. inimici mei istos clamores meos audientes dice bant. Ubi ē ista quā habet in ē sortio nrō sedm uoluntatē nrām habuim. ita qđ et ipsa omnē uoluntatē nrām p̄fecit. Ecce ū celicolas inuocat. Omīs ḡ artes nrās excitemus. eā tanto studio et tanta sollicitudine custodien tes. ne nobis effugere possit. qđ eā nobis prius omīno subiecera mus. Si hoc fecerimus. iterū nos sequet. S. ego forām illud in q 24 me absconderā latentē egressa. inquandā altitudinē ire uole bā. ubi me inimici mei inuenire n̄ possent. At ipsi qđ dā mare tam feruoris in opposuerant. qđ illud nullomodo transuada re potui. S. et ibi quidā pons tamte paruitatis et angu stie erat. qđ nec pillū transi re ualui. In fine quoq. eidē ma ris quedā altitudo montū tan torū acuminū apparuit. qđ nec ibi iter habere poterā. Et dixi. O qđ ego misera nē faciā.

Suauitatē matris mee nunc parūp senserā unde putabam. qđ uellet me ad se reducere.
S. ach nū iterū relinquet me.
Ach. quo me uertā. Nā si modo in priorē captiuitatē uenero. inimici mei magis nē quā pri deridebunt me. qđ ad matrē meā flebit clamauerā. et quō dulcedinē suauiatis ei parūp senserā. cū iterū modo ab ea derelicta sum. S. ego p̄ suaui tē illā quā prius a matrē mea uenientē senserā. adhuc tamte fortitudinis etiā. qđ me adori entē uerti. et qđ iterū angu stissimas semitas ire cepi. Ede autē semite spinis et tribulis et aliis huiusmodi in pedimentis ita plene erant. qđ uix ulla uestigia incis habere poterā.
S. tamen cū maximo labore et sudore eas tandē uix p transiens ex eodem labore tantam fatigationem incurri quod uix suspirare ualui. Sic tandem cum maxima fatigatione ad cacumem eiusdem montis in quo me prius absconderam pueniens aduallē et me inclinaui. ubi descendere debebam et ecce ibi aspides. Scorpiones dracones et alii huiusmodi serpentes in opposita erant et in me sibilos suos emittebant.

 Unde ego extrema maximos ululatus emisi dicens. O mater ubi es. Ecce enim dolere si sua uitae uisitacionis tue prius non sensisset quia nec merum incapauitate illam cada in qua dudum iacueram. Ubi ergo nunc est auxilium tu-um. Tunc uocem matris mee au-diui mihi dicentem. O filia curre penne enim ad uolandum tibi datae sunt a fortissimo datore cui nullus resistere ualet. Ergo uelociter transuola omnes has contrarietates. Et ego multa consolatione confortata pennas illas suscepi et omnia ueneno-sa ac mortifera illa uelociter transuolaui. Et ueni ad quoddam tabernaculum quod inter-rius totum erat ex fortissima calibe fabricatum. Et illud in trans opus claritatis feci cum prius opus tenebrarum fecisset.
 In eodem autem tabernaculo ad septentrionem columnam in politum ferri posui in quam flabella diversarum pennarum et se hac et illac mouentium suspendi. Et manna inueniens illud comedi. Ad orientem uero propugnaculum ex quadris la-pidibus construxi et in eo ignem accendens ibi mirratum unum cum musco bibi. Sed ad meridiem turrem ex quadris lapidibus feci in quam clipeos rubri coloris suspendi et in cuius fenestras tubas exebore factas posui. In medio autem eiusdem turris mel effudi et ex hoc preciosum ungentum cum aliis aromantibus feci.

Nam quod ex ipso protulit idem tabernaculum maximus odor diffundente. Ad occidentem uero nullum opus posui quia pars illa ad scilicet uersa erat. Sed interdum in hoc labore occupata esse inimici mei phariseas su-as arripientes sagittas suis tabernaculum meum aggressi sunt.
Ego pro studio operis mei quod faciebam tantum in saniam eorum non adtendi usque dum ianua eiusdem tabernaculi sagittis impleta.
Nulla tamen earundem sagittarum nec ianuam nec calibem eiusdem ta-bernaculi perforare ualebat.
Unde nec ego ab eis tedi potui.
Quod illi uidentes maximam inundationem aquarum emisere.
Quatinus et me et tabernaculum meum decerent sed tamen in hac malicia sua nihil profecerunt. Qua-ppt. eos audacter derisi dicens. faber q̄ hoc tabernaculū fecit. uobis sapientior & fortior fuit. Unde sagittas ūas colligentes eas de ponite. quō nullā uictoriā uoluntatis ur̄e amodo in me pote-runt p̄ficere. Ecce q̄ que uulnera ostendunt. Ego multo dolore et labore plurima bella aduersū uos p̄gī. cū me mortu tradere uelleris. s; tam n̄ potuisti. quia fortissimis armis munita acu-tos gladios contra uos uibrabā. p̄ quos me a uobis strenue defende bā. Recedite ḡ recedite. quō ultra me habere n̄ poteritis. Sed. iii ego fragilis et indocta uidi etiā q̄d in alia sperā plurimi turbines irruentes. eā deicere uoluerūt. s; n̄ ualuerūt. quō illa fortit̄ repugnans. locū eis insaniendi n̄ de-dit. s; tam sic cū querela dixit.

Quāuis paup̄cula sum. tam mag-nū officiū habeo. O quid sū ego. et que ē querimonia clamoris mei. Spiritaculū tam uiuens in homine sū. posita in tabernaculū medullarū uenarū. ossiū. et carnis. ita q̄d eadē tabernaculo uiriditate tribuo. et q̄d illud ubiq; in motib; suis circūfero.
S; heu sensibilib; illi p̄fert spurecia. lasciuia. et petulan-tia morū. ac om̄a genera uicioꝝ.
Ach o quā magno gemitu hoc queror. Nā cū p̄spicit̄ uite in opib; tabernaculi mei habeo.

occurrit in diabolica p̄suasio. in omnib; me irruens. ac inflatū elationis ita me erigens. q̄d mul-tociens dico. Ego sedm̄ gustū uiriditatis ur̄e opari uolo. In tabernaculo enī meo queq; opa intel-ligo. s; tam auuiditate ei ita impedior. q̄d opa mea n̄ discerno. ante quā dira uulnera in me ui-dero. O quantū planctū tunc emitto. Et dico. O d̄s. n̄ne creasti me. Ecce uis ur̄a opprimit me.
Et sic fugā in eo. Quomodo. Cū tabernaculū meū carnalē con-cupiscentiā habet. tunc quia gustū inope habeo. cū ipsa op̄ illud p̄ficio. S; ratio que in me cū scientia uiget. ostendit in quō a d̄o creata sū. In qua ratio-ne etiā sentio. quia adā cū di-uinū p̄ceptū. transgressus ē. et timens abscondit se. Sic et ego timens a facie d̄i me abscondo. cū opa mea in tabernaculo meo contraria d̄o sensero. Cū autē plūbeā statera peccati sup̄ pondera uero. om̄a opa illa. que carnalib; concupiscentiis ardent. contēpno.

Ach me p̄grinā. quomodo in his piculis subsistere possum. Et cū diabolica p̄suasio me inuadit sic dicens. ē ne hoc bonū q̄d nescis. nec q̄d uides. nec q̄d facere potes. q̄d tunc erit. Et cū iterū dicit. q̄d no-sti. et q̄d intelligis. et q̄d p̄ficere uales. cur hoc deseris. qđ tunc fa-cia. At plena dolore respondebo.

Ach me misera. qđ p adā nociua uena m afflata s. cū ipse diuinū pceptū transgressus et inūam eieclus. carnalia tabernacula coadunauit. Nā ingustu quē ipse in pmo p inobedientiam gustauit. nociua dulcedo sanguini et carni se ingerit. et ita pollutionē uiciorū pducit. Unde peccatū carnis in me semio. pu-rissimū autē dñm quia p culpā inebriata sū negligo. S; hoc qđ gustus tabernaculi mei in se habet. sequi n debeo. Nā ex hoc qđ adā in prima apparmone purus et simplex. adō creatus erat. timeo dñm. sciens quō p p sū pura et simplex creata sum.
Sed modo p malā consuetudi-nē uiciorū inquietudinē uertor.
O in his omib; pegrina sū. Qua ppt turbines diuersos sonitū multa mendacia pferit. qui in me surgunt sic dicentes.
Que es. Et quid facis. Et qualia sunt certamina que exerceas.
Infelix enim es. Nā ignoras utrum bonū an malū opus tuū sit. Quo tandē ibis. Et qđ te conseruabit. Et qui s errores illi. qui te in insaniā ducunt. An pficies qđ te delectat. an fugi-es qđ te angustat. O qđ facies. quia istud scis. et istud ignoras. Qđ enī delectat. hoc tibi licutū n ē. et qđ te angustat. ad hoc pcepto dī cōpelleris. Et undō scis. si hec ita sunt. Odius tibi ē. si n fuisset. Et post quā isti turbines ita in me surrexerunt. incipio alitā uia ambulare. que carni mee grauis ē. qđ incipio iusticiā facere. S; iterū intra me dubito. utrum hoc ex dono sps scī sit. annon. et dico.

Hoc inutile ē. Et deinde sup nubes uolare uolo. Quomodo.
Sup intellectū meū uolo uolare. et ea incipe que pficere n possum. S; cū hec facere tēptauero. maximā tristitiā in me excito. ita qđ nec in altitudine scntis. nec in planicie bone uoluntatis ullū opus facio. S; in quietudinē dubietatis. desperationis. meroris. et oppssionis omniū rerū in me habeo. Et cū diabolica p suasio me sic inquietat. o qđta calami-tas m tunc occurrit. qđ omia mala que s aut esse possunt in uitupatione. in maledictione. in mortificatione corporis et anime. in turpib; uerbis contra mundiciā. sanctitatē et altitudi-nē. que in dō sunt. hec omia m infelici occurrunt. Unde etiā hec iniquitas m insurgit. scilicet qđ omis felicitas et omne bonū qđ tā in hoīe quā in dō ē mihi molestū et graue erit. magis mortē quā uitā mihi pponens. Ach quā infelix hoc 26 certam ē qđ sic de labore in la bore de dolore in dolore de scissmate in scisma se in ingerit. omne felicitate in auferens.

Sed unde excitat malū istox errorū. Videlicet ex hoc. An tiquus enī serpens in se habet astutia et deceptabile uersu tia atq. mortiferū iniquitatis uenenū. Nā in astutia sua inge rit mihi contumacia peccatox at amore dñi intellectū meū auferens. ita qđ peccare n̄ timeo sic dicens. Quis ē d̄s. Nescio qđ d̄s sit. In deceptabili autē uer suta sua obdurationē michi inducit. ita qđ in malo obdu ror. S; in mortifero iniquita tis ueneno sp̄itale gaudiū in aufert. ita qđ nec in homine. nec in dō letari ualeo. sic dubie tate de sp̄ationis in inducens. scilicet qđ dubito. utrū salua ri possim annon. O que s̄ ista tabernacula. que tanta picu la sustinent in diabolica decep tione. S; cū p̄donū dī recordor. qđ a dō creata sū. tunc tur bas opp̄ssiones his diabolicis psuasionib; hoc modo respon sū dō. Ego fragili t̄re n̄ cedam. s; fortissima bella exercebo.
Quomodo. Cū tabernaculū meū opa iniusticie exercere uult. medullā. sanguinē et carnē in sapientiā pacientie contra que admodū fortis leo se defendit. & ut serpens in antro suo ietū mortis fugiens se abscondit. Nā nec sagittas di aboli debco suscipe. nec uolun tate carnis exercere. Quomodo.

Cum enī ita tabernaculū meū incendere uoluerit in bonitate dī respicio que ita nūquā tetigit. et ita acie qui sua lenitate ariditate t̄re rigat suauior ero. sp̄itale gaudiū ha bens cū uirtutes in me uiridi tate suā ostendere incipient.
Et sic bonitatem dī sentio. Cū autē odiu me denigrare t̄ptaauerit. in inuidiam et in martiriū filii dī aspicio. & ita carnē meā con stringo. suauē odore rosarū que de spinis oriunt̄ fidei re cordatione suscipiens. et ita re deptore meū agnosco. S; cū sup bia turrim uanitatis sue sine fundam̄to petre in me conten derit ponere. et hanc abu tudinē in me erigere qđ nullū sibi simile uult habere. s; semp altior ceteris ui deri. o qđ in tunc succurrer. quō antiquus serpens qui sup om̄s et uolens in morte cecidit. me deicere conat̄. Tunc cū merore dico. Ubi ē rex m̄s. et d̄s m̄s.
Quid possū boni absq. dō. Nichil.
Et sic addm qui in unā dedit respicio. et ad beatissimā uirgi nē illā que supbiā antiquę speluncę contriuit curro. sic

.vii.

fortissimus lapis edificii dei effecta. cui rapacissimus lupus qui hamo di-uinitatis strangulatus est me amodo superare non poterit. Et ita suavis simus bonus idem humilitatis inabi-tudinē dei cognosco suauitatem dei indeficiens balsami sentiens. Et ita indulcedine dei gaudens. ue-lit sum in odore omnium pigmento-rum. Et sic etiam cetera uicia. fortis-simo scuto humilitatis decio.

viii.

Sed dande ego paupercula in ix. di quod alia quedam spiritus exclamamentis forme sue se contrahens. nodos et resoluunt et se ab eis cum gemitu extrahit. sed etiam sua me-rens dirupit. Et dixit. De tabernaculo meo exibo. Sed ego misera plenaque meroris quo uada. Per horrendas et periculandas semitas adiudicium ubi diiudicabor.
ibo. Opa enim que in tabernaculo meo operata sunt ibi ostenda. Et ibi re. munerationem secundum merita mea recipiam. O quantus timor. et o quanta angu-stia ibi mihi erit. Cumque se hoc mihi resolueret. quidam spiritus et lucidi et umbrosi uenerunt. qui socii conuersationis ipsius secundum quod in sede sua se mouerat fuerunt. resolutionem ei expectantes. ut post quam se exsoluisset. eam secum abducerent. Et audiuimus uiuentem uocem illis dicentem. Secundum opera sua de loco ad locum ducatur. Et iterum au-diui decedentem uocem mihi dicentem. Beata et ineffabilis trinitas se mundo manifestauit. cum pater unigenitum suum de spiritu sancto conceptum et de uirgine natum misit in mundum. quatinus homines multa diuersitate naturae multisque peccatis obligati. per unum ad uitam ueritatis reducerentur. ita ut ipsi ante ibis corporee grauedinis absoluti. bona et sancta opera secum portantes. gaudia supernae hereditatis adipiscerentur. Quod ut profundus homo capias et apertius manifestes uides maximum serenissimumque splendorem uelut plurimis oculis flammantem quatuorque angulos ad qua-tuor partes mundi uersos habentem. qui magnam in mysteriis puramque in manifestationibus scientiam dei significat. maxima profunditate perspicuitatis radi-antem. et acutissimas acies qua-drifide stabilitatis ad quatuor plagas orbis extendentem. ubi ipsa tam illos qui abiciuntur. quam illos qui colliguntur ut nientes acutissime prouidet. mi-sterium supernae maiestatis osten-dens. quod in magno typo alti-tudinis et profunditatis tibi ut cernis demonstrat. In quo etiam alius splendor similis auro-re in se purpurei fulgoris claritatem tenens apparet. quia scientia dei etiam hoc ostendit quod unigenitus patris de uirgine carne sumens sanguine suū incandore fidi p salute hominū fundere pparuit. ubi incadē s; sciencia dī boni et mali ostēn dunt. quō ipsa nulla obscuri tate ullius rei obnubilat. Sed tu o homo dicis. Quid faciet ho mo. cū dē p nouit omā que fac turus ē homo. Et ego o homo tibi dico. S stultice. in nequicia. x cordis tui illū imitans. qui ui am uertutis primū recusans. mendantiū uertutis opposuit. cū se sūme bonitati simile face re uoluit. Quis poterit inuicū et finē obfuscare. Qui ē fuit. & pmanebit. S. qd est tu. qui fa uilla cineris es. Et qd nosti. cū n̄ esset. S. tu lamentabile inuicū et miserabile finē habens. con tradicens. qd nec scis. nec scire debes. uidelicet innumerabile pulchritudinē iusticie dī in qua nulla indignatio iniusti cie inuenit. nec inuenta ē. nec inueniet. O stultice. ubi putas cē patrē iniquitatis quē imita ris. Quid ē hoc. Cū supbia intē inflāt. sup sidera et sup alias creaturas et sup anglos uis ele uari. qui pcepta dī p omā ad implent. S. tunc cades. sicut et ille cecidit. qui mendantiū uertutis opposuit. Mendantiū enī ipse dilexit. et idō immor tē inuolutus in abyssū corrumpit.

Ergo homo adtende. Cū nec inspicis carnatē illā qua te dē liberauit. nec cū adtendis quanta bona tibi dē liberauit. nec cū adtendis quanta bona tibi dē semp impendit. nec cū consideras quomodo ipse te amore reuocat. cū multoci ens in peccata corruis. ubi ma gis mortē quā diligis. si tunc tandē ad mentē tuā reuocas scripturas et doctrinas illas. quas tibi antiqui et fideles patres tui pposuerūt. scilicet qd malū debes deuitare. et bo nū facere. et si tunc ex intimo corde dixeris. grauiū peccam. unde oportet me cū digna penitētia ad patrē meū qui me creauit redire. tunc idē pater tuus benigne suscipit te. et in sinū suū te ponens. dulcib. amplexib. amplectit te. Nunc autē beatitudinē illā que tibi ad dō pposita ē scire contempnis. ac iusticiā dī audire uel opari recusas.

Numquid si fieri posset. magis iudiciū dī iniustū quā uerū notares. Quā ppter si sanguine filii dī redēptus n̄ esset. in p dmone pdmus iaceres. Sed iudiciū dī uerū et iustū est.
Unde o homo quā uoluntatē inde consequeris. qd te in iudicio meo decerpis. In cho ro angelō et in electa uinea mea ē laus laudantiū. et dī uitam cernit glā tibi dñe. nec iudiciū meū pcos contra dicit. quō m sti s. s. qd diabolo pfuit. qd se mibi opposuit. Qui cū uidit se multā claritatē habere. sup os se uoluit exaltare. na qd ei in numerabilis turba supbōx sup bōrū spūmū consensit. qd omīs diuina uirtus in zelo rectitudi nis sue simul cū illo deiecit. Sic etiā omīs deiciunt qd in pseue rantia mali iusticiā dī post po nere conant. quō ipsi sumū bo nū in pueritate nequicie puer tate laborant. Unde nequaquā dē qd iniustū ē constituunt. sed omne qd rectū ē in equitate bo nitatis sue ordinant. Sed et illi homines qd infidelitate sua dīm abiecerūt. na qd sibi sculp tilia fecerūt. que diabolus in uasit. et in quib. eos illustrat. in petulantia huiusmodi uam tatis surrexerūt. cū illud gen^u hominū ptransiit quib. ada et eua dixerant quomodo adō facti eēt. et quomodo de paradyso expulsi fuisset.

 Quos alii in eadē pueritate subsequentes. creaturā dī ma gis quā ipsū creatore suū co luerūt. et ea que nō uiuunt unā suā disponere putauerūt. Unde et hi qui adhuc in ipsa infi delitate sordent. stulticiā suā deserant. et ad ipsū qui la queos diaboli contriuit. si delit conuertant. uetustate ignorantie deponentes et no uitate uite amplectentes. ut seruus mī ezechiel hortat dices.

Proiecit auobis omīs puari cationes uas in quib. puari cati estis. et facite uobis cor no uū et spm nouū. Qd dī: O uos q in rectitudine pseuerare uultis. in sole cui mīnora beate oues currunt. piete a conscientia cordis urī sciscitationē occultōx illōx que in principali sapien tia inutilia sunt. in quib. inua nā celsitudine uolare uoluistis. cū in pceptis lacū mersi estis. in quo nullus honor habuit sed illa horribilis lasciuia que dīm ignorat. Et cū hoc feceritis. uia uernatis pgrate psalite urā. ubi titilantis celi nouitate in corde urō inuenietis. et ubi uiuifice spirationis nouitate in spū urō habebitis. Vides etiā uirā ho mines in uasis suis lac portan tes. et inde caseos facientes. q sunt in mundo homines. tā ui ri quā mulieres in corporib. su is humanū semen habentes. de quo genus diuersōx pploz p creatur. cui quedā pars spissa ē. unde fortes casei fiunt. quia sem illud in fortitudine sua utiliter & bene coctū & tepatū. strenuos homines pducit. qb. etiā magna claritas tā spūali quā carnaliū donōx in mag nis patrib; et inanis psonis tribuit. na qd in pspitate prudentie discre tionis. et utilitatis inopib; suis et corā dō. et corā hominib; pspicue florent. quō diabolus in eis locū suū n̄ inuenit. Et pars quedā te nuis. de qua debiles casei coagu lant. quō hoc semen in teneritudi ne sua inutilit semicoctū & semi tepatū teneros homines educit. na qd isti multociens stulti. tepidi. et imiles tā apud dīm. quā apud scīm inopib; suis s. qā dīm stren nue n̄ querit. S; & pars quedā ta be p̄mixta ē. de qua amari casei efficiunt. qā sem illud indebili tate p̄mixtionis neq̄ter eductū. & inutilit cōmixtū. informes hoīes efficit. na qd illi sepe amaritudi nē. difficultatē. & opp̄sionē cordis habent. unde mentē suā multoci ens ad sup̄iora leuare n̄ ualent.

 Multa autē ex his utiles fiunt. na tam qd multas tēpestates. et inq̄ tudines. & in cordib; & in morib; suis paciunt. s; tam uictores ex istunt. quō si inquiete pacis q̄es cerent. tepidos & imiles se red derent. unde dīs illos coeret. et ad uia salutis ducit. quēadmodū scriptū ē. Ego occidā et ego uiuere faciā. p̄cunā & ego sana bo. & n̄ ē qui de manu mea possit eruere. Qd dī. Ego qui sū. nec iniciy. nec finē habens. flagitiosos hoīes in acib; suis intimo qui p̄spurci cias diaboli in uicis macerant.

et qui in partib; infelicis semina ri. p̄diabolicas speluncas de cipiunt. O quā uersuta ē uipea maxilla. quē eos na inflat. qd mors ipsos intare conat. Unde ab eis p̄spitate hui' scī tollo. ubi na p̄plurimas ^{eripnas} occidunt. quas su pare n̄ possunt. s; quē eis iusto iu dicio semp̄ assistunt. S; ego qui nulla obscuritate deicior. istos etiā in alia parte uiuere mirabi liter multociens facio. ubi in ip sis uiuens spiraculū eorū sursum de trenis traho. ne in ipsis p̄eat. Iuos etiā uulnerib; p̄multā infirmita tē laboris uite sue mēdū affligo. qui p̄supbā mentē suā in ineptā altitudinē ascendere cupiunt. putantes qd anullo dei ci ualeant. eos etiā qui ubiq; p̄sens sū. na int dū sursum ad uerā sanitatē erigens. ne infallacib; piculis p̄fallaces uanitates consumant. S; in his omnib; n̄ ē homo. nec alia crea tura quē hui' modi opa mea uer suta aut ferocitate possit euel lere. quia nullus ē. qui uolunta ti et equitati mee ualeat resistere.

Multociens quoq; ut uides ubi in obliuione mea et in irrisione diaboli cōmixtio ma ris & femine p̄p̄rat. ibi et con tractio nascētiū hominū inue nit. ut quō parentes illorū p̄cepta mea transgressi s. in ipsis filius suis cruciant. ad me in penitencia re uertant. multociens etiā hanc

xv.

mirabile creatione p glā mea et scōx meōx in hominib; fieri pmit to. ut dū illi qui hoc modo di stori s p subuentione electorū meōx sanitati restituant nomen meū ex hoc tanto ardentius ab hominib; glificet. Qui autē in hac lege se constringunt. ita qd uirginatis decus appetunt uelut aurora ad celestia secre ta ascendunt. quia ppter amorē filii mei delectationes corporis sui a se abscidunt. Sed qd in des quasi mulierē uelut inte grā formā hominis in utero suo habentē. hoc ē qd post qm femina humanū semī concepe rit. in integritate membrōx su orū infans in abdito cubicu lo uentris ipsius format. Et ec ce p secretā dispositionē supni conditoris eadē forma motū uiuēde motionis dat. quō cū in secretis et occultis iussione et uoluntate di infans in ma terno utero congruo. et recte diuinitus disposito tēpore. spīm accipit. motu corporis sui se uiuere ostendit. uelut tūa se apert. et flores fructus sui pferit. cū ros sup eā ceciderit. ita qd uelut ignea spā nulla linamenta humani corporis habens. cor eadē forme possidet. quia anima in igne p funde scientie ardens. diuersas res circumū sue cōphensionis discernit. nec formā humanorū membrōx habens. quō ipsa nec corporea. nec caduca. quēadmo dū corpus hominis ē. cor hoīs confortat. qd qsi fundamentū corporis existens. totū corpus re git. uelut firmamentū celi in se riora continet. & supiora tegit.

& etiā cerebrū hoīs tangit. quia in uirib; suis n solum trena. s; etiā celestia sapit. cū dīm sapienter cognoscit. ac se p omnia mēbra ho minis transfundit. quō uiridi tate medullarū. ac uenarū. et omniū mēbrōx totū corpori tri buit. uelut arbor ex sua radice sucū et uiriditatem omib; ramis dat. S; deinde eadē forma hoīs de utero eadē mulieris hoc m uiuificata egrediente. scdm motus quos ipsa spera in eadē forma hoīs habet. scdm illos etiā et colorē suū mutat. quia postquā homo in materno utero uitale spīm accipit. & ita natus fuerit. et motus opationis sue dederit. scdm opa illa que ani ma cū corpore opat. scdm hec etiā & merita ipsius existunt. quō de bonis claritate & de malis tenebrositate sibi induc.
Ipsa quoq; scdm uires corpo ris uires suas ostendit. ita qd in infantia hominis simplicita te pferit. et in iuuentute forti tudine. ac in plena etate cū omīs uene hominis plene s fortissi

29 mas vires suas in sapientia declarat. sicut etiam arbor in primo germine tenera existens. ac de inde fructu se pferre ostendens. tandem cum plenitudine immatus educit. S. & postea in senectute hominis cum medulla & uene ipsius iam ad debilitatem se incuruare ceperunt. anima leniores vires uelut in medio scientie ho-minis ostendit. quemadmodum et sucus arboris cum iam hiemale tempus instat se in ramis et foliis suis contrahit. & ut eadem arbor in senectute sua iam incuruari incipit. Homo autem tres semitas in se habet. Quid est hoc. Anima corpus sensus. In his una hominis exercet. Quomodo.
Anima corpus uiuificat. & sen-sus exspirat. corpus autem anima sibi adhaeret et sensus apert. sensus uero animam tangunt & corpus alliciunt. Anima enim corpori unam prebet uelut ignis lumen tenebris infundit. duas princi-pales vires scilicet intellectum & uoluntatem uelut duo brachia habens. non quod anima brachia se ad mouendum habeat. sed quod in his uiribus se manifestat. uelut sol per splendorem suum se declarat.
Unde ob homo que non est sarcina medullarum inscientia scripturarum attende. Intellectus. XV. ita infusus est anime. uelut brachium corpori. Nam ut bra-chium cui manus cum digitis ad-iuncta est a corpore extendit. ita etiam intellectus cum operatione ceterarum uirium anime cum quibus. queque. opa hominis intelligit ex anima certissime procedit. Ipse enim per alios uiribus. anime quicquid in opibus. hominum est. siue bona siue mala sint intelligit. ita quod per eum uelut per magistrum omnia intelliguntur. quo ipse ea hoc modo excipit. sicut & triticum ab omni contra-rietate expurgat. perquirens uirum utilia. an inutilia. an ama-bilia. aut odibilia sint. uel utrum ad uitam. et ad mortem pertineant.

Unde sicut esca sine sale insulsa est. sic etiam ceterae vires anime sine intellectu tepide & non intel-ligibiles sunt. S. & ipse est in anima ut scapula in corpore medulla reliquarum uirium anime ex-istens. uelut humerus corporis foris est. diuinitatem etiam & huma-nitatem in deo intelligens. quod inflexio brachii est. ita quoque. rec-ta fide in opere suo habens. quod etiam inflexio manus est. cum qua tunc diuersa opera indiscretio-ne quasi cum digitis discernit.
Ipse autem ita non operatur. ut ceterae vires anime. Quid est hoc. Volun-tas enim opus calefacit. et animam illud suscipit. et ratio perducit.
Intellectus autem opus intelligit bonum et malum intelligens. uelut angulum intellectum habent bo-

XV.

dom. i. i. firma in memo cordi. ue lit aliq. homo
q. in angulo

nū diligentes. et malū negligentes. Et ut corpus habet cor. ita & anima intellectū. qui etiā in hac parte anime uim suā exerceat sicut & uoluntas in materia. Quomodo. Uoluntas enī magnā uim anime habet. Quom. Anima stat in angulo domi sue consistit. ut totā domū pspiciens omīa instrumēta domi regat. scilicet dextrū brachiū leuans. signando & ostendendo queq. utilia eidē domui. & se ad orientē uertens. Sic et anima facit pplantas totius corporis ad orientē solis respiciens. Ipsa enī uoluntate quasi dextrū brachiū ponit infirmamentū uenarū et medullarū. ac in cōmotionē totius corporis. qm uoluntas quodq. opus siue bonū siue malū sit opat. Nam uoluntas ē uelut ignis. quodq. opus quasi in fornace coquens. Panis enī ad hoc coquit. ut homines exinde pasti confortent. quatinus uiuere possint. Sic & uoluntas fortitudo totius opis ē. quia ipsa in conceptione molit et in robore fermentū inponit. ac in duricia tūdit. et ita opus suū uelut panē in consideratione parans. illud pleno ope ardoris sui in perfectione coqt. atq. hoc modo maiore cibū hominib. in ope. qm in pane facit. Et ita hominis in terdū in eo cessat. opus autē uoluntatis in eo usq. ad separationē anime ipsius a corpore p durat. Et in qm magna diuersitate opus sit scilicet ab infantia. a iuuentute. a plena etate. ad decrepita incuruationē. tam in uoluntate gradit. & in ea perfectionē suā demonstrat. Sed uoluntas habet in pcoradio hominis qddā tabernaculū uidelicet animū. quē & intellectus. et ipsa uoluntas. ac queq. uis anime sua fortitudine afflant. Et he omīs in eodē tabernaculo calefiunt. et se inuicē coniungunt. Quom. Si ira surrexerit. fel inflat. & ita fumū in idē tabernaculum emittens. ita pficit. Qd si turpis leticia se eraxerit. in eodē libidinis in materia sua tangit. et sic petulantia illa quē ad peccatū pūnet ad tollit. ac in eodē tabernaculo coadunatur. S. aliud amabile gaudiū ē. qd in eodē tabernaculo de spū scō incendit. cui anima cōgaudens illud fidelitē suscipit. et opus bonū in celestib. desideris pficit. Est etiā quedā tristitia de qua in eodē tabernaculo ex humorib. illis qui circa fel s. torpor nascit. indignationē obdurationē. et contumaciā in hominib. faciens. animāq. deprimens. nisi grā dī sue currente cuius eripiat. S. & cū cidē tabernaculo contrarie cause occurrerunt. multociens in odio et in reliq̃s mortiferis reb. cōmo uet̃ que animā occidunt. et mag nas ruinas in p̃dione parat. Cū autē uoluntas uoluerit. instrum̃ ta cidē tabernaculi mouet. et ea inferuente calore siue bona siue mala sunt deponit. Qd si uolun tan instrum̃ta illa placuerint. ibi esca sua coquit. et ea homini ad gustandū pponit. Unde & in ipso tabernaculo plurima tur ba boni et mali exurgit. uelut cū aliquis excrementis in aliquo loco coadunat. S. cū princeps eiusdē excrementis sup uenerit. si excrementis illi ipsi placuerit. cū suscipit. si uero ipsi displicuerit. illū abire iubet. Sic et uoluntas facit. Quomodo. Si bonū uel si malū in p̃cordio cordis surrexe rit. uolun. tas illud aut pficit. aut ne gligit. Sed & intellectu & in uoluntate. ratio uelut sonitus anime osten dit. que qd̃q. opus siue dī siue hominis sit pferit. Sonitus enī uerbū in alīū tollit. sicut uen tus qui aquilā subleuat. ut uo lare possit. Ita et anima sonitū rationis et in auditu & in intel lectu hominū emittit. q̃nū uires ipsius intelligant. & ut qd̃q. opus pfectū ducatur. Cor pus autē omniū uiriū anime tabernaculū. et subleuat. ē. quō anima in corpore manens. cū cor pore opat. et corpus cū illa. siue bonū siue malū sit. Sensus ū ē cui opus interiorū uiriū anime adheret. ita qd̃ ipse in fructib. cuiusq. opis intelligunt. Et ille cū subiectus. q̃a cū ad opus pdu cunt. n̄ autē ipse eis opus inpo nit. quō umbra earū ē. faciens scdm qd̃ ipsis placuerit. S. & ex terior homo in p̃mis cū sensu in uentre matris ante qm̃ ho mo nascat. euigilat. cū uiriū. anime adhuc in abscondito ma nentib. Quid ē hoc. Aurora lucē diei denunciat. sic et sensus ho minis cū ratione om̃s uires aīe declarat. Et ut lex et pph̃e in duob. p̃ceptis dī p̃ndent. ita et sensus hominis in anima et in uiriū. ei uiget. Quid ē hoc.

Lex ad salutē hominis posita ē. & pph̃e occulta dī manife stant. sic & sensus hōis queq. nocua ab homine depellit. & interiora anime denudat. Nā anima sensū exspirat. Quom̃.
Ipsa hominē in uentre facie ui uificat. & uisu auditu gustu. odoratu. et tactu glificat. ita qd̃ homo sensu tactus. p̃uigil in om̃ib. reb. sit. Sensus om̃s uires anime claudit. Quid ē hoc. Homo in facie cognoscit. oculis uidet aurib. audit. os ad loquendū ap̃t. manib. pal.

xx.iii.

Sens. h. dignū omniū uiriū a nime est. sic
corp' uas aīe ē.
Quomodo.

xxv. y.

pat. pedib; ambulat. et idō sen-sus ē in homine. uelut p̄ciosi lapides. & ut p̄ciosus thesaurus in uase signatus. S; ut uas uidet.
& ut in eo thesaurus scit. ita etiā in sensu cet̄e uires anime intell-ligunt. Anima autē ē magistra. caro uero ancilla. Quom̄.

Anima totū corpus uiuificatio-ne regit. corpus autē regimen uiuificationis illi suscipit. quō si anima corpus n̄ uiuificaret. corpus in solutione diffunderet.
S; cū homo malū opus faceret anima opat. hoc tā amarū anime ē. uelut ueneniū corpori cū illud corp̄ scient̄ accipit. De bono autē ope anima gaudet. sic et corpus suum cibo delectat. Et anima corpus ita p̄transit. uelut sucus arbore. Quid ē hoc. P̄sucu arbor uiret. et sic flores pduc. ac deinde fructū facit. Et quom̄.

te fructus ille ad māritatē pducit.
Tempus aeris. Item.

xxvi.

Sol cū calefacit. pluuia cū irrigat. & ita intemp̄ie aeris p̄ficiūt.
Quid ē hoc. Quidia gr̄e dī uelut pluuia ipsū irrigabit. & sic cū discreto uelut bona temp̄ie aeris ad p̄fectionē bonorū fruc-tū ducet. Sed & anima in corpore ē uelut succus in arbore. et uires ipsius quasi arboris forma. Quom̄. Intellectus in anima ē uelut uiriditas ramorū & foliorū in arbore. uoluntas autē quasi flores in ea. animus uero uelut primū erūpens fructus ipsius. ratio autē quasi fructus ei in maturitate p̄- fectus. sensus uero quasi altitudo et extensio latitudinis ipsi. Et scdm̄ h̄c modū corpus hominis ab anima solidat. & sustentat. Unde o homo intellige qd̄ in anima tua sis. qui bonū intellectū tuū deponis. & te pecorib; cōparare uis. Quod autē tu o homo que hec uidet. ē sideras etiā q̄a q̄ndā huiusmodi sperā in humano corpore ma-nentē multi turbines inuadentes. eā usq; aditā incuruant. hoc ē qd̄ animā hominis quādiu ho-in anima & in corpore uiuit. multe inuisibiles tēptationes p̄turbant. que ipsā p̄delectationē carnis multociens ad peccata t̄renarū concupiscentiarū inclinant.

S; illa resūptis uirib; se uirilit̄ erigens. eis fortit̄ resistit. q̄a fidelis & sollicitus homo cū peccauerit. sepe p̄donū dī cōpunctus peccata deserit. et sp̄e suā indimponens. diaboli figūta abicit. creatore suū fideliū que-rens. uelut etiā hec fidelis p̄fata anima miseras suas conquerēs. superius ueraciter ostendit. Sed qd̄ uidet q̄a in alia sperā plurimi turbines irruentes. eā deicere uolunt. S; n̄ ualent. id ē q̄a anima istā plurimē diabolice insidie inuadentes. ad peccata multorū scelerū p̄trahere conant̄.
S; tam ei suis illusionib; p̄ualere n̄ possunt. quō illa fortiter — Sol hominē illustrabit. exspiratio sp̄s sc̄i.

repugnans locū eis insaniendi n̄ dat. idē quō supna inspiratione se muniens a se iacula fallaciū de ceptionū expellit. & ad saluatōrē suū recurrit. quēadmodū etiā su pius in uerbis querelę suę decla rat. ut p̄monstratū ē. Quod ū. xxxv ut uidet alia quedā spera ex luna mentis forme suę se contrahens. nodos eī resoluit. hoc ē qđ anima illa membra corporalis habitacu li sui deserens. iuncturā eorū relin quit. cū tēpus resolutionis eīdē habitaculi sui intraret. et se ab eis cū gemitu extrahit. sedeq; suā merens dirūpit. quō a cor pore suo cū angustia se tollens. locū habitationis suę multo tre more cadere p̄mittit. imminens iudiciū supni iudicis metuens. quia tē merita opū suorū iusto iu dicio dī sentiet. uelut etiā in que rela sua sup̄ manifestat. Qua p̄pter cū se hoc modo resoluit quidā sp̄s et lucidi & umbrosi ueniunt. qui socii conuersatio nis ipsius. scđm qđ in sede sua semouet s̄. qđ in resolutione il la cū anima hominis habitacu lū suū deserit. angelici sp̄s et bo ni & mali scđm iustā & uerā dis positionē dī assunt. qui inspec tores opū illi scđm qđ in corpo re suo cū corpore opata ē fuerūt. resolutionē eī expectantes. ut p̄ quā se exsoluat eā secū abdu cant. quō ipsi sententiā iusti iu dicis de anima illa in separatione eī a corpore attendunt. ut ipsa a corpore soluta eā ducant quo supnus iudex iudicauerit. scđm merita opū illius. ut ubi etiam homo fidelit̄ p̄monstratū ē.

Idecirco uos o carissimi filii mei oculos & aures uas ap̄te. et p̄ ceptis meis obedite. Et cur patre ur̄m contemnitis. qui uos de morte liberauit. Chori angelorū canunt. iustus es dñe. quō iusti cia dī n̄ habet ullā rugā. cū etiā dñs hominē n̄ liberauit. sua po testate. s; compassione. ubi filiū suū ad redemptionē hominis mi sit in mundū. Solē enim nulla indignatio stercoris polluit. sic etiā nec dñm ulla pueritias inui sticie tangere poterit. S; tu o ho in speculatiua scientia bonū et malū inspicias. Et qđ es cū immul tudine carnaliū desideriorū sordes. Et qđ es cū clarissime gemme uirtutū uite fulgent.
 Primus angelus bonū contēpsit et malū concupiuit. unde et il lud in morte eīne p̄ditionis ac cepit. et in morte sepultus ē. qđ qđ bonū ē abiicit. Boni uero angeli malū neglexerūt. et bonū amauerūt. casū diaboli uiden tes. qui ueritatē uolebat oppri mere & m̄datū erigere. Qua p̄pter ipsi in amore dī exar serūt. firmū fundamentū uoci boni habentes. ita qđ aliud xxx.

310 nolunt qm qd dō placet. nūquā in laude ei cessantes. S. & prim' hō dm cognouit. & cū in simplicitate dilexit. ac pceptū ei suscipiens. se obediētie deputauit. s. deinde ad malū se inclinauit. & in obe diētiā pfect. Nā cū ei diabolus malū suggereret. bonū deseruit. et malū ppetrauit. unde & de pa radysō eiectus ē. Unde malū in p ditione mortis abiciendū ē. & bo nū in amore uite pficiendū. S. tu o hō cū habes recordationē boni & mali. uelut in biuio posuit es. quia si tunc tenebras mali contēp seris. uolens in illū aspiciere cuius creatura es. et quē in scō baptismo confessus es. ubi uetus crīm adē t ē ablatū. et si dixeris. diabolū et opa ei uolo fugere. et dm uerū ac ei pcepta sequi. tunc etiā confide ra. quomodo doctus es a malo de clinare. & bonū facere. & qā cele stis pat' unigenito suo n̄ peperit.
s. cū ad liberationē tuā misit. & ora dm ut t' succurrat. Et ipse te exaudiens. sic dicit. Isti oculi m̄ placent. Et si tē tedū abieceris. ita qd in mandatis dī fortē cucur reris. clamorē pecū tuarū ubiq. exaudiat. Carnē enī tuā debes do mare. et impio anīmē subiugare.
S. tu dicis. Tanta & tā magna pon dera in carne mea habeo. qd me supare n̄ ualeo. S. quō d's bonus ē. ipse me bonū facit. Quomodo posse carnē meā domare. cū hō sim. D's bonus ē. ipse om̄a bona in me pficit. Nā cū sibi placue rit. me bonū facere poterit. Sed ego tibi dico. Cū d's bonus sit. cur bonitatē ei scire contemnis. qā ipse filiū suū pte tradidit. q te in multis crīmīs et in magnis la borib; de morte liberauit. S. cū dicis quō bona opa opari n̄ pos sis. hoc in iniusticia iniquitatis di cis. Oculos enī habes adiudendū. aures ad audiendū. cor ad cogitan dū. ad opandū. pedes ad ambulan dū. ita qd etiā p omē corpus tuū te potes subleuare et psternere. dormire et uigilare. manducare et ieiunare. Sic te d's creauit. Unde & concupiscentis carnis tue re siste. et d's inuabit te. Nā cū te op ponis diabolo. uelut fortis bella tor in unico suo. tunc d's delectat incertamine tuo. uolens ut cū in omib; horis. in omib; angustis tuis constantē inuoces. S. cū carnē tuā n̄ uis domare. tunc facis eā inuenis et in peccatis epulari. quō ei frenū timoris dñi abstra his. cū quo eā retinere deberes. ne in pditionē iret. Quā ppter ita ad diabolū respicis. sicut et ipse ad iniquitatē respexit. cū in mor tē cecidit. Et ipse de pditione tua gausus dicit. Ecce homo q nobis similis ē. Et tē sup te cadit. atq. uias suas in umbra mortis scdm qd sibi placet uite ponit. S. d's nouit qd boni pficere possis.

Tibi e labo usq tis si
me orna mo mod man re u sua
qui adi nou tuor nū cer telli dm
nita lica
na
nou
Qua
inb
uer
fida tibi
qu atq
me
ma
na
qui pon cris au

Tibi enī lex posita ē. scdm hoc qđ laborare potes. Ds ab initio seli usq. ad consumationē ei in elec tis suis delectari uult. ita qđ ipsi in claritate uirtutū fidelissime ornati coronent. Quomodo. Ho mo uoluptati carnis sue hoc modo resistat. ne in deliciis hui mundi diffluat. nec etiā tā secu re uiuat. quasi in ppria domo sua maneat. quō pegrinus ē. quia pat̄ ipsius cū expectat. si ad ipsū redire uelit. ubi eū cē nouit. Vnde o homo si oculos tuos adduas semitas. idē ad bo nū et ad malū uēteris. tunc do ceris. qđ & magna et parua in telligis. Quomodo. Fide unū dm indiuitate & in huma nitate intelligis. et etiā diabo lica opa in malo uides. Et cū ita iustas & iniustas uias cog noueris. tunc tibi p me dicē.
Quā uia ire desideras. Qđ si te in bonis uis ire uolueris. et si uerba mea fidelit̄ audieris. as sidua et sincera pce dñm ora. ut tibi succurrat. & ne te deserat quō fragilis in carne tua es.
atq. ad humilitatē caput tuū inclina. & ea que in opib. tuis mala s̄. excute & ate. illa festi nant. pice. Hec ds requirit ate. quia qđ tibi aurū et plumbū p poneret et diceret. ad qđ uolu eris manū tuā porrigere. aurū audissime rapes. et plumbū dimitteres. quō aurū magis qm plumbū diligeres. Sic & celestē patriā magis qm grauedinē peccatorū atendere debes. Qđ si in peccatis cecideris. mox. in cō fessione et pura penitentia sur ge. ante qm mors oriat̄. in te.

Pat̄ enī tuus uult ut clames. plo res & auxiliū petas. ne in sordib. peccatorū remaneas. S; si uulne ra accepis. medicū quere ne mo riaris. Nonne multociens ds te pestas hominib. in morte. ut tandē ad tencā ab eis inuocet.
S; tu o homo dicis. Bona opa opari n̄ possū. Et ego responde bo. Potes. Et tu dicis. Quomodo.
Et ego dico. Intellectu et opatio ne. Et tu respondes. Consensū n̄ habeo. Et ego respondebo. Disce pugnare contra te. Et tu dicis.
Contra te ipsū pugnare contra te. Et tu dicis. Contra me ipsū pugnare n̄ ualeo. nisi ds adiu uerit me. Audi ḡ quomodo pugnes aduersū te. Cū malū in te surgit. na qđ nescis quom̄ illud abicias. tunc tactu gr̄e mee tactus. qđ in uis inuicis o cu lorū tuorū grā mea tangit te. mox clama. ora. confitere. et plora. ut t̄ ds succurrat. & ut malū ate auferat. & ut t̄ uires in bono tribuat. Istud habes de scientia tua. qua dñm p̄ in spi rationē sp̄s sc̄i intelligis. Nam si alicui hominis opari cēs.

32^v o quociens te oporteret illud facere. qđ corpori tuo difficile est. Nonne multa aduersa sustineres ppter trena mercede tua.
Et cur dō ppter supnā mercede nō seruis. qđ tibi et animā & corp⁹ dedit. Si enī aliquā tēporalē rē habere uelles. o qm̄ labo-raret ut illā saluē uel paruo tēpore habere posses. Nunc autē redet te illud querere qđ finē nō habet. Nā ut bos stimulo agit. sic & tu corpus tuū timorē dñi exercere debes. quia si hoc feceris dñs nō abi-ciet te. Si enī aliquis tirann⁹ te caperet. pūus ad illū te conuerteret. qui tibi pdesse possit. accipiens supplicat⁹. et cū oraret. et substantiā tuā illi pmitteret. quā tibi subueni-ret. Sic & tu oho fac cū iniqui-tas te cepit. addm te conuertis supplica ora et correctionē tuā pmitte. & dñs uiuabit te. S; tu oho cecus es ad uidēdū. surdus ad audiendū. stultus ad defendendū te. quō intellectū. quē tibi dñs infudit et quinq; sensus corporis tui quos tibi dedit quasi ppter core & puantatē habes. Nonne intellectū et sciētiā habes. Regnū dī potest emi. nō autē loco acquiri. Audite g^o o homines et nolite despice-re inqum̄ celestis ierlm̄. & nolite tangere mortē et no-lite dñm negare & diabolu confiteri. & nolite in peccatis crescere et in bonis deficere.

Dñm enī audire nō uultis. cū in pceptis ipsi ambulare recusatis. et ad diabolu curritis. cū uoluptatē carnis urē pficere contenditis. Conua-lescite g^o & confortamini. quia uobis necesse ē. fidelis autē homo dolorē suū consideret. & medicū querat. ante qm̄ in mortē cadat. Qđ si dolorē suū inspexerit et medicū quesierit. ille inuentus ostendit ei amarū sucū pigmenti p qđ saluari potē. qđ s amara uerba p que pban-dus ē. utrū penitencia ei de radice cordis ipsius. ande uenio instillans ei pcedat.
Cūq; hoc pbauerit dat ei uinū penitentie. ut feorē uul-nerū suorū abluat. & etiā offert ei oleū mēdie. quāuis eadē uulnera ad sanitatē li-nat. Tunc etiā inungit ei. ut circa sanitatē suā sollici-tus sit. dicens. Uide ut in hac medicina studiosus et stabi-lis sis. nec tediū capias. quia uulnera tua graua s. S; multi s. qui uix penitentiā peccatō suorū suscipiunt. s; qm̄ uis multo labore. tam ei pp-ter meū mortis pagunt.

At ego
timid uerto cū tra cū m qui a suorū castig miser respu rere
pessim
te in ri po penit mol redē mor
nec ofici ne u ben
et u cur
tra seri
tur
Qui
lun
seri n u fide
par
fili
nec

At ego eis manū porrigo et ama-ritudinē illā eis in dulcedinē uerto. ita qđ penitentiā hanc cū tranquillitate pficiunt qm cū magna difficultate inceptē.
Qui autē penitentiā peccatorū suorū neglexerit. quō corpus suū castigare sibi difficile ēē dicit. miser ē. quia n̄ uult in se et ipsū respicere nec ullū medicū querere nec uulnera sua sanare. s; pessimū liuorē in se celat & mortē in simulatione tegit. ne uide-ri possit. Unde piger ad gustū penitentie ē. nolens respicere moleū mēdic. nec consolationē redemptionis querere. et ideo in mortē ibit. quō mortē dilect. nec regnū dī quesitū. Ergo ofideles in pceptis dī currunt. ne uos damnatio mortis apphendat. Nouū adā inuamini. et ueterē hominē abiciat. Nā currenti regnū dī aptū ē. intra autē iacenta clausū ē. s; miseri s̄ illi. qui diabolu ueneran-tur. dīm ignorantes. Quom̄.
Qui dīm unū in trinitate n̄ colunt. nec trinitatē in unitate scire uolunt. Unde qui saluari uult. in recta et catholica fide n̄ dubitet. Quid ē hoc.

Quō patrē n̄ colit. qđ filiū ab-negat. nec filiū diligit qđ patrē ignorat. nec patrē nec filiū habet. qđ spm scm abicit. nec spm scm accipit. qđ patrē et filiū n̄ uenerat. Ergo unitas in trinitate. & trinitas in unitate in-telligenda ē. O homo. nūqđ es sine corde et sine sanguine uiuens.

Sic nec pater sine filio. nec sine spu sco. nec sps scs sine ipsis ēē cre-dendus ē. s; pat̄ filiū suū predptione hominis misit in mundū.
& iterū ad se retraxit cū sic et hō cogitationes cordis sui emittit. & iterū ipsas ad se recolligit. Unde de hac salutaris unigeniti dī mis-sione. isaias in uoluntate sup̄ne maiestatis loquit̄ dicens. Verbū misit dñs in iacob. et cecidit in iust. Qđ dī. Verbū p qđ om̄a facta s̄. scilicet unigenitū dī qđ in corde patris scdm diuinitatē semp sine initio temporis fuit. ipsū misit dñs uidelicet sup̄n pat̄ p ora pphetarū in iacob. cū ipsi eū dē filiū dī in mundū p salute hominū uenturū fideliter p̄nunciarent. quatinus hoīes p eos p̄moniti et p̄muniti diabo-lum prudent̄ subplamarent. & uersuicias deceptionū illi sapienter declinarent. Et ita idē uerbū cecidit in iust. cū idē unigenitus dī uenit in alba uiriditatē uirginis. in qua nullus uirgressū suū posuit. s; que florē suū inuolabiliter tenuit. ut ipse natus ex uirgine. eos qđ lūm ueneratis p fallacē cecitatē ignorabant. ad uerū iter reduce-ret. et in deficienti saluti resti-

xxv.

330 tueret. Unde quicūq. scientiā in spū scō. et pennas infide habet. iste admonitiōe meā n̄ transcen
dat. s; cā ingustu anime sue am plectendo percipiat. Quinta visio

prime partis;

Hec uidi uelut qñdā muliebrē imaginē auertice usq. ad umbilicū pallidā et abum bilico usq. ad pedes nigra et in pedib; sanguineā. cir ca pedes suos candidissi mā et purissimā nubē habentē.
Oculos autē n̄ habebat. manus ū suās sub ascellas suas posuerat. stans iux ta altare. qđ ē ante oculos dī. s; ipsū n̄ tangebāt. Et in corde ipsius stabat abrahā. et in pecto re ei moyses. ac in uentre ipsius re liqui pphete. singuli signa sua demonstrantes et pulchritudi nē ecclē admirantes. Ipsa ū tan te magnitudinis apparuit ue lut aliqua turris alicuius ciuita tis ē. habens in capite suo. qđ si circulū simile aurore. Audiu nerū uocē de celo dicentē mihi.
Antiquo pplō austeritate le gis dī imposuit cū abrahe circū cisionē indix. quā postea in grām suauitatis conuertit cū p filiū suū ueniatē euglū cre dentib; dedit. ubi iugo legis sauci atō. olco iudicē delinunt. Qua pp̄t uides uelut qñdā muliebrē imaginē auertice usq. ad umbilicū cū pallidā. que ē synagoga ma ter incarnationis filii dī existens et ab initio surgentū filiorū suorū usq. ad fortitudinē eorū secreta dī in obumbratione p̄uidens. s; ea n̄ plenit ap̄iens. illa autē rum lans aurora que apte loquit̄ n̄ ex istens. s; cā in multa admiratione a longe intuens. et sic incanti cis canticorū de ipsa dicens. Que ē ista que ascendit p̄ desertū de licis affluens. et in mixa sup̄ di lectū suū. Qđ dī. Que ē hec noua nupta que in plurimis bonis opib; se eleuat p̄ desertā paganorū legalia p̄cepta sapientie dī de serentū et idola adorantium. ascendens ad sup̄na desideria. delicis donorū sp̄s scī habundans. ac si multo studio anhelans. & se ponens sup̄ sponsū suū scilicet filiū dī. Hec enī ē. que a filio dī dotata in p̄claris uirtutib; uiget. et in uirtutib; scripturarū habundat. s; & eadē synago ga de filiis eīdē noue sponse p̄ multā admirationē in ser uo meo isaia pph̄a sic dicit.

Qui s̄ hū qui ut nubes uo lant. et quasi colūbe ad fenestras suas. Qđ dī. Qui s̄ isti qui in m̄tib; suis se abstrahen tes de t̄renis accarnalib; con cupiscentis pleno desiderio et plena deuotione ad supna uolant et columbina simplicitate absq amaritudine felix sensus corpo ris sui munium. et munimentū firmissime petre que unigenitus dī ē multo ardore bonarū uir tum appetunt. Hu enī s. q. p. p. t. supnū amorē trena regna con culcant. & celestia querūt. Hec sy nagoga admirabat de ecclā quō se his uirtutib; na munitā n cog nouit. sicut illā puidit. quia ecclā angelicis p̄sidis circūdata ē. ne eā diabolus dilaret & deri at cū synagoga adō deserta in uicis iaceat. Qua p. p. t. uidet. 1117 etiā ipsā ab umbilico usq; ad pe des nigrā. qd ē a fortitudine sue dilatauonis usq; ad consummati onē sue extensionis. in p̄uarican one legis et intransgressionē re stamenti patrū suorū sordidā. qā multis modis diuina p̄cepta ne glexit. et uoluptatē carnis sue secuta ē. Et in pedib; sanguinea. circa pedes suos candidissimā et purissimā nubē habet. quō in consumatione sua p̄pham p̄phe tarū. occidit ubi et ipsa lapsa corruit. in eadē tam consū matione. lucidissima & p̄spica cissima fide in m̄tib; credentiū surgente. quia ubi synagoga consumationē accepit ecclā sur rexit. cū ap̄lica doctrina post mortē filii dī se p̄tū orbe t̄ra rū dilatauit. Sed eadē imago oculos n̄ habet. manus ū suas sub as cellas suas ponit. quia synagoga in uerā lucē n̄ aspexit. cū unigeni tū dī in despectu habuit. unde & opa iusticie sub tedio pigricie sue torpore a se n̄ p̄iciens t̄git. s. eā uē lut n̄ sint negligentē abscondit. stans iuxta altare. qd ē ante oculos dī. s. ipsū n̄ tangit. quō legē dī quā diuino p̄cepto et diuina in spectione accepit. exteri quidē nouit. s. eā int̄ius n̄ t̄ngit. qā eā potius abhorruit qm dilige ret. sacrificia et incensū deuota rū orationū dō offerre negli gens. s. in corde ipsius stat abra hā. quō in eū circūcisionis in synagoga ipse fuit. et in p̄ecto re ei moyses. qā in p̄cordia ho minū diuinā legē ille attulit. ac in uentre ipsius reliquit p̄phe. idē in institutione illa quē ipsi diuinitus tradita fuerat in spec tores diuinorū p̄ceptorū. singuli signa sua demonstrantes. et pul chritudinē ecclē admirantes. quō ipsi miracula p̄phete sue inmutabilib; signis ostenderūt. et speciositatē generositatis noue sponse in multa admiratione adtenderūt. Ipsa uero tamē magnitudinis apparer. uelut aliqua turris alicuius ciuitatis ē. quia magnitudinē diuinorū p̄ceptorū suscipiens. munitionē et defensionē nobilis & electe

34 ciuitatis p̄nunciauit. habens in capite suo quasi circulu simile aurore. quia etiā mortui suo mi-raculū incarnationis unigeniti dī p̄signauit. et claras uirtutes ac misteria que secunt p̄monstrauit. Nā ipsa uelut in primo mane coronata fuit. cū diuina p̄cepta accepit. de signans adā. qui primū iussione dī p̄cepit. s; postea intransgressionē sua in mortē cecidit. Sic et iudei fecerūt. qui diuinā legē primitus susceperūt. s; deinde filiū dī in incredu-litate sua abiecerūt. S; & sic homo p̄ mortē unigeniti dī circa nouissimū tēpus de p̄dicatione mortione mortis ereptus ē. ita et synagoga ante nouissimū diē p̄ diuinā elemētā excitata. incredulitatē deseruit. et ad cogniti-onē dī ueracit̄ puenit. Qd ē hoc.
 Nonne aurore ante solē ascendit. S; aurore recedit. et claritas solis p̄manet. Quid ē hoc. Iētus testamentū recessit et ueritas euēgiū p̄manet. quia que anti-qui in legalib; obseruationib; carnalit̄ obseruabant. hec nouis ppl̄s in nouo testam̄to spi-ritualit̄ exerceat. quō qd illi in carne ostenderūt. hoc isti in spū pficiunt. Nā circūcisio n̄ p̄uit. quia in baptismū translata ē. quō ut illi in uno m̄bro signati s; sic et isti in om̄ib; m̄bris suis. unde antiqua p̄cepta n̄ p̄ierit.

q̄a in meliōrē statū translata s; cū etiā in nouissimo tempore synagoga ad eccl̄am se fideliter transferret. Nā o synagoga cū in multis iniquitatib; errares. ita qd baal et cū ceteris his similib; te pollueres. consuetudinē legis turpissimis morib; scindens. et nuda in peccatis tuis iacens. feci ut ezechiel seruus m̄s loquatur dicens. Expandi amictū meū sup te & opui ignominia tua. et iuravi tibi et ingressus sū pac-tū tecū. Qd dī. Ego fili' altissimi. in uoluntate patris mei extendi incarnationē meā o synagoga sup te idē p̄salutē tua. auferens peccata tua que in multis obliuionib; opata es. et firmani tibi remediū saluationis. ita qd minera federis mei ad salutē tuā manifestauim. cū uerā fidē p̄aplicā doctrinā tibi. apui. q̄nnus p̄cepta mea obseruares. uelut mulier potestati mariti sui subiacere debet. Nā a sp̄ritatē extioris legis atē abstuli. et suaunitatē spiritalis doctrine tibi dedi. ac om̄ia misteria mea in sp̄ritualib; doctrinis p̄memorāpsv t̄ ostendi. s; tu me iustū de-seruisti. et diabolo te coniunxisti. Sed tu o homo intellige. scilicet ut samsonē uxor ipsi deseruit. ita qd lumine suo priuatus ē. sic et synagoga filiū dī deseruit. cū eū obdurata

VI. Visio prime partis.

spereunt. & cū doctrinā illius abiecit. S; postquā deinde ca pilli ei iā renati s. na qd ecclā dī confortata ē. idē fili' dī in fortitudine sua synagogā deiecit. et natos illi exheredavit. cū etiā p paganos dīm ignoran tes in celo dī contriti s. ipsa cū multis errorib; toti confusio nis et scismatis se subiecerat.
& cū p uariationib; toti iniqui tatis se polluerat. S; etiā quē admodū dauid uxore suā. quā sibi primitus desponsa uerat. & quē cū alio uiro se polluerat. tandē reuocauit. na etiā et fili' dī synagogā quē sibi primū in incarnati one sua coniuncta erat. s; grām baptismi deserens. diabolu se cuta fuerat. tandē circa nouis simū tēpus recipiet. ubi ipsa errores infidelitatis sue dese rens ad lumē uernantis redibit.
Nā diabolus synagogā in ceci tate illius rapuerat. et cā infi delitati in multis errorib; tra diderat. nec hoc usq; ad filiū p dmonis facere cessabit. Qui dū in exaltatione supbie sue ceciderit. uelut saul. in moni gelbo. infectus exspirauit. qui dauid de tēra sua fugauit. sicut etiā fili' iniquitatis filiū meū in electis suis expellere tēptabit. tunc idē fili' mī an tichristo deiecto synagogā aduerā fidē reuocabit. sicut et dauid primā uxore suā p mor tē saulis recipit. cū in nouissimo tēpore homines illū p quē decep ti fuerant. uelut uiderint. et ad uiā salutis cū multa festinatione recurrunt. Non autē decuit. ut uernas euglī umbrā legis pre nunciaret. quō decet ut carna lia pcurrant et spūalia subse quant. quia etiā seruus dīm suū uenitū p dicit. et n dīs seruū in seruitio pcurrit. et ecclā in lumine uernantis subsecuta ē.

Vnde qui cūq; scientiā in spū scō et pennas infide habet. iste admonitionē meā n transcendat. s; cā in gustu anime sue amplex tendo p cipiat.

Ita et synagoga in umbra significatio nis pcurrit.

E
in
de

uidi in altitudine celestiu secre torū duas acies supnoꝝ spūuū multa claritate fulgentes. ita ut qui in una acie erant uelut pennas in pectorib; suis habebāt. et facies ut facies hominū in se p tēdebant. in quib; et uultus hominū. qsi in pura aqua apa

35^v

> rebant. et q̄ in acie alia fuerit etiā > in pectorib; suis q̄si pennas habu > erunt. et facies ut facies hominū > in se ostenderit. in quib; etiā ima > go filii hominis uelut in specu > lo fulgebat. S; nec in his nec in > illis aliā formā discernere po > tui. He autē acies. alias q̄nq; > acies scdm modū corone circū > cinxerant. Et qui in acie una > istarū fuerit. quasi facies homi > nū habebant. ab humero & de > orsu magno splendore fulgen > tes. qui uero in alia erant tamē > claritatis existerit. q̄d eos in > tueri n̄ poterat. et qui in alia. ut > albū marmor apparuerit. & ca > pta ut capita hominū habue > runt. sup̄ que tardentes facu > le uise s̄ et ab humero et de or > su uelut ferrea nube circūdati > fuerit. et qui in alia facies ut fa > cies hominū. & pedes ut pedes > hominū habentes. in capribus > suis galeas gestabant. marmo > res tunicis induti. et q̄ in alia > erant nullā formā hominū in > se ostendentes. uelut auro ru > bebant. Nullā autē aliā formā > in eis conspiciebā. S; & acies iste. > alias duas etiā in modū corone > circūdederant. Qui autē in una > acie illarū erant. oculis et pen > nis pleni uidebant. et in quoq; > oculo. speculū. & in ipso speculo > facies hominis apparuit. et pen > nas suas ad sup̄nā altitudinē > eleuabant. et q̄ in alia fuerunt > quasi ignis ardebant. plurimasq; > pennas habentes. in eisde pennis > quasi in speculo om̄s ordines > eccl̄iastice institutionis in signi > tos demonstrabant. S; aliā for > mā nec in his nec in illis uidi. Et > he acies om̄s in om̄i genere musi > corū mirabilib; uocib; miracu > la illa resonabant. que d̄s in bea > tis animab; opat. p̄ que d̄m mag > nifice gl̄ificabant. Et audiui uo > cē de celo m̄ dicentē. O m̄ps > et ineffabilis d̄s. qui ante sēclā fu > it. s; in ciuū n̄ habuit. nec post > finē sēclōrū cē desinet. om̄e crea > turā mirabili modo sua uolun > tate condidit. eāq; mirabili > modo sua uoluntate disposuit.

 > Quomodo. Quasda creaturas > tr̄enis adherere. q̄sda ū celestib; > inesse deputauit. Ipse quoq; > beatos angelicos sp̄s tā ad salu > tē hominū. quā ad honorē no > minis sui disposuit. Quomodo.
 > Nā quosda ita constituit ut > necessitatib; hominū subueni > ant. quosda uero ut iudicia > secretorū suorū p̄ eos hominibus > manifestent. Qua p̄pt̄ uides > in altitudine celestīū secretorū > duas acies sup̄nōrū sp̄itūū mul > ta claritate fulgentes. q̄a ut > tibi demonstratur. in altitudi > ne illorū occultorū que carnalis > obtutus n̄ penetrat. s; que ui > sus interioris hominis ad ten dicit anim bere nisc

 un una pect ut f dur
 nū
 rem
 ra
 qua qd
 s; q ru lu is c cie lita en
 p̄ ba uo si
 an sen
 et
 to be in im
 en
 su
 tes
 in dic hęc duo agmina corpus et animā hominis dō familiari de bere designant. ubi ipsa cū sup nis ciuib; claritatē eīne beati tudinis habent. Et qui in .11. una acie s. uelut pennas in pectorib; suis habent & facies ut facies hominū in se pten dunt in quib; et uultus homi nū. quasi impura aqua appa rent. quō isti angli s. deside ria p fundatis intellectus sui. quasi pennas expandentes. n̄ qd pennas ut aues habent.

s. qd uoluntatē dī in deside riis suis uelocitē pficiant. ue lut homo incogitationib; su is celeritē uolat. ita qd et p fa cies suas pulcritudinē rationa litatis in se manifestant. ubi etiā dī opa hominū pspicue pseruat. quia ut seruus uer ba dñi sui audiens. ea scdm uoluntatē illi pficit. ita et ip si uoluntatē dī in hominib; attendunt. et actus eorū illi in semetipsis ostendunt. Vnde .111. et qui in acie alia s. etiā in pec torib; suis quasi pennas ha bent. et facies ut facies hoīū in se ostendunt. in quib; etiā imago filii hoīs uelut in spe culo fulget. qui archangli s. etiā in desideris intellectus sui uoluntatē dī attenden tes. et decorē rationalitatis in se manifestantes. incarna tū uerbū dī purissime magni ficant. qā ipsi archana dī cog noscentes. misteria incarnatio nis filii dī signis suis multociēs p ueniebant. s. nec in his nec in illis aliā formā discernere po tes. quō & in angelis et in archan gelis multa secreta misteriorū s. quę humanus intellectus mor tali corpore grauatus cape n̄ ualet. Qd autē he acies alias qnq; acies scdm modū corone cin gunt. hoc ē qd corpus et aīa hoīs. quinq; sensus hominis uirtute fortitudinis sue cōp hendent. p quinq; uulnera filii mei emundatos ad rectitu dinē interiorū mandatorū dirige re debent. Vnde q in acie .1111. una istarū s. quasi facies homi nū habent. ab humero et de or sū magno splendore fulgentes. qui uirtutes s. in corda creden tū ascendentes. et in ardente carnate excessā turrim in eis edificant. quę opa ipsorū s. ita qd in rationalitate sua opa elec torū hominū ostendunt. et in fortitudine sua ad bonū finē multo fulgore beatitudinis ipsos pducunt. Quomodo. Sci licet cū electi claritatē interio ris sensus habentes. om̄s nequi cias malorū suorū abiciunt. ppter illuminationē illā. qua in istis uirtutib; in mea uoluntate illu minati s. fortitē aduersus dia bolicas insidias pugnant. & cer-tamina illa que ipsi hoc modo contra diabolicā turbā habent virtutes iste in creatori ipsorū incessantē demonstrant. Nā homines certamina confessionis et abnegationis habent in se-quomodo. Ita qđ iste me confitetur. et qđ ille me abnegat. S; in hoc certamine talis interrogatio ē. Est dñs annon. Tunc interrogatio ista tale responsū sps scī in hoīe habet. Dñs ē. qui te creauit. S; & ipse te redemit. S; quādiu introgatio et responsū hoc in ho-mine ē. virtus dī illi nō de erit. quia huic interrogatiōi et responso penitentia adheret. Vbi autē interrogatio hec in homine nō ē ibi nec hoc responsū sps scī ē. quō homo iste donū dī a se expellit. et sine interrogatiōe penitentie semetipsū in morte precipitat. Certamina ū istorū bellox virtutes dō offerūt. quia ipsi tale sigillū corā dō s. p qđ demonstrabit quā intentione dñs colat. et abneget. Qui autē in alia acie s. tamē claritatis existunt. qđ eos inuerti nō po-tes. qui potestates s. designantes. quō serenitatē et pulchritudinē potestatis dī nulla inbecillitas mortalitatis peccatorū apprehendere poterit. nec se ip-si simile facere. qā potestas dī indeficiens ē. Sed qui in alia acie s. ut albū marmor apparent. & capita ut capita hominū habent. sup que tar-dentes facule vident. et ab humero & deorsū uelut ferrea nu-be circūdati s. qđ principatus s. pfigurantes qđ hi qui ex dono dī in scō principes hominū ex-istunt. sincerā fortitudinē iusticie induant. ne in diuersa te instabilitatis incidant. s. ut caput suū qđ xpc dī fili' ē in-spiciant. ac regimina sua scdm uoluntatē ipsius in necessitatib. hominū dirigant. sup se grām scī sps in ardore uertutis atten-dentes. ita qđ in fortitudine eqtatis usq. ad consumationē suā firmi et stabiles pseuerent. unde etiā qui in alia acie s. facies ut facies hominū et pedes ut pedes hominū habent. in caputib. suis galeas gestant. marmoris tunicis induti. qui dñationes s. ostendentes. quia ille qui dñs omnium ē. rationa-litatē hominū. que in humano puluere polluta iacuerat. atq. ad celos subleuauit. cū filiū suū ad trās misit. qui antiquū seductore sua rectitudine conculcauit. ita ut fideles ipsū qđ caput eorū ē fidelit. imitentur. spē suā ad celestia ponentes. ac forti desiderio bonorū opū se munitos. Ed qui in alia acie s. nulla formā ho-minuū in se ostendentes. uelut aurora rubent. qui throni s. de monstrantes. qd diuinitas ad humanitatem se inclinauit. cū unigeniti dī humanū corpus psaluit hominū induit. q̄ nulla contagia humanorū peccatorū in se habuit. quō ipse de spū scō conceptus. in aurora uidelicet in beata uirgine carnē absq̄ omni macula totius sordis accepit. S. nullā aliā formā in eis conspicis. q̄a plurima mysteria supnōrū secretorū s. que fragili-tas humana n̄ potest app̄hendere. Qd autē et acies iste. alias duas in modū corone circum-dant. hoc ē qd fideles illi qui quinq. sensus corporis sui ad supna dirigunt. scientes q̄a p̄ quinq. uulnera filii dī redēpti

s. ad dilectionē dī et p̄ximi sui omni annu su & circūmione m̄is sue pueniunt. cū uoluptatē cordis sui negligunt. et sp̄e suā ad inīna ponunt. Qua ix. p̄p̄t et q̄ in una acie illarū s. oculis et pennis pleni uident. et in quoq. oculo speculū. et in ipso speculo facies hominis apparet. et pennas suas ad sup-nā altitudinē eleuant. qui cherubin s. scientiā dī significantes. in qua ipsi mysteria supnōrū secretorū uidentes desideria sua. scdm uoluntatē dī aspirant. ita qd ipsi in p̄fun-ditate scientie sue purissimā p̄- spicuitatē habentes. in ipsa illos mirabilit̄ p̄uident. qui uerū dīm cognoscentes. intentionem desideriorū cordis sui ad ipsū q̄ sup om̄s ē uelut pennas bone & iuste subleuationis dirigunt. magis cū diligentes. quā caduca appetentes. scdm qd et ipsi in eleuatione desideriorū suorū ostendunt. Sed q̄ in alia acie s. quasi ignis ardens. plu-rimasq. pennas habentes. in eisdē pennis. quasi in speculo om̄s ordines ecclesiasticos. institutionis insignitos demonstrant. qui seraphim s. significantes. ut sicut ipsi in amore dī ardent. et ut maxima desideria uisionis ei habent. ita qd etiā in eisdē desideriis suis cū multa puritate tā sc̄lares quā sp̄tales dignitates. que in ecclesiasticis misteriis uigent ostendunt. q̄a secreta dī in ipsis mirabilit̄ apparent. sic etiā om̄s q̄ sinceritatē puri cordis amantes supnā ui-tā querūt. ardent dīm diligant.

cūq. toto desiderio amplectantur. quatinus ad gaudia illorū pueniant. quos tā fideliter imitant. Qd uero aliā formā nec in his nec in illis uidet. hoc ē qd multa secreta in beatis sp̄itib. s. que homini mani-festanda n̄ s. quō quādiu ipse mortalis existit ea que

37v

xv. Sed he acies om̄s ut audis in om̄i genere musicorū mirabilib; uo cib; miracula illa resonant que d̄s in beatis animab; opat̄. p̄ que d̄m magnifice gl̄ificant. q̄a bea ti sp̄s in uirtute d̄i maxima gau dia in inenarrabilib; sonis p̄ opa miraculorū illoꝝ in celestib; p̄ferunt. que d̄s in sc̄is suis p̄ficat. p̄ que ipsi d̄m gl̄osissime magnificant. ^{11.} ubi cū in profunditate sc̄itatis ex quirunt letantes in gaudio salu tis. uelut etiā dauid seruus m̄s in spector sup̄noꝝ secretorū ^{testatur} dicens. ^{111.} xv. Vox exultationis et salutaris in tabernaculis iustorū. q̄d dicit̄.
 Sonus leticie et p̄sp̄natus illius.
 q̄d carō conculat̄ et sp̄s erigit̄. cū in deficiente salute cognoscit̄ in habitationib; illoꝝ qui in iusti ciā abiciunt et iusticiā faciunt. ^{112.} cū suggerunt diabolo id q̄d ma lū ē facere possent. s; diuina inspi ratione id q̄d bonū ē p̄ficiunt. ^{113.} Quid ē hoc. Homo multociens in eptā exultationē in se ostendit. cū peccatū illud p̄fecerit. q̄d p̄fi cere inconuenient̄ concupuit. s; salutē ibi n̄ habet q̄a hoc fecit q̄d diuino p̄cepto contrariū fu it. Ille autē tripudiū exultan onis cū p̄sp̄nate uere salutis ha bebūt. qui bonū q̄d ardentē desi derant strennue cōplet. man sionē illoꝝ dū in corpore habnat̄. ^{114.} amant. q̄ uia uernat̄ currentes errorē mendacii declinauerunt.

 Unde quicūq; sciētiā in sp̄u scō et pennas in fide habet. iste admo nitionē meā n̄ transcendat. s; cā in gustu anime sue amplectendo p̄cipiat. aō.

INCIPIVNT capitla scdē parus.
 Capitla. i. uisionis. ii. parus.
 De omnipotentia d̄i.
 Verba iob ad eandē rem.
 Quod uerbū ant̄ & p̄assūptā humanitatē indiuisibilit̄ & cūa inter apud patrē est. ^{115.} Quare fili d̄i d̄r uerbū. ^{116.} Quod uirtute uerbi d̄i om̄is cre atura sustentata ē. & homo reuē in saluatione. ^{117.} Quod incōphensibilis potencia d̄i mundū fabricauit et diuer sas species eduxit. ^{118.} Quod creatis aliis creaturis. ho delimo tr̄e creatis ē. ^{119.} Q̄d adā dū licet p̄cepto claris sime obediēcie accepto. consili ant̄ diabolo n̄ obediuit. ^{120.} Quod abrahā ysaac et iacob & alii p̄phete mundi tenebras significationib; suis repulserūt. ^{121.} Quod p̄cipuus p̄pheta ioh̄es miraculis coruscans. filiū d̄i p̄ monstrauit. ^{122.} Quod uerbo d̄i incarnato. il lud magnū et antiquū consi liū uisū est. ^{123.} Mifestare.
 Quod homo secreta d̄i n̄ debet plus scrutari quā ipse uult. ma

Qu
 mor
 elect dux
 V
 Qu
 p̄ min
 unā
 Qu
 gen cor
 Qu
 tr̄
 De
 De
 Qu
 un
 in loh
 De
 De
 De
 De
 De
 Qu
 et
 Qu
 m
 De
 Qu
 tio

Quod filius dī natus in mundo. .xiii. morte sua diaboli supavit. et electos suos ad hereditatē suā re duxit. Fundata ē. .b.

Verba osee de eadē re. .xiii.

Quod corpus filii dī in sepulchro. .xv. peridui iacens resurrexit. et ho mini uia uertit de morte ad uitā ostensa ē.

Quod filius dī a morte resur gens. discipulis suis frequentē ad corroborandū eos apparuit. .xvi.

Quod filio dī ascendente ad pa trē. sponsa ei diuersis ornatis. .xvii.

Capla sedē uisionis. .ii. parat.

De sensu misterior dī. .xviii.

De trib. psonis. .xix.

Quod homo nūquā obliuiscat unū dīm in trib. psonis ardent innocare. .xx.

Iohs de caritate dī. .xxi.

De trib. uirib. lapidis. .xxii.

De trib. uirib. flāme. .xxiii.

De trib. causis humani uerbi. .xxiv.

De unitate essentie. .xxv.

Verba salomonis. .xxvi.

Capla tē uisionis. .ii. parat.

De constructione eccle que sep gignit filios suos in regenerati one sps et aque. Ecclā. .xxvii.

Quod eccle mortui suo in aplis et martyrib. decorata ē. .xxviii.

Qd in sacerdotali officio et ele mosinarū distributione ornat. .xxix.

Oemāna benignitate eccle. .xxx.

Quod eccle ad candorē cōple tionis sue n̄ dū pfecta. circa tē pus filii p dmonis ad pfectū pducit.

Quomodo eccle filios suos in pu ritate deuotissime offert. .v.

Qd eccle nulla pueritas dia bolice artis obscurare potest. .vi.

Quod secreta eccle. humanus in tellectus ad plenū intueri n̄ ualet. .vii.

De uirginitate marie. .viii.

De dilatazione sacramentorū uere trinitatis. .ix.

Quod cuiq. fidelū ad ē ministe rū angloz. .x.

De his qui in fide scē trinitatis amare eccle regenerant ipsa integra pmanente. .xi.

Similitudo de balsamo & omi ebino et carbunculo. .xii.

Quod beata trinitas in bap tismo ap̄to celo baptizans appa ret et eis in gredine peccatoz abstrahens. singulos candida ueste induit. Plex lex. .xiii.

De quermonia eccle sup er rore filioz. Gaudē cū. .xiv.

Quod duo signa tradita s̄ ho minib. ad defendendū se. .xv.

Similitudo de iuvene. .xvi.

Quare ad ē n̄ erat danda du
x. .xvii.

Quod amonitio sps scī appa rens minabat antiquo serpen ti in noc circūcisio percussit cū in maxilla in abraha. eccle li. .xviii.

De trib. alis qd significant. .xix.

Quod masculi qui in tēpore circūcisionis circūcisi n̄ s̄ trans gressores legis fuerūt. .xx.

Sicut in creatione ad ē tres .xxi.

manifestat. et uiridissimis uiribus declarat.

cause designate s̄ na cūa tres cause s̄ in uirō in p̄tandis filiis xxiii. Qd mulier in amore dī obseruans xxiiii. uirginitatē suā ualide ornat adō.
xxv. Quod uir recusans c̄sortiū ma trimonii in amore dī consors fi lii dī efficit.
xxvi. Verba ysaie pp̄b̄c. Iuū dī Qd casu ad c̄ clausit homini celū que clausura durauit usq; ad fi xxvii. Verba eugli. xxviii. Verba exhortantis dī. xxix. Quod in circūcisione abrahe membriū unū in baptismo autē xpi om̄ia membra circūcidunt.
xxx. Verba eugli. Tamē. Pu. xxxi. Quod om̄i tēpore et om̄i ciuitate. xxxii. om̄e sexū uidelicet masculū et feminā in baptismo pie d̄s susci xxxiii. Quod tres in honore scē trinita tis adesse debent baptizando ui delicet sacerdos et duo q̄ p̄ illo fi de spondeant. et isti eidē bapu tato carnali copula n̄ cōmisce xxxiiii. Cōparatio de infante. xxxv. Quod om̄ia peccata in baptismo remittuntur. Teo suscipit. xxxvi. Quod quāuis sacerdos peccator sit tam̄ officii baptismi d̄s ab xxxvii. Similitudo de diuitie. xxxviii. In necessitate si sacerdos n̄ ad ē concedit cuilibet fidei homi ni baptizare seruata forma baptismi. Ibet.
xxxix. Capla q̄rte uisionis. ii. partis.
l. Qd om̄is baptizatus punctio nē ep̄i ornari et stabiliri de

Quod immensa et indeficiens dulcedo sp̄s sc̄idat in c̄firmatiōe.
ii. Quod ineffabilis trinitas in c̄ firmatione. Tis d̄ceci potē.
iii. Quod eccl̄a unctiōe sp̄s sc̄i mu nita nūquā in errore puerſa iv. Verba moyſi de eadē re.
v. Qd baptizati in unctiōe cris matis a pontifice decorant.
vi. Verba libri regū ad eandē re.
vii. Quod baptizatus et n̄ confir matus claritatē baptismatis habet. s̄; ornatū et fulgorē unc tionis superioris doctoris sui n̄ hab. viii. Quod in honore sp̄s sc̄i p̄ solos ep̄iscopos confirmatio exercen da est. Coniungat.
ix. Qui confirmandū manib; te net in carnali percreatione ei n̄ x. Qui post baptisimū addiabo lū reuertit. nisi penitet con dēpnabit. qui autē baptismū fidelit̄ sequit̄. adō suscipitur.
xi. eccl̄a p̄ filius suis d̄m exorante.
xii. Tres modi quib; eccl̄a resonat ut tuba. Multimoda. xiii. De diuersitate baptizatorū xiv. Verba ezechielis de eodē.
xv. Capla. v. uisionis. ii. partis.
xvi. Qd apli et pigmaru sequaces eoz uidelicet sacerdotes. eccl̄am doctrina sua splendidissime circūdant.
xvii. Exemplū de abel. xviii. Quod ministri eccl̄e castitatē seruare debent.
xix. Qui ex his in clausura subiecto nis regularit̃ uiuunt cura pigm̃ tarioꝝ n̄ habent̃. sup̃nā mercede acquir̃t. Iginec iocunditas.

De statu nobilissime p̃fectionis uir̃. vi.
De puellari imagine. vii.
De turba que candē circūstat mi ro modo ornata. viii.
Verba ioh̃is de eodē. viii.
Qd̃ uirginitas dō oblata. pr̃u. viii. dent̃ conseruanda ē. Decipit̃.
Qui corrupto pacto uirginitas. x. redierit. flore integritatis care bit. n̄ enī ut dñā s; ut ancilla suis Exemplū ad eandē rē. xi.
Qd̃ magna differentia ē int̃ cele. xii. ste desiderii et t̃renā concupis centiā. ita qd̃ nisi sanguine filii dī homo n̄ redimeret̃.
Oc his q̃ passionē xp̃i incarnatis ar. xiii. dore imitant̃. et uiuent̃ odor existent̃. it̃ secreta regeneratio nis arripiunt̃.
Verba eugl̃i ad eandē rē. xiiii.
Qd̃ uirgineū genus et hic ordo. xv. uouens iter secreta regeneratio nis in p̃cepto legis n̄ s̃.
Exemplū de ioh̃e ad eandē rē. xvi.
Quod q̃ s̃ uiuent̃ odor uouens. xvii. n̄ secreta regenerationis. p̃necessi tate et utilitate eccl̃e regimen eccl̃asticū suscipiant̃. et agia scla rū rerū abicentes.
Verba eugl̃i de ioh̃e. xviii.
Quod in uestitu istoz uestitu alioz. xix.
p̃p̃loꝝ dissimili incarnatio et se putura xp̃i designat̃.
Quod prima lux dici aplicam. xx.

doctrinā aurora inueniū huius conuersationis sol discretā uia in benedicto qui ē quasi alter moyses designat. Sant̃.
Qui in hac conuersatione p̃bau. xxi. inueniunt̃. p̃necessitate eccl̃e sup̃ extensū sacerdotiū suscipi Quod nullus conuersationem. xxii. istoz repente aggrediat̃ nisi in tima p̃batione examinatus.
Quod sclaris p̃p̃ls legē dī con. xxiii. seruant̃. eccl̃am dī plurimū ex ornat̃.
Quod nec maritus uxore. nec. xxiiii. uxor maritū in hoc p̃posito de serat̃. nisi uoluntas amboꝝ sit.
Verba eugl̃i. xxv.
Qd̃ p̃dictē eccl̃astice institutio nes eccl̃am in gradib; et in ordi nib; suis consolidant̃.
Quod in uno quoq; ordine ser. xxvi. uata concordia diuersitas mo rū. singularitas et nouitas uite et uestiū uitanda ē. Suoz.
Verba ioh̃is ad eandē rē. xxvii.
Cōparatio de carnificib;. xxviii.
Qd̃ unicuiq; cū humilitate suf ficere debet institutio p̃decessoz.
Verba eugl̃i de eadē re. xxix.
Cū angelū de his q̃ sibi scdm cor suū leges faciunt̃.
Itē uerba eugl̃i. xxx.
Quod in his nouitatib; d̃s ali. xxxi. quos deicit aliquos tacite tole rat quos tam̃ in futuro iudicat̃.
Quod de inferiori gradu licet. xxxii. ascendere ad sup̃iore. n̄ autē de superiore ad inferiore.

xxvi. Exemplu de animab. & anglis. l. l.

xxviii. Quod q̄ s̄ uiuens odor uiuens 2.15.

per secretæ regenerationis gra nū fortis cibi. et pignarū po ma dulcis saporis. et sc̄laris p̄p̄t̄s 2.iii. carnē designant. Piet. 2.iii.

xxxviii. Quod he tres ecclesiastice institutiones induab: uis uersant.

xxviii Qui signū religionis inuolun- . l.v. tate cordis acceptū abiecerit. . l.vi.

indiciū disticti examinis acci xl. Verba dandi de code.

xly. Qd illi q n amore di s; aliqua
f. f. m. d. l. o. n. d. i. c. u. r. t.

sciari molestia contrichi. signu lary relaxationis e. de accumbere hals religionis hest accepit: bala am assimilatur: Lxxv

Exemplu de balaam:

Quoniam signum religionis in sapient. p. m. accepit et male consummauerit in ruinā uadit.

xl.iiii. Verba ieremie de eode. Fiat. 15.

xl.v Qui infantes suos scē conuer-fatiori subicere uoluerit. hoc 115 n̄ inprudēt s; sapient̄ eis con m̄ minent expellant.

Verba apti ad eandē rē.

Quod hi qui fide conuertunt de cipiunt. et quod hi qui toto corde conuertunt ad deum suscipiunt.

Verba dauid ad eandē rē. ¶ cxx.

Qui blasphemiā contra spm̄ sc̄m inpetuens dixerit: & q̄ se ipsū mortē p̄cipitauerit hunc d̄s nes Verba eugli.

Verba dāuid de eodē. Trac.

Sup que blasphemia despicio nis cadit si cruciatu repugnaue rit cuius ei adio subuenit.

Quod in p[er]d[ic]tione cadit q[uod] corp[us] et anima que d[omi]n[u]s coniunx[ta] sepa[ra]t

Verba eu^glii. In potestate.

Capla sextae uisionis. ii. partis.

Qd ecclesia xpo in passione sua iuncta et sanguine ei dotata ē. et saluatio animarū exorta ē.

Quod d's pat̄ inhumilitate filii sui serpentē antiquū uicit n̄

Verba psalmiste.

Quod ecclesia crescens dotē suā de uote dō corā anglis offert. et p funditas sacramentorū spū scō in spirante manifestata ē.

Similitudo de auro.

quod sacerdote ad altare ad in molandum accedente magna claritas cum ministerio supernorum spi rituum effulget.

Quod in sacramento altaris. dñs pater passionis filii sui in salutē ppli recordat̃.

Quare in sacramento altaris panis uinū et aqua offerant.

Verba iobcl de code. Pleant. viii.

Quod sacerdotē in sacramento altaris p̄sens auxiliū dī n̄ deserit. serenitatē manente donec misteria cōdū sacerdos sc̄s sc̄s sc̄s decantat. xj. et misteria sacramentū inchoat in cōphensibilis serenitas eadē sacramenta irradiat.

Quod diuina claritas oblationē xij. altaris sursum inuisibilit̄ q̄si in puncto trahit et remittit. uerā carnē et uerū sanguinē effecta.

Cōparatio de unguento et saphi. xiiij. ro ad eandē rē. Efficiat.

Quare homo hoc sp̄ale donū in xiiij sibilit̄ sumere n̄ possit. Apparet.

Quod sacerdotē fidelit̄ in dīm cre. xv. dente et humili deuotione offe-rente oblatio caro et sanguis xp̄i Similitudo de pullo et uolauit. xvi.

q̄d uera manifestatione misteria xvij. natiuitatis. passionis. sepulture. resurrectionis. et ascensionis xp̄i in sacramento altaris ut in speculo i Quādiu fidelis homo dicere de xvij. bet dimitte nobis debita nr̄a sic & nos dimittam⁹ debitorib⁹ nr̄is. tādiu passio xp̄i in midia di pa-tris apparebit.

Quod oblatio nūquā cruda ca. xviii. ro apparet nisi in magna necessitate electis demonstrat.

Dum canticū innocentis agni. xx. cant. fideles hoīes cōmunicant ut ap̄uaricatione emundan-t̄ne hereditatē restituant.

Verba salomonis in canticis canticor. xxi.

Qualit̄ accipienda sint uerba dñi. xx.ij. dicta discipulis in cena sua de code m̄tio.

Verba dauid ad eandē rē. xx.ij.

Quod sacramentū illud om̄s sor- xx.ij. des emundans usq; ad nouissimū hominē colendū ē. Misteria.

h̄c uerba dauid de code. xx.v.

Quare in sacramento altaris pa- xx.v. nis offeratur. Offerat.

Verba moysi ad eandē rē. xx.vij.

Quare uinū in sacrificio altaris xx.vij.

Verba de canticis ad idē. xxviii.

Quare in sacramento altaris aqua. xxx. uino int̄ eē debet.

Verba sapientie. Mundicie. xxxi.
h̄c de libro sapientie. xxxij.

Quod adā ante peccatū mun- xxx.ij. dū sanguinē habuit. p̄ puaricationē sparsit eū in fetore in q̄d corpus et sanguinē xp̄i accipientes. multa dulcedine uiuificantur. Exerceat.

Verba salomonis de eadē rē. xxx.v.

Quod ad inuocationē sacer- xxx.vi. dotis in altari sacramentū corporis et sanguis xp̄i p̄ficiat.

Quod d̄s in om̄i creatura po- xxx.vij. testat̄ & fortitudinē uoluntatis sue scdm̄ q̄d sibi placet.

Quod a p̄ma hora diei usq; xxx.vij. ad nonā officiū misse p̄necessitate tēporis exerceri potest.

Quod oīs ieiunū cōmunicare. xxxviii. debent exceptis his qui in opp̄mione mortis positi s̄. q̄d diabolus sine suggestione. xl.

- 40^u
- ad terrā cecidit homo ante q̄a fragilis suadente diabolo cecidit ad dō subleuatus ē.
- xl. i. Quod in peccatione corporis et sanguinis dñi. n̄ q̄ntas s; sc̄i tas consideranda ē. re.
- xl. ii. Cōparatio de manna ad eandē qd̄ n̄ ē dubitandū q̄n uerum corpus et uerus sanguis xpi sit in altari.
- xl. iii. Quod in sacramento altaris tria offerenda s; in noīe trinitatis. panis uinū et aqua.
- xl. v. Quod sacerdos qui p̄negle gemia. aut p̄infidelitate. aut p̄obliuione. hec tria in sacramē to altaris offerre negligere. grauit̄ puniendus est. re.
- xl. vi. Qualit̄ corpus et sanguis xpi p̄p̄to distribuāt. re.
- xl. vii. Quod sacerdos his induit̄ et his uerbis in sacramento altaris utat̄. sc̄dm̄ qd̄ antiqui pat̄r̄s institui.
- xl. viii. Verba dñi ad negligēte sacer qd̄ sacerdos q̄ has epulas in al tari offerre. ab altari ieiun̄ his epulis n̄ recedat.
- xl. ix. Quod sacerdos in sacramento al taris. multis et magnis sermo nib; n̄ utat̄. s; sc̄dm̄ ordinatiōe priorū magistrorū. re.
- li. De quinq; modis cōmunicantiū
- li. i. De his qui in corpore lucidi. et in anima ignei s;.
- li. ii. De his qui in corpore pallidi et in anima tenebrosi uident̄.
- li. iii. De his q̄ in corpore hirsuti. et
- in anima multa immundicia for De his q̄ in corpore acutissimis spinis circūdant̄. et in anima lep si apparent.
- li. vi. De his q̄ in corpore sanguinei. et in anima uelut putidū cada uer frudi uident̄.
- li. vii. De his q̄ ad hoc sacramētū deuo ta m̄te et pura fide. et de his q̄ conuicio corde et uacillante animo accedunt.
- li. viii. Verba apl̄i.
- li. ix. Quod sacramētū altaris mag na diligentia et sollicitudine. a sacerdote et apl̄o tractandū et custodiendū ē.
- li. x. Quod mystica secreta corporis et sanguinis dñi. seruanda n̄ s;.
- li. xi. Quod ministri eccl̄e q̄ n̄ postu s; p̄deuia intant̄. q̄a amari et illusores et impoliti lapides s; diabolū et baal intant̄. et xpm̄ uulnerare cōtendunt q̄si cru cifixores. re.
- li. xii. Quod idē ministri eccl̄e omni diligentia exemplo apl̄orū de beat castitatē seruare. et ab omī mundicia se abstinere.
- li. xiii. Verba moysi ad eandē rē. qd̄ sacerdos duas copulas n̄ de
- li. xiv. Quomodo diabolus sit sacerdos sacerdotū.
- li. xv. Verba legis de eodē.
- li. xvi. Verba euāḡlii ad idē.
- li. xvii. Verba apl̄i ad eandē rē.
- li. xviii. Ite paulus de eodē.
- li. xix. De trib; generib; eunuchorū.

Qui se n̄ ualet continere. nec sacerdos aut. alius minister. sacerdos talis ulla occasione fiat.

qua causa ante conjugatis sed postea ab inuicē separatis. concessū ē in primum a ecclesia ad sa-cerdotiū accedere. et q̄re modo n̄ cedatur.

Similitudo regis de eadē re.
q̄d in maturi & n̄ consecrata ec-clesia n̄ suscipiant. et uiri plures appetere n̄ p̄sumat.

Quod de omni p̄plo xp̄iani noīs. sacerdotes boni ingeni. et uiri lis animi. integritatē membroꝝ habentes. eligendi s̄. q̄d femine ad officiū altaris n̄ debent accedere.

Quod uir femineo uestitur nūl-lo modo induat. nec femina uirili. nisi aliqua magna necessitate coacti.

Quod fornicatores mulierū & incomparietate fornicationis aut in alius aut in semetipsis. tā mulieres quā uiri se contami-nantes. et p̄corū fornicatores. dictissime iudicat d̄s.

Depollutione que dormientib.
Verba moysi de eodē.
qui foris in libidine ardet. ar-dori suo nullū incendiū sub ministrat.

Quod diuersis uicis grauat. ad midiam di in confione fugiat.

Quod remediū purgatio.

nus et in amiq̄s partib. diu p̄fi-guratiū est.

Qui peccata sua confiteri recu-sat seipsū decipit.

Quod in hora mortis si sacerdos n̄ adē alii homini homo confi-teat in p̄sentia elem̄toꝝ.

q̄d nemo p̄p̄t pondus peccatoꝝ suoꝝ desperet.

De libro sapientie.

q̄d ex p̄ elemosinā peccata et p̄ corporale satisfactiōe deleri

de libro sapientie.

q̄d elem̄ta lacus uoluptatū hominū sunt.

Qui elemosinā dant. et q̄ eam suscipiunt. hoc inuanū n̄

Quod pauperes et diuites et ho-nore potestatis appetentes. unusq̄sq. scdm̄ intentionē suā remuneratus.

Quod sacerdotes exorando et coercendo moneant p̄p̄m de confessione.

Quod sacerdotes auctoritatē magistri p̄plo n̄ ostendentes. n̄ sacerdotes s̄. lupi uocantē.

q̄d elem̄ta corā dō ululant sup̄ iniquitatē sacerdotū. et celi iniquitatē eoꝝ suscipiunt.

Quod sacerdotes habent potestatē ligandi et soluendi.

Verba euḡli de eodē.

q̄d nullus absq. culpabili culpa ligandus est.

Quod si aliquis innocens con-structus fuerit. p̄p̄t honore lxv.

lxv.

lxv.

lxv.

lxv.

lxv.

lxv.

lxv.

lxv.

lxv.

lxv.

lxv.

lxv.

lxv.

lxv.

lxv.

- di solutionē querere debet.
- c. Qd rebelles ad xpm reuera no lent. et obdurati nullā miam querentes. antiquū serpentē imitantur.
- c. y. Verba diaboli.
- c. 33. Qd homines de tenebrositate infidelitatis. p incarnationē fi lii dī educti sunt. Possunt.
- Capla septime uisionis. ii. partis. xiii. Qualit̃ diabolus in igneis p sua sionib. diuersa genera hominū.
sp̃taliū et scl̃ariū. multimodis tēptationib. aggredit̃.
- Qd dī om̃a iuste dispensans. et iniusticia dona sp̃s scī declarans. fideles hoīes in bonis opib. con fortat ut a diabolo superari n̄.
- ii. De multitudine fidelium et de diuina lege corā ipsis extensa.
- iii. Quod deceptiones diaboli. hominib. in uia huius mundi parent.
- iiii. Quod diabolus diuinas et de licias hoīb. apte et fraudulenti offert quas qui concupiscit.
- v. Quod quidā diabolicā psua sionē uirili et resistentes abi ciunt. quidā tepide uiuentes ei consentiunt.
- vii. Verba ezechielis. de eadē re.
Qd diabolus om̃i nequicia ple nis ueneno multiformis artis sue. quinq. sensus hominū de cipere laborat.
- viii. Quod supbia diaboli incarna tione filii dī delecta ē.
- ix. De oculis et aurib. & narib. ser pentis quid significent.
- x. De manib. et pedib. & cauda ei quid significent.
- xv. Quod potestas omnipotens dī. fortitudinē diaboli ita & con truit qd nequicia sua scdm uoluntatē suā exercere n̄ potē.
- xvi. Quod diabolus in quatuor par tib. mundi incendiū inique p suasionis. in om̃e genus diuersorū hominū emittit.
- xvii. Verba dauid de eodē.
- xviii. Qualit̃ diabolus in igneis p sua sionib. diuersa genera hominū.
sp̃taliū et scl̃ariū. multimodis
tēptationib. aggredit̃.
- xix. De turb. acieb. cor. S hominū.
- xx. De tēptatione scl̃ariū. Signif.
- xxi. De sex modis tēptationū sp̃taliū.
- xxii. De n̄ baptizatis. Significet.
- xxiii. De sanguis oris ei et de fumo pec toris & de humore subor qd signif.
- xxiv. De turbine umbilici. et de in mundicia ranarū uentris ei qd.
- xxv. Qd diabolus stultos homines p iniquā incredulitatē exagnat. uerū ex putantes. qd ipse eis fal laxer. demonstrat.
- xxvi. Quod heretici uitandi et ab ecclā ciciendi s̄ qd diaboli p dō colunt & s̄ uiscera diaboli. et p currentis germ̃ filii p dmonis.
- xxvii. Quod adiutoriū dī contēpnen tes. grā dī deserit. querentib. aū midit̃ subuenit.
- xxviii. Verba salomonis de eodē.
- xxix. Qd ueri cultores dī q̃ toto annu su trena conculant. anti quū serpentē fori c̃rmoe deiciunt.

Homo n̄ calens in forma fortū leonū nec docta ex spiratione illoꝝ s; manens in mol lucie fragilis costē inbuta misti co spiramine. uidi q̄si lucidissi mū ignē in cōphensibile. in ex tinguibile. totū uiuentē. totūq; uitā existentē. in se autē flāmā aerei coloris habentē. quē leni flatu ardentē flagrabat. et quē eide lucido igni ita inseparabilē inerat. ut hoīe uiscera s; tē uidi qđ eadē flāma fulminans incan dunt. tē ecce obscurus aer et ro tundus multēq; magnitudinis repente exortus ē. sup quē ipsa flāma quosdā ictus dedit. toti ens ab eo scintilla educens. donec ide aer ad pfectū pductus ē. ita celū & tēra resplendens plena in fluminatione. Deinde cū eadē flā ma in igne & ardore illo exten dit. se ad parua glēbā limose tē iacentē in fundo eidē aeris. cā ca lesciens ita qđ caro et sanguis effecta ē. eāq; aspirans ita quod uiuens homo creata ē. Quo facto.

ille lucidus ignis p̄buit p̄eandē flāmā leni flatu ardentē flagran tē ipsi hoī candidissimū florē pendentē in eadē flāma. ut ros pendet in gramine. cui odorē ide homo narib; quidē sensit. s; gustū et ore n̄ pcepit nec manib; cū te tigit. ita uidelicet se auertens atq; cadens in densissimas tene bras. de quib; se erigere n̄ ualuit.
Tenebre autē ille in eodē aere ma gis ac magis se dilatando creuerūt.
Tunc tres magne stelle in fulgo re suo sibi coherentes in eisdē te nebris apparuerūt. et post eas alię multę tā parue quā magne plu rimo splendore fulgentes. ac deinde quedā maxima stella mura claritate radians. et fulgo rē suū ad p̄dictā flāmā dirigens.
Sed & intra quidā fulgor uelut auroꝝa aparuit. cui eadē flāma mirabilē infusa ē. n̄ tam ap̄sa to lucido igne separata. Et sic in eodē fulgore ipsius auroꝝe maxima uoluntas accensa est.
Cūq; eandē ascensionē uolunta tis huius diligenti considerare uellē in eadē uisione secretū si gillū in oppositū ē. audiuiq; uocē ex alto in dicentē. De hoc misterio n̄ poteris quicquā am plius uidere. n̄ ut ubi p̄p̄t mira culū credendi concedit. Vidiq; de eodē fulgore p̄fate auroꝝe serenissimū hominē egredientē. qui claritatē suā ad p̄dictas te 42 nebras effundens. ita ab eis reuer-beratus ē qđ in ruborē sanguinis et in albedinē palloris uer-sus. tanta formidine easdē tenebras repelleret. qđ ille homo qui in eis iacebat p̄ eū tactus ap-parens fulgeret. atq; ita erectus exiret. Et sic idē seren⁹ homo qđ de p̄dicta aurora egressus ē. in tanta claritate apparens ultra quā humana lingua effari pos-sit. in acutissimā altitudinē in-numerabilis gl̄ie extendit. ubi in plenitudine magnifice fruc-tuosus et odoris mirifice radiabat. Et audiui exp̄fatio in-uent⁹ igne uocē dicentē m̄.

 O que es misera t̄ra et innoīe femineo indocta de ulla doctrina carnaliū magistrorū scilicet legere literas p̄intelligentiam philosophorū. s; tantū tacta lūmine meo qđ tangit te interī cū incendio ut ardens sol. clama-et enarra ac scribe hec misteria mea que uides et audis in mistica uisione. Noli ḡcē timida. s; dic ea que intelligis in sp̄m quēadmodū ea loquor p̄te. quatinus illi uerecundia ha-beant qui p̄pto meo deberent rectitudinē ostendere s; de pe-culantia morū suorū recusant iusticiā apte dicere quā nouerunt. nolentes se abstrahere de malis desideriis suis. que illis ita adherent qđ si sunt magistri eorū faciemus eos fugere a facie dñi. ita ut erubescant loq̄ ueritatē. Unde opus illa animo que interī es docta de mystico spiramine. quāuis conculcata sis purile formā p̄pt̄ p̄uarica-tionē tue tamē die igneū opus qđ tibi demonstrat certissima ostensione. Iuuenis enī d̄s qđ cunc-ta puerbū suū creauit. p̄ idē uerbū incarnatū miserā humanā creaturā que se dimerferat in tenebras. ad fidele saluatiōē reduxit. Quid ē hoc. Nā ille uicidissimus ignis que uides de signat om̄item et uiuentē dñm qui in clarissima serenitate sua nūquā ulla iniquitate obfus-catus ē. incōphensibilis manens quia nulla diuisione potest di-uidi. aut initio aut fine aut ul-la semilla sciencie creature sue cōphendi sicim ē. et inextinguibilis existens. quō ipse ē illa plenitudo quā nūquā ullus finis tetigit. ac totus uiuens. qđ nulla om̄ino res ipsi absconsa ē quā nesciat. totusq; una ex-istens. quō om̄e qđ uiuit ab ipso uiuere sumit. scđm qđ iob p̄ me inspiratus ostendit dicens.

Quis ignorat. qđ om̄a hec manus dñi fecerit. Incūsus manu anima oīs uiuentis. et sp̄s uniuersę carnis hoīs. Qđ ē hoc.
 Nulla creatura tā hebes ē in natura sua qđ uicissitudinē pleni-

43 tudinis sue nullis causis ignoret. in quib. fructuosa consistit. Quo modo. Celi habet lucē lux aerē. aer uolantia. & ^{terra} uiriditas tē uiriditas fructū. fructus ani malia. que omnia testant. qd ea po sunt fortissima manus idē max ima potencia dñatoris cunctō. qui omnia impossibilitate uirtu tis sue na opatus ē qd eis nihil de ē inuisib. suis. Et in omni poten cia eidē fabricatoris ē motio cunctō. uiuentiū & nā mūrens ut pecora querentiū. nec ratio nalitatem inspirationis dī habent tū. et suscitatio eor. q humanā carnē inhabitant. in quib. ratio nalitas discretio. et sapientia ē.
Quomodo. An una circū mūre nis causis. laborans in multis ui cissitudinib. scdm qd carnales mores expostulant. Sp̄s ū erigit se induob. modis. uidelicet suspi riū gemitū. et desideriū ad dñm habens. aut dñm aut regnū. aut optionē in diuersis rebus quasi in pcepto querens. quia discretionē in rationalitate habet. Vnde etiā homo simili tudine celi & tē cominet in se.
Quomodo. Ipse habet circū.
in quo apparet pspicuas spi raculū et rationalitas. uelut in celo notant luminaria aer et uolantia. habens etiā recep taculū. in q notat humilitas. germinatio. ac parturitio. sic uirtus apparet uiriditas. fructua tio. et animalia. Quid ē hoc. O ho tu totū es in omni creatura. et ob uisceris creatoris tui. & subiectio tua obedi ei. sic ei constitui ē.

& tu pcepta illi transgredieris.
Sed uides qd idē ignis in se flāmā aeris coloris habet. que leni flati ardent flagrat. et que eidē lucido igni ita in se parabiliter in ē. ut in hoīe uiscera sunt. qd ē in patre ante tēpora constituit creaturam infinitū uer bū. qd in ardore carnis sub de cursu labentū tēporū mirabi liter sine sordē et grauedine peccati puriditate sua uirtus sp̄s sē in auroa beatę uirginis ut erat incarnandū. ita tam ut sic ante susceptā carnē indiuisi biliter fuit in patre. sic etiā post assumptā humanitatem insepara biliter in eo maneret. quō ut ho nō ē absq. unali tractu inuenire uis cerū. sic a patre nō erat omnino se parandū unicū ei uerbū. Et qre dr uerbū. Quia ut p locale uerbū qd in puluere hoīs tran sitoriū ē. prudenti intelligunt iussa pceptoris. hominib. scien tib. et pudentib. que causa iussio pceptus sit. ita etiā p il locale uerbū qd p inextingui bile unā qua uiuit in eternitate intransitoriū ē. ueracit. cognos cit uis patris dī. uersis creaturis mundi ipsū seminibus. et intelligentibus in ortu quo create s. atq. ut p of ficiale uerbū potestas et honor scit hominis. sic etiā p plenū uer bū scias et bonitas resplendet patris. Quod autē uides quo modo eadē flāma fulminas in candet. hoc ē qd uerbū dī uirtutē suā qsi exardescens ostendit. cū p ipsū omīs creatura suscitata ē et qsi incanduit. cū in aurore et candore uirginitatis incarnatū.

ē. ita qd ex eo stillauerūt omīs uir tutes in agnitione dī cū hō reuē in animarū saluatione. ¶ et obscurus aer et rotundus mul tex. magnitudinis repente ex ortus ē. qui ē instrumētū rerū in obscuritate impfectionis scilicet nōdū illustratū plenitudine crea turarū. et rotundū qā sub mēo p hēnsibili potentia dī ē diuin tate nusquā absente. ipsū tam in maxima potestate dī surgens quasi in ictu oculi in supna uo luntate eleuatū. sup qd ipsa flāma uelit. faber quosdā ictus dedit tociens ab eo semilla eductis donec idē aer ad pfectū pduct ē. ita celū et tēa resplendens ple na institutione. quō excellens uniuersā creaturā supnū uerbū in creatione creaturarū serui tē tenentū. uirtutē formidi nis sue ostendens. ab eo dē instru mento diuersas species creaturarū lucens in mi rabili ortu suscitatiois ipsarū eduxit ut faber formas suas ex ere conpetent facit. usq. dū eadē creature in pulchritudine plem tudinis sue effulserūt. sursum et de orsū decorē et stabilimentū pfecte institutionis habentes. qā sup ōia resplenderūt ab inferiorib. et inferiora a superiorib. Quod autē deinde eadē flāma in igne et ardore illo extendit se ad par uā glebā limose tēa iacentē in fundo eīdē aeris. hoc ē qd creatis alīs creaturis uerbū dī in foru uoluntate patris. et in amore sup ne suauitatis in specit pauperē et fragile materiā mollis et tena cis fragilitatis humanitatis tam malorū quā bonorū peritiorū ho minū. in uno insensibilitatis et pon derositatis sue de tēa. et necdū acuto et uitali flatu excitatā. et eā calefaciens. ita qd caro et sanguis effecta ē. idē in uiridita te calore ei infundens. quō tēa ē carnalis materia hōis. nutriend eā suco suo. sic mā lactat filios suos. eā aspirans ita qd uiuens homo erecta ē. qā ipsā p supnā uirtutē excitauit. atq. in aīa & corpore discernentē hominē mi rabilitē eduxit. Quo facto. il le lucidus ignis p bunt p eandē flāma leni flatu ardentē flagran tē. ipsi hōi candidissimū florē pendentē in ea dē flāma. ut ros pendet in gramine. quō cre ato adā pat̄ q̄ lucidissima sc̄re nitas ē. dedit p̄verbū suū in spū scō ipsi adē dulce p̄ceptū claris sine obedientie ad heremus eide uerbo inhumida uiriditate fru ctuositas. q̄a p̄ide uerbū sua uissimū humor sc̄ntis de patre in spū scō stillante. faciens maxi mū et plurimū fructū. sic pur humor sup̄ grām descendens. illud adaptū germī suscitāt.

 Cui odorē idē homo naribus quidē sensit. s; gustū ei ore n̄ p̄ ceptū. nec manib; eū tenuit. quō ipse p̄ceptū legis cū intelligen tia sapientie quasi narib; ad traxit. s; uim illi inuice am plexionis ore p̄fecte n̄ intro mi sit. nec ope manū in plenitu dine beatitudinis adimpleuit. na uidelicet se auertens atq; cadens in densissimas tenebras. de quib; se erigere n̄ ualuit. q̄a diuino p̄cepto consiliante di abolo dorsū p̄buit corruens in maximos rictus mortis. sic q̄d dñm nec in fide nec in ope requisuit. unde aduersā cog nitionē ei peccatis grauatus surgere n̄ potuit. donec ille aduenit qui patri suo pleni ter sine peccato obediuit. S; tenebre ille in eodē aere ma gis ac magis se dilatando cre uerūt. quō potestas mortis in mundo semp̄ in latitudine ui ciorū augmentata ē. scientia hoīs se inuoluentē in diuersita tē multipliciū uiciorū p̄ horrorē erupentiū et feruentiū peccatorū.

Quod autē tres magnę stelle. viii. in fulgore suo sibi coheren tes in eisdē tenebris apparuerūt & post eas alie multe tā parue q̄m magnę plurimo splendore ful gentes. hec s̄ infiguratione sup ne trinitatis. magna lumina uidelicet abrahā. ysaac & ia cob. tā fidei ope quā carnis coniunctione se inuicē complec tentes. mundi q; tenebras signi ficationib; suis rep̄cipientes. & eos subsequentes alii quā plu rimi p̄phete. scilicet minores & maiores in multis et admiran dis miraculis radiantēs. De inde uero apparet quedā maxima stella mira claritate radians. et fulgorē suū ad p̄ dictā flāmā dirigens ē p̄cipu us p̄pheta scilicet ioh̄s bapu sta. fidelissimo et serenuissimo ope in miraculis coruscans. & in eis uerū uerbū idē uerū dī filiū p̄monstrans. q̄a iniquitatē n̄ cessit. s; in opib; iusticie stren nue & fortit̄ abiecit. Sed q̄d in t̄ra ille fulgor uelut au rora. apparet cui eadē flāmā mirabiliter infusa ē n̄ tam ap tato lucido igne separata. hoc ē q̄d d̄s in loco germinan di magnū splendore rutilan tis luminis plantauit in illū uerbū suū pleno desiderio mittens. n̄ tam ab ipso diuisū s; dedit illud fructuosū fructū. atq; ipsū edux. magnū. fontē. na qđ om̄e fidele guttur gu stans exco ultra sibi n̄ aruit. vnde et sic in eo dē fulgore ip sius aurore maxima uolun tas accensa ē. q̄a in claritate rubentis serennitatis uiriditas magni et antiqui consilii in sa ē. ita qđ om̄s p̄missis legio nes. t̄ anglos hoc in lucidissima felicitate admirare sunt. Sed tu o homo dū eminentiā consi lii huius humano more plenius scire desideras. claustrū occul tationis t̄ opponit. quō secre ta dī n̄ debes plus scrutari. qm̄ p̄p̄t amorē credulorū diuina maiestas uult manifestari.

Quod autē uidet de eodē ful gore p̄fate aurore ho minē egredientē. q̄ claritatē suā ad p̄dictas tenebras effun dens. ita ab eis reuerberat qđ in ruborē sanguinis & in t̄po rē palloris uersus tanta forti tudine easdē tenebras repcu nat qđ ille homo q̄ in eis iacet p̄cū tactus apparens fulgerat atq; ita erectus exeat. hoc de signat dī uerbū incandore in temerate uirginitatis inuola bilis incarnatū. et sine dolore natū. nec tam a patre separatū.
Quomodo. Cū fili dī natus ē in mundo ex matre apparuit in celo in patre. unde & angli mox contremuerūt. & gauisi dulcissimas laudes decantaue runt. Qui sine macula peccati in sclo conuersatus. lucidissimā beatitudinē doctrinē et salua tionis uirtutes infidelitatis emisit. s; ab incredulo p̄plo abiectus atq; ad passionē due tus pulcherrimū sanguinē suū fudit. et caliginē mortis cor porali gustauit. Ex quo dia bolū supans ex inferno electos suos qui in eo de t̄na & p̄stra ti fuerant liberauit. atq; eos tactu redemptionis sue adhere ditatē p̄p̄t p̄ueniēt. exorta s̄ tympanā et cythare om̄sq; cantus musicorū innumerabi lib; ornatū. q̄a hō q̄ in p̄dici one iacuerat iā in beatitudine erectus mortē p̄supnā uirtu tē liberatus euaserat. ut p̄ser uū in cū osee sic locutus sū.

Colligata ē iniquitas effraim. absconditū ē peccatū ei.
Dolores parturientis ueniunt ei. ipse fili n̄ sapiens. Hunc enī n̄ stabit in contritione filiorū. De manu mortis libera bo eos. de morte redimā eos.
Gro mors tua o mors. Gro mor sus tuus inferne. Quid ē hoc.
In pondere ligature colliga ta ē p̄uersitas iniquitatis diabo li. ita ut a zelo dī n̄ meretur q̄ in adū p̄diderūt miseriter rediunt. Quidū in hereditate suā.

45 solui. q̄a nūquā illū in recta ag nitione uidit. sic hi cū aspiciunt qui ipsū fidelit̄ timent. Nā ipse semp̄ eleuat se contra dñm dicens. ego d̄s sū. semp̄ etiā errans sup̄ be nedictū dñi uidelicet p̄p̄t ipsū ē tra dicens nom̄ xp̄ianor̄. Et idō malicia ipsius ita abscondita ē. q̄d nulla medicina reparationis peccatū illi. q̄d inmundissima supbia crudelit̄ commisit. in sal uatione regi dignū sit. Unde & ipse erit in obduratione doloris. sicut parturientis ē in afflictione desolationis. que diffidit q̄d de ap̄tione uulue sue uiuere possit.
Nā hec infelicitas sup̄ eū man bit. q̄d ab beatitudine relictus ē. quia illa filior̄ sapientia fugit ab eo. q̄d in se n̄ reuertit. sic ille in se reuersus ē q̄ ad patrē suū de iniquitate sua redit. Qua p̄pter nūquā stabit cōfident̄ in contri tione illa. qua filii saluationis in sup̄no filio mortē durissime iniquitatis conterit. quā idē cal lidus serpens ebullire fecit. cū primo homini dolositatē quā nesciebat suggessit. S; q̄a idē filii uenientū inmundissime sug gestionis contēpnum. et post salutē suā respiciunt. deserui tūte idolor̄ liberabo eos. que fallaciā habentia in potestate p̄dmonis s̄. et in quib; infide les honorē creatoris sui desti tuunt. se uidelicet in laqueū diaboli inuolucres. et opa sua sedm̄ uoluntatē illi p̄ficiētes. Et idō animas illoꝝ qui me diligunt. et q̄ me colunt. scilicet animas scōꝝ & animas iustor̄ ab infernali pena redimā. quō nullus hominū po terit solui de diabolica ligatu ra. in qua durissima morte p̄p̄t p̄uaricationē p̄ceptor̄ dī cōp̄ hensus ē. nisi in redemptione illius. qui electos suos p̄prio sanguine redempturus ē. ubi ad inuincitōne te omors uicicia. q̄a in quo te uiuere putas hoc tibi extrahā. na q̄d inutile cadauer uocabe ris. quō infortissimis uirib; tu is p̄strata iacebis. sic & illud q̄d ab anima deserit. om̄ino ad inu itū p̄sternit. Nā fons aque ui ue te suffocabit. cū felices aīe p̄nouū hominē q̄ uenenoſe de ceptionis socius n̄ erit. in dīter in sup̄na beatitudine suscitabun tur. Unde etiā ad confusionem tuā ero morsus tuus inferne. cū potestas mea in magna uirtute tibi spolia illa auferet. que frau dulent̄ rapuisti. ita ut & tu iuste despoliata. nūquā deinceps in regia nec plena induciis tuis appartas. s; uulnerib; et feditate p̄strata iacens confusionē tuā in p̄pectuū portabis. Sed ut uides eodē sereno hoīe qui de p̄fata aurora egressus ē. in tanta claritate apparente ultra quā humana lingua effari possit

25.

2

2

2

2

2

45v demonstrat qđ nobilissimū corpus filii dī ex suauissima uirgine natū et in sepulchro p̄ridū iacens ad confirmandū quō tres p̄sone s̄ in una diuinitate p̄tina claritas tēgit na qđ & sp̄m recepit atq; in serenissima immortalitate resurrex̄. quā nul-lus hominū cogitatione aut uerbo explicare poterit. Quē & pat̄ ap̄t uulnerib; celestib; choris ostendit dicens. Hic ē filius m̄s dilectus. quē misi mori p̄p̄lo. Unde supra humanū intellectū innumerabile gaudiū in ipsis exortū ē. quia criminosa obliuio quā d̄s nescie-bat sic de p̄ssa ē qđ rationalitas hōis quē suadente diabolo p̄strata fuerat ad agnitionē dī eleua-ta ē. quō p̄sumā beatitudine homini uia ueritatis ostensa ē. in qua de morte ad uitā educt̄ ē.

xv.

Sed scđm hoc ut filii isrl̄ ex eḡȳpto liberati p̄ quadraginta annos desertū transeun-tes. in trā lac et mel. fluentē p̄uener̄. ita filii dī a morte resurgens p̄ quadraginta dies discipulis suis. cū beatissimis feminis qui p̄ ipsū plorabant et qui eū pleno desiderio uidere desiderabant. se benigne ostendit ad confir-mandū eos. ne dubitarent in fide dicentes. nos n̄ uidim̄ eū. idōq; n̄ possum̄ credere qđ ipse sit sa-lus nr̄a. s̄; frequent̄ manifestauit se illis ad corroborandū ip-fos ne caderent. Quod uero in acutissimā altitudinē innumerabilis gl̄e tendit. ubi in plenitu-dine magnifice fructuositas et odoris mirifice radiat. hoc ē qđ idē filiū dī ascendit ad pat̄. qui una cū eodē filio et sp̄u scō acutissima et p̄cellentissima al-tudo inenarrabilis gaudiū et le-ticie ē. ubi idē filiū in habundantia serenissime sc̄itatis et beatitudinis fidelib; suis gl̄ose apparet. qui ipsū puro et simplici corde uerū d̄m & hominē credunt.

Nā etiā tunc noua sponsa eīdē agni fundata ē diuersis ornam̄- tis. quib; ornanda ē in om̄i ge-nere uirtutū fortissimi certami-nis toti fidelis p̄p̄li. qui contra callidū serpentē pugnatū s̄. s̄; qui uigilantib; oculis uidet et sonantib; aurib; audit. his m̄sticis uerbis meis osculū amplexionis p̄beat. quē de me ui-uente emanant.

Secda uisio tale partis.

11. uisio. ij. partis.

S
E
M
V

serenissimā lucē & in ipsa saphiri nicoloris spēm hoīs. que tota suauissimo rutilante igne fla grabat. Et illa serena lux pfudit totū illū rutilantē ignē. & ille rutilans ignis totā illā serenā lucē. ac eadē serena lux & idē ru tilans ignis totā speciē eīdē hoīs. ita lum̄ unū in una ui possibili tatis existentes. Et iterū audiui Hic ē sensus mysterioꝝ dī. ut dis cretē cernat & intelligat. que sit plenitudo illa que nūquā uisa ē in ortu. et in qua nullus defectus ē illi acutē fortitudini que plantauit om̄s riuulos for tū. Nā si dñs uacuuſ eēt. p̄prie uiriditatis sue. qđ tunc eēt op̄ illī. Videlicet uanū. Idōq. imple no ope cernit. qui fabricator sit.

Qua p̄p̄t uidet serenissimā lu cē que sine macula illusi onis defectionis. ac fallacie de signat patrē. Et in ipsa saphiri ni coloris speciē hoīs. que sine macula obdurationis inuidie et iniquitatis declarat filiū. ante tēpora scđm diuinitatē a patrē genitū. s. post in tēpore scđm hu manitatē in mundo incarnatū. que tota suauissimo rutilante igne flagrat. que ignis sine ma cula ariditatis. mortalitatis atq. tenebrositatis demonstrat sp̄m scđm. de quo idē unigenitus dī scđm carnē conceptus. & de uir gine tēporalit̄ natus lum̄ uere claritatis mundo infudit. S. qđ illa serena lux pfundit totū il lū rutilantē ignē. & ille rutilans ignis totā illā serenā lucē. ac eadē serena lux et idē rutilans ignis totā speciē eīdē hoīs. ita lum̄ unū in una ui possibilitatis existen tes. hoc ē qđ pat̄ qđ iustissima eq̄ tas s. sine filio nec sine spū scō ē. et sp̄s sc̄s qđ accensor fidelū cor diū s. n̄ sine filio ē. & fili⁹ qđ plen tudo fructuositatis s. n̄ sine pa tre nec sine spū scō ē. in maiesta te diuinitatis inseparabilis s. quō pat̄ n̄ ē sine filio. nec fili⁹ si ne patre. nec pat̄ nec fili⁹ sine spū scō. nec sp̄s sc̄s sine ipsis. na he tres p̄sonę d̄s unus in una et integra diuinitate maiestatis existentes. et unitas diuinitatis in eis dē trib. p̄sonis inseparabi lis uigens. quia diuinitas scin di n̄ potest. qm̄ ipsa absq. ulla mutabilitate inuolabilis sc̄p manet. S. pat̄ declarat p̄ filiū. fili⁹ portū creaturarū. et sp̄s sc̄s

III

III.

q'da e' hoc

peunde filiū incarnatū. Quomō.
Pāt ē q' ante sēla genuit filiū fili' p quē oīa a patre facta s' in initio cre aturarū. et sps sēs q' in specie colū be apparuit in baptismo eīdē filiū dī sub fine tēporū. Vnde nūquā obliuiscat' homo me solū dīm in his trib' psonis inuocare. quia eas ppter ostendi hominū ut homo tanto acut' in amore meo ardeat. cū ppter amorē eī mi si filiū meū in mundū. quē admo dū iohs dilectus mīs ptestat' dices. in hoc apparuit caritas dī in no bis. quō filiū suū unigenitū mi sit d's in mundū ut uiuam' p'ci.
In hoc ē caritas. n' q'si nos dilexerī mus dīm. s; quō ipse prior dilexit nos. et misit filiū suū p p'mationē p peccatis nrīs. Quia in hoc q'd d's dilex' nos. alia salus exorta ē quā illa quā t' in p'mo ortu habuim'. cū heredes innocentie et scētans fuimus. quō sup'n' pāt ostendit caritatē suā in piculis nrīs. ubi constituti eramus in penis. uide licet uerbū suū p'natis hominū solū in plena scītate mittens. p sup nā uirtutē in tenebras sēlō. ubi idē uerbū p'fecit omīa bona. illos ad unā p'dulcedinē suā reducēs. qui p inmundiciā p'uaricationis deiecti erant nec in scītate quā p'diderant redire ualebant. Qd ē hoc. Nā p ipsū fontē uitę mātina dilectio amplexionis dī uenit. que nos ad unā enutrit. et que in piculis auxiliatrix nostra ē. que ē in p'fundissima et suauissima caritas nos ad penitentiā instru ens. Quomodo. D's magni opis sui atq; p'ciosissime sue margarite scilicet hōis quē de limo t're for mauit et cui sp'nculū uitę in spi rauit. in d'nter recordatus ē. Quo modo. Ipse instrux' unā in peni tentia que nūquā deficiet in ef ficacia. quia callidus serpens de cepit hominē p sup'ba suasionē.

s; d's deiecit illū in penitencia que humilitatē ostendit. quā di abolus nesciuit nec fecit. quō ad rectā uia assurgere ignora uit. Unde ista saluatio caritatis nē orta de nobis. ita q'd nec no uimus nec ualuum' diligere dīm in saluatione. s; q'a ipse creator et dīs omniū ita dilex' pplm suū. q'd ppter saluationē eī misit filiū suū principē et saluatōrē fidelīū. qui uulnera nrā lauit & t'xit. unde etiā de illo dulcis sima materia sudauit. de qua omīa bona saluationis fluunt.
Qua ppter et tu o homo intellige. quia dīm nulla aduersitas mu tabilitatis tanget. Nā pāt ē pāt. fili' ē fili'. sps sēs ē sps sēs. he tres psone in unitate diuinitatis in diuisibilit' uidelicet uigentes.
Quomodo. Tres uires in lapi de. & tres in flama. & tres in uer bo s'. Quomodo. In lapide ē hu mida uiriditas. & palpabilis cō

47 p̄hensio. atq. rutilans ignis. Sed humida uiriditate habet ne dis soluat̄ cōminuat̄. palpabile ū cōphensione ut habitatione et defensione exhibeat. rutilantē autē ignē ut confoueat & con solidet adduriciā suā. Ipsa autē humida uiriditas significat pa trē q̄ nūquā arescit nec finit̄ in sua uirtute. et palpabilis cōphēn sio designat filiū q̄ natus ex uir gine tangi & cōphēndi potuit.
 atq. rutilans ignis significat sp̄m sc̄m qui ē accensor et illumi nator cordiū fideiū hominū.
 Quid ē hoc. Sic homo qui in cor pore suo frequentē tangit hu mida uiriditatē lapidis exin firmando debilitat. sic et homo q̄ p̄ instabilitatē cogna tionū suarū temere uult patrē inuerti. perit infide. Et ut in palpabili cōphensione lapidis faciunt hoīes habitationē suā se p̄ eū defendentes ab hostib; ita & filiū dī q̄ ē uerus lapis an gularis. ē habitatio fidelis ppli cū p̄gens a malignis sp̄itib; S; & sic rutilans ignis illuminat tenebrosa conburens ea que teugent. sic et sp̄s sc̄s fugat in fidelitatē auferens omnē rubi ginē iniquitatis. Sic quomodo he tres uires s̄ in uno lapide. ita & uera trinitas ē in uera unitate. itē sic flama in uno ardore tres uires habet. sic & unus d̄s in trīb; p̄sonis ē. Quomodo. flama enī splendida claritate & purpureo uirore ac igneo ardore consistit.

 S; splendida claritatē habet ut luceat. et purpureū uirore ut iugeat. atq. igneū ardore ut ar deat. Unde in splendida clarna te patrē considera. que p̄ma pietate claritatē suā fidelibus suis expandit. & in purpureo uirore q̄ huius cause in ē in qua eadē flama uirtutē suā ostendit. filiū intellige q̄ ex uirgine cor pus assūpsit in quo diuinitas mirabilia sua declarauit. ac in igneo ardore sp̄m sc̄m p̄spice qui m̄tes credentiū ardorē infun dit. S; ubi nec splendida clarnas. nec purpureus uirore. nec igneus ardor ē. ibi nec flama cernit̄. sic ubi nec pater nec filius. nec sp̄s sc̄s co lit̄. ibi nec d̄s digne uenerat̄. Ergo sic in una flama he tres uires cernunt̄. sic in unitate diuinita tis tres p̄sone intelligende s̄. ita etiā ut tres cause in uerbo notande s̄. sic & trinitas in unitate diuinitatis conside randa ē. Quomodo. In uerbo so nus. uirtus. et flat̄ ē. S; sonū ha bet ut audiat̄. uirtutē ut intel ligat̄. flatū ut cōpleat̄. In sono autē nota patrē q̄ in enarrabili potestate om̄a p̄palat. in uirtute filiū q̄ mirabilit̄ ex patre genit̄ ē. in flatu ū sp̄m sc̄m q̄ sua uirtute ardet in ipsis. Ubi ū sonū n̄ audit̄

515.

470 ibi nec uirtus opat̃. nec flatus de uat̃. unde et nec ibi uerbū intelli gitur. quia enā pat̃ fili. & sp̃s sc̃s. n̄ s̄ a se diuisi s̄. suū opus una num̃t opant̃. Unde sic he tres cause in uerbo uno s̄. ita enā sup na trinitas in supna unitate ē.
Itaq. sic in lapide n̄ ē. nec opat̃ humida uiriditas sine palpabi li cōphensione. nec sine rutilante igne. nec palpabilis cōphensio si ne humida uiriditate. nec sine rutilante nec igne rutilans ignis sine humida uiriditate. nec sine palpabili cōphensione. & ut in flāma n̄ ē. nec opat̃ splendida claritas sine purpureo uirore. nec sine igneo ardore. nec purpure us uiror. sine splendida claritate. nec sine igneo ardore. nec igneus ardor. sine splendida claritate nec sine purpureo uirore. et sic in uerbo n̄ ē. nec opat̃ sonus sine uirtute. nec sine flatu. nec uirtus sine sono nec sine uirtute. s̄. in diuisibilit̃ in ope suo sibi coad herentes s̄. ita enā he tres p̃sone uere trinitatis inseparabilit̃ in maiestate diuinitatis uigent. nec a se diuidunt̃. Sic d̃m unū in trib. p̃sonis o ho intellige. s̄. tu in stulticia m̃tis tue putas d̃m tā in potentē ēē. q̃d n̄ sit ei possi bile in trib. p̃sonis ueracit̃ uige re. s̄. tantū in una tepide cōsistere.
Quid ē hoc. d̃s aut̃ in trib. p̃sonis uerus d̃s. primus et nouissimus.

Sed & pat̃ n̄ ē sine filio. nec fi lius sine sp̃u sc̃o. nec sp̃s sc̃s ē sine ipsis. quō hec tres p̃sone in separabiles in unitate diuinita tis s̄. Quomodo. uerbū resonat ex ore hoīs. s̄. n̄ os sine uerbo. nec uerbū sine uita. Et ubi manet uerbū. In hoīe. Et unde exiit. De hoīe. Quomodo. uerū uenit hoīe.
Sic ē fili in patre. quē pat̃ p̃ salute hominū in tenebrosa t̃ra misit. de sp̃u sc̃o in uirgine conceptū.
Qui filius ut ē unigenitus indi uinitate. ita ē unigenitus in uir ginitate. et sic ē unicus patris. ita ē & unicus matris. quia ut pat̃ illū unū ante tēpora genuit. sic & uirgo mat̃ genuit in tēpore eundē solū quō uirgo mansit post partū. Unde o homo intelli ge in his trib. p̃sonis d̃m tuū q̃ te creauit in fortitudine diuini tatis sue. et q̃ te redemit ap̃ d̃mo ne. Noli ergo obliuisci creatoris tui. sic salomon. t̃ p̃suadet. ut scriptū ē. Memento creatoris tui in dieb. iuuentutis tue ante quā ueniat tēpus afflictionis. et appropinquent anni de quib. dicas. n̄ m̃ placent. Quid ē hoc.
In intellectuali sensu tuo recor dare illi qui te cōstituit. scilicet cū uelut in dieb. false cōfidentie tue putas t̃ possibile ēē ut sc̃dm desideriū tuū uadas. te uidelicet deuans in alnū. & te p̃iciens in p̃ fundū. ac in p̃sp̃itate stans. et in eruna cadens. Na uiuificatio que int e. semp studet ut pfici atur. usq. ad tempus illud du ple na appareat. Quomodo. Infans apmo ortu suo usq. ad plenā fla tūā ascendit. et deinde in pfect ta etate manet. relinquens lasci uiā mūs que instuticia morū ē.

s. tantū cū magnis laborib. solli cite p uider. qd sibi in reb. suis cōsi derandū sit. qd tunc n fecit cū instuticia puericie fuit. Sic fide lis homo faciat. Infanciā morū relinquat et ad plenitudinē uirutū ascendat. na infortu dine carū p seuerans. scilicet ex tollentiā cupiditatis sue dese rens que instuticia uicior pal pitat. s. in angustia sollicitudi nū meditat. quid sibi uile sit. cū prius ad infantiā morū se pue rilit declinauit. Unde o homo sic amplectere dñm tuū in lumine uigoris tui. prius quā ueniat hora purgationis opū tuor cū omā manifestabunt. nec quic quā neglectū relinquet ubi etiā accurrit tēpora que integra te sua n deficient de quib. in humano sensu tuo sub murmu ras dicens. n m placent iste uo lubilitates. quas n intelligo utrū in pspitate aut in calūnia sunt. quia humana mens semp in hoc dubia ē. qm dū bona opat. an gustia habet utrū dō placeat ann. et dū mala ppetrat de sa lute remissionis formidat. S. q uigilantib. oculis uidet & so nantib. aurib. audit hic misti cis uerbis meis osculū amplexi onis pbeat. que de me uiuente emanant. iii. visio. ii. partis.

*Post hec
uidi*

qsi mulie
bre ima ginē tan te magnitudinis ut magna ciuitas ē. ha bente caput muro or nati coronatū et bra chia de quib. splendor uelut manice pendeant a ce lo usq. ad terrā radians. Vener autē ei erat unmodū re^{ti} pfo ratus multas foraminib. in qb. maxima multitudo hominū discurrebat. Crura ū et pedes n habeat. s. tantū sup uentrē suū ante altare qd ē ante oeu los dī stans. ipsū expansis ma nib. circūplectebat. & oculis suis p omne celū acutissime uidebat. S. nulla uestimēta ei considerare poterā. n qd luci dissima serenitate fulgens multo splendore circūdata fuerat in pectore ei uelut auro ra rubeo fulgore rutilante. ubi multū in genere musicor audiri de ipsa qsi aurora

48^o

ualde rutilans decantari. Et eadē imago expandit splendo rē suū uelut uestimētū dicens.
 Me oportet concipere & parere.
 Et mox accurrit ei ut fulgur multitudo anglō gradus & se des in ea hominib; facientū. p quos eadē imago p ficienda erat. Deinde uidi mgros in famēs iuxta trā in aere q̄si pis ces in aqua p gentes. & uentrē eadē imaginis in foraminib; ū pforata erat intames. At illa ingemunt sursum eos ad caput suū trahens. ubi ad os ei exierūt. ipsa tam integra pmanens. Et ecce illa serena lux. & in ipsa species hoīs tota rutilans igne flagrans sedm uisionē quā prius uiderā iterū in apparuit. et singulis ex nigerrimā cūte abstrahens. ac extra uia easdē cūtes piciens. sin gulos illoꝝ candidissima ueste induit ac eis serenissimā lucē apert singulis ex dicens. Exue uestitutē in iusticie. induens nouitatē scētatis. Reserata ē enī tibi ianua hereditatis tue. Con sidera q̄ quomodo doctus sis. ut cognoscat patrē tuū. quē con fessus es. Ego suscepi te. & tu con fessus es me. Nunc igit respice duas semitas. unā ad orientē. & alterā ad aquilonē. Si ergo in teriorib; oculis tuis diligēt inspexeris me ut in fide doct es. suscipiā te in regno meo. Et sime recte dilexeris. faciā q̄ deūq; uolueris. Si autē me despexeris. te auertens a me. uidelicet retro respi cients. nec me scire aut intelligere uolens. cū te sordidū in peccatis in pura penitencia reuoco. & tu tam addiabolū recurris. q̄si pat̄ tuus ille sit. tunc suscipiet te p̄dicio. quia sedm opa tua iudicaberis. quō cū bonū dederi tibi cognosce re me nolueris. Infantes autē qui uentrē p̄dicte imaginis transie rāt ambulabant. Et illa benignis sime eos intuens. tristi uoce dice bat. Isti filii mei rursū reuertent in puluere. Multos tam concipio et pario q̄ me matrē suā diuersis tēpestatib; fatigant & opprimunt. uidelicet me impugnantes in he reticis et scismaticis ac in iulib; plus. in raptorib; & homicidis in adulteris. ac fornicatorib; atq; in aliis his similib; errorib; s; pluri mi de istis resurgunt in uera pe nitencia ad unā etnā. & plurimi cadunt in falsa obduratione. ad etnā mortē. Et iterū audiui uocē de celo dicentē in. Plena ēstructio uiuentiū animarū que constru tur in celis uiuis ex lapidib; or nata in immenso decore uirtutū in filiis suis quos cōplectit tan quā maxima ciuitas plurimā turbā pplōꝝ. & ut latissimū rete maximā multitudinē pisciū in supnis uirtutib; decemissime floret. sedm q̄ d uiget opus si

"Istos ceciderunt."

49 Quod dicitur hominum in nomine christiano. unde non uides quasi muliebrem ^{primi.} imaginem tantae magnitudinis ut magna ciuitas est. que designat sponsam filii mei. que sepe gignit filios suos in regeneratio-ne spiritus et aque. cum ea fortissimus phator posuit in latitudine uir-tutum. comprehendere et perficere plu-rimam turbam in electis suis. quomodo nullus hostis eam preualet expugnare in contraria impugnatione. a se infidelitate expellente. et se fideliter expandente. ita quod immortali seculo secundum hoc intelligitur quod unusquisque fidelium prebet exemplum proximo suo. quod ipsi plurimas uirtutes operantur in celestibus. Sicut cum unusquisque iustorum peruenit ad filios lucis. tunc in ipsis apparbit. opus bonum quod operatur. quod in mor-talitate cineris cognosci non potest. quomodo hic in umbra iniquitudi-nis obscuratum est. Et habet ca. 11. put miro ornatu coronatum. quia ipsa in ortu suo cum suscitata est in sanguine agni decem in apostolis et martyribus. decorata est uidelicet desponsata filio meo. quomodo in cru-ore ipsius se fideliter formauit. in fidele edificatione sanctarum animarum. Qua propter et brachia habet. ^{iii.} de quibus splendor uelut manice descendit a celo usque ad terram radianis. quod est operatio fortitudinis in sacerdotibus. qui in puritate cor-dis et manuum in sacramento corporis et sanguinis saluatoris sui sacro semper sacrificium super semper altare in uirtute bonorum operum offert. et quod est clarissimum opus in prebentibus. misericordiam. scilicet quod in largitate sepe omni dolori adiutorium impendunt missimo corde elemosinam in pauperes distribuunt. et sic in ple-no animo suo dicentes. istud non est mea substantia. sed ei quod creauit me. quia hoc opus a deo inspiratum ante oculos ipsius apparet in ce-lo cum in cultura ecclesie per fideles homines perficitur in terra. Quod autem ^{iii.} uenit ei est in modum retis perforatus multis foraminibus. in quibus maxima multitudo hominum dis-currit. hoc est matris benignitas ipsius que ad capturam fidelium animarum perspicua est. diuerso acumine uirtutum. in quibus cre-dentes populi per fide uere creduli-tatis deuote conuersantur. Sicut is-qui rete suum periecit in capturam piscium. est filius matris sponsus dilecte ecclesie sue. quam in cruore suo sibi desponsauit ad reparan-dum casum perditionis hominum. Que non dum ^{v.} erura aut pedes habet. quia non dum ad fortitudinem constantie sue nec ad candorem complectionis sue perducta est. quomodo circa tempus filii perditionis qui mundo errorem inducit igneam et sanguineam crudelissime peruersitatis angustiam plenissime umbris suis pacietur per quam calamitatem in in uera desponsatione.

sanguinis uulnerib; adpfectu pduc. vi. ta ppere currat in celestē ierlm. cū etiā in sanguine filii mei noua nup ta suauit exorta ē ipsa hoc ardo re intransuntā in plenitudine gay di sobolis sue. Sed tamū sup uen. xix. suū ante altare. qd ē an te oculos dī stans. ipsū expansis manib; circūplectit. quō ipsa sēp p̄gians ē. atq; pertans filios suos in uera ablutione. eos etiā de uotis sine offerens dō p purissimas ora tiones scōx et psuauissimū odorē discretionis occultarū et manife starū uirtutū. que pferunt in lu cidissima intentione oculorū mīs. abiecta omī sordē simulationis et fama humane laudis. ut tūc purgat ab omī iniuria comitari fectoris. que bona opatio uisioni dī dulcissimū sacrificiū ē in quo eadē ecclā frequentē laborat. to to uidelicet desiderio in ope fruc tuositas uirtutū ad celestia an helans. atq; tricesimo sexagesi mo et centesimo fructu excessā turrim supnoꝝ muroꝝ edificans.

vii. Vnde et oculis suis pōne celi acutissime uidet. qā inten tionē ipsius quā in celestib; de uotione habet. nulla puerfi tas obscurare potest. scilicet nul la psuasio diabolice aris. nec er ror claudicans p̄p̄li. nec diffu se tēpestates indueris tris. ubi insani hoīes in incredulitate fu roris sui crudelitē decerpit se.

Sed qd nulla uestimēta ei con siderare potes. hoc ē qd secre ta illi humanus intellectus in in firmitate fragilitatis sue graua tus. ad plenū intueri n̄ ualeat. n̄ qd tota lucidissima serenitate fulgens. multo splendore circū data ē. quō uerus sol clarissima inpiratione sp̄s scī & decentissi mo ornati uirtutū eā ubiq; p fudit. In pectore ei uelut auro ra rubeo fulgore rutilante. qā in cordib; fidelū integritas bea tissime uirginis filiū dī genera tis ardentissima deuotione ful get. ubi etiā multi in genere mu sicorū audis de ipsa q̄si auro ra ualde rutilans de cantari. quō omīs uox credentiū ut intelec tu tuo infundit uirginitatē eīdē illibate uirginis tota in tentione in ecclā amplecti debet.

Quod ū eadē imago expan dit splendore suū uelut uestimētū dicens. qd eā oport etate concipe & parere. hoc ē qd in ecclā dilatat sacramētū uere trinitatis. qd amictus ipsi ē in prehensio fidelū p̄p̄loꝝ. p quos ipsa consurgit in edificationē iuuentū lapidū in fonte puris simi lauacri dealbatoꝝ. sic et ip sa facit qd necesse sit ad saluatio nē ut concipiat filios in bene dictione & ut pariat eos in ab lutione p̄regenerationē sp̄s et xi. aque. Qua p̄p̄t et mox ac 57 currit et ut fulgur multitudo angelorum gradus et sedes in ea hominibus; faciemus per quod eadem imago perfici enda est quia cuiusque credenti homini ad est metuendum et diligendum ministe rium beatorum spirituum ascensus perfide et repositiones per summam quietem illis fidelibus perparamus in quibus ipsa felix mater ecclesia ad decorem suum per ducenda cognoscitur. Sed et de inde uides nigros infantes iuxta terram matrem quasi pisces in aqua pergen tes et uentrem eadem imaginis in foras minibus ubi perforata est intrantes quod est nigredo illorum stultorum hominum qui non dum abluti sunt in lauacro saluatio nis sed ipsi terram diligentes et in eis ubique discurrentes atque habitatione nem suam in eo instabilitatem ponen tes ad matrem sanctam tandem pueni unt et dignitatem secretorum et immu entem benedictionem ipsius suscipi unt per quam diabolo abstrahuntur. <sup>accedit red duntur</sup> sic constitutionem ecclesiastici ordi nis in qua fidelis homo ad salua tionem beatificari debet intrantes cum ille in semetipso dicit credo in deum et cetera que ad fidem pertinent unde et illa ingemit sursum eos ad caput suum trahens ubi ad os eius ex eunt ipsa tamen integra permanen te quo hec beata mater intima sus pira trahit quando baptismata cum crismate in sanctificatione spiritus sancti consecrantur cum homo in uera circū cisione spiritus et aque innouandus est ita illo summe beatitudinis que caput omnium est oblatum et membro christi factum cum per inuocationem sancte trinitatis quasi per os beate matris ad saluationem regeneratur nulla lesione eadem matre patiente quia ipsa intemum permanebit in integri tate uirginitatis sue que fides catholica est quo exorta est in san guine ueri agni uidelicet intami sponsi sui quod sine ulla corruptio ne integritatis ex integerrima uirgine natus est. Sic et eadem spon sa integra permanet. bit ita quod nullum scisma eam corrumpere poterit.

 Multociens tamen a peruersis hominibus fatiganda erit sed per adiutorium sponsi sui semper fortissime defen det se ut uirgo que sepe incon cupiscentia libidinis per diabolicam artem et per suasiones multorum hominum impugnatur sed tamen ipsa per oratio nes suas quasi fundit additum a tem ptationibus illorum strenue liberat conseruando uirginitatem suam.
 Ita etiam ecclesia repugnat ne quis simis corruptoribus quod sunt errores hereticorum scilicet tam christianorum quam iudeorum et paganorum quod eam in festant uirginitatem eius que fi des catholica est corrumpere uolen tes ipsa tamen eis fortiter resistit ne corrumpatur quia semper uirgo fuit et est permanebit uera fide idem ma teria uirginitatis eius contra om nem errorem integra permanente ut et honor caste uirginis in materia pudoris corporis eius

xiii.

contra omnē tactū libidinis in corrupta pseuerat. Unde et ecclesia omnium xpianorum uirginea mater ē: quō in secreto sps scī eos concipit et parit. illos dō offerens. na qd & filii dī uocant. Et ut beatā matrem sps scs obumbrauit. na qd sine dolore mirabiliter filiū dī concepit et peperit. & tam uirgo pman sit. sic & ecclesiam felicē matrem credentiū sps scs illustrat. na qd sine ulla corruptione simpliciter filios concipit. et parit & uirgo p durat. Quid ē hoc. Vt balsa mū ex arbore sudat. & ut fortissime medicine que in eo latet ex omibino uase emanant. & ut clarissimus splendor ex carbunculo absq. omī impedimēto se dilatat. sic fili dī sine omni obstaculo corruptionis ex uirgine natus ē. & sic etiā ecclesia sponsa illi absq. omī aduersitate erroris filios suos generat. uirgo tam integritate fidi pmanens.

xiiii.

Quod autē uidet quom illa serena lux. et in ipsa species hōis tota rutilante igne flagrat. sedm uisionē quā prius uideras. iterū tibi apparet. hoc ē qd uera trinitas in uera unitate. scilicet serenissimū pat. & in patre dulcissimū filiū. & q ante tēpora sedm diuinitatē in patre manens. s. in tēpore sedm carnē de spū scō conceptus. & de uirgine natus. ut inuerissima uisio ne tibi pmonstratū ē. nē etiā ad confirmationē fidi tibi ostendit. quō eadē beata trinitas in scō baptismo baptizatus apto celo apparet. ut fidelis homo hanc fidē suscipiat. qualiter unū dīm in uera trinitate colat. que etiā in pmo sacramento baptismatis ueraciter apparuit. Et singulis eorum nigerri mā cutē abstrahens. ac extra uiam easdē cutēs piciēs. singulos illos candidissima ueste induit. ac eis serenissimā lucē apit. singulis eorum uerba beate admonitionis pferens. qā diuina potestas corda hominū aspiciens in lauacro baptismi eis infidelitātē scelerū suorum miditer aufert. atq. eadē scelera extra uiam que xpc ē abiect. quō nō mors in xpo s. uita per purā confessionē & pabluionē peccatorū in ipso ē. cū pipsū qsq. fidelis candore salutis induit. & cū illi p eū claritas beate hereditatis de qua primū homo expulsus ē apit. ipse scilicet admonitus p uerba uertans. ut deponat ueterē consuetudinē iniquitatis. & ut assumat nouū donū grē ad saluatiōē. s. qd infantes qui uentrē p dīcte imaginis transierant. q in splendore qui eā circūdederat ambulauit. hoc ē qd hi quorum mat. felix ecclesia p fontē sacri baptismatis existit. in lege diuina qua eadē mat. illustrata et ornata ē pmanere. atq. eā conseruare debet.

ne si ea infideliter abiecerint. rursus su peccatis aquis. mundati erant inquinant. Vnde etiam illa beatus xv. magnissime eos intuens. tristis uoce dicit quod isti filii sui rursus re-uertantur in puluerem. quia eadem beata mater illos interiori dilectione diligens. ac eis ex uteris uisceribus. condolens. conquerit quod ipsi si quis in lauaero regenerationis genuit mundos uidelicet in celesti-bus effectos. iterum terrenis causis inhiantes in peccatis sordescant. quomodo. Quia multi fide ex-terius percipientes. interius eam diuersis uiciis impugnant. magis uiam erroris quam uiam ueritatis gradientes. ex quibus tam plu-rum a falsitate resipiscunt plu-rum etiam iniquitate permanet. ut et eadem mater in uerbis suis demonstrat. quomodo supra dictum est. Nam duo signa legis signata tradita noscuntur hominibus. scilicet circumcisio in antiquis patribus. et baptisimus in nouis doctoribus. per quem iugum sancti homines ut hos iugo suo. quomodo quam uis ille stimulo corripet tam curuum sulcum faceret si iugo ligatus non esset. Simili modo non incederent homines per uias meas. si non essent ligati iugo signorum suorum. Hoc tale est uelut si iuuenis aliquis iret in uia aliqua et patet ipsius ei diceret ambula recto itinere etiam non daret illi gladium nec alia bellicosa arma ad defendendum se. quod tunc. Nudus fugeret nec auderet nec posset se defendere a piculo sibi occurrente et cum auiam suam impedire uolente. sed absconderet se quia signatus non esset tribili armaturam. per quam se defendere deberet.

 Sic esset populus meus nudus. si non esset baptizatus. unde tribilis apparet in-micis suis qui cum cum crismate baptismatis signatum uident. per quod etiam fortiter illis repugnat quod cum destrue-re uolunt. uidelicet tantam humanam turba quam acies diabolica. Sed adeo non erat danda duplex lex. quomodo. Ego dedi ei legem in ar-bore. cum me uideret in immo centum cordis sui. Ipse autem contempsit me callido serpente consentiens. quod ita piculosum erat quod nunquam mortalis oculus me uidere poterit. quoniam diu in hoc transitorio seculo manet. sed quia ad id preceptum meum transgres-sus est. sine lege dei genere suo fuit usque ad tempus illud quod nobili-tate filii mei pronunciauit. Ad monitum autem spiritus sancti in hoc apparuit. cum genus humanum perire precepit. ubi super diluuium arcam creauit. quomodo ante secula preiudici quod post illud iniquum genus. quod se omnino in nigerissima iniquitate polluerat noua soboles ex-urgere debuit. Nam per transitum ad id genus ipsius ignorans quod ego deus sum. errabat dicens. Quis est deus. Quis est deus. Et tunc oriebat xviii.

xix.

xvi.

xvii.

57^v
in illis omne malum. ita quod inter eos antiquis serpens solina potesta te cucurrit. suadens illis ut om ne uoluntate ei facerent. Ipse enim tunc a uinculo ligatus solimus erat. ita quod ei ante dilu uium non minabatur. admonitio spiritus sancti. ut illi minatus sum in noe. in quo noua soboles exorta est. cum populum meum taliter erudiu quod ery dmonis illius non poterit obliuisci.
Nam admonitio spiritus sancti primum illi minabatur in noe. postea autem circumcisio in maxilla percussit. :xx.1. eum in abraham. deinde uero ecclesia ligauit eum in nouissimo tempore usque dum pertransierit mundus in ultimo die. Sed ego promisi dia bolum potestate sua ante dilu uium exercere in mundo propter antiquum certamen quo de uicit ad adam. donec uentre suum cadaue re omnis iniquitatis impleant. et hoc ideo promisi. quia iustum est iudicium meum. Unde etiam ego surrexi mons diluium. et peccatores occidi. re :xx.11. seruans in misterio meo noe que idem satanas exspoliare non potuit. quo in uoluntate mea super dilu uium erat. Et ego designaui in diluuio rectissimum germinem. uide licet filium meum. nouo seculo pronun tians eum. qui silenti ueniens in mundum sanctam trinitatem mani festauit ueracissime colenda.
Quomodo. Gres alas ostendit que sanctam trinitatem significant.

ubi tu synagoga me negabis.
et ubi alienus populus me suscipiet. ubi et tu o abraham magnifica beris. O abraham tu es circumdatus circumcisione tu es muratus ueteri testamento. tu es ornatus auro et solis ecclesie. Ego tibi et generi tuo dedi circumcisionem usque ad filium meum. qui propter peccata hominum re misit. et ubi carnalis circumcisio ueteris propter ueni cecidit. cum fons bap tismi in sanctificatione lauacri filii mei ueraciter ebullit. Sed quod in tempore circumcisionis ex genere tuo circumcisi non sunt secundum tempus quod eis ibi ostensum est. scilicet siue mi noris siue maioris etatis esset pac tum federis mei transgressi sunt. propter mulieres quibus circumcisio non est in uincta. quoniam mulier non est circum cidenda. quia matrem taberna culum latet in corpore eius. nec tan gi potest. nisi ut caro carnem est stringit. et quoniam ipsa est sub po testate uiri. ut seruus sub domino suo. Nam uir tres causas ha bet in opere suo. idem concupiscen tia fortitudine et studium. Concu piscencia autem incendit fortitu dinem. unde in utroque est studium coeli laboris. et ardentis uolun tatis ipsorum. Hoc tale est ut increa tione ade tres cause designate sunt. quia uoluntas dei in potestate formauit hominem. et hoc in magna pietate complent. cum ipse hominem ad imaginem et simili

:xx.

tudine sua fecit. In uoluntate autē di. nota uiri concupiscentia. et in potestate di. uiri fortitudine. atq; impietate uoluntatis ac potestatis di. studiū concupiscentie et fortitudinis uiri. Hoc modo p uirū pere-atur genus humanū ex muliere. quia & d's fecit hominē de limo trē. quō ut trā in uiriditate germinis fructuū agroꝝ ē. ita et mulier in humore partus ad pariendū filios posita ē. Quid ē hoc. Mulier habet tēpus reuelationis sui q in ipsa ē & q se in humore uiriditatis cū calore uita diffundit. alio qn uoluntarie uirū n susciperet. s. de dignando eū uoluntati illi n consentiret. nec filios pere-aret. Nā si humore uiriditatis in calore n haberet. in fructuosa maneret. sic arida trā que se n flectit ad uultū usū fructuositatis.
 s. & idē humor uiriditatis n ha-bet semp in calore incendiū ar-doris concupiscentie in muliere. nisi ipsa prius tacta a uiro. agnoscat ardentē concupiscentie feruorē. quia in illa n ē tā fortis & tā feruens concupiscentia. sic in uiro. q fortis ē tanquā leo ad concupiscentiā opis filioꝝ ita qd ipse habet fortitudinē concupiscentie ac opis. muliere tantū hoc negotiū habente qd subiaceret in pio uoluntatis illi. quō ipsa occupata ē in peroratione natoꝝ usq; dū eos pducatur in mundum.

Quēdū desiderat filiū meū in amore ei cupiens obseruare uir-ginitatē suā ualde ornat in chalamo ipsius. quō contēpnit ardo-rē quē p caritate illi sustinet. no-lens dissolui de incendio ardentis libidinis pseuerans in pudici-cia. qā carnalē uirū in spūali de-sponsatione despiciat. toto deside-rio anhelans p filiū meū. uidelicet recordationē uiri carnalis abiciens. O carissima germina. & odul-ciores et suauiores flores sup oīa aromata. ubi mollis et fragilis natura qsi aurora ad desponsationē filii mei consurgit. casta dilectione ualde amans eū. ipsa scilicet ei sponsa. et ipse illi sponsus. cū hoc genus uirginū ualde diligat eū. in supno regno insignib. ornamentis uidelicet ad ornandū.

.xx.iii.

Sed qd nē. cū etiā fortitudo uiri recusat ducere consor-tiū matrimoni. ita qd uir ppter amorē filii mei se coarctet in uiri-di natura sua. cū floret in ger-mine filioꝝ ipse tam constringēs mēbra sua ne exerceant concu-piscentiā carnis sue. hoc m ual-de amabile ē. scilicet qd uir hoc modo uincit se. Unde et ego faciā eū consortē filii mei. & ponā eū serenissimū speculū ante faciē ei. quia fortitē resistit diabolo. q sibi humanū genus pinfidelitātē nequissime sordis adtraxerat. De cui laqueo ut eri

.xx.iiii.

perit eundē filiū meū nisi in mundū. natū ex dulcissima uirgine sine omī macula peccati. afferentē fontē saluationis. quē ipse innocens agnus sacra-uit. ut p̄puciū ueteris criminis in eo aboleret. Quid ē hoc.
Amarissimū p̄puciū ē crimen transgressionis adē. q̄d filius m̄s abstulit. cū ipse fontē salu-tis ingressus xp̄ianā choortē nobilissime dedicauit. ut ser-pens antiquus q̄ hominē de-ceperat. in eodē lauacro suo mergeret. Quomodo. fili conditioni patris sui responderet. necn̄ & hereditatē ei reuocet.
Quid ē hoc. Genus adē p̄transgressionē illi de loco amenitatis expulsū ē. et in baptismo saluationis p̄ filiū meū adui-tā reuocatū ē. Quomodo. Ipse sup̄ incredulos q̄ p̄ceptis meis repugnauerūt. uocē benedictio-nis dedit. ita q̄d ex t̄m. ueniā in spū contritionis peterent. ut esayas seruus m̄s scdm̄ hoc q̄d amē accepit p̄stat dicēs.
xxv. Et uenient ad te curi filii eorū qui humiliauerūt te.
& adorabunt uestigia pedū tuorū om̄s qui detrahebant t̄.
Quid ē hoc. O tu qui es sup̄na pax et purissimus sol. p̄reebullet uiuens radix que ē regeneratio sp̄s et aque cū illi solerūt uenient ad agnō nē tuā. q̄ in spurcia nefandissime immundicie sub grauissima maledictione p̄stati erant. quō ipsi hoc modo q̄si curi uix tandē ad ueritatē & ad iusticiā surgent. Quomodo. Ipsi mat̄nā dulcedinē uere fidi sugent eā uisibilit̄ uidendo nescientes. s̄ tamū illā fidelit̄ credendo rapient. Et qui s̄ illi. Videlicet isti q̄ in materia peccati de his ori q̄ te in ardenti caritate nūquā ui-derūt. s̄ q̄ te crudelit̄ opprimēdo p̄uacit̄ affluerūt. q̄si tu illos n̄ dñareris. te in bono sensu dulcissime amauerūt. Et idō cū uerā fidē secuti fuerint uelut regē app̄hendent te. & q̄si dñm ad-orabunt te. atq; festinant̄ current sequentes sc̄ssima munera tua que eis p̄cepisti. ita ut semp cū eleuatis manib; uite aspiciant atq; in bonis opib; ad te semp uigilent in fide scilicet te uidere tediū n̄ habentes. et hoc om̄s illi facient q̄ prius in pudice & irreuerentiā te dilaniauerūt. & q̄ in odio ac in inuidia te diuiserūt. cū nē in speculo fidi ardent̄ te amplecentur.

Quid ē hoc. Nam casus adē clausit celū in indignationē meā. cū homo me spreuit. et callidū serpentē audiuit. uñ et ipsi conclusa ē om̄s gl̄a paradysi. que clausura durauit usq; ad nobilē filiū meū qui 53 in uoluntate mea fluentē iorda nē intrauit. ubi & uox mea ele mentū innotuit. cū dicere. quia ipse est filius mī dīlectus in quo mibi bene cōplacuisse. quō hoc uoluit in fine tēporū redimere hominē p̄ filiū meū in inclaris simo calore ita adherentē. ut fauius mellis adheret. quē etiā idecirco misi in fontē. me fontē aque uiue designantē. ut & ip se fons salutis animas illas de eterna morte resuscitaret quib. in aqua p̄ sp̄m s̄m remissio pec catorū daret. Qua p̄pt. & ibi sp̄s s̄s apparuit quia fidelib. p̄cū remissio peccatorū fit. ibi uideli cet obmissicū secretū eundē unigenitū meū idē sp̄s s̄s in specie colūbe ostendens quē simplicis et sinceri moris ē. quō et sp̄s s̄s in simplicitate & in bo nitate omnium bonorū indefici ens iusticia ē. Et hoc decebat. quia filius mī sine ulla macu la criminis ex uirgine natus ē ut etiā hō q. cū peccato de uiro & muliere nascit. sine pec cato splendide & glōse renasce retur. sicut idē filius mī in eu ḡlo ad nichodemū dīc. Amen xxvij. am dico t̄ nisi q̄s renatus fuerit ex aqua et sp̄u. n̄ potest introi re in regnū dī. Quid ē hoc. Con stantissima certitudine et n̄ in stabili ambiguitate dico tibi qui natus es ex putredine q̄a homo q̄ exortus ē de ardenti ca lore. & inuolutus ueneno se factu re. n̄ in uero gaudio nouē sobo lis renascat. ex aqua sc̄ificationis et sp̄u illuminationis. in tēpore neglectus sui confundit. Quom.

Quia homo uelut aqua cū sp̄u uegetationis sue mundans quō ut aqua sordēs emundat & ut sp̄s inanimata uiuificat. n̄ inue ra regeneratione purget. n̄ po terit p̄ uictoriā saluationis he res regni creatori sui fieri. quia in peccato primi parentis quē diabolus fraudulentē decepit ob ligatus ē. Quomodo. Qm̄ ut fur qui nobilissimā et p̄ciosissimā pecuniā regis furat. furtiue sub uitat. sic tortuosa conceptio in ingluue diaboli deceptiose sub repsit. ita qd̄ ipse dilectissimā gēnā s̄cē innocentē et castita tis in quib. sp̄s s̄s habitat ne quit abstraxit. unde nē in sc̄i ficatione ablutionis emundan da ē. Nā mortiferus calor. quē libido in coagulatione concu piscencie p̄uariationis p̄ceptorū om̄p̄tis dī succendit. in illo sub mergendus ē. q̄ nūquā miracu la sua inuidiose abscondit. s̄; ea in incōphensibili pietate lauda biliter declarat. Audite ergo xxvij. filiū meū in hac constitutione regenerationis. quē reuelatio regni mei ē. et discite ab eo ut p̄cepta mea cōpleatis. Sic facite

53^u
et hoc in placet. et caute ne uos amiquis serpens seducat. et non moremur si baptismum uerum seruaueritis. ut uobis in nomine beate trinitatis preceptum est. Et quo-cienſ cecideritis. surgite cum cor-recta penitencia secundum mediam meam de peccatis ueſtris. O uos caris-simi filii mei cognoscite bona-tem patris ueſtri. qui uos in semetipso per ueram confessionem et per ueram ue-niam de maxilla diaboli liberauit. et qui uobis omnia bona contulit. in quibus laborare debetis. ut celestem iherusalem possideatis. quoniam per fallacem deceptionem perdidistis. quia nemo per diuinam hereditatem suam requirere potest. nisi per sudorem la-boris sui. Hos autem supernam beati-tudinem scilicet iustissimam hereditatem ueſtram. facile per paruam legem recipere potestis. Nam spiritus sanctus ut per dictum est potestatem satane in bap-tismo expellit ab homine. sanctificans eum nouum hominem in regeneratio-ne. ut per diuinam gaudia recipere ualeat. Unde quisquis saluari desi-derat. in purgatione criminum suarum regenerari non recuset. Nam ego dedi masculis generis abrahe circumcisionem membris uniuscuiusque. in filio meo precepi uiris ac mulieribus. cunctisque populo circumcisionem omnium membrorum suorum. Quomodo.
Circumcisio baptismi orta est in bap-tismo filii mei. et hec ita durabit usque in nouissimum diem. et per hunc scietis eius incommutabile manebit. nec finem accipiet. Et qui ita in lauacro baptismi circumciduntur. uerissime conseruabuntur. si hoc lau-acrum iustis operibus. fideliter conseruauerint. quia homo siue minoris siue fortioris etatis sit. ego susci-piam eum. si fides meum custodierit. quod mecum pepigit. scilicet in me credendo et in uera trinitate me confitendo. seu per se ipsum seu per alios qui eo per loquuntur. ut infans seu non loquens homo uerba alieni oris expostulat. et non delebo eum in eternum. sicut illum qui fontem hunc cum opere fidei suscipe recusauerit. secundum quod iterum per doctrinam filii mei in euangelio scriptum est. Qui crediderit et baptizatus fuerit saluus erit. qui uero non credide-rit. condemnabitur. Quid est hoc.

Iste homo qui per suam scientiam que interior oculus est istud uidet. quod exterior uisui absconsus est. et in hoc non dubitat. hic certissime credit. et hoc fides est. Nam quod homo exterior cernit. hoc et exterior nouit. et quod interior uidet hoc et interior considerat. Ideo cum scientia hominis per speculum uite ardenter percipit incomprehensibile diui-nitatem. quam exterior oculus aspicere non ualet. tunc desideria op-primunt. ad terram prostrata. Unde et spiritus hominis illi ad ueram altitudi-nem suspirat. hanc regeneratio-nem sentiens. quam filius hominis de

xxv.

spū scō conceptus attulit. cui mater eū de carne uiri sudamus in libidine n̄ accepit. s; de secreto pa-tris omnium. Et ille suauit̄ ueniens purissimū et uiuū speculū in aq̄ ostendit. ita qđ homo p̄ illud in regeneratione uiuit. Nā sic homo nascit̄ ex carne. diuina potestate in forma adē illū creat̄ ita sp̄s sc̄s recuperat uitā aīe p̄ inundationē aque cū ipsa sp̄m hōis in se ac-cipit cū resuscitans ad uitā. ut prius in unda sanguinis suscitatus ē. cū incorporali uasculo manifestatus ē. Ut enī forma hōis tunc amabilis format̄ ita qđ homo dī. sic sp̄s hōis ante oculos dī n̄ in aq̄ uiuificat̄ ita qđ eū d̄s ad hereditatē uite nouit. Unde qđ sic fontē sa-lutis cū federe iusticie suscipit uitā in saluatione inuenit. q̄a fidelit̄ credidit. qđ ū credere n̄ uult. mortuus ē. quō suspiria sp̄s n̄ habet cū quib; in altitudine celi uolet. s; tamū tangendo ce-cis oculis palpat in obumbrata scientia carnis n̄ uiuens. q̄a uitā in disciplina caret. quā d̄s sp̄uauit in hominē. sursum contra uoluntatē carnis ascendente. Qua p̄p̄t iste in morte infidelitatis condēpnabit̄. quia lauacrū salutis n̄ ha-buit. Ego enī nec tēpus nec gen̄ ab hac salute separaui. s; hanc uocationē omī p̄p̄lo p̄ filiū meū clement̄ institui. Nam quo cūq; tēpore labentū horarū

54 cūq; sexus aut̄ etatis homo sit uidelicet masculus aut̄ femi-na infans aut̄ de creptus. cū in affectu deuotionis ad baptismū uenerit ego cū pietatis adiutorio suscipiā eū. Et n̄ recuso lauacrū baptismi infans. ut quidā falsi deceptores locunt̄. qđ me tale oblationē abicere memunt̄. sic etiā in ueteri testam̄to n̄ sp̄itui infantis circūcisionē. cū ille eā nec uoce expectaret. nec uoluntate susceperet. quā tam̄ parentes ei p̄ ipso cōpleuerūt. Ita etiā n̄ in noua grā. n̄ abicio baptismū infans. quāuis ille eū nec loquendo nec con-sentendo querat. s; tamū paren-tib; ei id p̄ eo facientib;. Et tam̄ si ille salutē consequi desiderat. omī uite fidele p̄missionē adimplebit. quā hī p̄ eo sponde-runt qđ eū ad sacro sc̄m fontē adhibuerūt. qui tres homines in honore sc̄e trinitatis eē debent. uidelicet sacerdos qui ipsū p̄fundit. et duo qui p̄ illo uerba fidi-dant. Qui autē hoc modo in la-uacro baptismatis eide bap-tismo coniungunt̄ in carnali p̄creatione ei n̄ cōmisceant̄. q̄a in sp̄ali generatione ipsi adheserunt. In baptismo enī filii mei ego pat̄ in tonui qđ sacerdote in lauacro benedictionē dante ostendit. et sp̄s sc̄s in specie lenis animalis uisus ē qđ uirū in simplicitate cordis ibi hominē bap-xxxij.

xxxiii.

tihandū ploquentē et docentē denunciat. atq. filius m̄s incar-ne baptihandus aderat. qđ mu-lierē in suauitate nutricis astantē obdulcissimā incarnationē eidē unigeniti mei declarat.
 Quid nē. Sed sicut infans de lacte & de cecis ab alio sibi contritus corporalit̄ pascit. ita etiā doctrinā et in baptismo sibi ppositā fidē ex intimo corde ob-seruabit. Qđ si uerba matris sue n̄ sugit. nec contritus sibi escas suscipit. incunctantē morit̄. sic etiā si nutrita pissime matris eccle n̄ accipit. nec uerba fidelī doctōr que sibi in baptismo pposita s̄ retinet. crudelit̄ mortis anime n̄ euadit. quō saluationē anime et dulcedinē et̄ ne uite recusant. Et sic cū idē infans corporale cibū dentib; suis molere n̄ potest alius ei il-lum ad deglutendū ne moria-tur conterit. sic etiā faciendū ē cū ille in baptismo uerba ad con-firmandū me n̄ habet. ad erunt ei sp̄itales adiutores. qui ipsi cibū uite idē catholicā fidē ne in laqueo ppetue mortis cōphendatur pponant. Quomodo.
 Dñs seruo suo causā suā inuoce p̄cipiens pponit et ille eā in angustia timoris cū ope cōplet et mat̄ filiā suā in carnate docet. & illa uerba ei cū subiectione pficit. ac simili modo debiores fidei baptizato uerba salutis oportune pferant. ut il-le ea fidei deuotione ob amore celestiu adimpleat. Nam nul-lus tā graui pondere peccatorū p̄mitur. si in noīe sacro scē trinitatis in scē baptisma m̄rit. ue-re om̄a crimina sceleris ei deleo. sicut & in infante cū in lauacro regenerationis pfundit̄ ueterē culpā ad ueracit̄ abluo. S; n̄ mi-reris homo qđ in fonte baptisma-tis ab omnib; peccatis suis homo iustificat̄. ita qđ de pondere peccatorū suorū in eo clementissime alleuiat̄. Nā innocens agnus q̄ sine ulla macula peccati fonte baptismi ingressus ē. cū magno sacramento incarnationis sue crimina peccatorū hominū in bap-tismo miditer aufert. S; om̄a acutissime p̄spicio & p̄seruor. et in hoc scē & in eternitate ubi mors corporū n̄ ē. S; om̄a apta. quid ē hoc. Gehenna in opibus mortis pbat̄. et uita et̄na in opibus que puniunt adiuta. Quom̄. mors p̄ mortē pbat̄. q̄a cū homo sine penitencia & sine midia di-quō n̄ requirit eā iusto di iudicio in peccatis morit̄. mors ei in morte inferi discunt̄. Una q̄q; pbat̄ p̄ uita. ita qđ bona opa fulgent in celis. cū uita et̄na dñat̄ illis. Ita etiā q̄ in fonte benedictionis baptizant̄. in scēate scēte regenerationis p̄bant̄. S; ibi p inuocationē benedictionū sacerdots inuocor: na qđ aures mee uerbis fidi assē: quāuis ille qui ibi me inuocat in obligationibus peccator sit. Nam quāuis ^{xxxv.} idē sacerdos peccator sit: tam officiū baptismi ab eo suscipio: si hoc p inuocationē noī mei fidelit̄ exerceat. Ipsius autē inquitas condepnabit eū: si mea sine penitencia pseruauerit. celebrationē ū baptismi n̄ recuso ab eo suscipe: eū in uerbis fidi me inuocauerit. Qđ ē hoc. Si ^{xxxvi.} aliquis diues homo dispensatorē habet: q̄ multib; suis bona sua recte dispensans: officii suū fi-deliter exerceat: et si idē dispen-sator de alio ope suo culpabilis ē: tam dñs suus n̄ dedignat̄ ab eo suscipe officii suū: ei ta-men dicens: serue nequā in ope tuo: unde & illū in m̄te sua in-dignū habet: officii tam in sticie sue ab eo n̄ dedignans acci-pere. Sic et ego q̄ plurimos dispensatores habeo: a sacerdote qui recte unctus in officio suo fidelit̄ manet: quāuis de aliis opib; suis culpandus sit: n̄ re-nuo suscipe sacramtū meū:

de aliis tam iniustus actib; suis eū in contrariū iudicans: nec tam qđ meū ē ab eo suscipe ē tēpnēs. Quod si aliquis bap- ^{xxxvii.} tūbandus separationē corporis sui ad eē putans baptisma quesierit: nec sacerdotē a quo baptizet habere poterit: tē si quis cū p inuocationē trine maiestatis pfuderit: baptizatus ē: & remissionē peccatorū suorū grāmque supne beatitudi-nis p hanc pfusionē accipiet: quia infide catholica pfusus ē: nec hoc baptisma mutari poterit: S; tam in inuocatione hac nulla psonarū trīū ineffabiliū psonarū omittenda ē: quō si ibi ulla earū p infideli-tate inuocari omittit tunc ibi uernas salutē n̄ opat̄ s; potius falsitas deceptionē tribuit: unde & ibi inuocatio huius inef-fabilis trinitatis n̄ decet: qđ et purissimo baptismati filii di trinitas n̄ defuit: s; ibi mirabilis sua mirabilit̄ p semetipsā declarant. Qua ppter et hoīes q̄ saluari desiderant regenera-tionē uite ad saluationē pe-pian: & hanc pcipe n̄ negli-gant ne peant: quia ut abortiuiū abicit: qđ pte sine calore uite: nec in informatione nec in exeritatione adherens uisce-rib; matris sue: ita etiā in piculo mortis sine consolatione sps scī detinent: q̄ nec in m̄te nec in ope implican̄ sa-cramtū ecclē: que mat̄ uocī scīans existit. Hōc audiant et intelligant om̄s ppli: qui regnū dī in regeneratione

55 sp̄s et aque. inuare uolunt. sc̄d̄ q̄d eis in sc̄is scripturis p̄donū sp̄s sc̄i p̄positū ē. s. q̄ uigilantib; oculis uidet et sonantib; aurib; audire hic mysticis uerbis meis os culū amplexionis p̄beat. que de me uiuente emanant. iii.

Tercia uisio sole patris.

Uidi uelut magnā et rotundā turri totāq; integrū & albū lapidē existēte. tresq; fenestras in summate sui ha bente. ex quib; tamis fulgor re splenduit. q̄d etiā tēū turris il lius. q̄d se uelut in cōnū erexit. in claritate eīdē fulgoris mani festius uideret. Ipse autē fenestre pulcherrimis smaragdīs circū ornate erant. s. & eadē turris uelut in medio dorsi p̄dicte muliebris imaginis posita erat sc̄dm q̄d aliqua turris in mu rū urbis ponit. ita q̄d eadē imago p̄fortitudine ei nullo modo cadere poterat. Et infan tes illos qui uenire eīdē imagi nis ut p̄dictū ē transierant. ui di multa claritate fulgentes. quorū alii in fronte usq; ad pedes ipsorū uelut aureo colore orna ti erant. alii uero eandē clari tate tantū habentes. illo colore carebant. Ex ipsīs autē infantib; alii quendā purū et lucidū splendore. alii uero quendā tur bidū et rubeū fulgorē ad orientē uergentē inspiciebant. s. ex his qui ipsū purū et lucidū splen dore considerabant. quidā cla ros oculos et fortes pedes habe bant. ac inuenire eīdē imaginis forte incedebant. Alii autē in firmos oculos. et debiles pedes habentes. huc & illuc aucto pi ciebant. s. & ipsi baculū in ma nib; suis tenentes. corā p̄fata ima gine uolnabant. ac eā aliquādo s. tam tepide tangebant. Quidā uero serenos oculos. s. inbecilles pedes habentes. ante eandē ima ginē hac et illac in aere p̄gebant.

Alii autē infirmos oculos. s. for tes pedes habebant. & tam corā eadē imagine tepide ambula bant. s. ex his qui illū turbidū et rubeū fulgorē inspiciebant. alii in p̄fata imagine bene orna ti forte incedebant. alii autē ex ipsa se rapientes. eā impugna bant & constitutas ordinatio nes ei conprimebant. de quib; quidā p̄fructū penitentie ad ipsā humilit̄ reuertebant. q̄dā uero p̄neglectū obdurationis in elatione mortis remanebant.
Et iterū audiui uocē de celo in dicentē. Sicut noua sponsa agni post illustrationē uiu

56 dationū que orta ē in sole iusticie qui mundū sua p̄fusione sc̄ifica uit. in igneo ardore sp̄s sc̄i deco rata & confirmata. ad p̄fectionē decoris sui ē. ita etiā fidelis homo qui regenerationē in sp̄u & aqua p̄cipit. p̄unctionē superioris docto ris ornari & stabiliri debet. ut in omnib. m̄bris suis ad effectū beati tudinis confortatus. plenitudi nē fructus summe iusticie p̄ferens. decorē sui ornatus p̄fecte inueni at. Qua p̄pt̄ turre h̄c quā uidet designat flagrationē donox sp̄s sc̄i. quā misit pat̄ in mundū p̄pt̄ amorē filii sui incenditē corda discipulox illi. in igneis linguis. unde robustiores redditi s̄ in no mine sc̄e & uirtutis trinitatis. S. q̄d ipsi ante aduentū ei⁹ de ignei sp̄s sc̄i in habitaculo suo clausi sede bant. clausurā corporis ipsorū ostendebat. p̄ quā timidi ad lo quendū iusticiā dī & inbecilles pati penas aduersariorū erant. Et quia filiū meū in carne uiderant. idō clausis int̄iorib. oculis suis il lum in carne diligebant. ita q̄d tunc n̄ uiderēt aptā doctrinam. quā p̄ ea in mundū effuderēt. cū in sp̄u sc̄o robustiores effecti s̄.
 In cui⁹ aduentu ita confirmati s̄. q̄d nullā penā abhorrerent. q̄n strenue tolerarent eā. Hec ē enī fortitudo turris hui⁹. p̄ quā eccl̄a ita roborata ē. q̄d nulla insania diaboli furoris superari pot̄.

Sed q̄d eā uidet magnā & ro tunda totaq. integrū & albū lapidē existimē. hoc ē q̄d in m̄sa ē dulcedo sp̄s sc̄i. & uolubilis in gr̄a. om̄s creaturas circūens. ita q̄d nulla corruptio in integritate plenitudinis iusticie eā euacuat. quō ipsa torrens n̄r. habens os riuulos sc̄ntis in claritate for titudinis illi⁹ emittit. in qua nū quā maculositas ulli⁹ sordis in uenta ē. q̄a ipse sp̄s sc̄i ē ardens & lucens serenitas. que nūquā eua cuabit. & que ardentes uirtutes fortit. accendit. ac idō om̄s tene bre ab eo fugant. Que it̄ se nestras in summitate sui habet. ex quib. tamis fulgor resplendet q̄d etiā t̄ctū turris illius q̄d se uclut in conū erigit. in claritate ei⁹ fulgoris manifestus uidet. quia ineffabilis trinitas in effu sione donox excellentie sp̄s sc̄i manifestat. ita q̄d ex eadē beata trinitate tanta serenitas iusticie p̄ doctrinā ap̄lox emanat. q̄d etiā exinde fortissima uirtus diui nitatis que in cōphensibilis in altitudine omnipotentie maie statis sue ē mortali creature sci licet homini aptius notificetur. s̄. tam ita q̄mū fide credemus et fidelis hoīs capi possibile di noscēt. unde ipse fenestre pul cherrimis smaragdīs circūor nate s̄. quō eadē trinitas uiri tissimis uirtutib. & erūnis ap̄lox que nūquā ariditate temporis inue niunt. ubiq. in toto mundo apu sime declarata ē. Quomodo. Quia nouū ē. quom. ppter fidē ueritatis rapacissimi lupi eos diuersis cala mitatib. dissocabant. unde robu tiores ad bellū certaminis effecti

s. ita qd pphando ecclā acq̄fieri. et tā ad edificationē fidei fortissi mis uirtutib. roborauerūt. et mul timodis coruscationib. ornauerūt.
Et quō ecclā in inspiratione sp̄s sc̄i p̄ eos ita confortata ē. idcirco et ipsa uult et exposcit. ut filii sui ornent. signo sp̄s sc̄i in hac unctione. ut idē sp̄s sc̄i penetrent corda fidelium in astra media que ualde mystica ē. ita qd in ignis linguis puoluntate dī patris in mundū uenit. Qua ppter et homo baptismate saluationis p̄fusus. confirmandus ē unctione excel lentis doctoris. sic et ecclā supra firmā petra firmata ē. Vnde eadē turris uelut in medio dor si p̄dictē muliebris imaginis po sita ē. scdm qd aliqua turris in murū urbis ponit. ita qd eadē imago p̄fortitudine ei nullom̄ cadere poterit. q̄a sp̄s sc̄i in max ima fortitudine incarnationis illius qui uerus sponsus ecclē ex istit. mirabilia sua mirabiliter opatus ē. et ecclā tā fortē in defensione munitionis sue osten dit. qd ipsa p̄fortitudine illa qua ab igneo dono ei munita ē nūquā in errore ulli p̄uersitatis deici poterit. quō p̄supnā p̄ce tionē in amore sponsi sui sine macula et sine ruga semp gau debit. quia et idē unigenitus m̄s de spū scō conceptus. nobilit sine macula ex uirgine natus ē. quē admodū ad moysen locu tus sū. Ecce inqt ē locus apud me. stabisq. supra petra. Cūq. tñ sibit glā mea ponā te in forami ne petre. et p̄teget te dextera mea donec p̄transcā. Tollamq. manū meā. et uidebis postero ra mea. Quid ē hoc. Prope ē mi raculū. qd implebit in uolun tate mea. S. tu prius pugnabis induricia legalium p̄ceptoꝝ p̄ce tiorē significationē uī eoz osten dens. ubi dulcedinē et lenitatē n̄ inuenies. que in filio meo apiet. Et hec duricia legis quā in p̄cepto meo scribes. tādū in duricia lapideoz cordiū stabit. quo usq. om̄s glā illa manife stabit. que in aet̄ et ab immato rib. tuis usq. ad manifestationē filii mei exhibenda ē. Cūq. hoc adimplet. in lege quā nē scribes gl̄ificabor. ponāq. te in p̄fora tū lapide. Quomodo. Ego ponā te in duriciā legis. cū te in p̄cep to meo sup eā constiuo. et uide licet magistrū huius antiquitatis nominans. quā fili m̄s p̄forabit. plus eā quā tu in mysticis uerbis exponens. cū cū inopportuno

.1113.
7 7 7 7 7 7 7 tempore immundū misero. Et idō p̄ter te fortitudo ipsius acutro ra uerba quā tu affert. et clausu rā in legalib. p̄ceptis apert. donec ad me redeat. Quid ē hoc. Ipse tā diu salutaria uerba mundo cor porali ^{dabit. ubi dū in car. ne sua quā de uirgine sumet. ex} p̄transcat. Tunc et ego tol lam manū meā. q̄a sup̄ sidera cū ad me leuabo. om̄a misteria ei p̄ sp̄m sc̄m demudans. et sic uidebis incarnationē ei. ut homo adorso cernit. & n̄ in ante p̄spicit. quō cū incarnatū senties. s; diuinitatē il lus n̄ capies. q̄a filii tui magis cū uidebunt cū ad me redierit. quā cū intelligant cū apud cos uisibi liter conuersatus fuerit. Et q̄d. m. uidet infantes illos qui uenire ei de magnis ut p̄dictū ē transie rant. multat ^{claripato} fulgentes. hoc ē q̄d hu q̄ in innocentia mundicie pu ri cordis. p̄fontē regenerationis matrē scilicet eccl̄am ut tibi p̄ monstratū ē adepti s; filii lucis p̄p̄t ablutionē peccatorū suorū ex istunt. Quorū alii a fronte usq; ad pedes ipsorū uelut aureo colore ornati s; quia ab initio bonorū op̄ usq; ad finē sc̄ntis p̄fulgentissi ma dona sc̄i sp̄s inunctione uere credulitatis p̄manū pontificis in crismate decorant. Quomodo. ut p̄ciosis lapidib; aurū decorat cui inponunt. ita & crismate p̄ manū superioris doctoris fidelit̄ baptizatus inuncto baptismatis ornatus ostendit. quēadmodū scriptū ē. Rex quoq; transgre diebat. torrentē cedron. et cunct^{vy.} ppl̄s incedebat contra uia olue que respiciebat ad desertū. Quid ē hoc. fili^{vy.} uirginis q̄ dñatur uni uerso mundo. ut rex t̄renus reliq ppl̄o transgressus ē torrentes aq̄s beati lauacri. q̄d in admonitione sp̄s sc̄i forti desiderio uia salutis demonstrat. Quid ē hoc. Ipse re liquit mortē transiens ad uitā. cū in regeneratione sp̄s & aque. idē in magno ornamento urbis ce lestis ierlm̄ que nūquā deficit sumā beatitudinē enunciauit. Un de om̄s ppl̄s q̄ in illū credebat uir p̄ inspirationē sc̄i sp̄s ad uia illā. que absconsa erat in unctio ne olei respicientis ad p̄uaricatio nē ade. que deserta erat pulchritu dine hereditatis iusticie dī. & con sideramus utrū illa ad salutē redi re uellet. an n̄. q̄a uulneratū pecca tū primi hōis necesse habuit ut p̄sacerdotale officiū inungeret q̄d filio uirginis necesse n̄ erat. quō ipse totus in sc̄ntate concept^{vy.} ē. n̄ uulnero nec corrupto ma tris sue utero. s; integritatis ho norē p̄seuerante. Nā q̄d puulne ra suggestionis diaboli macera tū et confusū ē. hoc p̄unctionē olei in pugnandū & ornandū ē. ita q̄d edax luor abstergetur que carnis concupiscentia opat.

 In uero ut uidet eandē cla ritate tamū habentes. illo

57^v colore carbant. quō ipsi inbap-tismate ablutionis tantū mundati unctiōe superioris sui sacerdo-tis n̄ habent incrementum. qđ signū ardentis scī sp̄s ē. Quid ē hoc. unctio confirmandi p̄donū scī sp̄s in episcopali officio specialit̄ fulget. qđ infidelis p̄p̄lo post rege-nerationē sp̄s & aqua exercendū ē. cū credulus homo confirmandus ē. supra firmā petra. Quom̄. filii m̄s baptismate in corpore suo suscepit. ipsū ita in carne sua scī ficant. in qua n̄ ē diuisus. quia ipse solus uirginis unius filius ē. ac idō filius hōis dictus. quō eadē uirgo eū n̄ concepit ex uiro. s. integritate uirginitatis sue peperit illū. Qui post passionis miseriā & resurrectionis gl̄am. in eadē carne celū p̄uenit. rediens ad me. ac de inde sp̄s sc̄s in igneo ardore mundū illustrauit confirmans omnē iusticiā in cordib. discipulorū illi. cū eis apuit qđ antea abscon-derat. Quom̄. Sic sp̄s sc̄s corda illorum accendit. ut sol cū sub nube in-cipit apparere ardentē calorē suū ostendit in sua p̄clara luce. Quid ē hoc. Amor filii mei in m̄tib. eorū latent ardebat. & ita calor sp̄s scī eos p̄transiens. fortissimū solē doctrine illorum ostendebat. quō ē testimoniū illud qđ sp̄s eccl̄e declarauit. ita qđ mors iusticie dī resiste re n̄ ualet. Vnde uos o filii ueritatis audite & intelligite confir-mationē sp̄s scī. quā ipse in blanda unctiōe magistrū suū uidelicet magister omnū unctiōnū existens. uobis benigne offert. Et idō hec unctio in honore eīdē scī sp̄s p̄ superiore sacerdote tantū exercenda ē. quia om̄is eccl̄asticus ordo in spū scō instructus ē. & p̄pterea hec eadē unctio sp̄s scī ē. Quia p̄pt̄ & homo ille qui misterii regenerationis ad uitā suscepit. si hoc m̄ n̄ ē unctus. tunc nec ornatū eccl̄asticę plenitudinis p̄cepit. sed m̄ qđ eccl̄a p̄flagntē sp̄m sc̄m ornata ostendit. ut sup̄ ē p̄monstratū. S. & quēadmodū ec-clesia in donis scī sp̄s p̄ficiat. sic et fidelis homo confirmandus ē in unctiōe principalis doctoris. q̄ in honore sp̄s scī formidabilis magister ē. quō idē sp̄s sc̄s calore suo ceruissimā doctrinā xp̄iano p̄p̄lo ardenter p̄fert & accendit.

Vnde qui in hac unctiōe scī sp̄s sic uncto adheserit. in sc̄lā p̄p̄tatione illi n̄ coniungant. quia in spū scō ei copulati s̄. Qđ ē hoc. fides portat hominē ad hanc unctiōē. & idō qui illū tunc in manib. tenet. fidē de signat. que carnalia n̄ querit. s. semp ad sp̄italia tendit. Nā oculus m̄s uidet ho-minē. ut in opib. suis uenurus ē ad me. Quod si tu o homo post baptismū me dimittis et ad diabū reuerteris. inde iusto iudicio con-58 deponaberis. quō magnū donū in tellectus tibi dedi. & quia mīdīam meā in fonte baptismatis tibi osten di. Om̄s enī q̄ mīdīam meā in baptis mo querit. eā benigne inueniunt. p̄p̄t filīū meū inmundū uenientē.

& multos labores in corpore suo sustinent. et p̄p̄tē obo pug nas anime & corporis tui patiunt. debes tolerare. & p̄p̄t filīū meū sus cipiā te. Et nemo repellendus ē a lauacro baptismi q̄ illud inno mine meo fidelit̄ sequit̄. quia in quocūq; tēpore me homo querit illū ardent̄ suscipio. Qd̄ si post ea illius opa praua erūt. ipsa eū diuīdicāt ad mortē. Idō o homo in regeneratione saluationis mun dare atq; in uincione sc̄ntis in ungere. mortēq; fuge & uitā im itare. Nā & mat̄ fidelīū que eccl̄a ē. ut filii sui mortē effugiant. et uitā inueniant fidelit̄ in ip̄s ex orat. Quomodo. Ipsa gēmebun dā uocē in filiis suis habet. que ad dō in ipsa posita ē. usq; dū ple nūdo filioz ei in tabernaculū sup̄ne ciuitatis ingrediat̄. Et hanc uocē ideo habet. ut me qui sū ante eū admoueat sēp uidere & inuiri. qd̄ unigenitus m̄s incarnatus ē. quatinus p̄p̄t amōrē illi filius suis parca. quos ipsa in regeneratione sp̄s & aque suscepit. quia celeste regnū n̄ possunt intrare. n̄ in saluatione.
Unde sic resonat. uidelicet .vij.

timere patrē. amare filiū. & arde re in spū scō. Quomodo. Hic son de me patrē filiū meū in scō spū ei datus ē. qui ē uox in ipsa reso nans q̄si tuba in ciuitate. Et alio modo n̄ loquit̄. n̄ sic in filiis suis. qua p̄p̄t & ita fortissim̄ d̄s admo net p̄p̄t filīū suū. ut parcat peccatis hominū. que p̄p̄t penitentiā sine p̄dicatione toleranda s̄. q̄a idē fili dī humanitatē sine peccato assūp sit. Qui n̄ debuit indui polluta carne que de semine peccati con cepta ē. quō d̄s iustus ē. & quia splendor celestis regni n̄ tangit ulla macula sordis. Et quomodo. ē posset. ut homo qui in m̄sa fe ditate maculatus ē sup̄nū regnū intraret. n̄ p̄p̄t filīū meū sine sorde incarnatū. Qui peccatores susci pit. in penitentiā purgatos. Et q̄s posset hoc facere. nisi d̄s. ūnō & eccl̄a ad filios suos conuertit.
& eos mat̄na dilectione fouet.

Sed qd̄ uides qd̄ exp̄dictis .xviij. infantib; alii quendā pu rū & lucidū splendore alii ū quendā turbidū & rubeū ful gore ad orientē uergentē inspi ciunt. hoc ē qd̄ ex filiis eccl̄e q̄s ipsa in innocentia incorruptio nis sue purgant dī percat. quidā puritate sp̄italis uite inseruissi ma uirtute fulgentē. trēna uideli cet conculcantes p̄p̄t amorē ueri solis adtendunt. quidā autē car nales facultates quas multa diuer 58 sitas uiciorum perturbat habentes. & ta-men in recta fide fideles ardentes. cuius propter supernam retributionem ad cena suspirant. Et ex his qui ipsum purum et lucidum splendorem considerant. quidam claros oculos et fortes pedes habent. ac in uentre eiusdem imaginis fortiter incedunt. quia huius cum ecclesia sectantur in mandata dei iussu iuste considerationis. & incessu bone firmitatis ponunt. ita scilicet in intima amplexione matris dilectionis ambulantes. quod nec incaducis nec incanis deuotionem sue intentionis minuant. Alii autem infirmos oculos & debiles pedes ha-bent. quoniam nec claram intentionem. nec fortiter exhibitionem ad opus pro-fectionis tenent. unde & huc & il-luc a uento periciunt. quia induer-unt morum peruersas temptationes elationis fundunt. & ipsi baculum in manibus suis tenent. & coram pro-fata imagine uolitant. ac ea alii quando semper tam tepide tangunt. quoniam contumacem fiduciam in opibus suis ponentes ecclesie dei falso rumore se ostendunt. ac ea in modum semper tam in sapientem perscrutari prudentiam notant. quia cum perfecta simulatione sapientes apparent in conspectu hominum. stulti apud deum permanere gloriam efficiunt. Quidam uero serenos oculos semper inbecilles pedes habentes. ante eandem imaginem hac & illac in aere pergit. quia cum ipsis diui-na precepta primum consideratione nis nota sunt. impede tam completionem claudantes. ita sponsi christi per discursum proprium instabilitatis de-monstrant. ut in umbra sapientiam querentes. ea in potestate sua se habere putantes. ante quam eos in mente ipsorum contingat. nulla uero illi obuineant. Alii autem in firmos oculos semper fortes pedes habent. & tam coram imagine tepide ambulant. quoniam ipsi debilem intentionem ad opus bo-num tenent. cum fortiter in opibus. iusticie incedere deberent. semper in ecclesiasticis institutionibus. simpliciter non cur-runt. quia magis ad terrena quam ad ecclesiam mentem figunt. & ideo apud deum stulti sunt. quoniam perscrutari pruden-tiam comprehendere uolunt. quod assequi non possunt. Semper ex his qui illi turbu-dum & rubrum fulgorem inspicunt. alii in profata imagine bene ornata fortiter incedunt. quia isti quamuis terrena possideant. tamen in uisceribus ecclesie ornatum laborum suorum portant. in diuina lege pe-de rectitudinis ponere non dedig-nant. cum mandatis dei obedi-tes peregrinos suscipiunt. nudos uestiunt. & esurientes alunt. O quam felices isti sunt. quoniam hoc modo deum suscipiunt. unde & ipse habitat cum illis. Alii autem ex ipsa imagine se sapientes ea impugnant. & constitutas ordinationes eius comprimunt. quoniam huius matris uiscera et dulcia nutrimenta ecclesie deserentes. illa uariis erroribus fatigant. & ideo constitutas leges ei. diuersis oppressi onibus dilaniant. de quibus quidam perfructu penitentie ad ipsam humiliter reuertunt. quia quod grauer dereliquerit digne penitendo propter restauracionem uite grauit in se pu-niant. quidam uero per neglectum ob-duracionis inclinatione mortis remanent. quoniam ipsi uitam negligentes. obdurato corde propter contumaciam & inpenitentem uerdictum iudicii mortis suscipiunt. ut in mystica uisione sua ezechiel dicit. Rex lugebit et princeps induet merore. et manus populi terre conturbabunt.

Secundum uiam eorum faciam eis. et secundum iudicia eorum iudicabo eos. & scient quia ego dominus. Quid est hoc. Anima in qua regalis rationalitas est. cum delectatione peccati ad eam sentit quia malum nouit. tunc lugubre assensum assu-mit. Quomodo. Quia illi rationa-litatis sapientia & scientia a deo inspirata est. et ideo quamuis corpori conseruiat. tamen indignum habet malum. sciens hoc non esse bonum. Unde cum diuersis criminibus popante carne polluit. alta suspiria tra-bens anhelat addominum. Cumque crimi-nosum opus ibi cum sufflatu superbie impletum fuerit. tunc corpus uelut ignominiosus princeps induet confusione principatum suum inmundicus uidelicet excreans. quoniam ut homo dolet cum uilibus ue-stimentis coopertus. ita etiam meret cum turpis rumor ad confusionem 59 sui ab ipso procedit. Quia propter & pia ua opera illorum hominum. qui in malis actibus suis ad terram prostrati sunt. acce-lestibus preceptis conturbabunt. quia uestimenta salutis id est beatitudinem cum deo non habent. quoniam quibus hec felicitas est. hos maligna contur-batio possidebit. Et ideo secundum uiam iniquitatis cui semper assistunt. scilicet peccati uiam colentes nec ullam iusticiam cum aspectu sancto mouentem inmanere cordis sui ponentes. sic faciam eis uidelicet nullam misericordiam et inpendens. quia cum scientiam boni non intelligunt non timent me. sed cum rabie peruersitatis me crea-torem omnium dedignant facien-tes quicquid uolunt. Unde & secundum iudicia eorum que sunt opera illa que in desideris suis perperant iudicabo eos nulla premia felicitatis eis reddens. sed penas in perditione et opponens. quoniam nullum honorem mihi exhibent. & in hoc sciunt quod nullus eos inde liberare poterit propter me qui dominus omnium sum. Sed qui uigilantibus oculis uidet & sonantibus auribus audit. hic misticis uerbis meis osculum amplex-ionis prebeat. que de me uiuente emanant.

Quinta visio sede patris

OSTENDIT
HEC

quod p̄fata muliebrem imaginē q̄dā splendor alb. ut max. & tanquā cristallus plucidus. a uertice usq; ad guttū ei' circūfulserat. S; agnūre usq; ad umbilicū eius quidā ali' splendor rubei coloris eā circūdederat. qui de guttūre usq; ad ubera illius uelut aurora rutilabat s; ab uberib; usq; ad umbilicū illi' quasi purpura iacincto intermixta fulgebat. Et ubi ipse uelut aurora rutilabat claritatē suā sursum ad secreta celi extendit. in qua pulcherrima et puellaris imago nudo capite & sub nigris capillis & rubra tunica que circa pedes ei' difflebat uidua apparuit. Et audiui uocē de celo dicentē. Hec ē floriditas insupna syon. mat. & flos rosarū & liliū conualliu. O floriditas. filio potentissimi regis desponsaberis eui & nominatissima plem gignes. cū uirtūte tuo confortaberis. Et circa eandē puellā uidi maximā turbā hominū. lucidiorē sole flantē. qui om̄s miro modo auro & gemis ornati erant. na qd etiā quidā illorū incaptib; suis uclati candidis uclaminib; aurea bona circūornatis fuerūt. supra quorū uertice similitudo gl̄e ineffabilis trinitatis uelut in sup̄i apice demonstrata ē. q̄si in sp̄a in ipsis uclaminib; uelut sculpta apparuit. & in frontib; ipsorū agnū di ac in collo eorū species hoīs. et in dextra aure cherubin & in sinistra alia species angelica. na qd & de ipsa similitudine gl̄e sup̄ne trinitatis ad has species quasi aureus radius se extenderet. S; int̄ hos quidā alii apparuerūt. qui in fulas incaptib; suis & pallia episcopalis officii circa humeros habebant. Et iterū audiui uocē ex alto dicentē. Iste s̄ filius syon. & cū eis s̄ cythare cytharedorū & omne genus musicorū ac uox totius leticie & gaudiū gaudiū. S; sub eodē splendore ubi ipse uelut aurora rutilabat. uidi iter celi & tram densissimas tenebras apparere. que tanti horroris erant utraquā humana lingua effari possit. Et rursū audiui uocē de celo dicentē. Si filius di in cruce passus n̄ ēēt iste tenebre nullomodo p̄mitterent hominē ad sup̄nā claritatē puenire. Ubi autē idē splendor quasi purpura iacincto intermixta fulgebat. forit̄ p̄dictā muliebrem imaginē constringens ardebat. S; alius splendor ut candida nubes. eandē imaginē ab umbilico & deorsū quo usq; ul na n̄ dū creuerat honeste circūdederat. Et huius tres splendorē circa ipsā imaginē se late diffundentes plurimos gradus et scalas in ea bene & decenter ordinatas ostende-bant. S; cū hec uiderē. ex nimio tre-more qui me apprehenderat. intus dissolutis uiribus corruui. nec alicui responsū dare ualui. Et ecce maxi-mus splendor uelut manus tēgit me. unde uires & uocē recepi. Et iterū audiui uocē ex illo m̄ dicentē.

Magna misteria s; hec. Considera enī solē & lunā & stellas. Ego formaui solē ut luceat indie. & lunā & stellas ut luceant in nocte. Sol autē significat filiū meū qui de corde meo exiit. & mundū illuminauit cū natus ē ex uirgine in fine tēporis. sic & sol egrediens mundū illustrat cū orit̄ circa finē noctis. S; luna ecclesiam eadē filio meo in uera et supna desponsatione desponsatā designat. Et ut luna semp̄ incremē-tū & defectū in sua constitutione habet. s; a se ipsa n̄ ardet nisi qd alumine solis incendit̄. sic & ecclesia in circūmione motionis ē. ita qd filiū ei sepe perficiunt in incrementis uirtutū. et qd sepe deficiunt in di-uersitate morū. atq; in dispersione aduersitatu. ita qd multo cūctis in misteris suis p̄ rapacissimos lu-pos impugnat. uidelicet p̄ malignos hoiēs tā malos xpianorū quā iudeorū et paganorū. et in hoc p̄se-met ipsā ad tollendam n̄ accen-ditur. s; in me p̄ filiū meū ut in bono p̄seueret illuminat̄. Stelle autē a se differentes in claritate fulgo-ris sui. significant p̄p̄los diuersi ordinis ecclesiastice religionis.

Unde etiā uidet̄ qd p̄fata muliebrē imaginē quidā splendor albi. ut nix. & tāquā cristallis p̄ lucidus. auerſe usq; ad guttur ei circūfulget. quia ecclesiam uidelicet incorruptā sponsā circūdat ap̄lica doctrina. que candidissimā incarnationē illius enunciauit qd de celo in uterū uirginis descendit et qui forissimū ac lucidissimū speculū omniū credentū ē. ita qd eandē ecclesiam ipsa doctrina ab hoc inicio cū primū edificari cepit. usq; ad tēpus illud. cū cibū uite fortit̄ de glutare ualuit. splendi-dissime eā circūfulgens fidelit̄ circūdedit. Quom̄. Ap̄lica doctrina circūfulsit ecclesiam in capite cū ap̄li primū illā suā p̄dicatio-ne ceper̄t edificare. scilicet cū p̄ diuersa loca discurrentes. colleger̄t op̄arios. qui illā in catholica fide roborarent. et qd ipsi p̄ sp̄nteros et ep̄scopos ac omne ecclesiasticū ordinē prouiderent. atq; in ira uiroꝝ ac feminarū qd sub coniugio s; et cetera talia fideliter constituerent. Quia p̄pter eandē doctrinā subsequunt̄. pigmēta ru habentes similitudinē sacer-dotū legalis testimonii. qd sub lege circūcisionis positi erant. in 60 teriori cibo nutrire populos unde etiam apostoli ordines illos eligebant. cum quibus ecclesiam superna inspiratio ne exornabant. Quid est hoc. Nam sequaces eorum inuice ipsorum saluberrima pignora gestantes fideliter pla-ttas & uillas & ciuitates atque alia loca regionum & terrarum pertransiunt. et populo diuinam legem annuntiant.

Ipsi enim sunt exequi patres & dispensatores ad ecclesiasticam disciplinam omni populo in doctrina sua preferendum. et ei ad cibum uite dispensandum. ita quod etiam se tales in uita sua exhibe-ant. ne cuius inopia eorum offendebant. sed ut recte post ipsos gra-diantur. quia ipsi hoc officium ha-bent. ut apte cibum uite populo sub-ministrant. & unicuique fideliter of-ficia deseruire ordinent. semetip-sos etiam ita constringentes. ne carnalem copulam appetant. quomodo spirituale esca credentibus prebere. & quia etiam immaculatum sacrificium deo offerre debent. ut innocen-te abel prefigurabat. sicut de ipso scriptum est. Abel quoque obtu-lit de primogenitis gregis suorum & de adipibus eorum. Quid est hoc. In ortu surgentis sancti sanctificatio regalis ostensionis in illo qui inno-centis in uita sua erat effulsit. quod donum omnipotens dei non transisset. fortiter tetigit. Quomodo. Quia abel in sua integritate obtulit deo intentionem uoluntatis sue.
& plenum officium eadem uoluntatis. cum cognauit in corde suo illi offerre primum germinum quod in substantia sua habuit. & cum illud etiam perfecto ope compleretur. ita uidelicet summum pa-trē honorans. etque debitam reuerentiam exhibens. Unde etiam sicut idem abel gregi suo prefuit. & ut cum pascens eustodiunt. & ut etiam simplici deuotio-ne deo obtulit de primis emissionibus. et ac de pinguib. nutritiis earum de emissionibus. ita etiam predicti pigmentarum. qui filius ecclesie. id est omnibus christi ipsius dispensatione ad pascendum eos placuit. sed ipsos in uerbis doctrine ecclesiastice discipline fideliter nutri-ant et eos ab insidiis antiqui in sidiatoris fortiter muniant. ac etiam sincera consideratione inspectori omnium aliquas donationes ecclesie offerant. Quomodo. Quomodo si illos per omnia perfectos facere non possunt. tamen aliquem fructum ex ipsis egredientem deo offerant. primum scilicet rectam intentionem bonae uoluntatis eorum. quasi simplex germinum de primoge-nitis gregis ipsorum. ac deinde perfectum opus operationis in eadem uoluntate illorum uelut suauem fructum de adipibus eorum. Sed unde hoc fuit. quod idem abel deum tam deuote coluit. Vi-delicet castitas integritatis eum ad tam deuotionem impulerat.

Quia propter qui in consecratione constituitur deo sacrosanctum sa-crificium offerre debent in suam tate castitatis adaptare ipsi accendant. quia si ipsi auctoris cor-ruptionis s̄. quomodo incorruptio ne uulneratis manū salutaris medi camen porrigere possunt. Et idō ut aliis tanto fiducialis salutare remediū conferre ualeant. uolo ut filiū meū in amore castitatis fortit uerint. Qd si ceciderint. festinent ut cūius p̄penitentiā surgant. et in hoc ignominia peccati uelut nudi fugiant. salubre medicinā requirentes. et abel. cuius sacrifi ciū dō acceptū erat. fideliter se quentes. Sed q̄ ex his in clausu ra subiectionis in amore filii mei se continent. et in morib. suis in sti tutionē maiōr suōr quā me inspi rant. prouiderē obseruant. sollici tudinē curationis pigritiarōr n̄ habentes. tam quāuis onera anx ietatis eorū n̄ gerant. quō p̄p̄t cōna p̄mia maiorib. suis subiecti s̄. cū eisdē pigritiaris sup̄nā mercede inlecta ciuitate sibimet acquirūt.

Quod autē uides quō agutu re usq. ad umbilicū eidem imaginis quidā alius splendor rubri coloris eā circūdat. hoc ē quia post doctrinā ap̄lōr cū eccla sia roborata ē qd salutare cibū ueracit̄ ualuit discernere. et eū ad interiora fortitudinis sue trans mittere. surrex̄ nobilissima p̄fec tio eccl̄astice religionis. que sup nā dulcedinē flagrantis ardore degustauit. & se asprime constri gens. ad iniectionē secretioris for titudinis se extendit n̄ tam ad diuisionē carnalis amaritudinis pueniens. quō copula humane coniunctionis abiicit. Quomodo.

Nā idē splendor degustare usq. ad umbilicū illi uelut aurora rum ulat. quō eadē p̄fectio a gustu mirabilis uegetationis addulcis suma nutrita eccl̄astice religi onis in uirginea iocunditate se dilatauit. ita qd etā ab ube rib. usq. ad umbilicū illi q̄si pur pura iacincto int̄mixta fulget quia a nobilissimis educationib. ad constrictiōē int̄ime castita tis se muniunt uidelicet passionē filii mei p̄p̄t sup̄nā dilectionē quā in corde suo fidelit̄ habuit imitando. Quia p̄p̄t & ubi ipse uelut aurora rumulat claritatē suā sursum ad secreta celi exten dit. quō illa p̄fectio que in uir ginitatis honore floret uirtutē suā n̄ deorsū ad trena s̄. sursum ad illa que s̄ in celestib. mirabi liter diligit. In quo pulcher rima & puellaris imago nudo capite & sub nigris capillis appa ret. qd ē serenissima et ab omni fednate humane concupiscentie innocens uirginitas nuda men tē ab omni uinculo corruptionis habens. s̄. tam n̄ dū p̄fecte fatiga tionē tenebrescentiū cogitatio nū in filis suis quādiu in mun do s̄. deserere ualens. cui tamen ut resistat. fortit̄ se opponit.
Unde & rubra tunica que circa

61 v
pedes ei diffiunt induit q̄a p̄su dore laboris inuirtuosis opib; usq; ad finē late & beatę p̄fectio nis p̄seuerat scilicet circūdata uarietate uirum illū imitans qui plenitudo sc̄ntis ē. que etiā ut tibi in secreto sup̄ni lumi nis ostendit ē nobilissimū germ̄ in celesti iherlīm uidelicet gl̄a et decus illoꝝ qui ob amorē uir ginitatis sanguinē suū fuderūt. et qui etiā incandore humilita tis uirginitatē suā p̄xp̄o obser uantes in sua unitate pacis. qui eue runt. quō ipsa filio om̄p̄tis dī q̄ rex cunctoꝝ ē desponsata. nobi lissimā p̄le idē elegantissimū chorū uirginū ei p̄tulit cū in pa ce eccl̄e p̄ficiens confortata est.

Quod autē circa candē puellā uides maximā turbā ho minū lucidiore sole flantē qui om̄s miro modo auro et gemis ornati s̄. hoc ē q̄d ardentissimis amplexib; nobilissimā uirgini tatē p̄cipuus chorus uirginū cir cūplectit. q̄ om̄s ardentiore clari tate corā dō fulgent quā sol in t̄ra apparet. q̄a se ipsos concu lantes mortē uirilit̄ deuicerūt. unde etiā mirabilē insūma sa pientia p̄p̄t clarissima opa que p̄xp̄o humili gesserūt. decemissi me exornant. Qua p̄p̄t et quidā illoꝝ incaptib; suis uelam candi dis uelaminib; aurea bona circū ornati s̄. quia ipsi in gl̄a uirgi uirginitatis fulgentes demonstray q̄d hi qui decus uirginitatis ap petunt. mentes suas ab om̄i noxio calore circūtegant. et candorē innocentie pulcherrimo fulgore castitatis decorati fidelit̄ app̄hen dant. Sup̄ quoꝝ ueraces similitu do ineffabilis trinitatis uelut tibi sup̄ius typice demonstrata ē q̄si in spa in ipsius uelaminib; uelut sculp ta apparet. quō ostendunt q̄d in temones hominū honorē sup̄ne & gl̄ose trinitatis. ut tibi in ostensi one misterii uerissime p̄signatū ē in cōphensione amoris et stabilita te castitatis firmit̄ & strenue tene ant. Qd & in frontib; ipsōꝝ agnus dī. ac in collo eōꝝ species hoīs. et in dextra aure cherubim. et in sinistra alia species angelica declarat. q̄a in reuerentia castitatis sue man suetudinē filii dī imitabunt. pe tulantiā sup̄bi colli deponentes.

& se ipsos fragiles hoīs consideran tes. in p̄sp̄itate etiā auditionis sue uerā & indeficientē scienciā am plectentes. ac in occursum aduer sitate ei dē auscultationis sue an gelica p̄sidia appetentes. ita q̄d & de ipsa similitudine gl̄e sup̄ne trinitatis ad has species q̄si aure us radius se extendit. quō ineffa bilis trinitas infidelib; hominib; q̄ uirtutes querūt. & diabolicas seduc tiones fugiunt. mirabilia miracu lorū p̄funde sapientie sue opari n̄ desinit. S; inter hos quidā alii apparent. qui infulas in capitis suis & pallia episcopalis officii circa humeros habent. quō int̄ illos qui in uirginitatis honore florent etiā quidā in sup̄na ciuitate con-sistunt. q̄ dignitatē antiquorū pa-trū & gl̄am sup̄ioris magistrū in sc̄lo strenue gerentes. tam decore uirginitatis n̄ pdiderūt. Unde etiā ut audis. om̄s isti q̄ cū suspiris suis p̄celesti amore integritatē suā conseruauerūt in celesti habitatione n̄ filie syon dicunt. quia filiū meū uirginitatis flore in uirgini-tatis amore unitū s̄. Idōq. & cū eis s̄ exspiraciones sonorū sp̄itūū. et germina cunctorū sonitūū ac uolantia ornam̄ta p̄sparū m̄tūū. et aurtā uisio fulgentiū lapidū ac gemmarū. Quomodo. Quia hoc habent de filio dī q̄d de t̄no sonus erat cui oīs chorus uirginū in maximo desiderio concinit. uidelicet nouū cantū synphonibando. ut ioh̄s dilectus uirgo testat̄ dicens.

Et cantabant q̄si canticū nouū. my.
Ante sedē. & ante quatuor animalia. et seniores. Quid ē hoc.
 In illis fidelib. q̄ bona intentione castitatē amplectentes. uirginitatē suā p̄di amore illibata conser-uant. bona uoluntas ipsorū in laudē creatoris sui mirabiliter erūpit. Quomodo. Quia in auro ra uirginitatis quē filio dī semp adheret fortissima laus abscon-dita ē. cui nullū t̄renū officiū.

nec ulla ligatura legis resistere ualens. in uoce exultationis ad gl̄am dī celeste carm̄ decantat. Quom̄.
 Videlicet quō uelox iter habens. canticū illud in nouitate libera-tis mirabiliter p̄mit q̄d ante quā unigenitus dī quērus flos uirgi-nitatis ē incarnatus de mundo ad celos rediens ad dextrā patris resedit. auditū n̄ ē. s̄. tunc quasi no-ui mores qui prius uisi n̄ s̄ cū ui-demur in stupore habent. ita hoc nouū misterīū q̄d prius auditū non ē tunc in celestib. resonans in honore uirginitatis cognitū ē. scilicet ante maiestātē dī q̄a d̄s hoc facere potuit et ante quatuor rotas. quē quatuor partes mundi p̄currentes. uernatē om̄s iusticie & humanitatis saluatoris ue-lit animalia in noua lege fere-bant. & ante illos antiquos qui spū sc̄o inbuti uia rectitudinis in ueteri lege hominib. suo itinere demonstrabant. Quid ē hoc. Quia d̄s in noua gr̄a austeritatē antique institutionis delinuit. ix.
Sed q̄a uirginitas tā gl̄osa ante d̄m ē. idō qui eā ex uoluntate sua dō obtulerūt. eā prudenticonseruent. quō. s̄c̄m p̄positū cū sūma deuotione uirginitatis sus-ceptū fidelit̄ custodiendū ē. Unde etiā qui idē sacramentū adierūt. caueant ne retrorsū incedant.
 Nā ipsi carissimi imitatores filii mei s̄. cū se ita dō offerūt ut n̄ sint ligati in opprobrio coniugii. nec oncrati seclari causa. carnale co pula respicientes. ne illi cu omni sollicitudine carnis sue subiecti sint. s. hoc cupientes ut glori innocentie innocentis agni ad herant. Qua ppter uir ille qui in animo suo de liberat. ne ulla co sta sibi copulet. s. hoc desiderat ut in pudore uirginitatis ppter amore filii mei pseueret soda litate ei accipiet si tam in opib. eide castitatis pseuerauerit. qa hec sca munera in uoto sacra tissimi pachi ecclesiice religio nis ob glam supne remunera tionis eide filio meo obtulit. S. si ille postea ide pachu relinquer. ppter turpe stimulu carnis sue ad ulteriu ppetrauerit libertate sua in seruitute redegit quo honore colli sui ubi filiu meū pudice imitari debuit. p turpitu dine delectationis sue nequiter corrupt & qa mdaciū pūlit uouens se caste uiuere qd n in pleuit. Unde etiā si in eade culpa temeritatis sue pseuerauerit. districtū iudiciū iustissimi iu dicis. inde sustinebit. quo nec turpitudō nec mendaciū in ce lesti gla apparebit. Quod si amaro fletu ante finē suū de hoc reatu suo penitentiā fecerit. tam unda sanguinis filii mei illū suscipit qui culpā suā ex horruit. n autē ipsū int soda les suos q gla integritatis florēt ponit quo societate illor deserēs. libertate pachi sui abiicit. et eā in seruitute peccati redegit. S.

& puella que ex uoluntate sua in scissima desponsatione eide filio meo offert. ab ipso decem sime suscipit. qui eā hoc modo sibi coniunctā uult habere con sortio suo. Quomodo. Ut illū ca sta dilectione amplectat. sicut et ipse eā in secreto suo diligit. quo illi semp amabilis ē. quia magis eū quā mērenū sponsū querit. Qd si pachu ei postea in gressa fuerit tunc corā his. qui in celesti gaudio s polluta erit. unde etiā si in eade temeritate pseuerauerit. supna gla iusto iudicio carebit. S. si penituerit suscipit. sic ancilla & n sic dñā. quo regale desponsationē dese runt. et quia magis aliū amant quā illū quē amare debuit. ille quoq. q eā seducendo uiola uit si culpā suā emdare uolue rit. ita penitet qsi celū rupisset. ne in pdmone mortis occidat. quia supnā desponsationem temere corruptit. Quid ē hoc.
Nam si aliquis magnus prin ceps sponsā ualde sibi carā habet. quā seruus seruoꝝ suoꝝ adulterando corruptit. quid dñs ille facit. Uere in maxima ira excrementū suū mittit ut illū pdat. quo eū in ppris uiscerib.

x.

xi.

63 suis confudit. Qd si tunc seruus ille timens omne exercitū illū exorat ut p ipso intredat et in sup ad pedes dñi sui flebiliter cadit. quatinus sibi pareat. tē idē rex ppter bonitatē suā et ppter pentionē illorū eū uiuere si nens. societate conseruorū suorū illi reddit. s; tam eū ita ut ceteros interiores et familiares amicos suos nō remunerat. quatinus ei int alios illi consimiles conseruantes conseruos ipsius debntā grām exhibeat. Ita et hunc erit. qui etiam regis sponsā seducendo ui olauerit. Idē enī rex in rectissi mo helo iudicia sua exercens. il lū ad pditionē trāsmittit. quia eū in hoc facto qsi illusorē in ob liuione mētis sue habuit. S; si miser ille diē huius indignatio nis anticipans. electos dī suppli citer exorauerit. ut uenā sibi a dño suo petant. et in sup humani tate saluatoris sui flebiliter in spec erit. quatinus p grām ipsius a pec cato suo absoluat. tunc idē rex sanguinē hunc q̄ predeceptione humani generis effusus ē & di lectionē supnoꝝ eiuū ad tēdes. illū a statu suo et a diabolica potestate in impuacionē eam eri pit ac eū in saluationē beatarū animarū ponit. s; tam tripudio regalis desponsationis quo ce teri amici dī his sacris uirginib. que filio meo supna desponsa none dicant s congaudent. nō decorabit sicut et illū qui pu dore uirginitatis amiserit deco re uirginitatis nō coronabit. qm uis ei int alios electos suos gau diū insupna ciuitate cū inesti mabili remuneratione tribuat.

Sed qd sub eodē splendore ubi ipse uelut aurora rui lat uidet int cētū & trā densissi mas tenebras apparere. que tan ti horroris s; ultra quā humana lingua effari possit. hoc ē qd sub uirginali glā inter spiritalē et carnalē intellectū casus primi parentis q̄ densissimus in obfus catione infidelitatis erat. ita ut trorē illi. nullus hominū expli care ualere. apte cognitus ē.
Quomodo. Quia in incarnatio ne filii dī q̄ ex uirgine natus ē. celestē desiderii ascendit & tē na concupiscentia claudicauit. quō p uariatio ade p sanguinē eidē filii dī mirabiliter in saluatio nē restaurata ē. cū prius illā mul tus ugi unigenitus dī a patre missus in mundū dissoluere pos set. Unde ut audis utripica mani festatione. nisi idē filii sanguinē suū p salutē hominū fudisset. eadē transgressio ita cōprime ret hominē. ut ad illud gaudiū supnoꝝ eiuū ptingere nō posset.

Quod autē ubi idē splendor quasi purpura iacincto in termixta fulget. forte p dicta > xij.

> xij.

muliebre imaginē constringens: viii. ardet: hoc designat pfectionē illoꝝ qui passionē filii mei in cari tatis ardore imitantes strenue ecclesiam in constrictione sua exor nant: Quomodo. Quō ipsi s̄ alta edificatio surgentis thesauri in diuino consilio: quia cū ecclesia tā roborata conualuit: egressus ē ad decorē illius iuuenis odor uo uens n̄r: secreta regenerationis.
Quid ē hoc. Quia tunc surrexit mirabilis ordo: qui filiū meū in specie exempli sui tenet: quō ut idē filius n̄r uenit in mundū de cōmuni pp̄lo absclusus: ita et hec acies conuersat̄ in sc̄lo dere liguo pp̄lo separata. Nā ut bal samū de arbore suauit̄ sudat: sic et pp̄ls iste primū in heremo et in abscondito singularit̄ exortus ē: & deinde uelut arbor ramos suos expandit: paulatim in mul titudine plenitudinis p̄ficiens.
Et istū pplm̄ benedixi et sc̄ificauī. quō ipsi in s̄ amantissimi flores rosarū et liliorū q̄ sine humano ope in agro germinant: sicut et pplm̄ hunc nulla lex ad hoc con stringit: ut tā artā uia appetat: s̄ ipse illā me suauit̄ inspirante sine p̄cepto legis sua uoluntate aggredit̄: plus faciens quā sibi iussū sit: unde & plurimā merce de inde acquirit: sicut et in euāglio ubi samaritanus illū uulneratū homine in stabulū duxit scriptū ē.

A Altera die protulit duos denarios: et dedit stabulario & ait: Cu ra illius habe: & q̄d cūq; sup̄ erga ueris ego cū rediero reddā tibi. Qd ē hoc. In prima die saluus uideli cet cū filius dī mirabiliter incarnat̄ corporalit̄ in mundo manebat: multa & admiranda opa in hu manitate sua usq; ad resurrectio nē ipsius p̄fert: p̄que uulneratū homine ad uera remedia salubrit̄ reduxit. S̄ altera die idē cū om̄ia mysteria uernantis post resurrecti onē ipsius in ecclesia apte posita s̄. protulit in typica manifestatione nouū & uetus testamentū: sc̄li cet et̄ne uite certissimā demon strationē et credenti pp̄lo dul cissimū cibū. Et hec scripta de dit p̄grām suā pastorib; ecclesie q̄ gregē ipsius custodiunt: & ait il lis in uerbis blande admonitio nis sue. In ecclesiasticis constitutio nib; p̄curate xp̄ianā cohortē quā in sanguine meo redēptā uobis commisi: hoc habentes in sollicitudine ur̄a ne in aliquib; que p̄ueniunt ad uitā deficient erret. Qd cūq; autē his que uobis seruanda tradidi in bona uolun tate ur̄a sup̄ addideritis: uideli cet plus facientes quā uobis p̄cep tū sit: ego qui ductor et saluator ur̄ sū: nunc mundū relinquens et ad patrē ascendens: cū iterū rediero mundū iudicare: eūq; in indeficientē stabilitatē po uere pora labor ure uobis serui quis inlegu de acci meo gl amant gneti laris de

tant ut sunt in te ab ho constit spiratio hi plus a sit qd sa in statu facit qd se in uer enā et ap tes: & in sp te mē ber seruanda ca doctrin disposita uerfū mun offendere cū apti uia narent: lue rū syon ma ta ē: sc̄liet fortit con
ap̄scenā

64 nere. na qđ amplius plabema tē pora n̄ debilitat. tunc mercede laboris ur̄i & bone uoluntatis ur̄e. cū augmentato fructu reddā uobis. Et dicā tibi o fidelis ex pbe serue. qui fidelit̄ ministras. Quis quis plus uoti sui addit quā sibi in lege p̄ceptū sit. duplicē merce dē accipiet. quia illū in nomine meo glōsū habeo. quō me ualde amant. Et ego dico. Nec uir gineū genus. nec hic ordo singu laris deuotionis. nec qui eos imi tant ut hi qui inheremo iacent sunt in p̄cepto legis. sicut et p̄phe te ab hominib; sub carnali lege constituti n̄ s̄. quia tantū mea in spiratione madentes exorn s̄. s; hi plus addunt quā eis p̄ceptū sit. qđ sacerdotalis ordo et reliq̄ institutio sacerdotalis officii n̄ facit. qđ hec in abrahā et in moy se in ueteri testam̄to iussa s̄. sicut etiā et apli illa ex eadē lege tollen tes. & in spū scō ea scđm uolunta tē meā bene ordinantes ecclē con seruanda tradiderūt. S; & ipsa apli ca doctrina in euglō p̄ filiū meū disposita ē. ubi discipuli ei in uni uersū mundū uerba uernans effundere missi s̄. Qđ tunc. Nā cū apli uia salutis p̄p̄lo annun tiarent lucidissima aurora filia rū syon in amore filii mei exor ta ē. scilicet illoꝝ qui carnē suā forit constrinxerūt et malā con cupiscentiā in semet ipsis durtē mortificauerūt. Et sicut tunc hec casta uirginitas in ardente amo re filiū meū subsecuta ē. na etiā hic in ualde amabilis ordo sin gularis deuotionis in carnationē illius imitatus ē. qui s̄ recta tēpla mea uidelicet ut chori angloꝝ me colemes. et eidē unigeniti mei passionē & mortē ac sepulturā. in corpore suo portantēs. n̄ tam na ut gladio aut aliis t̄rorib; ex quib; hoīes deficiunt moriant̄. s; filiū meū sic imitantes. qđ uo luntatē carnis sue abiciunt. cū sc ab omnib; sc̄larib; reb; & or namentis in quib; mundus letatur aufert. ut in euglō de iohē lucer na mundi scriptū ē. Ipse autē ioh̄s habebat uestimentū de pilis camelox. & bonā pelliciā circa lū bos suos. Quid ē hoc. Ite in quo diuina grā mirabilē abstinentiā suscitauerat. p̄ eandē grām habe bat defensionē uirtutis hui; qđ in m̄te sua honorē & diuicias sc̄la res contēpserat. & qđ etiā p̄ con strictionē quā in mortificatione uicioꝝ circa uoluptatē carnis sue posuerat. petulantēs motus eidē corporis sui forit domuerat. cū maiores edificationes quā p̄de cessores sui instrueret. uidelicet cū p̄ duras et aspas uias incedens. trenas concupiscentias conculea ret. Quomodo. Quia plurima opa uirtutū strennue faciens. castitatē ardentē amantē. p̄bens etiā his

xv.

lvj.

lvj.

640 ma medicamē qui illud deuote exquirebant. Unde etiā illi qui s uuenis odor uouens iter secreta regenerationis. cundē iohannē in maximis tenebris scli lucem. pacu tissimas opationes beatarū uirtu tū inuita sua subsequentes. inceptā altitudinē & latitudinē mundi aliū rerū fugiant. & in constri ctione diffusi animi sui corpus suū coercentes masā concupiscentiā abiciant. ita excellētiōrib. in strumētis quā hū q̄ ante ipsos sim plicit̄ in uia dñi gradientes. sim plicia habitacula faciebant. serenissime fulgentes. acutā & an gustā semitā arripiant. scilicet. xviii. ea quē in uoluptatib. scli s̄ forit̄ sub pedib. suis conculcantes. Quo modo. Quō semetipsos despicien tes. & corpus suū seruitutē xpī in opatione uirtutū subicientes. petulantia in austeritate morū suorū declinent. sic p̄ bona exēpla sua ceteris hoīb. lucidissime ful gentes. Nā etiā angelicū chorū fidelit̄ imitant. Quomodo. In abiectione sclarū. quō ut an geli nec trēna querūt nec concu piscunt. ita & isti eos hoc modo mirabiliter subsecunt. qd̄ om̄a caduca contempnunt. Vnde etiā sicut fili m̄s ē nunciū salu tiferorū sacramtorū. et sacerdos sa cerdotū ac ppheta pphetarū & edificator felicū turriū ita etiā si necessitas se opposuerit qui in huiusmodi hoīes radicē odoris eū utilitate habet. sit nunci' & sa cerdos. sit ppheta & consiliator ecclesiasticē edificationis. nec omīno abbis separandus ē si tantū ocu lus clariatus in eo lucet. nec ad usū ecclesiasticū dormiat. s; ad in strumētū ei' uigilet. occupatio nē tantū sclaris causis & conta gia sclarū rerū abiciens. quia nec angeli nec sacerdotes. nec pphete iusticiā dī occultabunt s; tā ex p̄cepto illius inuenerunt pferunt. quē admodū de iohē qui harun do uento agnata n̄ fuit. cui' au sternatē isti subsequunt in euigilo perū scriptū ē. Et egrediebantur ad illū oīs uidet regio & ie rosolymite unuersi. & bapti bant ab illo in iordane flumine. confitemes peccata sua. Qd̄ ē hoc.

In suspiriis et gemitib. a delecta tione uiciorū egrediebantur ad illū in quo diuina grā opabat. tota simplicis confessionis deuota uoluntas. & uisionis pacis una nimit omīs effectus. scilicet illo hominū quorū corda p̄ timorē mortis ad amorē uite concussa fuerant. Quomodo. Quō idē iohs p̄cursor uertans. & amaritudi nē & dulcedinē eis inuinauerat.
Unde & ipsi p̄ fusionē penitendi nis a rectitudine ei' flagitabant. quatinus p̄ declinationē malorū. et p̄ rectionē bonorū confessionē seclerū suorū ponentes. illū mere

xvii.

65 rent adipisci. qui ipsis non in umbra antiquis remedium de nunci-aret. sed qui eis in luce nouitatis ueram salutem conferret. Sicut idem iohannes homines ad se uenientes docuit.
& flumine irrigationis perfudit. uerba penitudinis eorum ad honorem uenturi saluatoris qui ueniens salutem fidelibus commisit. & illi face-re non negligant. quod testimonio scifi-cationis fulminantis operis plus addunt. uidelicet per inspirationem scela-rum rerum nouam austeritatem secundum similitudinem illam aggredientes. quam excepto eisdem testimonio scifi-cationis per generationem spiritus & aque in abiectione diaboli seruimus nouum hominem induentes adiert. sed ubi stimuli impellentis necessitatis se obtulerunt. ad monendo. & erigendo. ac sanando. manuum deuoti iuuam^{tu} petentibus. porrigant. si tam ad eandem dignitatem ecclesiastica promotione digne perueniant. & in hoc predecessorem suum fideliter imitent. ut quod ille uidit in umbra ostendit. ipsi in nouitate lucis ueraciter compleant.
Ipsi enim sunt zona ecclesie tam ualde constringentes. quomodo incarnatione filii mei occupati sunt. et quia etiam angelicum ordinem exercent. scilicet necessitates in nullis horis cantando cum sonitu. aut orando in compunctione. non autem excussis cla-moribus. ut in uoluis puluis aut aridus absque uiriditate compuncti scilicet spiritus in abrenuntiatione.

onis. et quia etiam non recusant operari per necessitatem suam non tam in humanibus. suis secularia querentes. sed cum caritate & humilitate se ipsos acute circumspicientes. O ipsi fortissimi atque amantissimi populi mei cum in eis afflictione illa adtendo. quam filius meus in carne sua passus est. quo & ipsi secundum mortem illi moriuntur cum uoluntate sua deserentes.
& propter unam etiam magisterio se subicientes. secundum impium plauis suarum gradiuntur. Quia propter et uestitui aliorum populorum non assimilantur. quia et ipse integer. incorrupta incarnatione filii mei que plurimum distat a peroratione aliorum hominum ostendit. Nam eandem in carnatione legale impium uiri ac mulieris non tetigit. sicut nec iste populus ulla conscripta lege ad hanc constrictionem cogendus est. sed qui eam per dilectionem dei sua uoluntate uouendo aggreditur. hic in ipsa perseueret. ne retro cedens corruat. sicut lucifer. qui lucem deseruit & tenebras recepit. Idem enim uestitus secundum coruscationem superiorum spirituum cum aliis subtilitatis sue circumuolat. & incarnatio-nem ac sepulturam filii mei desig-nat. quia signum eisdem incarnationis in eodem uestitu habet. qui habet quod se ad fortissimam obedientiam exhibet. et signum eisdem sepulture in ipso uestitu portat. qui in operibus iusticie secularibus cau-

xix.

65 sis abrenuntiat. Unde q̄ pura uoluntate eodē uestim̄ induit. salubri remedio alleuat. Et idō qui illū p̄inuationē sp̄s sc̄i in benedictionib; suscipit n̄ illū ab iciat. quō qui cū p̄abiectionē p̄seuerantis mali contēpserit cū illo erit q̄ anglicū ordinē spre uit & in morte sepultus ē. Qd̄ ē hoc. Quō hic p̄p̄s ex̄cepto legis ad hanc constrictiōē stimulat. non ē. s̄. uoluntate sua aggr̄es sus ē pactū meū obseruare. et ita eccl̄am meā sua sc̄a conuer satione illustrare. Quomodo. It̄ post primā lucē diei auroa so lus aspiciūt. ita ordo iste post uo ces ap̄lōr̄ exortus ē. Quid ē hoc.

xx.
Prima lux diei fidelia uerba ap̄lice doctrine designat auroa uero inueniūt huius conuer sationis que primū in solitudi ne & in speluncis post eandē doctrinā germinauit demon strat. sol autē discretā & bene dispositā uia deinde in seruo meo benedicto declarat quē ego in ardente igne p̄transiui docens eū in uestim̄ conuersa tionis sue incarnationē filii colere & in abnegatione uolun tatis sue passionē illi imitari. quia idē benedictus ē q̄si atter moyses in lapideo foramine ia cens. et corpus suū in multa asp̄ritate ob amore uite cruci ans et constringens quē ad mo dū etiā primus moyses in lapi deis tabulis ex̄cepto meo asp̄a & durā legē scribens iudeis de dit. S; ut filius m̄s eandē legē p̄ dulcedinē eugl̄i p̄forauit sic etiā benedictus. famulus m̄s p̄ positū huius ordinis qd̄ ante ip sū durissima conuersatio fuit p̄ dulcedinē inspirationis sp̄s sc̄i discretā & planā uia fecit. ac p̄ hoc plurimā cohortē sue religionis collegit. ut etiā filius m̄s p̄suauitate odoris sui xp̄ia nū p̄p̄m sibi coadunauit. Et deinde sp̄s sc̄s cordib; electōr̄ suor̄ suspiria uite habentū inspira uit. ut sicut in lauacro baptis mi crimina p̄p̄lōr̄ abluunt ita & ipsi in significatione passionis ei⁹ de si ui mei sc̄l̄ares pompas abicerent.

Quomodo. Nā ut homo ad iabo lica potestate in sc̄o baptismo con uertit crimina uetis macule abi ciens. sic & isti t̄renas causas in sig no uestim̄is sui abnegant. in quo etiā & anglicū signū habent. Quo modo. Ipsi enī in uoluntate mea p̄fectores p̄p̄i mei positi sunt.

Unde qui ex ipsis in sc̄a conuer satione p̄bati inueniunt pasto res eccl̄e meę constituant. q̄a et angl̄i qui nulla macula t̄rene car se tangunt custodes p̄p̄i mei s̄.
Nā sicut angl̄i corā dō in duplici honore s̄. sic & hoīes huius religio nis s̄ in duplici uita. Quomodo.
Angl̄i in celestib; dō sine m̄m̄is fione ad

Sic
tā fam sui die
me
hui
fene
phat eccl
sa ul
te aggr
one
seu
ne
sua
et sui
luse serab
mi
dissi mil firo
con
spl
tā
o
ta dar dore
ap
tud

66 fione seruiunt. & etiā mīris hoīes a diabolicis insidiis sēp p̄regant.
Sic et p̄p̄s iste anglicū ordinē imi-tat. cū t̄r̄na despiciens dō cotidie famulat. & cū etiā reliquos hoīes suis orationib; a malignis spiritib; die ac nocte defendit. Unde si eccl̄a mea rectū pastore n̄ habet tē p̄p̄s huiusmodi religionis clamando & flendo ipsi subueniat. et q̄ meo p̄batus inuenit si necesse fuerit sup extensū sacerdotiū suscipiens ipsā in celo meo strenue defendat.

Nullus autē religionē istā repente & uelut ex sono euigilans aggrediat. nisi prius inconstri-one animi sui si in hoc p̄posito p̄- seuerare ualeat. extrema p̄batio-ne examinet. ne si illud uoluntate sua infedere benedictionis suscepit. et postmodū in p̄uersitate erroris sui abiciens. in sine penitencia il-luserrit. in damnatione mortis miserabiliter peat. Qua p̄p̄t o carissimi filii mei ualde in contrarietate dissipati estis. surgite cicius in humilitate et in caritate. et scō p̄posito ur̄o uirilit̄ & unanimiter consentite. Sed ut uidet aliis splendor ut candida nubes p̄dictā muliebrē imaginē ab umbili-co et deorsū quo usq; ultra n̄dū creuit honeste circumdat. qui ē sclaris una que in can-dore serene intentionis eccl̄iam a plenitudine germinantis fortitudinis usq; ad extremitatē illā ubi ultra iā n̄dū infilius suis p̄cessit. in reuerentia iuste subuentionis circūplectit. Quomodo.

Quia circa umbilicū ē germen m̄brox de quo omne genus humanū percat. unde & ibi in eccl̄a sclaris p̄p̄s p̄que ipsa ad plēnū numerū in ordinib; suis p̄uenien-da ē demonstrat. cū ibi reges & duces. principes ac p̄sides cū subiectis suis. accitā ceteri diuites & paupes ac egeni cū reliquo p̄plo conuersantes denuntiant.
Et p̄ hos om̄s eccl̄a ualde ornat. quia cū sclaris hoīes legē dī que ipsis posita ē fidelit̄ conser-uant. eandē eccl̄am plurimū ex-ornant. scilicet cū multis amplexib; dī amplectunt. ita qd sincera humilitate & deuotione magistris suis obediunt. & qd elemosinis & uigiliis ac continen-tia & etiā uiduitate ac ceteris bonis opib; que dī s corpus suū p̄dī amore castigant. Unde isti qui constituta sibi legē scdm uoluntatē meā custodiunt. ual-de amabiles mihi s. Sed si q̄s existis iugū libertatis mee in ab-iectione sclarū ferre desiderat. ad me cicius ueniat. nisi in iunctura carnalis copule sit. quā liga-tura temere n̄ soluat. n̄ p̄ uoluntatē illius cuius consortiū habet.
Quomodo. Nec maritus uxore. nec uxor maritū in hoc p̄posito deserat. nisi uoluntas ambōx

xxviii

66 sit & tunc si ita de liberauerint aut ambo remaneant in seculo aut ambo a seculo separantur: quomodo enim potest ut pars unus permaneat in corpore & alter a corpore absci datur: saluo homine. Sic etiam non con gruit ut maritus seculum colat et uxor seculum deserat: aut ut uxor in seculo residat & maritus seculum fugiat: si in superna uita decorum suum inuenire uolunt: quia si hoc indiscrete & insipienter agunt non ho stia sed rapina appellabuntur. Qua propter qui carnali copula lega li iure sibi coniuncti sunt unamini ter simul uiuant: nec alterum ab altero sine consensu alterius: nec sine dispositione aut demonstra tione ecclesiastici uigoris insipienter se discindat: quemadmodum in euglio iterum scriptum est. Quod ergo deus coniunxit: homo non se paret. Quid est hoc? Deus in creatio ne humani generis carnem de car ne tulit: & in una copulatione coniunxit: ita constituens ne hec conexio precipitaret ab inui ce separaretur. Quomodo? Quia ita in coniunctione uiri ac mu lieris erit: ubi caro carni et san guis sanguini legali ostensione copulatur: ne ab inuice sua stulta precipitatione disiungantur: nisi hoc ex iusta causa aut ex ratio nabili deuotione utriusque liga ture euenire occurrat: quomodo deus in secreto sapientie sue hanc coniunctionem maris et femine ad propagationem hominum benigne disposuit. Et quia hec coniunctio ab ipso ita decemur constituta est: idecirco stulta cupiditas hominis ab scissione in his duabus partibus non fa ciat: nec pars hec nec illa dotem san guinis sui in alienum locum ducat: quomodo sicut deus precepit ne homo occi dat hominem: ita etiam iussit ne ho mo per uelutitatem fornicationis sanguinem suum a recto loco suo abscedat. Unde etiam homo ardo rem cupiditatis sue deprimat: nec incendium suum ad alienum ignem trans mittat: quia si hec ardens uolun tas calorem alterius uoluntatis cum feruente concupiscentia fortio ris et mollioris cause concepit: uerum tunc cum desiderio animi sui & cum colligatione amplexio nis interius illius in unum coagulantur.

Nam exterior uidens oculis interiore calorem in adustione excitat. Et quauis corpus hoc peccatum cum corpore illo non operetur: tamen uiuens uoluntas facit opus ardoris in illis: ita quod omnia uiscera eorum propter conscientiam suam concutiantur.
Qua propter claustra exterioris hominis tam cauta custodia obseruentur: ne interior homo per insipi dam negligentiam saucietur.
Et ut uides quod hi tres splen dores circa ipsam imaginem se late diffundunt: hoc est quod in honore supernae trinitatis per xxxv.

xxxvi.

xxxvii.

xxxviii.

xxxix.

xl.

xli.

xlii.

xliii.

xliiii.

xlv.

xlvi.

xlvii.

xlviii.

xlix.

l.

li.

lii.

liii.

liiii.

lv.

lvi.

lvii.

lviii.

lviii.

lvi.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

lv.

<

67 dicte tres ecclesiastice institutiones ubiq; felicē eccliam in dilata tione erumpentiū germinū & indiffu sione beatarū uiriditātū miro modo circūplectentes consoli dant. unde etiā plurimos gra dus & scalas in ea bene & decen ostendunt qui s̄ diuersi ordines tā in seclariis; quā in sp̄italib; hoīb; p̄ quos eadē ecclia in bonitate mo rū et in disciplina uirtutū filios suos cū suauissima reuerentia edu catos ad sup̄na pducit. Quomodo. cū trena spernunt. et cū celestia diligunt. Quid ē hoc. Quia lega lia p̄cepta que ipsis instituta s̄. in diluio amore fidelit̄ c̄plent.

Sed sicut in trib; p̄sonis unus d̄s. xxviii.
ē. ita etiā in his trib; p̄dictis or dinib; una ecclia ē. fundator ille ē qui plantator omniū bonorū ē. quodcūq; enī ille n̄ plantauit. hoc stare n̄ poterit. Unde illa in stitutio quā ipse n̄ instituit. hec in magnis illusionib; decidet. Quo modo. Quia d̄s hec n̄ plantauit que ad sup̄iora cū flatu sup̄e as cendere t̄ptant. nec altiorib; suis subici uolunt. Hoc ibi ē. ubi mi nor ordo supra maiore ordinē quidē antiquo consilio principa liū magistrorū in uoluntate mea constitutus ē se eleuare contendit. et ibi quidā in diuersis signis ue stitus sui se uolunt extendere sedm̄ mores suos. ut in sania sua se cognant. ueluti si ordo anglorū se erigere uellet sup̄ ordinē archangelorū. Et q̄d hoc ē. Q̄si nichilū & inane essent. q̄a sic rec te constitutos d̄i ordines in uari tatib; suis diuidere uellent. Sed hoc ē n̄ debet. Sic etiā nec hoc ē debet. ut ab his inuisa diuersi tatis sue inuocet. qui in p̄posito suo semp̄ noui ē uolunt. & rudes in scientia sua addiscendū ea que in m̄tib; suis s̄. deserunt. bene con tinuā uia et bene exarata arca an tiquorū patrū. quā illis sp̄s sc̄s in spiraunt. Unde multi existis con stitutas ordinationes. q̄s ecclia in antiquis patrīb; habet in mag na supbia destruiunt. et hoc in plurimis scismatib; diuersarū institutionū suarū faciunt. Ipsi enī in diuersis circumonib; suis fructifere arbores dici uolunt. s̄. nec uacue harundines possunt appellari. quēadmodū dilecto ioh̄i de illo ostendit̄ qui in t̄po re marces abicit̄. ut scriptū ē.

Scio opa tua. quia neq; frigi dus es neq; calidus. Unā fri gidus ē. aut calidus. s̄. q̄a t̄pi dus es. incipia te euomere ex ore meo. Quid ē hoc. Ostult̄ qui in temet ipso turpit̄ marces. ego q̄ cognitor secretorū sū. in sciente oculo uideo opa desideriorū tuorū. quō opa que ad ignē igni illu minatoris p̄tinent omnino n̄ effugisti. nec etiā opa que glaciē frigidi rigoris inducunt om

xxviii.

670 no abie^{ct} cisti. Quomodo. Tu nec in malis opib; extoto frigidus nec in bonis actib; extoto ferui dus. s; in utroq; p instabilitate m^{is} tue ut tepidus uentus pendes ui delicet in neutro sciens qd sis. qd nec in malo eternas penas. nec in bono digna p^{ri}ma consideras. ^{am.} Quia int^{er} magnā pfunditate respicis. qd fundū ei inuenire n̄ uales. et quia etiā tā altū montē ad tendis. qd cacumē ei ascende re n̄ potes. O mē tibi eēt ut in uitē seruū & peccatōrē te scires. quā sis in tepore. ita qd uix ad iusticiā respicias. Nā si ab omis actib; separatus eēs. peccatōrē te intelligeres. uel si a malis opib; te abstraheres. aliquā spē uite haberes. Nunc autē ut tepidus uentus es. qui nec humiditate fructib; affert. nec eis calorē indu cit. Tu enī es uelut incipiens et n̄ quasi pficiens. qd bonū tangis in inceptione s; illo te n̄ pascis in pfessione. ut uentus qui ros hoīs pcurrit. & n̄ sicut esca que inuen trē ei uadit. Vtrū etiā carius ē inanis sonitus. an pfectū opus.
S; acceptius ē pfectū opus. quā inanis sonitus. Et idō cū silentio humilitatis opare. et n̄ cū supbia extolle te. quō ille p nihilo con putabit. qui societate scificatio nis illorū q me inlentius obsequo amant abiciens. hoc p flagrantē iactantiā aggredit. qd p suauē mansuetudinē adimplere dei dignat. Qd si p inchoationē rec titudinis uim uerborū meorū que cibū fidelib; p^{ro}bent intare tēp taueris. et si tunc in ea torpens ac nullā dulcedinē iusticie te tangentib; ostendens. ita ad de teriora eadis. tunc & ego ppter teporē negligentie tue incipiā te eicere. scilicet ex cadē ui uerborū meorū expellens te. quō nullū sa porē suauitatis p^{ro}ficatā opati onis tue exhibens. ad interiora beate receptionis n̄ anhelas. Unde et ita abiectus conculcaberis. sic & cib; ille qui ppter teporē gustus ex ore hoīs picit. ante quā inuen trē ipsius recipiat. S; qd nunc. uenti enī uolant. et uentorū stre pitus resonat. s; radices n̄ florent nec germ pferunt. Nā qui sub iugo meo eē debent lasciu s. nec scdm disciplinā incedunt.

Quid ē hoc. Ipsi rectā uia transi liunt. & multa inutilia taberna cula sibi faciunt. Huiusmodi enī hoīes. nullū feruorē iusticie ha bentes. s; in semet ipsis torpentes. nec inconstituta sibi lege ardent nec scdm conuersationē pceden tiū patrū suorū faciunt. s; quisq; eorū quanda singularitate in se met ipso sibi plamat. & scdm uoluntatē suā legē sibi ponit. sic in p^{ro}priis cogitationib; suis. et in magna instabilitate p^{ro}inflata supbia se ad uolandū deuans.

68 Et quō isti recto federī patrū suorū nō adherent. ideo semper noui & ru-des in magna instabilitate hac & illac secundum uoluntatē suā uagantur.

Qua propter et ego comparo illos ^{xxv. r.} stultis artificibus. qui magnū edificiū in altū erigentes. nō imitantur prudentiā aliorū artificū. qui in multis instrumentis optime edocti. & diuersis probationibus. edificationū examinati. omnia uia que ad edificationē pertinent bene nouerunt. & omnia instrumenta sua ui-ste disponunt. s. ipsi uacui & in-sapientes in semet ipsis confidunt. quia p̄ alios sapientes sapientes esse uolunt. & edificia sua na ponunt quod ad tēpestates mobilia s. unde citā auentis deiciunt. quō nō sup-petiā s. supra arenā posita s. Ita & isti faciunt. qui in supbia sua in semet ipsis confidentes. p̄ antiquis patribus suis prudentes uideri cupiunt. nec secundum fedus eorūambulare uolunt. s. sibi met ipsis leges secundum uoluntatē suā in magna instabilitate ponunt. & ideo multū tociens per diabolicas tēptationes ad peccata quatiunt. quā nō supxp̄m s. sup instabilitatē morū suorū innotunt. ^{xxv. r.} Unde nec ex-spiratio sp̄s sc̄i que in antiquis patribus operabatur p̄ supbiā inflationē euacuat. uolo ut fidei homi-ni cū humilitate sufficiat. quod si ibi ap̄ decessoribus suis institutū ē. ne si plus inani uoluerit quā humilitatē querere debuerat. p̄ ca-tepefactus inde recedens ex hoc ruborē confusionis accipiat. ut in euangelio scriptū ē. Qum inuitatus fueris ad nuptias nō discūbas in primo loco. ne forte honorator te sit inuitatus ab illo. et ueniens is qui te & illū uocauit di-cat tibi. da hunc locū. & tunc incipias cū robore nouissimū lo-cū tenere. Quid ē hoc. Quando p̄ supbiā inspirationē admonitus fueris. ut p̄ fideles labores tuos ad tabernaculū illud uemas. quod semper in nuptiali uita habundat. ita quod assidue in sinceritate et honore ac sc̄ificatione inuir-ginea uirga et in beatā matre uidelicet ecclesia letat. & nō incorruptione & confusione ac deiec-tione germinis et floris sui tri-stat. tunc conprime mentē tuā in humilitate nō eleuans eā in elacione. Quomodo. Cū sc̄ares causas in amore dī a corpore tuo abieceris. tunc quasi pulcherrimus flos ascendes. qui in cele-sti ierlm sine ariditate cū filio dī floret. in quo omnia ornamēta animarū apparent. quia uet̄ homo om̄s abominationes hominū p̄fert. nouus autē omnē sc̄ificationē uirtutū edificat.

Et ideo cū ad hanc sc̄ificationē ueneris. erubescet antiquū ser-pentē qui semetipsū a beatitudinis loco deiecit. p̄ appetitū

68 inanis gl̄ie imitari. Qd̄ ē hoc. Si uideris aliquē tibi ornamentū. can-ne p̄ flagrationē mentis tue. sup̄ eū ascendas dicens. uolo sup̄ illū aut sicut ille ē. Qd̄ si hoc modo te exaltaueris. numqd̄ tunc fidelis seruus es. cū dñm ad iracundiā puocas. ita qd̄ te illi opponis. S. si intellexeris aliquē fore ius in-strumentū habere quā tu habeam. et si tunc illi p̄ inuidiā detrahe-ris. planā uia n̄ ambulas. s. p̄ de-uia incedis. Qua p̄pt̄ stude in humilitate dō seruire & n̄ in supbia bachari. nec te p̄ uanitatē simulationis sup̄ illū extolle. q̄ iusta ex-aminatione maiori desiderio cō-ne uite luget. quā tu ardeas. scilicet ad eīdē beatitudinis culm̄ p̄supnū ardorē ita inuolutus ab illo. qui om̄ib. ueritatē diligentib. p̄m̄ se manifestat. ne in-sciente oculo ueniens idē qui te in humilitatis obsequio et illū incarnatus dono p̄ inspirationē beate admonitionis uocauit recto iudicio suo diiudicat te dicens. Tu qui te p̄ flagrantē supbiā in locū illū crexisti cui socius n̄ es. relinque uanā gl̄iam tuā. et da p̄ subiectionis officiū huic dilecto meo culm̄ honoris. qd̄ temere rapuisti. et qd̄ ex inode te. Quō si hoc modo deiectus fueris. incipies p̄ angustia me-roris & tristitie eximiatē ab-iectionis sentire & ita te p̄ pietū abhorrrere. quia custos animarū auferet tibi alienū honorē quē fraudulenter inuasisti. cū te illi opponens hoc temere rapere tēptabas qd̄ habere n̄ debuisti. vñ ^{et tunc} tibi dabitur qd̄ habere nolueris. q̄ habere ita etiā cū minor ordo supra maiorem se exaltat p̄ uictū iudiciū meū deiectus subprimet. quō nolo ut alit̄ ante oculos meos sup-bia sit. quā in deiectione confu-sionis. Nā si ancilla supra dñam suā se exaltauerit. tanto despectior om̄ib. eā inspicientib. erit. quia hoc fieri tēptauit. qd̄ desi-derare n̄ debuit. Qua p̄pt̄ q̄ sibi scdm̄ cor suū leges faciunt. et in hoc uoluntate meā n̄ querunt. magis ex hoc in deiectione quā ad p̄fectū ueniunt. ut p̄terū filiū m̄s in euāglio testat̄ dicens. Om̄is plantatio quā n̄ plantaui pat̄ m̄s celestis. eradicabit̄. Quid ē hoc. Om̄e germ̄ scientie cordis & m̄tis ac morū surgens in uiriditate illa qua homo uiuit cū homo illud ita in semet ipso seminat qd̄ post ea in calore feruens ita ei copu-letur scdm̄ qd̄ hoc p̄ficere uult. illud uidelicet. transpositū. aut in exaltatione m̄tis. aut in p̄culantia carnis. aut in supflua pollutione. aut in occasione excusationis. aut in incassitudine opationis. sursum aut deorsū in p̄udentē uadens

69 nec quale fundamentū sit dis-cernens. scilicet an utile aut inutile sit scire contempnens. uere hoc iusto iudicio destruet. quō plantationē istā in tali ope non plantauit. pat̄ ille q̄ celos et om̄s iusticie habitator ē. & idō cecēla arescet. quia de rore celi n̄ ascendit. s. de suco carnis uenit. Quom̄.
Quia homo p̄stultā scienciā suā hoc opus faciens. nec iusticiā. nec uoluntatē creatoris sui inspicere uoluit. s. ad illū qui semp̄ rotā carnis ipsius in fatigabilit̄ exa-guit respicit. Nā qd̄ hominib; cū oculū suū acutē in d̄m figere nolunt. p̄deceptionē m̄is suc-aliquando bonū uidet. si hoc exspiratio sp̄s sc̄i n̄ calefacit in interiū ibit. quia hoc uana gl̄a p̄transiunt. Cū enī uani ho-mines in uno p̄cediū afficiunt. in altero p̄ uanā gl̄am inuouantur. multociens in supbia et in simulatione ac in sp̄u & elotipū se extollescentes. & etiā multociens in molestia et in indignatione ac in contradictione aliarū in-firmationū que de me fluxerūt se dilanantes. nec n̄ in ceteris bonis que n̄ s̄ in tempore tediū. s. in ardore desiderii de die in diē p̄ficiendū se inuicē cōprimunt.
Nā qd̄ de me fluit. dulcē & suauē gustū anime p̄bet. semp̄ in p̄seuerantia p̄ficiens. & n̄ instabi-litate retro aspiciens. Unde ille beatus ē. qui nunc confidens. sp̄e suā & inuicē ac finē opū suō n̄ in se s. in me ponit. Qui facit. hec n̄ cadet. qui uero sine me stare uoluerit. in ruina ibit. Et qui s̄ illi. Videlicet hū qui semetipsos p̄ uanam gl̄am nouos faciunt. & p̄pter tūdiū qd̄ in p̄ceptis meis paciunt̄ in semetipsis confidunt. Sic enim uetus uestimentū in m̄tib; hominū molestū ē. sic ego in domis meis spernendus n̄ sū. quō illa in simplicitate semp̄ noua s̄. et q̄nto ueteriora. tanto cariora s̄. Qua p̄pter que homines in semetipsis absq; inpiratione mea excogitant in uaniitate morū p̄mania studia eō diffuere. et quāuis aliquādo in conspectu hominū stare uideantur. tam ab oculis meis cecēlap̄ nichilo ea habeo. ut in me in cūglo scriptū ē. Sint illos. cecēli s̄ duces cecō. Cecus autē si cecō ducatū p̄stet. ambo in foucā cadunt.

Quid ē hoc. P̄mittit illos qui in factis suis p̄uersi s̄ in p̄uersitate sua diffuere. quia in rectitudine bonō opū se corrigere nolunt.
Et quō in estimatione sua se iu-stos nomināt cū in acrib; suis ua-ni sunt. ex ipsa facilitate sua cecēli efficiunt. quia p̄ uā iusticie am-bulare contempnunt. et quō magis uā iniquitatis quā ueritatis illis hominib; p̄ponunt. qui eos in malis opib; sequi festinant.
Unde qui hoc modo uisū rectitudi-

xxx. 13.

archangeli

erit incunabiles causas subuenionis ipsius uelut reuolant. et q̄ s̄ inope pignitarioꝝ assidua determinatione infrequentib; cau-sis certa negotia institutionis eiꝝ quasi angli exerceant. et hoīes qui ad sumā beatitudinē desiderant puenire. uerba eoꝝ fide-liter suscipiant. Quomodo.

Nam qui uiuentis odor uouentis. ^{xxxviii.} mer secreta regenerationis existunt uelut granū sibi. q̄d siccus & fortis cib; hominū ē. sicut & iste ppl̄s m̄s asp̄ et durꝝ ad gustū suci sc̄lariū rerū ē. S; p̄dicti pignitariū s̄ quasi poma que dulce saporē se gustantib; p̄bent. ut & isti putiditate officū sui se suaues hominib; exhibent. Cōmunis autē sc̄laris ppl̄s uelut caro estimat̄ in qua et casta uolantia inueniunt̄ quō qui in sc̄lo degunt carnaliter uiuentes filios pereant. inter quos tam castitatis imitatores reperiunt̄. scilicet uidue & conti-nentes q̄ ad sup̄na desideria p̄ appetitū bonarū uirtutū uolat̄.
Sed & idē ordines eccl̄astice ^{xxxviii.} institutionis. in duab; uis uersant̄. Quomodo. Sp̄taliū et sc̄lariū. Quom̄. It̄ dies & nox.
Quid ē hoc. Sp̄tales s̄ ut dies. et sc̄lares ut nox. in tēporali ui-ta hominū degentes. Qd ē hoc.
Dies claritate solis et serenitate lucentis aeris habet. q̄d p̄sig-nat. quia sp̄tales hoīes & ordinē uiuentis odoris uouentis mer secrete regenerationis et ordinē p̄ dictoꝝ pignitarioꝝ in se seruant.

Nox uero lucē lune cū stellis et obscurnitate umbrosē tenebrositatis tenet. q̄d demonstrat quō sc̄lares hoīes et iustos in opib; suis lucen-tes. & peccatores ob scurnitate deli-torū grauatos in se tenent. S; q̄ noctē sc̄lariū deseruerit et addie sp̄taliū p̄pt̄ amorē uite se conuerterit. stabilis in hoc facto sit. ne si retrorsū inceserit. ueteri ade assimilet̄ qui p̄ceptū uite transgrediens in sc̄lares erūnas expulsus ē. Vnde nemo sit p̄cept̄ mundū relinquere. & fedus meꝝ sua uoluntate audacter mutare. nisi prius in magna p̄batione examinatus sit. q̄a qui filiū meꝝ p̄tunica cepit. nolo ut eū relinquat. Nā qui ei in carnatione se induerit. et crucē ei in manū suas suscepit. numq̄d conueni-ens ē ut abiciat dñm suū. Nullo modo. Ergo his adtende. ^{omo xxxv. n.} qui in uoluntate cordis sui confessus fuerit. et in deuotione aīe sue uouerit iugū meū in abicēti-one sc̄lariū rerū portare. & si tē-etia in ipso ardore cordis sui p̄ uoluntatē desiderantis anime sue signū religionis in condimto iuste intentionis suscepit. in illo p̄maneat. ne si illud post ea in contemptū pseuerantis mali

70^u abiecerit iudiciū districti exami-nis accipiat. Quid ē hoc. Quia il-lum spreuit cuius signū in semet ipso suscipiens conculeauit. sic et iudei cū contempserūt cū illū in insania incredulitatis in cruce affligerūt. Nā ut iudei nescias illud nō timuerūt. ita et iste nūc qđ eandē passionē in uoto suo abicit. Qđ enī homo in pmiuit hoc etiam reddere debet. scđm qđ da-uid testat̃ dicens. Intrabo in domū tuā in holocaustis. reddā tibi uota mea que distinxerūt la-bia mea. Quid ē hoc. Pmiuitio nē bone & iuste opationis introi-bo o dñs m̃s in constitutionē sc̃is simi domi tu. scilicet in ardente desiderio stantū uoluptatis mee relinquens. ita qđ nihil mihi dulcius ē quā anhelare ad te creatorē omnium. Et ob hoc red-dā tibi uota mea que pmiuit os meū cū anima mea. quia hoc pficere uolo qđ tibi iusto iudici in ardente desiderio meo prius pmiserā. uidelicet ut actus meos ad te dirigererē. qđ insipientē transgressus sū. s. nunc ad te recurrere desiderans. uolo mala decurare & bona facere. quō racionalitas et intellectus que in me feruunt p discretionē uere castigationis magis querūt ad te uiuū dñm anhelare. quā p stulticiā falsē conuarietatis diabo-lum imitari. Unde o ho cū cortuū hoc modo in obtuleris. confi-dera quomodo illud prudenter pficias. Oculis enī m̃s acutissime uidet. quid uoluntas hoīs in loquat̃. Vbi qđ meū ē. hoc districtis-sime requiro. Quia pp̃t ostendi. ut quid uobis tā magna onera in-ponitis. qđ putatis uobis tā facile ēē qđ carnale uoluntatē urām deseratis. Nā plagē que uobis ex p̃ceptis meis data ē ad hoc nō cogimini ut scđm relinquatis. nisi prius p multos labores ita exerceami-ni. ut carnalib; desideriis que in uobis s. frenū imponere possim.

Sed tepido uento assimila-mini. quō cū uana glā men-te urām afflauerit. tunc ex aliq̃ asp̃itate loquimini sic dicentes.
Amplius cū sc̃to laborare nolo.
s. illud festinantē fugere uolo.
Et cur ita me frangā in uano labore. s. cū hec intra uos dicitis. putatis ea ita terminari ut excognatis. Nā multi uacillante animo me querūt. ita qđ tan-tū signo religionis exterius notant. puris oculis me nō que-rentes. nec semetipsos in uera doctrina simplicit̃ circūspicientes. quomodo diabolu qui eos deuorare cupit effugiant. ueluti colūba in puritate aque considerans uoluerē qui eā rape tēptat fugit. Sic isti diabolu nō fugiunt. cū cū inscrip-tura doctrinarū uenientē in

ut
statu

xl.

xl.

77 dent. s. in repentinio sopore q̄ eis peccatē m̄is sue in ē ut xpi dus uenit ad me currunt. Qui dā enī n̄ uoluntatē suā. s. tamū selarē habm̄ abiciētes. sp̄ita lem religionē aggrediuntur. quia multas miseras et paup tates in sc̄lo sustinentes. diuici as habere n̄ possunt. & idō mun dū relinquunt. quō cū n̄ possunt habere. uellent. Alii autē ad sc̄m stulti et fatui s. ita qd̄ hominib; s. contempni les. se ipsos regere n̄ ualen tes. et p̄pterea sc̄m fugiunt. quia ab eo deludunt. s. & qdā debilitatē ac infirmitatē cor poris sui habentes et in his ca lamitatib; multū laborantes. n̄ p̄pt me s. ut his doloribus tanto suauius subueniant sc̄m derelinquunt. Alii u tantas angustias et opp̄ssio nes a carnalib; dñis suis quib; subiecti s. paciunt. ut p̄pt ti more eorū a sc̄lo recedant. n̄ ut p̄ceptis meis obediant. s. ne idē carnales eorū dñi amplius sup eos potestatē suā exerceant. Et hi om̄s n̄ p̄pt celestē amorē s. p̄pt has t̄renas molestias quas sustinent ad sp̄italem religionē ueniunt. n̄ considerantes. utrū falsus. an insulsus aut dulcis. aut amarus. an celi antre habi tator sum. Quid ē hoc. Ipsi nec condimentū nec dulcedinem scripturarū adtendunt. nec quom̄ in cordib; illorū hominū habet q̄ supna querit considerant. Et quō hec scrutari nolunt idō timorē meū abiciētes. sc̄m uoluntates suas incedunt. unde et m̄ alieni sunt. & fugitiui uocant. Qua p̄pter nec ego dico eos sc̄m dimis sisse & ad me uenisse. s. in hoc rei s. qd̄ seruū timent et dñm con tēpnunt quia t̄renas causas se quunt et me n̄ uerent. & idō pa uidi in minimo et audaces in maximo dicunt. Ergo et balaam assimilant. qui israheliticū po pulū in tabernaculis suis pulcrū uidens. mansionē cū illis ficto animo se habere concupuit dicens.

Moriatur anima mea morte iu storū. et fiant nouissima mea horū similia. Quid ē hoc. Cū homo aliq̄ndo in suspiriis anime ad hoc concitat. ut opa iusticie in cipiat. tunc insurgente deside rio ea gemitunde exoptat. sic dicens in semet ipso. Ego miser q̄ multis peccatis et obligationib; p̄peditus sū. studiose desidero ut in abiectione carnaliū concupis centiarū anima mea omnē mali ciā iniquitatis relinquat. & ut p contricionē illā qua iusti semet ipsos despiciunt in habitaculo bonorū opū maneat. Quomodo. ut in rectis actib; inueniat finis m̄s illis hominib; q̄ iusti. ciā dī opantur similis. ita ut terminus .rl.ij.

corundē bonorū opū meorū incio iuste intensionis eorū adequatur.
S; homo qui intra semetipsū ista loquitur. si postea transacto tēpore corundē suspiriorū cū tēptationib; malignorū spīritū afflatē et carnali concupiscētia deuictus ad iniqui tatē reuertit. facit ut idē balaam pnequicia cupiditatis sue decep tus fuit. Quomodo. Quia ipse po stea pillud scisma tactus. p qd pri us sursum aspiciēbat ad fallaces ē cupiscētiā se deorsū declinabat. na & hī faciunt qd me fide querit. quia cū uiderint illos qui scdm ueraciter abierūt simplici ince dere. & inarta ac beata conuer satione laudabilē et ueraciter p durare dicunt eos pulcros et suauē ē ac pūus repemino im petu unā eorū aggrediunt. scdm ipsos uiuere desiderantes. S; post quā se illis na conuinxerint. quē admodū et balaā israhel meum pplm inspexit. multociens p di uersas nequicias quas prius in cordib; suis habebat cū in se lo essent ad carnalia desideria re uocant. quō & illis prius dñā bantur. Qua ppter cū sic inpedi untur. ueneno & aduersitate sua contaminant electū gregē meū. multas tēpestatib; cū quaci entē. et consilio nequicie sue cū dispergent. Nā cū ipsi a se lo de ceptuose recederent. me in ora tionib; suis in adiutorium sibi n̄ inuocabant. nec in p̄batione corporis sui si in hoc pposito p̄se uerare possent. an n̄ me querebas. unde et ego p̄mitto eos considera re quid uoluntas ipsoz cū in semet ipsis confidunt eos possit adiu uare. O ipsi insipientes & infructu osi existunt. q̄a similes absq; exaratione legis dī et sine iuridi tate uerbi ipsius. na qd n̄ exqui sierūt qd facere deberent. cū artā uā adirent. ut bona t̄ra se circū spicerent cū uale fructū p̄fert. Unde audiant. O homo hodie cū in tua carne fortit in concupiscētiā ardebas igneā fornacē existi. et quis tibi tantū refrigeriū dedit quod tā magnū incendiū posses euadere in uoluptate tua. xl. 13.

Cere qui hec aggredi uoluerit interiorib; oculis suis inspi cere debet qualiter ea p me inci piat. et qualiter ea meo aduor io p̄ficiat. ne si illa insipienter inceperit. et male consumauerit. in ruinā uadat. sicut et ille an tiquus hostis qui in semetipso confusus. in ira zeli mei detectus est. Sic & isti abiciunt qui nec me. nec semetipsos considerantes. in p̄cipitatione magne supbie pas sione filii mei induit. s; tā post modū in fastidio supfluitatis sue reiciunt. Qua ppter qui eā sup se posuerunt. attendant quomodo eā diligant. scdm qd iheremias p̄pheta in spū scō inspiratus hor tatur dicens. Quos omnes qui ^{xl.iii.} transitis puam adtendite & uide te. sic dolor meus quo uindemia uit me ut locutus est dominus indic ire furoris sui. Quid est hoc. O uos omnes qui uicia desertis uidelicet in abiectione seclariu & in imitatio ne spiritualiu transcuntis puam il lam que uita & uermas est que ego filius dei sum adtendite in uincepuo ne bonae opum ne doloris mei ob liuiscamini. cum me in passione mea cepitis imitari. et uidete in perfectioe iusticie. ut dolor ille que per amorem meo uobis inponi tus dolori meo similis sit. Quomodo est. meis de miseris quas propter me sustinuit usque ad bonum finem indeficiente perseueratis. sicut et ego perseueraui in dolore meo mo ri pro uobis. quo ego conpressus et culcatus in passione crucis sum. sicut uua in torculari adterit. quatinus corpus meum mandu cent et sanguinem meum bibant. ut in per seientia per spicantis oculi sui locutus est dominator celi et terre. uidelicet in illo inicio. cum adam unam deseruit. et mortem accepit. ubi tamen idem pater meus celestis hoc prouidit quod in fine temporum pro me pro filium suum ex uirgine incarna tum. qui me in fortissimis uiribus iusticie diabolo opponebam eun dem antiquum seductorem superaret et humanum genus in defensione superni auxilii liberaret. Ergo homo cuiuscumque sexus aut eta tis sit. qui passionem christi induit aditendat. ut eam fortiter retine at. ne si eam per errorem neglectus sui abiecerit. postea cum ipsam uoluerit retinere. eam inuenire non possit.

Unde et illi qui in sanctis su ^{xl.v.} os eadem passioni inhumili tatis conuersatione subicere uoluerint. hoc non in presumptione precipitationis imprudenti faci ant sed sapienter in examinatione discretionis. non cogentes illos absque consensu uoluntatis sue. hoc adire. quod nec ipsi ferre possunt.
Quomodo. Si in sanctum tuum mihi offeris. cum ei non in mea scientia discer natis intellectus. sed cum in stulti cia omnis sensus ei iacet. et tamen ita sine uoluntate ipsius cum of feris consensum illius in hoc non con siderans. non recte fecisti. ita offe rens arietem. Quomodo. Si homo arietem ad altare meum offert. et si eum in cornibus suis fortiter funibus non ligauit. certe aries fugit. Sic etiam si pater aut mater puerum suum qui arietis est ad seruandum meum offert. et si in hoc uoluntatem illius que cornua ipsius sunt. nec diligenti custodia. nec supplicatione. nec deprecatione. nec exhortatione tocius diligentie que funes colligationis ei intelliguntur aditendunt. quo his omnibus pu er ad consensum bonae uoluntatis prouocandus est. tunc si istis exami

xlvi.

nationib; fuerit pbatus certe aut corpore aut mte fugit. nisi d; immutabilib; suis cu stodiat. Si aut tu homo mta magna custodia corporalis distinctionis pueru illu conclu dis. qd se apstura repugnantis uoluntatis sue absolucere n pos sit. tunc in omnib; fructib; tam corporis qua anime ppt capti ra illa que sine consensu ei ipsi iniuste illata e. aridus m appa ret. Tunc et ego tibi o homo qui auctor huius ligaturus es. dico. viride agru in potestate mea habui. Iumquid o homo de di tibi illu. ut cu germinare fa ceres. quecuq; fructu tu uelles.
Et si in illu semen seminas. nu potes illud in fructu pducere.
Non. Na tu nec rore das. nec plu uia emittis. nec humiditate in uiriditate tribuis. nec calore in ardore solis educis. p que oma copetens fructus pducendus e.
Ita ena in auditu hominis uer bu seminare potes. s; in cor illi qd ager m e. nec rore copunc tionu nec pluua lacrimaru. nec humore deuotionu. nec ca lore sps sci infundere uales. in quib; omnib; fructus sciat germinare debet. Et quom audebas dedicatu et scificatu mibi in baptismo ta temere tangere ut cu absq; uolunta te sua inartissima captione li

xlvi.

ganire ad ferendu ingu meu tra dere. unde nec aridus nec uiri dis effectus e. ita qd nec sclo mor tuus e. nec sclo uiuit. Et cur cu ita oppssisti. qd adueni tu ualce.
Sed miraculu meu ad confor tandu cu in spitali uita pma neat. ab hominib; pseruandu non e. quo uolo ne parentes ipsi in oblatione ei peccent. absq; uo luntate illius eu mihi offeren tes. qd si aliquis scilicet pater aut mater pueru suu adserui tu meu offerre uoluerit. ante qua eu repsemit dicat. Promi to do ut pueru meu solleru cu stodia usq; ad intelligibile eta te ei custodia. scilicet supplican do. deprecando. exhortando cu. quatinus in seruiio di deuote pmaneat. Et si mihi consenserit festinante eu ad seruutu di of fero. uel si m assensu n pbuerit. in sonis cora oculis maiestatis ei sim. Si autem parentes pueri cu his modis usq; ad intelligibile etate sua psecuti fuerint. et si tunc ide puer se auertens. illis consentire noluerit. tunc et ip si quia deuotione sua in illo quantu ualebant ostenderit eu sine uoluntate illius n offerant. nec eu ad seruutu illa puenire cogitant. qua nec ipsi ferre nec adimplere uolunt. Qui autem deuoto animo se mihi libent subicere uoluerit. ad hoc stren nuc plu abo

Na si
defi erit
im
et in redo fice
ure
debu qd d rit f at n cuq plen su m qua
lum
Hoc
cu bo uerit do ip dis q sue dore Quom
ne ed na ca pit u despo
dus co dimin d; can te uir semet

73 nunc exhortandus ē ut pueniat. nec pluore alicuius maliuole anime abona intentione sua retrahendys.
Nā si quis aliquē illoꝝ qui me seq̃ desiderauerit. appposito suo retraxerit. sacrilegiū facit. quō fedus meū in mente illius dirupit. quā pp̃t et in recto iudicio rationē exinde redditurus ē. si in hac nequicia inflexibilis durauerit. quia in seruire uolentē auerit. qđ facere nō debit. ut scriptū est. O mne xl. viii. qđ dñō consecrat. siue homo fuerit siue animal. siue ager. nō ueneat. nec redimi poterit. Quid ē hoc.
Cūque liber. anhelans anima cū pleno officio sciencie. ita bonū sensū in homine tangit. ut ille ali-quā rē p̃fiat. tunc eandē rē uoluntas ipsius construit. sic dicēs.
Hoc decet ad honorē dī. Et ita cū bona deuotione et cū iusta re-uerentia idē homo illud p̃mittit dō. ipsū ei offerens. p̃ osculū cor-dis. qđ ē p̃ uoluntatē desiderioꝝ suorū. Et tunc illud hoc modo indote scificationis dō oblatū est.
Quomodo. Quia d̃s in eodē homine edificantē uoluntatē uidens. ita eā panulū scificationis suscipit. ut uir sponsā suā panulum desponsationis sibi met ipsi in se-dus colligationis ne ipsā amodo dimittat munire solet. Unde cū d̃s eandē uoluntatē de uiriditate uirilī animi hoīs suscepit. qđ semetipsū ita constringit. qđ relinquit qđ habet. et qđ magis dō diuidit quā sibi qđ possidet. tē ipsa colligatio huiusmodi consecrationis ita p̃manebit. nec de-uotionē suā relinquet. Quare.

Quia illa sciencia hoīs cognouit. et quō bonus sensus eius illā intellexit. et quia illā uoluntas ^{ipsi} ad honorē dī edifica-uit. et idō siue homo fuerit qđ semetipsū ita dō obtulit. siue animal. homini subiectū. quod eodē modo ad honorē dī oblatū ē. seu ager. fructū p̃ ferens. qđ eū ita dō ē consecratus. nec p̃cariore p̃cio dari. nec sub uiliore recompensatione retineri debet. ne honor dī quasi in contemptibi-lem estimationē deputetur.

Sed sicut nullus contra uo-xl. ix. luntatē suā a seclari uia ad sp̃italem tramitē conueru cogē-dus ē. ita etia qui cū deuotione uoluntatis sue seruiciū meū aggressus ē. et postea illud contēns neglexerit. iusto iudicio ut illud recipiat reuocandus ē.
Quomodo. Si habet rectos rec-tores. et sp̃itales magistros. et lum meū habentes. hi debent eū ad seruiciū meū reuocare. et hoc primū facient supplicatione. exhortatione et blan-do sermone cū lenienter. et deinde uerbis. et constrictione frigoris ac famis & alius huius similib. castigationib. cū cor-

73^o ripientes: quatinus his miseris admonitis: infernales penas ad mentē suā reuocet: et eas timens: a se putredine anime sue auferat: et ad sententiā illā quā deseruerat ita reuocatus redeat: sic enā de his in euēgio scriptū est:

Exi in uias et sepes & conpelle inire: ut impleat^{1.1.} domus mea. Quid ē hoc. Tu qui spiritalis pastor: et iustus rector: & rectus magister es: exi de pristinis mo rib; tuis: qui tibi de primo pa rente tuo adherent: et uade in uia arā et angustā: & in cōpo sitionē inflexorū pceptorū: quē certissimi uiri inextingua sps scī cōponebant: & acutissime in celo meo considera eos qui sub pcepto & magistracione tua de gentes: aut susceperūt aut uoue runt: sua uoluntate: & nō ex alic rius hoīs iniusta coactione sem ppositi pachi mei obseruare: et tamen postea illud contēpnen tes: ad uicta uicia cupiunt redire & hos dulcib; et amaris correpti onib; conpelle ecclesiasticā discipli nā intrare: ut domus dotatio nis mee tā exstrennue correptis: quā exsuauiter admonitis im pleat^{1.1.}: quō et alii ad uia diuer sis castigationib; et alii uariis blandimentis uocandi s. Quomō ut rectus pastor p dīā ouē suā sollicite requirit: ita enā spi tales magistri subiectos suos p diuersa uicia errantes: multa di ligentia requirere debent: uideli cet sua sollicitia cogentes eos ut in domū iusticie de qua exierūt uel exire uolebant reuertant^{1.1.}: quā ecclesia in altera parte ex amare cor reptis et in altera parte ex blande exhortatis ouib; impleat^{1.1.}: & ita ad supna pascua pducant. Qui autē tunc ita obdurati s. qd nec ppter corporale castigationē quē eis a principib; magistris suis in celo meo inferitur: nec ppter timorē meū quō ego sū dī nolens iniquitate: nec ppter amorē effusi sanguinis fi lii mei qui pipsis passus ē se corri gere uolunt: s. fidelissimos amicos meos qui uias meas uelocitē curretur polluere sua putredine laborant: tunc ab ipsis amicis meis ne gregē meū contaminent ut lupi expel lendi s. quēadmodū paulus ami cus mīs hortat^{1.1.} dicens: Auferre malū ex uobis. Quid ē hoc. Hos q in culmine regiminis estis: et qui in humilitate subiectionis mane tis: expellite malū illud a uobis quod timorē meū contēpnens: in creatori celi & tēre contradicit: il lud tā fori examinatione a uo bis expellentes: ut in conscientia urā radicē nō figat nec in consor cio urō pedē suū ponat: ne dul cia pignora bonorū opū in uobis uilescant: s. qui ex his in peni tentia reuerti uoluerit: et me creatorem suū puro corde quesie rit. etiā si in extremitate cursus sui uenerit ego tam suscipiā eū quia cuncta iuste iudico. l. iij.

Qui autē thesaurū cordis sui subtrahendo abscondit dicens. nisi sentia me mortuū a seclis. causis me nō conuertā. et ita conuersionē suā usq; ad exspirationē anime sue differt.
& cū iā amplius spirare nō ualet. diucius p̄sentē uitā se posse habe re desperans seclō renūciare tēp tat. hic animā suā decipit. quō conuersio ei deceptibilis ē. hoc iocando fecit ut iocus etiā acci pitur. Ite uero qui iā morti p̄xi mus toto corde p̄p̄t peccata sua. et p̄p̄t amorē meū seclō renūcia uerit. scilicet quādiu uiuat in ardenter seruire desiderans. ue re deuotionē ei cū omnib; cho ris angelorū suscipio. et ei glām uite tribuo. Nā quāuis homo in multo crimine occupatus sit. cū tangit peccata sua. ita qd ama re delicta sua deslet. et hoc sim plici oculo fecerit. q̄a me adira cundia puocauit. ego cū amorē te ad saluationē erigo. nec ei supnā hereditatē dēnego. scdm quod psalmista dauid in spū meo testat̄ dicens. In quacūq; l. iij.
die inuocauero te. ecce cognoui quō d̄s m̄s es. Quid ē hoc. In qua cūq; luce uite mee ulla clarnas supne illustrationis inmine mea qui in tenebris iaceo p̄ diuinā grām se ostende. rit. ita qd in amaritudine penitentie pec catōrū meorū et in uulnerib; gra uari cordis mei inuocauero te. qui omnib; te puro corde inuo canti; remediū tue pietatis concedis. tunc in eadem uisita tione cognoui quia tu q̄ hoc miserere oparis d̄s m̄s es. Quid ē hoc. Cū p̄ grām tuā me ad hoc p̄duxeris qd te d̄m meū inopi bus iusticie cognouero. ita qd in opib; in opib; iniquitatis me ipsū decio. quia tu ille q̄ hoc facere potes. tunc suscipis me simpliciter te querentē & laci mose post te clamantē atq; in uiriditate anime mee te cog noscentē. quō corpus meū inue ra penitentia contero. & illud quasi p̄ nihilo habeo. Et cū tali modo penitentia suā homo fe cerit. remediū peccatōrū suorū in ueniet. Quomodo. Quia me d̄m suū cognouit. Quomodo. Quō peccata sua deseruit. & idō p̄ oculū penitentie uidebit. qd illa uana fuerit que prius ar dentem in mala concupiscentia p̄p̄tauerit. Qua p̄p̄t nemo l. v. negligat remediū penitentie querere. quia si illa sanus in corpore neglexerit. studeat tamen ut ea uel in extremo tē pore suo inueniat. et ad salua tionē eū suscipiā. quō quāuis sordes magne sint impecatus.

74^o tam ppter si lū meū impura penitentia abluunt. pter hunc qui blasphemiam contra spm scm inpenitens dixerit. et qui se ipsū in mortē corporis sui obduratus pcepit. quia hec duo uelut unū s. istos in gla supne uite nescio. ut in euanglo scriptū est.

l. vi

Omne peccatū et blasphemia remittit hominib. sps autē blasphemiam nō remittit. Quid ē hoc. Omne peccatū qd in supstia nate carnis aut cū libidine. seu cū amaritudine aut aliis his si milib. uicis pactū fuerit. seu blasphemia que ē in cultu ido lorū ubi uerus d̄s ignorat. et falsū figmentū adorāt. aut in uocatio demoniorū ubi uerus d̄s scit. et tam in pueritate homi nū diabolus inuocat. hec omnia impura penitentia remittuntur hominib. cū pconpunctione la crimarū exintimo corde uerū d̄m omnib. se inuocantib. mi diā suā mittere pstante fide inter quesierint. quō quāuis huiusmodi hoīes grauer in peccatis errando delinquant. tam si d̄m in pio & potestate in celis regnantē omnino nō abi ciunt. manū auxiliū ei querentes inueniunt. S. si infidelitate sua pseuerauerint. ita qd ab hac p ueritate nūquā resipiscunt.
s. fixo corde & anima consen cient d̄m omnino abnegant.

sic intra semetipsos dicentes. qd ē hoc qd d̄r d̄s. nā d̄s in illa midia aut ueritate. ut uelit aut possit me adiutare & ita inpenitentes diffidunt a peccatis suis se posse mundari. aut ullo m saluari. hu d̄m blasphemant. et ob hoc ppter nequiciā obdurationis sue. si ita pseuerauerint remissionē ei dē blasphemie nō papiunt. quia in tellectū cordis sui ita suffocant. qd sursum suspirare nō ualent. quō illū p cuius midiam saluari de berent. quasi nihilū habent. ut etiam psalmista dauid testat̄ dicēs.

Dixit insipiens in corde suo nō ē d̄s. Quid ē hoc. Pstultā locutio nē. qui inanis erat sapientia et in tellectu d̄m in corde suo abnega uit. quia ad cognoscendū cū in sipiens fuit. Quomodo. Quia ue rū d̄m nec scire. nec intelligere uoluit. cū in obdurato sensu suo dicebat. Quid ē d̄s. D̄s nō ē. Et qd uel ego sū. Nescio quid sim. Qui hec dicit insipiens ē quō uerā sa pientiā qua d̄s cognoscit nō ha bet. S. quisq̄s d̄m in potestate sua regnantē nō fide cognouit. hic insipiens ē. quāuis peccator sit.
Vnde quisq̄s hoc fixū in cordē suo habet. qd de d̄i midia despat dicens. d̄s nihil ē. hunc nescio. quia me nesciuit. et hunc nego.
quō me negauit. & idō idē ad uitā nō resurget. nec ullū gau diū habere potest. quia om̄s crea

tor
qui quod
se po et id qui u quod
duct ueni puro nigra phen
homi
cord
nec
fense crue
tuer
cui
uadi max pug uab
qu
uer
in qui ulla ser tū
te
sepa
con
ulla em cid

75. creature cū destituunt. quō crea-torē earū p̄nibilo habuit. S; & ille qui de peccatis suis desperat. ita quod p̄ magnitudine ponderis ex-se posse saluari n̄ credit infidelis ē. et idō ad uitā n̄ pueniet. quia illi qui uitā omnib; dat. contra dicit.
Quod si q̄s ex his omnib; penitencia ductus. me uiciatiter quesierit. in-ueniet me. quō neminē abicio. qui puro corde recurrit ad me. Si autē nigerrime tēpestates huius blasphemie & despationis sup̄ quēpiā homine ceciderint. et ipse nec in corde suo. nec in uoluntate sua. nec in sapore puer si gustus eis consensert. s; in hoc certamine ualde cruciat. tunc si in eodē agone fortiter repugnans p̄seuerauerit. ci-eius ei subuenio. & p̄pter has gra-uedines n̄ dubitet. quia contra maximas p̄cellas cū fortissimum pugnatorē dico. & cū uelocius ui-uabo. atq; cū amicū meū habeo. quō p̄pter amorē meū tantas aduersitates patienter sustinens nobiliter sup̄auit. Sed & sicut ille qui me uerū dñm nullomodo in ulla fide aut spe in corde suo uult scire ad uitā n̄ resurgit ut p̄dictū ē. ita nec ille qui se ipsū in mortē corporis sui p̄cipitauerit. q̄a separationē illā quā hominibus constitui n̄ expectat. s; se ipsū sine ulla spe iudicis descendit. unde & in p̄dicationē cadit. quō hoc oc-cidit. cū quo penitere debuit.

Nam qui illud ab homine sepat. q̄d in hominē posuit. magno reatu se sub sternit. quēadmodū incuglō filius m̄s ostendit dicens. Audi tis quia dictū ē antiquis n̄ occides. qui autē occiderit reus erit iudicio.
Quid ē hoc. hos qui pedē ur̄m sup̄ fundamentū petre ponere uultis. notate quō p̄sonū illū qui de radice rationalitatis exit p̄cepistis. q̄a in factura scripture quē sensū illū habet quē dignus dñi dedit. de monstratū ē his qui uos in antiqua-te p̄cesserit. ne diuiderent in hoīe q̄d diuina dispositione in illo con-iunctū ē. Quid ē hoc. Quia q̄a de uignū scientie boni et mali inter-dixit dicens. in quocūq; die comederis ex eo morte morieris. hic etiā p̄ moysen generi ipsius locutus ē n̄ occides. nec dissipabis q̄d ad imaginē dñi factū ē. S; sicut adā p̄ceptū dñi transgressus. uitā salutis semetipsū et genus suū p̄uauit. ita etiā homo qui facturā dñi in homine destruit. fideles generationes salutarū opū ab anima et a corpore suo absci-dit. & hoc etiā reū iudicialis sen-tentie se faciens in exiliū miserie uadit. Quia p̄pter ille qui tā crudelem separationē in homine fecerit. in multas calamitates se mittit. ui-delicet hoc separans q̄d meū ē. q̄a corpus et animā simul in hominē constitui. Et quis ē ille. qui hec audeat separare. Et cū ille in multa graue dine peccati sit q̄ aliū occi-lx.

75 dit: quid tunc iste erit qui se ipsū in mortē tradit: et hoc in puluere mit-tit: eū quod debuit crimina sua de-lere. Nā qui se ipsū occideret: pēditū angīm imitat: qui primū inq̄- tatē inueniens: se ipsū in p̄dicionē tradidit: cū se ipsū occidit. Quomodo.
 Quō dō inuidit qui nec ortū ha-buit: nec finē accipiet: & q̄ om̄a regit: que in celo & in t̄ra s̄. Et sicut idē sup̄bus diabolus noluit aspicere in me: cū se ipsū in p̄dicionē deiecit: sic nec iste homo me seire dignat: qui se ipsū uolenter discindit: unde & in mortē cadit: sicut et ille cū sibi metipsi p̄dicionē intulit. Nā ante quā corrueret in iquitatē suā sup̄ pennas uentoꝝ ele-uare uoluit: et q̄si uolante q̄d in aere uolat: sic in celestib; uolare tēp-tavit: unde et in hac p̄sūpnōne semetipsū ab beatitudine in infelicitatē deiecit. S; ego de t̄ra forma ui hominē ut ab inferiorib; ad sup̄iora ascenderet: et incipiendo & p̄ficiendo bona opa: sursum p̄ela-ras uirtutes ad ardua edificaret.
 Quia p̄pter homo q̄ & corpus et animā habet cū bona opari potest: & cū penitere ualeat: semet-ipsū n̄ occidat: ne postea locū illū recipiat ubi nec opus: nec penitentiā habere potest: sicut et diabolus quidū semetipsū occideret: in martara deiectus ē. S; q̄ uigilantib; oculis uidet: & sonan-tib; aurib; audit: hic mysticis vi. visio.

uerbis meis osculū amplexionis p̄beat: que de me uiuente emanat.

uidi: cū filius dī in cruce p̄pendit q̄d p̄dicta muliebris imago uelut lucidus splendor exantiquo consilio p̄pere p̄grediens p̄ diuinā potenciā ad ipsū adducta ē: et sanguine qui de latere ei fluxit se sursum eleuante p̄fusa ip-si p̄uoluntatē sup̄ni patris felici desponsatione associata ē: atq; carne et sanguine ei nobilit̄ dotata. Et audiui uocē de celo dicen-tē: Hec fili sit tibi sponsa in restaurationē ppli mei: cui ipsa mater sit animas p̄saluationē sp̄s et aque regenerans. Et cū eadē imago iam hoc modo in uirib; suis p̄ficeret: uidi q̄si q̄d dā altare ad q̄d ipsa frequēt accedebat et ibi dotē suā deuote reuolens: eā sup̄no pa-tri et anglis ei humilit̄ ostendebat. Unde etiā cū sacerdos sacrifuetiū indutus ad celebranda diuina sacram̄ta ad idē altare ac-cederet: uidi q̄d subito magna sacras uirib; cū obsequio an-76 gelox de celo ueniens totū illud altare circūfulsit. & ibi tam diu pmanſit quo uſq; poſt comple tionē eiusdē ſacramēti idē ſacer doſ ab altari cederet. S; & ibi eniglo pacis recitauit. et oblationē quē con ſecranda erat altari ſup poſita cū idē ſacerdoſ laudē om̃p̃is dī. qd ē ſc̃s ſc̃s ſc̃s dñs d̃s ſabaoth decan taret. et ſic miſteria eorundē ſa cramentorū inchoaret. repente ig nē choruſcatio inestimabilis cla ritate apto celo ſup eandē obla tionē deſcendit. & eā tota ſua cla ritate ita pfudit. ut ſol rē illā il luſtrat. quā radus ſuiſ tranſſigit.

 Et dū eā hoc modo irradiaret ſur ſū eā ad ſecreta celī inuiſibiliter ſuſtulit. et perū eā deorſū ſup idē altare remiſit. uelut homo altari ſuū introſū trahit. et perū eū ex troſū emittit. ita eā uerā carnē & uerū ſanguinē effectā quāuis incon ſpectu hominū uelut panis et uelut uinū apparerent. Cūq; hec aſpicere. ſtatim etiā ſigna natiuitatis. paſſio nis. et ſepulture. nec n̄ reſurrexionis.
 & aſcenſionis ſaluatoris nr̃i unigeni ti dī uelut in ſpeculo apparuerūt. q̃ modo etiā cū idē fili dī in ſc̃to eēt in ipſo parata ſ. S; dū idē ſacerdoſ can ticū innocentis agni qd ē agne dī qui tollis peccata mundi decanta ret. et adp̃cipiendū ſcām cōmunio nē ſe exhiberet. p̃dicta ignea cho ruſcatio ad celeſtia ſe recepit. & ita clauſo celo audiui uocē ex eo dicen te. Manducate & bibite corpus et ſanguinē fili mei ad abolendū p uaracationē eue. quatin⁹ in rectā hereditatē reſtauremini. Et dū etiā ceteri hoīes adp̃cipiendū idē ſacra mentū ad ſacerdotē accederent. quinq; modos in eis cōſiderabā. Nā alii in corpore lucidi. & in anima ignei erant. alii autē in corpore pallidi et in anima tenebroſi ui debant. quidā uero in corpore hirti. et in anima multa immu dia humane pollutionis pfuſio nis pfuſi ſordēbant. quidā autē in corpore acutiſſimis ſpinis cir cūdabant. et in anima leproſi appa rebant. alii uero in corpore ſan guinei. et in anima uelut putridū cadauer fendi uidebant. S; ex his omnib; dū quidā eadē ſacramēta p̃cipit. alii uelut igneo ſplendo re pfundebant. alii uero uelut obſcura nube obtenebrabantur.

 Poſt completionē autē eorundē ſacramentorū dū ſacerdoſ ab altari recederet. p̃dicta ſerennas quē de celo ueniens totū illud altare ut ſupradictū ē circūfulſerat. ſurſū ad ſupna ſecreta ſubtracta ē. Et ite rū audiui uocē de ſupnis celox di centē m̃. X pō ihu uero filio dī in ligno paſſionis ſue pendente ecclā in ſecreto ſupnox miſteriorū ipſi aſſociata purpureo ſanguine ei⁹ dotata ē. ſicut & ipſa demonſtrat. cū frequent̃ ad altare accedens dotē ſuā repoſcit. & q̃nta deuotio

76^v
 ne filii ei adduina mysteria acce-dentes ea percipiant acutissime con-siderat. Qua ppter uides cū idē fili-ſ dī in cruce pependit. qd p dicta muliebris imago uelut lucidus splendor ex antiquo consilio ppe pgrediens. p diuinā potēciā ad ipsū adducta ē. quia eodē innocen-te agno in arā crucis p saluit hominū. subleuato. ecclā in puritate candoris fidei et ceterarū uirtutū ex diuino secreto repente pfundissimū mysteriū apparens in celo. psumā maiestātē eidē unigenito dī adiuncta ē. Quid ē hoc? Quia cū de uulnerato latere eidē filii mei cruor exiit. mox saluatio animarū exorta ē. quō glā illa de qua diabolus cū sequacib; suis expul-sus ē hominū data ē. cū idē unigenitus nris mortē in cruce tēporalitsubiens. inferno spoliato fideles animas ad celestia duxit. ita qd etiā indisciplis ei & in his qd eos sincere subsecuti s. fides iā augmētari et corroborari cepit. quatinus here-des celestis regni fierent. Vnde sanguine qui de latere ei fluxit se sur-sū eleuante eadē imago p fusa. ip-si p uoluntatē supni patris felici desponsatione associata ē. quō fortudine passionis filii dī ardentin undante. et ad altitudinē celestiuū mysterioꝝ se mirabiliter tollente. quēadmodū odor bonoꝝ aroma-tū se alte diffundit. ecce incandi-dis heredib; cū regni ecclā roborata eidē unigenito dī p institutionē altissimi patris fideliter coniuncta ē. Quomodo. ut sponsa sponso suo in subiectionis et obediētiis obsequio subiecta feruēte donatio-nē cū federis amore ab eo in pcreatione filioꝝ accipiens eos ad hereditatē suā educat. ita etiā ecclā filio dī in humilitatis et caritatis officio coniuncta. regenerationē sps et aque cū saluatione animarū ab eo ad restorationē uitę suscipiens. eas ad supna transmittit. Vnde etiā carnē et sanguine ei nobilitdata ē. quia idē unigenitus dī corpus & sanguine suū pcellētissima glā fidelib; suis qd & ecclā et filii ecclē s ita contulit. ut uitā in supna ciuitate p ipsū habeant. Quomodo? Quia ipse carnē et sanguine suū in sacrificatio-nē credentiū dedit. ut etiā celestis pater ipsū p dēptione ppter ad passionē tradidit. ita serpente antiquū in humilitate et iusticia p eū de uincens. nec illū potestate et fortitudine sua superare uolens. quō ipse dē iustus ē. nolens iniquitatē. quēadmodū psalmista loquitur dicens. Beatus uir qui n̄ abiit in consilio impioꝝ. et in uia peccatorū n̄ stetit. & in cathedra pesti-lentie n̄ sedit. Quid ē hoc? Quō dē ē pater omniū beatitudinū et felicitātū creaturarū suarū in ipsis creaturis suis multa et diuersa signa ostendens. sicut etiā incarna-tio filii ei suauissimū gustū in 77 multa dulcedine stillabat cū cele-stes uirtutes plurimas edificatio-nes in ipso edificarent p̄ quas homo ad sup̄nū regnū rediret. q̄d nulla umbra mortis obscuratū ē. Et ita enā in eodē sup̄no patre fortissi-me uires omniū uirtutū eē manifestate s̄. quō p̄ unigenitū suū mortē uiriliter occidit. et infernū fregit atq; in nouissimo die orbē t̄rarū in alia et meliōrē nouitatē conuertit. Unde enā p̄ diffusionē cordis sui n̄ abiit uacillantiā tunc ra malignorū sp̄itū. q̄ ueritatē re-liquerit. et mendaciū arripuerit.

Quomodo. Quia ueritatē p̄ menda-ciū diuidere uoluerit. Quomodo.
Quia ueritatē p̄ mendaciū diuidere noluerit. Quomodo. Antiquū dierū q̄ ante tēpus dierū et ho-rarū erat opprimere uolebant. et antiquū serpentē qui ante tēpus tēporū n̄ fuit illi consortē facere inhabitant. S; hoc eē n̄ potuit nec debuit. quō unus d̄s ē. Qua-p̄pt̄ et diabolus mendax ē. Nā ad dō recessit uitā deserens. & mortē inueniens. Et ita enā d̄s in uia illa qua peccatores gressū suū figunt n̄ stetit. q̄a uia ad e ab-iciens peccatū illius n̄ amauit. s; illū a diabolo seductū de paradyso p̄iecit. nec enā in potestate ullius iniquitatis regnauit. ut omē genus humanū in mortē implicat. in umbra mortis sedens cū idē humanū genus ueritatē supbe deserunt. Quid ē hoc. Nā d̄s nec diabolice p̄sūptioni nec humane negligentie. ita potesta-te sua restituit. ut eas p̄fortitudinē suā deiceret. Quomodo. Ite-rit si duo pugnatōres eēnt & alit̄ alterū fortiorib; uirib; p̄iret. certe fortior ille maiores pugnas in sua possibilitate illi infirmiori demonstraret. q̄ unus confusus illū sibi subiceret. nec in aliquo illi cedere uellet. S; ita d̄s n̄ fecit. quō op̄i iniquitatis p̄sumā boni-tate restituit. uidelicet filiū suū mittens in mundū. qui in corpore suo cū maxima humilitate p̄d̄nā ouē suā ad celos redux̄.

Quomodo. Quō sanguis q̄ decorpore ei exiuit. mox ut ap̄us uulnerib; emanauit. in celestib; secretis apparet. ut saluatio animarū emitteret̄ petiuit. Quomodo.
Quia oīs creatura in eodē filio d̄i ostendit. q̄d p̄ passionē & mortē ipsius p̄d̄mo hōis ad uitā restaurata ē. Quomodo. Quō idē unigenitus d̄i uita existens. se-met ipsū p̄ deceptione humani generis ad passionē in ara crucis optulit. ubi enā ut ueraci auditione uocē de sup̄nis secretis resonantē p̄cepisti. sponsā sibi eccl̄am ut ad restitutionē salutis credentiū p̄p̄lōx mat̄ ex-isteret elegit. uidelicet quatin̄ sine macula sp̄itali regeneratio-ne ad eccl̄ia eos transmutaret.

iii.

Sed p̄fata imagine iā hoc modo in uirtutibus suis p̄ficiēte uidet quasi q̄dda altare ad q̄d ipsa fre quenter accedit. et ibi dotē suā deu te reuolens. cā sup̄no patri et an gelis et humiliter ostendit. q̄a eccl̄a ut p̄dictū ē in beatissimis et fortissimis uirtutibus. augmentū capiente mox uidetur ē manifesta demonstratione ostendit. spū scō inspirante sc̄ifica tio mysticorū altariū in p̄funditate fidelium suspiriorū exorta ē. ubi ea de eccl̄a continua uirtutem ue stigia exemplorū suorū ponens. dotē suā uidelicet corpus et sanguinē filii dī p̄fundissima deuotione cō ducendo creatori omnium in conspe ctu uiuentium et ardentium luminū scilicet sup̄no et cū in subiectione humillime obediētiā humiliter hanc obediētiā offert. Quid est hoc. Quō ut caro ei dē unigeniti mei in integro utero marie uir ginis orta ē. et postea p̄ salutē ho minum tradita. ita etiā et nō caro et frequenter incorrupta inte gritate eccl̄e augmēta ad sc̄ifica tionē fidelium datur. Quia sicut faber aurū suū p̄ ignē modo liq faciens unū. et modo unū diui dit. ita etiā et ego pat̄ carnē et sanguinē filii mei p̄ sc̄ificationē sp̄s sc̄i in oblatione nunc gl̄ifico. et nō gl̄ificatū fidelibus hominibus ad salutē ipsorū distribuo. Vnde etiā cū sacerdos sacris uestib; in duntus ad celebranda diuina sa cramenta filiū mei ē. q̄on ip̄a in saluatione animarū in partu apta sit. q̄ etiā in eadem effusione huius p̄ciosi

v.

vi.

obtulit. cū de mundo t̄staturus esset tē uideo q̄ idē filiū m̄s in hora passionis sue h̄m cramenta ad altare accedit uidet q̄d subito magna serenitas lucis cū obsequio angelorū de celo ueniens. to tū illud altare circūfulget. quō p curatore animarū sacra cinctio ne circūamictō. et ad immolationē innocens agni uiuificā mensā a deum. repente magna claritas sup̄ne hereditatis densitate tene brarū pellens. cū ministerio sup norū sp̄ituum de secreto celorū efful gens ubiq; eandē cōpositionis sc̄i ficationē irradiat. quia ibi refec tio animarū ad salutē credentium exercet. Quomodo. Quia cū eccl̄a p̄ uocē sacerdotis reposita dotē suā. quē corpus et effusio sangui nis in magna multitudine p̄p̄lorū augmentū accepit. tunc ego q̄ in deficiens lum̄ sū. locū sc̄ificationis illius ad honorē corporis et sangui nis eiusdē unigeniti mei in sc̄itate mea irradio. Dam cū sacerdos sup̄ sc̄ificationē altaris me inuoca re cepit. quatinus inspiciā q̄d filiū m̄s panē et uinū in cena moris sue hoc m̄ ostendit cū in ligno cru cis ē. mortuus. illud designans. ut eandē passionē suā in conspec tu meo semp habere. nec illa aba cissima uisione mea delere cū felix oblatio sacro sc̄i sacrificii p̄ sacerdotale officiū m̄ offerret. quō et ipse in effusione sangui nis sui panē et calicē m̄ obtulit. mortē deiciens et hominē erigens.

 et q̄a dignitas ingredien

vii.

viii.

a. egredientis tunc clausura uirginalis pudicitie non fuit humane nature sed diuine potentie. ideo et hoc esse potest quod caro eiusdem unigeniti mei de pane frumenti et sanguis eiusdem de uino uive ^{in sanctificatione} cum aqua meretur. quemadmodum per fide lem seruum meum iohannem per prophetam ostendo dicens. Et implebuntur arce frumento et redundabunt tor cularia uino et oleo. Et redda uo bis annos quos comedit locusta et bruchus et rubigo et eruca. forti tudo mea magna quam misi in uos.
 Et comeditis uescimini et saturabi mini et laudabitis nomen domini dei uiri qui fecit uobiscum mirabilia et non con fundetur populus meus in sempiternum. Quid est hoc? Per mirabile dispositionem dei implebuntur omni bono arce fidei credentis ecclesie. quoniam fructum frum ti trado in carne filii mei. nam quod etiam in uera saluatione qua fide les mei ad patriam reuocabuntur habundabunt contritiones ille inquit. ipsi concupiscuntias car nis sue propter nomen meum conuertunt ubi et eis liquor uive duco in san guinem eiusdem unigeniti mei dans eis etiam oleum uitae. Quomodo. Quo palium modum scilicet in salute uia restitua uobis circuitus uanitatum illarum quos per infidelitatem ignoran te comedit locusta obliuionis ui delicet ubi primum infusus ad ne quicie exorte sunt. nam quod ipsi fructuo sitate iusticie meae hoc modo in ob liuione habebant. ut homo esca necessitatis sue obliuiscitur postquam in uentre suum illam transfuderit. in impicitate sua nam iusticiam meam discerpentes. ut et locusta fructus corrodit. Quomodo. Quia ubi locusta negligenter perdesidia nostras utilitates bonorum fructuum aufert ibi et bruchus fednans in stercore immundicie se inuoluit. quoniam huius modi homines se inuoluentes in sor de infidelitatis idolorum et aliorum si milium scismatum et in diabolicis sciscitationibus atque in magicis artibus et in inspectione creatura rum creatoris infortunatis casibus hu manarum rerum atque in uilissima fe ditate homicidiorum et fornicatio num nam se in his pascunt quemad modum ideo bruchus luto nutritur.

 Quomodo. Quoniam ubi bruchus turpitudinis fetorem sordium di ligat. ibi etiam rubigo amaritu dinis metalla fidelis splendoris consumit. quia isti homines iusticie dei contrarii existentes. nam ea ob fuscare laborant. ut et eadem ru bigo decorem metallorum auferre solet.
 Quomodo. Quia ubi rubigo mor daciatis fulgorem bonorum actuum inficit. ibi etiam eruca nocue acti onis uirentes herbas bone utili tatis deprauat. quoniam tales homines clarissimas uirtutes uelut est sim plicitas castitas ac uirtuosa con stantia quos spiritus sanctus in omni uiridi tate beatitudinis irradiat. per ma liciam nequicie sue de se abicien

78^u
tes. ita illas delere conantur. quæ ad modum & cruce militat herbarum imminuit. Et in his omnibus. decla-ratur maxima fortitudo mea. que magnitudine uirtutis sue diabolicas aduersitates superauit. cum ea ad salutem uestram nisi in uos.
Quomodo. Ego pater nisi filium meum in mundum de uirgine corporaliter natum. ut per eum de perditione mortis uos redimeret. ita ut ego in uobis et uos in me habitaretis. cum etiam idem filius meus ad passionem uadens. carnem suam uobis ad manducandum et sanguinem suum uobis ad bibendum tradidit. Unde sacramentum hoc ad salutem uestram deuote comedens per illud uos feliciter pascetis. ac propter ea potum mihi de fame per di-uonem anime saturabimini. quomodo etiam filius meus medicinam uulnere uestro in penitentia attulit. et quia etiam sponsa eiusdem filii mei omni iusticia et ueritate exornata est. atque ideo nomen meum quod in uera trinitate deus unus existens uos gu-bernat. ostendens in uobis mirabi-lia mea uidelicet uos mirabiliter de diabolica potestate eripiens. fideliter laudabitis. Et ideo per confusionem mortis non confundetur propter me in futura eternitate. que tam mirabiliter de faucibus inferorum eduxi

x. Et uidetis quod predicta serenitas in altari tam diu permanet. quod usque post completionem eiusdem sacramenti sacerdos ab altari secedat.

quia eadem serenitas scilicet uisionis inmirabilibus illis se tam diu clarissime ostendit. usque dum patris eiusdem sacro seu officii misterii. ille qui dispensator eorundem sacramentorum est a consecratione illa se recipiens. eadem secreta mysteria compleat. Quid est hoc. Quomodo dignum est ut diuina maiestas uirtutem suam in eiusdem felicissimis sacramentis ple-nissime manifestet. et quia etiam dum homo manet in his que additum ponnent. auxilium dei illi non deserit.

Sed et ibi euglio pacis recitato. et oblationem que consecranda est altari super posita. cum idem sacerdos laudem omnipotentis dei. quod est sanctus. sanctus. sanctus. dominus deus sabaoth de cantat. et sic misteria eorumdem sacramentorum inchoat. repente ignea coruscatio inesti-mabilis claritatis apertum celo super eandem oblationem descendit. quomodo uiriditate uiuentis spirationis in osculo regis plata. et fructu claritatis uite qui in consecratione can-didandus est edificationi parietis dei imposito. cum idem nuncijs ueritatis dulcissimum sonum in laude crea-toris omnium trina inuocatione unctionis eiusdem dominatoris excremum emittit. et sic absconsa fulgoris aurore scilicet incarnati filii dei ex uirgine inchoat. subito impe-netrabilis altitudinis apertum claris-simo tabernaculo super misteria eiusdem sacramenti se inclinat. et eam totam sua claritate ita perfundit. ut sol re illa illustrat. quam radius suis serenitas incomprehensibilis transfigit: quia eundem rutilantem cir-culum eiusdem oblationis sanctissimus calor inui patris ita perfundit: ut radiant fulgor: et illam irrat: super quam se diffundendo cadit. Quid est hoc? Sponsa filii mei: oblationem panis et uini: super altare meum deuotissima intentione offert. Quo-modo? Videlicet per manum sacerdotis fidei recordatione monens me: ut eadem oblatione carnem et sangui-nem filii mei ipsi tradam. Quomodo?

Quia passionem eiusdem unigeniti mei in celestibus: secretis semper apparent: ideo et eadem oblatio eiusdem filio meo in ardente calore meo profundissima admiratione ita coadunatur: ut caro et sanguis eius ueracissima certitudine efficiatur: unde eadem ecclesia felicissima uegetatione roboratur.

Nam dum prefata claritas oblationis: xv. illam ita ut predictum est irradiat sur-sum et ad secreta celi inuisibiliter sustollit: quia eadem ignea corusca-tio dum idem sacramentum ut prefatum est sua illustratione perfundit: sursum hoc ad illa occulta que mortalis oculus uidere non ualet: inuisibili uirtute trahit: et iterum illud de-orsum super idem altare remittit: quomodo ipsam condescensionis respectu super mensam sanctificationis suauissime deponit: uelut homo altum suum utrorum trahit et iterum eum extrorsum emittit: dum ipse spiraculum ui-uentis uegetationis quod uiuit permi-rabile dispositione dei sibi in trorsum mittit et rursum ut uiuere possit extra se deducit: ita eandem oblationem ueram carnem et uerum san-guinem effectam: quam uis in conspectu hominum uelut panis et uinum ap-pareat: quia ut deus uerax est sine illusione: ita et illa altitudo sacramenti firma altitudo est: quam nul-lus deicere potest: uera caro et sanguis existens: absque deceptione: quomodo ut anima ueraciter uiuet in carne et sanguine dum homo uiuit in corpore: ita et etiam hoc mi-sterium in pane et uino ubi colitur ueraci celebratione: sic etiam appa-rens hominibus: quia ut cecus oculus hominis deum perfecte uidere non potest: ita etiam homo mysteria ista corporaliter intueri non ualet: quomodo ut homo corpus hominis et non spiritum eius uidet: sic etiam homo pa-nem et uinum: et non hec sacramenta per spicere potest. Quid est hoc? Serenitas que super corpus filii dei in sepulchro sepultum apparuit: ipsum a so-pore mortis resuscitans: hec etiam in altari super sacramentum corporis et sanguinis eiusdem unigeniti dei resplendet: illud ita in conspectu hominum regens: quod sentant eius uidere non possunt: nisi in specie panis et uini: secundum quod eadem oblatio altari super posita est: sicut etiam humanitatem filii dei diuinitas que in ipso erat: ita hominibus obsculta sunt: quod eum non nisi ut ho-minem uidere potuerunt cum ipsis ut hominē s̄tamen sine peccato con uersantē. Quid ē hoc. Ego q̄ om̄a cre auit cū ab eccl̄a p̄sacerdotale manu p̄dicta oblato in offert̄. cā benigne suscepit. quō ut diuinas mirabilia sua in uero uirginis ostendit. ita et in hac oblatione secreta sua de monstrat. Quom̄. Quia ibi caro et sanguis filii dī manifestat. Quom̄.

an.

Quō dū oblatio illa sursum inui sibilis uidetur in puncto pur itate dī habit̄ et n̄rū remittit ita in calore diuine maiestatis fouet. q̄d caro et sanguis unigeniti dī ef ficat. idē mysteriū hominib. carnali sensu n̄cernentib. q̄si aliq̄s p̄ciosissi mū unguentū simplici pani inuo luat et saphirū uino inponeret. et ego illud unā dulcē sapore con uerterē. ut in ore tuo o homo nec panē illū cū unguento. nec uinū illud cū saphiro discernere posses. s̄tamen suauē. sapore sentires. quō et filius m̄s suauis et lenis ē. Quid ē hoc. In unguento hoc intelligit filiū m̄s ex uirgine natus. q̄ p̄ciosis simo unguento unctus ē. Quom̄.
Quia sc̄a humanitate indutus ē. que tā p̄ciosū unguentū ē q̄d sua uitate sua mortifera uulnera ho minū ita p̄fudit. ut ultra in p̄dici one ade nec putrescant nec fete ant. cū se ad illū conuertunt. In saphiro autē isto diuinitas notat. que in eodē filio meo ē. qui lapis angularis existens m̄s ē et hu milis. quō de radice humane car nus que de uiro et muliere ē n̄ radi cauit. s̄. in calore meo mirabiliter ex suauissima uirgine incarnatus ē. unde et cā caro et sanguis ei dul cis et suauis ad sumēdū credentib.

an.

Sed tu o homo hoc sp̄ritale donū ita uisibiliter sumere n̄ potes. ut uit. uisibile carnē comedas. et uelut uisibile sanguinē bibas. quō putre do stercoris es. s̄. ut uiuens sp̄s tuus in te inuisibilis ē. ita et cā hoc ui uens sacramentū in oblatione ista inuisibile existens. atque inuisibiliter suscipiendū ē. quia quēadmodū corpus filii mei in uero uirginis surrexit. sic et cā et nunc caro ei dē unigeniti mei in sc̄ificatione alta ris ascendit. Quid ē hoc. Nā sp̄s ho minis q̄ inuisibilis ē. inuisibiliter sus cipit corpore hominis q̄d uisibile ē oblationē istā que in eodē sacramē to uisibilis existit. uisibiliter accipien te. ita tamē unū existentib. sic d̄s et homo unus xp̄s ē. et ut anima ratio nalis et caro mortalis in homine unus homo existit. quō homo qui recta fide me inspicit. cū sacramentū istud accipit. ad sc̄ificationē sui illud fideliter suscipit. Quid ē hoc. filius m̄s mirabiliter natus ē ex intē germina uirgine. cui caro indul cedine libidinis nūquā ferbuit. nec tacta ē. q̄a uas ei dē uirginis mundissimū erat. in quo ipsū uni genitū meū incarnari uoluit. Un de et cā n̄ p̄misi ut idē uas ei dē suauissime uirginis in calore ar existit. sacramentum hoc q̄d in oblatione ista inuisibile doris difflueret: quō in eo fili' m̃s hu manū corpus mirabilē suscepit.

Sed qđ eadē beata uirgo pange licū sermonē in eodē secreto uerā allocutionē audiunt: ita qđ exinde credula effecta: suspiria m̃as sue sur sū tenuit cū diceret: ecce ancilla dñi fiat: in scđm uerbū tuū: ita etiā uni genitū dī spū scō sup ueniente: con cipiens: designat qđ om̃p̃s d̃s puer ba sacerdotis in officio sacerdotali inuocandus ē: ita qđ idē sacerdos fidelit̃ indm credens: et cū deuotione cordis sui purā oblationē ipsi offerens: uerba salutis in obsequio humilita tis dabit: ubi et supna maiestas can de oblationē suscipiens in carnē: & sanguinē p̃i redemptoris mirabili uirtute transfundit. Quomodo.
Quia ut filius m̃s mirabilit̃ prius humanitatē in uirgine suscepit: ita etiā et nē oblatio hec mirabilē caro & sanguis ei in altari efficit̃. Vnde et hoc sacramentū totū integrū ē: inuisibile et uisibile existens: ut etiā unigenitus m̃s totus integer ē: scđm diuinitatē inuisibilis: et scđm hu manitatē uisibilis in sc̃lo manens.

Nam ut pullus auuū de ouo egre ditur: et ut uolatilis uermicu lus de exiguo grano orit̃: et anima li eodē a uolante illud remanet de quo idē animal ortū ē: ita etiā in oblatione ista ēritas carnis et san guinis filii mei p̃fidē tenenda est: quāuis eadē oblatio in conspectu hominū uelut panis et ut uinū apparet. Unde etiā ut aspicias signa natiuitatis: passionis: et sepul ture: nec n̄ resurrectionis: & ascensi onis saluatoris hominū: scilicet uni geniti dī uelut in speculo ibi appa rent: quomodo etiā cū idē filius dī in sc̃lo ēt in ipso p̃fata s̄: quō ut uera manifestatione consideras: mysteria nascentis ex uirgine et pa cientis in cruce: ac sepulti in sepul chro: nec n̄ resurgentis a mortuis: et ascendentis ad celos: uidelicet illius qui p̃ salute hominū ad t̃ras uenit purissima claritate: in eadē claritate in eodē sacramentis fulgent: ut etiā cū idē unigenitus dī tēpo raliter in mundo cū hominib; con uersaret̃ p̃ uoluntatē patris p̃re deptione humani generis: ea in suo corpore passus ē. Quid ē hoc.

Quia ante oculos meos apparet: qđ fili' m̃s p̃p̃t amorē hoīs in mun do passus sit: quō natiuitas: pas sio & sepultura: resurrectio: et as censio eīdē unigeniti mei mortē humani generis occiderūt. Vnde & ea in celestib; corā me fulgent: quia eox n̄ sū oblatis: s̄: usq; ad con sumationē sc̃li quasi aurora ante me in multa claritate apparebunt.
Quid ē hoc. Quō in eadē passi one usq; ad finē mundi om̃s illos p̃uideo q̃ in eadē passionē s̄ cre dituri: et qui cā abiecturi s̄: quia ipsa corā me semp fulgebit: quā diu illud homo dicere debet qđ idē filius m̃s discipulos suos do

:xviij.

:xviij.

80
cui. ut dñm orarent. sic scriptū est.
Et dimitte nobis debita nr̃a. sicut & nos dimittimus debitorib. nr̃is. qđ est hoc. Tū qui om̃a in potestate tua habes. inspicere effusione illius sanguinis. qui p̃ humano genere effusus ē. & dimitte nobis qui filii transgressionis sum⁹ debita nr̃a. que tibi psolueret debuimus. s. p̃t incurua-tionē cordis nr̃i n̄ fecimus. Quid ē hoc. Quia qđ in baptismo p̃misim⁹ n̄ adimpleuimus. quō p̃cepta tua transgressi sumus. et innocentia abieciimus. sicut & adā in parady-so tibi n̄ obediuit. et uictē innocen-tie corruptus. s. qđ tu p̃i es. noli pu-nire nos scđm nequiciā nr̃am. s. relaxa nobis transgressionē nr̃am scđm pietatē tuā. sic et nos qđ p̃ua-ricatores sum⁹. quāuis multā malicia in nobis habeam⁹. tam p̃t timorē et amorē saluatoris nr̃i. dimittim⁹ ex corde nr̃o debitorib. nr̃is iniuriā illā quā nobis intulierunt. Quomodo. Quō illos qui nos diligere deberent. quia hoīes sumus. in multis nos conturban-tes. et p̃ hoc te n̄ amantes. s. p̃cepta tua negligentes. n̄ p̃sequim⁹ scđm maliciā illā quā in nos exercuerunt. s. iustū iudiciū tuū inspi-cientes n̄ uindicam⁹ nos in eis qñ tū possum⁹. ita ut & tu od⁹ nobis sis p̃picius quō iustus et bonus es.
Tū g̃ audi homo. quia quādiu tibi subueniendū ē. & quādiu ty-alus hoīb. succurre potes. tādū passio filii mei corā me inuidia apparebit. & tādū etiā caro & sanguis ei⁹ in altari consecrabit. ad p̃cipiendū credulis hominib. ad saluationē & ad purgationē criminū eorū.

Nā cū idē unigenitus m̃s in mundo corporalit̃ ē. corpus ipsius in nutrimento carnis et sanguinis sui de fru-mento et uino sustentatū ē. unde etiā & nunc in altari caro & sanguis ei⁹ in oblatione frum̃ti & uini consecrat. quatinus inde fideles hoīes in anima et corpore reficiant. quō idē filius m̃s hominē de p̃dicatione ademirabilit̃ redemit. & nunc etiā hoīes de cotidiano malo in quo frequēt plabunt. m̃diter absoluit. In conse-cratione enī p̃dictē oblationis apparet. quicquid filius m̃s in carne sua p̃ redēptione hoīs corporalit̃ passus est. & hoc nolo abscondere. qđ elec-tos ei⁹ sursum ad celestia traho. quatin⁹ p̃ ipsos corpus ei⁹ in p̃dictis m̃bris p̃- ficiat. Qua p̃t et ego om̃a sacramenta hęc in oblatione ista mirabilit̃ demonstro. quō cū ea sup̃ altare ap-paruerint. tunc etiā caro et sanguis filii mei eadē sit. tam in conspectu hominū panis et uinū apparentis. qđ tā tēta ē fragilitas hoīs qđ crudā carnē et crudū sanguinē p̃cipe abhorreret. Nā mortalis homo diuinitatē n̄ potest inspicere. quādiu mortalis ē. unde etiā misterii hoc quō totū ē diuinitas ipsi homini obse-ratū ē. ita qđ illud inuisibilit̃ p̃ci-piet. qđ et idē unigenitus m̃s n̄c in mortalibus existens ultra non moritur.

Quia propter et ego ob homo carnem et san-guinem et in oblatione panis et vini tibi tradidit. quatenus per illud quod ui-sibile est illud quod invisibile est inuera fide percipias. Et idem sacramentum in vera certitudine per divinam potenciam suscipis. ita tamen quod tibi invisibile non apparet. nisi in magna necessitate. ut etiam illud electis meis cum per hoc in magna afflictione positi essent aliquando demonstratum est. Hec autem omnia propter amorem et propter imitatem hominis facio. Sed omnis creatura preceptis meis subiecta est. tu vero ob homo in semper rebellis existis. Unde cecus et surdus es. Sed tamen in rebellare non potes. Nonne facio quod uolo. te non uidentem. Tu autem non uides oculis tuis. nec audis auribus tuis in carne. quomodo animam hominis in corpore et in matre. et quomodo illa de corpore et auferatur. Sed anima tua intelligit me. cum mortale corpus suum relinquerit. Sic etiam carnem filii mei tradidit ad manducandum. et sanguinem eius ad bibendum. et hoc in potestate mea te ob homo non uidentem facio.

Quia propter ut uides dum idem sacerdos cum innocens agnus. quod est agnus dei qui tollis peccata mundi. decantat et ad percipien-dum sanctam communionem se exhibet per dicta ignea coruscatione ad cele-stia se recipit. quia eodem ministro laudem illius qui in innocentia mansuetudinis sue tulit placu-la hominum denunciant. et interiora pectoris sui cum exteriori de-uotione ad eadem sacramenta apertis. illa inuenta serenitas que ibi uir-tutem suam ostendit. ad superna secreta se subtrahit. et ita clauso celo. idem se subtrahentibus. eisdem celestibus. mysteriis. audis uocem ex alto di-centem. ut credentes et fideles ho-mines manducant et bibant ue-ra deuotione carnem et sanguinem saluatoris sui. qui propter passus mortem temporalem subit. ad ablucendum contaminationem illam quam primi parentes preceptum dei transgressi mundo intulerant. quatenus ipsi homines ab hac per uariationem emun-diti. recte hereditatem quam per uita-m perdidit. fideles restaurent.

Nam sicut idem unigenitus dei in cena corpus et sanguinem suum discipulis suis tradidit. ita etiam et nunc in alia carnem et sanguinem suum dat fidelibus suis. quemadmodum homo cum opus uoluntatis sue profecerit. illud ad utendum hominibus tribuit. quia idem filius dei precepta patris sui pergens. semetipsum pro salute hominum obtulit. et corpus et san-guinem suum ad sanctificationem eorum ad manducandum et ad bibendum dedit. ut etiam in canico canicorum sponsus amicis suis loquitur dicens.
Comeditis amici mei. bibite. et inebriamini carissimi. Quod est hoc. Comeditis in fide uos qui per sanctum baptismum ad amicitiam meam uenistis. quō effusus sanguis filii mei lapsū ad e uobis absterfit. ruminantes uerā medicinā in corpore eīdē unigeniti mei. quī nisi merita crimina uerā cū frequē in iusticiā in opib. ueris opamini uobis mīditer abstergant. Unde enā bibite in spe ex hac uite que uos de etēna pena eduat. sumētes poculū salutis uidelicet ut fir miter et uirilit̄ in illa grām credatis. qua redēpti estis. quō & sanguine illo pfundemini. q̄ p uobis effusus ē. Et ita inebria mini in caritate q̄ in carissimi estis. habundantes in uiculis sc̄p turarū. quatinus cū sūmo studio acarnalib. desideris uos franga tis. ita ut & ego p̄claras uirtutes ualde in amabiles in uobis exsus cite. tradens enā uobis corpus et sanguinē eīdē unigeniti mei. sic et ipse discipulis suis idē sacram tū dedit. ut in euēgio scriptū est.

xxv. Enamib. autē eis accipiens ih̄c panē benedixit ac fregit. de dix. discipulis suis et ait. Accipite et comedite. hoc ē corpus meū.
Et accipiens calicē grās egit. & de dit discipulis suis dicens. Bibite ex hoc om̄s. Hic ē sanguis m̄s noui testam̄ti. q̄ p multis effundet̄ in re missionē peccatorū. Dico autē uob.
Non bibā a modo de hoc genimi ne uitae. usq. in diē illū. cū illud bi bā uobiscū nouū in regno patris mei. Quid ē hoc. filio dī una cū dis cupulis suis consumationē illā cele brante qua ipse transmutus erat de mundo uidelicet cū uirētis causis diuinus conuersari n̄ debu it. ut prius fecerat. s. in uoluntate patris ad passionē crucis pduans. sūma deuotione accepit. p̄ salute ho minū panē in recordationē corpo ris sui. toto desiderio patre suū mo nens. quomodo de eo exiit. et quom̄ ad eū redire uoluit. ita ut ipse enā inspiceret si possibile ē. ut in fragi litate carnis sue calicē illū que erat bibiturus transiret. quāuis tamen hoc fieri n̄ deberet. Unde et panē il lū benedixit in recordatione sudo ris corporis sui cū p̄cepto patris se subdens. scilicet in cruce mori uolens in angustia eīdē passionis corpus et sanguinē suū discipulis suis tradi dit. ita ne et ipsi obliuiscerent̄ qd eis hoc exemplū dedisset. Ac fregit eis. q̄a quāuis passio illa corpori suo dura ē. tam patri suo obedi ens crudelissimā mortē in morte corporis sui uicit. designans enā qd in cū credentib. caro sua. et san guis in sacramento oblationis ē. tra denda. Deditq. ad uerā salutē eīdē discipulis suis. ita ut et ipsi hec in nomine ei facerent. sicut et ipse ca pp̄t amorē eorū faciebat. in missima uoce dicens. Hos qui humilit̄ me sequi uultis. ardente amore accipi te hoc exemplū qd relinquo uobis. uidelicet passionē meā et opa mea que in p̄cepto patris mei complen.

quā
re
hoc
qd
in ma
sp
inu
ma
me
p̄cep
de
ua grā
san bus
an tū fidel
qua
emp trad ins te
lo. uo
de angu uim
re me met me pa mei p mich fidel hic san sangu subun

32 quō ipse misit me docere et ostende re regnū ipsius. et comedite fidelit hoc qđ uobis do. qđ corpus meū ē.
Qđ ē hoc. Comedite corpus meū. quō in spū et in carne uřa debetis opa mea imitari cū ea sps scs cordi uřo in spirat. uelut homo escā sorbet. quā in uentre suū mittit. qđ ut me in opib. meis sequi debetis. ita etiā et corp meū manducabitis. uos et om̃s qui pcepta mea seruare uoluerint. Et de inde idē fili dī accipiens in sal uatione poculū salutis. patri suo grās egit. quō cū de latere ipsius sanguis effusus ē. hęc grā creden tibus data ē. quę tā fortis fuit. qđ & antiquū serpentē supauit. et p di tū hominē liberauit. & totā ecclām fidelit corroborauit. Quomodo. quia idē saluator p̃ciosissimū ex emplū suū in suauitate amoris sui tradidit fidelib. suis. dicens es tē inpiratione admonitionis. Biba te fiducialit ex hoc salinari pocu lo. uos om̃s qđ me fidelit sequi desi deratis. ita ut & corpus ur̃m in angustia castigetis. et sanguinē ur̃m in sudore aretatis p̃pt amo rē meū. ad roborandū ecclām uos metipsos abnegantes. sicut et ego me passioni subieci. et sanguinē meū p̃deptione ur̃a fudi tene ritudine carnis mee in hoc n̄ con siderans. s. salutē ur̃am siciens. Nā hic sanguis qđ p uobis effusus ē. n̄ ē sanguis ille qui in ueteri testam̃to sub umbra spargebat. s. sanguis ms noui testam̃ti qui ad salutē p̃p̃lōz datus ē. Quomodo. Ego qui sū unicus maris mee uidelicet in tegetime uirginis fili. sanguinē meū in cruce p̃deptione homi nū fudi qui me p̃fide inspicunt. et ut cū tunc p̃liberatione humani generis dedi ita cū etiā et nunc in altari p̃ hominib. tradō. scilicet p purgatione illōz qui cū fideliter suscipiunt. In eterna enī passionis mee corpus et sanguinē meū uo bis ad manducandū et ad biben dū dedi. quatinus et uos nunc in altari idē in memoria mēā facia tis. Unde etiā in ap̃uone uertitis dico uobis qui me fidelit subsequi ti estis. n̄ bibā a modo hoc poculū angustie in grauedine illa quā nunc de indeis pacior. usq. in diē illū cū de morte resurgens. mor te p̃stata diē saluationis afferā. ubi idē poculū redemptionis ur̃e bibā uobiscū qui mei estis. noui tate exultationis uobis ostendes. quia p̃dicio ueteris criminis abieci a p̃ro uobis regno illo qđ pater ms se diligentib. p̃pa rauit. Quid ē hoc. Quō morte mea quā in cruce passus sū sal uationē animarū sentiens. cū etiā post resurrectionē meā in ascensione mea spm̃ paraclytū accipientes. nouitate uere doctri ne suscipietis. ita qđ et p̃pt nom̃ meū multas tribulatio nes sustinebitis. quas et ego uo

xxviii.

biscū sustinebo. n̄ qđ amodo ul-tas miseras corporatū paciar: ut prius cū in mūdo corporalit̄ esse passus sū. s̄ qđ uos cas in nomine meo sustinetis. ubi et ego illas uobiscū sustineo. quō uos in me estis et ego in uobis. Et ita ut p̄dictū ē corpus et sanguinē filii mei. uos q̄ in me fidelit̄ creditis ad abo-litionē criminū ur̄ox p̄cipiens. q̄nnus p̄ hoc sacramentū exhilarati. uirtutē sup̄ne confortationis adipiscamini. sicut & dauid seruus m̄s in uoluntate ardoris mei clamat dicens. De fructu op̄i tuo rū faciat b̄n̄ t̄ra. p̄ducens fenuū iu-mentis. et herbā seruituti hominū.
 Ut educaſ panē de t̄ra. & uinuū leni-ficat cor hominis. h̄c exhilarat fa-ciē in oleo. et panis cor hōis confir-met. Quid ē hoc. O d̄s cuius magnificentia sup̄ om̄s ē de fide illa qua tu in ueritate cognoscetis. ita qđ ipsa fructus uirtutū in sapientia tua ē faciat b̄n̄ homo uidelicet q̄ fidei adherens esurit infidelita-tis in uia iusticie abiit. cū prius ueritatē ignorans. ieiunus rectitu-dine defecerat. s̄ nunc in saturitate bonorū op̄i p̄ducens contricionē animi sui illis q̄ in simplicitate s̄. fragilitatē suā considerans. exem-plū humilitatis fidelit̄ p̄bet. ubi etiā cū germine uirtutū surgens. in habundantia eiūde saturatus uiri d̄natē uere rectitudinis seruituti illorū q̄ t̄renis inhiant exhibet. q̄m ad uoluntatē ipsorū his actib; insudat. qui obsequio munitionis et defensionis sue fideles animas ad sup̄na gaudia p̄ducunt. ut et illi qui militia fortitudinis & p̄tectionis sue hos quos tueri debent fortissime defendunt. Et hec in hominib; p̄ uoluntatē tuā o d̄s id circo p̄cedunt. q̄tinus illis uirtutib; istis adornatis. mirabiliter ipsis edu-cas corpus filii tui de fructu illo quē t̄ra in puritate uiriditatis p̄fert. sic etiā idē unigenitus tuus ex uero uirginalis pudicie corporaliter ueniens. panē uite credentib; in se in eis ipso misericordit̄ dedit. s̄ & hoc miraculū idō facies. ut etiā sanguis eiūde unigeniti tui q̄ ad saluationē animarū effundit̄. lenificet in-teriore uim hominū. idē animas eorū in remissionē peccatorū.

 Quomodo. Quia ut prius filii tui corpus p̄deceptione humani gene-ris in cruce oblatū ē. ita etiā et n̄c caro et sanguis ei ad salutē creden-tiū in altari consecrat̄. Quia p̄pt̄ cū hoc in uoluntate tua mirabiliter factū fuerit. tunc et illud erit ut idē sacramentū exhilaret facie idē eccl̄am oleo misericordie p̄fusa q̄a cum gaudio fidei credentes misericordiam amplectentes. oculis d̄ni puleri apparent. quō cū salus mundi in cruce pendens hominē de laqueo diaboli miditer liberauit. tunc etiā hōies a uinculo peccatorū benigne absoluit. quatinus et ip-si in leuat utabus re n̄ de-ard-segunminis-ne in-elinet ascen-

 in macati o-
 in qu-
 ei digpore amaeinter etano quō qne ne-bile ē opari surgi ramū p̄ quē exur-
 mine ligam-
 s̄ flor-tū q̄a surrefinit tudin-
 bit. Qu-corpo-
 in offi-dū ē-

si in leticia simplicis cordis sui fide inter in dñm credentes. miseria pacien tibus cū ardore deuotionis subueni re n̄ desinant. Et in hoc amore fideles ardere debent. ut panis ille q̄ uita se gustantib; p̄bet. sensus ipsorū q̄ sc̄p ininstabilitate uacillant confirmet. ne intimo cordis eorū ad malū de clinēt. s; ut ad hoc q̄d uita ē fortit̄ ascendit. Panis autē iste caro si xxviii. tu ma ē quā nulla obscuritas in pec catīs obfuscat. nec ulla macula in iniquitatib; obnubilat. ita ut qui eā digne susceperunt in anima et cor pore celesti lumine pfundant. et a maculis interioris sordis sue fide liter emundent. Et idō nulla dubi tatio in ista sacratissima carne sit. quō qui primū hominē nec de car ne nec de ossē formauit. huic possi bile ē sacramentū istud hoc modo opari. Vnde ouirginalis ortus. tu surgis. crescis. dilataris. ac magnū ramū in multis germinib; pducis p quē celestis hierlīm edificabit. n̄ ex uirili semine s; ex mistico spira mine ueniens. Nā in ortu tuo n̄ es ligatus ulla maculositate criminū. s; floruisti in mirificatione uirtu tū. q̄a ex inarato agro talis flos surrexisti. qui nūquā ullo casu finitiois marcescet. s; q̄ in pleni tudine uiriditatis sue semp dura bit. Qua p̄pt̄ & hoc sacramentū corporis et sanguinis tui tam diu in officio uertutis in ecclā colen dū ē. quo usq; in finē mundi no uissimus homo ueniat qui p̄ idē mi steriū ueracit̄ saluandus ē. cū illud de deserto dī ueniens salutē creden tib; confert. ut idē dauid testatur dicens. Et mandauit nubib; de sup. et ianuās celi apuit. Et pluit illis manna ad manducandū. et panē celi dedit eis. Panē angelorū manducauit homo. cibaria mi sit eis in habundantiā. Quid est hoc. Celestis pater p̄potenciā gl̄e sue emolliuit m̄tes hominū a sup na celsitudine. cū patriarchis et p̄phetis in secreto misteriorū suorū hoc demonstrauit. q̄d et filiū suū in spū scō ueracit̄ p̄dixerit. et q̄d cū in legalib; p̄ceptis p̄ sanguinē hircorū et palas ostensiones homi nib; mirabiliter p̄signauerit. Et hoc modo suauitatē et dulcedinē cordis sui aprens. in lenitate et in ardore caritatis misit eis eun dē filiū suū. quatinus p̄ eū a fame infidelitatis sue reficerent. ita refectionē celestīū dans eis cum qua plenū gaudiū omnīū felici tatū ac beatitudinū fideliter sa ciari adipiscerent. Ergo panē il lū cuius dulcedine sup̄ni. an geli n̄ possunt saciari uidelicet dñm inspicientes. ita suscepit ho mo in humanitate filii dī. cum has refectiones beatitudinis su mus pater misit hominib; in habundantiā sp̄ntalis gaudiū.

Ac idō fidelis homo fidei au dione audiat. Quos fideles ho

xxv.

mines qui ecclesiasticū germen estis audite et intelligite instrumentū anime ur̄e ubi n̄ estis filii diaboli. s; heredes ecclesiasticū regnū. et considerate quomodo ego mitissimus ac benignissimus pater magnis felici-tatis salutis ur̄e circūdedi uos.
Ergo attendite bonitatem patris ur̄i. scilicet quomodo p̄ me ordi-natū ē q̄d in salutē ur̄a ē. quō quāuis uilis cinis sitis tamen eandē salutē ur̄am humanitas filii mei ex-poscit. Quomodo. filius m̄s natus est de incorrupta uirgine. quē ignata ullius doloris fuit. s; quē in uiriditate integritatis suē p̄man-sit. ut gramen in gl̄a uiriditatis suē uiget. sup̄ q̄d ros de celo cadit.
Et quia uirgo illa integra fuit de qua idē filius m̄s hoc modo carnē sine peccato assūpsit. idō et iustū ē ut caro et nunc de fructu il-lo fiat qui sine suco amaritudi-nis ē. Quomodo. Granū frum̄ti for-tissimus et optissimus fructus alioq̄ fructuū est. nec in culmo suo sucū aut medullā ut ceterę arbores ha-bens. s; in gramine suo in spicā sur-gen. s; na ut fructū suū tendit. nec p̄ calore nec p̄ frigore amarū sucū p̄ducit. s; siccā farinā tribuit. ut enā caro filii mei sicca fuit sine omni fednate humane pollutio-nis p̄ quā humanū genus in amplexib; libidinis uiri ac mulieris surgit. Non sic unigenitus m̄s na-tus ē. s; in uiriditate integritatis exiuit. ut enā gram̄ intactū granū frum̄ti gignit. Nā ut culmus frum̄ti sine medulla uigens siccū granū in purnate spice p̄fert. ita enā beata uir-go sine uirili fortitudine gignens. scīssimū filiū suū in simplicitate innocentie edidit. qui de eadē matre sua nullū sucū peccati traxit. quō et ipsa cū sine medulla uiri concepit. ut enā gram̄ sucū grano n̄ tribuit. quia illud n̄ de medullato stipite ui-get. s; de sole & pluma ac de blanda aura uiret. sicut & p̄dicta integerrima uirgo n̄ de uiro s; uirgine altissimi obumbrata et infusione sp̄s scī p̄fusa in suauitate castitatis uni-genitū suū genuit. Quāuis autē eadē uirgo de uoluntate uiri ac mulieris orta ē. tam eundē filiū suū ita n̄ p̄tulit. s; cū de celo uenientē uerū d̄m et hominē sine uoluntate uiri in integritate sua purissimū genuit. Quē quō cū in uirgini-tate sua sine sordē purissimū pepit. idō et nunc panis qui caro illius ueraciter ē. sc̄rat. purissimus in integritate sua existens. a fidelib; in purnate cordis et sine admixtione diuersitatis suscipi debet. ut filius isrl̄ p̄monstrauit. quē admodū in uoluntate mea scriptū est.

Memore diei huius in qua egressi estis de egypto et de domo seruitutis. quō in manu forti eduxit uos d̄ns de loco isto. ut n̄ comeda-tis fermentatū panē. Quid ē hoc.
Vos qui imitatores filii mei ē. n̄ uultus estote respicientes de morte ad uitā uidelicet in memoria uīa habentes saluationē dici illi qui fi lius mī ē qui mortē conculcauit et uitā dedit in quo in salute uīa egres si estis miserabile exiliū p̄ditionis scilicet cū abiectis densissimas tene bras infidelitatis ita etiā uos eripien tes de mansione diabolice seruitutis cui intransgressione ade dati fui stis. Nunc ergo de t̄renis actib; ad celestia respicite quō indiūina po tencia de malis eduxi uos ego dñs qui cunctis tanta fortitudine p̄sū quod uirtutem meam nullū obstaculū contrarietatis obsistit quin om̄a acutissime penetrat ita p̄ filiū meū eripiens uos de loco isto in quo p̄ in fidelitatem uīam mortis famulantes in bonis opib; n̄ laborastis s; in puer sitate uīa iacentes turpiter in eo p̄ stitistis s; quia nunc in unigenito meo ab opp̄ssione ista liberati estis currite de uirtute in uirtute cauē tes ne in conscientia uīam mutatis infidelitatem illā que cor uīam sua receptione n̄ confortat s; potius sua amaritudine grauat. Quid ē hoc. Nolite diabolicas artes sec tari nec cetera figmenta que ho mines in humanis contagiis phi losophorū paganorū ac hereticorū sibi metipsis adinuenerūt s; filiū meū in speculo fidei imitāmini qui uos de carcerib; inferni libera uit cū semetipsū p̄ uobis ad passio nē crucis obtulit s; ut uestigia eius tanto cauius sequi ualeatis cor da uīa celestia pane confortate uide licet corpus ei fidei deuotione su mite quō ipse decedo ueniens de suauit et depura uirgine natus et in ligno p̄ salute uīa passus semet ipsū uobis contulit ita ut & uos si ne admixtione ullius amaritudi nis suauē et purū panē diuina in uocatione corpus ei in altari con secratū sincero affectu suscipiatis quatinus p̄ hoc esusū interioris hominis effugientes ad copulas et ne beatitudinis puenire ualeatis.

Vnde etiā in uino qd de uite fluit eadē inuocatione p̄ sacramentū sanguinis ei uolo mira bilia demonstrare. Quid ē hoc.
 Sanguis filii mei de latere suo fluxit ut & uina de uite sudat.
 Sed ut uina pedib; conculcat et in torculari p̄mittit ita dulcissi mo ac fortissimo uino effluente ad roborandū sanguinē in hoīe sic etiā unigenito meo in sudore angustie uerberib; et flagellis conculcato et ligno crucis opp̄s so optimus atq; p̄ciosissimus san guis de uulnerib; ei emanauit saluberrima liberatione creden tes p̄ptos p̄fundens. Quēadmodū etiā uina dissimilis ē aliis pomis que duras cortices habentia come di possunt cū homines uinā ma gis soleant sugere quā comedere ita etiā filius mī dissimilis erat in peccato ceteris hominib; q̄a

xx.viii.

ipsi sub pondere nequicie gra-uari diuersis passionib; subiaccit. cū idē unigenitus m̃s de castissima uigine mirabiliter natus. omni contagione peccatorū careret. Qua ppter & quō uia tenere matricē est. idcirco et uinū in sanguinē eiusdē filii mei uolo consecrari.
Nā ut uinū de uentre sudat ita et filius m̃s de corde meo exiit. etiā eodē unigenito meo uera uite ex-istente. et diuersis palmis. ex eo excutiunt. quia fideles in ipso plantati s̃. qui p̃ incarnationē ei in bo-nis opib; fructuosi existunt. Et ut iste succus de dulcissimo ac fortissi-mo fructu uitae emanat. sic etiā oīs iusticia inuidia et ueritate p̃incar-nationē ei dē filii mei apparet. q̃s uirtutes in ipso inueniunt. om̃s q̃ cū fideliter querūt. Quomodo. Quō qui ipsi fideliter adherent. hi ui-rides et fructuosi ab ipso efficiunt. ita q̃d optimos fructus in uirtutib; affert. sicut et ipse suauis et m̃is existens p̃ciosissima germina in sc̃ntate et iusticia attulit. et sibi credentes ab omni sorde infidelitatis emundauit. ut in canticis canticorū de eo scriptū est.

xxiv.

Botrus cypri dilectus m̃s mihi. in uincis engaddi. Quid ē hoc. filius dī qui me exultē animā in passione sua saluat. in resurrectione etiā sua mihi poculū uite dat. Quomodo. Sic botrus cypri fortissimā plenitudinē potatio-nis in se continet. sic etiā excellentia que in unigenito dī ē. indeficientē magnitudinē in se habet. ita q̃d idē filius dī numquā hoc modo ex-hauriet. quin potū uite sc̃ientib; dare possit. quō ipse salus uite ē.

Nos enim qui prius in defectu fuimus. nunc in ostensione et in scientia uere sc̃ificationis bonorū opum confortati p̃ illū cibū uite manduca-mus. in quo etiā d̃m sc̃ientes ad uitā p̃gimus. cū in ueteri testam̃to q̃d q̃si p̃ umbrā plenū sensū n̄ habuit. s̃. in ostensione significationis multā di-uersitatē in se tenuit. magnā famē sustinentes ad saluationē surgere n̄ ualimus. Nunc ergo in ipso saturati. etiā in illo salutare poculū bibimus. scilicet fideliter in uera fide gustando q̃s d̃s sit. quē exteriorib; oculis mortalis carnis uidere non possumus. s̃. quē sp̃uali intelligen-tia intus habemus. sicut et uinum fortissimū suū in uenis hominū ostendit. hoc tamen hominib; non sentientib; s̃. tantū ita ē. ita se sc̃ientib;. Et idō sponsus animarū botrus cypri ē. cuius fructus n̄ defi-ciat. Quomodo. Cecus ingressus portū. requirit uisū suū. Quom̃.
Quia homo claritatē fidei n̄ ha-bens. cū ad fidē p̃ueniret. p̃ pressurā torcularis in rore sanguinis xp̃i ungit. Quomodo. Sicut p̃p̃ cepta illius. uitā in anima n̄a ha-bemus. ita etiā in donatione illi emundationē in carne n̄a reci-

85 primus: quō nos nati in p̄uaricatio ne ad e immundi existimus: s; in sanguine ipsius sc̄ificam̄. Unde desponsatio anumarū de ipso in sp̄u sc̄o dicit: Dilectus m̄s qui cor di meo dulcis et amabilis existit: fortissimū uinū p̄ sanguinē suū in plena sc̄ificatione mihi ē. q̄a dū sū immunda in plantatione carnis: sicut uinea que adhuc in cultu iacet in spinis: ipse fons sal uationis existens: peccatores asor dib; suis midit̄ abluit: et in myste rio secretorū suorū gl̄osissime sc̄ificat: quō ut de corde patris sua uiter exiit: sic etiā in uino sanguinē suū sua uiter ostendit: et ut ex uirgi ne mirabiliter natus ē: ita etiā et in pane corpus ei mirabiliter de clarat: quia ipse botrus ē: qui nū quā defectū in ullo detrimento patiet̄. Quia p̄pter et sup̄ altare uelut uinculari p̄ uoluntatē patris calcāt: quatinus homo q̄ p̄ se met̄ ipsū nullatenus subsistere potest: ob fragilitatē debilitatis sue n̄ deficiat: q̄m et sicut sangu is hominis augmentū expotui ac cipit: ita etiā homo sc̄ificationē ex sanguine filii dī habet: et ut ne sanguis hominis sine riuulo potius in ariditatē uertat̄ expotui reficiendus ē: sic etiā uinū in con secratione sanguinis ei dē filii dī n̄ deficiet: s; sup̄ altare in sacram̄ to ei dē mysterii semp̄ erit. Sed et xxx. ōti homo acutissime scīas q̄d in consecratione ista uino aqua int̄ esse debet: quia de latere filii mei sanguis et aqua emanauit: ita q̄d et in uino diuinitas ei intelligitur: et q̄d in aqua humanitas ipsius sentit̄. Et idō quō in ipso diuinitas et humanitas ipsius sentit̄. Et idō quō in ipso diuinitas et humanitas ē: idcirco etiā in consecratione ista uino aqua inter erit: quia cū uinū diuinitatē ei designet: aqua etiā humanitatē ipsius ostendit: que sine conmixtione uirilis san guinis pura et munda ē: quō idē unigenitus m̄s fons aque uiue ex istens: hominē in regeneratione sp̄s et aque de ueteri culpa ad e emun dauit: et eos ad ecclesiā transtulit: cū p̄ salute eorū in mundū uenit: quē admodū scriptū ē.

Ego quasi fluuius dorix: et sic ductus aque exiui de parad̄y so. Quid ē hoc? D̄s hominē rationa litate firmans: ei plurima mystica dedit: cū spiraculū uite in eū mit tens: illū rationalitate sublima uit. Qui dū seductus in mortē ca deret: ego filius dī qui ipsū libe rare ueni fluens in decore omniū rigationū in fixa carnis: et ema nans in diffusionē uere et indefi cietis puritatis: exiui de secreto sup̄ne amenitatis: quatinus ho mo qui ex creatu suo p̄ierat: midit̄ de p̄ditione eriperet̄. Quom̄ ut innoxius sanguis innocens innocentiē in angustia de sua

xxx.

damus passionis pro eo effunderetur.
Quomodo. Intransgressione ad eum cum ipse de paradiso expulsus est. sanguis eius de pulsatione angustie quia reus erat totus inundavit. et sic in angustia illa liquefactus cum sudore aque perfusus est. Et ita sanguini hominis. aqua per sudorem matris est scienda est. Unde o homo cum unigeni-tus dei in carne angustiarum cepit. videlicet quando per humano genere pari uoluit. sanguis eius guttas su-doris emisit. ac deinde ipso in cruce suspensus de uulnere lateris sui aqua cum sanguine emanavit. Et ideo in sacramento illo ubi mysterium eiusdem passionis celebrandum est aqua uino inter se debet. quia et de uulnere lateris eiusdem filii dei aqua et sanguis effluxit.

Sed et in eodem sacrificio uinum aque super habundabit. quia et sanguis tabernaculi superat. sicut et lac succi sui quod seruus excedit. Qui autem mi-sterium hoc celebrant. id ita perfici-ant quemadmodum eis premonstratum est. sicut etiam ibi homines ex-hortantur ubi inspiratione mea per sapientiam alloquuntur. ut scriptum est.

xxx.ii.

Venite comedite panem meum et bibite uinum quod miscui uo-bis. Quid est hoc. Vos qui stulticiam deponere uultis. uenite de igno-rantia illa qua deum nescitis. et de stupro illo per quod in exilium missi estis. et redite in candidam regionem ueram. que per speculum sidei in fontem uiuentis aque uobis premonstrata est. et pia deuotione comedite panem meum. que uir in agrum non seminauit. et cui terra uiriditate non dedit. sed qui de deo exiuit. atque in eo permanet. Nam ut panis manducatur. et ut terra concalcatur. sic et filius dei panis uiuus filios hominum preceperit. quia ipse filius dei in uirtute diuinitatis sue stabilis est. et filii hominum in debilitate carnis sue labiles sunt. filius enim dei corporaliter manens in mundo mollitiem liquoris peccati in carne sua non habuit. quomodo sicut ignis pa-nem excoquens arefacit. nec ei ullum molle humorem dimittit. ita et idem unigenitus dei de fortissimo igne spiritus sancti conceptus. et de castissima uirgine natus. sine ulla contagione peccati in corpore suo fuit. Et ita sicut panis hominem reficit. sic etiam et fideles homines per uinum filium dei in fide nutriunt. quia ipse fortissimus fructus est qui nunquam deficiet. Unde et uos fideles hunc panem comedentes. bibite etiam puram intentionem uini hoc quod omni prorsus sorde caret. et quod in hanc inanem uagationem non uadit. ubi corruptio mundiciam innocentie absorbens. eam in uicium conuerit. Nam et secundum modum illud primus homo mundus fuit quando creatus est. quomodo in nulla di-uersitate erat. sed mundus in carne et in sanguine suo fuit. Qui cum pu

pe
m si t ip
m
re
en
e at ac
in ph ue
pe
ni ca no
cu
cu
mu
fil lic
san
qu
tu
re
nu
Qu
pos
ris
ne
na
aqu
gu
uos

p̄uaricationē faceret illusus ē. ita q̄d postea semp sanguinē suū in fectore immundicie mechie sparsit. quia sicut idē homo honorē innocen-tie abiecerat. ita etiā et sanguis ipsius sanguinē colorē suū p̄dit inhumana conceptione in liquore pollutionis subuersus. in quo etiā liquore ita sine formatione ē quo usq. iterū sanguis appareat. et ita sanguis ille formā aliā accipiens post ortū suū in debilitate iacet. usq. dū medulla ei plenitudinē fortitudinis sue inueniat. et usq. dū scientia in ipso p̄exertationē occulte suscitatio-nis exurgat. et tunc ita munda caro et mundus sanguis de uene-no expiatus apparet. quo usq. eū noxius calor p̄ueniat. qui p̄ cussione sua noxiā spumā in mundicie eicit. S. ab his omnib. filius dī mundus exstruit. uide-licet munda carnē et mundū sanguinē habens. ita q̄d eū nūquā tactus ullius noxi calor tetigit. S. in scificatione et honore uiridissime castitatis manens. nulla contagione uolari potuit.
 Qui tamen in angustia passionis positus. aquā in sanguine late-ris sui effudit. quia sanguis sine aqua in effusione sua n̄ ē. S. ita tēptatus existit. ut sanguis aquā confortet. & ut aqua san-guinē delinuat. Qua p̄pt̄ et. xxx. m. uos qui dīm deuote colere uultis. ita q̄d urām salutē amatis sumite hoc poculū scificationis. q̄d ita tēptauit uobis. ut aspiciatē ulnonis in lenitate remissionis n̄ sentiat. quō et diuinitas & humanitas in supno filio ē. p̄cuius passionē de morte liberati. et p̄cuius corpus et sanguinē uegetati societate in etna mansione habeant. S. ego qui sū in uicū et finis. iterū dico tibi o homo de nobili filio meo. qui flos ē rosarū et lilii conuallū. natus de castissima uirgine que eū in intēgritate sua genuit. qui paruit talis exuit. q̄d p̄cū de iniquitate priorū parentū humani generis placatus sū. qui me intransgressione sua ad indignationē puocauit.

 Unde & eundē partū semp in spicio. eū corpus et sanguinē filii mei cotidie sup altare nomini meo cōsecratū habeo. ita q̄d p̄ide sacramtū tu homo scificaris. eandē carnē manducans. et eundē sanguinē bibens. Nā eū ibi sacerdos officii suū exercet. sicut illi constitutū ē. uidelicet sacramentis uerbis me inuocans. tunc in eadē potestate ibi assū. qua et ibi ad eā ubi unigenitus m̄s sine scismate ullius contagionis incarnatus ē. unde et corpus ei purissimū et suauissi-mū in omni scitate fuit. ita q̄d et nunc carnē et sanguinē ipsius fideliter suscipientes. tanta dulce-dine uiuificent. q̄d nullū despec-tū abiectionis paciant. sicut et

xxx.v.

in carmine canticorum scriptum est.

Quis mihi det te fratri meum sugente ubera matris mee. ut inueniam te foris et de osculetur. etiam me nemo despiciat. Quid est hoc. Geminus et de uocio in ecclesia posuisti. certissima fide dicit. Quis est ille qui in miserrimo ho-mini in crummis posito. missima oblatione det te sponsu ecclesie. cum te fratrem meum propter incarnationem tuam nomino. sugentem in diuinam et ueritatem que sunt nutrimenta illa quibus diuinitas homines nutrit. que in mater in creatione mea est. scilicet cum educatione uocationis unam in-dans. Quid est hoc. Quia et nutrimenta ecclesie plena sunt gratia tua. cum ei plena ubertate in sacramento corporis et sanguinis tui tribuis. qui panis uiuis et fons aque uiue est. Et hoc ideo facis. ut manifesta certitudine inueniam te foris. scilicet cum scio te filium dei in celis. uideam te etiam homi-nem unum. quem in diuinitate mortales oculi mei cernere non ualent. ita ut etiam inueniam te in pane et uino diuini misterii. quod sacramentum sine pondere deceptionis. et sine anxietate fallacie est. ac deinde hoc modo de osculetur te. quomodo per salutem meam incarnatus es. et quia etiam me participem corporis et sanguinis tui facis. quatinus per hoc in unum cum propter me uenisti. et quod te ipsum mihi tradidisti. iam nulla creatura deinceps me despiciat. cum ipsa uoluntate tua tibi subiecta semper se-quat. et cum ego preceptis tuis rebellis existens. tibi multo ciens contrari inueniar. Nunc ergo ut uides o homo cum sacerdos his uerbis que sibi in spiritu sancto constituta sunt. oblato sacrificio ad altare me ceperit in uocare. amen tibi dico quomodo in arden-te calore meo ibi assu. et pleno desiderio ideo sacramentum perficio. Quomodo.

Quomodo in effectu eiusdem misterii ardente caritate super eandem oblationem expando. uidelicet ab initio uerborum sacerdotis me in uocantis. et hanc memoria facientis. quod filius meus in angustia passionis sue panem et ui-num benedicens. in sacramento corporis et sanguinis sui discipulis suis tradidit. ut et ipsi ideo per salutem populi fa-cerent. Vere dico uobis. quia numquam in uocatio ista super huiusmodi oblationem in recordationem eiusdem unigeniti mei erit. nisi misterium corporis et sanguinis eius ibi perficia-tur. quod carnalis oculus quandoque ci-nis est uidere non poterit. nisi in fide illud humili deuotione perspiciat.
Quomodo. Cum aliquid unum sibi in mi-sericordiam suam poni uiderit. ardente super illud uolat. et calore suo illud fouens pullum educit. ita quod testa oui remanet. et quod pullus ille euolat.
Quid est hoc. Ego omnipotens cum oblatione panis et uini super altare nomini meo dedicatum in memoria filii mei oblata fuerit. etiam mirabiliter uirtute et gloria mea illustrans. in corpus et sanguinem eiusdem unigeniti nm

so m cem uo h
san ibi cem
et fa bitt
cor
ma
filu
mu
apu
s. ho uelu seilu tua
na
re u plu
hui
reo sion trah tam
cer
corp
ma
inde
sacer appl ibi m hoc sa hora

87 nisi mei transfundo. Quomodo. Ipso miraculo quo idē filius mī carne ex uirgine suscepit. ipsa etiā oblatio hēc in consecratione ista caro & sanguis ei efficiūt. S. panis et uinū ibi exteriorib; oculis uisibiliter cernit. ^{manet} intus autē sentas corporis et sanguinis ei dē filii mei inuisi-biliter ^{manet} intus autē sentas corporis et sanguinis ei dē filii mei inuisibiliter manet. Quom. Cū filius mī apud homines eēt in mundo. apud me manens in celo. apud homines etiā manet intus.
S. hoc spūale et nō carnale est.

Sic et ego pater omni creature. ^{xxxv.} assū. ā nulla abstrahens me uelut tu homo ab ea te subtrahis. scilicet ut cū in aqua uides facies tua quidē in ea apparet. s. tamen ita nullas uires tuas in illa exercere uales. et cū te ab ea aueris. am-plius nulla nō apparet. Ego autē huiusmodi mutabilitate nō appareo creature s. assū ei uera ei osten-sione. nec ab ea potestate meā subtraho. s. in ea fortitudinē uoluntatis mee scdm qd mī placuerit exerceo. Unde etiā in sacramento corporis et sanguinis filii mei maiestatē meā ueracitē demonstrō. uidelicet ab initio secretorū uerborū sacerdotis usq; dū idē mysteriū appto p̄cipiat. miracula mea ibi mirabiliter exercens. ^{xxxvi.} Sed et hoc sacerdotale officiū a prima hora diei usq; ad nonā horā ipsi a fidelib; exerceri potest. scdm qd necessitas tēporis in morib; hominū inueniunt quō et adā immane surgens ad horā nonā seductus ē. et quia etiā passio filii mei in cre-pusculo diei inchoata. ad horā nonā consummata dinoscit. ita qd in cruce moriens exspirauit et morte sua mortē uiriliter su-perauit. ubi et ecclā ei dē unigenito meo assistens. dotē suā ibi suscepit. qd et nunc a filiis ei dē ecclē celebrandū. Hoc autē idē officiū a sacerdotib; in sacrificio in inani uentris. et nō in plenitudine ei pagendū ē. ne coagulatio escharū spūale desideriū euacuet. quō prius eē debet spū-talis epulatio. et postea carnalis refectio. et qā etiā sps honoran-dus ē. & caro refocilandā. Nam hoc sacramentū spūali desiderio et nō carnali cupiditate accipiendū ē. et idō in ieiunio et non in epulis p̄cipi debet. nisi in necessitate illa si homo in hac opinionē positus ē. qd de mundo transiturus sit. S. filius mī circa finē diei corpus et sanguinē suū discipulis suis dedit. qm eis uerū manē uite cūc attulit. et quia etiā in consumatione scilicet morte in hominib; tēporaliter transiunt electi sicut sol in regno meo fulgebunt.

Et hoc modo idē unigenitus mī in resurrectione sua xxx. iv.

xl.

demonstravit animas iustorū ab inferno se abstrahere et genus humanū in restaurationē emicuntē se reducere quā repbi angeli p̄diderūt mortē sine suggestionē alterius appetentes. ita q̄d a nullo alio insidiatore q̄m a semetipsis seducti s̄. cū nec gustū peccati in semetipsis habuerūt. uelut homo in fragilitate corporis sui habet. vnde & homo quā ab insidiante seductus ē fragilitatē corporis habens. a subleuantē etiā ad unā reductus ē. & diabolus corporale grauedinē non habens. in puerilitate sua relictus est. S. & homini uita & salubris refectio in p̄ceptione corporis et sanguinis filii mei data ē. q̄m nūc p̄ hoc sacramentū in uisibilibus in anima refocillatus surgat. et inuisibili aduersario suo uiriliter resistat. Qui autē idē sacramentū in maiore aut in minore q̄ntitate percipiunt sic intelligant. quia et ille qui plus et ille qui minus accepit. unā eandēq. uim p̄ceperūt. q̄m hoc sacramentū n̄ in quantitate s. in sententia ē. & percipientes scdm̄ fidē ipsorū saluat. ut de manna sic scriptū ē. Exerūtq. ita filii isrl̄ et collegerunt alius ^{p̄ alius} minus. et mensi s̄ ad mensurā gomor. Nec qui plus collegerat habuit amplius. nec qui minus parauerat repperit minus. s. singuli iuxta id q̄d edere poterant congregauerūt. Quid ē hoc. Sup̄nū sacramentū iuxta id q̄d edere poterant congregauerūt. Quid ē hoc. Sup̄nū sacramentū iuxta id q̄d eis p̄ceptū ē attendunt filii electionis. qui dñm ardentius uidere desiderant et colligunt illud in cordib. suis scdm̄ doctrinā principalium magistrorū suorū. et scdm̄ id q̄d ab eis didicerūt scrutantur illud in manib. suis. alius plus deuotionis in secreto cordis sui habens. vnde et cū estimatione sua metiuntur scdm̄ id q̄d in animab. suis sentiunt. discernentes fidē quā in dñm habent. nec eā diuidentes. s. ipsā integrā habentes. et q̄nta & quali deuotione corpus et sanguinē recepto ris sui percipiunt considerantes. S. idē sacramentū n̄ erit huius sanctius qui plus ex eo sup̄serit. ^{p̄cept. n̄ illi q̄ntusq. minusq.} s. scdm̄ fidē suā qui illud percipit ita et cū illuminabit. Quia p̄pter ob homo in magnitudine percipiendū n̄ ē. quia forissimū dñs tā in parua quā in magna oblatione huius mysterii ē. et ideo qui illud percipiunt solū hoc attendant. q̄d unū et unū dñm firma et integra fide in corde suo habeant. Et sic quisq. fidelis sincero et recto corde scdm̄ id q̄d possibilis fidei in ipso exposcit uires anime sue congregat cauens ne alius aut p̄fundius diuinitatē scrutetur.

xl. 3.

xl. 13.

88 quā sensu aut cognitione sua capere potest. s; sobrie ut in spū scō edoctus ē timori dñi subiectus sit. quō homo paup cinis est. Sed. xl. iij. uos ostuli homines nolite dubitare an sacramentū istud qđ hoc modo uobis demonstratū ē. corpus et sanguis filii mei sit. Recordamini ergo. unde ade carnē et sanguinē creauerim. videlicet de lino trē. Quid ergo uobis ui-detur. An possibilis ē m de ob-latione ista facere carnē et san-guinē filii mei. an de lino trē facere hominē. S; uir scē de sanguine suo fundit. et femina sus-cipit illud. et qđ tunc amplius addunt. Nihil omnino. aut increatione aut in carne infantili. Quis ergo format hominē in carne et in ossib; ac in medullis et in pulchra facie sua. nisi ego pater omnium. S; pater et mater nō habent ullā potestātē facere aut creare infantiulū. nisi qđ tantū in ardente libidine sanguinē suū excutunt. et postea nullā potestātē in eo formandi ha-bent. Nū uidere potestis quomō hec fiant. nisi qđ ea cernitis in formis suis. Tū autē o homo dicis. Ego nō uideo hanc oblationē carnē et sanguinē. ut hominē corpus et sanguinē ē cerno.
Ad qđ tibi respondebo. Vos ui-distis filiū meū in corpore et in sanguine mortale mūra. qđ nunc immortalis in celo ē. et idō cor-poralib; oculis eū modo uidere nō potestis. nec etiā quomodo caro et sanguis ei in altari conse-cretur. qđ sacramentū ppter glām sacerdotis ibi nō sit. s; ppter glām eīdē unigeniti mei qui hoc officiū cū discipulis suis in cena sua pegerit. S; ut me in clari-tate mea quādiu mortales estis uidere nō ualeatis. sic etiā nec carnē nec sanguinē filii mei carna-lib; oculis uris carnaliter uidetis. scđm id qđ ea que inuisibilia s; pspicere nō potestis. s; scđm hoc quod mortalis obtutus ur. ea que uisibilia s; uisibilitē cape ualeat.

Hoc autē idē sacramentū in trib; causis mihi offerendū est. Quomodo. In pane et uino et aqua. ob honorē trinitatis.
Unde si de his trib; aliquid defuerit. tunc ibi trinitas ueracitē nō colitur. quō in uino intelligit pater. in pane filius. et in aqua spūs scs. ita qui uinū sine pane & sine aqua offert. patrē colit. s; filiū et spm scm negat. aut qui panē sine uino et sine aqua dat. filiū habet s; patrē et spm scm abicit. aut qui aqua sine uino et sine pane utitur. spm scm attendit. s; patrē et filiū recusat. aut qui uinū & panē sine aqua dat. patrē et filiū ha-bet. s; spm scm abicit. aut qui uinū et aquā sine pane offert xl. iij.

patre et spm scm colit s; filiu ne gat: aut qui pane et aqua sine uino uiuit: filiu & spm scm ad tendit: s; patre recusat. Ergo in ^{xlvi} hoc sacramento diuino n fiat: qd et ego indiuiduus manens in trib; psonis unus ds inseparabi lus su: sicut et cognatio uolun tas et opus in uo homine s: sine quib; homo n e. Quod si in isto sacrificio defectus fue rit: ita qd ibi aut panis aut uinu aut aqua negligit: uere tunc ille cuius neglectu hoc euenit graui uindicta subiace bit. Na si hoc scienter p negli gentia temporis seu infideliter p dubietate incredulitatis actu est: illu qui huic reatu subia cet ab oculis meis eiciat: nisi ipse graui penitencia ad se reuer sus semetipsu p hoc grauius penitendo puniat: uel si hoc ignoranter p negligentia obli uionis euenit tunc ille qui in hoc reus e: de hac culpa sua in correctione penitentie in re sponsurus e: quo acutius n p spec it si hec omnia adessent que ad ^{xlvi} sacrificiu meū pertinebant. Cu enim filius ms in cruce pe pen dit: ibi nichil saluationis de fuit quia p effusu sanguine sui saluatione animaru ho minib; attulit: unde nec in hoc misterio quicquam de ee debet. Na sacramentu hoc sacratissima scificatio in omni scitate e: & ppter ea caro ista et sanguis iste omi fide & deuotio ne accipendus e. Quicūq; autē hanc sacratissimā carnē accipit: et sanguinē eide myste rii sumere n recusat: quo idē filius ms sup omia e mundus: et speculū inuirtit: ac ideo nobilissimus sanguis ei e acci piendus: nisi p simplicitate ac cipientis sacerdos tuncat picu lum effusionis: et tunc illi ac cepturo fiat sedm simplicitate infamū: quib; esca panis con cedit: et potus uini denegatur: ita & isti hec sacro sca caro tri buatur: et fluens sanguis sub trahat: ne maius piculū exinde oriat: et quia etiā illa sacro sca caro sanguini suo et sanguis il le carni sue in una scitate con iunctus e. Qd si homo ille hui discretionis e: qd angustia ha bet idē mysteriū custodire: tunc cū ei illa sca caro ad comedendū datur: tunc et sanguis eius de carnis ipsi ad potandū tribuat.

Sacerdos autē qui hoc sa cramentu celebrat: dili genter his indumentis quib; an tiqui patres edochi p spm scm ad idē officiu indui construe runt uestitus sit: et acutissime uerba illa que idē sps scs eis de patrib; ad celebrationē ei de mysterii inspirauit adten dat

his sp
dat
acc don
m offi glig deli tne
mā
gr
m
qu
uol
dis
gr
S
ut pru
fican semp
cū
que idē
corp
salu
ne
lū grau ment dos meū
lū sue in

dat. solliciti cauens ne quicquā ex his omnia deuotissime etiā in spiciens ne exemplū hoc transcen dat. ubi filius mī panē et calicē accepit et discipulis suis ad come dendū & ad bibendū dedit. S. q̄ mundum aut in uerbis ad idē officiū p̄uenit. quicquā p̄ne gligentiā obliuionis ignoranter deliquerit. graui et salubri pen tencia corripendus ē. s. tam̄ mīam meā querens inueniet. quia trans gressionē istā n̄ in uoluntate aut in malicia cordis sui p̄petrauit.
Qui uero id sciens aut p̄pore uoluntatis sue aut p̄nequiciā cor dis sui. in eisdē sacramētis trans gressus fuerit. hunc offensus dicā.

Serue nequā cur n̄ eas sacerdos. ^{et. viij.} tali uestimēto recte induit. ut in spū scō tibi instrueret annq̄ principales magistri tui in signi ficatione sp̄itulis officiū. ut mihi semp̄ ministrant angeli mei. Et cur etiā neglexisti modū uerborū illoꝝ que tibi in eodē spū scō tradiderūt idē patres tui in consecratione corporis et sanguinis filii mei. ad salutē & ad glām generis huma ni. Unde qui in hoc reatu culpabi lis ē inde mihi responsurus ē. si n̄ graui afflictione penitendo se metipsū punierit. Sed sacer. ^{et. ix.} dos qui epulas • istas ad altare meū offert. inde ieiunus his epu lis n̄ recedat. s. refectiōē anime sue in corpore et in sanguine fi li mei p̄cipiat. Qd si nouit graui orib; onerib; se grauari. et his epulis indignū. tunc n̄ p̄sumat ad mensā meā accedere. nec illorū a secore criminū suorū filiū meū tangere. ut illi et mensā & glām nauitatis sue contaminauerūt. qui caput • lucernas lucerne crudeliter absciderūt. Quia p̄pter et iste qui na contaminatus ē ua rietate pestis sue sūmo sacerdoti scilicet filio meo ostendat. et etiā corā alio mortali sacerdote se ac cusat qui sibi remediū consolatio nis cū penitencia demonstrat. et sic demū ad officiū suū purificatus accedat. Sed ego pater omnium. ^{.l.} secreta dispositione sacramētis col loqui. p̄qd me sacerdos ad altare inuocare debet. in multis et in magnis sermonib; esse nolo. s. in recta ordinatione priorū magistro rū quos donū scī sp̄s in recta ad monitione me inuocare edocuit. et hoc in multiplici stultie sa pientie ēē n̄ debet. s. in simplicitate cordis. qui in multa colloquutione n̄ delector. s. in puritate cordis il lorū qui me deuote querūt. et qui me in ardore caritatis benigne amplectunt. Alias enim electis meis cū me querūt grām meā sedm̄ uicissitudinē donorū sp̄s scī impen do. in hoc autē sacramēto me to tū ipsis ostendo. et sp̄s scī in nobis et in ipso nos. & unū in diuinita te sumus. sicut et corpus. et aīa et uires illius unus uiuens homo ē Unde qui ad hoc sacramentū accedit. caueat. ut ita ueniat. ne glām diuinitatis offendat.

2.4. Sed tu o homo dū ceteri homines ad percipiendū idē sacramtū ad sacerdotē accedunt. quinque modos in eis consi- deras. quia illi qui perceptionē diuini mysteriū a sacerdote suo accipe deside-rant. quinque. sensus corporis sui a sece peccatorū suorū emundant. et eos a subripiente inmundicia digne et laudabiliter custodiant. ut tanto salubrius idē percipiant.

2.13. Quia propter etiā ceteris qui ad idē sacramentū ut uidet accedunt alii in corpore lucidi. et in anima ignei s. quō ipsi clarnatē fidei ad idē sacramentū habentes nō dubitant quin uerū corpus et uerus sanguis filii mei sit. et idō dū illud hac fide percipiunt. in carne sua uegetant. et scīficant. ita ut p hoc mysteriū scīficant. post resur-rectionē in eodē corpore suo appareant in celo. atq. in anima sua igneo dono sps scī transfundunt. et accendunt. quatinus hac illu-stratione p fusi trena respiciant. et celestia desiderant. Quomodo.
 Quia ut auento ignis ad incen-dū exenat. sic et isti p sacramtū istud ut in supno amore ardeant inbuuntur. Sed alii in corpore pallidi et in anima tenebrosi uident. qui tepidi in fide firmā fidē ad idē sacramentū nō habent. s. stulti s. sapientiā in-telligere uelint. puer cuius opa insubilia s. Nā foris in auditu auris audiunt. et in ardore cor-dis sui percipiunt ea que ipsis de eodē sacramento dicunt. ita qd illa libenter in fide pfecte comprehenderent. s. tam p dubietate que in ipsis ē nō possunt uniuersi qmā scītas in illo sit. Unde et in interiore homine tenebris circūdati s. quō mentē suā sursum ad pfectionē illā eleuare nō ualent. quia ipsi in pec-catis concepti p pondere corpo-ralis fragilitatis ad pfectionē cre-dulitatis illius graues s. spmū ta-men plus consentientes. ita qd si dē libenter intelligerent. si p te pore cordis sui possent. Qui enī ma-iorib. onerib. peccatorū in opib. suis nō dū s. grauati hos quāuis ue-lit. inuitos spmū consentire oportet. quō anima maiore potestate adhuc habens. ita qd nō dū in pec-catis interempta ē. corpus uolun-tati sue subicit. Nā hec s. certamina que s. inter corpus et animā. quia anima corpori uult dñari. quō ipsi contrariū ē qd caro in concupiscentia sua habet. qd peccatū ē. et corpus dedignatur insticiā. que in desiderio anime ē. quia ipsa ui- ta diligit. Quid ē hoc. Qd mortuū ē mortuū appetit. et qd uiuit. uiuentē diligit.

 Quomodo. Caro amat peccatū et anima diligit iusticiā et in hoc sibi aduersant et raro sibi consen-tunt. Sicut puer sine labore et sine intellectu sensus sui pascit et saturat ita et isti homines hoc sacramento quasi pignora animā uiuificant quō illud nec praebeat nec pcommuniā de dignant. Sicut tan-tū simplici animo amplectunt.

Quidā uero in corpore hirsuti et in anima multa immundi-cia humane pollutionis p̄fusi sordēt. quō isti in carne sua turpes et impudici sine pudore existentes et stercore uiciorū se polluentes ut porcus luto se inuoluit hoc modo animā suā diuersa sordē peccatorū humane contagionis inficiendo contaminant. Et cū ipsi in his uiciis sordentes ad sacramentū corporis et sanguinis filii mei ita illo ti accedere n̄ uerentur graui exami-natione phae p̄sumptione sua emundandi s̄ in qua tam purga-tione midiam meā eis n̄ denego. quia in m̄tib; eorū dignā penitentiā assurgere p̄uideo. Alii autē in corpore acutissimis spinis circum-dant et in anima leprosi apparent quia in corde suo ira odio et inui-dia circūdan lenitate dulcedinē et caritatem his spinis iniquitatis ase-expellunt unde ita mala appe-tentes et bona deserentes atq; in irrisione ceteros homines communia afficientes animā suā uelut pessimis ulcerib; immundā reddunt. Qui cū hoc modo addiuinū mysteriū accedunt semet ipsos grauius ledunt. Sicut tamen oculos meos ad eos conuerto cū se in amaritudine punientes grām meā penitendo postmodū querūt.

Quidā uero in corpore sangu-nei et in anima uelut pu-tridū cadauer fendi uidentur. quō ipsi cruenta manu diuisionē in hominib; facientes animā suā quasi putrescente tabe cru-delissime pueris suis feda red-dunt quia timorē meū n̄ inspici-entes hoc qd in homine constitui sua crudelitate destruant. Unde si ipsi hac contaminatione conquinant corpus et sanguinē filii mei p̄cipe n̄ timent semet ipsos graui lesione decidunt. quō ita illori sacramentū hoc contingere p̄sumunt. Sicut tam fons saluationis eos postmodū p̄transibit si dig-na penitencia semet ipsos ab hac nequicia sua lauare studuerint.

Sed ex his omnib; dū quidā ea de sacramenta percipiunt alii uelut igneo splendore p̄fundun-tur alii uero uelut obscura nube obtenebrantur quia dū credentes ad mysteriū corporis et sanguinis filii mei accedere satagunt tunc hi qui illud deuota mente et pura fide in bonis opib; ful-gentes percipiunt dono sp̄s sc̄i tā ad salutē corporis quā anime sue illustant et hi qui illud contrario corde et uacillante ani-mo inpuer sis actib; torpentes su-munt. obscurantē p̄supnue infelicentis additamentū sui. et ex-terius et interius sibi inuicem in-ducunt. quō huc sentant temere se coniungere illi p̄supserit. Nā homo qui tā rebellis et commuax est. qd n̄ timet se polluerē aut sim-plici fornicatione inuisceribus pprii corporis sui tactu et delectatione. aut se contaminare duplici fornicatione educens semen suū cū uiro aut cū muliere. aut se di-laniare ira. odio et inuidia cū ce-teris hominib; aut se cruciare homicidio sibi inoccursantib; et ita illotus et incorrectus temere p̄sumit accedere ad corpus et ad sanguinē filii mei sine purgan-one confessionis et sine penitētia correctionis. iste sciens et intel-ligens iudicialē ignē exculpa sua ingredit. Quomodo. De hac p̄supnue et peccato suo ut aurū in fornace examinabit. ita qd nullus puluis huius p̄supnonis in eo relinquet. quia pollutus et incorrectus ad cōmunionē innocentis agni accessit. Qui enim ita illotus ut p̄dictū ē ad sc̄ificationē corporis et sanguinis filii mei accesserit. & ita sacramentū illud sūpserit. adiudiciū sibi hoc sumit. Quomodo. Sicut paulus amantissimus m̄s dicit. Itaq; quicūq; manducauerit panē uel biberit calicē dñi indigne. reuserit corporis et sanguinis dñi.

Probet autē se ipsū homo. et sic de pane illo edat. et de calice bi-bat. Qui enim manducat et bibit indigne iudiciū sibi manducat et bibit. n̄ diiudicans corpus dñi.
Idō inter uos multi infirmi et in-becilles. et dormiunt multi. Quid ē hoc. Hec dico uobis qui comederit panē uitę. uel qui sūpserit po-culū salutis. qd sacramentū illius est qui dñs celī et t̄re ē. ita qd hoc indigne tractat. uidelicet sordens in peccatis. in hoc culpā suā semet.
Quomodo. Quia corpus et sanguinē dñi sui idē saluatoris mundi mordatur et moribunde accipit cū p̄nitus ad malū & pollutus in in-dicia. et oblitus timoris dñi ē. ita contaminatus palaciū salutis fere receptionis aggrediens. Unde et homicidiū ibi facit. Quomodo. Quō in multis uulnerib; semetipsū dilaniat. cū sine detersione et sine lauatione penitentie crimina sua celans. sacramentū hoc temere trac-tat. Quia pp̄t et ego illi dico. Omi-serime et amarissime. quomodo audebas in lacū tantę miserie dñi tui mittere. quē semp desiderant celestes ciues inspicere. Unde amara penitencia in corpore et in anima tua examinaberis. ita ut si reatū tuū n̄ correxeris post resurrectionē mortuū correptio ista uite inueniat. Et idō fidei

L. vii.

inspice hic pu hac de sic de ceder fieri none tis an sacram ita qd purga iudici quia i cat et none
idē m damm
dente
ceder fortuo
qui u quer ip̄i a cū dē ca sib mult in leg modo sit q Quid
deran re et mod sua p trier
idē m negli inspectione pbat se ipsū ille qui hic punitur sui cō uoluerit. et sic hac deuotione considerationis sue de pane illo scētans accipiat et de poculo illo suauius gu stet. ut ita ad indeficientē refec tionē pueniens. esuriē debilitan tis animum effugiat. Nā qui hoc sacramentū male tractauerit. ita qd a sordē iniquitatis se nō purgans illud indigne sūpsert. iudiciū uitioris sibi imponit. quia illud impurgatus mandu cat et bibit. nō tamen in hac p̄sūp tione sua ledere aut obscurare idē mysteriū p̄ualens. s; se ipsū damnans. Et quia inuicis sor dentes ita ad sacramentū hoc ac cedere p̄sumunt. idō s̄ in uisū con sortio multū infirmi. scilicet illi qui in scētate ista medicinā aīe querere nolunt. s; qui sibi met ipsis amarissimā infirmitatē in eisdē sacramētis imponunt. quō ea sibi adiudiciū sumunt. & etiā multū inbecilles. uidelicet illi q̄ in lege dī ita debiles s̄. qd nullo modo inspicere uolunt. q̄s iste sit quē tā indigne suscipiunt.

Quid ē hoc. Quia nolunt consi derare quomodo dñm suū time re et uenerari debeant. aut quo modo amara penitentia carnē suā puniant. quā ita inuicis eny trierit. s; quō ita negligentes s̄. idecirco etiā in obliuione huius negligentiē obdormiunt multū

91 nescientes nec scire uolentes quo modo peccata sua deflere debe ant. uelut homo cū indormitio ne somni ē. nec intelligit qd uel quomodo in corpore suo sit. Vn de tu o homo cū nec in confessio nibus. nec in penitencia p̄te pur gatus. corpus et sanguinē filii mei illotus accipis. tunc intrem da exquisimone de hac p̄sūp tione sordis peccatorū tuorū ita ex aminaberis. ut et mustū de in mundicia illa quā in se habet purgat. cū eā in seruo suo de se eiet. I de quoq; sacramentū tāta diligentia et sollicitudi ne a sacerdote & ap̄lo tratan dū et custodiendū ē. ne a quo quā ita negligat. ut sup̄ t̄ram neglectū piciaur. quia si p̄cor porē neglectū sup̄ t̄ram cecide rit. communiā illā p̄hesū meū aut in t̄ra. aut in homine ulcis cor. nisi ipse homo penitentia. et amaris uerberib; puniat se. quō caro et sanguis carnē et san guinē restituere debent. Quomō.
Caro et sanguis hominis in hoīe lugebunt. qd caro et sanguis filii mei negligent ab homine tractata s̄. sicut et tunc t̄ra tre munt. et ut homines in timore concussi s̄ cū idē filius m̄s in cru ce positus sp̄m tradidit. Sed si tu homo in instabilitate cor dis tui. in temetipso dixeris quo modo oblato ista in altari cor pus et sanguis filii mei efficiat. tunc & ego tibi respondebo. Cur hoc ob homo interrogas. et quare hec sciscitaris. Nūc hec a te requiro. Quid scrutaris secreta mea. de corpore et sanguine filii mei. Nec ista a te requirenda s. sed tantū in magno timore et ueneratione ea suscipiens. diligenter custodi. et amplius de hoc misterio noli hesitare. Nā me tam temere nō debes temptare. Et qd hec ad te. S. incertissima fide require me. Cū enim totā fidē tuā inspexero. tunc nō quero a te quid sit corpus et sanguis filii mei. uel quomodo misterium hoc in altari consecret. Et quis querit te ob homo in igne. ardo rē ignis nō sentiens. Nullus. Sic nec tu in secretis meis temere require me. ne inde ledaris. Qd si ea cū deuotione animi tui querere uolueris. tunc ea in oratione et fletu & ieiunio diligenter quere. sicut et antiqui patres tui illa certissime quesiē. et multociens eis reuelata s. Cūq. illa hoc modo scrutatus fueris et ea inuenieris. tunc qd reliquum ē spū scō dabis. S. qui ad sacramenta hec accedunt nō p deua s. p rectā uia ueniant. ne ab eis peccā magnū casū ruine paciant. Quom.

2. 11

1. 10

lx.3.

Nam pessimus deceptor qui sine electione et sine consecratone principalis unctionis cathedra pastoralis officii fallaciter sibi usurpauerit. et nequissim⁹ raptor qui pastorem suū expelles p sibi sibi consentientū cathedra ei uolenter inuasit. isti aut p semetipsos sua uoluntate graui uindictē subiacebunt. aut p hēctū meū graue sententiā inde sustinebunt. qā in pessima amaritudine mihi sunt. illū imitantes qui in semetipso maxī honorē habere uolens. ab omni glā felicitatis in mortē deiectus est. et quia etiā baal subsequunt. qui mihi ita illū qd se dñm fallaciter nominans in dissipationē datus ē. Et si in hac puerilitate mendaci. & p̄sūptionis sue sacros ordines meos dare se simulauerint. tunc illi qui ab eis hoc modo potū inficiunt. quā dclinant. ita in conspectu meo computant. uelut huius ap̄lo derisui habent. q̄s pueri in iocis et in ludis suis sibi iocularias psonas constituunt. S. ut hoc in hominib. uanum ē. ita et istud apud me uacuum ē qd huius modi inuasores in deceptione sua se facere simulant. Unde quia edificatio eorū praua ē. p̄batur stare nō potest. qm casura ē. & idō si in templo meo quicquā in sacris ordinib. edificare uisi s. delendū est. quia iusticiā nō habens fraus cōdinoscit. Ergo ab hac temeritate sua resipiscant. ne in penis con-sortes illius fiant: quidū plus que reget quā deberet. ab altitudine in pfunditate missus ē. S; et ille lama tor qui unctionē sacerdotalis of fici n̄ habens. p̄sumptuā mentis sue ira furiose ad altare meū accedit. uelit illud sor. sim sicut et ipse iocu lator ē. hic mensā nomini meo con secratā temere tangens. uidelicet sacrā oblationē offert. uolens qd sui officii n̄ ē filiū meū diro cruci atu uulnerare n̄ timeat. Quomodo.

S; ut incredulus sua incredulitate dñm inuadit. et ut uesanius sua ra bie mignē currit. sic iste me dñm nesciens. nec ardentē ignē me senti ens timorē meū abiicit. nec mansue tudinē meā diligit. S; filiū meū uul nerat. cū n̄ unctionis labiis sermonē il lum lamar. quē idē unigenitus m̄s sponse sue conuulit. cū ei corp et sanguinē suū indotē dedit. Vn de huic tam temere eū inuadenti dicit. Quis tangit filiū meū. tam contumax et n̄ unctus. S; iste qui hoc modo ad altare meū accedit. quotiens filiū meū p̄dicto secreto sermone inuocare p̄sumit. tocies eū uulnerare contendit. n̄ qd eū ita ullo dolore cruciet. S; quia eū tā p̄sumptuose tangere n̄ timeat. Qui si in hoc conceptu sine penitentia p̄manserit. inter illos impenis sta bit. qui filiū meū sine causa cru ciantes uulnerauerūt. Qua p̄pter ne hec tormēta sentiat. lamentatio nē afflictionis sibi assumat. ita tamen ne amodo ad ministeriū altaris mei accedere p̄sumat. Cete ri autē qui sub sacerdote in serui tio ecclesiastici officii ministrare contendunt. caueant ne sine mo do iusticie eide ministerio apppi are p̄sumant. ne si rectitudinē illā sibi fallaciter usurpauerint. tunc informes et in polui inueni. de constructione ecclesiastice edifi cationis iusto iudicio eiciantur.

Volo enim ^{ut ministri} mei sine dolo et sine sorde in conspectu meo mundi appareant. Quomodo. S; recta electione ad altare meū accedat. et tunc etiā ibi sine immundicia mibi assistant. Quomodo.

Ne ad scelerē copulationē re spiciant. quia spiritalē elege runt. Quomodo. Quia seruilitatē meā adierūt. S; si quis eorū ardentē libidine carnis sue urit. corpus suū abstinentia et ieiunio mace ret. atq; se frigore et flagellis ca stiget. Qd si tandē in pollutione mulieris labit. tunc contamina tionē illā uelut ardentē ignē et ut mortiferū uenenuū fugiat. atq; amara penitencia uulnera sua detergat. quō uolo ut mihi in castitate seruiat. Quom̄. Quia et filius m̄s castissimus erat. qui & hos om̄s ecclesiasticos ordines in semet ipso demonstrabat. Quomodo. uidelicet obsequendo. clamando. p̄dicando. et offerendo. Quom̄.
Quō & circūcisio cū suo obsequio

. Et. 11.

tenigit et prophetia eū suo clamore demonstrauit. ac ipse p̄ semetipsū hominib; p̄dicauit. et andē uini sacrificiū in ara crucis se obtulit.
Et quia ipse semetipsū in castitate holocaustū dedit. sic et illi casti tate ei imitentur. qui ei ad altare holocaustū offerre conantur. Qui tamen n̄ solum castitate in alius te nebunt. s; et in semetipsis eā con seruabunt. Quomodo. Iste sacer dos a contagione mulieris se eu stodire debet. sic etiā a se ipso se continet. scilicet cauens ne tactu manuū suarū pollutionē de se educat. ita ne strepitus libidi nis in ipso criminose tumultuet.
Nā crimen a de hominib; mortē inferens in ipsis sensus fornicati onis excitauit. et idō carnē suā homines constringant. ne eas lib mortis turpiter subiaceant.
Quom̄. Quia filius m̄s mortē supauit. et ipsis unā dedit. Qui quō in integritate uirginalis pudicitie carnē assūpsit. idcir co etiā casti debent. qui ipsi famulari desiderant. ut ex di uino p̄cepto scriptum est.

lx.iii.

Estote parati in diē tertiū.
ne appropinquetis uxorib; ur̄is. Quid ē hoc. Qui dō singu lari ter seruire uultis. estote cū uoluntate cordis ur̄i para ti in diē serenitatis illius ubi scā et ineffabilis trinitas uera citer apparetis mirabilia sua in magno miraculo demonstrat.

Et idō si ibi dō digne appiari uultis. caute ne carnali affec tu uos coniungatis carnalib; co pulis. uidelicet ne sanguinē ur̄m sanguini fragilioris estimatio nis cōmiscatis. Qd uos o sacerdo tes et ceteri ministri mei qui sub sp̄nali nomine militatis cauere debetis. quia etiā nec apli. quos subsecuti estis se induersa di uidebant. nec uobis tale exem plū relinquebant. Nolo enī ut due copule scilicet sp̄nalis et carnalis studiū in sacerdotib; sint. quō sacerdos iusticiā dī si bi copulabit. ita ut uxor ei sit. cū qua ceteros p̄p̄los enutriet et docebit. ut pater filios suos educare et docere solet. Et quom̄ ap̄tū ēt ut sacerdos duas copu las in recta mensura exerceat. que sibi induersitate contra rie s̄. Quom̄. ūna carnalis. et al tera sp̄nalis. Et cū sacerdos pastor et pater illoꝝ hominū sit. qui carnale coniugiū ha bent. et si tunc ipse idē equali modo possideret. quis tunc ip sius ēē deberet. Nullū aliū sacer dos habere posset. q̄ ipsi p̄t̄. quia ceteri sacerdotes om̄s mi nistri unius officii s̄ quā diabo lū q̄ sacerdos illius ēē deberet. qm̄ et cū unitatis fuisset. uene nū sub melle abscondens. Quom̄.
Quō ut diabolus malū subbo no abscondit. ita etiā huiusmodi sacerdotes qui turpitudinē suā magis sequunt. quā castitatē di ligant. carnalē copulationē sub spīali coniugio quasi uenenum sub melle eclare nunt. S. quia fi lius mī totus in castitate ē. idō etiā et hui castitatē amare debent. qui corpus et sanguinē ei in alia ritangunt. queadmodū scriptū ē.

Sacerdos scortū et uile p̄stibulū. lx. vi.
Nō ducet uxore. nec eā quē repu diata ē. amando. quia consecratus ē dō suo et panes p̄positiones offert. quid ē hoc. Ille qui ad hoc positus est ut sacrificiū dō offerat in iusti ciā diaboli quē omī spurcie et nequicie uicis inquinatis cōmu nus ē nō diligit. nec etiā sensus su os ita uult deiciat. ut cū iugū meū ferre uult. uoluntatē carnis sue contra iusticiā dī. et contra ex empla antiquorū scōrū turpē am plectendo sequat. ne et ita in iun diciā illā quē repudiata ē ab eis de antiquis patrib. suis cū eā de flatu antiqui serpen tis eē cognoscerent. in cōtinuū me uosus actib. p̄ficiat. Has ergo sor des ipse deserens. amator iusticie dī sit. qm̄ in scēitate consecratus dō suo ē. uidelicet a carnalib. con cupiscentiis in opib. nascentiū fili orū abstractus. unde ita sobrius et in pollutis existens. panē illū qui p̄salute hominū immensa consecrationis ponit offerre po test. Quid ē hoc. Scilicet quia sa crificiū illud qd ē ita uiuenti et refectio animarū. speculūq. omniū uirtutū. quē p̄scām inno centiā in forma castitatis p̄spicue s ab omni sorde mundissimū ē. qua p̄p̄t. et illi qui idē sacrificiū oblaturi s. sine spurcia pollu tionū eē debent. Sic etiā com nentes ab epulatione et ebrieta te. a ioco et risu. atq. a leuibus et incōpositis morib. s. sint in reuerentia illa ut successorib. antiquorū patrū de quib. plan tam s. conuenit et indignitate illa. ut honorabiles patronos debet. Et etiā ita uiuant ne sint duplices induab. p̄sonis. idē ne simul. in sc̄ari et in spīali uia ambulent. quia difficile ē duob.

dn̄is simul famulari. ut etiā fili m̄s in euglō testatur. dicens.
Nemo potest duob. dn̄is serui re. Quid ē hoc. Nullus qui mortale tunicā indutus ē. ualet p̄tencritudine sensus et corpo ris sui duob. dn̄is pariter & eq̄li obsequio seruitiū exhibere. Quid ē hoc. Quia nō potest dño recti tudinis. et dño iniusticie simul famulari. Quare. Quō rectitudo iniusticiā abicit. et iniusticia rectitudinē impugnat. Sic etiā sacerdos nō potest simul. et pari deuotione habere ancillā et dn̄am. uidelicet carnalē copu lam. et spīalē consorciū qd

lx. vii.

hec duo in perfectione simul esse non valent. quoniam illud quod carnale est impugnat hoc quod spirituale est. et spirituale deprimat. illud quod carnale est. quod et paulus amicus meus ^{lxiv.} cognoscens. illud ita esse inuoluntate mea demonstrat. cum dicit.

lxviii.

Oportet ergo episcopum irreprehensibilem esse. unius uxoris virum.
Quid est hoc? Necessarium est ut iste qui ceteris hominibus in officio spiritualis magister praeponitur. ita unita sua constituitur. ne scandalum offensio-nis et reprehensionis in eo inueniantur.
Quomodo? Quia sacerdos duas personas habere non debet. ita ut simul maritus carnalis uxoris et vir spiritualis coniugis sit. sed unus uxoris vir. scilicet ecclesie in seipso erit que unica in filio meo est. quoniam una ecclesia in ipso surrexit.

Sed hec quamuis una sit. tamen plurimos maritos habet. quia cum sacerdotibus. filii mei qui cotidie in officio ipsius sunt nuptias pagant. uirgo tamen in integritate sua permanens. quoniam in ipsa fides incorrupta est. Quia propter et idem paulus uas meum non dicit. ut hec uxor unus mariti esset. quia sacerdotibus. illis qui usque ad nouissimum diem meo de unigenito meo surgunt coniuncta est. usque dum etiam nuptie ille ue-niant. que nunquam ulla mortalitatis instabilitate deficiant. Sed et illi qui sub sacer-dotibus. in seruitio altaris mei. proxime ministrant. eisdem uxoris mariti sunt. quemadmodum idem paulus fidele doctrinam hominibus. pro me prebens locutus est dicens. Oia confiteor unius uxoris uirum. qui filius bonae praesentis et suis domibus. Quid est hoc? Ipsi qui sui inuicem obsequio sacerdotibus. assistunt. sunt unius uxoris fidei coniunctione mariti. Et quae est uxor illa. Unde licet castissima sponsa. que nulla corruptione ledi potest. uelut mulier illa corrupta non. que flori-ditatem et innocentiam suam perdit quam in initio desponsationis suae habet. cum adhuc cum sponso suo incorrupta manet. Unde et isti de-sponsatores cum hac uxore in seipso tam fidelem conuersent. ut et his qui ad uentum eorum in spiritu et aqua re-generati sunt. bona exempla uirtutum praebant. et ut etiam officio suo quod ad munimen ecclesiae mansio-nis pertinet. fidei sollicitudine in-sudent. uelut sanctus homo fi-lius suus et domus sue omne de deuotione purificationis suae intendit. Sponsa cum ista ostendit paulus amicus meus sacerdotibus. et ceteris ministris altaris mei. quatenus illa sibi in uxorem eligerent. et carnalem coniugem non appeterent.

Nam nec idem paulus nec ceteri discipuli filii mei. nec reliqui patres scilicet eorum sequaces. hoc exemplum per se ipsos illis dabant. ut car-

94 nale coniugē accipere. et illā deserent quā sibi prius in spūale uxorē elegerant. Sacerdos enī qui tā contumace in peccato ē ut mulierē sedm uoluntatē carnis sue illient accipiat. adulteriū ppēiat. quā rectā uxore suā idē eccliam que sibi spūali officio desponsata erat deserit. et aliā sedm libm mentis sue impudice ducit. S; quāuis sibi difficile sit ut in hoc ardo-re se constringat. tam pp̄t sup̄nū amorē a concupiscentiis istis se continet. ut etiā filius m̄s in euglō ostendit dicens. Sunt enī enu-chi qui de matris utero sic nati s̄. et sunt enuchi qui facti s̄ ab homi-nib; & s̄ enuchi qui se ipsos castrauerūt pp̄t regnū celō. Qui potest capē capiat. Quid ē hoc. Quō s̄ ali-qui homines. qui de matris utero ita egressi s̄ qd̄ p̄frigiditate uel inbecillitate corporis sui coniuges habere n̄ possunt. unde pp̄t hanc continentia suā utilitatē mercedis n̄ accipient nisi qd̄ solū de ope illius peccati penas n̄ sustinebunt. q̄a de peccato qd̄ n̄ pp̄tauerūt penas n̄ habebunt. et sunt alii hoīes. qui p̄ uoluntatē aliquorū hominū ita in corpore suo debilitati s̄. qd̄ uoluptatē carnis sue in hoc coniugali ope exercere n̄ ualent. s; & ipsi ita se continentes glām laudis inde n̄ merent. qm̄ quāuis hoc opus incendi p̄ficere n̄ possunt. tam in uoluntate sua multociens ardorē tur-pitudinis habent. et sunt alii hoīes scilicet spūale unā aggredientes q̄ sibi in ipsis hoc subtrahunt. qd̄ facile cū corpore suo p̄ficere possent. quō pp̄t glām sup̄ne hereditatis carnale copulā contempnunt. nec eā habere uolunt. et idō maximā lau-dē cū mercedē beate remuneratio-nis inde habebunt. Qua pp̄t et eos sacerdotes mei et om̄s ad officiū al-taris mei ponentes plenissima uoluntate sua imitari debent. quatin̄ coronā continentie cū maximo tripudio sup̄ni gaudii p̄cipiant. Et idō quicūq; in uoluntate cordis sui potest hoc exemplū cape. ita qd̄ pleno desiderio beatitudinis corp̄ suū ualeat sup̄are et concupiscentias carnis abicere. iste cū ardentisima deuotione capiat celeste con-sortiū in strictione carnis sue carnale copulā fideliter relinquens.

Qui autē se n̄ ualeat continere quin in uoluntate carnis sue ardeat. hic nec pp̄t p̄sonā sup̄- bie. nec pp̄t appetitū diuiciarū sacerdos aut alius minister sacro-talis gradus fiat. ne si postea indilectione carnis sue. ceciderit mag-nū detrimentū sui sentiat. Nā ipsi corpus suū a contagione feminarū continebunt. qui ad ministeriū altaris mei accedere solent. nec qualibet occasione matrimonia coniugiorū sibi copulabunt. s; et sua uoluntate et seruiciū mei rec-223

2

94^v tudine se caste continebunt. alio quin sem̄ seruiciū in altari meo uirare debent. Quoddā seruiciū quāuis quib; dā hominib; qui se prius seclō subiugauerant aliqñ do concessū fuisse reperiatur. tam nullis apparuisse cernit qui ante susceptū. et n̄ potest susceptū idē seruiciū meū carnali iugo se sub posuerant. ita tamen qđ eodē iu go ab eis postmodū abscisso dein de in ipsiſ sp̄s sc̄s p̄conias laudis in mirabilib; suis opatib; ē. cū hoc in primordio surgentis eccle. p̄p̄ pauertatē sacerdotū in miracu lo concessū sit. s; nunc ipsa ad ultia et bene confortata ministris ei multiplicans. iuxta id qđ ecclā stica censura de eadē. causa ostendit p̄cauendū ē. scđm hoc exemplū qm̄ et in uicio nascenti mundi masculis feminas de prima stirpe sua ducere obja ritatē hominū concessū ē. qđ tamen nunc ipsis dilatatū p̄hi bendū ē. quia etiā in formēs et in politū lapides in fundamentū edificii poni solent. cū tamen postea pulchri et bene cōpositi lapides in muro parietū ei exq̄ rantur. ita etiā et in infamia ec clesie sacerdotes scđm qđ tunc inueniri poterant in officiū il lud positi s; s; modo in sp̄uali pplō plenus numerus illoꝝ rep peritur. qui ad sacerdotale offi ciū apti s; ita qđ seclari onere t̄re.

ne copulationis occupati n̄ sunt. qm̄ n̄ expedit ut pat̄ familias q̄ p̄ceptū in seclari coniugio suscipit. nuncius m̄s in sacerdotio uocet. unde audi similitudinē hanc.

Rex quidā multa fortitudine pollens. parū exercitiū con gregauerat. Quē cū diligenter intutus ē. rūdē cū ad exercitiū laboris uidens. exco quendā ho minē cū quib; dā aliis uidelicet communis plebis. tollens. quos ido neos p̄curatōne p̄spexit. eide ex eritiū p̄fecit. quia excellens ger men huius nobilitatis n̄dū matu rauerat. S; cū de inde idē exercitiū iā augmentū sui cepisset. et cū iā meo nobiles aduerti fuissent. rex ille qđq; uis in eodē exercitiū bene & ordinate disposuit. ac duces et p̄sides ex nobiliorib; illis ei scđm quāq; iusticiā p̄fecit. Qđ est hoc. Rex celestis cui fortitu do sup̄ om̄s ē. in plamatione ec clesie modicū agm̄ credentium coadunauerat. Qđ acutissima ex quisitione p̄sermans. infirmū et debile illud adhuc ad susten tandū corporales passiones p̄ nomine considerant. et ita p̄ter qui unus ex ipso existens. prius in t̄renis actib; conuersatus fue rat. atq; post cū quosdā alios q̄ etiā aliqñdo sucū t̄re gustauē rant a sordē t̄poraliū rerū ar denter emundans. qm̄ eos saga ces et fideles & ad eū animarū et ad sustentationē corporū implanōne sua cē p̄nouit. fidē carbolicā amplectentes. in officio distric-tionis et relaxationis p̄uilit. q̄a rutilans aurore in ardore castita-tis humana contagia exurens. n̄ dū flores sue dulcedinis in hōib; late diffuderat. S; iā multitudine ecclesiastici germinis percussus tocius mundi late disseminata et glā ecclesiastici honoris iā nobilitē confortata. idē rex sup̄nus tam seclaria q̄m sp̄ntalia dona homi-nib; benignissima et decemissima dispositione inspirauit. atq; sacerdotes et ceteros ministros diuinorū officiorū sobrietatē et ca-stitatē suā ecclesiastico iuri scdm̄ iusticiā dī honestissime conseruantes instituunt. Unde o homo q̄a iā inter sp̄ntales hōies multa exorti sunt. qui contra sc̄m̄ et contra diabolū militare laborant et q̄ in castitate et constrictione corporis sui ad altare meū accedere festinant. uolo ut sacerdotes mei sine contagione t̄rene copule in conspectu meo appareant. Nā cū in ueteri testam̄to sacerdotib; p̄ceptū sit. ut cū ad altare meū accederent se a contagione mulierū continerent hoc totū in nouo testam̄to sacerdotib; meis ad plenā p̄fectionē p̄ductū ē. na ut q̄d illi ueteres quasi una hora in castitate cauebant. hoc isti noui ab initio puericie sue usq; ad finē senectutis sue cōpleant. Et cū de ueterib; sacrificiū in coniunctione mulieris pollu-tū suscipe uolui. multo magis modo de nouis sacerdotib; filiū meū in castitatis officio tractari uolo. Nec quisquā immaturus et in consecratū ecclesiam suscipiat. nec etiā plures ecclesias appetere p̄sumat. ne si in iate puericie aut sine consecratione sacerdo-talis officii ecclesiam suscipe p̄sup-serit. uel unā habentis etiam plures sibi subiugare tēptauērit. p̄uariicator iusticie in hoc existens grauissime distric-tionis iudicio discutiāt. uelut ille qui ante legitimū tempus uel sine legitima desponsatione for-nicari n̄ timet. uel legitimā uxorē habens se polluerē cū aliis in adulterio festinat. Sed & de omni pp̄lo. qui ē in xp̄iano noīe sacerdotes sapientis ingenii et ui-rilis animi eligendi s̄. ita tamē ut recto ordine et iusta unctiōne atq; uoluntario animo ad serui-tutē meā ueniant. Hoc tamen eē n̄ debet. ut hi ad officiū altaris mei accedant. qui in aliquo mem-brorū suorū debilitati claudicant. quia nec etiā in regno eccl̄orū ulla macula diuersorū uulnerū in animab; hominū apparebit.

Et idō nolo ut altari meo assistant. qui in aliquo membro suorū destituti s̄. S; quāuis ipsi lyr. iij.

lyr. v.

incorporib; suis debiles sunt. tam phac deffinitione membror; suor; a regno celoꝝ n̄ separabunt. si tam sanitate animarū suarū habent. na si impunitate bonor; opū me querit. Nolo tam ut ministerio al taris mei fungant. s; ut efficacā bonor; opū humiliter operentur.

lxvii.

Sic etiā nec femine ad idē offi ciū altaris mei debent acce dere. quō ipse infirmū et debile habitu s; ad hoc posite ut filios pariant. et eos parientes diligenter nutriant. S; femina n̄ p̄ semetipsā s; de viro infante concepit. sicut nec t̄ra p̄ semetip sā s; p̄ agricola arat. Qua p̄p̄t ut t̄ra semetipsā arare n̄ possit. ita nec femina in officio consecra tionis corporis et sanguinis filii mei sacerdoti cōparanda ē. quā uis in laude creatoris sui sonare possit. ut et t̄ra ad irrigandū fructuū pluuiā suscipit. Et ut t̄ra omnē fructū p̄fert. ita etiā et in femina om̄is fructus boni opis p̄ficiat. Quom̄. Quia sūmū sacerdotē sponsū accipe potest.
Quom̄. Virgo desponsata filio meo sponsū eū accipit. qm̄ cor pus suū carnali viro conclusit. et idō in sponso suo sacerdoti et om̄e mysteriū altaris mei ha bet. atq; om̄s diuicias ipsius cū eo possidet. S; et uidua eidē filii mei sponsa potest appellari. que carnalē virū renuens. sub alas protectionis ei; fugit. Et ut sponsus sponsā suā ualde diligit. sic etiā filius m̄s sponas suas dulcissime amplectitur. que ad eū in amore castitatis sollicitę currunt.

Sed et nullom̄ uir femineo uestitu induat. nec femina uirili habitu utatur. quatinus hoc modo utraq; p̄sona discer natur. scilicet ut uir uirile for titudinē in se demonstrat et ut femina femineā infirmitatē in se ostendat. qm̄ hoc ab uincio hu mani generis ita indispositione mea ē. nisi aut uir in piculo mor tis. aut femina in piculo castitatis sit. tunc si ad horā illā aut uir scdm̄ feminā aut femina scdm̄ uirū uestitū suū humiliter in timore mortis mutauerint. cū mediā meā de hoc facto suo quesierint eā inuenient. quia illud n̄ in temeritate s; in picu lo salutis sue fecerit. Et quō fe mina uirili habitu uestiri n̄ debet. idō etiā ad officiū altaris mei n̄ accedet. quia uirile p̄sonā nec in capillis. nec in ue stitū suo demonstrabit.

Qui autē ad altare meū acce dunt in castitate in con spectu meo appareant. et n̄ solū isti s; et ceteri q̄ sacramentū
corporis et sanguinis filii mei p̄cipe desiderant. ne se ipsos in casū ruine mittant. S; multi tā inter sp̄nales quā int̄ seculares

in c inco
com difi
qui ne
com
in et fe amb luc
do
par
crea
quon felice crea
alt
S; et rile
com fina cme turp indu
re m alien puer conf meo
part hac cauer lupus
Quom̄
et mol

96 inueniunt. qui se nō solum informatione mulierū polluant. s. etiam incontrarietate fornicationis se contaminant. grauius onus districti iudicii sibi inponunt.
Quom. Iſr. qui scdm modū feminē cū alio uiro peccauerit. amare contra dñm peccat. et contra con-iunctionē illā qua dñs masculū et femina coniunxit. Unde etiam ambo corā dō polluti. nigri. atq. luxuriosi. horribiles. ac molesti dō et hominib; et rei moros apparent. q̄a contra creatore suū creaturā que in ipsis ē destruunt.
Quom. Iſr. uirū et femina coniunscilicet hoc qd forte & infirmū erat simul copulant. quatinus alterū ab altero sustentantur.
S. et isti contrarii adulteri. cū ui-rile fortitudinē suā in molliē contrarietatis transferunt. rectā in-stitutionē maris et femine abici-entes. satanam in puerilitate sua turpissime subsequunt. qui illū indiuuū ē scindere et diuidere in supbia sua uolunt. Nā ipsi alienū et contrariū adulteriū in pueris artib; suis in semet ipsis constituunt. et idō in conspectu meo polluti & contumeliosi apparent. Qui autē eodē modo in hac contraria fornicatione peccauerit cū muliere. uoracissim⁹ lupus in ista puerilitate sua est.
Quom. Nā ut homo ille contrari⁹ et molestus ē et hominib; qui pul-cherimas et mundissimas epulas ha-bens eas abiceret. et steruus qd indigestionē hōis egreditur comederet.

Nā et isti indigni et immundi corā me s. quō rectā institutionē coniunctionis in muliere deserunt. et alienā p̄uaricationē in ea querunt.
S. et femina que has diabolicas artes rapit. qd se uirili officio cū altera femina coniugari simulat. uulissima in conspectu meo apparet. simul et illa que se huic imā contumelioso facinore subicit. quia cū uerecundia ad passionē suā habere deberent. alienū uis sibi in pudice usurpauerit. et qm inextraneū modū se transmutauerunt. idcirco transposite et con-trariabiles mihi s. Iſr. quoq; mares qui cū tactu p̄puci sui sem suū educunt magnū casū anime sue inponunt. quia in hac inquietudine se omnino concutiant. et idō uelut immunda animalia que catulos suos deuorant corā me apparent. quō semen suū p̄- uerse excitantes illud ad contumeliosā pollutionē deducunt.
Quos et femine impudico tactu inutantes. cū inuincitū ardo-re ardentis libidinis inconstri-ctione corporis sui semetipsas fa-tigant ualde culpabiles exinde sunt. quia cū in castitate se con-tinere deberent se in immundicia polluant. Unde tā femine quā ui-ri qui p̄prio tactu corpo ris sui sem sui de se excutunt. in hacorde sua ulcerib; et uulnerib; semetipsos inanimab; suis inficiunt. cū ppter amorē meū in officio castitatis se constringere noluerunt. quid ē hoc. Quia cū homo stimulū carnis sue se pungere senserit. incauernā continet. currat. et secum castitatis apphēdat. atq; ita se ab immundicia defendat.

 Quomodo. Libamina de tritico eiciat. idē strepitū libidinis a suau-tate castitatis separet. Unde quis quis gustū libidinis sic a se piece-rit. ualde dulcis et amabilis m̄ est. s; uos o hoīes castitatē abiciatis et libidinē amatis. cū etiā n̄ solū formicatores hominū. s; etiā fornicato-res hominū. s; etiā fornicatores pec-corū estis. ita qd sem ur̄m n̄ in ui-uo qd uiuit. s; in illud qd mortuum ē mittatis. et qd consortē ur̄i destruitis. et illud qd uobis in seruitute subiectū ē appetitis. Quia ppter clamant sup uos elem̄a dicentia.
 Heu heu nr̄i dñatores miscent se nobis. in cōmixtione seminis sui.
 Et ita de indignatione mea inopi-bus ur̄is tristitia se habere demon-strant. Cur ḡ intelligibile intellectū ur̄m in pecuale stulticiam uertitis. cū scitis uos homines ēē.
 Numqd̄ creati uos adiuncturā peccorū. Nequaqua. Et quō illis uos coniungitis. idcirco amarissima consortia nefandorū criminū cadent ^{super} uos. quia in studio ne meā in iunctura maris et femine contēpnitis. Nā quisquis in actib; suis se ita transmutat. qd hoc facit qd facere concupiscit uidelicet qd se ita destruit. qd sem sui cū peccore effundit. hic maximā rui-nā sibi inducit. ut etiā satanas se metipsū p aduersitatē suā deiecit. cū similis dō eē uoluit. Quia ppter uos om̄s qui pueris usu induersis huiusmodi pollutionib; uos contaminatis. concupiscencie ur̄e resistite. et corpora ur̄a castigantē tes amarissimā et uerā penuriam cū planctu magno et ieiunio. ac maceratione carnis ur̄e atq; cū duris uerbis. facite. ne in cumu-lum crudelissimi reatus uos in-penitentes mittatis. Non solū autē uolo ut hoīes a uigilante immundicia se emundent. s; ut etiā a pollutione illa que ipsis dormientib; occurrere se digne purgent. Nā si dormienti homi-ni cōmotio seminis in somnio sub-repserit. nolo ut ita in ardente calore illo ad sacramentū officii altaris mei accedat. quo usq; ardor ille meo sedet. ut scriptū ē.

Si fuerit inter uos homo qui nocturno pollutus sit somnio egrediet̄ extra castra. et n̄ re-uertetur priusquā ad uesperā lauet̄ aqua. et post solis occasū regrediet̄ in castra. Quid ē hoc.
 Si ē inter uos qui seruius meo insudatis homo. qui p noctē pollu-sussena-

 me-uine-
 cur-detur-fessiodenpenina i-
 manse ha-luntni il-
 ne c-hom-
 quadunt-
 suomocbi su-inflasine-suis-
 humsis se-
 non-regnne t-
 me-
 detur-
 sup-
 noxi-
 dore-
 Si-
 fa-

pollunur in somnio dormitionis sue. separet se de congregatione senans illius. que ad altare meū p tiner. ita ut se inisterio illi con iungere n̄ p̄sumat. ante quā ab eunte noxio calore illo emun detur. lauacro penitentie in con fessione et cōpunctione cordis de incendio libidinis sue. Et tē penitencia illa que cor ipsius ita illustrauerat. pacta. redeat in amore castitatis ad illos qui se fideliter ab immundicia pol lutionis defendunt. et sacram tū illud qđ totū in seitate ē dig ne et honorifice adcat. Sed ^{lxxx. j.} homo ille qui tā dormiendo qua uigilando fornicat in libi dine ardet. caueat ne ardori suo incendiū subministret. Quo modo. Scilicet. escis illis que si bi sucū libidinis offerunt se n̄ inflamet. s; acarnib; illis que sine tegmine nude de matrib; suis idē de peccorib; egressē s; humiliter abstineat. quia imp sis feruor ardoris ē. qui tamuis non ē in carne uoluerū que sine tegmine n̄ egredit. s; cū tegmi ne teste nascit. Unde etiā min incendiū in ipsa ē. S; et ab immo derato uino se abstineat. ne in supfluitate potato. uene ipsius noxio sanguine repleat. in ar dore incendiū turpit̄ incalescat.
Siquis autē in supfluitate cay sarū istarū laborat. sibimet ipsi resistere p̄se n̄ ualens deuotis sumā intentione me querat. ac uulnera cordis sui humillima de irectione mibi demonstret. Quo modo. Unde debet humili confes sione corā sacerdote. ea m̄ apiat.

 Et cur hoc. Quia uera confessio. scda resurrectio est.
 Quom̄. In casu ueteris ade humanū genus occisū ē. qđ nouus ada in morte sua exorta uit. Qua ppter et in morte eide noui ade resurrectio animarū exorta ē. ita qđ peccata homo sua confiteri debet. qđ uetus ada n̄ fecit cū p̄uaricationē suā magis obtexit. quā eā confessus sit. ^{Quomodo.} Quia eā non ē confessus peniten do. s; eā obtexit. femina accusan do. Unde et confessio posita ē. ut postquā homines ceciderunt. de ca su suo p̄ea erigant. Et idō quicūq; pura confessione sacerdoti in amore meo peccata sua confes sus fuerit. de morte ad uitā re surgit. ut etiā illa de morte erep ta ē. que in conuiuio corā filio meo cū lacrimabili penitentia de sordib; suis se purgauit. ^{lxxx. iij.} Quod remediū purgationis.
 et antiquis patrib; diu p̄figuratū ē. Quom̄. Nā ante le gē patriarche et pph̄e consola tio hominū erat. et sub lege pontifices et sacerdotes erudi tio ipsoꝝ fuerit. cū deinde apli uenientes uerā iusticiā in filio meo amulerent. na qđ multi hoies eis accurrentes adiutoriū eorū de uote implorauerūt. Et ita ab adā usq. ad aplāū apłorū semp hui erant. qui p supnā inspirationē consolatione et instructione sua misericordis hominum subueniebant. S; et ut apli hominib. sua p dīca tione et multis miraculis osten debant. homo qui diabolica suasione in mortē cadens pse numquā erigi potuit. p filiū meū a morte eripuit ē. Quomō quō cū immundo cōt multos labores in corpore suo pferens. deniq. p reptione mundi in crucē positus ē. Istud fideles ho mines p salute sua cū sacerdo tib. suis imitari debent. Quomō Adiutoriū filii mei querunt qđ cū post baptisina uetus crimen ade terauerunt. de casu suo pse met ipsos surgere n̄ ualent. Et idō uelut a patriarchis et pphe tis consiliū querunt. & uelut a pontificib. et sacerdotib. erudi tione capient. & tunc uelut ab apłis auxiliū accipient. ubi pec cata sua denudans uulnerib. su is in uera et pura manifestatio ne fideliter demonstrabunt.

Quomodo. Peccata sua sacerdo ti qui minister eīdē filii mei ē. deuotissimo corde et ore confi tebunt. Et tunc sacerdos ille re me diū eis in penitencia ip forū conferens. ita peccata eorū in morte eīdē unigeniti mei sepe liet. S; illi deinde hoc modo ad unā resurgentes. resurrectionē etia filii mei glificabunt. Qui autē uulnera peccatorū suorū denu dare recusat. s; tacens p semetip sū sine subleuatione alterius ea curare tēptat. sedm qđ tunc cor suū uelle pbat. se ipsū decipit. qđ sibi metipsi sacerdos uult ēē. qua ppter et sine adiutorio alterius surgere n̄ ualeat. qm nec homo p semetipsū in saluatione erectus ē. s; p filiū meū saluatus ē. Unde qui saluari desiderat. nec in fine uite sue peccata sua confiteri de speret. Quod si qđ in hora mor tis sue positus remedia uulnerū peccatorū suorū querit. s; tam sacer dotē cui peccata sua confiteatur habere n̄ poterit. tunc alii hoī quē eodē tēpore oportuniū habet ea manifestet. uel si tā repente nullū hominē habere potest. ea in corā elemis cū quib. etiā illa ppe trauit. ex intimo affectu cordis sui apiat. Et ego deuotionē cor dis ei uidens. penitentiā ei n̄ ab icio. Qua ppter nemo de pon derib. iniquitatis sue desperet. qm si de midia mea despauit. ad unā n̄ resurget. Qui autē cū despatione certauerit. & tandē ea ad nihilū deduxerit hic se li berauit. quia foris existens uiri liter uicit. S; qui remediū salinis sue p̄mōre mētas sue n̄ querit. huic succurrendū n̄ ē qm̄ dū me in uenire posset. me querere recusa uit. Ergo dū homo tēpus habet. se ipsū n̄ negligat. s. refectionē pure confessionis querat. ut etiā filius

Adde et ostendat sacerdoti. et offer munus tuū qd̄ p̄cepit moyses testimoniuū illis. Quid ē hoc. Tu qui in peccatis sordes. cū te ab eis emundare desideras. uade bona intentione & ostende. illa pu ra confessione sacerdoti. qui mini ster m̄s ē. et offer deuoto corde mu nus uere penitentie qd̄ ex uolunta te di p̄signauit. ille qui de multis mundationib. tēne iniquitatis p̄di uinā potentia sublati erat. ut te sufficeret illi qui te prius in malis actib. uiderant sorduisse. qd̄ nunc in amaritudine penitentie ab eis uelut in camino examinationis purgatus sis. Quia p̄pter ob homo si peccator facta sua in absconso cor dis sui occultaret. quis tunc peni tentie illius testis assisteret. Nullus.
Unde homo peccata sua manifestet. quatinus penitentie sue testē ha beat. Sed q̄ penitentiā peccator sue p̄ficere desiderat. elemosinā sibi in adiutoriū assumat. Quom̄.
Quia cū corpus hominis p̄nbecil litate suā in labore penitentie de fecerit. elemosinā sibi in adiuto riū accurrat. Et quō difficile est homini. ut a spe et scdm̄ qd̄ iustū est penitet. idō matre sibi elemo sinā assumat. quatinus cū ea p̄fici at. qd̄ corpori suo labioriosū ē.

Nā quādmōdū mater necessita ti filii sui subuenire non cessat. quāuis ille iā enutritus ē. et ui deat. ita etiā elemosina tenetui dini corporis in penitencia hoīs succurrit. quāuis idē homo in ma ccatione corporis sui penitendo fortis appartat. At tam̄ mala opa que homo in corpore suo p̄concu piscentiā carnis sue p̄petrauit. illa etiā in se ipso corporalit̄ puniat. quatinus opus illud qd̄ carni sue carū et dulce fuerat. p̄ amaritu dinē penitentie fidelit̄ ab eo abstergat. qm̄ amaritudo peni tentie mortifera uulnera peccator cū adiutorie elemosina in hoīb. sanare debet. Quom̄. Qm̄ elemosi na midiam meā designat. Quom̄. cū fidelis homo paupib. cū sub stantia sua p̄pter amorē meū sub uenit p̄cepta mea custodit. q̄a indigentib. midiam suā p̄pter honore nominis mei impendit. sicut et ego impuritate cordis sui me querentib. grām meā n̄ sub traho. Qui autē hoc modo in re fectione elemosinarū paupib. motu midie succurrit ualde m̄ amabilis ē. qm̄ uiscera midie ha bet. hoc implens qd̄ scriptū est.

Pone thesaurū tuū in p̄ceptis patissimi. et p̄derit tibi elemo sina magis quā aurū. Quid ē hoc.

Qa ē homo se i castigatōe m̄n gr̄. se q̄ p̄ elemo sinā reficiat. Qm̄.

lyxxviii.

luta et recta consideratione tolle de manna pecunie tue que in sinu tuo et in amplexione cor-dis tui ē diuidens eā sedm̄ p̄cep-ta illi⁹ qui sup̄ om̄s ē: quia d̄s man⁹ datur ut amalo declines et bonū facias. Et idō in p̄cordis tuis p̄ bonā uoluntatē tuā hoc modo habundare debes: ne de p̄diis ouib; sis. s̄; sc̄ifica te ante d̄m in refectione deficientib; de tua substantia tribuens. quō et tunc d̄s midiam suā in tuis miseris sup̄ te habebit. Qd̄ si hoc feceris tunc maiore uoluntate tibi conferet compassio hec quā sup̄ illū habes: qui nullū thesaurū possidet: quā si sup̄ magnū montē ascendens multā pecuniā au-ri in supbia tua haberes. Quom̄ Melius enim ē tibi: ut modicū pusillis in humilitate des: quā regnū mundi in magna uolup-tate habeas: quia tunc midia in remuneratione d̄i obpondis supbie tue tibi de c̄t̄. qm̄ ibi uiscera cōpassionis sup̄ paup̄ē n̄ haberes. Vnde et elem̄ta lacus uoluptatū hominū s̄: et mores eorū ostendunt. Quom̄. Quia uindictā d̄i illis peccantib; sup̄ inducunt. Et idō ob homo in animatē naufragantis auaricie de-sere: q̄a iustissima hereditas tua in eterna uita ē: uidelicet malū relinquens bonū fac: ita ut mauolentia duricie dimittas et ut midiam habeas. scilicet ut indigentib; de tua substantia des: in hoc imitans d̄m q̄ misericors ē.

Qua p̄pter etiā ob homo nullus mendax hoc contra dicere potest: uos qui paup̄ib; ita sub-uenitis: qm̄ uoluntatē meā in hoc cōpleatis. Quom̄. Sicut ego uobis grām meā inpendo: ita et uos paup̄ib; elemosinā ur̄am tribuere debetis. S; qui elemosinā accipiunt: eā n̄ in uanū nec sedm̄ auariciā suā sumant. Quid ē hoc. Quō multi s̄ qui ignauā amantes: nec corporaliter labo-rare uolunt: ut se ipsos pascere ualeant: nec bona opa sp̄italit̄ facere student: ut animab; suis subueniant. s̄; ut pecus s̄ in tellectū iusticie nec in anima nec in corpore suo habentes.
Unde etiā indigni ante ocu-los meos apparent: si hoc modo sine correctione et sine penitencia in tēpore hui⁹ prauitatis pseuerauerint. S; & multi s̄ qui cor-porale necessitatē patientes: elemosinā cū humilitate in timore meo percipiunt: atq; pillis orāt et laborant: qui eis midiam suā inpendunt: praua etiā opa in-mundissime sordis deuantantes. inter hos etiā multi inueniunt: quib; ideo t̄renas diuicias subtrahō: qm̄ eis celestes diuicias dare uolo. Qui autē paup̄ratē p̄pter nom̄ meū libent̄ etc.

xxi

juste uero tate
habe
lab
as q cupi pbon nor et ill iact nom put circo honi fuf bit sp̄it n̄ pp bom secu
Quo
cere
re d dab
stori econ fion tis fu
con si pp
tion
puli tes de
puer ritate ostend

99 sufferrunt. ualde in amabiles s. qui uero diuicias seculares propter cupiditatem sua libenter haberent. nec eas habere possunt. hi mercedem huius laboris perducunt. S. qui pro hoc diuicias querit ut uoluntatem meam et non cupiditatem sua meis compleret. hic pro bona uoluntate sua mercedem honoris apud me habebit. Ita etiam et ille qui potestatem honoris propter iactantiam superbie sue et non ad gloriam nominis mei appetit. hic in uelut putridum cadaver est. qui autem id circo etiam querit ut non superbia sua sed honoris mei inde desideret. gloriosus in regno meo exinde apparebit.
Quia propter et sacerdotes officii spiritualis regiminis magistrum suum non propter se sed propter me subire de bent. quantum populo meo tanto securius et deuotius preesse ualeant.
Quomodo. Quia populum meum do cere. admonere. hortari. et coercere debent. ut legem dei digne et laudabiliter custodiant. Et hoc pastores semper ruminabunt dum populum exorando moneant. ne sine confessione et sine penitentia in peccatis suis perseuerent. sed ut mala opera conculcent et bona perficiant. Quod si populi sacerdotes suos in admonitione ista non obaudierint. tunc populus reatus suum semet. et sacerdotes de casu negligentie huius se eripuerit. Si uero sacerdotes auctore ^{et. uis.} Si uero magister sui populo non ostendunt. tunc sacerdotes non uo cant. sed lupi rapaces dicunt. quoniam officium suum in rapina habent. sic et lupo ouem crudeliter diripit. ita quod magis uoluntatem suam se cuntur quam custodiam omnium suorum.

Et quia per se uiuunt idcirco ueram doctrinam populo insere re timent. ita iniquitati uelut alicui subiecto suo consentientes. quod carnales concupiscentie sunt. et ostium cordis sui uelut alicui domestico suo claudentes. quod in sticia dei est. Vnde uos o pastores ^{et. uis.} ululate et plangite crimina uestra quae in iniquitate uestra diuina uocem emittunt. quod et elementa clamorem eorum suscipiunt. et cum eis coram me ululant. Quomodo enim in of ficio uestro audetis dominum uestrum tan gere in sanguineis manibus. et in comitaria spurcicia. et in aduul terina iniquitate. Iherusalem uos in in mundicia uestra fundum terre como uecis. Quomodo. uidelicet cum in tan tis criminibus sordentes. dominum uestrum tangere nitimur. tamen in magno dolore opprimo. ita carnem et sanguinem filii mei ulciscens. quoniam non solum terram in hoc horrore cru deliter commouetis. sed etiam celum in inmundicia uestra pessime conta minatis. Quomodo. cum in fetore in mundicie uestrae dominum uestrum tangi tis. sicut porcus in stercore marga ritas contaminat. tunc celi in iniquitate uestram suscipientes. ultio nem iudicii mei in uoluntate mea super terram emittunt. Nam cum uera

99 iusticia et cū diuina lege pplm meū pcedere deberetis in bonis opib; et luceretis. ita ut idē pplm mīs gradient post uos pedē suū in nulla offensione comitteret. s; uof aliquādo maiore iniquitate pplm meū contaminatis. quā t ipse se contaminet. in q̄ malū et pessimū exemplū in uobis habet.
Ios enī tā lucida gēma cē debere tis. ut credentes in lumine urō incedentes uia rectitudinis ag noscere possent. s; uof eis exem plū mortis p̄betis. ita ut in iniqui tate urā modū inuenire n̄ uale ant. Et quomodo pastores eorū cē possent. eos ita seducere. Quomo do p̄ eis respondebitis. qui nec p uobis responsū dare poteritis.
Unde plorate et ululate. ante quā tēpus mortis uos subtrahat.
Et quare n̄ consideratis honorē ur̄m. qui p̄ ceteris hominib; uo bis datus ē. Quid ē hoc. Qm in filio meo p̄ ceteris clauē celi accepistis. quē iudicia iusti iu diciū in sciētia scripturarū s; ubi recte considerabitis. quid sit q̄d ligare debeatis. Quid ē hoc. Cū hoīes se m̄ in lege mea p̄uaciter opponunt. timorē iudiciū mei eis inuenire debetis. xxviii.
Et si tunc culpā suā n̄ correce rint. ligaturā urām sup̄ eos ex tendite. Quom̄. Quia rebelles s; idō ap̄ uos uocib; in uerbis meis eos ligabitis et eis ligaturā illā iudicabitis. qm̄ et p̄ contumacia sua corā me ligati s; ut fili mīs primo pastori ecclē ostendit di cent. Tibi dabo clauē regni celorū. Et q̄d cūq; ligaueris sup̄ t̄rā erit ligatū et in celis et q̄d cūq; solueris sup̄ t̄rā erit solutū et in celis. Quid ē hoc. Ego qui pote statē celi & t̄rē habeo tibi qui me deuote imitatus es p̄grām meā dabo iudiciū illa quē dignitatē regni celorū tangunt ita ut ne fas hoc q̄d iusto iudicio ligaue ris sup̄ t̄rā. scdm̄ q̄d hoīes sup̄ t̄rā peccare uideris. quia postquā hominis animā de corpore suo abstraxero. tunc iudiciū tuū sup̄ eā n̄ extendas qm̄ iudiciū il lud meū ē in nequicia sua uinc tū sit et in celestib; scilicet a celo separatū & p̄iectū. q̄a in sup̄na mansione nulla iniquitas liberta tē aut locū habere p̄mitit. S; & uinculū hoc q̄d ita prius in rebel lione constrinxisti cū deinde in penitentia delinquentiū de no daueris sup̄ t̄rā. qm̄ p̄ mortē ho minis p̄ anima ei orabis. n̄ autē eā tunc anaxib; ligature sue absol uere poteris. erit solutū et in sup̄ nis secretis. quia gemmis deuoti cordis d̄s n̄ abiect. Vos autē o sacerdotes qui hoc modo p̄ filiū meū potestatē hanc p̄cepistis. ne minē absq; culpabili culpa p̄p̄ ratiē cordis ur̄i in uerbis meis li gabitis. s; acutissime uobis consi

xxvi.

derandū ē. quē ita constringere de beat. Nā qui nec ppter pudorē ho minū. nec ppter timorē. meū. nec ppter nec pceptis ur̄is cohiberi poterit. qm̄ iniquitate sua p̄seuerare uelit. hunc ecclāstica censura in uerbis me is ab ara mea separabim̄. S. innocen tē n̄ ligabim̄. qm̄ nullū constringe rim̄. uosmetipsos innodū diri ita tuis mittis. Quod tam ille hoc .xc. .y. modo inconuenientē constrictus fu erit. qm̄ ius innocens sit. tam hu millima subiectionis obediuntione ppter honorē nominis mei solutionē querere debet. ne si contumax ex stiterit. reatū sup̄bie sibi contrahat.
S. ligatura ista ista talis ē. Homo q̄ nec in nec pceptis maiōr̄ suōr̄ in puer sitatib; suis obedire uoluerit. hic in uermo meo acclēstib; separandus ē. uelut adā in inobediens existens in pcepto meo de parad̄so eiectus ē. nec in consortiū fidelium recipiet. nisi in penitencia obediencie. sic enā genus humanū in martirio obedientis filii mei ad ecclēst̄ patriā reuocatū ē. Qui uero ita rebel .c. lis ē qd̄ in humilitatis officio reuer ti n̄ uult. tunc si ita in contumacia sua p̄durauerit. consortiū illōr̄ ha bebit. qui lapideū cor abicere re cusant. S. in infidelitate sua p̄ma nentes. glām ecclāstice beatitudinis habere recusauerūt. Nā qui ita ob duratus ē qd̄ de nequitia sua nullā mediā querere curat. hic am quū serpente imitat. q̄ primū

100 hominē in parad̄so decipiens. in se metipso dicebat. Quāuis ego de eccl̄is p̄iectus sum cū contra exercitū altissimi cū angelis meis p̄uari uelle. et illi resistere n̄ ualere. qm̄ ab eo uictus sū. tam nunc intra hominē inueni. in quo ita meā exercens me foruit. uindicabo. Intra enī in hoīe cōplebo qd̄ in eccl̄is facere uolui. sci licet ut altissimo similis esse. Et si d̄s iustus ē. potestas ista in n̄. austeret quia homo mihi consensit. et dō n̄ obediuit. Hec diabolus in semetip so loquens. om̄s artes suas contra hominē instruxit. quō ille ad dō re cesserat. et diabolū subsecutus ē. unde & eū sibi tā fortiter alliga uit. qd̄ homo illū p̄ dō coluit. et d̄m creatore suū abnegauit. S. cū homo in tanta tenebrositate infi delitans iaceret. nec se erigere ua leret. ad saluationē cōmisi filiū meū mirabilē de uirgine incar natū. uerū d̄m et uerū hominē existente. Quid ē hoc. Quia de me patre scdm̄ diuinitatē ueraciter exiuit. et qm̄ de uirgine matre scdm̄ humanitatē ueraciter carnē assūpsit. Quid ē hoc. O homo mol lis et tener in uero corpore et. S. du rus & inflexibilis in tua incredu litate manes. Nā lapis poliri ad edificiū potest. tu autē molliri ad fidē n̄ uis. Attende tam. Sicut homo in archa pulcherrimā gem mā habens cā metallo inponit. ut hominib; appareat. sic et ego

.c.3.

.c.15.

277 in corde meo filiū meū habens cū de uirgine incarnari uolui. quantus ipse credentib. salutē uite con-ferret. Qd si carnalē patrē dedisset quis tunc eēt. Videlicet n̄ filius. s; seruus m̄s. S; hoc eē n̄ debuit. Ipse autē de uirgine natus comedit. bi-bit. et dormiens requieuit atq; alias corporales miseras sustinuit. s; tamen gustū peccati in carne sua non sensit. q̄a n̄ in m̄dacio s; inue-ritate carnē assūpserat. Qd ē hoc.

Quo ceteri homines in p̄uaricatione adē & eue p̄ gustū delectationis nascunt. qd in m̄dacio et n̄ inue-ritate ē. Non sic filius m̄s ortus ē.
s; in sc̄ritate de castissima uirgine ad redēptionē hominū natus est.
Nā similis simile de uinculo suo soluere n̄ ualeret. nisi maior ueniret qui eū eripere posset. Quid ē hoc. Qm̄ homo natus in peccatis. hominē peccatōrē de p̄dione mortis liberare n̄ ualuit. Quā p̄p̄t filius m̄s sine peccato uenit. qui hominē deuicta morte m̄dier de morte eripuit. S; qui uigilantib; oculis uidet. et sonantib; au-rib; audit. hic mysticis uerbis me-is osculū amplexionis p̄beat. que de me uiuente emanant.

vij. visio. ij. partis.

uidi ardentē lucē tantę magni-tudinis ut aliquis mons magnus et altus ē. in summitate sua uelut in multas linguas diuisa. Et corā luce ista quedā multitudo albarū hominū stabat. quos uelut qdā uelū tanquā cristallus p̄lucidū a p̄ctore usq; ad pedes eorū extensū erat. S; et ante multitudinē istā quasi in quadā uia. uelut quidā uer-mis mire magnitudinis et longitudinis supinus iacebat. qui tanti horroris et insanie uidebatur ultra quā homo effari potest. Ad cuius sinistram quasi forū erat. ubi diuine hominū atq; delicie sc̄lares et mercatus diuersarū rerū apparuerūt. ubi etiā quidā hoīes multa celeritate currentes. nullū mercatū faciebant. quidā autē tepide cuntes & uenditioni et emptioni ibi in sistebant.
Yermis autē ille niger & hirsutus. atq; ulcerib; et pustulis plenus erat. quinq; uarietates a capite p̄uenire suū usq; ad pedes in mo-

104 dū bonarū descendentes in se habens quarū una uiridis alia alba rubea quedā crocea quedā nigra apparebat. plene ueneno mortifero. S; caput ei ita contri tū fuit. qđ et sinistra maxilla ip sius iā dissoluta uidebat. Oculi uero ei extrinsecus sanguinei et intrinsecus ignei aures autē rotunde et hispide. nares uero & os sedm nares et os iupere s; man sedm manus hōis. pedes autē ut pedes iupe. & cauda breuis et hor ribilis apparebat. Et collo ei cate na imposita fuerat que et manus et pedes ipsius alligauerat. ita qđ & eadē catena in lapide abyssi fortissime firmata. illū tā ualide constrinxerat. qđ se nec hac nec illac sedm nequitiā uoluntatis sue mouere poterat. Ex ore autē eius multe flammę excurrentes in qua tuor partes se diuiserūt. quarū pars una usq; ad nubes ascende bat. et alia inter scēares homines. alia autē int̄ sp̄itales se extende bat. quedā uero usq; in abyssū descendebat. S; flama illa que nubes petebat. contra hōies illos pluabat qui ad celos ire uolebant.
Quorū tres acies uidebā. Nā acies una ppe nubes. et una in medie tate. illa que inter nubes et t̄rā ē. et una iuxta t̄rā pgebat. om̄s re petens uocib; pgamus ad celos uociferantes. S; a flama illa hac et illac. piet̄. quidā n̄ cadebant. alii autē pedib; suis se uix susten tabant. alii uero ad t̄ram cadē tes. s; m̄rū surgentes. ad celos ten debant. flama autē illa que se inter scēares homines diffudit. quosdā excis cōburens interteri mā in gredine uertit. quosdā autē suo acumine ita transfixe it. qđ eos quocūq; uolebat in flexit. Nequa tam quidā se er pientes et ad illos qui celos pete bant pgentes. ouos fideles psta te nobis adiutoriū merato cla more uociferabant. quidā autē ita transfixi pmanerūt. Illa ue ro flama que se inter sp̄itales extendebat. eos sua caligine ob textit. Quos etiā in sex modis cōsi derabā. Nā alios eadē flama cru deliter incendio lesit. quos autē ledere n̄ potuit. hos autē uiridi aut albo. aut rubeo. aut croceo. aut nigro moruse. ~~ro~~ ro ueneno illo. qđ acapite ei dē uer mis usq; ad pedes ei descendebat. ardenter afflauit. S; flama que abyssū petebat. diuersas penas illos in se habebat. qui pfontē baptismatis n̄ loti. lucē uernatus et fidei ignorantes. sa tanā p dō colucant. Et uidi etiā ex ore ipsius acutissimas sa gittas pstreperentes. et a pectore ei nigrū fumū uolantē. ac lum bis ipsius ardente humore ebul.

uenit. et ab umbilico ei' feruidi turbine flamm. atq. ab extremi tate uentris ipsius uelut immu dicia ranarū scaturiente. que omnia magnā iniquitūdinē in hominib; faciebant. S; et de ip so tūta nebula cū pessimo fetore egrediens. multos hoīes sua pueritate infecit. Et ecce magna multitudo hominū in multa clarnate fulgentiū ueniebat que eundē uermē fortiter ubiq; conculcans acri ter cū eruciabat. ita tam qd ipsa nec astringis nec aueneno illius ledi poterat. Audiuq; ite rū uocē mihi de celo dicentē.

.1. O omnia iuste & recte dispen sans fideles pptos ad glām supne hereditatis uocat. s; am quis deceptor in insidus posu eos impedire tēptans. artes neq cie sue in ipsos exercat. s; tam ab eis uelut confusio ne psumptionis sue accipit. cū il li celestē patriā possideant. et ipse infernales horrores habe at. Qua ppter uidet ardentē lu cē tantē magnitudinis. ut ali quis mons magnus et altus ē. insūmitate sua uelut immul tas linguas diuisā que ē ar dens infide credentiū iusticia di. in fortitudine potentie sue magnitudinē scitatis et altitu dinē glē demonstrans. atq.

in eadē glā sēi sps diuersa dona mirabiliter declarans. Et corā lu ce ista quedā multitudo albarū hominū stans. ē in p'sentia iusticie di cohors infide lucentiū homi nū p bona opa sua bene et hone ste cōposita. ante quos uelut qdā uelut tanquā cristallus p lucidū apectore usq; ad pedes eorū extensū ē. quia in conspectu suo diuinā legē fortē & splendā ab intentione bonarū actionū usq; ad cōpletionē earū semp habent. in quib; ita confortant. qd astu tia et deceptione fallaciū suasio nū superari nō possunt. Sed qd ante multitudinē istā quasi in quadā uia uelut quidā uermis mire magnitudinis et longitu dinis supinus iacet. hoc ē qd an te noticiā hominū manifeste cognitis in uia mundi hui' que et bonis & malis adgrediendū pposita ē antiquus serpens nō ita informa sua s; insignifican one mystern uidelicet magnus in malicia. longus in insidiis. p iectus apparet. sursum inhians. ut eos qui ad celestia tendunt. p deceptionē suā deciat. s; tam iacens. qm p filiū dī uires ipsius euacuat. s; ita qd in eis stare nō ualet. quāuis tantū horrores et insanie uideat. ultra qm homo effari potest. qā uenenosū fu rorē et maliciosos conatus ipsi inmultiplicitate diuersitatis sue estimatio mortalis hominis expli care n̄ p̄ualet. Vnde et ad eū sin. iij. strā quasi forū ē ubi diuitie ho minū atq; deliciae sēlares et merca tus diuersarū rerū apparent: quō in morte que eīdē p̄ditoris sinistra intelligitur forū cernit qđ neq̄ssi ma opa eīdē mortis s̄. ita qđ ibi in diuitiis corruptibilib; supbia et uana gl̄a et in deliciis transitorius lasciuia & concupiscentia et in mer catu uenditiones ac emptiones multarū uarietatu tēnarū cupi ditatū feruunt: ita ut qui diabo licū t̄rōrē palā exhorruerit ab his latent decipiat: uidelicet cū ei multae suasionēs uiciorū lenit̄ offe runt̄ uelut cū p̄mercatorē diuer sa mercimonia hominib; ostendun tur: quatinus p̄ hoc delectati tan to ardentius emant qđ sibi obla tū uiderint. Nā diabolus artes su as hominib; fraudulent̄ offert: s; qui tunc eas concupiscunt: hū eas emunt. Quomodo. Bonā conscien tiā suā quasi uendentes abiciunt: et mortifera uulnera animarū su arū quasi ementes sibi contrahunt.

Sed ibi quidā hoīes multa cele ritate currentes nullū merca tū faciunt: quia ipsi dīm cognos centes thesaurū bonae uoluntatis et aromata uirtutū portant et si bi ea forissime contrahunt: ita qđ sēlares uoluptates et diaboli cas spurcicias uelociter in manda tis dī transcurrentes dulcedinē carnis sue contempnunt: quidā autē te pide euntes et uenditioni et emptio ni ibi insistant: qm̄ hī tarditate in bonis opib; habentes p̄tēporē cor dis sui celeste desiderū uelut illud uendentes in semetipsis extinguunt: et uoluptatē carnis sue q̄si eā em tes in se enutriunt. Quā p̄pter illi mercedē bonae opationis accipiunt: et isti penas iniquitatis sue susti nebunt. uelut ezechiel ostendit dicens. Iusticia iusti sup eū erit: et impietas impij erit sup eū. Qđ ē hoc. fulgida opa puri hoīs illum in scitatie p̄fundunt: & quasi mil le oculi aspicientes in altū atq; in p̄fundū ubiq; eū circūdant: sur sū ferentes eū in magnū honorē et in uoluptatis sue mortificationē p ut sp̄s sēs illi inspirauerit: uelut ala uolucrē sur sū in aerē tollit quo cūq; illi placuerit. S; uipeū uene nū nequitiē scissime uipe que conspumat celū margaritā luto in uoluentis et sup pulcherrimum omniū speciosorū fremens hunc qđ illud infidelit̄ subsequit̄ de no bilissimo ope digni dī et ab omni honore et ab eantitudine supne ui sionis abicit: atq; cū exultē faciens auuente fructu et radice iuste ar boris abscidit. Quod autē ui des qđ uermis ille niger et hirsu tus atq; ulcerib; et pustulis plenus ē hoc indicat qđ idē serpens anti quus in nigredine tenebrarū in fidelitatis et in pilis absconsionū deceptionis atq. in ulcerib. in mun-dicarū pollutionis et in pustulis cavernarū furoris habundat.

 ¶ quinq. etiā uarietates accipit p-uentū suū usq. ad pedes in modū bonarū descendentes in se habens. quia qnq. sensus hominū diuersis passionib. uiciorū ad deceptione illa cū se primū implere studuit usq. ad consumationē illā. cū in sania ei finē accipiet afflare nō ces-sans. s. fallacē rectitudinē simulans. homines ad declina in mundarū artū suarū trahit. quarū una uiridis. alia alba. alia rubea. quedā crocea quedā nigra apparet. plene ueneno mortifero. qm in uiriditate scelerē tristitiā. in al-bedine ineptā irreuerentiā. in ru-bore fallacē glām. in croco mordace detractionē atq. in nigredinē turpē simulationē ostendunt. cū plenitudine aliarū pueritiam. que mortē animab. hominū sibi consentientū inferunt. Sed qd caput ei ita corruptū ē. qd et sinistra maxilla ipsius iā dissolu-uidet. hoc ē qd supbia illius in incarnatione filii dī ita delecta est. qd et aduersitas mortis iā euacuata. fortitudinē amaritudinis sue exercere nō ualet. Oculi uero ei extrinsecus sanguinei et in-trinsecus ignei apparent. quia in inferno pueritatis ipsius uelut extrinsecus sanguineū nefas cor-porib. hominū incutit et uelut intrinsecus igneū iaculū animabus eorū infert. aures autē ipsius rotunde et hispide s. quō homi-nē quasi in rotunditate pilis arciū suarū circūdat. ut cū celerime deciat. si qd in illo qd suū ē deprehenderit. nares uero et os ei scdm nares et os ei scdm nares uero et os ei scdm nares et os uipere apparent. quia indiscretos et feroces mores hominib. ostendit. p qd in multis uicis eos transfigens crudeliter occidat.

Sed manus ei scdm manus ho-minis uident. qm machinauerunt arcū suarū in opib. hominū exercet. pedes autē ipsius ut pedes uipere s. quia tinerib. hominū in insidiis suis diabo-licas lacerationes inferre nō desi-nit. et cauda ei breuis et horribilis apparet. que ē potestas ipsius parui s. tam pessimi temporis in filio pditionis qui plus apprehendere bachando cupit. quā pficere possit. Et qd col-lo ei catena imposita ē que et manus & pedes ipsius alligat. hoc ē qd diabolica formido p potestatem om̃pus dī ita fracta et contrita ē. qd et pessima opa & nequissima m̃era illi in qb. homines seducit. in contritione sua compressa s. ita qd et eadē catena in lapide abissi fortissime firmata illū tā ualide constringit qđ se nec hac nec illac sedm nequitiā uoluntatis sue mouere potest. qm potestas dī instabilis sima cūitate sine defectione ma nens. diabolū tanta formidi ne in saluatione animarū oppri mit. qđ ille nec exteriorib; nec interiorib; instrumentis nequissi mi conatus sui. salutē redēptio nis a fidelib; animab; remouere ualebit. quin in locū gaudiū quē ipse pūacit. amisit. pueniant.

Quod autē ex ore ei multae flā me exeunt. in quatuor partes se diuidunt. hoc ē qđ ip se ex rapacissima uoracitate sua. pessimū et multiplex. malū cru delissimi incendiū inique psua sionis emittens. in quatuor pla gas totius mundi inter homines ut ipsū sequant. diuerse spargit.
Quarū pars una usq; ad nubes ascendit. quia illa diabolica af flatio celū toto desiderio mētis sue petentes suo acumine retia bit. et alia inter scēlares homines se spargit. qm ipsa intēnis cau sis conuersantes sua diuersitate decipit. alia autē inter spūales se extendit. quia illa spūalib; disciplinis insudantes sua simu lacione inficit. quedā uero usq; in abyssū descendit. qm ipsa infideles sibi consentientes in in fernalibus tormēta sua pueritate mittit. quia ipsi uia falsitatis et deceptionis cunctis. uia recti tudinis nō tenuerūt. nec uero dō de bitā reuerentiā exhibuerūt. quē ad modū dauid testat. dicens. Con tricio et infelicitas inuīs eorū. et uia pacis nō cognouerūt. nō ē timor dī ante oculos eorū. Quid ē hoc. In nocentia et fortissima opa dī. quē in uiuo & impurissimo fonte mili tant. illos qui dīm de corde suo cū nequissimis et damnabilib; opib; expellunt. na comerunt. uelut magna pluuia rē aliquā dimer git. ita qđ amplius nō appareat.

Et idō etiā in conspectu dī nō ful minant. qm infelicitas cū infeli cissima consuetudine ē intine rib; eorū quocūq; se cū pastu mor tis extendunt. Quomodo. yde licet gustando et comedendo hoc qđ malū ē. ynde et uia illa quē in calore solis ascendit in opib; suis nesciunt. quia dulcedinē dī nec in honore nec in amore gu stant. ubi timorē ei quasi timo rē alieni abiciunt. cū ipsū nec ui dere. nec aspicere desiderant.

Unde et ut uidet flāma illa que nubes petit contra hoīes illos pñatur. qui ad celos ire uo lunt. quia nequissimū illud in cendiū cū mentes fidelīū homi nū sursū tendere senserit. aduer sū eos suis artib; crudelissime ba chatur. ne ad illa celestia quē ip si multis suspiriis querūt puen iant. Quorū tres acies uidet. qm ipsi uerā et ineffabile trinitatē

xv.

xvi.

xvii.

mentis circūcisionē mentis im-ponit. q̄a supfluitatē in libidine querunt: nec ullū tēpus legis ut eis adō constitutū ē seruant. s; ut mare aucto iniquitūdinē con-euntur: ita et ipsi de flatu antiqui draconis in diuersa uicia mouent.
 De qua tam quidā se eripientes. et ad illos qui celos petunt p̄gentes. ouos fideles p̄stare nobis adiutoriū iterato clamore uociferantur. qm̄ de turpi et noxia consuetudine se abstrahentes. et hos qui mentē suā celestib; insigunt imitantes. ut suā sollicitudine in-pendant. ipsis iuuam corde et uoce desiderant. Quidā autē ita transfixi p̄manent. quia ipsi diuersis uiciis urant. in malis p̄- seuerant. Sed q̄d illa flama que se int̄ Spirituales extendit. eos suā caligine obteggit. hoc ē q̄d eadē afflatio diaboli-cę psuasionis incendia sua ad illos qui toto annisu sp̄itu seruire deberent emittens. eos p̄uersitate ui-ciorū suarū obnubilat. quatinus magis carni quā sp̄itu inhiat. quos etiā in sex modis considerat. qm̄ antiquus hostis tā quinque extiores sensus eorū. quā int̄iore deuotionē cordis ipsorū uelut sextū modū p̄uerrere conat̄. Nā alios eadē flama ledit. quia diabolus artes suas eis immittens. car-nalib; desideriis et uoluptatib; eos afflat. ita q̄d eos ad libidi-nē et ad pollutionē multę immu-dicie accendit. Quos autē ledere non potest. hos aut uiridi. aut albo. aut rubeo. aut croceo. aut nigro mortifero ueneno illo. q̄d acapit. eidē uermis usq; ad pedes ei descendit. ardentē afflat. Quo modo. Quo cū uoluptatis pollutionū recusant. aut tristitia sēti quasi pullulante uiriditate p̄ quā ita opprimunt. q̄d nec in spitalib; nec in scelerib; reb; ualent eis infundat. aut irreuerentia uiciorū uelut ineptā albedinē. ita q̄d nec corā dō nec corā hominib; turpi-tudinē suā abscondunt. ipsis in-mittit. aut recordationē t̄rene gl̄e quasi fulgentē ruborē unde amaritudinē & anxietatē cordis habent eis ostendit. aut de trachionē p̄ximorū uelut tepidū crocū. ita q̄d susurrone et bilingues in-de efficiunt. ipsis inducit. aut simulationē iusticie q̄si horridā nigredinē p̄ quā in cordib; suis miserabilē obtenebrantur. Sed q̄d flama que ab yssū petit. diuersas penas illos in se habet. qui p̄ fontē baptismatis n̄ loti luce uc-ritatis et fidei ignorant. satanan p̄dō colunt. hoc ē q̄d in cen-xxvii.

xix.

xx.

xxi.

diu illud pdicioni adherens. dira et amara tormēta illis animab; in fert. que infonte salutis n̄ emun dat claritatē supne hereditatis et fidē ecclāstice institutionis n̄ ui demus. illū qui in insidus positus animas hominū in morte mittere conat̄. p̄ illo qui hominib; unā et salutē tribuit. uenerari n̄ ces sant. Et uidet̄ ex ore ipsius acy tissimas sagnas p̄strepentes. que s̄ ad diabolica rabie pessime. et ne quissime inflexiones excumes. & multis iniquitatib; bachantes. et a pectore ei' nigrū fumū uolan tē. qui ē amaliōsis conatib; ei' re terrimē & ire et inuidie emissio. ac lumbis ipsius ardētē humore ebullientē. qui ē ab inmundicia ipsius inplāis feruentissime libi dinis effusio. Et ab umbilico ei' Et feruidū turbine flāmē. qui ē a uo racitate ei' in subiectis ardētissime fornicationis suffocatio. atq; ab ex tremate uentris ipsius uelut in mundicia ranarū scaturientem que ē ap̄dmone puerse absorbi tionis ei' in obduratione despacio nis fenda egestio. cū idē antiquus insidiator se subsequentes ad om nē uoluntatē suā p̄duxerit. que om̄a magnā iniquitadinē in ho minib; faciunt. qm̄ huiusmodi puer suates maximā calamitatē miser rime irrectionis illis inponunt. qui sp̄e suā n̄ celestib; s̄. t̄renis infi gunt. Sed qd̄ de ipso terri ma nebula cū pessimo fetore egre diens. multos homines sua puer sitate inficit. hoc ē qd̄ ab eodē dia bolo nigerrimus error. ferens conscientie p̄cedens. stultos hoīes p̄ iniquā incredulitatē exagitat.

Quomodo. De abscissione capitis iohis baptiste filii dī et remissore uulnerū peccatorū ostendens. pes simus error exortus ē. ubi diabo lus multos hoīes induersis imagi nib; seducit. hoc uerū ē putantes qd̄ ipse eis scdm̄ estimationē ipsoꝝ fallaciter demonstrat. Unde et multi scdm̄ hunc modū decipi unt. quia et fides ipsoꝝ semp in infirmirate uacillat. S. ouos filii mei si iuste et pie uiuere uolueri tis. hunc nequissimū errorē fugi te. ne amarissima mors in incre dulitate uos app̄hendat. Fugi te etiā illos qui morant̄ in spe luncis. incluse ebhortes diaboli existentes. Ve illis. ue illis. qui sic p̄seuerant. quia uiscera diaboli s̄. et p̄currentis germ̄ filii pdicionis.
Qua p̄pter ouos dilecti filii mei om ni deuotione et om̄i uirtute ani me et corporis ur̄i illos deuitate. qm̄ antiquus serpens sua arte il los pascit. et uestit. q̄a cū p̄ dō co lunt. et q̄a in eū p̄fallacē decepti onē confidunt. Ipsi s̄ pessimi ho micide. ita qd̄ illos qui eis simpli ter adhererint. occidunt. anteqm̄ eos errorē suū declinare p̄mit tant. et s̄ in semetipsis turpissimi

105 fornicatores sem̄ etiā suū in homi-cidio mortificantes et diabolo of-ferentes. ita etiā in scismatib; suis et in plenitudine uicior; suor; eccle-siā meā inuadentes. cū baptisma et sacramentū corporis et sanguinis filii mei et cetera instituta que eadē ecclesiā meā habet. umurpib; machinationib; suis nequiter de-rident. S; quāuis pp̄t timorē ppli mei his institutis meis apte n̄ re-pugnent. tam in cordib; et in factis suis ea p̄ nichilo ducunt. Nā diabolica illusionē sentiatē se habere simulant in quib; a diabolo decipiunt. qm̄ si idē diabolus se cis palā demonstraret. ab eis cog-nosceret. ita qd̄ illū deuntarent.
Unde ipse sua arte quedā eis ostendit. uelut bona et scā sunt. et sic eos illudit. Que illis. q̄ sic in morte hac p̄seuerauerint. Sed quia diabolus nouit se modicū tēpus erroris sui habere. idcirco nunc festinante infidelitate in membris suis p̄ficere. que uos p̄ssimi deceptores estis. qui fidē ca-tholicā subuertere laboratis. Hos instabiles et molles adducunt ad uenenosas sagittas humane pol-lutionis estis. quas scdm̄ uoluntatē ur̄am contra legē exercetis. Unde postquā ueneroso semine fornicationis libidine ur̄am euacua-tis. tunc fide oratis et sentiatē uob̄ fallaciter imponitis. qd̄ oculis meis ferre luto indignus est.

Certe scisma qd̄ exortū ē in ore ubi iudaica plebs sculptile faciens. in diabolica irrisione ludere cepit. sicut etiā et adhuc quidā petulantē ludere solent et scisma qd̄ fuit in baal. in quo multi pierūt. et scisma fornicationū ubi cū madianis turpia facta p̄petrata s̄. et cetera his similia sup̄ uos cadunt. quia in his omib; in malis ur̄is partē habetis. peiores priori pplō existentes. quō uerā legē dī cernentes. eā punacter abiciatis. S; ouos q̄ salutē ur̄am desideratis. ita qd̄ baptisma suscepistis. et unctus mons dī estis satane resistite. et demone saluationis ur̄e descendere nolite.

Homo autē qui tante duricie ē qd̄ adiutoriū dī ad repugnādū diabolo contempnit. huic ipse insidias suas ponere n̄ desistit. cū etiā in eo ingredine iniquitatis sur-gere uidet. que toti corpori illi tantā amaritudinē infert. qd̄ etiā corpus ipsius inde infirmitate ardet.
Unde cū homo ceperit malū rum-mare. et se ipsū ita in desperatione contere. uelut sibi n̄ sit possibile malū deuntare et bonū facere. tunc diabolus hoc uidens dicit. Ecce homo qui nobis similis ē. dīm suū negans. et se ad nos conuertens. sequit̄ nos.
Qua pp̄t p̄peremus om̄s et ad eū festinante curramus. ita ipsū nr̄is arub; coercentes. ne a nobis effuge-re possit. Nā dīm suū deserere uult. et sequi nos. S; homo q̄ his malis

cap. 15.

p diabolicā suggestionē impugnatur. uidelicet qd homicidio adul-terio uoracitate ebrietate et sup-fluitate omniū uiciorū polluit si tunc in his impetens pseuerauc-rit in morte cadit. qui autē diabolo repugnans. his uicis penitens. xx. iij. res.
do se subtraxerit. ad uitā resurgit.
Nā qui cupiditatē carnis sue secutus fuerit et bonū desiderū sps sui neglexerit. de hoc fiabicator orbis dicit. Iste me despicit. et carnē suā cū peccato diligit. nolens scire qd apd mone se deberet auertere. Et idō abiciendus ē. Qui uero bonū ardorē sps sui dilexerit. et uoluptatē carnis sue abiecerit. de isto idē creator mundi dicit. Hic ad me respicit. et corpus suū in sordib; n̄ emittit. desiderans scire. qd amoris se debet submouere. Unde ei succurrendū ē. Quomodo. ijt salomon inuoluntate mea dicit.

xx. iij. Peccatores psequit̄ malū. et uistis retribuēt bona. Quid ē hoc. Labantes in lapsu et cadentes in ruina undiq; mortiferi morbi inuadunt. ita qd prudent̄ in hoc quod uerū ē n̄ aspiciunt. s; qd illud negligent̄ abiciunt. Unde quia n̄ s; digni in dñm aspicere. nec ullā felicitatē in dō aut in hominib; habere qm dñm respuunt. et diabolu digunt. idcirco in multā aduersitatē illis infert id ma-lum qd opant̄. S; in bonis rectus sensus et iusta cogitatio in excel-so edificat. ita qd in sinu suo suscipiunt hereditatē patris. qm supnum lumen adtendunt. fallaces in irrisione fori quomodo hoc uel illud sine cōparatione uenundet̄ n̄ ex-istemes. s; id qd in dō uerū ē habent.

Sed qd uidet̄ qd magna mul-tudo hominū in multa claritate fulgentiū uenit. que p̄dictū uermē fortiter ubiq; conculcans acriter cū cruciat. hoc ē qd fidele agmen cre-dentiū. s; in humana miseria pertato. in fide baptismatis et in beatiss uirtutib; multo ornatu & decore ad supna desideria pperat. ita qd ipsi in factis suis hunc antiquū seductorē fortissima contritione circūdantes decipiunt. et cū diro cruciatu cōminuunt. uelut s; uirgines. martyres. et ceteri huiusmodi. cultores dñi. qui toto annisu trina conculcant. et celestia desiderant. ita tam̄ qd ipsa nec a flammis nec a ueneno illius ledi potest. quia ipsi tanta fortitudine et constan-tia in dō muniti s; qd nec ab apus incendit̄. nec ab occultis psuasionib; diabolice iniquitatis contaminari ualent. qm magna fortitudine uirtutū. uana signa deserūt. et scitanti iuste uiuentes adherent. s; qui uigilantib; oculis uidet et sonantib; aurib; audit. hic mysticis uerbis meis osculū amplexionis pbeat. que de me uiuente emanant aōj.

serpens horribilis lupinus laetis et in omni in partem

Capitula prime visionis. tunc partis.

Quod corda fidelium timere & ue nerari debent magnitudinem. lan titudinem. altitudinem. timoris domini.

Quod omnes fideles anima sapienter ti mentis domini. perfide sedes dei est.

Quod profunditas mysteriorum dei ho minibus. incomprehensibilis est. nisi quando tamen ipso donante fide concipitur.

Quod insipientia dei patris. pamo re filii sui perfectio omnium electorum computata est.

Exemplum in euangelio de eadem re.
Quod significet lumen in pecto re. & cur homo ab angelo non spernat.

Verba esaye de eadem re.
Verba dauid.

Quod deus pater in filio suo ab au roa uirgine incarnatus. operatur. or dinat. ac perficit omnia opera sua.
Decirculo girante.

Quod potestas dei altior est quam homi ni sciendum sit. & cur angeli laudent.

Quod deus est perspicua iusticia. uerus et iustus absque commutatione.

Quod uirtus iusticia. et iudicium dei. nullum finem habent. qui comprehen di possit humano sensu.

De casu primi angeli et sibi con sencientibus. et quare. & quomodo. et quo cecidit. Verba ezechielis de eadem re.

Quod gloria splendoris illius quem dia bolus per superbiam perdidit. seruata est in secreto patris alteri facere luci.

Quod diabolus cecidit absque he rede. homo autem cecidit habens he iniquum capla. in parte.

xxv. Exemplū de goliath & de dauid. xix. adeandē rem.

.i. Capitula ū visionis tēre partis.
xx. Quod fides quē in antiquis occultata fuit in ministerio incarna to dī filio pcessit in lucē.

.ii. Quod fides coniuncta ē timori dī.
xxi. Et timor dī fidei.

.iii. Quod fides p quatuor partes tēre sup fidē bona opa edificant. xxii. Et quatuor quadrif. Fugere.

.iiii. Quod oportet hominē humiliter in cedere. et insidias diaboli sapientē

.v. De quatuor angulis edificii. qd signif. xxiii. Tē aliter de eisdē angulis. Tro s.

.vi. Quod hominib. ad dō patre datū mu nitio et defensio ad bene opandū. xxiv. Et circūspēcti sunt. quia cinera ca.

.vii. De speculatiua scientia. Scientia.

.viii. Verba pauli. Verba salomonis.

.ix. De coptione duarū causarū.

.x. Quod recte institutiones surrexerūt in abrahā et in moyse.

.xi. Quod speculatiua scientia cepit in noc apparere. regnante tamen iniquitate usq. ad abrahā et moy sen sine interruptione.

.xii. Verba pauli adeandē rē.

.xiii. Quod rectū opus ostensū ē in abrahā et in moyse p spicua iusticia in in carnatione filii dī. ardens opus p baptismū in ecclā. durans in finē mundi. Habitura ē.

.xiv. Verba dauid adeandē rē.

.xv. Quod membra xpī constant adhuc in pfecta in electis suis. et ecclā ca ret. adhuc futura pfectione qm

Quomodo denarius numerus aux nuatus pada surrexit in filio dī in denariū. et denariū in millenariū.

Verba eugli de eadē re.

Quod in quinq. uulnerib. xpī pec cata hominū delent. Tum.

Quod homo quinq. sensib. spū scō sibi inspiratus. discernit bonū et ma

Quod homo anima et corpore laboret. deuitare malū & facere bo nū in pspis et in aduersis.

Quod humana mens debet habe re sapientiā & discretionē ad cog noscendū dī.

Quod homo ex quatuor elemīs constans. fidē catholicā equali de uotione colat.

Quod fidelis homo ascendat de uirtute in uirtute. Tuone hōis.

Quod filius dī missus ē in mundū sedm tēpus pordinatū a patre. ut pficeret uoluntatē patris in redēp

Quod supbiā mali. uel finē ei in opante creatura. aut in ciuī aut finē supne iusticie iustāq. distri butionē uoluntatis dī. nullus ho minū pscrutari potest. Tas.

Capitula tēre visionis. tēre par tis. Quod diuine uirtutes sub legē pullulantes in noua lege plu rimū fructū afferunt.

Quod uoluntate dī uirtutes op antur in hominib.

De statu amoris celestis. discipli ne uerecundie. midie uictorie et qd significet. Ficet.

De habitu earundē. et qd signi Specialiter de amore celesti. et habitu ei et qd significet.

Specialiter de disciplina. et habitu eius & qd significet. ¶ qd signif.

Specialiter de uerecundia. & habitu ei et qd significet. ¶ & qd signif.

Specialiter de nudia. & habitu ei et qd significet.

Specialiter de uictoria. et habitu ei et qd significet.

De habitu carundē et qd significet.

Specialiter de patientia & habitu ei et qd significet. ¶ & qd signif.

Specialiter de gemitu et habitu ei.

Gapmula q̄rte uisionis t̄re parat.

Qum austeritas legis dulcorata ē in carnatione uerbi dī uirtuose uirtuose uirtutes se ostendit.

Quod patriarche in ministerio sig-nificabant legē uicinā ē.

Quod fortitudini dī nulla supbia resistere potest.

Quod iusticia dī metuenda ē & al-tudo om̄s creaturas excellit.

Quod uerbū dī tria acumina incidentia habet. antiquā legē.

et nouā grām. et expositores diuinorū librorū. ¶ strox.

De inicalia cognitione diuine legis. et de opatione eugli. & exq̄ sua sapientia p̄ncipaliū magi

Quod ab initio legis tēpora patri-archarū et ppharū extendit d̄s.

usq; ad manifestacionē filii sui.

Quod patriarche et pphē euglicā doctrinā uenerantes. de incarnatione filii dī admirati s̄.

Quod uerbū dī. p̄cipū p̄figurationis latuit in animab; antiquorū.

aprimo electo usq; ad ultimū.

Quod doctrina filii egredit̄ a patre et reuertit̄ ad patre. diffundens se instructū benedictionis. sic puerit̄ ad ecclie doctores.

Quod p̄dicante xp̄o facti s̄ apli.

martyres. et alii electi.

Diffuso euglio. extensa ē in hoib; sapientia diuine scripture. que in initio minoris studii erat. et in fine debilis. refrigerante caritate multorū. ¶ us.

Quod homo in principio boni opis debet ēē timidus. in medio fortis et constans. in ultimo humi-

Quod misteria filii dī in p̄fundissimo secreto patris. in ueteri et nouo testam̄to edita. grā sp̄s sc̄i declarata s̄. qd cinereo homi-ni n̄ nisi in umbratione ostendit̄.

Desertoria dī et statū ei et qd significet. ¶ alii sunt.

Quod angli circa cā s̄. et cur-

De his qui dicunt̄ ēpulsē oues.

Quod d̄s quosdā leniore quos-dā fortiore flagello. q̄sdā maxima erumna m̄tis et corporis ē stringit. ¶ temis.

Exemplū de pharaone et moy-se & aaron ad eandē rē.

De modis castigationū et dī ē solationū. uas hominū inspeci-

Verba sapientie salomonis.

uare scientia dī inspiciat ho-mines noua ueste indutos.

Parus.

.l.
.ii.

Capitula quæ uisionis. tunc cforma celi dī. et qd opet.

.iii.

.iiii.

Quod dñs peccata hominū diligenter examinat. aut puniendo incor pore hoīs. aut in pena futuri scē. aut ipse homo purgabit ppeni tenciā in anima et corpore.

Verba iob de eadē re.

Qui cū timore peccant. merentē grā dī resurgere ppenitenciā in pur gatione. quā sibi plenius n̄ inue niunt aduita. Mali bono.

.v.

.vi.

Quomodo in iaculatione homi nis bonū respondeat malo. et

Quod homo habet in se duas uo cationes. una uocat ad uitā et al tera ad mortē.

.vii.

.viii.

Verba psalmiste de eodē.

Quod mirabilia et admiranda iu dicia celi dī in ueteri testamēto ui sa s̄. ut dñs timeat.

.ix.

Quod dñs a rectitudine iudicii nec fallacib. nec adulatoris sermo nib. mouetur.

.x.

.xi.

.xii.

Quod supna ultio n̄ excedit actus hominū grauius uindicando. Suare.

Quod oculi dñi uident unā quāq; iniusticiā puniendo eā. ita ut quā uis humanus sensus iudicia dī p serutari n̄ possit. tam crimina ho minū n̄ negligunt indiscussa.

.xiii.

.xiv.

Quod helus dñi iuste diiudicans opa hominū tribuit omī crea

Quod uirtus scē trinitatis. in multa suauitate & recta ultione sibi subi cit m̄res hominū. scdm diuersita

.xv.

.xvi.

.xvii.

.xviii.

.xix.

.xx.

.xxi.

.xxii.

.xxiii.

.xxiiii.

.xxv.

tē in iudiciis ipsoz. Castigans.

Quod helus dī primo uicit dia bolū in xpō. deinde in electis su gaut. tēio in filio p dmonis omīno comerit. tūmab. parens. rebelles

Quod indurata iusticiā dī despi cientis et admonitionē dī et ex hortationē hominis n̄ recipientes. in p dictionē abiciunt.

Quod elem̄ta equerunt de duri cia in penitentiā et sup eos in iun dictā inducunt.

Quod dñs sup rabidos. et p̄sūptuo se conscienter peccantes. uindictā cain et pharaonis. & illoz qui ido lū moreb adorauerūt. et qui in cia u s̄ beelphegor. inducit.

De iusticia dī orta in abel. culta in alus electis. suau in filio dī hāc transgressā uiciscit helus dī. qui tunc erat et n̄c ē pmanebit.

Qui canino more abhominatur ecclesiam. et dedicationē eccle et res ad ecclesias punientes destruit. helo dī deicit.

Quod in facto iacob pfigurabat dedicatio eccle.

Vbi cūq; corpus xpī inmolandū ē debet ēē lapis signatus. cū si ibi ex aliqua impossibilitate tē plū ēē n̄ poterit. Derit.

Quod tēplū debet habere cau sam constitutionis sue. quē ad hert sibi de labore ppli.

Quomodo et qua causa iacob decimas omīs substantie sue de

Qui ecclesias destruit dedicatio nes sanguine homicidii et fornicatione polluant. et q̄ significati lapide in sacrificio n̄ habent. & q̄ decimas et res tēpli diripiunt. oue miseris illis.

Qui res ecclē camb. et porcis. idē prauius hominib. diuidunt. homo t̄ sem eoꝝ de sumo gradu usq. ad infimū helus dī piciet.

Quomodo d̄s utiōne sua cedit credulos et incredulos. Iusti iudicant.

Qui putant se sapientes et potestate suā p̄missa iudicia eleuant. quā miserabili hos celus dī exurit.

Quod in celo dī n̄ ē clamor minantis. uocis. s. immobilis et firma potestas.

Quod scientia in hoīe ē quasi speculum. in quo latet desiderium boni uel mali. I suū. I in xpo.

Quomodo ex metu p̄cedit timor. et de timore tremor. & quom̄ homo p̄ hec tria debet opari q̄d iustum ē.

De prima radice. idē discretionē hoīis. et de ignea sup addita grā

Quod nemo in excusatione peccati sui debet insistere contra creatore Capitula. Sexce uisionis. t̄cie partis. Verba abstinentie.

Verba largiantis.

Verba pietatis.

Verba uernantis.

Verba pacis.

Verba beatitudinis.

Verba discretionis.

Verba saluationis animarū.

Quod nullus fidelium contempnat magisterio sub eā q̄a etiā p̄magiste riū israhelici ppli in lege p̄figura bant rectores tēporis gr̄e.

Que duricia legis quasi subleuamine occubuit. incarnatio filii dī p̄ grām sp̄s sc̄i elucidauit.

Quod homo indignitate magisterii fungit uice dī. Reguntur.

Quod p̄ter sp̄itale magisteriū s̄ quidā secl̄aris potencie maiores s̄. et minores in p̄plo. qui ab utrisq.

Quod p̄exterius magisteriū intel ligunt. interius.

Quia de causa d̄s p̄misit genus unū excellere et aliud subiacere.

Verba ysaac ad iacob de eadē re. hic innuit trinus ordo. dñamū liberoꝝ famulantiū.

Quod secl̄ares et sp̄itales. in quatuor diuidunt.

Quod nemo sp̄itale aut secl̄are dignitate. aut p̄apinā. aut p̄furtū. aut p̄empuonē. sibi usurpet.

Qui maturo sensu s̄. bonā conscientia habentes. et uolantia uerba laudis hominū n̄ querentes. electione regiminis digni s̄.

Quicūq. potestate regiminis adipsi uent. despicientes utrū dō. placeat an n̄. a facie dī fugientes in parte diaboli s̄. quib. n̄ resistit ut q̄n doq. amplius puniant.

Quod p̄dicta differentie hominū ut fuerūt. ita ē s̄ et semp erunt p̄extensione humani tēporis. sedm̄ auctoritatē diuine prouidentie.

Quod in conditione secl̄ariū sc̄i cet maior et minor. tres partes s̄.

- xx.iiij. Quod spirituales magistri populo in unitate fidei preceptum debent.
- xx.iiiij. Quod potestas secularis regiminis et populi inuicem se tangant puritate innocentie & simplici deuotione.
- xx.v. Quod in ope dei sex uirtutes certas prefigurabant. ¶ qd significet.
- xx.vi. Destatu abstinentie largitatis pietatis ueritatis pacis beatitudinis discretionis saluationis animarum et
- xx.vii. Schabitu earundem & qd significet.
- xx.viii. Specialiter de abstinentia et habitu eius et qd significet.
- xx.iiiiij. Specialiter de largitate et habitu eius et qd significet. ¶ qd significet.
- xxx. Specialiter de pietate et habitu eius et qd significet.
- xxx.i. Specialiter de ueritate et habitu eius et qd significet. ¶ qd significet.
- xxx.ii. Specialiter de pace et habitu eius et qd significet.
- xxx.iii. Specialiter de beatitudine et habitu eius et qd significet.
- xxx.iiii. Specialiter de discretionem et habitu eius et qd significet. ¶ parus.
- xxx.v. Specialiter de saluatione animarum et habitu eius et qd significet.
- .i. Capitula Septime uisionis. ¶ Quod ineffabilis trinitas in fine temporum declarata simplici et humili corde a fidelibus credenda et colenda est ne quis plus inuestigans quam oportet quia comprehendere non potest in deterius cadat.
- .ii. Quod in sanguine christi mundus saluatus est & cultus sancte trinitatis manifestissime declaratus est ipsa tam nulli intellectui patet.
- .iii. Quod ineffabilis trinitas omni crea-tur aptissime in pio et potestate apparet exceptis incredulis cordibus cuncta tam uelut incidens gladius penetrat. ¶ Ine.

.iiii. Qui in christiano populo catholice fidei in ariditate infidelitatis aduersantur hos diuinitas in confusione succidit. ¶ populi deierit.

.v. Quod diuinitas iactancia iudaica populi ad deum abscisum uadit in perditionem.

.vi. Parabola ad eandem rem. ¶ Sonarum.

.vii. Verba iohannis ad eandem rem. ¶ Te.

.viii. Dedifferencia et unitate trium personarum similitudinibus ad trinitatem.

.ix. Verba de libro regum ad eandem rem.

.x. Capitula Octauae uisionis. ¶ Teie parus. ¶ Verba humilitatis.

.xi. Verba caritatis. ¶ dieme.

.xii. Verba timoris. ¶ Verba obe-

.xiii. Verba fidei. ¶ Verba spei.

.xiv. Verba castitatis. ¶ hominum.

.xv. Verba gratie dei ad ammonitionem

.xvi. Quod humanitas saluatoris ecclesiasticam edificationem sustentat apparet infide populi fideliter operantium. ¶ festat.

.xvii. Quod secundum ueritatem incarnationis humanis meritis obumbrata ab interioribus fide et opere cognoscitur exterioribus fama & uoce mani-

.xviii. Quod soli deo cognitum est quod et quales futuri sint ut perficiatur corpus christi. ¶ parus.

.xix. Quod omnia opera incarnati filii dei et collectio ecclesie de quatuor partibus mundi sunt in uoluntate

Quod in xpo om̃s uirtutes acuto studio plenit̃ opant̃. et in ipso apte manifestant̃. sunt.

Quod sept̃e uirtutes. sept̃e dona sp̃s. sc̃i. sc̃i significant̃.

Verba elaỹe de ead̃e re. .xv.

Verba salomonis ad eand̃e re. .xvi.

De statu et habitu p̃dictarū uirtutū.
et q̃d significet.

Specialit̃ de humilitate et habitu.
eius et q̃d significet.

Specialit̃ de caritate et habitu ei⁹ et q̃d signif.

Specialit̃ de timore dñi et habitu
eius et q̃d significet.

Specialit̃ de timore dñi et habitu
eius et q̃d significet.

Specialit̃ de obedientia et habitu
eius et q̃d significet.

Specialit̃ de fide et habitu ei⁹ et q̃d signif.

Specialit̃ de castitate et habitu ei⁹
et q̃d significet.

Specialit̃ de gr̃a dñi et statu et habitu ei⁹ et q̃d significet.

Capitula Nove uisionis. t̃e.
Verba sapientie.

Verba iusticie. .iiij. Verba fortitudinis. .i.

Verba sc̃ntis que tricepserat. .iiij.

Verba dextri capitis. .v.

Verba sinistri capitis. .vi.

Quod filio dñi incarnato. uocatio noui ppli. munitione uirtutū.

noua constructio exorta ē.

Quod eccl̃a luce humanitatis filii dñi illustrata. interiori et exteriori scientie hominū demon-strata.

Quod eccl̃a omnē ornatū suū.
sponso suo transfinit.

Quod eccl̃a omnē ornatū suū.
sponso suo transfinit.

Quod eccl̃a omnē ornatū suū.
sponso suo transfinit.

Quod eccl̃a omnē ornatū suū.
sponso suo transfinit.

Quod eccl̃a omnē ornatū suū.
sponso suo transfinit.

Quod eccl̃a omnē ornatū suū.
sponso suo transfinit.

Quod eccl̃a omnē ornatū suū.
sponso suo transfinit.

Quod eccl̃a omnē ornatū suū.
sponso suo transfinit.

Quod eccl̃a omnē ornatū suū.
sponso suo transfinit.

Quod eccl̃a omnē ornatū suū.
sponso suo transfinit.

Quod eccl̃a omnē ornatū suū.
sponso suo transfinit.

Quod eccl̃a omnē ornatū suū.
sponso suo transfinit.

Quod eccl̃a omnē ornatū suū.
sponso suo transfinit.

Quod eccl̃a omnē ornatū suū.
sponso suo transfinit.

Quod eccl̃a omnē ornatū suū.
sponso suo transfinit.

Quod eccl̃a omnē ornatū suū.
sponso suo transfinit.

Quod eccl̃a omnē ornatū suū.
sponso suo transfinit.

Potest.

Quod diuinā sapientiā in eccl̃a stico ope cor hominis p̃seruari n̄

Quod de eccl̃a inscientia di p̃co-niū adhuc occultatū ē. & solern industria doct̃or ad p̃fectionē cotidie p̃pare. n̄ cessat.

Quod eccl̃a in expugnabiliter circūdata ē sept̃e donis sp̃s sc̃i.

Quod eccl̃astici doct̃ores aplica doctrina florentes. unanimi opatione sua eccl̃am confortant.

Quod doct̃ores eccl̃ie ad uia ueritatis fide et ope p̃duxerūt. erran-

Quod apli & sequaces eorū scilicet aplici uiri unū tenorē habentes.

sponse dñi magna pietatis sollici-tudine p̃ce debent.

Verba salomonis ad eand̃e re.

Parabola ad eand̃e re.

Quod carnalit̃ uiuentes ad tendant p̃scientiā potestatis dñi.

De diuersitate multumoda ingredientū eccl̃am et egredientū.

De symoniacis. & de occultis di-uinis iudiciis sup̃ eos.

Verba petri apli de ead̃e re.

Quod dignitas regiminis bona ē & ad utilitatē hominū a dō dis-posita. ut p̃p̃sa discant timere dñm cui qui resistit. dō resistit.

De symoniacis q̃ penitent ubi qui n̄ penitent.

Quod dñs noue sponse dona sc̃i sp̃s ad defensionē & ad decorē

De sapientia et statu & habitu
eius et q̃d significet.

De statu iusticie fortitudinis

Specialit̃ de sp̃e et habitu ei⁹ et q̃d significet.

xx.viii. Specialit de firmitudine et habitu. xi. et qd sig.

et sententis et qd significet.

xx.vii. Specialit de iusticia et habitu ei et qd significet. Specialit de iusticia et habitu ei et qd significet. xx.

xx.viii. Specialit de sententia et habitu ei.

Capitula Decime visionis treie partis.

i. Verba filii hois.

ii. Quod homo habens scientiam boni et mali inexcusabilis est. Sanc.

iii. Admonitio ad coniugatos. Sanc.

iiii. Comparatio de agro. Sanc.

v. Quod homo non debet seruari qd sibi sciendum non est sicut in exemplis patrum.

vi. Quod nullus repente uia sententis arripit ut in suppositis exemplis uidetur.

vii. Admonitio ad uirgines et continentes qualiter sententia aggredi debet.

viii. De interiori continencia multum ut in subiectis exemplis manifestum est.

ix. Comparatio de thesauro.

x. Verba constantie.

xi. Verba celestis desiderii.

xii. Verba compunctionis cordis.

xiii. Verba contemptus mundi.

xiiii. Verba concordie.

xv. Quod in altitudine iusticie et fortitudine donorum spiritus sancti opera que deus in hominibus operatur solidantur.

xvi. Quod omnis actio que fide et opere in fidelibus perficitur timori domini diuina prouidentia coadunatur.

xvii. Quod uolente perseuerare in bono opere filius dei regit ne cadat in errorem qui humilitate sua destruxit mores.

xviii. Quod umbra legis in nativitate et in passione filii dei fine accepta.

xix. Quod gessit deus in ecclesia ab hominibus.

uideri et sciri possunt. similia autem non nisi fide et reuerentia diuina.

Quod deus mundum hominem aspiciens admonet ut imitando sanctos celestem patriam petat. Significet.

xx. De statu constantie celestis desiderii compunctionis cordis contemptus mundi concordie et qd.

De habitu earundem et qd significet.

Specialit de constantia et statu ei et qd significet.

xxi. De habitu earundem et qd significet.

Specialit de celesti desiderio et statu ei et qd significet.

xxii. De celesti desiderio et statu ei et qd significet.

Specialit de compunctione cordis et statu ei et qd significet.

xxiii. De compunctione cordis et statu ei et qd significet.

Specialit de contemptu mundi et statu ei et qd significet.

xxiv. De contemptu mundi et statu ei et qd significet.

Specialit de concordia et statu eius et qd significet.

xxv. De concordia et statu eius et qd significet.

Quod in uigilante fortitudine fidei opus bonum explanatur et in perfectione operis qua deuotione quisque dominum colat ostenditur.

xxvi. De uigilante fortitudine fidei opus bonum explanatur et in perfectione operis qua deuotione quisque dominum colat ostenditur.

Quod per fortitudinem fidei deus antiquum serpente in profundum eterne confusionis deiecit.

xxvii. De fortitudine fidei deus antiquum serpente in profundum eterne confusionis deiecit.

Pagani iudei falsi christiani uera fide abnegantes in potestate dei sunt.

xxviii. De pagani iudei falsi christiani uera fide abnegantes in potestate dei sunt.

Quod deus ecclesiam ab omnibus partibus mundi collectam secundum quod predestinauit ad effectum confuso diabolo producit.

xxix. De ecclesia ab omnibus partibus mundi collectam secundum quod predestinauit ad effectum confuso diabolo producit.

Capitula decime visionis treie partis.

Decemque ferocissimis cursibus.

Quod deus ecclesiam ab omnibus partibus mundi collectam secundum quod predestinauit ad effectum confuso diabolo producit.

xxx. De ecclesia ab omnibus partibus mundi collectam secundum quod predestinauit ad effectum confuso diabolo producit.

Quod deus ecclesiam ab omnibus partibus mundi collectam secundum quod predestinauit ad effectum confuso diabolo producit.

xxxi. De ecclesia ab omnibus partibus mundi collectam secundum quod predestinauit ad effectum confuso diabolo producit.

Quod deus ecclesiam ab omnibus partibus mundi collectam secundum quod predestinauit ad effectum confuso diabolo producit.

xxxii. De ecclesia ab omnibus partibus mundi collectam secundum quod predestinauit ad effectum confuso diabolo producit.

xxxiii. De ecclesia ab omnibus partibus mundi collectam secundum quod predestinauit ad effectum confuso diabolo producit. xxxiiii. De ecclesia ab omnibus partibus mundi collectam secundum quod predestinauit ad effectum confuso diabolo producit.

xxxv. De ecclesia ab omnibus partibus mundi collectam secundum quod predestinauit ad effectum confuso diabolo producit.

xxxvi. De ecclesia ab omnibus partibus mundi collectam secundum quod predestinauit ad effectum confuso diabolo producit.

xxxvii. De ecclesia ab omnibus partibus mundi collectam secundum quod predestinauit ad effectum confuso diabolo producit.

xxxviii. De ecclesia ab omnibus partibus mundi collectam secundum quod predestinauit ad effectum confuso diabolo producit.

xxxix. De ecclesia ab omnibus partibus mundi collectam secundum quod predestinauit ad effectum confuso diabolo producit.

xl. De ecclesia ab omnibus partibus mundi collectam secundum quod predestinauit ad effectum confuso diabolo producit.

xli. De ecclesia ab omnibus partibus mundi collectam secundum quod predestinauit ad effectum confuso diabolo producit.

xlii. De ecclesia ab omnibus partibus mundi collectam secundum quod predestinauit ad effectum confuso diabolo producit.

xliiii. De ecclesia ab omnibus partibus mundi collectam secundum quod predestinauit ad effectum confuso diabolo producit.

xliiii. De ecclesia ab omnibus partibus mundi collectam secundum quod predestinauit ad effectum confuso diabolo producit.

xliiii. De ecclesia ab omnibus partibus mundi collectam secundum quod predestinauit ad effectum confuso diabolo producit.

xliiii. De ecclesia ab omnibus partibus mundi collectam secundum quod predestinauit ad effectum confuso diabolo producit.

xliiii. De ecclesia ab omnibus partibus mundi collectam secundum quod predestinauit ad effectum confuso diabolo producit.

xliiii. De ecclesia ab omnibus partibus mundi collectam secundum quod predestinauit ad effectum confuso diabolo producit.

Tēporaliū regnō.
De cane igneo qđ significet.
De fuluo leone qđ significet.
De equo pallido qđ significet.
De nigro porco qđ significet.
De grisco qđ significet.
De colle qñq. apices habente & de Quinq. funib; bestiarū qđ significet.
Verba iob ad eandē rē.
Quod ecclā ad pfectionē suā fulget indecore iusticie usq; ad tēp' amxpī.
Quod tunc fides ecclē qđ indubio ē.
Quod ante finē mundi testimonio eorundē sponsus ecclē candidissi me fulgebit de uictō filio p dmo nis & manifesta fide ueritatis.
Verba dauid ad eandē rē.
Quod ecclā refrigerante iusticia multas & diuersas passiones & p secutiones lamabiliū sustinebit.
Quod amxpē horribili tōre fide tes dilanians fētorē suū crudelita tis & insaniā mordacitatis suē hōib; infundit.
Quod filius p dmonis qđ blandicus nō potest crudelissimis psecutionib; incuruare tēptabit.
Quod ecclā in consumatione mun di nobilissimo sanguine pfunde tur usq; adduos testes ueritatis.
Quod nos in septimo millenario su mus transactis sēc.
Qua de causa dñs noua secreta & multa mystica hactenus latētia p nō loquentē & indoctū modo lo quentē dñi addoctores ne hē sermonē spernant. s; uclut uictō riofissimū uexillū contra filiū in quatus eleuent. Tēpore.

Verba spē ad ecclā de nouissimo wangeliū de eodē.
Quod turbato orbe quatuor de menta abluunt. & ecclā in filiis su is implebit. ne mēbra de sint capta.
Quod cursus mundi nē in septimo numero ē. & post laborē sigilla scripturarū apte & leniter. ut in hoc libro pferunt. & alius nume rus nō ē qđ sup ē homini sciendū nē ē.
Quare dñs filiū suū uoluit incar nari in fine tēporū.
De amxpō. & matre ei.
Quod amatre magicis artib; in structus. indueris creaturis uo luntatē suā pmissione dñi exerceat De potestate ei & diuersis miracu lis quē facere uidet.
Verba moy'si de uisione dñi.
Quod quidā a diabolo decepti portenta in creaturis fallaciter ostendunt. s; eas malū modū tñs mutare nō possunt.
Quā diuerso modo amxpē su os decipiat. & cur hoc illi pmissū De simulata morte amxpī. & de scriptura maledictionis qui huic contra dixerit occidetur.
Verba iohis. Reseruari sunt.
De enoch & elia qñtē ad id tēpus verba illoz ad filios dñi.
De ueris signis illoz quib; falsa amxpī abiciant.
Quod pmissione dñi consumati mercede laborum suorum consequentur. xxxviii. Quod omnia membra ecclesie exsuperuio sa arrogancia antixpi tremore concutiantur. putantur se posse pene trare secreta celestia. Redeamur.

xxxviii. Quod potestas dei manifesta uirtute filium perditionis admodum diaboli incerta damnatione perferat.

xxxix. Quod infernalis fetor et nebula lo cu elationis illi replebitur. ut decepti xl. Quod filio perditionis perstrato sponsa xpi candore mire pulchritudinis clarescat. errantibus adiuua uerna tis redeuntibus. In deo.

xli. Quod die iudicii nemo scire poterit xlii. Exemplum de samson. In deo.

Capitulum xii. uisionis. tredecime par ti. Quod in nouissimo tempore mundus multis calamitatibus. ut ho in hora mortis dissolvitur. In deo.

Quod omnis creatura repente et co mouetur et quicquid in aere et in aqua et in terra mortale est. uita redditur et quod feditatus est in eis euanescent. In deo.

Quod corpora mortuorum ubicumque fuerint in integritate corporis et sexus sui resurgunt. In deo.

lii. De signatis et non signatis resurgen ti. Quod filii cui patet potestate dedit iudicium facere in forma humani tatis ad iudicium ueniet. In deo.

Euangelium de eodem. In deo.

Quod signati obuia iusto iudici non in difficultate celeriter capiuntur et opera eorum apparebunt. In deo.

Quod omnes flores dei. In deo pa triarche. prophete. apostoli. martyres. con fessores. uirgines. et monachi. et alii propositi fulgebunt. In deo.

Quod celi mirum laudes suas in silentio continent. cum filii semeni tia iudiciali preferret. conscientia singulorum aperta. In deo.

xv. De bonis et malis qui iudicandi sunt De infidelibus. qui iam iudicati ad iu dicium non perueniunt. In deo.

Quod finito iudicio maxima quies et tranquillitas exortetur. In deo.

Quod electos gloria eternitatis cum mag nis laudibus recipit. sed reprobos infer nus magno ululatu absorbet. In deo.

Euangelium de eodem. In deo.

Quomodo elementa et sol et luna et stelle finito iudicio. in melius mutantur. et nox non erit. In deo.

Verba iohannis de eodem. In deo.

Capitulum tredecime uisionis tredecime partis.

Symphonia de sancta maria. In deo.
 xvi. De nouis ordinibus. supernorum spirituum.
 De patriarchis et prophetis. In deo.

xvii. De apostolis. De martyribus. In deo.

xviii. De confessoribus. De uirginibus.

xix. Vox armonie in querelis de reuo cati ad eosdem gradus. In deo.

In exhortatione uirtutum. et in contradictione diabolicarum ar gumetorum. In deo.

Quod de ineffabili gratia sua cor de et ore dei ineffabiliter laudan tur. In deo.

Quod symphonia in unanimi tate et concordia preterenda est.

xv. Quod uerbum corpus sympho nia autem spiritus et armonia diui nitatis. uerbum uero humanitatis filii dei quod per torpent quod sym in et hui ducit quod fid sunt m erba d explicum

 explicum
 placit hor

filii designat. xvij.

Tu.

Quod psymphonia rationalitatis torpens anima excitat aduigilan

Quod symphonia dura corda emol. xiiij.

lit et humore compunctionis in ducat et spm scm aduocat. xv.

Quod fidelis omi deuotione inces sant iubilare debet. Tuinas. xvi erba dauid de eade re. xvij.

Explieunt capla tre partis libri

Explieunt capla libri ciuas sim plicas hominis.

In circulo sup monte edificium quadrangulum ad similitudine urbis quadrangule factum. aliquantulum in obliquum positi iuxta mirabile ludum.

Ecce in visione. in parte.

Altra cu crucifixo.

una imago cum corona

Abraham in radice

secler colamine

In tre h edificiu. iudi. v. imagines stare. singli in singlo arcu. desup circū conū habentem.

22 visionis terre recepit

E T EGO.
Homo
sumpta.

abalus hominib: que n̄ sū digna nominari homo. p̄pt̄ transgressio nē legis dī. cū deberē ē iusta et sim iniusta. nisi q̄d dī creatura sū ipsius grā. que me etiā saluabit. vidi adoriente. et ecce illic con speci uelut lapide unū totū in tegrū. in m̄se latitudinis atq: alt itudinis. habente ferreū colorē. et sup̄ ipsū candidā nubē. ac sup̄ eā positū regale thronū rotundū. in quo sedebat q̄dā iuuenis luci dus mirabilis gr̄e tamēq: clarita tis ut nullatenus eū p̄spicue pos sem intueri. habens quasi in pecto re suo limū nigrū et lutulentū. tamē latitudinis ut alicui mag ni hominis pectus ē. circūdatū la pidib: p̄ciosis atq: margaritis. Et de ipso lucido sedente in throno. p̄tendebat magnus circulus au rei coloris ut aurora. cui ampli tudine nullom̄ cōphendere potui. gians ab oriente ad septentrionē.
et ad occidentē atq: ad meridiē. ita se reflectendo adoriente ad ipsū lucidū. nec habens ullū finē.
Et idē circulus erat aūta tamē al titudinis. ut eā cōphendere n̄ pos sem. et se reddens splendore ualde tribile scilicet lapidei calibet. et igni coloris. undiq: sedm̄ ampli tudine suā sursum in altitudinē celi et deorsū in profundū abyssi ita se extendente. ut nullū finē ei uidere posse. Vidi etiā tunc de secreto ei dē sedentis in throno stella magnā multa splendoris ac decoris p̄dire. cū eā plurimā multitudinē can dentū scintillarū. que cū eadē stella om̄s confluentes ad austrū. in spiciebant ipsū sedente in throno quasi alienū. seq: ab eo auertē tes magis inhiant ad aquilonē. quā eū inspicere uellent. S; statū in ipsa auersione inspectionis sue om̄s extincte s; sic uerse in migrē dinē carbonū. Et ecce uentus turbinis ortus ē ab ipsis. qui eas mox ab austro retro eundē se dente in throno p̄iecit ad aqu ilonē. p̄cipitatas in abyssū. ita ut earū amplius nullā uidere uale rē. Splendore autē illū magnū qui eis abstractus ē. uidi subito in earū extinctione reuerti ad ipsū sedente in throno. Et audi ui eundē q̄ sedebat in throno m̄ dicente. Scribe que uides et audis. Et respondi de interiori scientia ei dē uisionis. Rogo te mī dñe ut m̄ des intellectū. q̄ nus possi enarrabiliter p̄ferre hec mystica et nederelinquas me. s; confirma me in aurora tue iusticie. in qua manifestat ē filius tuus. et da m̄ quom̄ possim. et qualiter debeat p̄ferre diuinū consiliū. qđ in antiquo consilio ordinatū ē. quom̄ eundē filiū tuū uoluisti in carnari. ita ut homo sub tēpore fie ret. hoc uolens ante omnē creatu rā in simplicitate tua et in igne co lumbe scilicet sp̄s sc̄i. ut idē filius tuus quasi splendida solis forma mirabiliter surgens. in incipiente capite uirginitatis ueraciter indu eret humanitatem. supra hominis forma p̄p̄t hominē. Et iterū audi ui eū dicentē m̄. O quā pulchri s̄ oculi tui in diuina narratione. dū ibi surgit aurora in diuino cōsi lio. Et iterū respondi. de interiori scientia uisionis ipsius. Ego appa reo in sinu animi mei ut cinis cine re putredinis. et sicut puluis in stabilitatis. unde sedeo pauens in umbra sicut penna. s̄. ne deleas me de t̄ra uiuentiū ut p̄grinū. quia in magno sudore laboro in hac ui sione. et qđ etiā de uilitate mei stul ti sensus qđ m̄s ē in carne. cōputo me frequentē in minimum et in uilissimū locū. ita qđ n̄ sum digna uocari homo. quia ualde timeo n̄ audi ens dicere tua misteria. O bone ac mitis pat̄. doce me qđ tui uolun tatis sit. qđ dicere debeat. O tu me tuende pat̄ et otu dulcissime et otu plene om̄is gr̄e. nederelinq̄s me. s̄. conserua me in tua misericordia.

 Et iterū audiui eundē m̄ dicentē.
 Nunc die ut docta es. Volo ut di cas. quāuis cinis sis. Die reuelatio nē panis qui filius dī ē. quia ē in igneo amore uidelicet omnē mortuū suscitare in anima et cor pore. et dissoluta peccata relaxa re in serena claritate. ipse in eū suscitationis sc̄atus in homine ex istens. ante quā in illo exsuscitaret. unde etiā magnificus et gl̄osus ac incōp̄hensibilis d̄s dedit magnū instrumentū. mittens eundē filiū suū in pudicitia uirginitatis. que n̄ potuit habere ullā uarietatem ma cularū in sua uirginitate unde ip sa molliret. ibi n̄ potuit. nec eē de buit ulla pollutio carnis in m̄te uirginis. qđ inuictrix et mortifi catrice mors generis humani ipsa met nesciente ut in somno decepta ē. q̄ndo fili' dī in magno silentio uenit in aurorā uidelicet in humi lem puellā. O mors q̄si secuta p̄ces sit. nesciens unā quā illa dulcis uirgo portauit. qđ sibi erat ab sconsa ei' uirginitas. ipsa enī uir go erat in paup̄culis reb'. qđ diui na maiestas eā ita inuenire uolui t. Nunc scribe de uera agnitio ne creatoris in bonitate ipsius sic.

O s̄ qui cuncta creauit et homi nē ad gl̄iam illā de qua p̄dit' angel' cū suis imitatorib'. p̄fectus ē ordinauit. ab omni creatura sua maximo honore et timore uenerandus et metuendus ē. qđ iustū ē ut creatori omniū uene ratio. a creatura sua exhibeat. et de sup om̄a fidelit de lapidib' que in fignat. ipse ē cōm do timor dī qđ timor m̄cordib'. fi o p̄ferre de in uirgū et in admodū habet hoc ē qđ eadē fir modo timor dī

 m̄da ē qđ dī
 m̄da creatura in cognoscit dī nullū p̄ter eū ē in n̄la latitudo ē in om̄ib'. et sup cū dī dūm̄ dī n̄t ad eā p̄ ne in sensib' p̄ sup m̄da. qđ am̄ forte colorib'. hoc dī ē humanū n̄dū ualde g in fragilis can creatura ipsi reb' dī n̄t ipsū can sapientia human cōp̄m̄t regali dī ē fortis et p̄ m̄t in xp̄iano in uiscerib' ē q in ad eā. ita in m̄t sup a dī dī ad hūmā ap̄t in qua in tū dī in m̄t in dñs sup om̃a fidelissime adoret. Qd & lapis iste quē uidet certissime de signat. Ipse ē enī ministerio magni do timoris dñi. qui purissima inten tione in cordib. fidelium semp oriri et p̃seuerare debet. S; qd eū uidet to tū integrū et in m̃se latitudinis atq; altitudinis habentē ferreū colorē. hoc ē qd eadē firma et grandis mag nudo timoris dñi firmissime te nenda ē. quia dñs metuendus ē ab omī creatura in tota integritate ut cognoscat unus et uerus dñs ēē. cū nullus p̃ter eū ē. nec similis illi. in q̃ ē in m̃sa latitudo. quō incōphensibi lis ē in om̃ib. et sup om̃a. et altitudo. cū scām diuinitatē nullus cōphē dere nec ad eā p̃tingere cū altitudi ne sui sensus potest. quia ipsa est sup om̃a. Qd autē ē similitudinis ferrei coloris. hoc ē qd onerosū et durū ē humanis mem̃b. dñm tume re. illud ualde graue existens mol lucia fragilis cineris. q̃a humana creatura ipsi rebellis ē. Sup lapi de uero ipsū candida nubes. clara sapientia humane m̃tis ē. ac sup eā positus regalis thronus rotun dus ē foris et principalis fides. cir cuens in xp̃iano pp̃lo. cui dñs fide liter conscius ē. quia ubi timor dñi radicat. ibi etiā sapientia hu mane m̃tis sup apparebit. et de inde dō adiutrix fides sup hanc imponet. in qua ipse dñs sibi requiē parat. Cū enī dñs tmet p̃ sapientiā humane m̃tis in fide intelligitur.

quia cū his tangendus ē. ut sedes tan git dñm suū. Et tunc in his dñs parat sibi sedē existens sumus sup om̃a. q̃a neq; potestate neq; dñatione cōp hendi potest. s; residet in unica et pura fide quō unus ē. qui credendus ē dñs sup om̃a. Vnde sedens in thro no uiuens lucidus. mirabilis gl̃e tan teq; claritatis ut nullaten⁹ eū p̃spicue possis intueri. habens quasi in pecto re suo limū nigrū et lutulentū. tan te latitudinis. ut alicuius magni hoīs pectus ē circūdatū lapidib. p̃ciosis atq; margaritis. est sup om̃a regnans uiuus dñs. lucens in bonita te et mirabilis in opib. suis. cui in mensā claritatē in p̃funditate mi sterii sui nullus hominū p̃fecte po test intueri nisi in q̃mū fide cōp hendit. atq; portat. sicut sedes con tinet accircūdat dñm suū. Que ut illi subiecta ē. ita qd nec se ele uare possit contra dñm suū. sic fi des n̄ desiderat supbe aspicere in dñm. s; tamū in una deuotione tan git eū. Et q̃si in pectore suo idē insapientia misterii sui habet p amorē filii sui infirmū et debile ac paup̃e limū q̃ homo ē. nigrū in nigredine peccator et lutulen tū in pollutione carnis & latū sedm similitudinē pectoris hoīs. qd ē dilatatio p̃funde et magne sapientie in qua ipse dñs creauit hominē. illos respiciens qui s̃ in saluatione anime p̃ penitentia. in qualicūq; crimine contra dñm sunt in sua debilitate calcitrantes. quia tam ad eum pueniunt. Hi sunt circū dam cum pluribus ornamentis illorum qui inter eos surgunt ut lapides preciosi in magnis personisque sunt martyres ac uirgines sanctas et ut margarite que sunt innocentes et penitentes filii redemptionis cum quibus idem lumen ualde ornatus est dum in humano corpore fulgent tam uirtutes que in deo sunt fulgentes in omni claritate. Nam que constituit spiraculum et unita homi nium ille inspicit semetipsum. Quomodo scilicet cum redemptione dum presciuit in sua predestinatione filium suum incar nari ita quod in eius corpore deberet abstergi omnis maculosa uarietas criminum. Et sic uidet etiam animas que iustificabunt post multiplica tionem superfluum peccatorum dum adhuc in corporibus suis sunt et que consue cent iniusticia dei ambulare post diuersitatem errorum suorum qualiter con sistant in deo ac qualiter desistant de multa oblivione et quomodo reuer tantur de uno quoque uicio cum quo sunt uulnerate in mortalibus ubi ceci derunt in peccatis sicut sunt inspec tantes quod multi populi surrexerunt de errantibus uis in quibus ambula bant pleni uulneribus in plagis pes simis restaurati de morte fedita tis criminum sicut etiam multi ueni unt qui in amaritudine acerbis doloris peccati tam graui sunt uulne rati quod ipsi etiam in consuetudine malorum morum in quibus supra modum peccauerunt sunt ita tediosi quod non pos sunt amplius spirare in fluctibus ad operandum mortiferum opus in adulte rio et homicidio et superfluitate om nium malorum. O miseris nunc ueniunt ipsi quasi peregrini de longinqua regione sicut scriptura habet in euglio ubi adolescentior filius dixit surgam et ibo ad patrem meum et dicam illi pater peccaui in celum et coram te iam non sum dignus uocari filius fac me sicut unum ex mercenariis tuis.

Hoc tale est. Homo qui de lapsu pec cati per admonitionem spiritus sancti reuer titur in se dicit. Volo surgere de importabilibus peccatis que ame nullatenus sunt sustinenda de graui culpa si reuertar in recordatione meis plangens ac merens peccata mea sic ueniens ad patrem meum quod pater meus est quomodo creauit me et di cat illi. Pater peccaui in celum idem in celesti opere quod ego sum qui me for masti in uoluntate tua me sic tangendo in creatione hac quod ego etiam celestis debui esse in actibus meis si fecerit me contrarium cum turpissimis opi bus peccatis etiam coram te quia huma na natura destrui in me. Quomodo.
In multis abominationibus. Ideo sum et ego reus in mea preditione et in tua maiestate et non sum dignus nominari filius tuus quia propter nequicia cor dis mei creaturam tuam in me dixi in aliu modum quam ante constitutus sim.
Sed nunc fac in ut tuo redempto ser uo cum mercede sanguinis filii tui quod ipso de mors in la recon ciliatio ne ad de redempti aut filii fidelitatis tanta red cu sangu du illi q hoc reuer gones ad quod mult deserui cum de et recorda si si cum perpe inde uerbu de eius que cudu inco

sunt in uel qd deb rent dumi qui tam u cordant uerit ad esset qd iusticia ip declinaren peccatis su reuerent in lege a bundanti entur nec domo di

114 ipsū dedisti in tantā mercedē quā mors nūquā rependere poterit ul-la re compensatione. s; dimitte peccatore ppenitentiā. que in passio-ne ei dē filiū tuū orta ē. q̄a rectā he-reditatē filiorū amisi in adā. qui creatus filius in iusticia destituit ē glā felicitanis. Nunc autē debet pēni-tentia redimere hominis peccata. cū sanguine filii tui. Istud ē dicen-dū illis q̄ merant casū ad e. et post hec reuertunt ppenitentiā. sic pungentes ad saluationē. et memores s; quod multas causas audierūt que descripseris s; narrande et de cruciatu & de sanguine redemptoris eorū. et recordant gēntes q̄d transgres-si s; cū audiu. q̄d cū studio debuērūt pceptū uidelicet quomodo seruarent uerbū dī. cū ipsi negligenter legē eius que eis erat instituta ad custodiendū in constitutione pcepti. recu-santes inspicere q̄d deberent facere uel q̄d deberent facere uel q̄d deberent dimittere ppter timorē dñi. qui tam ueniunt ad uernatē recordantes ea que audierūt uel sci-uerūt. ad dō quāuis prius ita cecau-essent. q̄d omnino nolebant scire iusticiā ipsius. ut se ad hoc quicq̄m declinarent. q̄d ipsā pponerent peccatis suis. cū spernerent eā. et cū reicerent retro uerbū dī. respuentes legē ei. Multū de istis erit sup habundantes in bonis. ita ut nec faci-emur. nec eis sufficiat epulari in domo dī celebrando diuinū officū. et opando iusticiā ei sup habun-dantes. ita q̄d semp s; fientes et me-mores in dolorib; malorū que fecerūt in ante achis reb; dū colebant illicita opa. transcurrentes licita legis dī. Istud ē luteus luteus. que uidet in pectore pū patris. Quomodo. filio dī qui de corde patris exiit ueniens in mun-dū. ad e credens pplis. adherens ipsi hac intentione qua credit in eū. Certe ppter ea sic etiā isti apparent in pectore pū patris. ut nō spnat anglis nec ulla creatura hominē qui summi dī filius incarnatus habet formā hominis in semetipso. quō beatus angelicus chorus indignū haberet hominē ppter magnā fednitē uiciorū in peccatis ei. cū ipsi supni angeli inuolabiles sint ulla dispsione iniusticie. nisi q̄d acutissime uident faciē patris. Et q̄d amat ap-paret. hoc etiā amant ipsi in filio. Quomō.

Scilicet q̄d idē dī filius natus ē hō.
Nā ego pat. eundē filiū meū exuirgine natū posui in saluationē et in restauracionē hōis. ut dicit esayas ppha seruus mī. Sicut pastor gregē suū pascet in brachio suo congregabit agnos. et in sinu suo leuabit. feras ipse portabit. Hoc tale ē. Sicut pastor gregē suū pascet. sic pascet filius mī pastor bonū redemptū gregē suū. Quomō. Ipse pascet eū sua lege. quā ipsemet pme-plantauit. Vnde etiā in sua extensa potestate ut in brachio suo. scilicet q̄d idē filius mī ē homo. congre-gabit innocentes agnos de culpa. ade pinnocentia baptismi cum eis exunuit uetus homo cum opibus suis et in lege sua in sinu suo. Quomodo. Unde licet quia leuat eos super excelsa celorum. tali modo quod fiunt in bra ei. Qua propter sic in interiori secreto diuinitatis apparet homo in forma sua. quod nec angeli faciunt nec ulla alia creatura. quia idem unigenitus in se propter re-demptionem humani generis in uirgi-na carne formam assumpsit hominis. Ipse se portabit etiam has feras in corde suo. Quomodo. Ipse filius in se portat ho-mines in sanguine suo. sic quod salui facti sunt per quinque uulnera ei. quia quod cumque peccauerint per quinque sensus suos. hoc absterget per summam iusticiam post penitentiam. quomodo ipse metum eos ita portauit quod incarnatus est. et quod passus est uulnera in cruce. et quod mortuus et sepultus est. et quod amortuus resurrexit. Ipse portauit etiam eis manum suam. cum eos rediret ad se.

Quomodo. Scilicet quod idem filius in se assumpsit humanitatem per illis. qui putabant se perditos esse propter casum ad e-um. Idem unigenitus in se uicit etiam mortem. sic quod non potuit amplius dominari super eos. Unde et ipse nouit eos ita in uirtute claritatis sue. ut ueniri in se in purgatione penitentiae. Quod autem eos uidet in sinu patris appa-rere. hoc est quod filius hominis perficitur cum membris suis in secreto pa-tris. Quomodo. Cum enim mundus comple-bitur. tunc electi etiam christi qui in braipsius sunt perficiuntur. O quam pulcherille filius est. ut psalmista dicit. viij.

Speciosus forma pro filius homi-nis. Hoc tale est. Pulcherrima pulchritudo fulget in eo clarissime forme. sine ulla macula peccati. et absque liquore humani fetori-ris. et sine ulla concupiscentia facti operis in desideris peccatorum. que exigit caro humane infirmitatis.
Hoc nunquam tetigit hunc hominem.
Et eadem forma filii hominis nata est in simplicitate palus hominibus. ita quod illa uirgo genuit eundem naturam suam in ignorantia peccati. se nesciens in cruna habere filium.
Quomodo. Quomodo non sensit ullum contactum opus in peccatis. idcirco ignorabat se habere dolorem in partu. sed inuis in ita corporis sui integritas gaude-bat. O quam speciosa forma. Sed non sic hominibus. quod ibi carnalis pul-chritudo maior non erat nisi ut ordinatio perfunde sapientie constituit formam hominis. quia pater et filius et spiritus sanctus unus deus in tribus personis. non delectatur in pulchritudine carnis. sed in magna humilitate. ut idem fi-lius dei se induit humanitate. In forma autem eiusdem filii hominis non erat ulla maculositas. ut aliquando disfunditur homo molesta facie indiueritate corporum. quod est in iudicio dei. scilicet cum membra hominis diuisa sunt non recte ordinata ut debilius. quod non est secundum naturam formationis in corpore hominis sed secundum iudicium dei.

Et fortis quidē natura existit inrecta formatione infirma autē defluit in diuersitate formationis comparie forme. qđ n̄ erat opus huic homini filio meo. S; in quā magna diuersi tate sunt hoīes in suis m̄bris ita qđ ipsi s̄ nigri. fedi. polluti. leprosi. idro pici et pleni uicis habentes etiā ru biginē malefici in suasionē diabo lice arūs. et insipientes. & duri uide re bona dñi. et accusandi atq; cul pandi de mul. ta obliuione. qđ iusticiā debuerūt opari et opant. malu. ac dimittunt. bo nū. despicientes crucē et martiriū dñi sui. d̄s pat̄ inspicit tam in inuen tione sue bonitatis factū opus de limo. sicut pat̄ respicit ad filios su os dū eos eleuat in sinū suū. Et quō ipse d̄s ē. habet patris dilectionē ad filios suos. Tali m̄ ē enī sibi utri or dilectio cordis ad homines. qđ filii suū misit ad crucē. quasi agnū mansuetū qui portat ad uictimā occidendus. ita qđ idē filiū reporta uit p̄dita ouē quā tulit sup hume rū suū assumpta humanitate. in mag nis eā portans dolorib; cū dignat est mori p̄ uicib; suis. In eisdē autē hominib; s̄ multi circūdati cū or namentis. qui decorati s̄ p̄cioso orna tu uirtutū. qui s̄ martýres. uirgi nes. innocentes. et penitentes. ac sub iecti magistris suis ut p̄dictū est. et qui sibi ipsis consen s̄ in crimi nib; suis. in his se cruciantes cū in expugnabili certamine. dū negant in semetipsis qđ s̄. lbi n̄ ē dicendū qui s̄ uel ubi s̄ decti. nā om̄s cōpu tan s̄. Quis ē cui possibile sit uidere in profunda sapientiā altissimi. et indiscretionē scientie ei? quid ipse habeat in numero numeratox. In cō phensibilia s̄ iudicia ei om̄ib; homi nib; Jobis currendū ē. q̄a paratū ē uobis regnū dī. Nā scdm studiū fi deliū opantiū iusticiā dī qui s̄ ab lim in baptismo cognitaq; infide. talis etiā merces erit eox. Quod au tē uidet qđ de sedente in throno prendit magnus circulus auri coloris ut aurora. cui amplitudi nē nullom̄ cōphendere potes. hoc est qđ ab omnipotente patre exten ditur fortissima potestas. et firmis simū opus ei om̄a cōphendens in potentia ipsius cū qua ē opans in filio suo. quē semp in maiestate di uinitatis apud se habuit. p̄ cū or dinans ac p̄ficiens om̄a opa sua an te mundū. et immundo ab initio. qui pulcherrimi fulgoris uelut aurora rubet. quia idē filius in sa pientissima uirgine qm̄ aurora significat incarnatus ē in spiratio ne digni dī. qui sp̄s sc̄s ē. in quo etiā factū ē om̄e opus patris. Hui' gl̄e circutū nulla ratione cōphendere uales. q̄a nec ipsius potestati nec opi ulla ē m̄sura ullius bonitatis uel potestatis ad illā mensurā quē sit uel fuerit uel fieri debeat in ulla creatura. nisi qđ d̄s ē inestimabi lis et in cōphensibilis in potestate.

s. viii.

s.
s.
s.
s.

s.
s.

x. sua et inuictus ac mirabilis in ope suo. Et idē circulus girans ab ori ente ad septentrionē et ad occiden tē atq; ad meridiē se reflectendo ad orientē ad ipsū sedentē in thro no nec habens ullū finē. hoc ē qđ potestas ac opus dī circueunt cō p̄hendendo omnē creaturā. Quo modo. In uoluntate patris qui cū filio et spū scō d̄s unus ē or̄e s̄ om̄s creature. que om̄s sentiunt eū in potestate. Quomodo. Om̄s s̄ eū in creatione sentiunt. scilicet girantē ab orientē qđ ē in ortu om̄s iusticie et tendentē ad septentrio nē in confusionē diaboli. et ad oc cidentē ubi tenebre mortis luce uitę uolunt opprimere luce tam merū resurgente de uicta tenebra rū caligine. et ad meridiē ubi ar dens ardor ē iusticie dī in cordib; fidelū. sic se recuruando ad ortū iusticie quasi ad orientē. Quid ē hoc. Dū p̄sumā potestātē opus dī scđm p̄ordinatū ad dō tēpus cōple tū fuerit in hominib; in mundo. tunc etiā implebit̄ circulus eīdē mundi p̄fectus in fine tēporis cū nouissimo die. et refulgebunt in sedentē in throno om̄a opa sua in electis ei n̄ habentē finē. quia d̄s in teger ē in potestate ac in ope suo. qui erat et ē & p̄manebit absq; ulla inceptuone ulli tēporis indi uinitate. ita qđ n̄ fuerit sed est.

xj. Et qđ idē circulus ē aīa tamē altitudinis ut eā cōp̄hendere n̄ possis. hoc ē qđ sup̄na potestas ita excelsa ē sup̄ om̄s uitas creaturarū in sensu et intellectu hoīs et ita in cō p̄hensibilis in om̄ib; & sup̄ om̄a. qđ nulla creatura eā poterit finire ul lo capaci sensu. nisi ipsa sit multo altior quā ei sciendū sit. Unde etiā angli frequentē sonant d̄m in laudib; ipsi enī uident eū in sua potestate et gl̄a. s; n̄ possunt eū p̄fecte intueri quasi ad finē. nec umquā ualent sa turari tā magni tudine quā pulchritudine ei. Quod autē ex se reddit splen dore ualde tribile scilicet lapidei cali bei et ignei coloris. hoc ē qđ diui na potestas ex se demonstrat uir tutē in magna seueritate contra dissimulatā et in penitentē ac in puniā iniquitatē formidabile. et uelut calibei. qđ d̄s ē p̄spicua iusticia que n̄ habet ullā iusticiā cedentis molliciei quom̄ puluis. ut dicūt hoc iniustū iustū ē. qđ dō n̄ placet. s; ipse ē illa iusticia que quasi calibe confirmat omnē re liquā iusticiā. que multo fragilior ē iusticia ipsius. quā ferrū calibe sit. & etiā quasi ignei. qđ ipse ē iu dicialis ignis cōburens peccatū in omni iniusticia que se nūquā de clinare uolunt ad illū querens mi diam ei. Et etiā d̄s quasi lapis in homine. quō ipse ē uerus et iustus absq; ulla mutatione. qđ ut lapis in mollicie n̄ potest conueri. ita n̄ habet ille ullā mutationē. et ē uelut calibz scilicet in pspicuitate ptansiens om̃a absq; ulla mutatio ne ullius tēporis. q̃a ipse ē d̃s sup om̃a. existens enā q̃si ignis. quō in flamat et incendit & illuminat om̃a absq; uicissitudine p̃bati tē poris innouate quia ipse d̃s est.

Et q̃d idē splendor undiq; sedm̃. xiiij. amplitudinē suā sursum in altu tudinē celi et deorsū in profundū abyssi nā se extendit. ut nullū fi nē ei uidere possis. hoc ē q̃d uirtus potestatis ac. p̃peris d̃i et iusticia atq; rectissimū iudiciū ei ubiq; in incōphensibilitate sua nec in supio rib; celi nec in inferiorib; abyssi ullū finē habet. qui cōphendi pos sit humano sensu. Vides enā. xiiij. de secreto ei dē sedentis in throno stellā magnā multū splendoris ac decoris p̃dire. & cū ea plurimam multitudinē candentū scintilla rū. quia p̃cepto om̃ip̃s patris lu cifer ang̃ls qui nē ē satanas in ortu suo magna gl̃a ornatus. et multa claritate ac decore uestit p̃dit. et cū eo om̃s scintille sui agminis. tunc candentes in lu cis fulgore nē autē extincte in caliginis tenebrositate. Qui p̃ admalū nā aspexit in me integrū. s; estimabat confidens in se ipsū posse incipere q̃d uellet et p̃ficere q̃d inciperet. Unde q̃d sedenti in throno debebat honoris q̃a p̃eū creatus ē. hoc retrorsit in se ipsū. atq; cū hoc declinabat se ad malū. Quod uero cū eadē stella om̃s confluentes ad austrū inspie bant. ipsū sedentē in throno quasi alienū. seq; ab eo auerentes magis inhiabant ad aquilonē. quā cū in spicere uellent. hoc ē q̃d idē luci fer om̃sq; conuictus illi mirabiliter creatus in ardente bono d̃i constituit. quasi p̃bliquū in supbia uidelicet dedignans regnantē in celo. quia ipsi om̃s ortu in creatione ab initio gustauerūt impietate que ad p̃dmo nē se uertit. d̃m inspicentes n̄ sic q̃d eū scire uellent in bonitate. s; q̃d se sup eū uelut sup alienū uellent ele uare. cū flagrante scilicet elatione se a cognitione ei auerentes. et plus tendentes ad casū suū. q̃m d̃m in gl̃a sua cognoscere desiderarent.

 S; q̃d statim in ipsa auersione in spectionis sue om̃s extincte s; sic uer se in ignem carbonū. hoc ē d̃m supbe dedignarent scire. ipse lucifer cū om̃ib; sequentib; se in ma licia sua extinctus ē a fulgore clari splendoris cū quo p̃diuinā poten cia inditus erat. decerpens in se ipso interiorē pulcritudinē qua debuit conscius ē ab bonū. et se porrigens ad deglucientē se im pietatē. ita extinctus ē in et̃na cla ritate cadens in et̃nā p̃dmonē. Unde om̃s uersi s; in ignem carbonū. ignis carbonū. quia cū duce suo scilicet diabolo exuta claritate sui splendoris. sic extincti s; in p̃ dmonē tenebrositatis. carentes omni glā beatitudinis. ut carbo ab igne sue ignee scintille. Qd autē uenit turbis ortus ē ab ipsis q̄ cas mox ab austro retro eundē se dentē in trono p̄ceat ad aquilo nē p̄cipitatis in abyssū. ita ut ca rū amplius nullā uidere ualeres. hoc ē qd maximus flatus impie tatis erexit se in istis anglis iniquita tis cū dō uellent p̄ualere & cū p supbiā obprimere. q̄ se sufflauit in amarissimā nigredinē p̄dmo nis. et eos de austro idē de bono p̄ceat retrorsū. qd ē in obliuionē dī cuncta regentis q̄si ad p̄tē aq̄ lo. nart. ut ubi supbe exaltari uole bant. ibi confusi casū inuenirent. p̄p̄t supbiā suā p̄cipitanti in abyssū mortis ēne que p̄dicio ipsoz ē. ita ut in nulla claritate amplius uide amur. ut p̄seruū meū chechiel salui meridiano q̄ardentē fructū iusticie ferre debuit et n̄ attulit. locutus sū dicens. Ecce ego suc cendā in te ignē. & cōburā in te omne lignū uiride & omne lignū aridū. Non extinguet flāma suc censionis. & cōburet in ea omīs fa cies ab austro usq; ad aquilonē. Et uidebit omīs caro q̄a ego dñs suc cendi eā. nec extinguetur. Hoc ta le ē. Ostendit qui in supbia tua te crexisti contra me. ego qui nec ini tiū nec finē habeo. faciā ut in helo meo accendat in te ignis indignati omīs mee p̄que cōburā in te om nē uiriditātē illā quā uoluisti incipere in falsa uiriditate. magis confidens in te quā in me. quia ar ripuisti in tua insana scientia ēē sedm supbiā tuā. cōburāq; in te omnē ariditātē illā p̄dmo. cum peccatū in bono aridū. suggeris homini qui cinis ē. q̄a suggestio tua n̄ recipiet in te ulla saluatio nē. s; fiet in te ignis ēnus. Nec ē ul la remuneratio salutaris tibi. nec il us qui te sequunt in exemplo tuo.

 Et n̄ extinguet illa succensio pena rū in supplicis suis. s; cōburet p̄ci p̄tē supbiā. quasi in facie deside rabilis aspectus honoris. que aspect isti uelle habere in te in te ipso. q̄ cecidit es ab omni glā tua. ab au stro scilicet surgens in ardente clarissima luce et cadens in tene bras aquilonis. idē inferni. Et hoc uidebit omīs homo. uideli cet electi et repbi cognoscentes ge hennā. quō electi eā cognoscent. quia ipsā effugerūt. repbi autē quō cū ea in penis p̄manebunt. scientes q̄a ego dñs om̄ps succendi eā. ad retributionē maloz tuoz di abole. nec extinguet malis tuis nec sequentiū te. Et sic p̄dicio dia bolice supbie. p̄ceat eundē sata nan et anglos et in exteriores tene bras et nox torm̄toz sine ulla con solatione luminis. ita ut illi nul lus sit locus inuentus in cōmo lu mine. ut et tu o fragilis homo ex ultra nihil conspiciere potuisti. sicut etiā idē chechiel in spū meo rv.

717 regi tui submissa significatione dicit. Omnes qui uiderunt te in gentibus. obstupescunt super te. Nichil factus es. et non eris in perpetuum. Hoc tale est. Omnes recti corde qui uiderunt te diabole inebriatum uiculis illis gentibus. qui te amplectantur in peruicatione legis dei. arescunt obstu-pescunt in tua sorde quomodo pollutus suggestionem tuam templum in edificatione dei. quod hoc est. Et propterea nichil factus es per superbiam tuam in qua cecidisti ab omni gloria saluationis. quia non omnino ullus uigor est in ulla felicitate. et non eris in uentus ulla gloriam amplius habens in eternitate celestium. quia tu confusus es in illis in-perpetuum sine fine. Sed quod splendor illi magnus qui est abstractus est. uidisti subito in carum extinctionem ne reuera ad ipsum sedentem in throno. hoc est quod perspicuus et magnus ful-gor quem diabolus propter superbiam et contumaciam suam perdidit. cum ipsum et omnes sequaces eius in uentem germinem mortis quomodo idem lucifer purioris erat luminis quam ceteri angeli re-uersus est ad deum patrem seruatus in secreto eius. quia gloria splendoris il-lius non debuit esse uacua sed deus seruauit eam alteri facere luci. Nam quem deus nudum surgere iussit. atque non cooptum carne qui diabolus est cum omni comitatu suo sicut tamen in splen-dore clarum illius splendorem seruauit limbo quem formauit homi-nem regens ipsum uilissima natura tunc. propterea ne se extolleret in si-militudinem dei. quia quem clarum creauit auerat in multo fulgore sed non coop-tum tam fragili et tam misera forma ut est homo. hic non potuit stare in elatio-ne sua. quia non est nisi uisus deus sine initio et sine fine in eternitate. Ac ideo sceleratissimum est peccatis criminibus. qui se deo simulat. Nunc autem ego deus celestis seruauit illustre lumen quod secessit a diabolo propter malum eius hoc diligenter abscondens apud me. et dedi illud limbo tunc. quem formaui ad imaginem et si-militudinem meam. sicut aliquis homo facit cum filiis eius mortem. cui non adheret hereditas inanis ipsius quia non habet filios hereditatis. eandem hereditatem adhibere sibi patet et componit eam in matrem suam alii filio suo non dum sibi nato. dantes eam illi cum natus fuerit ex ipso. xxv.

Nam diabolus cecidit absque herede quod est in recta intentione bonum opus. quia nunquam aliquid boni fecit nec incepit. et ab hoc accepit alius hereditatem ipsius. qui etiam cecidit. habens tamen herede scilicet in conceptione obedi-entiae. quomodo eam suscepit cum deuotio-ne. quam uis opus ad hoc puniens non perficeret. sed gratia dei perficit idem opus in incarnatione saluatoris populi in restaurationem bone hereditatis. Atque ideo recepit homo hereditatem suam in christo. quia non dedignatus est in initio preceptum pceptū dī cū omīno diabolus n̄ de siderauit seruitiū creatoris sui in bo no s; honore in supbia. unde n̄ rece pit glām suā s; puit in p̄dione. xviii.

Et sicut goliath surrexit ad de speciū dauid. ita crexit se diabo lus in p̄supuone in semetipso. uolens similis ē altissimo. Et ut idē goliath in seius uirtū dauid cū prorsus p nichilo cōputans uilipendit. sic constructa supbia diaboli comēp sit humilitatē in humanitate filii dī. qui in mundo natus n̄ glām suā s; glām patris p omīa quesuit.
Quomodo. Diabolus n̄ desiderauit tangere hoc exemplū. quatinus se subderet suo creatori. ut se filiū dī subdidit suo patri. At tamē da uid amputauit caput goliath in secreta fortitudine dī. ut spū scō inspirante scriptū ē. Assumens au tē dauid caput philisti attulit illud in ierlm. arma uero ei posuit intabernaculo suo. Hoc tale est.
Spolia et direptiones diaboli ac cepit fortissimū filius m̄s. cū deie cit caput ei dē serpentis antiqui.
ubi. In uero uirginis. que hoc caput contriuit. Per que. P̄ eundē filiū suū. Que ē hec contricio. Sca humilitas. que in matre & filio apparet. p̄cussit primū iniciū supbie. qd ē caput diaboli. Et sic ipse filius m̄s attulit cū humilitate in suo corpore idē caput in scām ecclām. que ē uisio pacis. et osten dens p̄ eundē fortissimā humilita tē. qd m̄fecta ē supbia diaboli. fortissima uero arma ipsius. s; obice ta ei uicia cū quib; ille supauit gen humanū. qd cū colunt p̄dō. ipse il lud exērens in uiciis suis. ut arma exērent homines. Hec confregit fi lius m̄s. ponens ea intabernaculo suo idē in passionē corporis sui. dū pateret in cruce. Unde ipsā pug nā dimisit etiā intabernaculis. scilicet in corporib; electōr m̄bro suor. ut et ipsi distribuant arma diaboli cū ipso. Quom. It̄ sicut ip se deuicit diabolu in passionē sua. sic et ipsi eū deuincant se constrin gentes in desideris suis. et n̄ sint consentientes uiciis illi. Et scdm si militudinē hanc. ut glā goliath data ē dauid. ita glām que abla ta ē primo angelo dedi adē et ge neri ei qd confitē me seruans p̄cepta mea. interēpta supbia di aboli. Qui autē acutas aures in terioris intellectus habet hic in ardente amore speculi mei ad uerba hec anbelet. et ea in consci entia animi sui conscribat.

utra ambū circuli qui p̄tende batur de eodē sedente in throno Sola uisio sede partis.

quasi montē magnū coniunctū ra dici illius in mōsi lapidis sup quē cū nube thronus ei dē sedentis positus erat: ita qd idē lapis in altitudinem erectus: et qd idē mons in latitudinē extensus videbat. Et sup ipsū montē stabat uelut qddā edificium quadran gulū ad similitudinē urbis qua drangule factū. Aliq̄ntulūq; in ob liquū positū: ita qd ei angulus un⁹ respiciebat ad orientē: ^{alius ad occidentē} et unus ad septentrionē et alius ad meridie. Idē autē edificium in circuitu suo murū unū duorū generū habebat: quorū genus unū erat quasi splendor lu cidus ut lux diei ē et alterū quasi conpaginatio lapidū adinuicē coniuncta in angulo orientali et in angulo septentrionali: ita ut illa lucida pars muri p̄tenderet ab angulo orientali et finiret in angulo septentrionali: tota inte gra et n̄ habens ullū locū int̄ruptū.
 Et illa alia scilicet lapidea pars extenderet ab angulo septentrio nali ad angulū occidentālē et ad angulū meridianū: et finiret in angulo orientali: habens duo loca int̄rupta: inter angulū uidelicet occidentālē et angulū meridianū.
 Longitudo autē ei dē edificii erat: centū cubitorū: et latitudo ei q̄nqua ginta cubitorū: et altitudo ipsius quinquaginta cubitorū: et altitu do ipsius quinq; cubitorū: ita ut ei duo parietes in utroq; latere ipsius essent un⁹ longitudinis: et alii ip sius duo parietes in fronte et in fine ei unus latitudinis S; et idē quatuor parietes ubiq; in circuitu ipsius edifi cii equalis erant altitudinis: exceptus p̄pugnaculis ei: quē aliq̄ntulū em nebant altitudinē ipsius. Latitudo autē int̄ ipsū edificium et splendorē ex p̄dicto circulo se in p̄fundū abyssi extendentē erat in uertice orienta lis anguli un⁹ palmi: alibi autē idē in septentrionali et in occidentali atq; in meridiana parte tanta un diq; erat latitudo inter idē edificium et eundē splendorē: ut ei ampli tudinē nullom̄ cōphendere possem.

 Et hec me admirante: qui sedebat in throno iterū dixit ad me. Primū uides quē in antiquis sc̄is cū uoce iusticie p̄ bonitatē patris de sup edificato uelut in pallore apparuit: incarnato dī filio apta manifestatione cū ardentib; opib; ardentē in lucē p̄cessit: q̄ndo idē filius dī caduca n̄ concupiscens: ea exemplo suo conculcari et eccle sia amari p̄docuit: cū priores par tes mundū n̄ fugientes: nec se ab eo separantes: dīm simplici tantū cre dultate et humili deuotione co lebant: q̄a n̄ dū ut om̄a descreuerit eis ostensū fuerat. Unde tuā qd ui des in qua ambitū circuli qui p̄ten dit de sedente in throno montē magnū coniunctū radici illius in mōsi lapidis sup quē cū nube thro nus ei dē sedentis positus ē: ita qd idē lapis in altitudinē erectus: et quod idem mons in latitudine extensus uidetur: hoc est quod in potentia ac for-ope potestatis superni patris quod po-tentia operatur stat mons significans fide que magna est in uirtute palamque surgens in circuncisione abrahe et in perficiens usque in filium eiusdem superni dei post ruinam serpentis antiqui per spiritum sanctum inspirata hominibus quatinus in bonitate patris fideliter ¹¹¹ operantes illum credant omnipotentem esse deum qui tam magnam hostem supra re potuit: ita ut per eandem credulitatem subleuati ad gloriam illam pungantur de qua idem diabolus ob super-biam suam deiectus est. A tunc idem mons posuit est ad radicem predicti in muni lapidis mysterium timoris domini habemus: quia fides coniuncta est stabilitati timoris domini et timor domini etiam fortitudini fidei: scilicet cum de patre missus est filius nasci ex uirgine et cum de eodem filio pullabat ue-ra fides primum fundamentum boni operis: quam timor domini perfert cum omnibus uirtutibus tangens deum in altitudi-ne sua: ita ut in sapientia fidelium mentium deus super omnia regnans fide-liter colatur. Quomodo? Quomodo timor domini secreta celi uisu circumspectionis acute penetrat quia ipse inuicem in-sit intentionis est: cum qua etiam beata fides apud deum in latitudine perfectionis tendit cum in bonis operibus ad sententiam dilatat. Sed quod super ¹¹¹ ipsum montem stat edificium quadran-gulum ad similitudinem urbis qua diangule factum: hoc est quod super fide bonitas patris bona opera edificans multos fidelium per quatuor angulos terre colligens trahit ad celestia: sic munitos in stabilitate uirtutum: ut idem celestis pater in sinu suo quod est in interiori potestate et in mystico consilio suo eos benigne componat cum quatuor quadris in fide. Quomodo? ¹¹¹ Ego scilicet altissimum ordinem in ope meo primum quadrum hominum uidelicet adam cui genus ipso reposito per magnam scissam debilitans processit usque ad secundum quadrum idem ad noe ubi diluuium factum est ubi et mysteria filii mei in archa premonstrauimus. Sed in eodem quadro qui est noe per admonitionem meam manifestauimus illam lucidam partem muri predicti edificii: quia ibi in diluuium suffocans peccato-res innumeros hominibus: ut mortem fugerent et uitam appeterent: sic eis palam aperiens speculatiua scientiam duarum optionis causarum. Quid est hoc? Homo uiuet et uiget in uiuente uita que anima est per quam speculat et cognoscit duas semitas uidelicet bonum et malum: quomodo homo tangit hac alterutra parte ita quod manens in corpore bonum siue malum cum anima et corpore operatur quod ipse incipit per optionem animi sui uoluntatem suam ita complens in ope: et sic in noe ostensa est per admonitionem meam speculatiua scientia duarum optionis causarum: scilicet acutissima coninfortimon diligere q cūctom

 tant di rati et m fione et na penle se trum mlio di nificom trus gen ceta qui hominu
 ad pte ade ab reauram hominu
 cu aliq hoc qd rest p mter f ne tim supando lter de mter f deliter et sic
 in angulo rti e gnt in luf un aluf ad septem
 hoc qd gnt et tu m uita cui om

sideratione malū spernere & bonū diligere: que ita cū cōmissione circūcisionis tendit in p̄cursu uoluntatis dī usq; ad t̄m quadrū ubi abrahā et moyses ē iuncti s̄ in circūcisione & lege: que circūcisio et lex ita p̄cedebat usq; ad q̄rtū quadrū scē trinitatis ubi uetus testamētū in filio dī finitū ē cū exteriori significatione: unde etiā surrexit interius germ̄ p̄ eundē filiū dī in ecclā qui natus et passus p̄ salutē hominū: resurgens etiā et rediens ad patrē angulū illū qui in casu ade absconsus et adtenuatus erat: restaurauit in saluationē p̄ aīas hominū. Quod autē idē edificū aliq̄ntū ē in obliquū posuit: hoc ē qd homo qui opus dī ē n̄ potest p̄ fragilitate sua incedere firmiter sine peccato et audacter sine timore fragilis carnis diabolu supando: s̄ cū oportet illū humiliter deitare et insidias ei sapienter fugere ne peccet atq; se fideliter coniungere bonis opib; et sic constare in filio dī: qui q̄si in angulo sedens lapis angularis ē: ita etiā opus electū coniungens in homine. Sed qd anglus unus respicit ad orientē et alius ad occidentē et unus ad septentrionē & alius ad meridiē: hoc ē qd filius dī natus ē ex uirgine et passus in carne ut in mortu iusticie homo restauraret ad uitā: cui omīs iusticia appositā ē qd ē angulus orientalis: inde surgente saluatione animarū ut d̄s cōpleuit in eodē filio suo omne iusticiā que ab abel usq; in ipsū filiū dī p̄figurata ē in q̄ finita ē constitutio carnalis obseruationis ueteris testamētī: ita ueniente salute fidelū hominū p̄fide quā idē filius dī attulit missus a patrē in mundū in fine temporis: qd ē angulus occidentalis: contra diabolu quoq; in abrahā et in moysē deiciunt se iusticia: qui in ea p̄monstrabant p̄missā grām p̄ quā homo saluatus ē que diabolus decepit occidendo cū ut latro in lapsu ade qd ē angulus septentrionalis: unde et miserabilis ac mortalis casus qui factus ē in humano genere postea p̄ supnā grām nobiliter et eleganter restauratus ē pleno fructu in ardente ope dī et hōis qd ē angulus meridionalis. Angulus etiā meridionalis ē: qd primus homo adā ad dō creatus ē: s̄ qd ab eodē angulo speculatiua sciencia duarū optionis causarū n̄ incipit fulgere: hoc ē qd ab ipso adā genus suū incōpositū erat n̄ colens d̄m in sciencia sua officiali seruare legē: s̄ tantū p̄pria uoluntate suā adimplens cū summo malo: ita ut nec in recta sciencia dī nec in uera beatitudine c̄t: fulgens imo in morte iacens: s̄ absconsū erat tantū in corde patris qd cū vij.

duarum opinionis causarum. quō eandē scientiā.

homine facere uellet. Angulus etiā in oriente designat. nec ubi se iusticia ostendere incepit. et ibi etiā apte manifestata ē p̄mon strata speculatiua scientia ostē dens omnē sc̄ntatē. que posita in filio dī p̄ficienda erat. et quia unaqueq; iusticia in filio dī qui est uerus oriens erat incipiens. idō ē hoc edificiū primū appel landū ad orientē ~~in honore~~ in ho nore sc̄ntatis que primū etiā in noc ueraciter declarata ē Angu lus quoq; in septentrione ē abrahā et moyses. qui aduersus satanam cū opante ope p̄dictā speculatiua scientiā coopiebant. quasi eā cir cū edificarent cū p̄ciosis lapidib; et cū desup aurato ope p̄spicue iusticie dī qd erat circūcisio et lex. quia iusticia ante circūcisio nē et legē q̄si nuda erat absq; ope. et quartus angulus occiden talis p̄figurat etiā uerā trinita tē. que palā manifestata ē in bap tismo saluatoris. qui erat ple nā et sc̄am ciuitatē ierlm cū om ni ope suo recurrentis ad eclū. in saluatione animarū. Sed qd ipsū edificiū in circuitu suo murū unū duorū generū ha bet. quorū genus unū ē quasi splendor lucidus ut lux diei. et alterū quasi cōpaginatio lapidū adinuicē coniuicta in angulo orientali et in angulo septentrionali. hoc ē qd p̄boni tatē patris hominib; ex omī parte data ē quasi securitas una idē munio et defensio in bonis opib; quatinus ipsis circūdati et con fortati carnales concupiscentias deserant. eādunū dīm qui mun mentū eorū cōfugiant. Qui mu rus in duob; generib; quia uelut unū genus muri ē speculatiua scientiā. in acutissima et certissi ma exquisitione speculationis animi sui homo habet. ut sit cir cūspectus in omnib; causis suis. et etiā uelut aliud genus muri. ē ci nera caro hoīs. quia ad dō creatus est homo. opans factū opus in opa tione. Et hec speculatiua scien tia lucet in splendore lucis diei. quō p̄cā homines actus suos uidēt et considerant. qd splendidus ra dius ē humane m̄tis se caute cir cūspiciētis. quia in homine ap paret hec p̄clara scientia ut can dida nubes pambulans m̄tes po puloꝝ in celeritate sicut et nu bes defluit in aere. lucensq; ut lux diei. quō ipsa candida de clarat p̄p̄t splendidissimū op̄ qd d̄s. benigne opat in homi nib; scilicet ut cū ipsi de uitam malū p̄ficiant bonū. qd in eis quasi lux diei lucet. In ipsa q̄q; scientia p̄cedit unū qd q; opus in homine. Quomodo. Homo habet duas uias. Quom̄. Ipse ē sciens bonū atq; malū. cū sensi bilitate. Qui dū transit de malo

viii.

opando bonū. imitat dñm. faciens bonū in ipso qui iustus ē. nolens iniusticiā. S. dñs opat malū impli-cat p contrarietē diaboli in peccatū. cū n̄ uult se continere. nisi semet illū in uinculo malorū opv. quō diabolus querit iniquitatē fugiens scitātē. Si autē homo abstra-hit se a malo et opat bonū. tunc sus-cipit cū sūma bonitas. quia se ipsū ppter amorē dī supauit. qui filiū suū tradidit p eo in mortē crucis.
Unde etiā sciētia hec ē speculatiua quia ipsa ē quasi speculū hoc m̄. quō ut homo aspiciat faciē suā in speculo utrū sit in ea pulchritudo animae uel tristitia. sic inspicit ipse in sciētia bonū et malū in facto ope qd considerat intra se. qā hec consideratio ē in rationali sensū quē dñs spirauit in hominē. ⁱⁱⁱ cū faciē ei spirauit spiraculū uite in anima. Nā uiuere pccorū deficit quia rationale n̄ ē. anima autē hominis nūquā deficit qā in cōnū uiuet quō rationalis ē. unde etiā homo sentit inconsideratione boni et mali qd opus sit contrariū uel electū. p grām dī formatū et inspiratū rationali sensu in ortu creationis suē illa grā cū iterū restaurante in elec-tione baptismi. et in saluatione anime noui testimonii. ut dic paulus amantissimū m̄s de eadē electione grē. Reliquē scdm electionē grē saluē facte s. Si

120 autē grā. iā n̄ ex opib. Alioquin grā iā n̄ ē grā. Hoc tale ē. Reliquē quos laqueus mortis n̄ cōphēndit. ne se declinent post exem-plū diaboli. ille saluē facte s cū apta saluatione dñs dñs misit filiū suū incarnari. qd ē electio grē p saluē manifestata hominū.
Quomodo. Grā dī constituit ho-minē. s. ille lapsus ē in prauis opibus. Tunc ostensa ē electio grē in electo uase. cū ex uirgine filius dī natus ē. in quo n̄ erat licitū fieri ullū lapsū. Nā si quispiā homo sibi facit aliquā uitē rē quē ip-si ab alio abstrahit. tunc eligit sibi aliā uitiorē quā ei nullus demat. et in qua ipse pleniter habundet. Sic fecit grā dī. Ipsa formauit adā primū hominē. quē diabolus abstraxit ab innocentia opis. S. eadē grā fecit postea plenitudinem bonorū opū p filiū dī. in saluatione animarū. Si autē grā dī fecit saluationē. tunc saluatio n̄ ē facta ex merito opū hominū. Quomō-do. Iusticia opis deficit in adā. ita qd homo nūquā rediret in saluationē p merita opū suorū nisi recuparet p eandē grām inui-sissimo filio dī p opa ipsius. scilicet qd obediens factus ē patri suo. et nisi etiā homo mundaretur p baptismū qd idē filidī tradidit hominib. cū bono ope. quod opus grā dī opat cū homine et homo idē opus cū illa. Idōq; ē grā dī cū hoc opē et hoc opus ortū ē de grā. Qd si saluatio ēēt ex merito hominū et rectū opus hominis ēēt pprīū a se ipso. ita qd grā dī opus illud nō accenderet. tūc grā nō ēēt grā.

Quomodo. Tūc ēēt homo a se ipso et nā dō. et nulla creatura referret gratias dō. et grā dī ni chil ēēt. Nunc autē grā dī consti tuit hominē rationalitē sub nixū ut iusticiā opē in sciētia boni et mali quatinus de sciē tia ista appetat bonū abiciens malū. & ut sic cognoscat uitā et mortē. p hoc eligens in qua parte remanere desideret. ut salomon dicit in intellectu sapi entie. A pposui tibi aquā et ignē. ad qd uolueris porrigere ma nū tuā. Hoc tale ē. Ds apponit homini in prima suscitacione anime uim magnā et acutā ui delicet puidētiā malō et bo norū. que s aqua & ignis. S; si cū aqua semp inundat & celat in se multa mortifera animalia plurimaq; inutilia. ita ē etiā ho mo inundans in malis factis su is celans ea nō diuulget. Et ut etiā ignis urit nō pferens intra se ul lam indignationē in cōbustā & ut faber puriora facit monilia sua ablata rubigine. sic etiā bonū facit hominē purū eucl iens ab eo rubiginē nequicie.

Nā aqua et ignis dissentiunt. sus focantes & necantes se inuicē. Sic etiā facit homo. In malo necat bo nū. et in bono necat malū. atq; in utroq; semp occultat intra se silentē sua desideria hac & illac uersans ea.
Et in ipsa cōmouione desideriorū habet optionē uoluntatis il lius causē quā desiderat & ad hanc uertit se cū uoluntate opīs quasi manū ad hoc porrigendo. scilicet bonū opus pficiens adiu uante dō p grām et malū pagens insidiamē diabolo. p suggestio nē artū suarū. ipso homine hec inspiciente in sciētia rationali tatis. Nā in eadē sciētia inspicit bonū et malū. & inde orit in ip so desiderū optionis de duab; causis boni uidelicet et mali scdm uoluntatē ipsi. Quid ē hoc.
Optio ē qd homo uidet in deside rio animi sui quasi in speculo res aliquas dicens intra se unā posse illud uel illud facere ad qd nō dū accedit populus. s; habet illud in sciētia sua. posuit qsi incapite duarū uiarū qd ē sciē tiā habens duarū causarū idē boni et mali. & ita scdm deside riū suū tendit. ^{tandem} ad opus illud sursū siue deorsū. Et alterū genus muri qd uidet quasi cō pagnationē lapidū ostendens genus humanū. designat etiā rectas instructiones que surrex erunt in mīb; hominū. ut in xj.

xij.

x

x

abrahā et in moyse ac in ceteris qui pcedens germen erant legis dī cū omnib; apendens iusticie dī in lege usq; in nouissimū tēpū.
 Quomodo. Scilicet qd opus dī ē in homine et p hominē. ita qd dī misit filiū suū ppter saluatiōē hominū in fine legis sine peccato. et opantē in humano corpore atq; ponentē fundamentū fidei sup semetipsū. hoc modo qd portauit genus humanū cū primo homine cecido de paradiso ppter puaricationē iusticie. faciens omē hoc mirabile in homine plegē suā. ubi cōphendit xpianā cohortē que hec edificatio ē in bonitate patris. qd homo ponendus ē in celesti ierlm. Vnde et ipsa genera in unū coadunata s in parte orientis et septentrionis. quō in speculatiua sciētia et in humano ope ē cōmunis finis in iusticie. in qua genus humanū erat in obliuionē dī implicatū que se erexit primū ab adā cū insana iniusticia ante diluuiū. ita qd ipsa depssa ē cū cōmuni plebe ppter magnā iniquitatē in diluuio aquarū. ubi eadē speculati-ua sciētia apparere incepit p inspirationē meā cū sciētia boni in noe. ut in angulo oriē-tali. sicut pdictū ē. S; quāuis se in noe ammonitio dī erexit. tamen ceruix et appetitus mali in recordatione ipsius pcessit ouant ad aquilonē. ita qd iniqtas scismatis contra dīm n̄ ē concu-cata usq; ad abrahā. in quo suffo-cata ē ut in angulo septentrionali. cū in eo orta ē acutissima acies iusticie dī. Quod uero illa lucida pars muri p̄tendit ab angulo ori-entali et finit in angulo septentri-onali. tota integra et n̄ habens ullū locū int̄ruptū. hoc ē qd speculatiua sciētia in immutacione mentū hominū ab angulo oriē-tali idē adieb; noe incepit appa-rere. cū prius ante noe studebat iniquitas hoc adimplere qd ppetrare posset in irrisione dī. hominib; uidelicet magis concupiscencias suas sequentib; quā cultū dī amantib; qā primū genus hominū ab adā ubi speculatiua sciētia absconsa erat de-glutiuit diabolus in omī uoluntate sua usq; ad noe in quo eadē sciētia apte ostensa ē ut p̄dictū ē. cū tamen adhuc confidebat diabolus. qd ēē habiturus omne genus humanū in suo p-cepto. iniquitate ita pcedente usq; ad angulū septentrionale. hoc ē ad abrahā et moyse. quō ante eos in speculatiua sciētia erat iniquitas qsi integrā sua nequicia. et n̄ dū int̄rupta aut contra p̄constitutā iusticiā legis dī. qā nec dū circūcisio aut lex data fuerat. in quib; tamen patrib; idē diabolus in

s

s

s

s

s

s

s

s

s

s

s

s

s

s

s

s

s

s

s

s

s

s

s

s

s

s

s

s

s

s

s

s

s

s

s

s

s

s

s

s

s

s

s

s

s

s

s

s

xv.

cepit confundi. cū prius quasi confidenter in mundo regnaret. sicut dicit paulus in eū lucidū uas electiōis. Regnauit mors ab adā usq; ad moysen etiā in eos qui nō peccauerūt in similitudinē p̄uaricationis adē. qui ē forma futuri. Hoc tale ē. Mors regnauit nullo contra eā militante cū sup ante bello. de adā usq; ad moysen.
Quomodo. Quia austeritas et cultura legis ante moysen data nō erat excepto qđ circūcisio in abrahā iussione dī facta ipsā le nit̄ p̄monstrauerat. s; mors uinculū p̄cessit de errore in erro rē ut sibi placuit. Tunc surrexit in uoluntate dī fortis miles mo yses. et p̄parauit fortia arma iusticie in quib; mors in suo cul tu destructa ē p̄ instrumenta legis. quia lex abscondit in se omne saluationē animarū cū p̄signi ficatione filii dī. qđ etiā mors dñabat in innocentib; qđ p̄sum plicitate moderationis sue nō ciebant in actib; suis opus p̄ua ricationis adē in nationib; qui est forma futuri. Quom̄. Adā fu it iustus et innocens creatus ab omni conceptione et inceptione peccati adō. & sic etiā fili dī natus ē ex uirgine maria ueniens absq; ulla macula peccati. Sed ut uides qđ illa lapidea pars muri extendit̄ ab angulo septentrio nali ad angulū occidentalem.

xvj. s

s

s

s et ad angulū meridianū et finit̄ in angulo orientali. hoc ē qđ recta opa hominū cū quib; in dō mu ni s; p̄cesserūt quasi de angulo septentrionali idē de circūcisione abrahę cū lege moysi et cū appen ditus iusticie eorū in hominib; usq; ad angulū occidentalem. ubi sur rexit p̄spicua iusticia in incar natione filii dī. ab inde ultra ex tensa usq; ad angulū meridianū. ubi ardens opus p̄baptismū et p̄ reliquā iusticiā doct̄e & noue sponse eidē filii dī ad restauran dū adā in saluationē accensū ē. iterū inde ultra p̄longata termi nūq; ponens in primo angulo orientali. ita reuertendo ad sumū patrē. Quomodo. Idē sumus pat̄ erat in suo misterio unāquāq; iusticiā ordinans. quom̄ redire deberet primi hominis casus in saluationē animarū. reuertendo ad dñm. Quom̄. Quia homo ceciderat idō surrexi in m̄dia et misi filiū meū in restorationē saluatio nis animarū. sicut seruus m̄s psal mista dauid ostendit dicens.

Sed in lege dñi uoluntas ei⁹ et in lege eius meditabit̄ die ac nocte. Hoc tale ē. In lege iusticie quā unigenitus dī natus ex uir gine demonstrauit mundo qđ cū patre et spū scō unus d̄s exi stens omni dñatur scō. ita qđ ipse filius patris incarnatus et homo uisibilis uisus. dñs ē de uat⁹ in carne sup omne creaturā fuit uoluntas patris in saluatione. Quomquia idē filius dī ante mundū a patre genitus postea in mundo natus ex matre in fine temporū. nec dū incarnatus manens in pa-tre inuisibilis ut uoluntas inuisi-bilis ē in homine anteqm̄ exeat in opus uisibilis deinde apparuit in carne p salute hominū. Ita cū eodē filio suo meditat̄ omnipotens pater omne iusticiā contra pri-mū casū ade. Vbi in dilectione eidē filii qui ante tēpora induinatus glā manens in patre mira-biliter postea substantio tēpore mundi incarnatus ē ut etiā cū pater in mundū misit de corde suo sūmū sacerdotē sup omne iusticiā. Vnde et legē iusticiē dī fili collegit ut eā accepit de patre. facta lege xpianorū. S; in eadē lege quā pater in filio suo constituere atq; facere uoluit. medita-tur in die. Quom̄. Scilicet in die qui ipse ē dū nulla obscuritas iniquitatis erat in ulla creatura priusquā constitueret ullā creaturā scōrū. meditatus ē istā legē filii sui. Et etiā in nocte. Quomo-do. Quia in facta creatura dū se incepit erigere masū. qd̄ quasi obscuritas noctis in angulo et in homine. meditat̄ etiā pater na usq; in nouissimū diē. in quē pingunt opa sua que ineffabi-liter opat̄ ostendens et aprens om̄a bona que in hōie p̄fici legē filii sui cū in ipso p̄fici debent.

Sed qd̄ uidet qd̄ p̄fata lapidea pars p̄dicti muri habet duo locā interrupta inter angulū ui-delicet occidentalē et angulū me-ridianū. hoc ē qd̄ opus humani generis in munitione defensionis sue duob; modis adhuc in-p̄fectū ē. cū m̄bra incarnati filii dī constant adhuc quasi in p̄fecta in delictis suis. qd̄ ē primus inter-ruptus locus uelut ab occidente. quō idē filius dī missus ē in mun-dū in fine temporū. et cū de inde ecclā ē similiter adhuc quasi in p̄- fecta in omib; uirtutib; suis ut consistere et edificari debet in celesti-ierlm̄. qd̄ ē alter interruptus locus uelut ad meridiē. cū eadē ecclā p̄ficiat̄ in celestib;. Quod autē longitudo ipsius edificiū ē cōmū cubitoz; hoc ē qd̄ denarius nume-rus attenuatus erat in p̄uaricante homine et recuperatus ē in filio meo p̄multiplicē denariū cen-tariū numeri multipliciū uir-tutū in saluatione animarū. de quo denario p̄centenariū deinde ascendit millenariū numerus p̄fectus in omib; uirtutib; plenter euacuent̄ mille artes diaboli cū quib; seducit omne cohortē amabiliū ouū om̄p̄tis dī. Quid ē hoc. Ego omnipotens constitui in initio ardentia et iuuentia lumina que lucerent in splendorib; suis. ē queda

xix.

pñerit in amore meo quedā autē ceciderit despiciendo me creatore suū. S; n̄ decuit me crea tore. ut in institutionē meā uacuā et irritā dimittere. Quom̄. Ange lica scilicet creatura supbiens agminis. hoc bonū qđ creator suus ipsi dedit ad cognitionē suā. illud. sibi in capsi deputauit in fallacē glām. se posse simile esse creatori suo. unde cecidit in mor tem. Tunc p̄uidit d̄s quia qđ in eodē p̄dno agmine cecidit. forūis restaurandū ē in alio. Quom̄.
 Quia creauit hominē de limo trē uiuentē in anima et corpore. ut ad glām illā p̄ungeret. de qua p̄uariator diabolus cū suis imi tatorib; electus ē. quō homo ual de carus ē dō. scđm qđ cū enā fe cit ad imaginē et similitudinē suā. ita ut in p̄fectionē sc̄ntis oparet̄ om̄s uirtutes. sicut & d̄s candidit om̄s creaturas. et ut enā impleteret opando in humil lima obedientia et in ope uir tū sub ministratiōe laudis glo riosorū angelicorū ordinū. quātm̄ in hoc beatitudinis culmine ad ornaret laudē eorundē sup̄noꝝ sp̄itūū. qui assidua deuotione s̄ laudantes d̄m. atq; ut in eadē beatitudine sua hoc adimpleret qđ p̄dñus angelis in p̄sup̄tione sua ruens euacuauit. Ideoq; ē homo plenus denarius nume rus. qui hęc om̄a p̄ uirtutē dī pficit. S; denarius numerus multipli cat. centenariū in hac p̄positione. quia homo diabolica seductione corruens ad dō. tandē diuina mise ratione et inspiratione admonit̄. strennue inceptit d̄m agnoscere cū lege et p̄phetia ueteris testam̄. et deinde acutius cū sc̄ntate ac om̄ib; instrumentis uirtuose constanter ecclē.

 Sicq; inceptit homo opari om̄s uir tutes de abel. ita eas pficiendo usq; ad nouissimū iustū. qđ ē centena rius numerus longitudinis hui edificii. qđ d̄s in mystica figura de monstrat hominib; ne desperent p̄lapsi in iniquitatib; suis. s; ut sur gentes ab eis fortiter laborent in ope dī. quia et unusquisq; ca dens in peccatis. cū se erigit ab eis. fortior erit quā prius ē. sicut et d̄s maiores et fortiores uirtu tes restituit in homine filiū suū mittens in mundū ad erigendū collapsū genus humanū. quā prius homo oparet̄. Unde et hō fortius opat̄ in anima & corpore quā si ē sine corporali grauedi ne. quō rixat̄ in semetipso in multis piculis pficiens fortissima bella. et uictoriosus existens cū dño dō suo. fidelit̄ militans et sic ipsū cognoscens in militia sua. corpus suū scilicet castigando. quia angelis carens grauedine trē ni corporis. ē tamū miles celestis armonie lucidus. et purus p̄seue rans in uisione dī homo uero grauius fortissim

 miles cū p̄pter d̄m peccatū rī p̄p̄t rēbū simo die sine fine dōm med go ergo d̄ meris. rē natus ex hominē filius n̄ lūc habet rē dragm uiciniā diligenter inuenit enas dicit quia inuen
 ram. Hoc but dragm angus et sup̄natū unā p̄d̄m bolica sed
 p̄ceptū Unde ipsa cernā scilicet utrū homin solam in idē iudiciū quesiuit d̄ ficationē in qua confi

xx.iii.

et malum. Unde et ei duo parietes in utroq. latere ipsius s. unilongitudinis. quō in edificio bonitatis dī quasi induob. parietib. aīc et corporis utriusq. lateris p. specti scilicet et aduersi hominē constan-tissime oportet laborare. Quomō.
Vt deuter. malū. et opet bonū. Quo-modo. Quia p. funda et in conphen-sibilis diuina potestas instituit ho-minē. ut totis uirib. suis et toto sensu suo colat dīm equali deuotione. in longitudine intelligibilis ratio-nalitatis. quō dignū ē ut creator omniū ante omīa et sup omīa dig-nissime colat dīs. xx.iii.

xxv.

Qua ppter et alii ipsius duo parietes in fronte et in fine ei unis. latitudinis. qm in ope dī sapien-tia et discretio s. uidet duo parietes. uidelicet sapientia quasi in superiori. et discretio quasi in infe-riori parte q. d. s. aspirat equo et iusto dono suo in magnitudinē latitudinis humane mētis ad cognoscendū se. Sed qd idē qua-tuor parietes ubiq. incircumipsius edificii eq. s. s. latitudinis. exceptis ppugnaculis ei. que aliquantulū eminent altitudinē ipsius. hoc ē. qd homo in quatuor elementis positus ubiq. fidē catholi-cā p. bonitātē patris equali deuotione et cultura in alio habebit. filii cū patre et spū scō uidelicet colens qui omīa opa sua opat in ipsis. Quomō. Omē opus scilicet qd filius dī opatus ē & opat. hoc pficit p. bonitātē patris in spū scō. Qd ē hoc. Quō scdm uoluntātē patris erat filius redimens hominē p. incar-nationē suā. qd ē magna bonitas. quia pater sic ordinauit ut filius ei nasceret ex uirgine de spū scō conceptus. humanitātē assumens ppter amorē hoīs. ut eū reduceret in restorationē uite. quatinus homo cū dō partē haberet cū qua in-traret in saluationē p. ipsū in recta et catholica fide. in qua pater et filius et sps scs cognosci debet un-et uerus dīs. Sed et ibi s. ppugnacula p. stantioris altitudinis. Quo-modo. Quia cū homo respicit in culmen bone mētis tunc edificat altitudinē fidelium mūrū in uirtutib. opib. dī. ascendens sup intelligibile fidē. dīm uidelicet sciens et in potentia diuinitatis sue. sup quā fidē de inde construit altiore statuā uirtutū p. stantissimorū ppugnaculorū. Quomodo. Nā edificat altiores uirtutes. sibi n. suffici-ens. ut solūmodo fidē habeat in dīm. s. ascendit uirentē palmā qd ē de uirtute in uirtutē. cū quib. exaltata et decorata ē rectissima fides. quasi ciuitas cū ppugnaculis. Quod uero latitudo interipsū edificii et splendore exp. dic-to circulo se in profundū abyssi extendit ē in uertice orientalis anguli. unī palmi. hoc ē. qd am-plitudo sup. nox secretorū ē interopus edificii corpon uirtutū

et uirtutū splendore se in domo incap et ad primū monit illa uir carnat secret et ex ad alio tūp in
uirtutū manu f ret cū qui s. o phicre sui in tūp in sua sug redimen dī se de
tūp in li altitud qd alibi moccid parte tan inter idē dore ut cōphende

opus filii dei quod demonstravit quasi edificium conversatus sine peccato corporaliter in seculo scilicet faciens virtutes multas in bonitate patris. et inter potentiam eiusdem patris quasi splendorem in maxima virtute sua se inferiora et superiora extendente cum filium suum misit in mundum incapere scilicet anguli qui respicit adorantem. hoc est in iusticia que primum prefigurata est in noe per armoniam spiritus sancti prefigurante perfectam illam iusticiam que declarata est in incarnatione filii dei. ita quod in his secretis erat quasi spatium unum statum ut extrema manus est a pollice usque ad alios digitos. quod est ordinatum tempus in paternis visceribus. quomodo unigenitum suum mittere voluit in manu fortissima ut ipse ita circuret cum omnibus articulis dignis qui sunt omnia opera eius in spiritu sancto. quantum perficeret voluntatem patris sui pas-sus in cruce propter misericordiam ac contem-pibilem inobedientiam quam diabolus primo homini insufflauit in sua suggestionem. cum propter hoc ad redimendum ipsum hominem in die dei se declinauit ad terram per humanitatem eiusdem filii dei in incomprensibili altitudine diuinitatis. Sed xxviii. quod alibi idem in septentrionali et in occidentali atque in meridiana parte tanta undique est latitudo inter idem edificium et eundem splen-dorem ut eius amplitudinem nullomodo comprehendere possis. hoc est quod nul-lus hominis hominum mortali corpore grauatus poterit scire et rationem mali in visceribus angelonaris diaboli. nec finem eius in opante creatura in oc-casu cadentis hominis. nec in manu aut fine ardentis meridiei. quod est super ne iusticie. considerare quomodo hec dilatata et discreta sunt inter opus et potentiam scientie mee in omnibus. populis scilicet aut in electis aut in rep-bus. qui omnes positi sunt in exquisitissima per-seruatione ita quod acutissima et diligentissima distinctione examinabuntur in preceptis meis. cum tamen ipsi omnes perspicue debent credere quod eos pascam in omnibus. necessitati suis quia hec omnia in secretis meis ita occultata sunt quod amplitudinem profunditatis eorum nec sensus aut in-tellectus hominis ullomodo comprehendere vel intelligere ualeat. nisi quantum per missionem meam conceditur.

 Qui autem acutis aures interioris intellectus habet. hic in ardente amore speculi mei ad uerba hec anhelet. et ea in conscientia ani-mi sui conscribat.

Tercia visio. tunc partis.

et ecce quasi in medio longitudinis p̄dicte lucide paris muri designati edifici stabat uelut turris ferri co-loris. ipsi muro externis imposita. latitudinis quatuor cubitoꝝ et altitudinis septē cubitoꝝ. in qua conspexi quinq; imagines singularit̄ stantes in singulo arcu de sup̄ quasi turritū conū ha-bente. quarū prima respiciebat adorientē. scđa autē ad aquilo-nē. tertia uero ad septentrionē. et q̄rta ad columnā uerbi dī in cuius radice abrahā patriarcha residebat. ac q̄nta ad turrim ecclē et ad illos homines qui in ipso edificio huc et illuc discurrebant. Similitudo autē una erat eis in hoc. Singule earū uestire erant solummodo q̄si singulis uestib; series et calciare calciamentis albis. excepta q̄nta que ex omī parte armata uidebatur. Scđa uero & tertia erant nudo capite dissoluta coma et alba. carmines amictu pallioꝝ. Prima autē & tertia ac q̄rta induite erant tuniceis albis. S; dissimilitudo ex hoc erat eis. Prima imago gestabat in capite suo pontificale infusa sparsis capillis et albis. induta quasi pallio albo. inferi in duab; oris ipsius purpura contexto. In dextera uero habebat lilia et alios flores. in sinistra autē pal-mā. Et dixit. O dulcis uita et odul-cis amplexio etne uite & ob eata felicitas in qua s̄ etna p̄mia que semper in uicis deliciis. ita tamen q̄d nūquā possū impleri nec saciari interiori leticia que ē in dō-meo. Scđa autē induta erat purpurea tunica. stans ut adolescens qui n̄ dū ē ad plenū uirilis etatis. S; tam magne grauitatis. Et dicebat. Me n̄ t̄rebit horribilis inimicus scilicet diabolus. nec inimicus homo. nec hoc sc̄m de disciplina dī. cui in consp̄ctu semp̄ assisto. Tertia uero tegebat faciē suā alba manica dextre manus sue. Et ait. O spuri-cia et o immundicia huius sc̄i abscondite uos et fugite ab oculis meis. quia dilectus m̄s natus ē de pura uirgine maria. Quarta autē erat uelato capite ex albo uelami-ne capitis more muliebri. et circū amicta pallio croci coloris. In pectore uero suo habebat imaginē ihū xpī. circa quā in ipso pecto-re suo scriptū erat. Per uiscera m̄e dī nr̄i. in quib; uisitant nos oriet ecce manifesto ac ad p̄ gentes q gala su quoc; et circū sua dipo acemēta mam de amē dī ore lingu et etia uel aliu turb instrum crepabam uidebam et ip̄m le cani hatta acriter u hinc for inuidia a domib; f idē edific gine uer stantes qu stant sup ficiu quasi n̄ diuer spiritu in ta p̄dictā uero ip̄i a collatū et ambe ta turrim ad homin ut et ex

ens ex alto. Et dicebat. Porrigo manus semp ad pegrinos et egenos ac ad paupes et debiles. atq. ad gemmes. Quinta uero armata erat galea sup posita capiti suo. induta quoq. lorica et ocreis atq. ferreis curotheis. habens enā in sinistra sua clipeū ab humeris pendente. accincta quoq. gladio. et hastā manu dextera tenens. Sub pedib. autē ei iacebat quasi leo hians ore lingua extensa ex ore ipsius. et enā uelut quidā homines quorū alii tubis resonabant. alii quib. dā instrumentis lusorū iocularitē con crepabant. et alii diuersis ludis iudebant. quos eadē imago simul et ipsū leonē pedib. suis concu cans. hasta quā dextera tenebat acriter transsodiebat. Et dixit. ymco fortē diabolu & te odiū et inuidia. atq. te o spurcia. cū lu dentib. fallaci deceptione. S. int idē edificiu uidi duas alias ima gines uersus hanc eandē turrū stantes. quarū prior apparebat stans supra pauimentū ipsius edi ficii quasi in arcu ignei splendo ris diuersis imaginib. malignorū spiritū interius depicto. et con tra p̄dictā turrū posito. altera uero ipsi arcui exterius tamū collateralī in nullo arcu consisten te. ambe uidelicet intū ad p̄sa tā turrū aspicientes. et intū ad homines idē edificiu intan tes et excurrentes. Vestire autē erant enā ipse sericis uestib. et uelate in ligatura capitis albo uelamine more femineo. n̄ circūamictē pal uis. indute uero calciamētis albis.

 S. prior earū habebat incipite suo quasi triangularē coronā. rubentē ut rubens iacinctus ru bet in colore suo. induta quoq. tunica alba. cui implicamēta erant uiridi colore ubiq. distincta. Et ait. ymco moriente cū fortissimo filio dī. qui exiit a patre ueniens in mundū p̄deceptione hominū. qui iterū rediit ad patrē cū in maxima crumna moriens in cru ce resurgensq. amarus ascendit in celū. ideoq. nolo confundi fu giendo miseras et dolores hui scilicet. Altera uero induta erat tu nica alba. s. aliquantū pallidi co loris. Et in dextro brachio suo portabat crucē cū imagine sal uatoris. caput suū inclinans sup illā. Et dicebat. Hic infans p̄tulit multas miseras in hoc sclo. et id circo uolo semp plorare et habe re merorē p̄pt̄ gaudiū et̄ne uite. in quā bone oues ducendē s̄ p̄ no bile filiū dī. Et uidi qd om̄s p̄dic te imagines singula uerba sua p̄misteriū dī dicebant ad ammo nitionē hominū. Tunc iterū se dens in throno qui m̄ hec om̄a ostendebat dixit mihi.

Per fortitudinē & constantiā uoluntatis dī. diuine uir tutes in ueteri testam̄to leniter pullabant. s. ibi se uelut in ignorantia colentib. n. dū pleniter suauē & dulcē gustū p̄bebant. q̄a tunc tan tū austeritas legis delinquentes acriter corripiebat. post modū au tē p̄grām dī in noua lege plurimū fructū p̄ferentes. forte et p̄fectū ci bū in amore celestī esurientib. cū sūma dulcedine exhibebant. cū pri ut dictū ē quedā occulta ostensio et signū futurorū eēnt. sedm̄ qd̄ etiā miraculū hoc cū appositionib. suis demonstrat. Nā hec turris quā ui des quasi in medio longitudinis p̄dictē lucide parū muri de sig natū edificii stantē. habet typū p̄ cursus uoluntatis dī. quē in circū cisione multis modis et diuersis significationib. manifestata ē. ita nā qd̄ d̄s in signo cīde circūcisio nis demonstrauit. legē et p̄legē grām euēgiū. quō fide p̄palata in fidei abrahā surrexit in ipso etiā circūcisio in misterio uere p̄figu rationis. quia p̄ diuinā potēciā instruxerunt se fortes uirtutes. incipientes in eodē abrahā quasi in medio longitudinis specula tue sciētiē. duarū optionis cau sarū sub munitione firmissime bonitatis sup̄ni patris. cū post modū apte future erant p̄uolun tatē dī. illud in figura p̄signan tes qd̄ d̄s facere uoluit priusq̄m hoc manifeste ostenderet in ope.

 Quē ferrei coloris ē ipsiq. muro exterius inposita. quē ē iusticia di fortis et inuincibilis. se in ipsa speculatiua sciētia quasi ceteri ostendens p̄circūcisionē. quē se fo ris carnaliter formauit. posita cū beatis uirtutib. in sp̄tualia sp̄talis muri. quē constituit d̄s in hominib.

Et eadē turris ē latū dimis q̄m or cubitoz. q̄a p̄uoluntatē dī ipse uirtutes opant in homine. ^{elementarē} posito sub extensione quatuor uegrat corporaliter uiuens in cor pore. et altitudinis septē cubitoz quia in altitudine septē donoz sp̄s scī tanta firmitas ē ut se ipsa turris ita erigeret qd̄ cetera p̄di ret ecclā in incarnatione filii mei p̄figurata in circūcisione ueteris testamenti. Quod au tē conspicias in ea quinq. ima gines singularitē stantes in singulo arcu de sup̄ quasi turritū conū habente. hoc ē qd̄ in turri hac idē in fortitudine circūcisionis pen debant quinq. fortes uirtutes. n. qd̄ ulla uirtus sit uiuens forma in semetipsa. s. solū modo p̄ lucida spera ad dō fulgens in ope hominis. quia homo p̄ficit cū uirtutib. quō ipse s. opus operantis hominis in dō.
 Unde ipse quinq. uirtutes ad simi litudinē quinq. sensuū hominis in hanc turrim posite. s. quia mul to helo tangebant circūcisionē abscedentes ab ea iniquitatē. ut qnq. sensus hominis in ecclā circūcidun tur p̄ baptismū. s. tam in hominib.
 n. operantes p̄ semetipsas. q̄a homo cū illis op cū quā tur p̄f mne ita et s. singu suadent tura mag bonitē idē ta dignit te prima te quā u di planct nre hoc ta qd̄ ar

 so. Sed a quō ipsa am et p lom in m eis addm nando in nate las batur mu do qd̄ le in p̄p̄o illo uro tūda illa fortit fortitudo mēp̄sā ab mstruon columnā u abrahā par ipsa uerā f noni filii mento abra ficatione m te pendem respicit ad

cū illis opat̃ et ipse cū homine sicut etiā quinq; sensus hominis n̄ opan tur p̄ se s; homo cū illis et ipsi cū ho mine ita inuicē fructū facientes.
 Et s; singularit̃ maximo studio de suadantes in singulari scilicet sta tura magisteru turritū apicē ha bent idē p̄cellētē et bene cōposi tā dignitatē uirtuose constancie.
 Et prima imago respicit ad orien tē quia uirtus illa p̄spicit ad filiū dī planctu amoris ut q̄ndoq; ue nit hoc apte loquens de cūa ui ta q̄d circūcisio habuit in abscon so. Seda autē uidet ad aquilonē quō ipsa consideraunt partē ori entis et partē orientis et partē aq lonis in magna disciplina aspici ens addm̄ quasi ad orientē dedig nando inconuenientia indisdisci plinē lasciuie scilicet q̄d d̄s n̄ habe batur in ueneratione despicien doq; q̄d lex dī digne n̄ habebat in p̄p̄lo illo q̄si in aquilone. Tercia uero tendit ad septentrionē quia illa fortissime p̄sternit sup̄flua fornicationē despiciendo eā et se metipsā ab illa p̄tendo legali institutione. Quarta autē uertit ad columnā uerbi dī in cui⁹ radice abrahā patriarcha residet quō ipsa uersa fuit adherens incarna tioni fili dī quā uelut infunda mento abrahā tenet cū p̄signi ficatione mire p̄funditatis arie te pendente in spinis. Quinta uero respicit ad turrim eccle et ad il los homines qui in ipso edificio huc et illuc discurrunt q̄a illa erexit se uictorioso destruere omnē inui sticiā que orta ē in adā respiciens ad fortitudinē eccle ut uictorioso pugnet contra uicia diaboli et ad homines qui in ea diuersa uarie tate morū discurrunt ostendens eis in p̄tmesendo hōlo dī ut oues iusticie cōp̄seuerent. Quod autē similitudo una ē in eis hoc ē q̄d pari deuotione dīm colunt in opib; hominū. Nā singule earū uestit̃ s; solummodo q̄si singulis uestib; seri cis q̄a unaqueq; earundē uirtutū habet in se dulcedinē et suauitatē quib; nullatenus grauant nec con stringunt homines s; ut suauiter balsamū sudat de frutice suo sic mollit̃ opant̃ dulcedinē celestis reg ni in humanis n̄tib; sine sorde et duricia iniusticie et s; calciat cal ciam̄tis albis quō recte sequunt̃ iusticiā meā in albedine celestis regni transeundo subiectionē dia boli et omnino conculcantes uesti gia ei⁹ in hominib; s; q̄m̄ta uirtus ex omni parte armata uidet̃ q̄a ipsa p̄spicit ad ecclesiam in qua for tissime pugnet aduersus diabolica uicia p̄ficiunt̃ extendens in ea ubiq; uictoriā suā cū p̄ciosissima armatura que ē inuictissima fortitudo dī que p̄transeundo occidit omnē iniusticiā in con fusione diabolice fraudis. Qd uero seda et tertia s; nudo capite

.1115.

dissoluta coma et alba hoc ē qđ nullū suppliciu laboris nec onus diuiciarū aut concupiscentie si bi inponunt p amore meo. s; nu do capite idē apta conscientia sua apuunt in omne occultū suū ardentes semp in dilectione mea cū omne confusione et lasciuia concupiscentie carnis de se abici unt. hoc incipientes in albis crimi bus qđ ē claritas mris bona opa de siderantis. Et carent amictu pau orū. quō a se piciunt mores paga norū cū impudicicia et spurcicia diaboli. et cū omnib; curis seclari bus. quia sapientia hui' mundi stulticia ē apud dñm. Prima quoq; et tertia acqřta indute s; tunicis al bis. qđ ē apphensio innocentie. pfigurantis incarnationē filii mei cū suauitate castitatis. qui mortu subtraxit hominē. indu ens eū uitā in saluatione. Quod autē dissimilitudo ē eis. hoc ē qđ aiscarū uicissim ē in dono sps sci. cū uirtus hec habet hoc instrumē tū anime et uirtus alia illud. unū tam studiū existentes in dō. ita qđ celestis ierlm pfecte construat eū eis. quia ipse s; opus qđ hoies opant. p qđ ad dñm pueniunt.

.v. Vnde hec prima imago desig nat amorē celestē. quia ipse p omni cura in eē debet homini bus. gestans in capite suo ponti ficale infulā sparsis capillis et albis. qđ ualde coronata ē in sumo sacerdote ihu xpō et in su mis sacerdotib; ueteris testamē. et nullis qui eidē filio dī dixerūt. uinā dirumpes celos et descende res. stans denudatis capillis sine muliebri uelamine capitis malbe dine apparuit. pfigurans in eis qđ sacerdotale officiu denudan dū ēē conuigali officio. in aduen tu ipsius filii mei. qui imitandus ē a sacerdotib; suis in castitate. ppter saluationē. qđ ipsi pfectissimo ce lesti amorē sic semp adherere de bent. ut excuciant prauos mores hominū a contagione peccati. cla ra et candida pars existens in spūiali dono dī. Que etiā induta ē quasi pallio albo. inferius in duab; oris ipsius purpura con tacto. hoc ē qđ eā circūdedit grā dī in albedine lenitatis. sub iuxa et ornata in finib; ptectionū sua rū cū decoris ornāmētis carnis. quia cōphensio diuine grē in eē debet termino uniuscuiusq; boni opis. constans induab; partib; ui delicet in uirtute dilectionis dī et hominis. Qđ uero in dextera sua habet lilia et alios flores. hoc ē. qđ in bono ope habet candida pma liliō. et in uite. et claritate cōm luminis. et alios scētatis flos culos qui s; sodales sui. qui se illi coniungunt celesti amore. Sed qđ in sinistra sua gestat palmā. hoc ē qđ ipsa in recordatione mor tis habet palmā ascendente de occulto quasi ut etia filios dī aut o amore tio carni ciplina induta circūdan tione car mpsu fil dūmō u natus ē do opata oleum q

 is carnis quō desce timore u tunc m stratione magister uine ē q ē potius nī fūc s; se magna d ficut etiā uerbis sui uocetund qu pudor confusio qu etiā fa decore n uerore facie anim ne et apoll defendens

occulto beate uirtutis cū qua mortē quasi torrentib; lapidib; obruit. ut etiā declarat in uerbis suis ad filios dī ut supra dictū. Sedā autē p̄tendit disciplinā. quō p̄ amōrē celestis uite. oritur constrictio carnalis concupiscentie. in disci-plinā magne contritionis. Que induta ē purpura tunica. quia circūdata ē lege mea. et mortificatione carnis in hominib;. qđ ē exemplū filii mei in purpura in-dunto. ut idē filius m̄s ex uirgine natus ē in carnate. que omnino opata ē in ipso. Stat etiā ut ad-olescens qui n̄ dū ē ad plenū uiri-tis etatis s; tam magne grauitatis. quō disciplina semp ē in puerili timore. ut puer ē in constrictione timens magistrū suū sub magistratione. unde et ego om̄ps semp magister sū discipline. quia ipsa uim ē quasi n̄ uirilis. quō n̄ uult ē potens in officio p̄prie uoluntatis sue. s; semp fidei timere in magna distinctione reuerentie. sicut etiā ostendit in supra dictis uerbis suis. Tercia uero declarat uerecundiā. quō p̄ disciplinā surgit pudor uerecundie a se fugans confusionē peccati. Qua p̄p̄ te git etiā faciē suā alba manica dextre manus sue. quia p̄tegit interiorē conscientia suā quasi faciē anime fugiens a fornicatio-ne et apollutione diabolica. se defendens candida ueste innocentie et castitatis. eā habens in dexte-ra qđ ē in saluatione op̄is sui. quō ipsi potenter adheret contemptis om̄is spurcie satane qm̄ om̄m abicit de se. ut etiā declarat in p̄- dictis uerbis admonitionis sue. viij.

Quarta autē significat mīam. quia p̄ uerecundiā eleuat se ad egrediens uirtutis midie cū etiā in corde cū patris ē uera midia gr̄e et quō ipse p̄tā hoc ordinauit. in antiquo consilio suo. qđ primū ostendit miditer abrahā in circūcisione educens eū de t̄ra sua et p̄- cipiens ei ut circūcideret ipse et genus sū. qñdo illi demonstrauit magna mirabilia in uera trinitate p̄ que & filiū suū p̄nunciāns erat in figura. qđ totū ē illa mīa quā idē abrahā p̄signauit. offerens ysaac. Et ē uelato capite ex albo uelamine capitis more muli-ebri. qđ ē tegm̄ et inuicū saluatio-nis quasi caput miserantis. p̄dnas animas de exilio mortis reducen-tis sub candore pu uelaminis. quō albas facit animas et homi-nē fulgentē dū cooptus fuerit cū midia adō. qā illis hominib; qui d̄m in indignatione habent. dū adhuc in peccatis s; his fulget post illatā sibi celitus midiam ut radius solis in blanda suauitate. quō midia in muliebri p̄sona fe-cundissima mater ē ammarū de p̄ditione. Nā ut mulier opt̄ caput suū. ita deprimit midia morte anumarū. Et sicut mulier suavi or ē uiro. sic ē midia suauior rabi da insania criminū in insania peccatoris priusquā cor ei uisite tur a dō. sicut et eadē uirtus in muliebri forma apparet. quā in feminea castitate clausa uirgi nea materia surrexit in uentre marie suauissima midia. que sep erat obumbrata in patre. donec pater eā uisibile ostendit psp̄m sc̄m in uero uirginis. Et circūa midia ē pallio crocei coloris. q̄a circūdata ē splendidissimo sole q̄d ē signū fili mei fulgentis de celo in mundū sicut solis splen dor in t̄ra. quō idē filius m̄s ue rus ē sol illuminans mundū cū sc̄ificatione ecc̄e. Quod uero in pectore suo habet imaginē ipsi unigeniti mei. hoc ē q̄d in pectus midie inclinaui eundē filium meū. dū cū mihi in uerū marie uirginis. Vnde et circa eā in pecto re eiusdē uirtutis scriptū ē. Per uiscera midie dī n̄rī in quib; ui sitauit nos oriens ex alto. Quid ē hoc. Quia ubiq; in circūcūte potestate mea demonstrat in secreto scientie pectoris midie. q̄d filius m̄s uera midia ē. Quo modo. It̄ p̄dictū ē in uerbis ha charie serui mei in euglō dicen tis. P̄ uiscera midie dī n̄rī. in quib; uisitauit nos oriens ex alto.

 Hoc tale ē. P̄ uiscera pat̄ne m̄e saluatio ē. q̄a absconsū incor de patris erat ut uiscera manent in homine q̄d fili ei in fine tēpo rū incarnaret. ubi uisitauit d̄s homines. Quomodo. Celesti scilicet pater qui filius ei ē natus in carne ex maria uirgine. qui ueniens ex alto idē de corde patris exiens p̄buit maximā querentib; se midiam. sicut etā ipsa uirtus in supra dictis uerbis suis filios dī alloquit. Quia uero ima go p̄figurat uictoriā. quō post midiam quā ostendi in circūci sione filiū meū uolens mittere in mundū. erexit se uictoria in eadē circūcisione. ita p̄cedens cū maiore uirtute usq; ad filiū meū. atq; cū ipso in nouissimū diē. Nā in filio meo sup̄auit antiquū ser pentē. qui sup̄ caput suū extulit se. humanū genus rapiens p̄mil le nequicias quib; illud cōphē dit. quasi in catena sua. cū eadē nequicias unigenitus m̄s deuicit p̄ om̄a bellicosa arma. que surrex erunt in incarnatione ei florif omniū uirtutū. Quid ē hoc. Post midiam surgit uictoria. cū se ipsū homo deuicit et aliena uicia. Quom̄. In p̄dictis uidelicet quinq; uirtutib; primus ē amor celestis. scilicet in hoc q̄d homo sc̄t et agnoscat d̄m. diligens eū sup̄ om̄a. Deinde causa illius fi dei. ligatur idē homo in legē discipline. de qua ipse cōp̄scit crimina peccandi. p̄ bonā et re tā uirtutū

 r̄b; uisite sic inspic sua p̄xim n̄b; necess mox sur
 l̄s cū h̄s ē in m̄te filiū meū
 uictoria p̄ cū armis tū cū se ip regit imp omne mali sup̄bia que d̄s. Et ead ita sup̄ pos mo p̄leno qui ē caput
 b̄t ut salu Induta ē q resistat dial iusticia uir
 d̄s. Sicut uito t̄m o metuens d̄ me cōmon
 uid. Iuxta
 orbi t̄re. cō t̄a. Hoc tale et secreta tu rifice appar choruscant et ex parte o ma nunc in te nesciunt in laudine tā uerecundia. In his ergo tribus uiribus iustificabit homo in corde suo. sic inspiciebat aliam rem que est angu-stia proximi sui. que percurabit in omnibus necessitatibus. et ut se. Unde et mox surgit homo fortissimus miles cum his tribus uiribus. in quibus perfectus est inimice sue. imitando inuidia filium meum uerum samaritanum. sic in uictoria pertransiens uires diaboli cum armis uictoriosissimarum uirtutum. cum se ipsum uincit et proximum suum regit. in ipsis uirtutibus occidens omne malum. abiciendo uidelicet superbiam que adam expulit de paradiso. Et eadem uirtus armata est ga-lica superposita capiti suo. quia homo pleno celesti desiderio additum qui est caput omnium suspirare de-bet. ut salutem consequatur eternam.

 Induta est quoque lorica. ut homo resistat diabolo. constringens in iusticia uoluntatem carnalium desideriorum suorum. in uero timore et cum iusto tremore subiectus deo. fideliter metuens districtum iudicium. et ut per me comonitus dicit psalmista da-uid. luuxerunt coruscationes tue orbi terre. comota est et contremuit terra. Hoc tale est. Effulserunt mirabilia et secreta tua odore cunctis. et mi-rifice apparuerunt. Quomodo. Ut coruscatio que ex parte uidetur et ex parte occultatur. quomodo misteria tua nunc intelliguntur. nunc autem nesciunt. Nam non est gens diffusa in latitudine totius orbis que in uoluntate tua mirabiliter creatus est. quin ad te nomen glorie tue. et potencia maiestatis tue diuersis modis et admirandis signis mirifice peruenerit. etiam si ea lumen fidei et ueritatis non dum perfecte ad salutem sui illustrauerit. Quia propter homo in magnis suspiriis commotus auctritate se a uoluntate sua. deseritque. concupiscentias suas tremendo ui-delicet superni iudicii. quia ipse prius uirtutibus actibus. ambulans. sumet imprudenter oblitus erat. cum nunc sapienter redit ad se. Est etiam prefata uirtus induta ocreis. ut recta uia sibi denunciata. effugiat inuicia mortis per castigationem corporalem. Induta est et ferris ciroteis. quantum effugiat opera diaboli per circumsionem mentis. et preclissimam fidem. ita ut in deum credat. sic euadens laqueos truculentissimi inimici. Habet etiam in sinis-tra sua clipeum ab humeris pendente. quo in sinistra parte que est diabolica pugna contra hominem. circu-data est gratia fortissimorum preceptorum diquibus homo tanta fidei fortitudi-ne circūdet et defendat. ne diabolus cum corrumpat suasionibus suis. et ne ipse homo se subiciat uicis illius. protectione dei ab humeris cir-cūdatus. quomodo gratia dei adheret eterne fortitudini anime additum. inli-gatura dilectionis dei et proximi. Et accincta est gladio. quia homo debet se constringere castigatione corhac faciens est fortissima pax dñi que uera est iusticia pax nequissimi certamen poris. in austeritate sermonis dñi. et a se & ab aliis abscidens iniquitatem.

 Hasta quoque manu dextera tenet. qd est ut homo cum fiducia sit audax in dño supare omne spuri-cia diaboli et hominis. qd difficile de bellari potest nisi ad iu-torio dñi. Qd autem sub pedibus ei iacet quasi leo hians ore. hic est diabolus que uictoria pedibus. retri-bueris uite & ueritatis pstrauit. cum idem satanas acerrima et amarissima crudelitate hians deglutaret genus humanum. Lingua uero extensa ex ore ipsius est existima-tio ei qua tribuli iniquitatem pu-tabat omne genus hominum ab ada peritum omnino deuorare. x.
 Et qd etiam sub pedibus ei iacent uelut quidam homines hi sunt sub agilitate ei torpentes fistule diaboli. que se flantur ad inuicem omnes mali. quas ipsa pterit in bello dñi recte pcedens iniusticia. quia eadem puer-se machinationes indueris mor-ribus subdunt diabolo. illi famu-lantes. Quorum alii tubis resonant. quo bachant sonitu omnium ma-lorum et insaniunt elati flagrante mente odio habentes iusticiam dñi genus scilicet super genus hoc faciens in magna superbia. Et alii quibus da instrumentis iustorum ioculariter conuertunt. quia fallaces sunt in illusionibus. famastice ad diabolum pu-nemus. et quo punaces sunt in tortuosa lasciuia elationis inuidendiscipline.

 tes dñi. Alii quoque diuersis ludis ludunt. quo uersantur in diuersitate et spurcia uicio. que secundum libitum uoluntatis sue ut excogitant in semetipsis et pñsidias diabolicas adimplent. Et hos omnes eadem imago simul et ipsum leonem pedibus suis conculcat. quia nimio bello omnes has uanitates arcum populi et suasionem satane comert in iusticia dñi. Sed & hasta qua dextera tenet eos acriter transsodit. quo pfiducia et auda-cia addit fortissime transfigit supando et uulnerando in doloribus. has omnes immundicias. quia ad dñm de-ludunt et ad nihilum deputant. ut ipsa etiam in pñdictis uerbis admo-nitionis sue demonstrat. Sed qd intra idem edificium uidet duas alias imagines uersus hanc eandem turrim stantes. hoc est quod intra opus illud qd celestis pparatus est pñlium suum. patet cum ostendens in apto ope qui in circuncisione ostensus est in obumbratione due uirum surrexerunt. qd est exemplum xpi in una. et sequi uestigia ei in altera obuiam pñcursui uoluntatis dñi maxima fortitudine et reuerentia aparentes. quia in se ipsis decla-rant fructum. qui pñfiguratus est in circuncisione. Et prior carum apparet stans supra paupum ipsius edificii quasi in arcu ignei splendoris. diuersis imaginibus. malignorum spirituum interius de pñcto et contra pñdictam turrim posito.

quia cad
 res. cas co patris cu sidera ca
 quomodo
 ua pñ mar exan arcu. idē testant qu terram turba sub me se lam ligentia a te. cu. cu na in mub nat se uul testamto que tam
 tus padm mimb. qu non et fan lignoru. A detur
 nullo arcu or uirtut ciom de m penas um foris cand penus qual
 etia cand bie ei effu
 ca. qd e rec origine dñi cus consist testate hui baiolando
 ad pñta tu

129 quia eadē virtus perficitur in terrenis rebus; eas conculcando in bonitate patris. cū diligenter pertransit de sideria carnis in exemplo filii dei.
Quomodo. Quia in multa toleran-tia pertransit aduersa mundi. fortiter examinata et excrabrata in arcu. idē in excellentia secularis potestatis. que ignea ē interiore deterrenis superbie. quā diabolica turba subsequitur. interiora anime secularium desideria carnalia di-ligenter adtrahens sue uoluntati. cū etiā idē arcus perennā poten-tiā in multis modis mundū oppo-nat se iusticie. repugnans uero testamento quod edificatum ē in dō. que tam omnia superat uictrix uir-tus per adiutorium dei in bonis hominibus; quāuis multū impugnent et fatigant ab insidiis malignorum. Altera uero ipsi arcui exterius tantū collateralis. in nullo arcu consistit. quō cū prior uirtus tumidā potestate pacient de uincit. que ipsi multas penas inuit. precedit uirtus hec foris eandē potentia. quia de penis quas illa perit. hec quasi extra eandē potestate orta ē ra-biē et effugiens. s; tamen iuxta eā quod ē recordatio eternarū unō origine duxit. sine depressionē arcus consistens. quō libera ē apo-testate huius seculi palā crucē xpī baiolando. Quod autē ambe mundū adp̄fata turrim aspiciunt. hoc ē quod ipse s; plenū opus p̄figuratum in p̄cursu uoluntatis dei in circūcisione ueteris testamenti. consideramus inuicem radicis sue. maiores tam eodē initio suo quod in circūcisione habuerūt existentes. quā fulgens opus p̄cellit in ceptionē doctrinē. inuicem etiā aspicientes ad homines idē edificia intran-tes et exeuntes. quod ē admonitio carū in spū scō ad p̄p̄los quod addim in uia legis iusticie ambulant et ad illos qui s; in criminibus. dia-boli uolentes recedere de uia iusta. unde exhortantur ab eis ut eas in bono imitent. Vestite s; etiā ipse sericis uestib; quia ha-bent suauitatem illā ut homo nō grauetur in indignatione laboris p̄secutionū. Et s; uelate in liga-tura capitis albo uelamine more femine. quō iustum ē ut ho-subiectus sit dō capiti suo. ipsū mentis sue iugiter circūponens in candore dilectionis. ita ut eū in gaudio et leticia amplex-tatur. sicut mulier uirū suū habebit in honore timoris et amoris. ut constituit d̄s. S; nō s; circūamictē pallis. quia ca-rent omni sollicitudine seculari. se tantū declinantes post illa que s; eterna in dō in uita futura.

Induite s; autē calciamētos albis. quō iucunt in itineribus; iusticie palbedinē fidei in m̄tib; hominū. ut et ipsi sequuntur.

23.

:XII.

uestigia exempli carū. Prior autē imago designat paciētiā. quia illa surrexit in cornu abrahe. qđ ē in inceptu obediendi cū obediunt dō significante incircūcisione primū sonū obediētiē post casū ade pcurrētē opantē obediētiā in uero uerbo qđ ē in filio dī. ut sonus uerbū pcurrit. in septuagimo nali parte uidelicet obposita nequis et inquietudini amigui serpentis. Et habet in capite suo quasi triangularē coronā. rubentē ut rubens iacinctus rubet in colore suo. quō in principio mūs fidelū hominū pfidē scē trinitatis ualde coronata ē. qui carnē suā contemnentes p amore dī et uera fide san-guinē suū fundere n dubitant. qđ et filius dī apparens in carne mortē deuenit cū rubore sanguinis sui p quē ecclā decorata ē. quasi cū no-bili rubente iacincto in decore suo.
 Induta ē quoq. tunica alba cuius implicamēta s uiridi colore ubiq. distincta. qđ sibi induit uestimentū opīs dī in albedine ppetui luminis ornatū scilicet in implicamē-tis suis. que s erumne et gemitus dicemus oqđdo ueniā ad aspectū ueri luminis. qđ desiderū felicit in p sēnti uita habet in ad obum-brato exemplo p qđ decorantur ipse aduersitates fidelū in uiri-ditate anime multis calamitatib. distincte. p p dī in paciētiā hēc omā sufferentes. ut etiā eadē uir-tus declarat in p dīctis uerbis suis.

Altera uero imago p tēdit gemū. quō p paciētiā contra riorū eleuat se in electis meis gemitus recordationis uite surgens ad monitionē meā. ut decorde meo filiū meū nisi p p tē gemitū ppli mei. Nā ppli mī in ueteri et in nouo testamēto habebat & habet hanc recordationē mīs quā gemitus cōphendit in lamētabili ornamēto suo. quō ipsa uera conpunctio cor-dis ē. P p tē qđ etiā stat in septen-trionali plaga. ut repugnet dissolute immundicie diabolicarū in-fidiarū. Et induta ē tunica alba
 s. aliquantū pallidi coloris. qđ circūdata ē bonis opib. in candore fidei turbulentū tam pallorē ostendens. quō semp suspiria et fletus habet p tēna felicitate. Qđ autē in dextro brachio suo portat crucē. cū imagine saluatoris caput suū inclinans sup illud. hoc ē qđ in dextera idē in recta parte foris opīs sui amplectit passionē eīdē filiū mei. toto desiderio intemionis sue anhelans et se inclinans ad eū. imitando ipsū in dolorib. et erūnis. sicut etiā in supra dictis uerbis exhorta-tionis sue demonstrat. Unde ui-des etiā qđ omīs p dīctē imagines singula uerba sua p mīsteriū dī dicunt ad admonitionē hominū. quia in omib. uirtutib. dulcissi-ma sua uirtute pietas dī docet ex hortand

 tant ma qui autē intellect
 amore
 ambel sui conse

ultra p dī luntatis gulū qui nē uidi q coloris p f eīdē calif ualde trib inuidia conert po angulof ha sumū quali primū rei autē ad sc rudiē ex tūm commu
 qui respici

hortando mentes pplōe ut dimittant malū. erigentes se ad bonū.
Qui autē acutas aures interioris
intellectus habet. hic in ardente
amore speculi mei aduerba hec anbulet. et ea in conscientia animi sui conscribat.

utna p̄dictā turrīm p̄cursus uoluntatis dī. s. cubito uno infra angulu qui respicit ad septentrio-nē uidi quasi columnā calice coloris p̄fate lucide parti muri eīdē edificii exterius appositā ualde tribulē aspectu. tamq. mag-nitudinē. ut m̄surā ei nullom̄ discernere possē. Et eadē columna tres angulos habebat ab imo usq. ad sumū quasi gladiū acutos. quorū primus respiciebat ad orientē. sed autē ad septentrionē & t̄cius ad meridiē. exterius ipsi edificio aliqn̄ tusū coniunctus. Ex angulo autē qui respiciebat ad orientē. p̄cede-bant rami aradice usq. ad cacumen ei iuxta cuius radicē uidi in primo ramo abrahā sedentē. in sedō uero moȳsen et m̄cio 10 sue. ac deinde reliquos patriar-chas & p̄ph̄as ita sursum singulos in singulis ramis ordinate sedentes. sedm̄ tēpus quo in hoc sc̄to sibunt. successerant. qui se om̄s conuerterant ad angulū eīdē colum-ne qui respiciebat ad septentrio-nē admirantes ea que in spū fu-tura uident in ipsa. S. inter hos duos angulos unū scilicet uer-gentē ad orientē. et alterū ad septentrionē erat ante facies ip-sorū patriarcharū & p̄phetarū eadē columna ab imo usq. ad sumū quasi tornatilis et rotunda plenaq. rugarū. ut de arbo-ris coruice solet germen pullu-lare. Ascēdo uero angulo respici-ente ad septentrionē exiit splendor mire claritatis. se extendentis et reflectentis ad angulū qui respiciebat ad meridiē. Et in eodē splendore intā magnā latitudinē se diffundente conspexi aptos. martyres. confessores et uirgines.

atq. alios plurimōs sc̄os. in mag-no gaudio deambulantes. Tercē uero angulus qui respiciebat ad meridiē erat in medio latus et extenuis. in imo autē et infumitate aliquantulū gracilior et constrictus. sedm̄ modū arcus qui extendit ad sagittas iacien-

5 das. In cacumine autē eīdē co 5 lumne. uidi tantā claritatē lu 7 minis ultra quā humana lingua 5 effari possit. In qua apparuit 5 columba habens in ore suo radiū 5 aurei coloris multo fulgore in 5 eandē columnā radiantē. Cūq; 5 illuc aspicerē audiui uocē de celo 5 magno tūte me redarguentē 5 et dicentē. Qd uides diuinū ē. Ex 5 qua uoce ita contremui. ut am 5 plius illuc aspicerē n̄ auderē. H 5 di etiā tunc intra p̄dictū edificij 5 uelut quandā imaginē corā hac 5 eadē columna sup̄ paucos m̄ 5 eīdē edificij stantē. Et aliquādo 5 ipsā columnā. aliquādo etiā hoīes 5 illos qui in ipso edificio discurs 5 rebant inspicentē. Eadē autē 5 imago tam fulgoris et clari 5 tas erat ut p̄ nimio splendore qui 5 in ipsa lucebat. nec faciē ei nec ue 5 stimenta quib; inducbat. consi 5 derare ualere. Excepto qd tantū 5 ut ceterae uirtutes in forma appa 5 runt hominis. Et circa eā conspexi 5 pulcherrimā multitudinē ange 5 licā formā et alas habentē. Et in 5 tanta ueneratione stantē ut et 5 eā timerent ac diligerent. S; ante 5 faciē ei uidi aliā multitudinē 5 inhumana forma et tenebrosa 5 ueste apparentē. atq; in multa 5 constrictione timoris stantē. Et 5 p̄dicta imago inspexit homi 5 nes illos qui de mundo uenen 5 tes in eodē edificio noua ueste inducbanr. dicens unicuiq; eorū. considera indumentū qd indui sti. et noli obliuisci creatoris tui qui te creauit. Cūq; hec admiraret; ille qui sedebat in throno iterū mibi dicebat. Verbū dī p̄ qd om̄a facta s̄ ipsū ante tēpora ex corde patris genitū. s; post in fi ne tēporū ut uereres scī p̄dixerant ex uirgine in carnatū quāuis hu manitatē assumeret. diuinitatē tamen n̄ deseruit. s; cū patre et spū scō unus et uerus d̄s existens mundū sua dulcedine dulcora uit. ac cū sue claritatis fulgore illustrauit. Qua p̄pter et hec co lumna qm̄ ultra p̄dictā turrim p̄cursus uoluntatis dī uides de signat ineffabile mysteriū uerbi dī. quia in uero uerbo idē in fi lio dī impleta ē om̄is iusticia no ui et ueteris testam̄i que fidelit̄ credentib; hominib; enucleata s̄ p̄ diuinā inspirationē ad salutē ipsoꝝ. cū idē filius sup̄mi patris ex suauissima uirgine incarna ri dignatus ē. q̄a postq̄m p̄cur sū uoluntatis dī in initio circūci sionis se uirtuose uirtutes osten derunt. tunc etiā declaratū ē in acuta iusticia mysteriū uerbi dī insinuatū uidelicet p̄sonū patri archarū et p̄phetarū qui p̄dixe runt ipsū uerbū cū om̄i iusticia manifestandū et cū om̄ib; admi nistrationib; dō subiectis. atq; cū maxima austeritate que ten git incidentē iusticiā dī nullā iniusticiā dimittentē illesā qñ abscedat eā in legalib; pceptis.

Sed cubito uno infra angulum qui respicit ad septentrionē stantē qđ ē inhumano et singu lari cursu pcellens uicinitas que fuit de patriarchis loquentib; acutā iusticiā eidē uerbi dī in significationib; suis usq; ad le gē quasi in septentrionali par te diabolo repugnantē. Vnde et calibet coloris ē p fate lucide parti muri eidē edificii exteri apposita quia inuicta ac in superabilis ē fortitudo uerbi dī cui nullus resistere ualet p in anē rebellionē aut pultē supbiā ita qđ etiā speculatiue scientie pmunitiones et actiones iusticie idē antiqui patris quasi exte rius coniuncti erant n dū inflexi ignis et pfecto opī se in filio dī erigunt qđ ipsi tantū in ex teriore sono uerborū suorū pmon strabant. Est quoq; ualde terribilis aspectu quō iusticia in uerbo dī metuenda ē huma ne scientie in impio iudicio in iustorū iudiciū sedm semetip sos solumm iudicantiū. Tante ē etiā magnitudinis ac altitu dinis ut mensurā ei nullomodo discernere possis quia ipsū uer bū filius scilicet dī in magnitu dine glē sue et in altitudine diuinitatis sue omīs creaturas sup excellit in patna maiestate ita ut hoc nullus hominū in pu tredine carnis ad pfectū possit considerare. Quod autē eadē columna tres angulos habet ab imo usq; ad sumū qđ gladiū acutus hoc ē qđ circumiens et uo lubilis in grā fortitudo uerbi dī quā uetus testamentū psigna uit in nouo declarandā manife stauit p spm scm tria incidentia acumina idē antiquā legē et no uā grām atq; enucleationē fide liū doctoz in quib; scs homo qđ iustū ē opat ab initio uidelicet inceptionis sue ut in imo cū bonū incipit ita sursum tendens ad pfectū quasi ad sumū cū hoc consū mat quia omne qđ iustū ē fuit et ē & pmanet in cū in acuta ditate que omā penetrat ita qđ nulla potestas potest constare in malicia sua qm uult deuincere sue pietatis glā. Et primus angulus respicit ad orientē qđ ē primus ortus inceptions cognos cere dī in diuina lege ante p fectū diē omīs iusticie. Secundus autē ad septentrionē quō post inceptionē bone et iustitie opa tionis euangliū filii mei et alia pcepta in me pat surrexerūt con tra partē aquilonis ubi omīs iniusticia orta est. Tercius uero ad meridiē exterius ipsi edifi cio aliquantū coniunctus qui ē roboratus opib; iusticie pfun da et exquisita sapientia principi palium magistrorum pectoris spiritus sancti qui obscura in lege et prophetia aperit et qui in euangelio osten derunt germinem quod fructuosum fe cerunt ad intelligendum tangen tes exteriori materia scripturarum in ope bonitatis patris et suauiter ruminantes in ea mysticam signi ficationem. Quod autem ex an gulo qui respicit ad orientem pre cedunt rami a radice usque ad ca ecumeni et hoc est quod mortui cog nitionis dei plegem iusticie quasi in angulo orientali apparuerunt rami tempora scilicet patriarcha rum et prophetarum quia illa acuta columna diuinitatis hec omnia ex tendit ab initio radicis id est bo ne inceptionis in membris electorum suarum usque ad cacumen et quod est usque ad manifestationem filii hominis qui omnis iusticia est unde etiam iuxta et radicem uides in primo ramo abrahamam sedentem quia per acutissimam diuinitatem exspira batur hoc tempus quod primitus ortum est in eodem abrahamam cum quie ta inter reliqua patriam suam obedi ens deo in sedem uero moysen quo deinde plantatio surrexit in inspiratione dei in initio dante le gis per eundem moysen in per signifi catione filii altissime et in exercio io sue quia ipse postmodum habuit spiritum hunc a deo ut consuetudinem legis dei confirmaret robustorem in precepto diuino. Ac deinde uides reliquos patriarchas et prophetas ita sursum singulos in singulis ra mis ordinate sedentes secundum tempus quo in hoc seculo sibi nec successerunt quo in uno quoque tempore subse quentium patriarcharum et prophetarum exspirant de sursum ad altitudi nem preceptorum suorum unicuique sin gulare germinem cum ipsi in diebus suis disposuerunt et ordinate in ostensa sibi iusticia quiescebant diuine maiestati fideliter subiecti ut in temporibus suis uementes erant.

Et hi omnes conuertunt se ad an gulum eadem columnae qui respi cit ad septentrionem admirantes ea que in spiritu futura uident in ipsa quia omnes admoniti spiritu per spiritum sanctum se uerterunt et uiderunt ad euangelicam doctrinam fortitudi nis filii dei diabolo repugnantis de incarnatione eius loquentes et admirantes quod ipse ueniens ex corde patris et de utero uirginis in magnis mirabilibus se ostendit in suo opere et sequentium se qui ip sum in noua gratia mirabiliter imi tantes eadem conculebant et ad eternorum gaudia fortiter anhe labant. Sed quod inter hos duos angulos unum scilicet uergentem ad orientem et alterum ad septen trionem est ante faciem ipsorum patri archarum et prophetarum eadem co lumna ab initio usque ad summum quasi tornatilis et rotunda plenaque rugam folia g inter b inter m et sub

ma la manu gib; m bu qd usq; ad tornat ipse om coposum uolubile infestans q; carue futura mib; pau tis rectifi me et scilicet quod u spac
et splen tandem lum qui r est qd ab motu dia uolubili deme et omne filius m in p pulsis et benedictio in forme cui usq; ad profundis se

rugarū ut de arboris coruice solet germ̄ pullulare. hoc ē qđ inter binas sūmitates uidelicet int̄ manifesta cognitionē meā & subsequēte doctrinā filii mei. latuit pupū p̄figurationis manub; antiquorū patrū inle-gib; meis cōmorantū unicū uerbū qđ ē filius m̄s a primo electo usq; ad ultimum sēm in mystica tornatura circūornatus. quia ipse om̄a instrum̄ta sua bene cōposuit ac limauit. scilicet p uolubile grām omnib; sepiū manifestans. ut p̄figurabat in ru-gis circūcisionis quē fuit umbra futurorū in appositis significatio-nib; pausternatē legis in se habētis rectissimū germen latens sūme & scissimē incarnationis.

Quod uero a secūdo angulo re-spiciente ad septentrionē ex-it splendor mire claritatis. se extendens et reflectens ad angulum qui respicit ad meridiē. hoc ē qđ ab altit̄o nouo scilicet testamento diabolo opposito. exiunt uerba filii mei quē egrediunt̄ de me et reuertunt̄ ad me. quia emicantē sole in carne qui idē filius m̄s ē. fulget lūm̄ sc̄i euāgēlii in p̄dicatione ei⁹ ab ipso et ad discipulos ei⁹ se diffundens in fructū benedictionis. et se retorquens in fontē saluationis. sic pueni-ens usq; ad rectores uidelicet ad p̄fundos scrutatores uerborū uerū et noui testam̄ti ostendentes qđ sapientia erecta ē in ipso sole mundū illustrante. qui in suo latē ualde ardet uelut meridies in electis suis. Et in eodē splendore int̄ magnā latitudinē se diffundente. conspicis aptos martyres. confessores & uirgines. atq; alios plurimos scōs in mag-no gaudio de ambulantes. quia in p̄specuo lumine dñi filii m̄s fuit p̄dicans et dilatans lūm̄ uernans. facti s̄ apti annuntiatores ueri luminis et martyres robusti milites sanguinē suū fidelit̄ fun-dentes & confessores officiales p̄ filiū meū. ac uirgines. sup̄nū ger-men sequentes. atq; alii electi mei letantes in fonte leticie & in fonte salutis. dñi sp̄s sc̄s eos p̄fundit. naut sint flagrantēs et manantes de uirtute in uirtute. Sed qđ tereus angulus qui respicit ad meridiē ē in medio latius et extentus in imo autē et in sūmitate aliquantulū gracilior et constrict⁹. scđm modū arcus qui extendit̄ ad sagittas iaciendas. hoc ē dif-fuso euāgēlio ardens in seruire sp̄s sc̄i illa sapientia scōrū qm̄ in p̄funditate querebant. ut p̄cā repirent upicū germ̄ p̄funditatis. scilicet qđ eis ēēt intelligendū in uerbo dñi. ipsa in medicata uidelicet lata. quia confortata et roborata fide in p̄p̄lo xp̄ia-no. quasi in medio erat latius sensus exiens de animabus. scōx do ctōrū qui p̄funda asp̄natē scrip turarū scrutantur. p̄tulerūt cā in sciētiā multōx. qm̄ ab eis discē bant ita qd̄ dilatabant sensū suū in extensione sapiētiē et sciētiē diuine scripture. que in initio quasi in initio eccl̄astice institutionis erat ad huc gra ciliōris et minoris studiū. quia ppli cā n̄ dū amplectebantur tali amore ut postmodū fecerūt. cū etiā in fine sc̄li ut in summatē ei⁹ refrigerent studia multōx. ita qd̄ eis diuina sciētiā n̄ ē amabilis in amore op̄is. s; ab scondunt sibi in capsis consci entia suā. quasi eis n̄ sit unitan dū bonū in ope. illud tantū ex terius ut in somno cognoscemus.

Et ideo ē iste angulus in me dio sui latissimus in asperi tate. qm̄ asp̄a opa cultus dī de nudata ab obumbratione uer ris testam̄ti. erant a constrictio re initio suo se p̄tendētia q̄si ad mediū sui. que s̄ fortissime uirtutis in altiori studio cū po pulus uelocior fuit contra in quitatē diaboli scilicet uilne rare in uerbis que dī s̄. & eicere atq; conculcare om̄ia uicia ei⁹ cū magna austeritate iusti cie dī. ipse tam̄ sic tandē des cendens in obliuione sui. et constrictior existens in seruo re sp̄s sc̄i circa finē mundi.

ita uidelicet tensus ut cū neruo lignū extendit ad bellū. quia in anima et corpore se homo de bet erigere contra uicia. ex utq; parte sui constrictior et in me dio largior stans. hoc ut in primo et in ultimo ope suo cir cūspectus sit magno timore & humilitate et in medio fortis ac estans emittere iacula bonōx opū p̄ donū sp̄s sc̄i. aduersus insidi as diaboli. Nā in inceptiōe bo ni ē homo graciliōris uirtutis. in ope autē opationis sue cū bo nū opat̄ ē robustioris fortitudi nis. quō sp̄s sc̄i cū p̄transiunt infusione sua. in qua tamen opante uirtute frequens ē n̄ potest. unde iterū constrictio ris erit uirtutis. q̄si in fine op̄is p̄fragilitatē carnis sue. Sic sēp extendi debet arcus. se p̄hiben tis contra uicia diabolica. Quod autē in cacumine ei⁹ dē colum ne uidet tantā claritatē lumi nis. ultra quā humana lingua effari possit. hoc ē qd̄ celestis pa ter in altissimo et in p̄fundissi mo secreto suo edidit mysteria filii sui. qui in eodē patre suo floret clarissima choruscatio ne in qua plata ē om̄is iusticia et in legali p̄positione & in no uo testam̄to. qd̄ ē maxima cla ritas lucentis sapiētiē. ita ut n̄ sit possibile ulli cinereo hōi hoc aliquo sermone p̄ferre du ē m de clari habent loris m lumen

 one lū tris fulg que de atissim uenient amquo et idē sp̄ ua p̄cep dant uo mysteri
 dū. atq;
 te sua of ne eide f fima celi splendor cellentiss unchor pfusione unigenit ut p̄dēti dī filii n ualde m exantē a surgentē
 quā. for uatū uer in sp̄ale iusticia cr menta uim possibile in tatē. que a potuit in solis: na qđ inuore & inlema te sua inconphensibilis ē homi nib; pūibile fulgore diuina tis quasi pfaciē ei et pclaritatē quā habet in semetipsa qđ ue stimenta decoris sui: quom̄ etiā nec sol considerari potest inar dentē facie sua in decoro uesti tu radioꝝ suoꝝ. Ipsa enī ē apud om̄a et in om̄ib; ac tantē pul critudinis in secreto suo: ut a nullo homine sciri possit q̄nta sua uitate toleret hoīes. et quom̄ parcat eis in pspicabi li mīa. quo usq; durissimus lapis amplius pforari n̄ pos sit in in pforabili duricia sua: ^{xy} qui ē durus et incorrigibilis homo qui nullatenus uult declinare a malo suo. S; tam̄ ut ceterē uirtutes in forma ap pareat hominis: qđ dē in uirtu te bonitatis sue fecit hominē ra tionalitate & scientia ac intel lectu p fundissime adornatū. quatinus se in tanta dilectione diligens. et maxima deuotio ne colens spernat figura de monioꝝ. illū p̄cipue amans qui sibi tantū & talē dedit honorē.

^{xy} Quod uero circa candē ima ginē conspicias pulcherrimā multitudinē angelicā formā et alas habentē & in tanta uene ratione stantē ut eā timeant ac diligant: hoc ē qđ ubiq; scientiā dī beati et excellentes sp̄s in an gelica ministracione p in explica bilē et purissimā laudē colunt qđ tā digne n̄ potest homo adimple re cū adhuc immortalī cinere ē. ipsi dīm amplectentes in ardore suo. qđ lux uiuens s; et malati. n̄ qđ alas habent ut alia uolantib; creatura: s; qđ flagrant in speris suis pūrantē dī quasi pennati sint. Unde uenerant me dīm uerū p̄sistentē in recto timore et inue ra subiectione. scientes iudicia mea: atq; ardentes in amore meo. qđ facie meā semp aspiciunt. nihil aliud desiderantes nec uolentes nisi qđ uident placere p̄spicantib; oculis. Sed qđ ante facie ei in des alia multitudinē inhumana forma & tenebrosa ueste appa rentē. atq; in multa constrictione timoris stantē: hoc s; in scientia dī homines existentes. Quomodo: Homo ē in conspectu dī in magno honore quē p̄uidet ad se p̄uere. illo abiecto qui magis in p̄dicio ne contendit p̄durare qm̄ in dō eē. S; homines isti qđ uident in hac multitudinē dicunt cōpulse oues. humanā speciē habentes p̄pt̄ opa hominū. et umbrosū ue stitū qđ ē dubitatio in opib; pec catōꝝ. in districione tam̄ timo ris metuentes iudiciū dī. Ideo autē cōpulse oues nominant: quō multis modis cōpello eos. ut ad uitā pueniant. p sanguinē fili mei ereptos a morte. Unde et con posse talis tra uol

 uolunt inuolunt adimple re ut sic ardore lib ferret uig fuit quos dī cōfirm deo ut colle
 am quo
 tā forti constringo lenori. qui tā amarum quō cū sem
 mē. max
 none uolunt ad me. p tantes. Quo uerget cor
 tē. et tā ma eandē cōm fortiter p apu regno p̄uidet et co fringit. illor corporis ip in maxima na ac miseria fūgo. quia
 tē. tāq; sup noluntatis nunt graui

pulſe oues ſ homines illi qui p multas tribulationes et erumnas contra uoluntate ſua cōpellunt ame-ut relinquunt iniquitate qm p uoluntate pprie carnis et pflorē iuuentutis ſue tādū libentiſſime adimplerent quādū ſcō adhe-rerent ſic uolentes pmanere in ardore libidinis uſq. dū eos de-ſerret ignis carnis pfrigus etatis ſue. quos tam om̄s diuerſis mo-dis conſtringo ſcdm qd incis iudeo ut ceſſent a peccatis ſuis. xxvii.

Nam quosdā eorū in quib; ſcdm tā forti deſiderio n̄ ardet n̄ conſtringo fortiore flagello ſ; leniori. quia n̄ uideo incis tantā amaritudinē quā in aliis. quō cū ſentiunt correptionem meā. mox relinquunt in ſeſtinatione uoluntate ſua et ueniunt ad me. pompis ſclārib; renun-tiantes. Quosdā autē fortiore uerbere corripio. quō tā ardentes et tā magnamini ſ in pec-catis exuicio carnis ſue. ut niſi fortiter p me coartarent n̄ eſſent apud regno meo. Scientia mea p̄uidet et cognoscit eos. ac conſtringit illos ſcdm ſupfluitatē corporis ipſorū. Et iterū quosdā in maxima et fortiffima erum-na ac miſeria m̄tis et corporis eorū ſupo. quia tā rebelles tāq. rebeltes tāq. ſupflui in ope carnalis uoluptatis ſ. ut ſi n̄ conſtringerentur grauiffima calamitate.

n̄ ceſſarent acriminiſ; ppetulan-tia ſue carnis. qā dū eēt in pſperitate ſue uoluntatis ſe n̄ conuer-terent addm. qm unde unus p puſillanimitate m̄tis ſue omnino in deſperationē. inde alius ioculat p magnanimitate ſupbie. atq. p qd iſte conculcat in deſperatione. phoc ille uix conſtringit implenitudine animi ſui. Hoc modo coerceo punientes ad me cū m̄ repugnant in opib; ſuis. ut qā eos noui ſaltē p calamitates tā corporis quā ſp̄s q̄s patiunt ad me puenire cōpellant. quatin ſaluent. ut enā pharao iſraheliticā plebē a t̄ra ſua p̄m̄is tan-dē diſcedere cōpulit ſic ſcriptū ē

Locatisq. pharao moyſe et aaron nocte. ait. Surgite egredi ap̄lō meo. et uos & filii iſrl. h̄c immolate dño ſicut dicitis. Oues uſas et armenta aſſumite ut pcedatis. & ab euntib; benedicite m̄. Hoc tale ē. Oneroſa et grauiffima crimina que adherent huic ſcō. in multis erumnis ac miſeriis grauam ſupra modū multos homines. illis in cordib; ſuis dicentib; Heu heu q̄ fugiemus. Et tunc ecce erumne rixando illos expellunt a ſe. ita qd enā ipſi homines feſtinant ab eis recedere. quia in ſemetipſis ardeunt in corpore ſuo de grauedine flagelli manus dī. n̄ ualentes cū gaudio uiuere in ait.

uoluptate sibi qm dñs requirit eos. qd ē uocatio iustorū p diuersas ca lamitates in tenebrosis opib; noc tis peccatorū. Unde pharaō uicia sci licet diabolica uocant in clamo re criminatū et miseriarū moy sen idē homines illos quos dñs con stringit fortissimis dolorib; si ue spūalib; siue corporalib; et aaron uidelicet quos coerecet le uiorib; aduersitatib; in noctur no tēpore malorū opū conuoca tos. ipsis uicis in obpssione uo luptatis hominū dicentib;. Sur gite de carnali consuetudine urā et egrediemini de uetī habi tatione qm nobiscū habuistis. separantes uos a cōmuni pplo quē possidemus cū nos colit. et subtrahentes uos a sclarib; nego ciis quib; libentē adheremus. uos scilicet qui ceterū estis in nobis cū incaptiua nra fuistis. et filii dī uobiscū qui uident ipsū in agnitione ei. itaq; aliā uia re linquentes nos. & offerite uos incaptos deo in inexpugnabilib; causis quib; supastis. ut dicatis in desideris uris. Lenitate quoq; urām in ouili mansuetudine cū qua uobis durū ē nobiscū laborare qā uultis aliū dolorē sustinere sequendo agnū. et ue toriosissima arma in armis for titudine cū quib; nos supastis et quib; nos resistere nō possum. assumite in nouitate mris urē.

qm modo habere uultis et sepa ramini a nobis ut dudū uolui stis. cū nos acriter impugnastis. et cunctis ad patriā p qua dolo ris in animo urō. cōphendite aliā uitā quē uos ducit a nobis. atq; benedicite in laude dī pugna illā in qua abcessistis a sclarib; causis et negociis. Ego qñ omnipotens dñs ut pdictas oues conpello transire ad me. sic etiā columnas meas idē fortiores ce lestes heredes in fundamento casti gationis mee consolido. sedm nequiciā implicationis peccati in inuasionē puaricationis ade qua impugnant. quia stare nō possunt si eos grā mea nō confir mare. Quorū quidē alios qñ tam grande pondus nō grauat uiciorū leuiore castigatione castigo. quō si eos acriore uerbere con stringerē omnino deficiente spū suo caderent in despauo nē. qā afflatu maioris turbi nis diabolice suggestionis nō ca renant. Alios autē grauiore mo le in uarietate scissimorū morū et in supfluitate concupiscentia rū expugna diabolica oneratos. habeo in duricia constrictiōis grauissimorū dolorū. ut nō cecant a federe meo cui assistunt. me toto desiderio uolentes apphen dere atq; pcepta mea obseruare. quia si istos ut priores leniter castigare. ipsas correptiones me al pndit simo certa impugnat ies celestis me omni tate mri seductio re uolunt tes bonū d lant ame tū epulam cos delectat quorū alii ce te ac mdder uolunt nō ta odio et inu blandis uol licias et sua dunt fr nō deficiant creati s p m n absorber idcirco dabo na ipso. Ali tam inuim felis. et odi malū p mal re uilla inu si haberent sibi celestis u

 in hominib;
 ipis abstrah
 al magni quatinus se malū erigit te ipso. qui nant si fac

al p nichilo ducerent. quō grauis simo certamine antiqui serpentes impugnant. Sunt etiā quidā exu les celestis patrie quos nescio. q̄a me omnino relinquunt auidi tate m̄is sue. se ipsos rapaci rabie seducunt. nec me querentes nec sci re uolentes. s; in semetipsis suffocan tes bonū desiderū. ita q̄d n̄ postu lant a me ullū auxiliū. auare tan tū epulantes in propriis reb; suis. ut eos delectat. in carnalib; desideris.
Quorū alii ex his opant in superflua te ac indelectatione carnis q̄cqd uolunt. n̄ tam exultantes nūm in odio et in inuidia. s; uoluntant in blandis uoluptatib; habentes de licias et suauitatē carnis sue. q̄b; dimittit fruges t̄re in p̄sp̄itate. ut n̄ deficiant in paupertate q̄a tam creta s̄ p̄ me. et q̄a etiā p̄plm̄ meū n̄ absorbeant p̄ maliciā suā. atq; idecirco dabitur eis sedm̄ deside ria ipsorū. Alii uero s̄ tamē feroci tatis in inuidia amaritudinis felli. et odii ac inuidie reddentes malū p̄ malo. nec uolentes suffer re ullā iniuriā sibi illatā. ita ut si haberent honorē & diuitias sclī celestes uirtutes dirūperent in hominib; nec colerent in eis. unde ipsis abstraho fruges atq; diuiti as in magnis miseriis eos deiciens. quatinus se n̄ possint ad tantam malū erigere q̄mū ē in uolunta te ipsorū. quia diabolica opa p̄pe trarent si facultatē ad hoc habe rent. Sic obisto uis hominū. bonorū scilicet et malorū. recta men sura ponderans assensus eorū sedm̄ q̄d oculus m̄s uidet. cu piditates ipsorū. sicut etiā sapi entia testat̄ p̄ salomonē dicens.

Om̄s uis hominū patet oculo et sp̄itū ponderator ē dñs. Hoc tale ē. Om̄a m̄nera que spirat uiuens animus hominū in p̄sentia scientie sue in hoc q̄d homo habet circūtionē intel lectus utilitatis. scilicet fructuo sitas atq; inbecillitatis inuti litatis. hec s̄ apta conspectui om nipotentis dī. Sic p̄ om̄a uidet d̄s. et n̄ omnino quicquā ab scondit̄ aspectui diuinitatis ip suis. cū scit om̄a. sic uidelicet aspiciens uniuersa ut unāquāq; causā recte dispenset. Quom̄ ipse ē enī sp̄itū ponderator moleans eos in suauitate blan ditiorū et tranquillitātū. casti ganq; eos in tribulatione dolorū et miseriā. ut excruciant̄ ad rectā m̄surā. quā contra eū nec currendo nec fugiendo transcen dere ualent. n̄ q̄mū ipse p̄bat iuxta merita eorū. quō pondera tio ipsorū ē. q̄d in excussione re tributionis eorū siue in hoc sc̄lo siue in futuro ostendit̄ quom̄ d̄m coluerūt. Unde etiā ipsi sp̄e iuste ponderant̄. ita scilicet ut rationalitā hominis n̄ plus ele ueur in sup̄iora. nec plus de xxj.

primat inferiora. quā iusto iudicio suo reconpensat dñs. quō sic ipse resistit illi. qđ nulla anima ē tamē potestatis insupfluitate ullius rei. ut possit dō repugnare. qđ ipse cuncta rectissime di iudicat obsistens eis iusticia sua. cui resistere n̄ ualent. ut plus possint qm sit pmissionis ipsius. Nā ut plumbū iuste ponderat pecuniā. sic dñs equa libra bonis & malis tale obstaculū opponit. qđ nullom̄ possunt effugere equissimā normā iudicii ei. isti pmeritis suis glām et gaudiū uitę huius uero penā & merorē mortis recipientes. scđm qđ dñs acutissime p̄uidet incis. xx. 11

Quod autē p̄dicta imago inspicit homines illos qui de mundo uenientes in eodē edificio noua ueste induunt. hoc ē qđ scientia dī nouit eos qui p̄fidiā infidelitatis sue relinquentes. in potestate opis dī putā cōna nouū hominē in baptismo induunt. monens illos ne reuertant̄ retro incedentes ad diabolum. uel si in hoc deuauerint. ut redeant addm̄ creatorē suū. scđm qđ dicit unicuiq. ex in uerbis ammonitionis sue. ut supradictū ē. Qui autē acutas aures int̄ioris intellectus habet. hic in ardente amore speculi mei ad uerba hęc anhelat. & ea in conscientia animi sui conscribat. v. visio. v. part. .

Caput mirabilis forme angulo edificii acollo inpositū dñi tñs. alic

OS

hec

hec uidi. et ecce in septuaginta angulo conuinctionis duorū generū muri supradicti edificii apparebat uelut caput mirabilis forme ad angulo exterius in mobili acollo inpositū. tamē uidelicet altitudinis aīa. qm̄a erat altitudo ipsius anguli. n̄ tamē eū excellens. s; tantū patrum ei infūmitate coadequatū. Et idē caput erat ignei coloris rutilans ut flama ignis. tribilemque habens faciē hominis. atq. mira magna respiciens ad aquilonē. A collo autē & deorsū n̄ uidi ullā formā ei. quō reliquū corpus ipsius omnino absconsū et obstrusū fuit in p̄dicto angulo. Caput uero ipsū uidi quasi in dā formā humani capitis nec erub. obrectū ad instar uirilis forme. nec uelamine more muliebri. plus tamē uirile quā muliebri. multūq. tribile ad intueudū.

Habebat
dñs et candida
s; solum directū caput p̄celler maxilla lonē. scđ aguntur tationē
maxilla
tē. aliqñ uicm̄. at uenies. al ne cōsam
ulla uerba ip̄o in mo intū illu ale tendeb audim sed s qui u grauit pp̄t amo uē se offe delinquen gener par ter puri co penitencia autē nequi iudicio suo put hoc qđ nali angul generū mu apparent. o hēu dñi. qu bilis inq̄tan

136 Habeat autē tres alas mire latitudinis et longitudinis albās ut candida nubes. n̄ matū erectas. s; solummodo a se separatim in directū extēdas. ita tam ut idē caput eas aliquantū altitudine p̄celleret. quarū prima ad extra maxilla surgens tendebat ad aq̄ lonē. scda uero que & media erat a gutture ipsius dirigebat ad sep-tentrionē. tertia autē a sinistra maxilla extendebat ad occidentē. aliquādo magno t̄ore se mo-uent. atq; in easdē partes pec-tentes. aliquādo autē a percussio-ne cessantes. Et n̄ audiui idē caput ulla uerba p̄ferre. s; tantū in se ipso immobile p̄manens alis suis int̄dū illuc p̄cutiebat qd̄ et ipse ale tendebant ut dictū ē. Et iterū audiui sedentē in throno m̄ dicentē.

Os qui in ueteri p̄pto helū suū grauiter exerceuit in nouo p̄pter amorē filii sui m̄tē et sua uē se ostendit. n̄ qd̄ n̄c peccata delinquentiū dissimulans negli-genter paruipendat. s; qd̄ in dit̄ puri cordis int̄mā et uerā penitentiā expectet. indurati autē nequiciā n̄ tolerans iusto iudicio suo puniat. Unde et ca-pit hoc qd̄ uidet in septentrionali angulo coniunctionis duorū generū muri supradicti edifici apparent. ostendit insignificatio helū dñi. qui ē uindicta inflexibilis iniquitatis. nec ullā medicinā desiderantis. apte surgens in simulato misterio. uerbi dñi p̄figuras et p̄sonū patriarcharū & p̄phetarū in significationib; eorū p̄nunciat. Sic et idē helus informa uidet capitis. quō sup omnē timorē cognitus ē in seueritate ultionis sue. ut homo in facie sua cognoscit. ardetq; contra septentrionalē partē. quia ipse in dō uelocissimus et acer occidit diabolu & omne malū. eū etiā in abrahā et in moyse duē partes defensionis opantiū speculatiua scilicet sciētia du-arū optionis causarū. et genus humanū in ope dñi coniungunt. quō fortissime aduersus diabolu in sciētia boni et mali debet homo opari in omnib; causis p̄boni-tate patris. Preuaricationē autē que fit p̄speculatiua sciētiā in opib; hominū p̄cepta dñi transgrediētiū ulciscit helus dñi. ubi opatio n̄ ē indulgentie. ubi ē hoc. ubi uidelicet ubi nec ē timor dñi nec hominis. in agnitione dñi.

Et tale cor qd̄ ita in sordē iniqui-tatis obduratū et emortuū ē qd̄ nec uertet iudiciū dñi nec uultū hominis. hoc iusto iudicio confundit et deprimat ultione sua helus dñi in lege dñi. Quomodo.

Post constitutū p̄ceptū ubi fit p̄uaricatio legis. ē helus qui abstrahit iniusticiā cū retissimo iudicio. ipsa iniusticia abstracta inueteri testamento cū austeritate remunerationis in ceteriore homine cū transgressio legis corporaliter ulcerabatur i ipso. et post grām euēgiū ē idē helus p penitentiā atq; p mortē hominū ē ipse p penas et p tormenta gehēne. qā iniquitatis hominū conceptas et platas atq; contortas in opātib; ita examino qd eas ulciscor aut corporalit incorpore hominis aut in pena futuri sēi. aut ipse homo purgabit illas p penitentiā remissionis uiuentis in anima et corpore cū quib; etiā opatus ē eas. ut dicit in spū meo seruus mī iob. .iiij.

Cōmuto faciē meā. et dolore torqueor. Uerebar omīa opa mea. sciens qd n̄ parceres delin-quenti. Si autē et sic impius sū. quare frustra laboraui. Hoc tale ē. Inmutabo aspectū meū in tūo-rē. Quomodo. Cū certā scilicet hoc quod sū mutabilis et inuidans in sanguine uenarū mearū. ha-bens in me aliquādo delectatio-nē aliquādo etiā iracundiā. et aliquādo conterentē tristitiā. qd in me aspicio. quasi uidēā delectabilē faciē. cū hoc ipsū libenter pficerē. Et illud mutabo contra uoluntatē meā. conuer-tens me ad opus bone opationis. cumq; hoc fecero grauior in hoc flagello torqueor. qd me ipsū constringo. abstrahens me a cognoscibili faciē meā. quod ē opus uoluntatis mee. in contraria delectatione. adiungens me contrāplāne speculationi. dñm uidens in bona conscientia. et n̄ in concupiscencia carnis p qm illū n̄ adten-do. Et ab his duab; causis tamen oīa opa mea. Quomodo. Cū bonū op^o facio. uertor illud n̄ ē pfectū corā dō. qā illud pspicue n̄ inspicio s; obscure quasi in speculo. aliqn̄ do illud cognoscens in spū. aliqn̄ do etiā ignorans ab onere corporis mei. Malū autē opus cū facio. sū in confusione p conscientia qd sps mei. quō in interiori intellectu cognosco qd n̄ parcerē scientiā habentib; in peccatis. qd ē qñdo homo intelligit qd in ope suo contrariū sit dō. s; cū oportet purgari. uel ^{uel} actione incorpore. uel pena penitentie uel pena tortorū in alia uita. Et idō n̄ parcerē delin-quenti. si n̄ penitet. qā n̄ dat ei licentia peccandi ut peccet. s; cū oportet castigari. aut hic. aut illic.

 Qua ppter si sic impius sū. tamenq; obdurationis. ut ad hoc n̄ uelū molliri qd declinē a propriis reb; meis que s̄ peccata mea. ita ut n̄ aspiciā in magnū certamen illud mihi met ipsi repugnans. qd ego in fragilitate sū s; qd dō semp contrarius existo innotis causis meis. qā conceptus sū in peccatis semp cupiens opari iniquitatē.

137 nec metuens indicari a dño. q̄re tunc constrictus sū uanā uano la bore q̄d frequentē cū scientia qua dñm agnosco. in memetipso iniqui tati contra dico. Non autē tā impotens sū. ut ignore bonū et malū. Unde si intelligibile sensū a me repello. sic dicens. ig norō dñm. m̄dax sū. q̄a ipsa scien tia arguit me rephensibile q̄d debitor sū dō. cū incipio iniqui tate opari. S; n̄ in uanū laboro. cū in bona conscientia contra di co malū quō opus dī sū. unde et me conuerto ad ipsū ex hoc bonā mercedē recipiens. Itaq; ¹¹¹ ego dñs omnium testificor quia oportet hominē cū dolore gemit us. aut cū contritione peniten cie seu cū digna ultione pecca ta sua reddere. siue in hoc seculo. siue in futuro. ut p̄dictū ē. Quo modo. Qui peccant cū timore et dolore penitentie metuens peccata sua. merent̄ p̄ grām dī q̄d sepe surgunt a commissis suis in purgatione eorū. et cū tam eandē purgationē plenius n̄ in ueniunt in hoc seculo inueniunt eā in futuro ad uitā. Qui uero s̄ tam duricie cordis ut nec desi derent nec uelint scire in timore et dolore penitentie peccata sua. s; in tanta nequicia p̄manent q̄si n̄ sit eis dñs in timore habē dus. hi n̄ consequunt̄ purgatio nē peccatorū suorū. nec in hac uita nec in futura. s; habebunt penas si ne consolatione purgationis admi tā. quia de rationalitate sua ut crea ti s̄ p̄ me nolebant responsū reddere inobediente. Quomodo. Intellec tus in rationalitate hominis habet duas seminas in scientia boni et ma li. a quas p̄uenit duo responsa. bo nū scilicet et malū. Quomodo. Bo nū respondet malo. cū resistit ei in dō. Malū uero respondet bono. cū repugnat illi cū diabolo. S; hi in bono respondent malo qui se frenant semp in malo. ne delectent̄ in propriis delectationib; suis. Hi au tē in malo respondent bono. qui nullatenus se abstrahunt a prauis actib; quin epulent̄ cū concupis centiis suis. nolentes respondere uocationi mali. Quomodo. ^{vi. h.} homo ha bet in se duas uocationes. deside riū uidelicet fructus. et concupis centiā defectus. Quomodo. P̄ desi deriū fructus uocat̄ ad uitā. et p̄ concupiscentiā defectus. uocatur ad mortē. S; in desiderio fructus cū homo desiderat bonū opari. sic dicens in semetipso fac bona opa. hoc ē responsū contra malū ut deum illud. et faciat utile fructū. in concupiscentia uero de fectus. cū concupiscit p̄ peccare malū. sic etiā adhortans semetip sū. fac opus delectationis tue. hoc etiā ē responsū aduersus bonū. cū ille n̄ uult resistere uiginti sue. s; delectat̄ puenire ad defectū

v.

vi. h.

despiciens me in hoc responso. & habens me quasi illusorē. debituū honore. in n̄ exhibendo. Et quia auerit. se ppter timorē meū conuerit se ad illusionē in celestib; ut p manifestationē meā dicit psalmista dauid. Posuerunt in celū os suū. et lingua eorū transiit in terra. Hoc tale ē. Multi homines s̄ insipientes. in rationalitate nolentes intelligere innumerabilem timorem dñi et abstrahentes sibi in eis ipsi bona desideria. in quib; debent anhelare ad me. et cognoscere uerū dñm. recusantes assensu p̄bere bone scientie. que semp homini assistit ut bona opa op̄t in dō. s; frequent̄ amplectuntur amplectuntur amaritudinē in contradictione boni. cū se ipsos de spoliant. sibi in eis austeres bonū thesaurū. diuersitate iniquitatis sibi thesauribando. Et in his ponunt in celestia opa circūcionē. m̄tis sue. quasi os suū male aptū. destituentes ea in semetipsis prauē subsannationis. sic dicentes in corde suo. Hec opa uoluntas n̄re. tā licent̄ facere possum⁹ qm̄ illa que dicunt celestia. que antiqui nobis ignorantib; sedm̄ qd eis placuit instituerūt. Atq; tāli modo subsannant uerba et institutiones antiquorū patrū. que p̄ceste opus in me posite s̄. Unde etiā in gustu prauū opis uelut in lingua sua cōmouet se & transiit in audacia possibilitatis sue semetipso. na qd p̄uacenter adimplent uoluntates suas. nolentes habere constrictionē corporis sui contra uicia. s; absq; labore sui sp̄s uoluntatē in desideris carnis sue quasi in terra. qd ē diabolica seductio. Et qd uidet p̄dictū caput mirabilis forme. hoc ē qd in celo dñi s̄ mirabilia et admiranda iudicia dī. que a nullo hoīe. peccatis grauato sciri possunt. Qd uero eide angulo exterius in mobilitate a collo impositū ē. hoc ē quod helus m̄s aduersus diabolu. ut in ueteri testam̄to p̄bra hā et moysen ostensū ē. in specula tua scientia et humana excercitatione exterius apparet in uisione p̄p̄orū ut me timeant oculo ad oculū timorē meū sentientes. cū etiā iusticia mea minat̄ ad acquisitionē crudelissime iniquitatis satane. Atq; immobile p̄manet. quia dñs nec fallacib; nec adulato rib; sermonib; omnino moueri aut moliri potest a rectitudine iudicii sui de n̄ em̄datis criminib; uelut p̄ collū fortitudinis sue ad dō constitutē legi ad opandū hominib; infixū. reddens scilicet unicuiq; n̄ obseruanti p̄cepta legis emeritas penas sedm̄ mala opa ipsius in quib; sordens emareuit. repugnans etiā eadē excellentissima fortitudine sua quasi in uirtute colli sui diabo lo et sequentib. illū. se opponendo iniusticie eor. Est quoq. tamē al titudinis aīa qmā ē altitudo ipsi anguli. quō dē insūma iusticia ul tionis sue cuncta tēna supat. eadē ultione hui' altitudinis existente ut in pfiguratiōe abrahe et moy si plegē designata s opa hominū. quia diuinū iudiciū insūmāte speculatiue sciētie et actiui p plox. ut pferat. ignorantia ipsor. cū no lunt scire dīm. Non tam ipsū angu lū excellit. s. tantū parimodo ei in sūmāte coadequat. quō supna ultio actus hominū n̄ excedit plus et grauius in eis mala ulciscendo. qm̄ sunt merita eor. solūmodo eq̄ et iusto iudicio in excellētia iusti cie sue om̄a recte diiudicans. ut iterū in spū nouit psalmista dauid cū diceret. Cognoui dñe qā eq̄tas iudicia tua. et in ueritate tua hu miliasti me. Hor tale ē. p bonitatē tuā in memetipso cognoui dñe cū p peccatis meis n̄ occidisti. meis n̄ occidisti me n̄ auferens in inani ma et corpore efficacā opandi. qd nec ppter. ^{potentiam. nec propter} iustā tuā plus iudicas in scientib. aut in ignorantib. quā sunt merita eor. Bonū enī operor rixando contra me. malū uero facio p concupiscētia carnis. Et idō das bono mercedē et malo iudiciū. n̄ tam alter iudicans qm̄ qd equū et iustū ē. Quomodo. Si acrius iusta res. quā s opa hominū in pacta ac tione. n̄ ēē equitas iudici. Si uero tepide negligeres. na ut n̄ puocares ad penitentiā. qd n̄ ēē exquisitio in purgatiōe iniquitatis. tunc tu iu stus dē delinires et confoueres iniu sticiā. Mors enī erat quondā ama rissimū iudiciū in morte adē. nē autē reddita grā in penitentiā reuo cas hominē ad uitā. qd impossibile ēē fieri pullū nisi pte dīm. Et hoc ē iustissimū & equissimū iudiciū tuū. purgatio scilicet ad uitā cū grā. quō unicuiq. cause iuxta mēsurā meriti iudicia tua. Nā in ueritate s om̄a que facis. na qd nullā inimicitie ex eres supra modū fallacit. qā fallax ē qd plus in nimio uel minus in par uo ē. quā qd iustū ē. Sed tam pareis in multis miserationib. potencie tue. n̄ occidens ullū p possibilitatē clarissime uirtutis tue. hoc deputans ante ipso qd pareis p penitentiā. ideoq. de mīa tua humiliaui me dans glām nomini tuo in idum ciā turbatus in pmeritis culpis meis de tuo iudicio. Quod autē. ^{ru} idē caput uidet ignei coloris rui lans ut flama ignis. hoc ē qd in celo dñi ē igneū obstaculū rubens in fortissimo ardore ultionis sue. tribilē habens faciē hominis. quō oculi dñi facie ad faciē uident unāquāq. iniusticiā. na qd culpe diuersor. criminū n̄ relinquuntur neglecte ante dīm. quas n̄ terribilit inspiciat eas examinando iusto iudicio suo. et qā etiā monstruosa et horrenda s iniqua opa homi nis humanā faciē ostendemia in actib; carnaliū desiderioꝝ. Atq; in ira magna respicit ad aquilonē. quia dñs in uisione sua dedignant omne malū qđ orit̃ de suggestio ne diabolica. S; qđ a collo et deorsū n̄ uidet ulla formā ei qm̄ reliquū corpus ipsius omnino absconsū & obstrusū ē in p̄dicto angulo. hoc ē qđ in bello dī recta iudicia que uirtuose disp̄gunt praua opa ho minū p̄uersoꝝ nullus humanus sensus quasi finētenus p̄scrutari po test. quō occultant̃ et contegunt̃ in angulo speculatiue scientie & opis hominū. ita qđ nec uidēri nec cōphēdi ulla scrutatione ualent nisi qđ aliquādo cognos cunt̃ cū ostendit̃ res gesta in cau sa ultionis dī. ut facies hominis uidet̃ scđm̄ desideria uoluntatis ipsius. Unde etiā in ipsa ultione n̄ ē ulla simulatio alicuius facilita tis. nisi semp iustū iudiciū scđm̄ peccata hominū. quō crimina eoꝝ n̄ negligunt̃ indiscussa ut p̄dictū ē. quia helus dñi examinatio ei ē.

xiii. Quod uero caput ipsū uidet̃ quasi nudā formā humani capitis. hoc ē qđ idē helus dñi nul li mortalitati subiectus ē. p̄manēs uidelicet nudus ab omni subiecti one debilitatis. iuste diiudicans opa hominū. Nec erub; obrectū ad instar uirilis forme nec uelami ne more muliebri. quō ipsi n̄ ē aliqua sollicitudo sensus. sibi quēquā supiorē ulla uirili fortu tudine debellare. nec ei inē ulla feminea mollicies timidi animi. se aduersa n̄ posse supare. Est plus tam uirile qm̄ muliebre. q̄a foris sima uirtus dī magis ē in uirili ui riditate. qm̄ sit in mollicie feminee negligentie. mutūq; tribile ad in tuendū. quō idē helus tribilis et metuendus ē omni creature. cū ip sa ē cū sentiens ingesta causa ultio nis ei. Sed qđ habet tres alas mire latitudinis et longitudinis. albas ut ē candida nubes. hoc ē. in explicabilis uirtutis scē trinita tis expansio. quā nullus hominū cōphēdere p̄ualet in latitudine gl̄e sue. nec in longitudine pote stas ei. in multa suauitate et cla ritate diuinitatis fulgens. rectaq; ultione sibi subiciens m̄tes homi nū. in magna diuersitate ut nu bes discurrentiū. Que n̄ s̄ in altū erecte s; solummodo a se separatim in directū exēte. ita tam ut idē caput eas aliquantulū altitudi ne p̄cellat. quia ultio dñi n̄ ele uatur ulla arrogancia s; coaptat se unicuiq; cause scđm̄ merita ex tenta iusto iudicio correptionis sue. sic tam ut possibilitas po tencie dī q̄si incapite ei dē ultio nis sue humana opa que uera trinitas n̄ tollerat indiscussa in altitudine fortitudinis sue p̄ce dat n̄ tam ea tā acriter ulciscens et conterens ut posset eadē pos sibilital potestatis ei. Et ala prima adextera maxilla surgens tendit ad aquilonem. quod deus iusto iudicio primū adextera saluationis parte in filio suo deuicit diabolum et omne malū. Secūda uero que et media ē agnūre ipsius dirigit ad septentrionem. quā post saluationē que in filio dī facta ē & quasi in me dio iā roborata fide gustataq; dul cedine electorū. pīpīos etiā fugauit rugiēte inimicū. eos eruens de fan cib; illi. Tercia autē a sinistra maxil la extendit ad occidentē. qm̄ ab elec tis dī satana fugato etiā a sinistra p̄ditionis parte in filio p̄ditionis omnino comteret. mundo iā in occa sū terminū sui tendente. Et aliquādo magno t̄ore se mouent atq; in eas de partes p̄cutiunt. quā p̄ribile atq; p̄formidabile iudiciū omni creature belis dñi in uisionē mo uetur. ibi exercens iudicia p̄cussio nis sue ubicūq; iusto iudicio placue rit diuine maiestati. Ubi enī timor et amor atq; honor dī in reueren tia fidelit̄ habet. ibi dñs mitē & sua uē se ostendens. uisionē suā n̄ exer cet. duos autē & rebelles t̄ribilit̄ et iuste castigans. Vnde prima ala uisionis mee p̄cutit et abiicit homines illos in abyssū p̄ditionis. q̄ ita indurati s̄ sup duriciā lapidū ut interiorib; oculis dedignando semp̄ despiciant iusticiā meā. retro respicientes p̄ scientiā intellectus sui. plusq; consentientes carnalib; desi derius atq; diabolicis suasionib; qm̄ uolentes scire uerā iusticiā et qm̄ ullo consensu suo aut p̄admonitio nē meā aut p̄ hominis exhortationē reueri uelint de sua iniquitate sic eruciantes sp̄m scientie sue. quā magis notant et faciunt iniusticiā diaboli. quā iusticiā meā. Hi infundunt in corda sua q̄si resolutū plumbū. idē dissoluta desideria prauē molliciei. mittentes illud uehit ad stabiliendā duriciā ferri. uidelicet obliuionis dī. sic indurati q̄si sunt ferrei. ita qd nec causa dī nec hominis sibi met aut ulli partant in iniquitate. Sup istos clamant et conquerunt̄ elem̄ta cū reliqua creatura. qd tā uilis na tura hominis in breuissimo tēpore suo tā rebellis ē dō. cū ipsa semp̄ in timore et reuerentia p̄cepta dñi p̄ ficiant. Unde & sup hominē terri biliter uociferant̄. Quom̄. Non sic qd elem̄ta clament in uoce aut conquerant̄ in scientia rationalis creature. s̄. qd scdm̄ modū suū uociferant̄ in streptu sonitū et qd querimonias p̄ferunt in timo re t̄rorū. ut ea cū alia creatura in stū dī iudiciū inducit sup hoīes ipsi rebelles existentes. illa n̄ alit̄ stantia nec alit̄ se in semetipsis mu tamtia. quā ea iussione sua uertit diuina potestas. Unde tā crudelit̄ isti indurati homines. imitantur satanan. qui in duricia iniquita tis sue noluit subdi dō creatori suo. p̄pt̄ qd p̄it ab omni beati

xv.

xvi.

dine: cū quo et ipsi bibunt sequen-tes illū. Media autē ala heli mei cecidit: rabidos homines. & unū quodque: p̄sumptuosū malū quod sciunt ac temere faciunt homines. quod se primū crexit in homine in sanguine abel. quē frater suus ^{ob hoc} habebat: quia p̄pter oblationē substantie ipsius quā in bona uoluntate distribuit dō carus erat: et quod se etiā crexit in pharaone qui inmirabilibus: meis admonitus ē ita quod exterius int̄ore meo inuitus di-misit: pplm meū isrl̄ quē merū p̄- rabie retrahere uoluit: p̄pter quod illū helus m̄s deglutit: et quod se etiā meo dē pplō meo crexit qui me cognoscens atq; mirabilia mea ui-dens: idolū in ore adorauit: unde corona de capite illius cecidit: ita quod eis lex dī facta ē corruptibilis induas: lapideis tabulis. & aliis his similibus: p̄pter quē de gl̄a sua et felicitate ceciderūt: hec om̄ia uleiscentē ultione mea. Unde etiā moy-ses famulus m̄s. de eadē contraria plebe mihi multociens aduersante in isto helo meo fecit uindictā ex uoluntate mea cū efficaciter diceret electis meis: ut occideret unusquisque: fratrem et amicum & proximum suū: et merū cū ardentē iudicib. xx. eidē ppli ait: quod occideret unusquisque proximos suos qui in iacta eēt be-elphégor: ubi ultus sū me occisa iniquitate illa pugnante contra me. Sed inabel primū orta iusticia dī p̄ ipsū inuenti s̄ multi alii electi ex omnibus: his malis et pueris generationibus: qui collegerūt et coluerunt subtiliora p̄cepta mea ut filii isrl̄: inter quos etiā ortus ē iustus ac merorū desiderantes humanitatē filii mei. Facta autē eidē filii mei ma-nifestatione qua misi eū natū ex uirgine: coquebat & sa liebat om̄is iusticia legis: dulcis et suavis eis: facta omni pplō credenti in me: ap̄lis ueritatis ipsā ueritatē manifestantibus: itaq; in omnibus istis p̄dictis generationibus: scient transgressā iusticiā meā uleiscebāt et uleiscent: hic helus m̄s: quia d̄s qui erat tunc ē et nunc: ac semp p̄manebit: atq; helus m̄s qui tunc erat ē & nūc et semp stabit usq; dū finiant tribus & ppli: n̄ finiente iusticia dī: om̄e rubigi-nē iniusticie discentiente. xx.

Propter quod etiā in hoc eodē he-lo meo hanc iniquitatē aufero: illū uidelicet deiciens qui canino more abhominat florentē in me ecclesiam: aut qui p̄rabie iniquitatis sue destruit constitutā p̄ me dedica-tionē uel alias constitutas iusticias ad templū meū pertinentes: que fortiter surrexerūt in p̄significatione serui mei iacob: ut hec scriptura ha-bet. Surgens ḡ iacob mane tu-lit lapidē quē subposuerat capiti suo & crexit in titulū: fundens oleū de sup̄: & appellauitq; nom̄ urbis bethel. Hoc tale ē: iacob surrexit mane: quia ipse ortus ē tēpestiuis 140 amator ueracis iusticie inconstitudo tem ~~tem~~ plo cui ipse conueniens nom in ~~tem~~ posuit quo de illo debuit oriri rectissimu templu uir go scilicet maria de qua sol iusticie effulsit et tollens lapide que infigu ra altaris sub posuerat supiori capi tu suo idē xpo ut in nomine ipsius qui ē uera petra scificaret et scifica tus nominaret quia unaqueq; scifi cacio altaris subposita ē potesta ti om̃ip̃is dī capiti om̃iū fidelū erexitq; illū ^{in templum} libri uite et in p̃sonā p̃cipui odoris celestis ierlm̃ quia ut xpc ē caput membrorū suorū in sup na ierlm̃ sic ē unū qd q; scificatū al tare excellentior pars tēpli sui et fuso desup oleo in significatione crismatis qd ē effusa grā dī om̃ip̃is in scō baptismo et appellauit scifica tū locū illū domū et tēplū dī scdm nom̃ ciuitatis celestis ierlm̃ que ui uens tēplū dī uiuentis. Hoc itaq; exemplo et significatione erigen dus ē lapis in tēplo in nomine meo ordinando ipsū uidelicet tēplū idecirco signatū cū lapide qā ego firma petra sū ad que oīs iusticia et lex xpianorū p̃tinet. Ubi cūq; enī fuerit scificatus locus ubi corpus fi lii mei immolandū ē ibi uolo ēē la pide in nomine meo signatū qā ego ueracissima fortitudo sū etiam si ibi ex aliqua impossibilitate n̄ po terit esse templū quo seruus m̃s ia cob erexit lapide in sua p̃figuratio ne in nomine meo ut dictū ē quia et filius m̃s de stirpe illius incarnat ē.

Templū autē tale m̃ dedicatū n̄ debet ēē uacuu huius negocii quin postulet causā constitutionis sue que adheret sibi de labore mi nistantis ei p̃p̃li sicut etiā celestis ierlm̃ cū capite suo xpo n̄ uult ca rere iusticia sua semp aspiciens in labores filiorū suorū quos susceptura ē indō. Quom̃ ut se abstrahant a dia bolica seruitute se constringentes a uoluntariis desideriis carnis sue et se affligentes contra semet ipsos in abscissione p̃p̃iarū rerū oba more celestiu n̄ eis om̃ib; utentes s; sibi met aliquas subtrahentes atq; dō offerentes ad honore ipsius sicut etiā p̃currens seruus m̃s ia cob instituit decimā om̃is sub stantie sue cū dicebat ut iterū scriptū ē. Quētorūq; que de deris mihi decimas offerā tibi.
Hoc tale ē ex omni qd mihi de deris offerā tibi decimā partē quia hoc lex tua ē primū scili cet in anima mea o d̃s m̃s absci dens ab ea p̃p̃riā uoluntatē meā offerens tibi contra me iusticiā tuā et postea decimā partē om nis substantie mee qm̃ possideo sup t̃ram. Quid ē hoc. Om̃is scilicet fidelis homo qui cōp̃hensus ē in de cimū ordinē sup̃norū ciuiū debet semp ad tēplū meū decimā partē dare substantie sue p̃p̃t̃ restitutio nē illā qd computatus ē in decimū numerū numeratorū idē in scientia xx.iii.

xx.iii.

di existentium. & aduersum templum in delictis celestibus ierusalem primum.

xxv.

Qui autem obliti amoris mei templa in nomine meo dedicata praebe iniquitatis suae destruunt. uel qui dedicationem eorum secundum exemplum de iacob ortam demunt. sanctificata loca sanctificata loca scilicet polluendo. seu cum sanguine homicidii. seu cum pollutione seminis illud educen do in adulterio aut fornicatio ne. uel qui in summo sacrificio ne gligunt instituta dedicationem antiquorum patrum absque signato la pide quem iacob erexit in sua presig nificatione uel qui destruunt constituta prae iusticia in decimis aut in substantiis templi mei. oue miseris. oue miseris. oue miseris ho minibus. illis. qui se tam turpiter seducunt & tam pueri ante oculos maiestatis meae existunt. uidelicet ut dictum est instituta mea negligentes que omnia de ueteri lege translata sunt. quia de ueteri testamento plata est noua lex in filio meo secundum mediam grae. & quia de omni iusticia legis et prophetarum. quod erat minus factum est maius in eodem filio meo. qui omnia signa priorum patrum. que ipsi ab seconse in umbra dixerunt manife ste ostendit in semetipso in omni iusticia. Et qui hec omnia desti tuunt. ita quod ipsi cibum uitae qui de utroque testamento factus est. de dig nando sicut lutum conculcant. & canib; et porcis ac aliis pecoribus.

xxvi.

idem prauis hominibus diuidunt cum magis dantes paganis mor rib; et uane igno ramie quam in omnipotentem deum. atque in usum suum secundum uoluntatem suam cum paramis. hos uel sem eorum et ego de struam. eos percipiens de summo gradu usque ad infimum. & dedi meum in paupertate. in uisione huius heli mei. Gereia uero ala ultionis meae cedit & credulos et incredu los. in suis impiis & iniustis operibus. ipsa percipit credulos non operantes in uoluntate sua bona et iusta opera qui bene uident fidem et quibus nota est iusticia dei et tamen sedent in tenebrositate malorum operum. ge mentes ignoranter post tenebras iniquitatis. uolentes bachari in peruersitate. quod eos tamen non permittit deus secundum uoluntatem ipsorum perficere. hoc idem abscondens illis ultione sua dum sic sunt obscurati. quod obliti sunt eius. ita ut ab eo liberrime re cederent. In credulos autem cedit in infidelitate eorum ita quod etiam eis abstrahit iniquitatem ipsorum cum retributione ultionis. cum non per mittunt malum hoc perficere quod libenter facerent. unde & ma lignus diabolus superatus in bea titudine fidelium hominum ante oculos dei semellatum uellet istos trahere in tenebras mortis secundum nequiciam suam. sed eos amplius comprehendere non potest nisi ut sunt opera illorum. Sed quedam alia mis

xxvii.

ra hominū ē sup̄ t̄am qui habent p̄sp̄ritatē in forma sensu sp̄s. ita q̄d sapientes s̄ ad recordationē dī scdm̄ uoluntatē suā accensi cū sci entia sensus. unde tunc in semet ipsis p̄sūptuose habere uolunt scientiā sapientie facientes quic quid cognauerint et miscentes in ficiā cū iniquitate s̄. stulti s̄ in sa pientia. quō notant semetipsos ita q̄si pleni et p̄fecti sint ad habē dū et cōphendendū atq. ad acq̄ rendū plenitudinē uoluntatis sue scdm̄ arbitriū suū. q̄cquid exco gitaauerint. Et dū alas suas leuare uolunt p̄ potestātē suā in p̄uincis et ciuitatib. ac in alius locis atq. in aliis causis. in quib. tunc occupati s̄ cū impio. in quo nolunt habere intelligibilē mensurā in dīm aspi cere quid faciant. tunc effundunt et abiciunt ante oculos dī p̄pter impia & iniusta iudicia illorū q̄s ipsi prius diiudicabant. in quib. nolebant timorē dīm sciētē habere.
Et sic p̄stū helū meū facti erunt in planctū magnū. et inflebiles uo ces corā omī p̄plo qui uident et audiunt iudicabile tēpus iniq̄ tatis eorū quib. dā uidelicet ex ip sis adhuc in hac uita in multis mi seris multa defectus ipsorū uiuen tibus. quib. dā etiā pessima morte indiuersis passionib. morentib.
Ita diuersa uicissitudine ulcis citur & exurit helus m̄s omnē in iusticiā. quia illa ē contra me.

Nunc autē q̄d n̄ audis p̄dictū caput ulla uerba p̄ferre s̄. tan tū in se ipso immobile p̄manens. alis suis in dū illuc p̄cutere quo & ipse alē tendunt ut dictū ē. hoc est q̄d in helo dīm n̄ ē clamor mi nantis uocis et in supbiā se erigen tis s̄. in potestate fortitudinis sue et in rebus iudicis suis in mobilis p̄ sistens. ut uione sua post rabiē opū emeritas res absq. timore dīm ge stas confundendo et comterendo cas. scdm̄ extensionē utiōnis iudi ci sui ulciscit. ut tibi o homo ue racissima manifestatione p̄mon stratū ē. Et quia d̄s iustus ē omnē iniusticiā examinari oportet p̄ ui tū. quō ipse d̄s bene nouit discre tā positionē quē ē in scientia hoīs.

Nam scientia in hoīe ē quasi spe culū. in quo latet desiderū si ue bonū siue malū uolentis. Unde homo inter has duas partes posit. inclinat se uoluntatē suā ad par tē illā quā desiderat. S. homo q̄ uerit se ad bonū. illud fidei ope amplectens p̄ adiutoriū dī mer cedē beate remunerationis lau dabilē accipiet q̄a malū spre uit et bonū fecit. qui uero se in clinat ad malū. hoc p̄uersa ac tione de gluciens. p̄ suggestionē diabolicā. penas iuste retribu onis inde miserabilē incurret. quō bonū neglexit & malū p̄petrauit. Idcirco in multa de uotione et humilitate se homo xxxix.

xxx.

xxx. i.

subiciens dō fideliter opet salutē suā. que de summo bono emanat. ita ut anima ipsius interiori sentate in ebrietate. quia in bene disposita et recte ordinata concussione seruit crea-tori suo. Quomodo. Quo metus idē inceptio angustie facit timore. timor autē concitat tremorē. p que debet homo opari qd iustū ē.
 Quomodo. Qd homo metu angustari incipit. hoc p donū sps scī de rationali sensu habet. ppt qd etiā nullomodo omittere potest. quin dīm sciat. illaq. scientia quā habet in dīm facit in ipso timorē. in hoc qd incipit timere scdm ea que dī s.
 Et si hec habet cū studio sciens dīm. tunc concitat cū iterū ignea grā in xpo ammonens ut deinde in-cipiat tremere. quatinus pēpunc-tionē tratur ut iusticiā dī fide-liter opetur. Nunc ergo o hoīes intelligite et discite. unde sunt hec.
 Quid ē hoc. Ds ē. qui in uobis qd bonū ē opatur. Quomodo. Ipse ita uos constituit. ut prationale sensū in opib. uris cū semant. que sapient cū discretionē factis. Irrationale enī animal facit. opa sua sine intellectu et sapientia ac sine discretionē atq. uerecundia. nec scit dīm quia irrationale ē. s. tan-tū sentit cū quō illius creatura ē.
 Rationale uero animal qd homo est. habet intellectū et sapientia discretionē. & uerecundia in opib. suis. que rationabilit opat. qd ē

xxx. ii.

prima radix. quā grā dī fixit in omnē hominē cū anima adiuuendū excitatū. Hec ergo p dicta uigent irationality. quia in his omnib. homines dīm scientes s. ut ea que iusta s. uelint.
 Unde ebulliens & pfectū opus atq. pspērū in bona uoluntate hominis. quod ipse homo amplectit in saluatore suo in filio uidelicet dī. p quē pater omīa opa sua in spū scō opat. hoc deinde incendit & admonet ignea grā data in xpo ihu. Ideoq. in gan-dio sps scī faciat homo opa iusticie. n dubitans in puerisā mūstinatione idē ne dicat. qd aliqd sibi de sit in omnib. his. aut in prima scilicet radice p donū dī homini primitus in-posita. aut in ignea grā sps scī eandē radicē iterū in admonitione tangentis. ita ne puerse corruens deinde angustiet in his que ppt repēnsibile. impetū fecit quāsi in interiori sua radice quicquā minus habuerit. sei-licet ne postquā ceciderit in necessitate positus murmuret sic dicens in semetipso. Heu heu qd feci. qd opa mea n potui puidere in dō. Et etiā sine pondere infidelitatis in ce-dat. ita ut n diffidat dō in opib. suis. s. ut sit securus sine lacrimabili querela prauū opis. Qui autē acutus et aures interioris intellectus habet hic in ardente amore speculi mei ad uerba hec anhelat. & ea in conscientia animi sui conscribat.

P ost
hec ui
di

inter angulū septentrionālē & an-gulū occidentālē murū parietis p̄fati edificiū in interiore ei⁹ parte totū arcuatū sedm̄ modū cancelloꝝ n̄ tamen ap̄tū ut cancellos s; integrū habentēq; in singulis arcub; q̄si picturā hominū. In exteriorē autē parte ei⁹dē muri uidi alios duos minores muros longitudinis spaciū q̄d fuit ap̄dicto angulo sep-tentrionali usq; ad angulū occiden-tālē. ipsiq; angulis ex utraq; parte sui coniunctos iuxta modū testudinis. Altitudo uero eorundē duoz minoz muroꝝ erat cubitoꝝ triū. Latitudo autē inter interiorē arcuatū murū et mediū erat cubiti unū atq; int̄ exteriorē & eundē mediū fuit latitudo unū palmi q̄si pue-rilis manus. Intra idē quoq; edificiū uidi sex imagines ante predictū arcuatū murū sup̄ pauim̄- tum ipsius edificiū stantes. tres scilicet iuxta se in fronte ei⁹dē muri p̄pe angulū qui respiciebat ad septentrionē & tres etiā simul in fine parietis ei⁹dē secus angu-lūm qui tendebat ad occidentē. om̄s picturā marci. ei⁹dē muri inspicientes. In ipso autē fine ei⁹dē parietis uidi aliā imaginē intra idē muri inspicientes. In ipso autē fine ei⁹dē parietis uidi aliā ima-ginē intra idē edificiū sup̄ lapidē unū in modū sedis in pauim̄to positū sedentē & lauis dextrū ad murū inclinantē. faciē uero suā ad co-lumnā uere trini. tatis uertentē.

Sed in eodē fine uidi alterā imaginē sup̄ eundē murū in altiori loco stantē. & etiā ad p̄dictā columnā uere trinitatis uersā. In his ergo inmaginib; conspexi similitudinē talem. Indute erant ut priores imagines quasi sericis indumentis et candidis calciamentis. excepta illa quē ad dextris medię harū triū erat. quasi in extrema parte ei⁹dē parietis uiderā quē tota tante puritatis tanteq; claritatis exiit ut p̄multo splendore nullā ei⁹ formā p̄fecte intueri possē. & excepta illa quē sup̄ murū stabat ut dictū ē. quē nigris calciamentis calciata fuerat. s; om̄s sine palliis erant p̄ter me-diā illarū triū quē in prima parte ei⁹dē muri stabant. quē pallio induebat. Due quoq; earundē triū sup̄ioꝝ quē ad dextrā scilicet et ad sinistram medię imaginis stabant & due triū inferioꝝ media uidelicet & quē ad sinistram ei⁹ erat. n̄ habebant muliebria uelamina in caprib; suis. nudis tantū albis crinib; flantes. Media autē trium priorū & illa que sup lapidē iuxta murū sedebat erant uelato capite candida uelatura capitis. ut mos est mulierū. Eadē quoq; media tri um supiorū & que ad dextrā ei sta bat. uestite erant tunicis candidis.

Sed uidi talē dissimilitudinē earū.
Imago que stabat in medio trium supiorū habebat in capite suo inmo dū corone circulū croci coloris dex tra parte insculptū. semp accende.
Et uidi qd ad dextrā eiusdē imagi nis columba aduolabat. ore suo spirans in eandē scripturā. Atq; ea dē imago dicebat. Ego p̄fusa sū p̄teriorē midiam. ex qua ori tur riuulus qui nullatenus abscon dē uult pecuniā. nec aurū. nec p̄cio sos lapides. nec margaritas corā egenis et necessitatib; eorū necessariā substantiā n̄ habentib; ac p̄pterea plorantib;. Nunc consolabor illos et semp reficiā paup̄tate ipsorū p̄ ter amorē filii dī qui suauis et mi tis ē. ac qui bona sua distribuit in animas iustorū tangens uulnera peccatorū eorū p̄pter penitentiā. Alia uero imago que stabat ad extris ei habebat in pectore suo quasi leo

Leonē tamquā speculū lucidū. et a col lo suo uelut serpentē pallidi colo ris in torta flexura uirgule ad pec tus etiā ipsius dependente. Et ait lucidū leonē inspecio. et p̄pter amorē ei do. Ignitū autē serpentē fugio. s; serpentē in ligno penden tē ditigo. Tercia autē imago que a sinistris ei erat. tunica simili iacine to rubri coloris induebat. Et ad pectus ipsius apparuit angls ex utroq; latere suo alā unā habens. ita ut ala dextra ad dextrū hu merū eiusdē imaginis extenderet et ala sinistra ad sinistrū humerū illius. Et ipsa imago dicebat.

Anglicum habeo consorcium. nec cū dissimulantib; se ypocritis ambulare uolo. s; epulor cū iu stis. Imago quoq; que fuit media trium inferiorū induta erat tunica croci coloris. Et sup dextrū hume rū ei candidissima columba sta bat. spirans ore suo in dextrā aurē illius. In pectore uero ipsius. mon struosū et informe caput hoīs ap paruit. iacebant quoq; sub pedib; eius quasi species hominū. concusca torū et contritorū ab ipsa. In manib; autē suis habebat cartā expansā et ex una parte uidelicet uersus celū septē lineis inscripta. quā legere uolui. s; n̄ potui. Et dixit Virga amare correptionis et flagelli eē uolo contra illū cū uolo contra illū mendacē qui filius diaboli ē. quarū etiā idē diabolus p̄secutor ineffabilis iusticie dī ē. Unde illi contraria et molesta causa sū. quō nūquā sū inuenta more ipsius. ita qd et ego cū de ore meo sicut mori ferū uenenu exspuo quarū ipse me nūquā in astina sua inue 113.

nit. Ipse ē etiā mihi pessimū ac mo-lestissimū malū omnium malorum. quō omne malū ab ipso ortū ē. Propterea abicio & conculco eū inamabili iustitia dī. quē mihi incessabiliter sine fine amabilis ē. cuius etiā su-stematrix & ductrix ego sū. quā sup me solidabit & constabit omne edificiū uirtutum dī quē edifi-cant in altitudine. O fortissime & nobilissime dē. adtūde. Altera autē imago. quē ad dexterā ei⁹ erat. faciē habebat anglicā & eximī. latere suo uolantē alā unā. inspecie tam hominis ut ceterē uirtutes apparent. Et ait. Ego repugno diabolico certamini quod se erigit contra me. p̄tinaenter dicens.
 Non possū sufferre ullā tribulatio-nē. s; omnia mihi contra uolo abstra-here de me. Nullū timebo. Quē timere. Neminē timere uolo. Sed qui hoc malū dicunt abiciēt p̄ me. quā posita sū semp letari sempq; gaudere in omnib; bonis quā dñs ihc ē remissor & consolator omnis doloris. quō & ipse dolorē p̄tulit in corpore suo. Et q̄a ipse etiā ē iusta correctio. ideo et ego uolo me illi coniungere sempq; ipsū portare abiciens de me odium & inuidiā ac omnia mala. Uolo quoq; semp faciē letā intua iusticia habere o dē. S; tertia imago quē stabat ad sinistram eius. induebat tunicā alba uiridi colo-re distincta. Habebat autē in ma-nib; suis modicū uasculū pallidi splendoris multā lucē ut fulgur ex se reddentē. ita quod eadē lux in faciē & circa collū ipsius magninis lucret. Et dicebat. Ego fe-lux sū. Dñs enim xp̄e ihc facit et parat me pulchrā et albā. cū illud mortiferū consiliū diaboli effugio quod semp ruminat infelicitatē illā scilicet quod dē abiciēt & diabolus malis opib; adtrahit. Hunc satanan fugio hunc abicio ipsūq; mihi semp molestū habeo. quā amatore illū desidero quā assi-due amplectar & quē cū gaudio habeā in omnib; & sup omnia. Imago uero quē in fine huius parietis sup lapidē sedebat. induta erat tunica sub nigra. In dextro autē humero suo habebat modicā crūcē inposita imagine ihu xp̄i. quē hac et illac uersabat. Et quasi ex nubib; effulsit in pectus ei⁹ quidā splendor mire claritatis a se in multos radios diuisus. ut splendor solis a se diuidit eū p̄ parua et multa foramina alicuius rei fulget. In dextera quoq; manu modicū lignū in modū flabelli habebat. ex cuius summitate tres ramusculi miro modo cū flore pullulaue-rant. Habebat etiā in gremio suo minutissimos lapillos omnium gē-marū quos multa sollicitudine & diligentia considerabat. ueluti creator res suas diligenter con-siderare solet. Et dixit. Ego mater uirtutū iusticiā dī in omib; rebus semp habeo. Nā in spūali miliciā & in seclari streptu. intra con-scientiā meā dīm meū semp ex-specto. Non damno n̄ conculco n̄ sperno reges duces & p̄sides ac ce-tera seclaria magisteria. quae ab au-tore omnium rerū ordinata s̄. Quo-modo licitū ē. ut eū in cinerē spneret. Crucifixus dī filius conuer-tit se ad om̄s. eos scdm iusticiā et iudiciā suā monens. Ego etiā unā quāq; ordinationē & institutionē eius. scdm uoluntatē ipsius habere uolo. Illa autē imago quae in eodē fine sup murū stabat nudū caput & nigros ac crispōs crines habebat. faciēq; obscurā indita quoq; erat uaria tunica. plurimo colore intexta. Et uidi qd eandē tunicā et calciāmā suā exuit stans nuda. Et subito crines ac facies ei resplenderēt in pulchritudinē albedinis et nouatus ut iā nati in-fantis. atq; p̄totū corpus suū effulsit ut purus et lucidus splendor elucet in claritate. Tunc etiā uidi in pectore ei splēdidissimā crucē cū imagine xpī ihu ^{sup} arbusculam inter duos. flores lili et rose stantē posita. qui se sursum ad eandē crucē aliquamulū recuruabant.

 Uidiq; qd exuta tunicā atq; calciāmā suā fortiter excutiebat. ita qd puluis multus ab eis exeuteretur. Et ait. Exuo uetus te flamentū. et induo nobilē filiū dī cū iusticiis ei insēntat. et ueritate.

 Propter qd reparata sū in bonis. et mu-tata de uicis. Unde & tu dīs m̄s de uicta iuuentutis mee & ignorantias meas ne memineris. neq; uindictā sumas de peccatis meis. Et cū hec ad-tenuis inspicere. iterū qui sedebat in throno dixit ad me. Nullus fi-deliū qui humiliter iussu dō obedire dubitat humano magisterio subiacere. quātū p̄ spm sc̄m regimen in pp̄lo p̄p̄t efficacitā ~~uoluntatis~~ uol-untatis iuuentū dispositū ē. illudq; in ecclasticis obseruationib; futurū et fideliter firmiterq; habendū in antiquo pp̄lo p̄figuratū ē. Hinc etiā qd uidet inter angulū septentrionālē & angulū occidentalem murū parietis p̄fati edificii in in-teriore ei parte totū arcuatū scdm modū cancelloꝝ n̄ tamen aptū ut cancellos; integrū. hoc ē qd ab abrahā et a moyse diabolo re-pugnantib; q̄si in angulo respiciente septentrionē usq; ad uerā trinitatē quae apte declarata ē in uera et catholica fide. cū ad dō patre filius dī missus in mundū doctrinā suā habundantē emisit in fine tēporū quasi ad angulū respicientē ad occidentē. erat murus idē israeliticus pp̄s in lege iusticie dī constitutus opans in constructione bonitatis patris om̄pis scilicet in ueteri testam̄to frenatus & sibi coniunctus. quā post ostensionē aspnatus quae in bello dñi excitata ē. pñstatio nes ueterū pñstatiōnū pñstatiōnū p signata s̄ regimina nouarū dig nitatū. Nā uetus testamētū ten debat usq; ad nouū. ex se germi nans multo maiora pcepta legis noui testamēti quā primū orta essent in ipso. ita qđ de minore factū ē maius de minore uidelicet doc trina ueterū pceptōz maiōz et laciōz & doctrina nouōz. cū ue tus testamētū solumodo eēt quasi fundamentū primitiū positiū sup qđ edificata ē pfun dissima sapientia omīs doctrine. manifestata in incarnatione fi lii dī. tendens ab eadē ueteri le ge circūcisionis. usq; ad nouam regulā baptismi maiorib; pcep tis ornata. Et idē murus plebs uidelicet iudaica in interiore par te intellectus sui in quo aīa ho minis dñi cognoscit ē ubiq; ar cub; circūdata idē circūquaq; psignificationē magistrū p cursoz suoz pcepta legis dī cla mantū & sibi ostendentū ual lata ut minores pmaiores qñ ppeccellentes sibi hoīes ornari solēt iuxta constructionē cancelloz que ē tipica pfigura tio sps scī duras literas pforan tis in incarnatione filii dī. qui cancellos midie sue petentib; plenissime demonstraunt. Non tamen aptus ē in pforatione ostiari sps scī. uidelicet spūale intellectū in ueteri lege n̄ denu dantis. ut postmodū factū ē in cancellis midie in carne manife statū filii altissimi. s̄. integer. ma net induricia legalium pceptōz que postea p spm scm in fonte aque uiue elucidata sunt. .xj.

Habet quoq; in singulis arcu bus quasi picturā hominū.
 Quāquā ut hec pictura ostendit imaginē hominū. sic in triūpha li arcu scilicet indignitate ma gisteri positiū ē homo in uice dī. Quomodo. Quō pfundissima et capitalis sapientia pgram dī posita ē in os racionalitatis hoīs. ut homo in nomine dī exerceat officiū magistratiōis pdistricio nē iusticie & mie ipsius altissimi.

Quod autē in exteriori parte eiusdē muri uidet alios duos minores muros. hoc ē qđ in extio ribus negociis pter spūale ma gisteriū ē incepta constitutio pptōz maiōz et minōz qui con stituti s̄ pcepto dī quasi duo muri. quō exteriorē s̄ maiores na ti ex fortitudine sc̄laris poten tie in mea ordinatione. et medi us s̄ minores qui consistunt sub potestate et spiritaliū & sc̄larū psonarū. quasi inter interioris p̄fati muri arcus qui ē spūale magistrū et exteriorē murū q est sc̄laris potēcia ut p̄dictū ē.
 Unde duo muri positi s̄ extra ambitū interioris arcuati qñ secundum personam secundum interius causis magis videlicet exteriora quam interiora habentes. ita quod tam secundum inuicem constitutionis mee. Quomodo.

Ex exterioribus intelligitur interius. quomodo ut homo cognoscit ex invisibili et alia persona hominis quomodo homo timendus et honorandus et amandus sit. sic etiam in eodem intellectu intelligat qualiter inuisibilis et altissimus deus metuendus ac uenerandus et diligendus sit super omnia. Nam per exteriorē et seclare dñationē admonet homo interioris et spiritalis potestatis diuine maiestatis. que ita clausa et absconsa est homini. ut non possit carnalibus oculis ei uideri nisi quantum fide illius capit. Et quando quidem mortali creature deus inuisibilis est. saltem prout possibile magisterium discat homo timere et uenerari ipsum altissimum eiusdem planonis institutorem. Quomodo. Exspiratio diuina dedit insensui hominum prout rationalitatem eorum ut inrecta constitutione interpretatos magne persone dñentur. que ab illis timeantur et honorentur. Nam deus idcirco promissit genus unum excellere et aliud subiacere. ut ita homines diuiderentur ne inuicem per se metipsos interficerent et perirent. alioquin ociosi essent nescientes perire ad agnitionem dei nisi hoc prouiderent per motum et honorem in hominibus. Et ita processit spiritus sanctus ducendo populum ad interiorē legem spiritus qua homo unus et exterioris regeret. donec fons saliens exiit appa-rens mundo in plenitudine iusticie qui regit utrumque corpus scilicet et animam. Unde etiam cura seclaris potestatis sic constituta est ad usum terrenarum rerum ut corpus requiratur refectio ne deficiat. et spirituale magisterium ad interiorē suspirationē pueniendi ad seruitutē dei ut anima ad celestia anhelet. Hec itaque constituta sunt in ea ordinatione. secundum quod etiam ysaac dixit filio suo iacob. xv.

Esto dominus fratri tuo et incuruamur ante te filii matris tue. Hoc tale est. Dominus esse debet fratri tuo. pollens super eos in honoribus. et in beatitudinibus. benedictus in benedictionibus. que tibi a deo date sunt. et inclinamur ante te omnes nati filii matris tue. subiecti tibi. propter precellentem causam benedictionis tue. Ex te enim exiet magni generis. de quo fortissimus et potentissimus uir exsurgit. quem fratres eius ipsum fugando persequuntur. sed ipse uelocissime in maximis uiribus suis quasi leo se illis eripiens. excellentissima dñatione illis dñabitur. et premet eos in nomine potestatis sue que nunquam in uilisima cauda eradicebitur. fratribus suis incauda effectus. Sic et ego pater celestis dixi filio meo in carnato. Esto dominus omnium nascentium tuū peritoy de concepto semine humano quos certam pte. quāfū tu mirabiliter natus es ex uirgine nō conceptus hominis semine. sed existi de me pflagramē ignē ap parens int̄a uerū homo clau so sigillo integerrime et castissi me uirginis. Tu ergo es dñs illoꝝ de sup̄na claritate diuinitatis. qui fratres tui s̄ ppter incarna tionē tuā in qua homo es. Et incli natio idē subiectio exhibeat tibi a filiis tue matris scilicet tue in carnationis. atq; in obsequio pie deuotionis subiciant tibi homi nes nam ex hominib; Et quō fili di sic ē dñs omnium creaturarū. p̄ ipsū etiā in uoluntate patris et in actū sp̄s sc̄i instituta ē dis positio diuersarū potestatum in mundo. Quomodo. Sic uidelicet quod d̄s abstulit numeratē et iac tantia illā qđ p̄p̄s p̄p̄m in ho noraret. na qđ unusquisq; face ret qđ sibi placeret si hoc d̄s in estimabilis sapientia consiliū sui nō p̄stauisset. s; ipse discreuit po p̄lū inter p̄p̄m. minorē scilicet cū ministracione obediencie ma iori suo subiacere. maiorē uero in omni utilitatis regimine solle tū & deuote minori subuenire. sicut etiā in accensione sp̄s sc̄i da tū ē iacob p̄ patrē suū qđ est dñs fratrū suoz. ut supradictū est.

ed in hoc qd ostensū ē quod et dñs demonstranī ē qd scilicet negociū habet psonā dñā di sup̄ libertatē aliorū quib; ppter timorē honoris sibi ab eis illam p potestatē suā parcat. n̄ eos oppri mens iure seruiciorū. s; illos habens quasi in dilectione fratru. In hoc autē qđ dictū ē qđ incuruatio ante ipsū fieret. innuit seruiciū ministracionis illorū qui p ligatu rā famulantū dñs suis substran s. ut filii carnis. curā carnalē ha bent. Sed postquā idē iacob hoc dñūm p paternā benedictio nē fratri suo subripuit. deinde celestē celebratē. p lapidē quē erexit in titulu. et p decimā quā se uouit daturū constituit. ut p signatū ē significans principale psonā in spūali milicia. quā quisq; fidelis de minimo gradu ascende debet ad sumū p̄selarē uidelicet potenciā discere sup̄ magisteriū clarioris lucis spūa lis uite. in quo adimplet officiū naucleri scđm iter immaculatū agni qui sursum leuaui hominē cū plenitudine & bonitate om̄is iusticie. scilicet erigens hominē pstratū insidiis pueri raptoris.

Unde etiā hec duo infirma ad terna uidelicet et ad cele stia pcedema in quatuor et qua tuor partes diuidunt quia d̄s magnā uī sciencie rationalitatis hominib; dedit. ita ut in accensio ne sp̄s sc̄i hec in semet ipsis seruien tur in figura quatuor elem̄torū plus p̄dictis duob; modis addentes qđ n̄ asp̄nor nec abicio. quō qui in nomine meo multiplicat quod minus ē dignus ē merce-dis et n̄ abiectionis. que etiā qua-tor parit tā in sēlarib; grauaminib; quā in sp̄nālīb; in finitū s̄.

Quomodo. Quia in sēlarib; causis s̄ nobiles & nobiliores. s̄ et famu-lantes atq; obsequentes. In sp̄nā-lib; uero sacramentis s̄ p̄cellentes et superiores. s̄ et obediētes atq; corripientes. Ego autē easdē officiales causas ordinatione mea constitutas omnino rapī nolo fur-tuo munere ēptionis inueniēda-tione. sed uolo ut eis racionabili causa assistat. ita ut qui ipsas suscipiunt. utiles sint corā dō et hominib; s; oquidā uenenam scor-piones iusticiā meā transeunt & eas mortifero ueneno auaricie et supbie surripiunt. n̄ solū in sēla-ribus posmuris s; etiā indispositionib; sp̄nālīb;. Rapina autē sēlariū dignitatū trena scilicet p̄terrena cōparata ē. quidē cru-delissime inuacundia hēli dī examinanda. s; tam maioris ponderis et examinationis est rapina sp̄nālīū. Nā sēlares s̄ in exteriorib; caro de carne. sp̄nāles autē in interiorib; sp̄u coniuncti. s; quāuis sēlares in exte-riorib; occupent curā trenam habentes tam sub eadē specie ad interiora sp̄s in regimine suo deberent. anhelare. sp̄nāles uero in specie religionis et in cōm̄ptu mundialiū posm. uariis incorde patris omnipotentis ordinam-multo magis sub sp̄uāli nomine deberent. filiū ei infūmo sacerdo-no ardentē imitari. quia sicut idē filius exiit de corde patris sui in filio suo p̄sonas magistrorū qui in tā egregiā ordinatione posm s̄. p̄pter utilitatē ecclē. et in recto. ope dō coniuncti. Quom̄.

Qui in incompunctione & p̄ban-one cordis atq; immaturo sensu s̄ qđ mihi omnino p̄spiciū est bonā uidelicet conscientiam habentes. ita ut p̄uer se & contra-rie magistrū n̄ appetant. illud nec diabolica arte sciscitantes. nec p̄pecuniā aut p̄sclārē potentia acquirentes. nec inde uolantia uerba laudis hominū queren-tes. sed illud uera electione mea et p̄p̄li inhumilitate suscipien-tes. hi km̄ & p̄batissimi custo-des atq; certissimi amici mei s̄.
Sed qui retro incedunt et illud alio modo in tenebris acquirūt. uidelicet p̄sclāria t̄renorū furtim misteria celestīū diripientes. faciē meā fugiunt atq; animas suas acriter occidunt. in hoc me deridentes qđ sic me denegant & contra uoluntatē meā caleant. Quomodo.
Quia ipsi despiciunt me n̄ de-siderantes potestātē magistrū ita s̄ sicut idē pat̄ apud s̄c̄riptū

xix

xx

adipisci p me ita ut interiores oculos cordis sui ad me eleuent sic dicentes placet hoc dō an n̄ sed unusquisq; eorū dicit in se metipso etiā si hoc malū ē apud dīm ego tam accipiam confidens in dño qd quandoq; uiuens adhuc in corpore penitē. & ta li modo acquirūt magistrum absq; me dō uno ita qd nec hoc ame postulent nec se ad hoc mea uoluntate puenire confidant. s; in hoc ardore a facie mea fu guunt sic rapientes magistrū a midia mea naufragantes. Isti non s; intra in corde sūmi pa tris sed s; extra in parte a qui lonis qui in his causis ē prin ceps eorū nolentes quare me cre atore omniū s; ppriā uolun tatē suā quā p dō habent ipsā sequentes & me derelinquen tes. Nā nolunt scire me. nec ego eos. concupiscencia ipsorū. suggerit eis qd uolunt. Et qā timorē meū habere recusant ideiro et ego nolo eis tunc re sistere intore ire mee quatin eis repugnet iudic illa qua ni hil amplius pualere possunt. ipsi aut p me deuoti in hac ui ta. aut responsuri in futuro tre mendo iudicio de his que faci unt ut p dictū ē. me uidelicet scientes in fide s; in his que p petant ad me respicere nolen tes. Nunc autē ut uides qd p̄fati duo minores muri s; lon gitudinis spacū qd ē ap̄ dicto angulo septentrionali usq; ad angulū occidentale. hoc ē qd in constitutione pp̄lorū maiorū et minorū cū extensione longitudi nis humani tēporis ab abraham scilicet & amoyse quasi a septen trione usq; ad manifestationē catholice fidei in uerā trinitatē quā filiū s; ame missus in mun dū ut ad occidentē edocuit. ex terit in lege mea pp̄li et princi pales eorū magist' p̄currentes uide licet germen et exemplū pp̄li noui testimoni. a helo meo usq; adeundē filiū meū in carne na tū tendentes. ut fuerūt et s; & semp erunt. interposite differentie in hominib; interiorū et exteriorū idē sp̄itālū & s; cārū. maiorū atq; minorū. Qui s; ipsis angulis ex utraq; parte sui conuincit iuxta modū testudinis quō tā ueteri quā nouo testamento ex utroq; latere inueni sui in hono re & magistratone coadunati declaramt pp̄li. et hoc in simili tudine testudinis. qd ē in aucto ritate diuine prouidentie bene et digne cōpōsm ad statū edi ficationis celestis hierlm. xxij

Quod uero altitudo eorū duorū minorū ē cubitoꝝ triū. hoc ē qd in subleuatione rectitu dinis duarū s; cārū condicionū scilicet maiorū et minorū tres par tes s hominū idē pcellentiores rec tores. et alii a vinculo seruitutis fa mulantiū liberi. atq. cōmunis ppter platis suis insubiectione substrat.

Unde etiā latitudo inter interi orē arcuatū murū et mediū est cubiti unius. que ē aptitudo dig nitatis inter superiores psonas spita lis magisterū et inter minora uoca bula tēne seruitutis. in unitate fi dei scdm dīm ad corripiendū subdi tos sups constituta.

Atq. inter exteriorē & eundē mediū clauu do unius palmi quasi puerilis ma nus. qā ē etiā int. inferiorē pote statē sc̄laris regimū. et inter sub iectionē sc̄laris ministratiōis ex tensio iuste considerationis. ita ut he unanimi et simplici deuotione puerilis innocentie se inuicē tan gant in manu coniuncte. opatio nis sue.

Sed qd int. idē edificij uides sex imagines ante p̄dic tū arcuatū murū sup pauimentū ipsius edificij stantes. hoc ē. qd in ope bonitatis dī sex uirtutes osten dunt ceteras uirtutes pfigurantes. ut dī in sex dieb. creaturas suas crea uit. ipse uidelicet uirtutes infigu ra futuroz ante murū idē ante isra helitū pplm diuina lege frenatū et magisterio ac defensione pcur sorū suorū circūuallatū apparentes. cū etiā pauimentū tēnarū curarū in eadē constructione sūmi patris in hac significatione conueleant. ut xp̄iana milicia pipsas se dia bolo opponat. Qua ppter tres stant iuxta se in fronte eiusdē mu ri ppe angulū qui respicit ad sep temtrionē. quia sc̄a trinitas in sepa rabilis in uirtute maiestatis sue iūcio ueteris testamti abrahā & amōyse diabolo oppositas inchoatū p diuer sas et secretas figuras designata est.

Et tres etiā simul in fine parietis eiū secus angulū qui tendit ad occiden tē qm eadē trinitas in unitate diui nitatis regnans. in fine eiū deflu entis legis apto nomine suo p̄dica ta est. nato in carne filio dī ob redēp tionē hominis ad occasū tendentis. que om̄s pictura in arcub. eiusdē muri inspicunt. quia semp pari deuotionis studio in hominib. ma gisteriū ordinationis dī p poten ciā ei in lege tā noui quā antiqui testamti designatū attendunt. con siderantes qualiter in ipsis p̄ficiat.
Quod autē in ipso fine eiū parie tis uidet aliā unaginē inter ē edifi ciū sup lapidē unū in modū sedis in pauimento postmū sedentē. hoc ē qd in ipsa repositione ueteris legis antiqui ppli et in uicio noue fidi inchoato in uera trinitate cū dī om̄s constantes uirtutes in ecclā in struxit. decem et etiā apparuit uirtus hec in ope sūmi patris op ans in eo p hominē usq. ad finem nē mundi. Unde sedet etiā sup for missimā petrā sup unicū scilicet dī filiū qui sedet & quies ē omniū fidelū caduca despicientū. et in

s. xx. vj.

s

s

s

s

s. xx. iij.

s

s

s

s

s

s

s

s

s

s se pura fide credentiu. Et latius dex trū admirū inclinat. quia inque us rectitudine et in saluationis par te hunc ppto qui sub magisterio dis positione di positus ē adheret. ita ut et ipsi maiores cū minorib. cā in opib. suis excolant. faciē uero suā ad colūā uere trinitatis uertit. quō in omni re intentionē suā ipsi trini tati acutissimo uisu iuste considera tionis intendit. ut sicut ppetua tri nitas in trib. psonis inuolubiliter consideranda ē. ita omīs dīm colen tes eā in factis suis diligentissime con siderent et considerando nō relin quant. S; qd in eodē fine uides alte riā imaginē sup eundē murū mal tiori loco stantē. hoc ē qd etiā in translatione umbre legis antiquę in fide scē trinitatis clarescente ue ra luce iusticie hec uirtus in princi pali magisterio et fidei ppto in alius eacū saluationis celestis desiderii eleuata ē. stans pugnans contra uicia in filio dī erecta. quia ab ipso incepit et cū ipso in celesti ierlm post finē scē pmanebit. Que etiā ad pdictā colūā uere trinita tis uersa ē quō pscām et ineffabile trinitatē confortata. reducit ani mas ad patriā. Quod ū in ipsis imaginib. conspicis similitudinē. hoc ē qd eadē uirtutes unanimes s induerunt donec dī. Qua ppet indute s etiā ut priores imagines quasi serieis indumentis que s circa eas ut circa reliquas uirtu tes suauiissima opa que indi uina lege cultores dī ipsi exhibent faci entes ea in iusticia ueritatis. et can didis calciamtis. qā in ardore ea rū ē etiā candor sequendi exem pli bonorū actiū in hominib. Sed illa que ad extris medie harū trī est quas in extrema parte eiusdē pa rietis uides. tota tantę puritatis tantęq. claritatis existit ut p multo splendore nullā ei formā pfecte in tueri possis. qm uirtus eadē cū salu te uere confortationis p donū scē trinitatis in fine ueteris austeritatis exurgens. omīs plucida et pura ē carens cuncta indignatione diabo lica. in claritate leti gaudiū unani mitatis hominū. ita ut p multitudi dine glē et honoris quā habet in ce lestib. nulla ratione inestimabilis unanimitas ipsius quasi forma ei ab ullo mortali homine ualeat con siderari. nisi quantum dīs reuelare dignatus fuerit. Et illa que sup murū stat nigris calciamtis calcia ta ē. quia tā maiore dignitate quā in minore ante incarnationē filii mei mortis signū et uestigiū fuit in hominib. S; qd omīs sine pal lis s. hoc ē qd pariter tēnos cultus & exteriorē textū legalis instrum onis abiecerūt. intrinsecus uerā iusti ciā inspicientes. pter mediā illarū trīū que in prima parte eiusdē muri stabant que pallio induit quō ipsa sub defensione dī in initio pceptę austeritatis desudans. cir cū data ē cōphensione amoris di-in qua celestē thesaurū abscondit abiecto desiderio carnaliū. Et due earundē triū supiorū que ad dexterā scilicet & ad sinistrā medie imaginis stant et due triū inferi-orū media uidelicet & que ad sinistrā ei ē n̄ habent muliebria uelamina incapitib. suis. nudis tan-tū albis erinib. stantes. q̄a lex et pphēia p uirtutē supne maiesta-tis emanantes. et unā ac mortē sua fortitudine ostendentes. cū duob. pceptis gemine dilectionis pcandē diuinā potēciā subsequētib.

 atq. constantia intime circūspectionis habentib. incommutabilis et gaudiū suauitatis induunt. fidelitē solute s̄ ab omī subiectione ullius doloris seu laquei mortis incapite in xpo uidelicet filio meo. nuda tamen coma fulgentes incandore uirginitatis. q̄a diuinitas uirgineā naturā in uirgine maria ualde di-lexit. S. q̄d media triū priorū & illa que sup lapidē iuxta murū sedet. s̄ uelato capite candida uelatura capitis ut mos ē mulierū. hoc ē q̄d ipse in auxilio supne altitudinis et instabilitate conseruationis beate quies. blande ac dulciter ligatē s̄ foris ligatura subiectionis. dñm caput omniū fidelīū in albedine pie-deuotionis uenerando ut maritus ab uxore sincera caritate debet ho-norari. Et eadē media triū supiorū & que ad dextrā ei stat uestire s̄ tūm cis candidis. q̄a p candē uirtutē di-uine maiestatis insuauissima bea-tudine emanant lucidissima et candidissima opa earū in hominib. stabiliā sub lege dñi cū ē iuncte s̄.

 Sed q̄d etiā uidet dissimilitudinē in eis. hoc ē quod diuersas uires habent in dō. concordit ipsū tam colentes. Propt̄ q̄d imago que stat in medio triū supiorū pfigurāt abstinentiā. quō ipsa in primo certamine ē quasi ciuitas et firmamē-tū atq. ornamentū sibi adherentiū uirtutū continens se a peccato in-grauitate morū. ita q̄d pseruatricē & recusatricē ē cunctō pueriliū in malis. nullā petulantia habens in se. s̄. apparetis quasi mat̄ in medio earū uirtutū que ^{gloria} trinitatis in incio date legis antiqui ppli designant. Et habet incapite suo in modū corone circūsi crocei coloris dextra parte in sculptū semp accendit. quia ipsa psumū caput coronata ē croceo radio splendi-dissimi solis scilicet filii dñi in cui claritate tota cōphensa ē. nullū appetens nisi illū qui etiā in dex-tra parte saluationis anime sep̄ eā accendit. Unde ut uidet ad dex-tra ei dē imaginis colūba ad uolat ore suo spirans in eandē scripturā. quō in dextra celestis pspirans ad ē donū uere simplicitatis uidelicet scī sps in abstinentiā queq. bona p supnā inspirationē in saluatione animarū accendens. ut etiā

xxviii.

eade uirtus demonstrat in supradictis uerbis sue admonitionis. .xx. ix.

Alia uero imago que est ad dextris eius significat largitatem puerilis simplicitatis existente nec omnino astu-cia aut duricia aduersus dolores hominum habente. cum qua abstinentia se semper aufert ab omni asperitate in dextris bonorum operum sic tendens ad deum. quia largitas inuenit operationis eius est cum primum abstinentia opus suum aggreditur. Que habet in pecto-re suo quasi leonem tanquam specu-lum lucidum. qui est in corde illius filius miserere christe ihesu leo fortissimus uelut in speculo pie et splendide dilectionis conclusus. Quod autem a collo suo gestat uelut serpentem pallidi coloris. uictoria flexura uirgule ad pectus etiam ipsius dependente. hoc est quod quasi collo fortissima scilicet patientia idem filius misericordie prudentissimus in pallore angustie carnis sustinuit flexuram penarum. cum exaltatione crucis. medicamento uide-licet omnium uulnerum. quod largitas per celestem amorem pectori suo inpri-mit illud frequenter inspicies in mentibus hominum. sicut etiam in predicis uerbis exhortationis sue fateatur. Tercia autem imago que ad sinistris eius est declarat pietatem nullo modo habentem odium aut inui-diam ad uita felicitatem hominibus. semper gaudens et amplectens per spiciat omnium. cui uiriditate et largitas unitione abstinentia sinistre parte dabolice sufflationis resistit. quoniam pietas est plenum opus ab-stinentie insignifera pugna per quam semper uictrix existit. Unde etiam tumca simili iacincto rubri coloris induitur. quia splendidissimo opere sub quo pulcherrima sustentatione sanguineae contrarietatis latent. omnes scilicet iniurias pati post passionem filii mei ipsius exemplum circūda-ta est. Quod uero ad pectus ipsius apparet angelus ex utroque latere suo ala-m unam habens. hoc est ut homo in co-gitatione sua semper angelicum ordinem imitetur unamquamque dei ordinatio-nem diligendo. cum ex utraque parte sua tam per spiritum quam contrariarum re-rum in singulis et geminis alis. uide-licet in uno deo per geminam uirtutem. non elatus supra modum in bonis. nec omnino perstratus in malis se eleuat aduolendum. quod est deum in puritate cordis aspicere. sic sursum tenden-do et non ad terram se deieciendo. Qua-propter etiam ala dextra ad dextrum humerum eiusdem imaginis extenditur. quoniam per spiritum homines in dextra saluationis animarum ad auxilium pietatis porrigit. cum filii misericordie hominem reportant ad patriam. Et ala sinis-tra tendit ad sinistram tendit ad si-nistrum humerum illi. quia in sinistra contrarietatis diabolicarum insidia-rum fidelis homo uolante pennam per quam abiecit opera tenebrarum sursum extendit ad refugium eiusdem filii mei. per quem fortis contra omnem aduer-

.xxx. 4

hominum

149 sine existit. immanis una iustorum. ut etiam uirtus hec indicat suis declarat quomodo supra ostensum est. Imago quoque que est media trium inferiorum pretendit ueritatem. quia post abstinentiam et illi coherentes uirtutes surgit ueritas in omnibus. causis suis cum sibi affluentibus. magnis. uelut tris et tu-tamen carum existens. uidelicet forte presidium designans. quasi in medio uirtutum sanctam trinitatem in occasu iudice consuetudinis. et in ortu uere fidei prefigurantem. Super cuius dextri humerum candidissima coluba stat spirans ore suo in dextrum aurem illius. quod est in superiori parte dextre scilicet beati reditus. per incarnationem filii dei ad unam. apparet admirabilis uirtus spiritus sancti. qui spirauit tactu suo in dextrum aurium idem in corda credulorum hominum. ut intelligant quod deus in sua diuina potencia sit. quod autem in pectore ipsius monitu osum et informe caput hominis ap-paret. hoc est quod deus in cordibus electorum suarum miseras et persecutiones princi-pum esse permittit. sicut et filius eius per-uoluit de principibus sacerdotum. Et quo deus est in corde fidelis hominis. ideo debet et ipse homo per dei amore patienter sufferre persecutionem. atque quia mors in casu diaboli erecta est. ideo cir-co oportet et fidelem hominem aduersus diabolicas nequicias multa cer-tamina in diuersis erumnis sustine-re que sepe ipsius corpori laboriose et contrarie sunt. quo homini adhe-ret. quod idem antiquus serpens semper persequitur. Quod est hoc. carnis concupiscentia. cui ille malignus hostis in insidius posuit insidiat. Quod uero iacent sub pedibus. et quasi species hominum conculcat et committit ab ipsa. hoc est quod sub uestigis ueritatis. omnes diabolice falsitates. que in opibus hominum fiunt ad nichilum deducunt. ipsa amore habente edificationis ecclie. cum omnes uirtutes manifeste apparent et probant in ueritate. que ante tempora seculorum in corde patris latens fuit inuisibilis. sed in fine temporum uisibilis apparet in uera carne filii dei. Unde etiam in manibus suis habet cartam expansam et ex una parte uidelicet uersus celum septem lineis inscriptam que in omnibus opibus. ueritatis est textura expansa per quam per piano populo consistunt leges et ex parte celestium desideriorum apto cultu tenenda. et ex parte carnalium cupidarum metuenda. ostendens in se septem dona spiritus sancti uidelicet in-expugnabile firmitatem contra di-abolicas mortis insidias. Et illam legere uisus non potest. quoniam quam uis hominium desiderat scire misteria et oc-cultas in domis dei tamen non est ei possibile. dum est grauatus mortali corpore intelligere aut capere quod deus in mirabilibus suis fieri uult. sed ipse homo amplectatur et comprehendat ea in ueritate fideliter sequendo precepta dei. sicut etiam hec eadem uirtus in predicatis uerbis suis ostendit. xxxv.

Altera autē imago que addexte ra ei ē designat pacē supnū sig nū et anglicū consortiū habentē quia in plena uiriditate uernans germinat. quō eadē uertas circū data ē eximius et supnis donis. in dextera parte saluationis animarū habens pacē p filiū dī. Quom̄. Itē scriptū ē in anglico carmine. ubi dī: Glā in excelsis dō. et mīra pax homi nib; bone uoluntatis. Hoc tale ē.
 In altissimo dō fulget homo & dī in hoīe quia fili dī mirabiliter incar natus ē. idōq; laudabilis et glōsif ē in celo dī ab omni creatura sua.
 Unde etiā mīra sit pax saluationis illis hominib; qui uoluntatē pa tris cū deuotione et fide suscipi unt. quia etiā pax bone uolunta tis ē uoluntas totius bonitatis pa tris que fili ei ē qui ē dī & homo.
 Et quom̄ ē ipse pax. Ipse ē pax ho minū defendens eos ab insidiis antiqui serpentis. qui primus p uaricator extitit qui lum̄ uite pdidit deiectus in tenebras qd lum̄ pax uera idē uerus dī fili amulit hominib;. ita qd ipsi facti s; paru cipes regni dī in beato loco que p didit diabolus. Et ut uidet p dicta uirtus facie ^{habet} anglicam. quō ipsa fugit ab omī malo. in intentione scā quasi in facie sua dī aspici ens cū anglico desiderio. Unde etiā ex utroq; latere suo uolauit.
 Alā unā habet. qm̄ in utraq; par te tranquille scilicet & turbide.

ostensionis sursum addm tendit n̄ faciens trorē nec amaritudinē. s; semp in pspitate placida existens unū dī in unanimitate duarū ala rū cōphendit. qā nulla tēpestate instabilnans. nec in bono nec in ma lo euersa tantū in tranquillitate p sistit. Et in specie hominis ut ceterē uirtutes apparet. qā p filiū dī miri fice claruit cū etiā om̄s uirtutes ap pareat. quia p filiū dī mirifice claru it cū etiā os uirtutis p illā in hoīb; pban tur. ita qd nullom̄ contentione aut rixā querit s; semp lenitate. sic sedi abolice pugne opponens. ut etiā sup in uerbis locutionis ei manifestat.

Sed et altera imago que stat ad fini strā ei indicat beatitudinē et nā uitā appetentē. p cui fidei nate et in mīa lenitate uertas a sinistris omni fallacie serpentine p suasio nis hominē decipientis ipsi con sentientē. contra dicit. qā beattu do ē in uicta securitas uere clari tatis. in qua ipsa infelicitatē mor tis n̄ timet. Pp̄t qd etiā induit tu nica alba uiridi colore distincta. quō circūdata ē fidelib; opib; in celesti desiderio albescentib; atq; multimodis donis in uiriditate sp̄s scī uirentib; decoratis. Qd autē habet in manib; suis modicū uas culū pallidi splendoris. hoc ē qd in ope suo demonstrat. qualiter in paruo retinaculo idē in contri to secreto cordis sui homo dī pfi de apphēdat. in pallore tamen fragilitatis humane carnis quia si desertum ipsa mortali uita pure colenda est ubi miseria homines non deserit. Unde etiam multa luce ut fulgur ex se reddit ita quod eadem lux in facie et circa collum ipsius magnis lucet. quoniam cognito cum luminis et in amore et in dilectione dei dis fundit. uidelicet tendens de interi ori corde hominis usque ad faciem idem usque ad inceptum recti operis in bono ex emplo intentionem suam manifestan tis. et circa collum quod est postea ubique prudenti fortitudine comprehensibilis in completo opere cum illud in homine ante deum perclarus sole fulget per beatitu dinem. sic etiam in predicta manifestatio ne eadem uirtus declarat. I mago. xxx. iij. uero que in fine muri super lapidem sedet preterit discretionem. quia ip sa in consummatione antiquae obser uationis in christo requiescens plenitudo apparuit sollemissima existens cri bratrix omnium rerum. tenens scilicet quod tenendum est et abscidens quod absci dendum est. ut utrumque a lolo separat.

Et induta est tunica sub nigra. quoniam circumdatus est mortificatione carnis. abiciens leuitatem totius uanitatis.
Quod ante in dextero humero suo ha bet modicam crucem inposita imagi ne ihesu christi. hoc est quod eadem uirtus radicem posuit in dextra parte po tencie fortitudinis dei. cum deus omnipotens filium suum misit mirabiliter incarna ri et humiliter pati. cuius dilectioni coniuincta est discretio. quoniam ab ipso manifestata est. ut per eam omnis iusticia discernatur. Et ut deus est dispensator conuenientis stature hominis. ita est discretio in matre illi in officio suo. opera sua uidelicet adimplens in dispensatore crucifixo filio dei. cum ipsa in utraque dignitate est diuini tatis scilicet et humanitatis. Que hac et illac uersatur. quia incomprehensio ne latitudinis per significationem sancte crucis circumdatur inter bonos et ma los habet. Quod uero quasi effulget in pectus eius quidam splendor mire claritatis. hoc est quod de media dei quasi de nube clarissima accensio diui ne pietatis aspirat in mentes homi num. discretionem ineffabilis eosque illuminans. Unde etiam a se in mul tos radios diuisus est ut splendor solis a se diuiditur cum per parua et mul ta foramina alicui rei fulget. quoniam spiritus sanctus in superna uirtute diuersos radios donorum suorum diuidens hominibus. eos scilicet lucidiores sole ineffabi liter discretos in humilibus. cauer nis. idem in perspicacibus. in nobilibus. anima rum fidelium suorum diffundit. illustrans sensus et mentes eorum. ita ut acutissi me in quibusque causis intelligant quod eis apte in deo faciendum sit. S. quod in dextra manu modicum lig num in modum flabelli habet. hoc est quod discretio in dextra parte saluationis animarum opus suum per donum spiritus sancti in hominibus. quasi in lig no fragilis carnis semper considerat. hoc signum tam in se habemus. ut

Ex nubi;

xxxv. 9

ase p diuinū auxiliū diuersas mus cas diabolicarū uidelicet p suasionē abigat. ne peas induersas uanita tes disp gat. Ppt qd etiā exet sumi tate tres ramusculi miro modo cū flore pullulant. ut fideles homines sup omā et in omib; scām trinitatē inmirabilib; suis semp florentē fi deliter credant in unitate diuini tatis glōsissime regnatē n̄ temere in semet ipsis celestia secreta exami nantes. s; sicut d; omā opa sua in diuersis creaturis suis iuste & discre te disponit sic etiā ipsi hoīes pui discretionis cuncta facta sua bene & recte dispensent. Qd autē habet in gremio suo minutissimos lapil los omniū gēmarū q̄s multa solli citudine & diligentia considerat ueluti mercator res suas diligēt considerare solet. hoc ē qd ipsa in sinu memū hominū omē qd ap tū et conueniens ē in minutissimis consiliis et artib; ex; continet q̄si ingemmus uirtutū. unāquāq; in ficiā ad dō constitutā cauta & dili genti examinatione pquirens ut congrue et iuste in omib; reb; p cedat in cordib; hominū ppt mer cedē opis acutissime considerans. ubi ē remuneratio in dō. ut etiā in uerbis suis quom̄ p monstratū ē ppalat. Illa autē imago que in eodē fine stat sup murū signifi cat saluationē animarū. quō ip sa in occasu uentis duricie effulsit in culmine auctoritatis noue grē na qd quasi fundamētū ei existat discretio. cū qua et sup quā appa ret eadē saluatio animarū orta in filio dī cū natus ē ex uirgine p̄sa lute hominū. Et nudū caput et nigros acrispos crines habet. q̄a nuda ē a seruitute subiectionis li bere scilicet dignitatis manens. qm̄ filio dī apte quieret a quo etiā de memer sustentata ē in gredine tam paciens capilloz. quō in iudaica plebe obfuscata apparebat n̄ ha bente uerā claritatē. s; multiplice diuēritatē quasi crispā comā di uersarū obseruationū. Habet q̄q; faciē obscurā. quō ante incarnan onē filii dī in umbra mortis n̄ uisa ē retinere felicitatē cōne saluis.

Unde etiā induta ē uaria tunica plurimo colore intexta. quō inue teri p̄pto multis modis circūdaba tur uarietate opū. in mixta diuer sitate multoz uicioz. S; qd uidet quom̄ eandē tunicā et calceamēta sua exuit stans nuda hoc ē qd in passione filii mei morte absterfa cū etiā post aduentū sp̄s scī sonus et uerba ap̄loz emissa s̄ in mundū. excitata ē saluatio animarū. ita qd ipsa sp̄nens mala opa et abici ens contraria uestigia exuita ē fortit̄ denudata diabolica ma gistracione. in semetipsā sic dicēs.
O tu turpissime diabole nūquā relinqueres me. si n̄ redēpta esse in sanguine agni. Nā in lacu in ferni uoluisti retinere me. s; nē grā dī liberata sū. Et sic crines ac facies ei resplendent in pulchritudinē albedinis et nouitatis ut iā nati infans. q̄a p̄ incarnationē filii mei creuit. multus p̄p̄s in figura criminū illius bene illuminatus in interiori facie aīe adherens uere & splendide iusticie. ita q̄d exqui-rebat felicitatē etnā confidens in albedine uite et in liberatione fi-deliū m̄broz xp̄o capiti suo adhe-rentiū p̄ nouā regenerationē et p̄ uerā infancie innocentia saluari in uita celesti. Atq; p̄ totū corpus suū effulget ut purus et lucidus splendor elucet in claritate. quō ipsa q̄si p̄ omnia m̄bra sua p̄ fidele scilicet p̄p̄m sibi p̄ filiū meū subice-tū facta ē pura in colūbina simplicitate. & clara in lucidissima pulchritudine iusticie dī. Qd̄ autē ui-des in pectore ei splendidiſsimā crucē cū imagine xp̄i ih̄u sup̄ ar-busculā inter duos flores lili & rose flantē posita. quae se sursum ad eandē crucē aliquantulū recuruant. hoc ē q̄d eadē uirtus facta ē creden-tiū p̄p̄loz forte p̄ cordiū in passio-ne ih̄u saluatoris qui martyrio suo inuestigat boni & recti exempli sui arbore mortis & p̄dicionis ade deſſit atq; contriuit aduersus quā etnā duo testamēta scilicet uetus in candore & nouū in rubo-re illi repugnantiā p̄ dispositionē dī p̄cedebant. se in altitudine sp̄a-lis intellectus ad passionē ei dē p̄ et nobilissimi redemptoris. atq; ad omnē iusticiā ei ap̄d mōne mortis reflectētia. Unde uide inde etnā q̄d exu-tā tunicā atq; calciāmā sua fortiter excutit. ita q̄d puluis multus ab eis excutiat. q̄a saluatio animarū ostendit in nouis et iustis opib; hominū ab-stractā tunicā prioris consuetudinis et omnium uiciorū ueterū delictorū atq; abiectū malū exemplū transgressionis ade. fortissima examinatione ea discimens atq; comēpnens. et pul-uerē uane gl̄e aliorū q; peccatorū asepiciens. sicut etnā sup̄ius in p̄locu-tione sua de semetipsa confitetur:

 qui autē acutas aures interioris
 intellectus habet hic in ardente
 amore speculi mei ad uerba hec
 anhelet. et ea in conscientia ani-
 mi sui conscribat.

In. Visio tene
 patris

E
U
D

in angulo occidentali demonstra n edificii mirabile & secretā atq; fortissima colūnā colore purpu ree nigredinis habentē eideq; an gulo ita impositā ut & intra et ex tra ipsū edificii apparet. Que enā tamē quamnatū erat nec ut magnitudo nec altitudo ipsius intellectui meo pateret. s; qd tan tamū miro modo planissima absq; omī ruga fuit. Habebat autē inextiore sui parte tres an gulos calibet coloris a pede usq; ad cacumē ipsius uelut acutissimi gladii incidentes. quorū unus contra affricū respiciebat ubi plurimū putridi straminis ab eo succisū et dispersū fuerat et unus contra ebor ubi multe pennule pillū discisse & ceciderant atq; me dius contra occidentē ubi pluri ma putrida ligna ab ipso defecta iacebant. hec singulā ab eis dē angulis ppter temeritatē ipsorū succisa. Fenerū ille quē uidebā in p̄dicto trono sedentē & hec oīa mibi demonstrantē. dixit m. Hec mistica & miranda atq; ignota ple nissima dona que t̄o homo claris sime apparent in uero lumine. tibi demonstro. et tribuo dicere & osten dere ad accendendū ignea corda fi deliū qui purissimi lapides s̄ ad edi ficacionē celestis ierlm. Nam scā et ineffabilis trinitas sume unitas subiugo legis seruientib; occultata. s; in noua grā de seruitute liberans manifestata simplici et humili cor de uirib; psonis unī & uerus d̄s a fi delib; credenda & n̄ temere p̄seru tanda ē. ne qui noluerit contentus ēē dono qd aspū scō accepit dū plus querit quā oporteat ppter temeritatē elationis sue magis indeteri cadat. quā id qd indecēt appetit inue niat. Qd & inuisio p̄sens ostendit.

Hec enī colūna quā uidēs in angu lo occidentali demonstrati edificii in figura uere trinitatis ē. quō pat̄ uerbū & sp̄s sc̄s. unī d̄s in trinitate et eadē trinitas in unitate ē. existens. p̄fecta colūna totius boni et pene trans sūma ac infima. regensq; uni uersū orbē terrarū. Que in plaga occi dentali apparet. quia filius dī sub tēpore q̄si in occasū incarnatus pa trē suū ubiq; glificauit et sp̄m sc̄m discipulis suis p̄misit. eū enā idē fili in uoluntatē patris mortē sub eun do adimpleuit bonū exemplū ho minib; ut et ipsi in edificio sūmi pa tris recte incedant uera & iusta opa in spū scō p̄ficiendo. s; mirabile & secretā atq; fortissimā se ostendit quō dē incertanris suis tā mirabi lis existit ut nullo modo ab eis adfi nē pducī possit. tāq. secretus ut nul la earū scientia uel sensibilitate p tinaciter sit examinandus. atq. tā fortis qd omīs fortitudo ipsa rū ab eo dirigat. nec ei fortitudi m ualeat cōparari. Quod autē colore purpureo nigredinis habet. eideq. angulo ita imposita ut & in tra & extra ipsū edificiū appareat. hoc ē quod inuoluntate patris unicus filius ei purpureū sangui nē suū pnigredine peccatorū homi nū et sic passione sua mundū sal uans uerā & rectā fidē credentib. attulit. qā in defectu ueris obser uationis et in ortu none scificatio nis cultus scē trinitatis manifestis sime declaratus ē. cū apte credmū ē qd idē supnus pat̄ eundē filiū suū misit in mundū de spū scō con ceptū qui glām patris & n̄ suā que sunt scīq. spē pfundā consolatio nē apuit ut p̄dictū ē. ita qd hoc in nulla parte lateret. quin & fide lib. in ope dī manentib. & infidelib. extra fidē positis denuntaret. Et qd tantē q̄ntitas ē ut nec magni tudo nec altitudo ipsius intellē tui tuo patrat. hoc ē qd eadē tri nitas tā ineffabilis glē et potesta tis ē. qd nec in magnitudine ma iestatis nec in altitudine diuinita tis ullo circuitu aut iactantia sa piencie humane n̄tis determina ri possit. Quōq. modo planissima absq. omī ruga ē. quō qd admiratio ne dignissimū existit missima ē ingrā et semp benigna plana q. in sua unitate iusticie accurrentib. ita ut nihil. ruga sū ulli iusticie in ea inueniat. iusta et bona existens. in parte saluationis. Qd autē habet in extore sui parte Quod angu los calibet coloris a pede usq. ad ca cumen ipsius uelut acutissimus gla dius incidentes. hoc ē qd contrarie tan tenebrarū opposita in uniuers so mundo ineffabilis trinitas in uni tate dītanis apissime apparet. nec ul li creaturę sue impio et potestate ab fensa latens exceptis incredulis cor dib. quib. ob incredulitatē ipsorū oc cultatur. p̄pt. qd etiā iudiciū dī cū digna recompensatione eos ut meri ti s occidit. uelut fortissima calips nulli inflationi cedens que se ipsi opponit. unde et qd a sumo usq. ad sumū tendit ab initio scilicet creatio nis scē usq. ad finē ei et qd sup ē. hoc potentē in acutissima diuinitate q̄si mucidente gladio semp sapientia et potestate penetrant & penetrat.

Et qd angulus unus contra af fricū respicit ubi plurimū ar di straminis ab eo succisū & dispersū ē. hoc ē qd iustissima diuinitas tri nitatis in xpiano p̄plo omne aridi tatē diuersitatis et contradictionis atq. abiectionis rectissime catholi ce fidei aduersantē in maxima illi confusione succidit. cōbustit sicut fenu qd conculeat & in igne cōbu 115.

115.

rit a fructuoso frum̃i grano separar̃. qd̃ fides cū opib; in sciencia scripture de qua om̃e qd̃ eidē uere fidi con trariū et inuile ē in incredulitate sua disp̃git et aufer̃. qua insipiens ppl̃s quasi stultū pecus utitur.

Aq; unus contra chorū se diri git ubi multe pennule pullum discisse cadunt. q̃a eadē diuinitas clara iactantia iudaici ppl̃i qui cū magna supbia in altitudine m̃is sue uolabat deiecit. cū ille in semet ipso cū in dō iustus ēē uolebat ut pharisei qui mala celoz ascendere tēptabant scdm̃ ppriā fiduciā suā in semet ipsis confidentes s; iusto iu dicio dī obdiuersitate mōz suoz dis cissim in hac p̃supuone cadentes.

Melius uero contra occidentē re spicit ubi plurima putrida ligna ab ipso defecta iacent. quō p ipsā trinitatē abscidit nefandū et diabolicū scisma gentilis ppl̃i qui in occasu infidelitatis errat in recta fide q̃a ut putrida ligna molesta et inutilia s̃ ad usus hominū sic enā abscisus et abiectus ē ppl̃s iste agau dio uite. magis diabolica sectans figm̃a. quā diuina p̃cepta. Unde enā hec singula ab eis dē angulis pp ter temeritatē ipsoz succisa s̃. quia in omnib; p̃dictis causis uera et scā trinitas & infideles qui uel audacē eā dirūpere uolunt qui in eā p̃una enter credere nolunt a se abscisos ire p̃mittit in p̃dicationē. qm̃ rabide et ignorantē inuadunt diuinitatē. no ientes se inclinare fidi quā fili dī p̃semet ipsū attulit & quā enā p̃dis cipulos suos hominib; transmisit. scdm̃ qd̃ hec parabola dicit. vii.

Dñs quidā lapidē igneū habens p̃ ipsū et p̃mittit suos necessa ria rē multo ppl̃o mandare uole bat. s; nūq̃ n̄ erant sapientes et scio u uerba dñi sui intelligere. s; insipi entes et ignari ad mandatū illud p̃ ficiendū. Intēa ortus ē tu multus et tēpestas magna & torrens ac se uus tonitruus. ita qd̃ tūa mota ē & qd̃ lapides scissi s̃. sic enā qd̃ uas unū in quo plurima uascula erant in tūa iacens absconsū. dorso ad celsū uerso maxima fortitudine radica re uir cōtra. & qd̃ uulua illi ad celsū conuerteret. Tunc enā ad dñō illo p̃ la pidē ipsū uehementissimo flatu ignis aduenerit. qui tanto ardore nunci os illos p̃transiuit qd̃ om̃s uene eoz calefierent. et qd̃ om̃s desidia timo ris ab eis tanta uelocitate excuteret ut ab arida pelle uelocissime cadit qd̃ ei sup̃ effundit. Et sic demū re cordati s̃ illi omnū que audierant et didicerant ad dñō suo. et abier̃ ad ppl̃m qui umbilicos n̄ habebat & cui ciuitas destructa fuerat. et il li mandatū dñi sui annuntiabant. s; & quib; dā ex ipsis umbilicos re stituer̃ ciuitatē eoz reedificantes ipsis eā reddider̃. quib; dā autē nec umbilicos restituer̃ nec eis ci uitatē reddider̃. s; ipsos occiden tes. ut portos eos diuiser̃. Et sic la nuncios.

plurimū conueni facta hū Dñs iste ē iniquum lari q ē & cū mo ipse epulcher
epulcher
fili dī narrabili cū parte postea un re ut con n̄ ē uerū occurrit
th; cūdo carum o et p̃dici an̄ nec et salu redidit hū apud mundo foliū & lūi in sp̃ plere s̃ placuit firmam hūi hū ordū om̃i ex multa in hac
cū. Et dū
hūmā

pis ille in universo mundo innotuit concubens et occidens omnia in dola facta humane carnis. Hoc tale est.
 Dominus iste est pater omnipotens apud quem est unigenitus eius ille scilicet lapis angularis qui de igneo spiritu sancto conceptus est et ex integerrima uirgine natus homo ipse uidelicet flos candidissimus et pulcherrimus existens in albedine et pulchritudine totius seculi. Nam filius dei erat secundum diuinitatem in-narrabiliter ante eum omnis creatura cum patre et cum igneo refrigeratore. postea ut tempore placito missus apatre ut conceptus de spiritu sancto sic predicatus est ueraciter incarnatus nasceretur ex uirgine ad conferendum credentibus candorem et decorem uite. Quo in carnato ostendit celestis patris pullum et per discipulos ipsi benigne mun-ans necessariam rem salutem uidelicet et saluationem hominibus qui in ipso crediderunt. Sed illius discipuli cum idem filius apud eos corporaliter maneret in mundo erant stulti et in seculum acstolidi et tardi uigilantes uerba il-lius in spiritu intelligere et opere conplere. Sed tantum quasi in sono in simplicitate ea audiebant. non dum confirmati sed pauidi et extrinsecus uelut homines. Inter ea uenit tempus in sanctorum cordium inquit iudei in mutuum facientes exquirebant suscitantes in multa scismata contra filium dei ut in hac magna tempestate occiderent eum. Et dum ita implerent omnem ma-lignitatem suam ut desiderauerunt. tunc in hoc preceptum et maximo tonitruo pactum est tam grande homicidium quod le-ante non fuit nec postea futurum erit. nam quod terra moueretur idem quod terre membra hominum existerent cum reliquis creaturis et quod lapidea lex iudeorum scinderetur in criminoso facto eorum. Tunc primus homo cum genere suo in quo latuit signum relique creature suo in quo latuit signum relique creature iacens sepultus in morte. ita quod omnem intentionem suam ad terram uer-terat habens adorso celum nolens re-spicere ad deum in magna fortitudi-ne filii dei eradicatus est et terra mortis in qua dormiunt cum filiis suis. ita quod suspicaret de toto corde et de omni scientia sua quasi in uulua ad celestem patriam se conuertens. quia audiuit christum dei filium propter ipsum occisum. Sed post eisdem filii dei ascensionem a patre et per ipsum filium ut idem filius promi-serat spiritus sanctus adueniret. quia tota terra in superna dulcedine stultabat quod celestis panis in mundo manserat quod infideles transire quasi in rumore neglexerant. fideles autem cum omni deuotione suscepant. Quia ergo uerum uerbum incarnatum erat apertum spiritus sanctus in igneis linguis apparuit. quod de spiritu sancto idem filius conceptus est qui in predicatione sua mundum aduenitatem conuertit. Et quod cum apostoli per eundem filium docti erant idem spiritus sanctus ita in calore suo perfudit eos ut diuersis linguis anima et corpore loquerentur. quod in eis anima corpori diuabat sic illis clamantib; qđ inuo-cib; eoz totus orbis terrarū conmuerebat. Abstulit quoq; idē spēs scs ipsis humanū timorē ita qđ talis pa-uor nullus eis meruit ut seuerā hominū timent ne uerbū dī loquerent; s; omīs huiusmodi timiditas tanto ardore et tanta festinancia eis ab-lata ē. ut quasi aridi et n̄ molles; s; ut mortui ad eundā aduersitatem redderent que ipsis accide potuisset. unde etiā mox pfecto sensu recordati s; omniū que prius tardi fide negligent audierant et pceperant a xpō. ea ita ad memoriā reducētes. quasi eadē hora ab ipso illa cognouissent. Et abeuntes mer faciebant int̄ incredulos pplōs qui umbilicos idē sigillū sciētia scilicet scē innocie n̄ habebant. quib; ciuitas eoz in-firmā uidelicet legis infidelita-te destructa erat. ipsis uerba salu-tis et uere fidei in xpō annuntiantes.

Unde multos ex eadē turba ad agnitionē dī reduxerūt. deducētes eos ad umbilicū idē ad fontē baptismans in quo receperūt scēntiā p̄dīā in supba transgressionē. atq; scām ciuitatē p̄ceptoz dī erexerūt. redifi-cantes eis ipsā qua eos infidiator dīabolus despoliauerat in adā. et eā in fide ad salutē eis reddiderūt. Qui autē fide baptismatis et munimētum missionis dī p̄p̄t̄ incredulitatē suā recipe nolēbant hos in p̄conis sig-norū p̄transierūt. ac eos obduriciā et incredulitatē que ipsis erat condēpnantes mortu tradiderūt q̄a in fecerib; suis et in sordib; pollu-tionū carnis atq; in illecebris formi-cationū et adulteriis suis se inuol-uentes ut porcus luto inuoluti ad uerā fidē conuerti noluerūt. unde & a uita diuisi et separati s;. Sicq; fili dī amulsi et admirandis signis in toto terrarū orbe manifestatus ē ex patre scđm diuinitatē ante tēpora ineffabiliter genitus fuisse et post in-tēpore scđm humanitatē mirabiliter incarnatus ē ex uirgine. ita qđ cor-da omniū hec audiētiū horrore et tremore nimio sunt concussa et pcussa. et qđ uana ac fallacia opa que scđm uoluptates suas fecerūt ad n̄hī-lū in eis p̄contēptū mortis sunt redacta. uerū uerbo dī testimoniū scē trinitati atq; uiuifice saluatiōis que sit paquā regenerationis ad unā reddente. ut dilectus ioh̄s in uerbis exhortationis sue ostendit dicens.

Et spēs ē qui testificat quō xpēs ē ueritas. quia tres s; qui testi-moniū dāt in trā. spēs aqua et sanguis. Et tres unū s;. Et tres s; qui testi-moniū dant in celo. p̄t̄ uerbū et spēs.
Et tres unū s;. Hoc tale ē. Spēs hoīs sp̄ritalis ē uidelicet n̄ p̄cedens de sanguine nec nascens de carne; s; currens de archano dī. existens illi in-uisibilis qđ mutabilitati subiectū ē.
Idōq; ē illi testificatio ad filiū dī cui gl̄a mirabilis ē in mystico spiritamine quā nullus hominū p̄fecte intelligere ualeat scilicet quomodo

154 idē unigenitus dī de spū scō concep-tus sit et hīc mundū uenerit. sicut etiā nullus hominū plenit̄ scire po-terit quom̄ anima p̄transcat corp⁹ et sanguinē hominis ita qd̄ una ui-ta erit. Et sicut sps hōis ē certissima causa scientie que dī adō data ē p̄ transiens in ea om̄a que ei adō con-cessa s̄. quō n̄ ē falsa et deceptiosa uita s̄; acutissima ^{uita} ita ē xp̄e p̄fecta ueritas in qua surrexit et lumen saluationis refulsit. de qua mors cecidit quia ipsa fallax ē. Et tria scām trinitatē significam̄ testi-moniū dant in tr̄a. ita qd̄ ostendunt & tribuunt in p̄sentia scō remediū uiuifice saluationis p̄ qd̄ p̄ueniendū ē ad celestia sine timore p̄mansura. que n̄ dū immortalita-te carnis habent in re. s̄; in spe exspectant. Nā sp̄s hōis habet ex me testimoniū in se qd̄ non ē implena uita restorationis salutis nisi re-surgat p̄ me in aqua regenerationis. quia defecit in illo lumine qd̄ lucet in me. expulsus defelicitate p̄corruptā conceptionē criminis quod crefecit in sanguine. Et aqua habet testimoniū illud qd̄ om̄a sordida purget in se. & qd̄ ipsa mortifera p̄dicio mortis p̄ purissimā purga-tionē p̄eat in ea. hic spū ante san-guinē adiuncta q̄a ut sp̄s spūalis est. sic & aqua spūale affert sc̄ifica-tionē. et media int̄ sp̄m & sanguinē posita quō et animā & corpus p̄spūale regenerationē confortans transmittit ad uitā. Sanguis quoq̄ testimoniū habet qd̄ uenenosa in-nera sua retorqucat ad domū sc̄ificationis p̄ aquā saluationis. que est medicinalis uis in filio meo incipiens et in ipso ad uitā p̄manens. quia sanguis in se continet ualde culpabilia crimina magnāq̄ in-quietudinē in iusticie p̄erantia scilicet in nera currens in tortuosa dulcedine. que ardentem libidinem seruit & que innocentia p̄horrida ui-cia suffocat. & crescit incipiens p̄gustū comedens de suggestionē insi-diatoris diaboli. Et hęc tr̄a unū quō sp̄s n̄ ē uiuens homo sine san-guinea mat̄a corporis nec sanguinea mat̄a corporis uiuens homo sine aīa. nec hęc duo reuiuiscunt in gr̄a noue legis ad uitā nisi p̄ aquā regenerationis. et ita unū s̄ in re-deptione. nec s̄ integra in saluan-one quādiu ab hac salutarī aqua s̄ separata. q̄a rationalitatem de ē p̄cellens honor uite in qua redēptus homo semp resonare debet p̄ fectā laudē in conspectu dī qui ip-si rationalitatē dedit. Nā d̄s p̄p̄a uoluntate sua creauit hominē ad honorē illū qui incōplet in corpore filii ei in uita et̄na. cū p̄d̄mis homo reuiuiscit in honorē uite salutifera gr̄a redēptus in dō. Et sp̄s quidē inuisibilis corporalib; oculis existens designat patrē oī creature inestimabile. & aqua purgationē sordis faciens significat uerbū idē filiū passionē sua abstergentē maculas hominū. atq; sanguis circūplectens et cale faciens hominē figurat spm scm suscitantē et incendētē clarissi mas uirtutes in hominib; Sic tria hec uidelicet sps aqua & sanguis s in uno et unū s in saluatione sci licet ut dictū ē atq; trinitatē in unitate & unitatē in trinitate de monstrant. Quomodo. Scā & eccle stis trinitas dat celeste testimoniu ita qd nē ab alio sūptū s; certa re in ipsa manifestatū. Quom. Patr testi ficat qd uicū fructuosū uerbū suū qd ante scā genuit. p qd oīa creata s; ipsū p ea in pdestinatio tēpore in uirgine glōsissime flo ruit. Uerbū autē testificat qd ex iuit a patre inclināsse ad humanā naturā incarnatū uidelicet in pu dore uirginitatis. qā exiuit a pa tre spūali egressione & iterū redi it ad patrē in carnis fructuositate hic in medio positū qā a patre ē ante tēpora inuisibilū genuit et de spū scō in uirginis utero in tē pore corporalitē conceptū. Sēs ū spūs testificatur qd accendit in te gritatē uirginis ita qd uerbū dī concepit & qd doctrinā eidē uer bi in igneis linguis firmavit cū aplos ita pfudit aut p totū mun dū uerā trinitatē uociferantur. Quom.

Ipsi clamabant qd d; pater pfe cit illud qd creauit hominē ad supnā felicitatē qua spoliatus ē sed ut saluaretur in redemptione homo. qā ipse delinōtē factus in reuelatione sursū s; uoluntate sua declinans se ad tēram deorsū nē ingrā p incarnatū dī filiū erectus denuo sursū et p spm scm illumi natus et confirmatus ne pūter in p dicatione restitutus ē cūne claritū.

Sic patr filius et sps scs testant qd omnino nō disiungunt in po testate quāuis in psonis distinguan tur. quia simul opant in unitate simplicis et in cōmutabilis substan tie. Quomodo. Quō patr ē creans sci licet omīa p uerbū idē p filiū suū in spū scō. filius p quē omīa pficiunt in patre & filio. Et he tres psonae s; ita in unitate inseparabilis substantie. qd nō transfundunt uicissim in se.
Quomodo. Idō quō qui genuit patr ē & qui natus ē filius ē & qui a pa tre & filio ardentissima uiriditate pcedit et in specie innocentis alnis sup aquas apparet eas scificauit. et aplos igneo ardore pfudit. sps scs ē. Pater enī ante tēpora scōz ha buit filiū filiusq; erat apud patrē spū scō cōnalit patri filio q; in uni tate diuinitatis cōcōno. Unde consi derandū ē qā si cōhis trib; psonis due uel una de cō. nō cōt d; in ple nitudine sua. Quomodo. Quia ip se s; una unitas diuinitatis. quō si aliqua earū de cōt d; nō cōt. Nam quāuis eadē psonae ita distincte sint. tam s; una & integra atq; in cōmu tabilis substantia inestimabilis pulehritudinis pmanens in indi et spiritu scō. sps scs p quē uirent oīa i patre & filio.

155 uisa unitate. Quomodo. Potestas uoluntas ardor: hi tres apices in uno culmine operationis. Quomodo. In potestate uoluntas inuoluntate ardor: inseparabiles sunt. sic & aliter hominis in sua emissionem. Quomodo.
Circuens uentus cum humiditate & calore est inindivisibili emissio-ne: sic & oculus tuus in sua integritate. Quomodo. Circulus oculi tui ha-bet duo plucida in se: unum tamen habituaculum existens: omniaque regens que sibi constituta sunt. Audi & intel-lige homo. Sic tres persone in una incommutabili eterna diuinitas sunt.
In patre filius in utroque: spiritus sanctus & unus sunt: sibiique inseparabiliter coopantur. quod nec pater operatur sine filio: nec filius sine spiritu sancto: nec spiritus sanctus sine ipsis: nec pater nec filius sine spiritu sancto quia unitas indiuisa sunt. Sic est deus in tribus personis absque initio ante eum: non dum ante exordium mundi assumptione carnis in filio pacta usque ad propor-tionem tempus ubi uenit finis temporis illius cum misit deus filium suum: & eodem filio incarnato nunc deus est in tribus personis uolens ita uicis inuocari: cum idem uirginis, floruit in integritate uirginitatis nec ineffabili trinitati ob hoc persona addita est: sed tamen ipse filius dei induit carnem inviolabiliter assumptam. Unde & he-tres persone: sunt unus deus in diuinitate.
Et que sic non credit ille abscedit de regno dei: quia scindit integra-tem diuinitatis: et se ipsum infide-ut scriptum est. Indie autem tertia apparuit homo ueniens de castris saul. ueste concissa: et puluere aspersus caput. Hoc tale est. In illa die catholica fides orta est in manifestatione sancte trinitatis: pullulabant homines in multo scismate: uenientes ab exercitu mortifere cohortis: peruerse illud seruantes quod non est possibile homini scire. Unde incuruata per multas sua-siones diabolice artis: fingunt se ascendere super illam altitudinem: ita quod uolunt scire plusquam eis sciendum sit de incomprehensibili diuinitate. Et ideo a ueste salutis & iusticie seindunt: quia deo contrarii sunt: atque fedantur per diuinitatem sparsionis incipite. fidei fide integra non habentes: sed unum cum honorem diuinis in multas sectas spargentes: atque honorem suum in risione scismatis minuentes. Qui omnes ad deum diudica-bunt ut insequentibus: ita continetur.

Dixit dauid ad aduenientem qui nunciauerat ei. Unde est tu. Qui respondit. filius hominis aduenit a masechme. ego sum. Et ait ad eum dauid. Quare non timuisti mittere manum tuam: ut occideres christum dominum. Vocauitque da-uid unum de pueris suis & ait. Ac-cedens irruere in eum. Qui percussit il-lum: et mortuus est. Et ait ad eum da-uid. Sanguis tuus sit super caput tuum. Os enim tuum locutum est aduer-sum te dicens. Ego interfeci christum dominum.
Hoc tale est. Ille uictoriosus qui incomprehensibilis est omni creature

215.

155 dicit ad puerile ignorantiam que in homine est ad illam scilicet pueriliam que sibi metipsi facit exaltationem hoc uolens scire quod sciendum non est. hanc stulticia inuadit dominum quasi preternaturaliter annuntians et scio te bene domine. nam quod ipse responderet illi sic. Unde est tuus qui habens inimicum uis scire totum quod caret inimico. Et stulticia que orta est inimicum habens. respondit quasi in scientia sua dicens. Ego sum filius hominis qui peregrinus est hic ueniens ab hac maledic-ta terra. quia primus homo lapsus in gustu pomi fecit in hoc exilium de patria eius et ego per gentes sum. Tunc dicit deus ad eum. Quia homo es a maledicta terra et pulsus de patria ut exilium. quare non misti tanta presumptione scrutari quod tibi sciendum non est suffocans opus tuum. nam quod nullomodo uale est in lumine spei et tangens in eo malum homicidii quia quicunque temere scrutatur quod deus fuerit ante creaturam mundi. uel quod deus facturum sit per nouissimum diem hic anathematizatus sit a portione beate communionis. quomodo hoc sibi sciendum non est qui habet mortale inimicum peccati grauissimi. scilicet miserum et infelicem salu-tem bone scientie quia in humana seruitute est quod scrutari non debuit. Ideo tu qui hec presumptuose et crudeliter persecutionem facis. beatam intelligentiam regalis prophetie inter infidelis. quia anima tua debet prouidere sibi puram scientiam fideliter scilicet in illa simplicitate que conueniens est cre-dere in deum. Tunc precepit deus zelo purissime iusticie sue que non ha-bet ulla macula iniquitatis. uocans eum preclarissimam unitatem in diem iudiciorum suorum sic dicit. festina et obprime illum de bona sua ^{scientia} quam habuit. ne quiescat in ulla felicitate sui sensus. quomodo nulla in se fecit requiem in corde suo. Et sic plaga zeli domini percutit illum. nam quod nulla semellula ulli oculi ipsi remanebit ad uidendum idem ad cognoscendum deum. Unde et mortem iusticie. unalis consolationis se ipsum non ualens regere. Tunc dicit ad eum deus. Sanguinolentum nefas tuum quod te eleuas ad illam excelsa que non potes intueri sit super animum tuum que in iuste erigis contra me. illud malum conculcans te in depressum locum. de quo te leuare non possis in rectam mensuram per positionis fidei quod recta uestigia ire noluisti. scilicet in sensum tuo magni scisma quesisti. Nam os tuum sit relictum auerbis sapientie. quomodo locutum est contra salutem tuam. cum fallaciter seruitutatus es secretam et incomprehensibilem diuinitatem presumens scire que non sunt scienda. temere dicens intemeripso. quod deus sit bene scio. preternaturaliter ista occidens in tuam salutem tuam. cum caute in deum credere noluisti. scilicet te superbe contra eum exteisti. Qui autem acutas aures interioris intellectus habet. hic in ardente amore speculi mei ad uerba hec anhe-let. et ea in conscientia animi sui conscribat. Octaua uisio. ter-tie partis.

C de
inde
in pla ga meridiana in p̄fato lapideo muro demonstrati edificii ultra p̄dictā co lumnā magnā & obumbratā intra et extra idē edificii apparentē que scilicet uisui meo tā umbrosa appa ruit ut nec magnitudinē nec alti tudinē ei cognoscere ualerē & int̄ colūnā hanc atq; colūnā uere tri nnariū erat int̄ruptus locus longi tudinis triū cubitoꝝ uacuiusq; absq; muro ut sup̄ius ostensū ē fundam̄to ibi tantū posito. Hec g̃ umbrosa co lumna in hoc ipso edificio in eodē loco stabat ubi de sup̄ in celestib; mysteriis corā dō illū magnū et q̃ dratū lucidissimūq; candoris splen dorē p̄r̄i uiderā qui secretū sup̄ni creatoris designans in maximo mysterio m̄ manifestatus ē in q̃ enā alī splendor uelut auroꝝ in se aeriā in alto purpuree lu cis claritatē habens fulgebāt p̃ quē m̄ in mystica ostensione mi steriū incarnati filii dī demon stratū fuerat. Incolūna autē ista ab imo usq; ad sūmū ei in modū scale ascensus erat ubi om̄s uirtu tes dī descendentes et ascenden tes oneratas lapidib; ad opus suū ire uidebā acutū studiū idē op̃ p̄ficiendi habentes. Fraudū lu cidū illū qui sedebat in throno dicentē. Isti fortissimi op̄ari dī s̄. s̄; int̄ has uirtutes p̄cipue septē uidebā quarū enā for mas et habitus diligētissime considerabā. Talis g̃ similitudo in eis erat. Om̄s ut alie uirtutes que sup̄a memorare s̄ uelut uestib; ex serico induēbant. S̄; & om̄s albis erant; reuēto ca pite & absq; amictu pallioꝝ in cedebant. p̄t̄ primā more femineo in capite uelatā atq; quasi casula tanquā cristallus pluēda indutā & p̄t̄ s̄dām nigros capillos habentē atq; p̄t̄ terciā que dissimilis humane forme uidebat. Prima quoq; & q̄rtā atq; q̄ntā albis tunicis uestiebant. Om̄s enā alba calciamenta habebant ex cepta tertia secundum speciem hominis non appa-reunt ut dictum est. & excepta quinta que crystallinis calciaminis miro modo lucentibus calcabat. Hec autem meis fuit dissimilitudo. Prima imago portabat coronam auream ca-piti suo impositam tres ramos alciexstantes habentem atque preciosissimus lapidibus viridis & rubei co-loris & albis facis multo fulgen-te ornata. In pectore uero suo habebat speculum lucidissimum. in quo mira claritate imago incarnati filii dei apparebat. Et ait. Ego sum colima humilium mentium. et intrectrix superborum cordium. In minimo incepti & ad ardua celorum ascendi.

 Lucifer erexit se sursum super se et corruit sub se deorsum. Quisquis me uult imitari filii mei esse desiderans. si me matrem suam amplecti opus meum in me perficiendo hic tangat fundamentum. & lenit ad alta sur-sum ascendebat. Quid est hoc. Ipse primus carnis sue uilitatem inspiciat. et sic de sursum de uirtute in uirtute suam & leni animo gradatim per-ficiat. quia quod summum ramum arboris primum apprehendit ad ascenden-dum. repente casu sepius ca-dit. Qui autem uolens ascendere a radice incipit. huic non est tam facile cadendum si caute incedit. Sed secunda tota uidebat ut iacinctus aerei in alto coloris. uidelicet tam forma quam tunica ipsi. Et eadem tunice due Zone inestimabili in auro & gemis ornate mirabiliter intertextae erant. ut super utrumque humerum eadem imaginis Zona una usque ad pedes ipsius ante & retro des-cenderet. Dixitque. Ego ad indignationem in celo provocabar. cum lucifer semet ipsum odio & superbia transimomordit. Sed o o o humilitas hoc tollerare noluit. Propter quod etiam ille ruina magna deiectus est. formato autem homine. o o o. nobilissimum granum & o o o. dulcissimum germen. filii dei propter hominem in fine temporum natus est homo. Et quomodo lucifer uolu-it & temptauit uestem & integritatem meam scindere. ideo lucidissimus splendor apparuit in deo et in homine.

 Nunc autem ceci & mortui. lupanaria & meretrices atque inestas causas appellant equi uocas meas. Sed quantum impossibile est hanc spurciam tangere uoluntatem meam. Pennas ergo in malis uirtutibus in faciam. cum quibus hec inutilia que lucifer per mundum sparsit abiciam. O uirtutes. ubi est lucifer. In inferno est. Surgam ergo ois aduersa luce appropinquantes. atque edificemur maximas fortissimas turres in puincis. ut cum uenerit dies nouissimus plurimum fructum & in spiritalibus. & in carnalibus. apportemus. Cumque plenitudo gentium introierit. tunc & nos intra & in ce-lo perficiemur. O turpissime lucifer. quid tibi profuit repentina tene-ras tua. In primo splendore tuo cum creatus es a deo. uoluisti me in sam endo & bachando conculcando conculcare & acelo deicere. s; tu mabyf su cecidisti. et ego in celo p mansi. p^{ra} descendens ad q^{as} in incarnato filo di. Et p me pfecta e multitudo fide liu. mille iustis et bonis artib; arma toz. q^{si} p^{si} si posses ia dudū libentis sime diripisses. O humilitas que q^{si} nam calcatos & conuictos usq; ad s; dera eleuas. obumilitas que es gl^osis sima regna uirtutu qua forte & in uictu es tuis ubiq; p^{si}diu nullo ca dente qui puro corde diligit te. sic & ego tecū ualde uolū multūq; ex optabilis defensio meis sū. quia ual de gracilis et subtilis existens. paruis sima foramina me colemū exgro. et ea acutissime ptransio. Tercia autē imaginē uidi in eodē scemate ut in priorū uisione eā uiderā maioris scilicet a longioris stature quā ce teras uirtutes dissimileq; forme hu mane et plurimos oculos undiq; in se habentē totaq; insipientia uiuen tē. atq; induta q^{si} umbroso indu mento. p qd idē oculi pspiciebant. multoq; timore tremē corā p^{di}c to lucido sedente iusthono. Et ait.

Que miseris peccatorib; dñm nū mentib; sū. eū q^{si} illusorē ha berib; Quis potest incōp^hensibilis di timorē effugere quē ipse culpa bilē sūit p^{re}. nābiciēte ase ma la. Propterea ego ualde & ualde dñm dñm timebo. Quis me adiuuabit co rā uero dō. Quis me liberabit iure mendo ei iudicio. Nullas omnino nisi idē iustus dñs illū q^{si} quā ad illū semp fugiā. Q^{ra} uero nūcū uinculū circa collū portabat. atq; man^u & pe des candido religamine habebat li gatos. Et dixit. Non possū currere sedm uoluntatē meā puiā sc^{la}rē nec p contagia humane uoluntatis. et ideo uolo redire ad dñm patrē omnū quē diabolus recusauit. & quē obaudire noluit. Quinta quoq; circa collū ru beā torquē habebat. Et ait. Vnus ē dñs. iustib; psonis unū essentia. & q^{si} gl^o colendus. fide q^{si} & fiducia habe bo in dñō. & nō delebo in eū nomē ei. de corde meo. Sexta autē tunica pal lidi coloris inducbat. Et cruce passi onis crucifixi filii dī ante eā in aere apparuit. ad quā ipsa oculos et ma nus cū multa deuotione erigebat.

Dixitq; O pie patrē parce peccan tib; q^{si} nō dereliq^{si} exules. s; eos deua sti in humeros tuos. Unde etiā ia nō pi mus spē habentē sūit. S; septima lu cidiorē & puriore cristallo tunica ue stiebatur. que ita in candore reluce bat. ut aqua resplendet cū sole pfun dit. Et sup caput ei expansis q^{si} ad uolandū alis colūba stabat. uersa sedm faciē illi. Apparuit autē et q^{si} in uentre ipsi uelut in speculo candi dissim^u infans. cui s^u s^u inscriptū erat innocentia. Habebat quoq; in dextera manu regale sceptrū. sinistra autē ad pectus suū posuerat. Et dice bat. Ego libera sū. & nō ligata. Puris simū fontē ptransiui. dulcissimū scilicet et amantissimū filiū dī. P transiui cū ab eoq. exiui. Supbissimū autē diabola conculco. n̄ p̄ualentē ligare me. Ipse absesus ē de me. q̄a semp maneo in supno patre.

 S; in sumitate p̄fate obumbrate colūne. uidi aliā pulcherrimā ima ginē. nudo capite stantē & cris pos ac subnigros capillos habentē. faciēq. uirilē tantē ardentis clari tatis. ut eā p̄spiciē considerare n̄ possē ut faciē hoīs. Fiat quoq. purpurei et subnigri coloris tu nica induta. cui sup utriūq. hu merū eidē magnis. Zona una coloris rubicundi cōci ante & re tro usq. ad pedes ei⁹ sex tendens in texta fuerat. Habebat autē circa collū episcopale palliū. mirabili modo auro & p̄ciosissimis gēmis adornatū. Splendor uero candi dissim⁹ na eā ubiq. circūdederat. ut nusquā nisi inanē ac capite ui delicet & deorsū usq. ad pedes ei⁹ ipsā inspicere possē. Brachia autē et manus atq. pedes ipsi. in adui dendū obumbrati erant. S; splen dor idē qui eā circūdederat. oeu lis undiq. plenus erat. totusq. ui uens. atq. hac & illac se diffundens. ut nubes diffuere solet. ita ut nē laciores nē autē constrictiores se red dert. Et eadē imago uoce mag na clamaui in mundū dicēs hoīb. q̄a dī sū filioli mei idō audite et intelligite me. q̄a illis dolum aīe qui me intelligunt in ammo nmone. q̄s enā in eadē beatitudi ne comineo ne reuertant ad iniquita tē. Et quō ipsi me n̄ despexerūt. ob hoc enā uolo eos tangere mea ad monitione. quatin⁹ incipiant bona opari. illi dictū qui me req̄runt in simplicitate & cordis puritate. Et dū tribuo margaritas boni ammonens ac exhortans hominē. ita scilicet dū intellectus hoīs tangit p̄ me sumei in ciū. hoc ē dū sensus hoīs intelligit ad monitionē meā auditu ita q̄d enā idē sensus ducit ad consensū tactus mei in animo illi. tē sū in ipso in ciū boni. q̄d cū oportet incipe. me sic il li adiutrice. Tē et ibi colluctatio ē. ut uel p̄ficiat q̄d do uel n̄. Quom̄. Hoc sic uolo intelligi. q̄a dū hominē am moneo tali m̄ q̄d incipit gēnere ac flere peccata sua. tē si uoluntas illi⁹ acquiescit admonitioni quā illū admonui quō homo in sensu suo ta liter sentit mutationē animi sui. q̄līt oculos suos leuat ad uidendū & au res ad audiendū et os ad loquendū. et manus ad pal pandū & pedes ad ambulandū. scdm̄ desiderii illud ut sibi in animo ē. & si tē uoluntas suscepit admonitionē meā. mox ipsa eleuat se & deprimat ac supat sensū. ita q̄d idē sensus disert ignota in sua consuetudine. Quom̄. Ipse mu tat se. quō cū oportet quā uis inuiti sequi uoluntatē que sup eū ē. ipse enī subiectus ē illi in seruiicio q̄a ei inferior ē. eāq. sequet sine uelut si ue nolit. Nā ego do bonū municio & calefacio illud in m̄te tribuoq. op⁹ ym.

158 uoluntati ad perficiendum. et hoc facio admonitione exhortatione atque calo re domi exspiracionis spiritus sancti. Si autem uoluntas his domis repugnat. tunc ad nihilum deducuntur hec que memo raui. Unde in eodem tempore dum homo potest incipere in incendio donec insignis periculum quod de me oritur. tunc ad illud per peret. ac tunc citius ueniat uoluntas in bonis. et perficiat opus hoc in claritate.
Nam scientia boni et mali ob hoc habet homo. ut ipse in opibus suis deum tanto melius intelligat. deuitando malum et operando bonum. quia sic deum colit cum timore cum amplectens in perfecta cari tate. Quomodo. Ita scilicet si aperit intus res oculos spiritus ad bonum. et si negat et abiicit in exteriori hominis malum quod facere potuit. Idcirco etiam subiecta est terrena creatura sub potestate ipsius. ut eo amplius deum intelligat et diligat. ac operetur in eo opus scientie sue cum in tellectu quo ipse timet et amat om nipotentem qui ipsi deputauit mag num honorem feruentis plurimarum creaturarum. Unde et ob has causas ef fundit et infundit homo hoc est quod ipse in intellectu suo scientiam comprehendit discretionem in creaturis. nam quod nouit que sint amabiles et odibiles et que utiles atque inutiles. et quod etiam post hec in fide qua ipse deum intel ligit concluduntur omnia opera ipsius. nam quod et deo et angelis et placere.
Aliquando etiam tango hominem in animo ipsius et moneo eum. ut incipiat ope ri iusticiam et deuitare malum. scilicet dedig natur me et putat. quod possibile sibi sit quicquid facere uoluerit. ac spiritum peni tendi sibi in se ipsi constituit usque ad tempus illud dum corpus eius in simplicitate te frigide etatis sibi conseruat. et dum etiam propter senectutem sibi fastidio sit. am plius peccare. Tunc iterum admonero atque hortor eum ad bonum. et ut animo suo resistat. Quidum me negligit. sepe per mul tas aduersitates ut in diuiciis et in ce teris his similibus. que pariter ad hoc perducunt. quod eum quasi inuitum et aduersus se met ipsum oportet facere bonum. et quod eum in ira exasperato animo non multum delectat ea adimplere que prius pro posuerat perficere in proprio tempore. in quo ei uidebatur nichil contrarium ipsi obesse. sed in quo ipse in se in ipso ordina uerat. tempore illa agere ut sibi pla cuisset. Hic homo dubie suscepit me. nolo tamen eum derelinquere. quia quoniam uis sic susceperet me. tamen non omnino desperat me. Unde et ego non labora ui frustra in ipso. Tedium enim mihi non est tan gere ulcerata uulnera que eum unda ta sunt. comedentium uermium innume rositate uicio et furore mali rumo ris et infamie. et languore in uictrici te iniquitatis peccatorum. nec despiciam quin lenit illa contrarium eo tempore dum incipio extrahere edacem liuo rem malicie. hoc est cum intueor. et tan go eadem uulnera blando calore ex spiracionis spiritus sancti. Sepe cum huiusmo di dolor ueteri fomito inueterat. nam quod peccatum incipit calere ardens in animo hominis et cum etiam sic oriuntur in dolore uulnera peccatorum ita quod erit incoagulatum opus huius immundicie quasi globus et acerrimus et erigens de magna sorde uermium et fornicatione inuolutum luti de quo nascuntur morti fera uenena scorpionum serpentium ra-narum et aliorum similium uenenosorum uermium et cum etiam terra ita induratur ut lapis imale scilicet duriciam quam nullus cognat effringere que sunt in portabilia onera scelerum nullis hominibus qui grauati sunt grauioribus oneribus quod tunc adhuc. Tunc quippe homines propter infidelitatem suam non possunt confidere ut possibile sit huic homi-ni se adducere conuertere de sua iniquitate pro eo quia uident eum quasi esse dia-boli. Ego tamen nolo eundem hominem deserere sed meo adiutorio et prelo uolo eum proprio incertamine ubi sua uiter primum incipio tangere quasi duriciam lapidis illius peccati quam quasi difficile est eum confringere una maxi-mo ferore horribilium scelerum que sunt predictae cause magne sordis et nequam et que sunt uelut cadauer putredinis et esca diaboli quam ipse certissime absorbit in uentre suo.

 Quomodo. Scriptura habet de filio dei dicente misericordibus est ut faciam uoluntatem patris mei et contra misericordibus est dia-boli ut homines deprimat in mortem per quam illos talibus causis ut predictum est afflat qui ei uoluntate sua consen-tunt et per eum declinant. Et id ipsum est diaboli desiderium et continuum studium quia de hac sorde oritur omne malum. Sed de istis hominibus plures me intelligunt. Quomodo. Dum ego primum tango dicit homo ille intra se. Quod mihi est Ego nescio nec cognare nescio quicquam boni. Et iterum nesciens suspirat et dicit. Heu me peccatorem. Nichil autem amplius sentit quam mole peccatorum gra-uatus est et quo tenebre iniquitatis conturbauerunt eum. Tunc iterum tango uulnera illius. Et quo prius per me admonitus erat tunc eo melius intelligit me et respiciens in se ipsum iterum dicit.

 Ue mihi quid faciam. Nescio nec excogita-re ualeo quod fiat de me propter multi-plicia peccata mea. Ach quo me uer-ta uel ad quem perabo qui me adiu-uet ut turpissima scelera mea contegam et deleam in penitentia. Unde iterum respicit in se ipsum ea collucta-tione quam prius habuit in studio peccandi ac eodem desiderio adueram penitentiam se conuertere ut ante studebat in peccatis. Et quia tunc idem homo mea admonitione sic euigila-uit de somno mortis quam somnia elegerat ideo tunc nec cognitione nec uerbo nec facto que prius ardenter habuit ad scelera uult amplius peccare sed studiosissime infortissima penitentia se eleuat ad me. Qua propter mox et ego suscipio eum totum et deinceps dimitto eum quasi liberum ita quod de predictis causis graue in se habitationem ultra non habebit ut karissimi filii mei sustinent quos moneo multiplici miseria iniquis sagit-tis diabolicarum persuasionum quia ipse homo tunc hoc propter etiam libere agere quod in se uolunt re sordet nolo quia fieri. Na

 monne me querit illi uolunt qu abeunt Sciri homi intelligunt id monito nala con car que inuare co
 eni expi ne repun quod poss ut nolo
 penit monne m re peccat se auer derunt co tura euig fideliter quod est gram di nec cogit di sit di boni ipse boni ut u ab secon
 Hoc facit

159 harū tē n̄ indiget. Nā ipse sēp dōle bit p̄pt̄ transacta peccata sua. ita ut etā sibi met iratus tā acerbē penitentiā agat qd̄ se etā indignū estimet ho minē uocari. S; hēc uictoria ē infeto re sordet illoz hominū q̄s abicere nolo. q̄uō p̄ peccata sua metām que siet. Nā qui me n̄ sp̄munt s; admo nitionē meā suscipiunt & me deuote querūt. illis parata sūt facere q̄cqd̄ uolunt. Qui autē me contēpnentes abiciunt. illi mortui s̄ nec eos scio.
S̄t enī hoīes quidū me ad eē sentiunt intelligentes ipsoz mentē tactā eē admonitionē meā fugiunt me p̄ malā consuetudinē conceptoz pec catoz que in se deglutiebant uo luntate consensu atq; ope. unde etā & ipsi s̄ corā dō q̄si nihilū & ina ne reputat. q̄a nolunt eē consen qd̄ possent facere tacti p̄me. Ego autē nolo eē in pollutione horū peccatoz q̄ nolunt suscipere admo nitionē meā. nec se uolunt purga re p̄ exhortationē illā quatinus se auertant a peccatis suis nec desi derant comedere cibū illū q̄ ē sēp tura euglii quo saciari debent oī fideles. nec gustare saporē ei sedm̄ qd̄ eis datū ē. s; festinant fugere grām dī q̄a nec uidere nec audire nec cognare uolunt. qd̄ eis facien dū sit dū uocant̄ admonitionē boni. Ipsi fugiunt admonitionē bonā. ut uermis q̄ trāit intrat se abscondens ab oī decore hui' seli.
Hoc faciunt et isti nequissimi hoīes fugientes p̄cepta dī seq; pol luentes in stercore q̄ se inuoluntant in mortē cū se abscondunt in ma lucia sua. nolentes de fetore neq̄cie ad lucē p̄dire. Qui tales s̄. n̄ p̄tinent ad me. Nā ego nolo hac et illac di uidi in pollutione lūi. Quomodo. cū his eē uolo. qui me pura peni tencia intelligunt. ubi me etā adiungo humane putredini. q̄a eā uolo purgare. Qui autē me nolunt suscipere illos de me abi cio nolens eē cū eis q̄uō nulla pars m̄ cū illis ē. q̄a s̄ in parte stulte ignorantē me intelligere nolentes. & q̄uō nolo eē in ope qd̄ p̄tinet ad conglutinationē ob duratē p̄uersitatis qd̄ ē ad mor tē. Et q̄ hoc modo sp̄munt me imitant̄ p̄ditū angelū. qd̄ dū dīm uidere potuit eū inspicere noluit. ita ut eū humilit̄ ag nosceret. & p̄pterea subito effu git omne glām celestē cadens in mortē dū dō uoluit assimi lari simili honore. Ipsi despiciunt me. q̄uō opant̄ opus malignū ut exiguunt illicita desideria carnis in uoluptatib; ipsoz. Et q̄uō me despiciunt. idcirco fa ciunt qd̄ uolunt. Ipsi contēp nunt dīm. sic etā negligunt illī p̄ceptū. Unde et multo ciens indignatione meā deputant̄ ad plenitudinē m̄tis sue facere qd̄ uoluerint. quia uitā eīne fe licitatis eos fugit. q̄si nihilū sit.

Hec multociens etiam deficientes tam inspirate presentis uite quam future quod duri et immobiles ad felicitatem boni sunt. Communacem enim peccatorem in malis suis perseuerantem desero. uniuficans cum qui in se respicit et a peccatis suis in amore meo cum pura penitencia se ad me conuertit. Nam ego sum columna firme stabilitatis que nunquam desero querentem me. quod qui me apprehendit et se in intime ac fi-deliter coniungit. nunquam deciderit in perditionem. Qui uero me habet in obliuione mentis sue et superbiendo se eleuat super me. idem qui in se ipsum magis confidit quam in me ac ideo fiduciam in me contempnit habere quod per nichilo computat gratiam dei. quia in animo ipsius sum ut uentus turbis. ipse habens me negligentem in irrisione et superbe cum elatione in desperatione non propter grauedinem pecca-torum que perpetraverit sed propter superbiam me deridendo sic dicens. quod est gratia dei. hec ego dei cecidendo occidam. et in elec-tione mea cum erigere nolo quia mortuus est in eterna felicitate. Sed et hi homines qui non habent fiduciam se posse sur-gere de grauioribus culpis peccatorum suorum sic abicientes omnipotentem deum et gratiam ipsius desperantes scilicet inimi-cia tristitia quasi non possunt saluari de enormitate criminum suorum deficiunt. precechi a me et acerbè corruunt in mortem morientes in inferno inferi-ori cruciati mortis cunctis. Nec etiam lo-quar de dilectis filiis meis qui me suscipiunt. apto sensu et uoluntario animo atque acuto intellectu et qui me tu ac fletu tangunt me excipientes cum gaudio atque omni amplectentes in caratione. O flores mei. quidum me ad esse sentiunt subito gaudent in me. et ego nullis. Ipsi dulciores suauioresque mihi sunt ^{super amorem lapidis precelesilium et} super fulgentes preciosas margaritas in inter hominum que eas amplectun-tur ardenti desiderio. Ipsi etiam sunt in nobilissimi quadrati lapides. quia in conspectu meo in sepe sunt amabiles. Hos assidue uolo limare et purgare quantum recte ac decet ponant in celesti ierusalem. quia semper in mentibus suis bona uoluntate mecum epulantur nec mea iusticia possunt saciari. Nam mox cum tactum meum sentiunt propinquant ad me. tanquam cer-uis ad fontem aque. Sed ego sepe relinquo eos ita quod ipsis uidetur quasi sint sine adiutorio. quod idcirco facio ut exter-rior homo in eis non inflat per superbiam.

 Tunc plorant ac lugent estumantes me ipsis esse offensa. Sed ego sic persecutor fidei eorum. At tam forti manu tenco eos sic auferens ab ipsis elationem. nec permittens eos cognoscere quod sint in occultis bonis suis. quia multiplices fructus in eis facere uolo. animis ipsorum dolentibus. accordibus eorum uulneratis indoloribus. Finito enim mul-tociens diabolicas persuasiones ipsos inuadere in igneis sagittis de flammis immundicie incendii ardentis spiritus fornicationis que uulnerant corpora eorum in infirmitate fragilis nature. et hoc idcirco permittit quantum hoc modo tā fortit in buantē inspira tione spēs scī qd postea fiant insign nes pcones & flagrantēs inuirtutib.

Ipsi quippe erūt in pbanone qsi au rū in fornace idē pbatu inuirtutione et in indignatione. Na qd qsi ni chilū computabunt. & qd sepiissime p raptores sub flamma sua denuda bunt. ac p diffensionē plebis in ad uersitatib. sic agnī alupis dilacera bunt. Et ut oues dū cas lupi disp gens dissipat tam n̄ moriunt. ita s̄ & isti hoīes in morte aīe n̄ mori ent. s̄. eo magis iuuentēs purgan in aduersis. Nā bona arbor ut fr̄ ve tū. qat irrigat circūcidit atq. cir cūfodit. & ab ea uermes ne fructū ei comedant abstrahunt. qd ē hoc.
Bonū scilicet ho n̄ sit durus nec ma liuolus ad iusticiā dī s̄. tenis ac flexi bilis ad qd q. bonū a se abscidens malū. seq. considerans in seruatio ne opū suū. atq. auferens a se in festationē ledentū se inimicū. S. tam ante quā homo sentiat me incognitione sua. aut intellectus ipsius intelligat me intra se. sū ei caput & plamatrix fructuositas & uirtus fortitudoq. firme ciuita tis que edificata ē supra firmā pe trā. Oīs q̄ fidelis ho. audiat me si bi dicentē. O ho. ē m̄ conueniens & congruū ut ho rationalis sine in tellectū sit. ut irrationale pecus qd n̄ alit fac nisi scdm qd expetit libitus ipsi. O miseri hoīes. q̄ nolunt scire magnā glām illā quā d̄s ip 160 siliis dedit ad similitudinē sui. S. n̄ dū potest ēē ut uolunt qd libere & quasi hereditario iure omīa mala faciant que desiderant. qsi hoc ex natura corporis sui possideant. no lentēs considerare se habere honorē illū qd bona opa opari ualeant. D̄s in sua ordinatione omīa iuste con struit. Et q̄s potest ei repugnare.

Quid ē hoc. In huiusmodi uidelicet cōparatione. qd aliq̄s ordinationi di simili exemplo possit cōparari aut sapientia. aut discretionē in ullis reb. Et cur ē hoc qd efficacā illā que eis data ē sibi met ipsis au ferre uolunt. qd bene scilicet & male facere possunt. Quom̄. Nā ego cū eos tactu meo admonēo qui tē me apphendant mox ut me ad eē sentiant. hi bonū opus qd uolunt ad effectū meo adiutorio pducere possunt. qui uero me contempnunt in inbecillitatē sui & malū corru unt. S. prauū hoīes excusare se ni tunt. Na qd bona opa opari n̄ pos sunt. & hoc p̄ptea faciunt qd exteri or ho in eis uoluntatē suā exerceat in libertate. Nē o carissimi filii mei. qui m̄ dulciores in odore sup omīa aromata estis. audite me uos admo nentē. Dū tēpus habetis facere bonū & malū. sincera deuotione colite d̄m ur̄m. O uos iterū dulcissimi fi lii mei qui ascenditis sicut aurores uos q̄ ardere debetis in caritate ut sol in radio suo. currat & ppare carissimi mei in uia uernantis que lux mundi ē que ē ihc xpc fili' dī q uos redemit sanguine suo in fine tēpōz ut cū gaudio p' transiū ur' in puenire possitis ad ipsū. Et iterū au diui eū q' sedebat in mō dicentē ad me. Ad desiderantib; celestia fidelit' credendū et n' p' uacatē examinan dū ē quom' fili' dī missus in mundū a patre natus sit ex uirgine. q' hu manus sensus fragili & mortali cor pore & grauissimo peccatōz onere grauatus secreta dī plus dinoscere n' poterit. quā sps scs cui uult reue lauerit. Qua p' p' p' misticū mi steriū. h'c eū colūna quā uidet in plagā meridiana in p'fato lapi deo muro demonstrati edificii ultra p'dictā colūnā uere trinitatis. xi. significat humanitatis saluato ris. q' conceptus de spū scō natus q; ex suauissima uirgine fili' ē abis simi. fortissima scētatis colūna ex istens. omnē uidelicet eccl'asticā edificatiōne sustentans. Cui huma nitas apparet in ardente fide lapidū fidelū p'pōz in bonitate sup'ni pa tris fortissime opantiū. p' declara tiōne trinitatis manifestata. q' tri nitate in uno dō certificata. creden ti p'pō credm' ē eū incarnatū dī uerbū uerū dīm cū patre & spū scō in unitate diuinitatis in uno et uero dō colendū. Que colūna magna ē & obumbrata intra & extra idē edificii apparetis. qm' scēdo uerē incarnationis magna et in estimabilis ita humanis m'ib; ē ob umbrata ut n' possit considerari n' qm' possibile ē p'fide intueri. et m'iorib; diuino cultu laborantib; fide & ope cognosci. & ex m'iorib; ocio uacantib; fama & uoce manifestari.

 Usq; tuo tā umbrosa apparet. ut nec magnitudinē nec altitudinē ei' cognoscere ualeas. q' idē fili' m's inter hoīes immortalitate carnis qm' p'pō mortē subiturus erat quasi obumbratus mortalis scilicet existens sine omī macula peccati apparuit ita tam qd' uera ei' incar natio in mistica magnitudine se cretōz dī incōphensibilis & in excel lenza diuine potencie inestima bilis. omnē cognitionē humani in tellectus excedat. Sed qd' in tra colūnā uere trinitatis ē intrup tus locus longitudinis triū cubi torū uacuiq; absq; muro ut ē sup' ostensū ē. hoc ē qd' incarnat' dī fili' d's uerus cū patre & spū scō existens. adhuc latet in m'bris suis que fideles hoīes s' qui usq; ad finē mundi nascuntur s' p' uentura opa m'bra capitis sui effecti. ut supra mirabilit' & t'ypice edocta ē. Qui q' & q' les fu turi sint in plenitudine sup' uenien tiū tēpōz hoc ē in misterio ineffa bilis trinitatis ipsi eandē trini tatē in unitate diuinitatis. fide li cultura adoraturi. cū locus eoz qui adhuc nascuntur s' uacui sine edificato muro bonoz opū sit. Ubi tam fundamētū positi ē quo in p̄scientia dī s̄. & q̄a etiā fides saluationis eorū quā habui r̄ s̄ iā posita fortit̄ consistit. ita ut homo sp̄s & fiducia n̄ habeat in alio quā in dō n̄ diffidens de midia ei⁹ s̄. confidens in eū qd̄ for tissimū fundamentū fidelis aīe ē.

Quod autē hec umbrosa colūna in .xij. hoc ipso edificio in eodē loco stat ubi de sup̄ in celestib⁹. misteris co rā dō illū magnū & quadratū lu cidissimūq; candoris splendore prius uidisti. qui secretū sup̄ni creatoris designans in maximo misterio tibi manifestatus ē. hoc ē qd̄ incarnatus dī fili⁹ oīa opa sua. que corporalit̄ in mundo multas iniurias passus opat̄ ē. ea scdm̄ secretā uoluntatē pat̄s adimpleuit. Qd̄ etiā ille splendor designat magnū uidelicet in sig nificatione misteriorū dī. quatuorq; angulorū qm̄ ad cognitionē xp̄i multi ex his qui p̄ quatuor par tes mundi nascuntur pueniunt s̄. atq; ex eū candoris. q̄a lucidis sumā diuinitatē nulla tenebrosi tas obscurare potē. ubi idē secre tū sup̄ne & glōse maiestatis in magna p̄funditate & mysterio scientiē creatoris omnium qui cun cta creauit. t̄pice t̄ ap̄t̄ ita ut ip si creatori nullus ad hoc in auxi lio succurreret nec ullus ipsi re sistendo in hoc repugnaret. ea tantū in uoluntate bonitatis sue puerū suū creans. Unde in eo alī splendor uelut aurora in se acriā in alto purpuree lucis claritatē ha bens fulget. p̄ quē tibi in mystica osten sione mysteriū incarnati filii dī de monstratū ē. quo in secreto summi dī candor aurore uirginis scilicet ma rie declarat̄ que in utero suo filiū eīdē celestis & altissimi pat̄is por tauit. qui purpureū sanguinē suū clarissima luce saluationis fulgen tē effudit. scdm̄ qd̄ tibi in hac secre ta uisione incarnatō eīdē filii mi stica obumbratione ostendit̄. .xij.

Sed qd̄ in p̄dicta colūna ab imo usq; ad sumū ei⁹ in modū scale ascensus ē. hoc ē qd̄ in incarnato filio dī om̄s uirtutes plenit̄ opant̄ bant̄ q̄ in se uestigia saluationis reliq̄t. ita ut tā pusillus quā mag nus fidelū sibi cōpetentē gradu in ipso rep̄at̄ in quo pedē in ascen sū uirtutū ponat̄ ut ad optima lo ca pueniant ubi uirtutib⁹ opandū ē. Quomodo. In optimis locis bonorū cordū aggregant̄ uirtutes ad scissimū opus suū. quatinus filiū dī in m̄bris suis p̄ficient qd̄ ē in electis hoīb⁹. Unde & in ipso ē exem plū p̄fectionis oīb⁹ fidelib⁹. qui in lege dī occupati s̄. ut se de bono torqueant ad meli⁹ scientes ma nifestationē uere incarnationis. ubi fili⁹ dī ueracit̄ in carne demon stratus ē. in quo fidelissim⁹ ascen sus ad celestia rep̄t̄. p̄pter qd̄ etiā om̄s uirtutes dī descendentes et ascendentes oneratas lapidib⁹. ad opus suū hic ire uidet: q̄a in unigenito dī lucidissime uirtutes q̄si p̄ humanitatē ei⁹ descendunt: & q̄si p̄ diuinitatē ipsius sursum tendunt. Descendunt enā p̄ ipsū ad corda fidelium hominū: qui bono corde uoluntatē suā relinquentes ad recta opa flexibiles se reddunt: sedm̄ q̄d oparius ad leuandū lapidē se inclinat: quē ad edificū deferat. In ipso enā sursum ascendunt: cū celestia opa in hōib; p̄fecta dō gratulabunde offerūt: ut corpus xp̄i in fidelib; m̄bris ^{ipsius} quanto eius p̄ficiat. Hnō enā q̄si lapides ad altiora portant: qui s̄ p̄m̄ata & lucida opa que cū ipsis hōies ad uitā suā opant: quō unaqueq; actio a dō obtinet alas suas: p̄ q̄s se de stercore humane m̄tis elcuet: fulgentē enā splendore habens p̄ quē ante dīm luceat: q̄a obstrui et abscondi n̄ potē q̄d fluit de fonte uite eīne. Nam ut fons n̄ debet eē in absconso s; in manifesto: ut oīs homo qui sinit ad ipsū ueniat & hauriat atq; bibat: sic fili⁹ dī n̄ ē obstrusus nec absconsus electis suis s; manifestus p̄ parans se ad retributionē opū ut ea manifestet iusta remuneratione. xv. que p̄pt̄ ipsius uoluntatē ab hōib; p̄ficiunt: Idcirco fidelis homo ambulet in fide ad dīm: queratq; m̄iam ei⁹ & dabit illi. A non querente autē n̄ inueniet: ueluti fons n̄ fluit ad hōies ipsū solummodo scientes: nec ad eū uenire uolentes: s; illos oportet ut ad eū accedere si aquā ei⁹ haurire desiderant. Sic homo faciat. Ad dīm accedat p̄legē sibi ab ipso constitutā & inueniet eū: dabitq; illi ^{q̄} uitę & aqua salutaris ita ut amplius nec esurire nec sitim sustineat. Unde & p̄dicte uirtutes acutū studiū idē opus p̄ficiendi habent quō studio sissime sicut torrentes aque ad op̄ diuinū currūt q̄tinus sole fulgentiora xp̄i ^{membra} capiti suo in lucidis acq̄s sitio m̄b; nobilissime p̄fecta coniungant. P̄pt̄ q̄d enā ut audisti fortis opariū di appellat: q̄a strennue in bonis opib; fidelium hominū semp conuersantur. Sed q̄d inter has uirtutes p̄cipue septē uidet quarū enā fortis & habitus sedm̄ q̄d ē p̄m̄atū consideras: hoc ē q̄d inter uirtuosa opa hec septē uirtutes p̄stantissime septē ardentissima dona sp̄s sc̄i designant: q̄a in obumbratione sp̄s sc̄i uirgo clarissima filiū dī sine peccato concepit: in sc̄ificatione sc̄i sc̄i uirtutū que apte in eodē unigenito dī manifeste s̄: q̄si in forma sua illuminantes corda fidelium et q̄si in habitu suo in uirtute fidei se dilatant: ut ysaías seruus m̄s testat̄ dicit. Egrediet̄ uirga de radice iesse: et flos de radice ei⁹ ascendet: & requiescet sup̄ eū sp̄s dīm: sp̄s sapientie & intellectus: sp̄s consilii & fortitudinis: sp̄s consilii & fortitudinis: sp̄s scientie & pietatis: & replebit̄ eū sp̄s amoris dīm. Hoc tale ē. Virgo maria egressa ē de angustis sc̄la in obp̄tionē tū mori ut qua m̄clū nat sup̄ ip̄ corā se grad torcular sup̄ idē fluit in lo n̄ h̄p̄m̄ata

m̄s cupidit li concupis sc̄i de p̄ quasi fund is de qua p̄cessit: h̄nō ge ascendit m̄ega uir lans m̄atū
m̄gante q̄ ē quom̄
m̄atū sem electis p̄m̄ m̄atū s̄ onē: s̄ tam diminuat none peccat
p̄m̄e nesci te: Unde & ad
p̄m̄: ita q̄d si humanū m̄ ta sustinet q̄ deceperat: &
m̄: s̄: quō
m̄ sup̄ eū sp̄
m̄atū: quom̄ calatū ē m̄ m̄atū ē m̄

rui obpſionu indulcedine honesta tis mortu ut aliqſ de domo egredit in qua inclufus continebat qui ſe n̄ ele uat ſup ipſa domū ſ: recto itinere corā ſe gradit: & ut riuulus uini de torculari exprimit n̄ ſe exaltans ſupra idē torcular ſ: moderate de fluit in locū ſuū. Et q̄re uirga q̄a n̄ ſpinata morib: nec nodata t̄re niſ cupiditatib: ſ: plana idē carna li concupiſcentie n̄ copulata orta ſcilicet de radice ieſſe idē ab illo q̄ quaſi fundamentū erat regalit̄ p liſ de qua eadē mibata mat̄ nata pceſſit. Unde & de radice eiſde uir ge aſcendit ſuauiſſim⁹ odor: q̄ fuit integra uiriditas eiſde uirginis: no lant inatuiſſimū modū ſpū ſcō eā irrigante qd̄ ex ipſa alm⁹ floſ nat⁹ ē. Quom̄. It̄ floſ naſcit in agro n̄ ſe minatus ſemine: ſic ſurrexit in ca ceſtus panis ſine radice uirilis cō mixtionis: & abſq: omī humano onere: ſ: tantū natus in ſua uitate diuinitatis n̄ tactus ulla indigna tione peccati ueniens tortuoſo ſer pente noſciente nec eū priuſ tangen te. Unde & idē floſ latentē illū dece pit: ita qd̄ ſurſū aſcendit & genus humanū in peccato conceptū ad al ta ſuſtulit qd̄ ille priuſ fraudulentē deceperat: & in p̄dicationē ſecū dextra erat. Et quō hic floſ fili⁹ dī erat regē unt ſup eū ſpē dñi idē ſpē cūc diui nitatis. Quom̄. Quando humilitas exaltata ē in aſcenſu eiſde floris: ubi inſuſione pſtrata ē ſupbia quā prima mulier attendit: cū plus quā deberet habere uoluit ſcda muliere ſeruicio dī ſe ſubdente: dū ſe recog nouit parua in humilitate confeſ ſa dñm ſuū: ſpē ſcō ardēt impſo re quieuit in quo electa caritas lenuit que ſaluauit p̄dita plebē ab ſterges crimina & ſcelera hominū. Nā plen tudo ſc̄itatis erat in eo: q̄a uiuentis lu men in ipſo radiauit: in quo noxiū pomū cū ſequentib: ſe nequicus aruit: ſurgente in eodē medicina mortuorū que uexillū illud eleua uit qd̄ mortē ſupauit & contriuit.

 Sc̄itatis enī in eo n̄ caruit ulla poſſibi litate ipſo concepto abſq: omī pec cati cōmixtione: ſic ſepius offendit innatis hominū q̄ naſcunt in diuer ſitate multiplicū criminū: S: & cū idē floſ dedit opando & oſtendendo omnē exſpirationē iuſticie iā fruc tū in plenitudine ſpē ſcō p̄tulit quō ipſe fili⁹ dī in diuitis carne apte in ope ſuo demonſtrauit qd̄ antea ſpē ſcō miſtice & q̄ſi in occulto in ſpiratione ſua cōmonuit. Qui ſpē ſcō ſup eundē florē ſeptēplaciter requieſcere designat: q̄a cū dñs oīa p̄uerbiū ſuū in ſpū ſcō crearet: ſepu ma die ab omī ope ſuo regēunt: S: & eadē dona in ſignatione ſua ge minant quō corpus & aīa ſibi con iuncta ſimul in gemina dilectione p̄uentionē ſpē ſcō debent opari: timore dñi ſolo poſito: q̄a ipſe q̄ſi in timore caritatis uenerans unū ſup oīa adorari designat. Unde etiam & sp̄s dñi solus de nominatur fortissimis uirtutib; ab eo clarescentib; ut arborum ramus pcedunt quō unus d̄s ē a quo oīa bona ueniunt & p̄ quē oīa sapient̄ dispo-sita s̄. Et q̄a sp̄s dñi sup̄ ipsū florē requieuit. sp̄s etiā sapientie sup̄ eū mansit. quō ubi sp̄s dñi affu-it ibi sapientia n̄ deest. Sic ḡ sp̄s sapientie & intellectus in eo fuit. quō magnus sapientia apparuit cū d̄s oīa p̄ uerbū suū creauit quia sapientia sic diffusa ē in il-lo q̄d idē uerbū erat sapientia.

S; idē uerbū n̄ dū incarnatū inuisibile fuit. id autē incarnatū uisibile apparuit. q̄m uerbū q̄d ante omnē creaturā erat in corde patris p̄ q̄d oīa facta s̄. & sine quo factū ē nihil. ipsū emittit flos sub tempore scilicet emicans in huma-nitate bonū intellectū hōib; p̄seferens suis testificationib;. Q̄d ē hoc Sapientie intellectus congrue ad-iungit. q̄a cū hō adō in sapientia creatus sit. creatore suū digne in-telligere debuit. Ergo ante partū uirginale d̄s intelligendus erat. ab sq; ulla dubitatione. S; p̄ partū uirginale p̄dictū florē in carne p̄ferentē idē flos intelligendus erat d̄s & homo. S; n̄ sine admiratione & iste intellectus p̄ri inuisibi-lis. uisus ē uisibilis in flore. cū ipse flos hanc intelligibile causam p̄tulit q̄d homo scilicet sapient̄ intelliḡ dñm in factis suis. Quom̄

Sapientia ē origo bonorū opū. cū hō sapient̄ uenerat dñm suū. Cui intellectus adheret. quō cū homo p̄ sapi-entia bonū opat̄. ita illud ad alios dilatat. ita ut bonū odorē & dulcē gustū ab ipso emicantē cū gaudio intelligent in eo. In uirgineo ḡq; isto flore intellectū subsequit̄ consiliū. q̄a homo intellectū habens diuino consilio liberandus erat.
Inde sp̄s consilii & fortitudinis sup̄ eū requieuit. quō hoc consiliū apud patre sine tēpore fuit. ut uerbū suū incarnaret̄ sub tēpore p̄ficiens oīa opa sua scdm̄ uoluntatē patris & ostendens obedientia ipse ipsū. ita ut ipsa deo ad hōies fulgeret quatinus cū in factis suis imitari addicerent. Q̄d dū ita apparuit in fortissima uiriditate totū surgens de diuinitate fortitudo se in ipso occultat. quatinus diaboli tanto forcī de bellaret q̄nto secrete eius illi se p̄ consiliū abscondisset.
Quomodo. Consilio apte fortitudo adheret. quō consiliū dī p̄ fortitu-dinē filii ipsi regnū diaboli destruxit. Unde idē fili dī fortissim⁹ uidelicet leo contriuit. mortē infi-delitatis p̄splendidissimū lumen q̄d fides ē. q̄a magna fortitudo ē hominē ea p̄ consiliū credere que corporali uisu n̄ ualet uidere. Q̄d ē hoc. Consiliū p̄ uinctā sibi for-tudinē p̄forat duriciā lapideorū cordū que obdurata s̄ in consuetudinē prauorū morū. ita ineptā duricia abierit qua p̄p̄t dñe sc̄m tudine d cognosca sp̄s sc̄m na dulced ipse sc̄m unt sp̄s ad saluati ter p̄mori p̄tate. Q̄ recte adu magna tate p̄m tus exurg genū cele confortiū Itaque ē q̄ na p̄tate te uirga d germinare uerat dū serpenti genū hui ne clama Itaque sc̄m in sc̄m fortitudi adherenti

rat. cū d̄ ne in arde eum mo ramissim no flore quit q̄a c duriciā transiens qđ carnale opus abicit. & dī opus aptissime pficitur.

 Qua ppter & in p̄dicto flore fortitudinē sciētia comitat. quō hōies p̄for-tudinē dī ad sciētiā ipsī ita ut eū cognoscant pueniunt. Hinc ē qđ & sp̄s sciētie & pietatis in eo etiā p̄sup-nā dulcedinē requiē habuit. quō ipse sciēt. miseris hominū condouit. sp̄s etiā existens p̄quā intrat ad saluationē cū scelus mundi scien-ter p̄mortē suā absterfit in magna pietate. Qđ ē hoc. Sciētie pietas recte adiungit. qđ fili dī sciēter in magna pietate adimpleuit. volun-tatē patris sui. Ipse enī fili solus na-tus ex uirgine transsudat. ut p̄p̄os germinē celestis uirtutis ut sequant consortiū angelōz qđ pudiciētia ca-stitatis ē. qđ uirtus hec surrexit in sup-na pietate sic uidelicet qđ ingrediente uirga de iesse uirtutes floris hui germinarent qđ prima mulier fugauerat dū consensu audiens consiliū serpentis. ita qđ in ea cecidit omne genus humanū carnis gaudio sup-ne claritatis. n̄ qđ floriditas uirge istius sciēt. illud eleuauit p̄ pietatē in sciētie saluationis. Quomodo. fortitudini que diabolu deuincit adherentē illi sciētiā sp̄s sc̄s in spi-rat. cū d̄s p̄ fideles hōies deuotissime in ardētibz desideris agnoscerit & in immo tactu fidelis aīe deside-rantissime amplexat. S; & in uirgineo flore pietatē timor dñi subse-quit. qđ cū pietas inē fidelibz hōibz timorē dñi acquir̄t ad explenda p̄cepta ipsi. Unde timor dñi eun-de florē repleuit. qđ ipse tamā plenitudinē uirtutū in se habuit qđ in eo nullus uacuius locus inuenit ē ubi aut mortifera supbia aut de-lectatio honoris aut p̄uariatio legis sedē inuenire potuisset. S; to-tus plenus erat timoris dñi n̄ querendi alienā rē ut primus angelz & uita quesierit. S; honorans patrē suū in omni ope suo dignā ei p̄bēs obediētiā. Idō & timor dñi in eū habet oīs iusticie qđ ipse ē finis & in eū ceterarū uirtutū. ut requia septima dies ostendit completionē & ortū creaturarū. Quomodo. Timor excutit & mouet tremorē. qui radix ē germinandi ut fruc-tuose uirtutes p̄cedant. Unde & flos iste plenus timoris dñi ē. qđ oīa germina bonōz opū adherent ei. quō ipse materia eoz ē. flore eodē germinante uiriditate quācūq; uirtutū fructu earū p̄ccatis repleto quatinus oīa bona pficiat. ut etiā de ipso scriptura sic habet. xvi.

Sicut malū in ligna siluarū. sic dilectus m̄s inter filios. Sub umbra illi quē desideravi sedi & fructus ei dulcis gutturi meo. Hoc tale ē. fili uirginis dulcissimus amator caste dilectionis. quē ap̄phen-dit fidelis aīa desiderans dulcissi-ma ei amplexione integritatē suā coronare. relicto carnali uiro et se copulans xpo. eūq; certissimo federe amans & in speculo fidei aspiciens. ē pulcherrimus fructus fructus arboris. id ē filiū uirginis exiens de uirginali pudore sicut pomū de fructuosa floriditate p̄bensq; escā refectionis esuriētib; & sycū dulcedinis sciētib; & hoc modo ligna siluestria p̄cellens idē filios hominū q̄ in peccatis concipiunt & in ipsis conuersant nec talē fruc-tū afferentes quale ipse attulit quō adō exiit plenū fructū sua uirtutis uite afferens. alius quidē nec uiriditatē nec fructū a se ipsis habentib; s; ab ipso. Quom̄. Ipse p̄ in carnationē suā mundo saluatio-nē dedit dilectus dī filiū in filios hominū apparens. qui p̄ feruorē ipsi uirebant & fructū afferēbant; n̄ tanta plenitudine fecundi q̄nta ipse repletus erat. q̄a totus sēs adō exiens de uirgine natus ē. Et q̄rē dilectus. Quia ipse hoc conculat.

q̄d fidei aīe ad celestia p̄pam obsistit. Uno & scā aīa eq̄ssimo iudicio cū dilectū nuncupat. quō p̄fi-dē dilectionis se ipsā relinquent.
& in magno certamine carnaliū uoluptatū a dīlū beniuole anhe-lans atq; in ardore lacrimabilis desiderii se ipsā rep̄bans ei adhe-ret ut mulier uiro cui cū gaudio uoluntatis sue desociata ē. Et idō cū in exordio conseruande castatis ad eū incipit suspirare. ad se ipsā dicit. Uolo p̄sternere car-nalē uoluptatē in coniunctione uiro illi. sub cui dilectionis umbra q̄ me in ardore ardentis desiderii sui a contrario igne obumbravit sedeo.

Quomodo. Dū in ebriatū studiū mei amore habens. subiectū in igneū arnis amorē in consensu aīe mee p̄mo. Et ob hoc dulcissimus fructus ei quē gustabā maīa mea suspirans addm̄ dulciōr m̄ ē in ea sup̄ omnē dulcedinē carnis. quā sentiebā in concupiscentiis ipsis.
Et q̄rē dulcis. Quō ipse ex uirgine natus habet dulcissimū saporē & fortissimū unguētū stillans ut balsamū q̄d ē resurrectio ad uitā in qua mortui erēti s̄. accominens maximā medicinā que ter sit uulnera peccatorū p̄ incarnationē ipsi. que plenissima sentis & dulcedinis in omī genere uirtutū cū uirginitate ē. Unde o uirginitas que de igne accensione consistis. robustissimū germ̄ q̄d de stella maris emi-cans. omnē spurciā turpitudinis contra se iussima iacula diaboli sēp̄ dimicans conculat. gaude in cele-sti armonia in spe consorcii angēlō.
Quomodo. Sp̄e sēs symphonizat in tabernaculo uirginitatis. quō ipsa uerbū dī sēp̄ ruminat. Quom̄ possit xpm̄ amplexari. cū omī de-uotione ardens in ei amore hoc ha-bens in obliuione q̄d in concupiscentia carnis in ardore incendi fragile in hoīe ē. um uiro quē nūquā peccatū tenet adherens. cui et sine omī concupiscentia carnis conuincit gaudio aut qd

tunc tunc qd uclm
hoc qd
mante muni que uir torū idē sp̄ctione inducta qd aut
capit dunt hoī ri inuoc uorū mor n̄ habent circūdat sp̄tudine ndo ē in la tanqu ta qd uir do subiect lietudine licā p̄stern adherens dote et ab purissimū puritate et humilit sacerdotis gros caput dens qd in negredine uorū dūssim

coniuncta ē semp cū illo florens in gaudio regalū nuptiarū. Nunc autē qđ similitudinē in p̄dictis uirtutib; uidet. ita qđ om̄s ut & alie uir-tutes que supra tibi demonstrate s̄ uelim uestib; ex serico induunt. hoc ē qđ in ordine suo piā unanimitatē eadē luminaria in m̄mb; hominū parant. etiā quomodo reli-que uirtutes in dō mollicie induunt torū idē lenitatē deuotionis in re-spectione sc̄arū animarū ueprib; induricia uiciorū carentiū habentia. qđ autē quedā albis crinib; recto capite & asq; amictu palliorū incedunt. hoc ē qđ ille in copula candoris innocencie ligaturā uincturē pra-uorū morū in m̄mb; fidelū hominū n̄ habent. & qđ etiā sc̄arib; studiis circūdate n̄ s̄. om̄ino fugientes uicis studinē uiciorū. S; p̄ma a more femineo ē in capite uelata atq; q̄si casu la tanquā cristallus p̄lucida indu-ta. q̄a uinculū subiectionis humilit̄ dō subiecta portat sup̄na cū licet sollicitudine om̄nē exaltationē diabo-licā p̄sternens. pioq; capiti idē xp̄o adherens. humillimū quoq; sacerdotē & ab s̄q; om̄i puluere peccati purissimū in lucidissima cordis puritate imitans quō constrehi et humiles puriq; sacerdotes sūm sacerdotis ēē debent. Scđā autē ni-gros capillos habet. manifeste osten-dens. qđ in capite suo xp̄o abstergit nigredinē peccatorū in hoīb; Tercia uero dissimilis humane forme uideur. quō hoc mysteriū habet. ut homine ita concutiat. q̄n̄mus t̄rat & tremiscat de dī iudicio. unde et specie carit̄ hoīs. q̄a homo sepe d̄m p̄- ponens timoris eius obliuiscit. qđ ip-sa om̄ino facere recusat. Prima q̄q; & q̄rta atq; q̄inta albis tunicis uestiunt. q̄a circūdate s̄ ueste innocen-tie quā adā p̄didit transgrediens piā iussione p̄modū autē in candi-dissimo lilio floridissime uirgini-tatis cū indito ope simplicis in dō subiectionis recuperata in saluationē. qđ ante d̄m luget sicut clarissima stella humanis oculis igne sc̄e. Os etiā alba calciām̄ta habent excepta t̄cia scđm specie hoīs n̄ apparente. quō ipse pulcherrimū opus s̄ in hoīb; qui desideria carnis in se adnihilū deducunt iuxta exemplū sui saluatoris qđ ē splendor splendidissim̄. una earū hominē n̄ simulante q̄a n̄ habet respectū ulli audacie semp sollicita & n̄ negligens ut ho qui sepi sumet p̄continuatā obliuiscit ita dispensatrix existens iuste admonitionis. ut q̄sq; fidelis iudiciū dī caute intueat. & excepta q̄rta que cristallinis calciām̄tis miro modo lucemib; calciat. quō illa in uoluntate sua se constringens p̄git lucidissimū iter xp̄i. ita mortē etiā in semet ipsa p̄igneū ardorē sp̄e sc̄i suffocans. Qđ autē in eis dē uirtutib; ē dissimilimodo. hoc ē qđ quāuis uni studu unanimia-tē habeant tam diuersa opa in hominib; opant. Propt̃ qđ et p̃ma imago p̃tendit humilitatē que p̃mitis filiū dī manifestauit. cū d̃s qui celū & t̃rā in sua habet potestate filiū suū mittere ad t̃ras n̄ dedignatus ē. Vnde etiā portat coronā aureā capiti suo in posita. tres ramos alicui exstantes habemē. quō ipsa ceteras uirtutes p̃cellens et suauit̃ antecedens coronata ē co rona aurea. scilicet p̃ciosissima et fulgentissima incarnatione salua toris. qui eā q̃si in capite idē in hoc misterio cū incarnatus ē decorauit. x.ii.

Que t̃ angularis existit. q̃a tri tas ē in unitate & unitas in trinitate. fili scilicet cū patre & spū s̃co un d̃s & uerū oīa excellens in altitudi ne diuinitatis. Et p̃ciosissimis la pidib; uiridis & ruber coloris & al bis bacis multo fulget ornatu. quō eadē humanitas saluatoris osten dit in scaberrimā & profundissimā bonitate sui opis qđ idē fili dī opatus ē in uiriditate illa cū uir tutes iā in doctrina ei uirebant. et in rubore sanguinis ipsius cū mortē passus ē in cruce saluans hominē. atq; in clarissima albedi ne resurrectionis & ascensionis ei. cū quib; omnib; illuminata & or nata ē eccl̃a ut res illa illustrat̃ & decorat̃ cui p̃ciosi lapides impo nunt̃. Qđ autē in p̃ectore suo ha bet speculū lucidissimū in quo
mira claritate imago incarnati fili dī apparet. hoc ē qđ in humi litate que in corde sacratū tēpli ē in beatissima et splendidissima scientia pie & humillime ac splendide firmis simeq; effulsit idē unigenitus dī in omnib; opib; suis que corporalit̃ ges sit. in quib; se mundo p̃cipue mani festauit. Vnde etiā & ipsa in illustrio ri parte corda electorū fidelū con signat in eis tribunal suū ponens oī actus ipsorū uidelicet regens & diri gens. q̃a solidissimū fundamentū omniū bonorū in hoīb; ē. uelut etiā in supradicta māia admonitione sua ostendit. Sed scđa designat carnatē. quō p̃ humilitatē illa qua fili dī incarnari dignatus ē ostensa ē etiā uera et ardentissima caritas cū d̃s ita dilexit hominē ut p̃p̃t ipsius amorē unigenitū suū mitteret incarnandū. Que tota uidet̃ ut iacinctus aerei in alio coloris ui delicet tā forma quā tunica ipsius. quia incarnatus dī fili p̃ humanita tē suā illustrauit fideles & celestes hoīes ut res illa p̃iacinctū illustrat̃ cui inponit̃ ita eos etiā incendens caritate ut unicuiq; homini in di genti fidelit̃ subueniant. sic & uirt̃ hec induit̃ tunica dulcedinis dī. hoc habens officiū. q̃tūus deuotione actu & usu omib; hoīb; in recto lumi ne luceat. P̃pter qđ etiā eide tunice due zone inestimabili modo auro & gemis ornate mirabilit̃ intexte s̃. que s̃ in dulcedine dī gemina p̃cep ta carnis bona scilicet & p̃cipua uo luntate q̃si & auro iustis opib; uelut ti clarissimis gūnis mirabili dono sūm datoris cōposita. ita ut sup utruq. hu merū eīde imaginis Zona una usq. ad pedes ipsius ante & retro descen dat. quō eadē pcepta in multa solli citudine portat. unū scilicet in dō ut in humero dextro & alterū in pxi mo ut in humero sinistro scriptū ē.

Diligēs dñm dñm tuū cuncto corde tuo & cuncta aīa tua & cōib. uiri bus tuis & cōmū mīte tua. & pxi mū tuū sic te ipsū. Hoc tale ē. Sic debes diligere dñm dñm tuū q̄ dñs tuus ē. uidelicet hoc honore q̄d dñatur oī creature. & dñs tuus q̄a ipse ē n̄ habens iniciū s; creator omniū existens. ita ut ppter amorē eī in corde tuo pri mū excupes & psternas carnē corpo ris tui q̄d ipsi ualde durū ē. q̄a pri mū deuicta carne p̄modū regnabit sp̄s tuus uite. & tē dñm in anima tua sic intelligēs ut mandata eī scient custodias atq. ea n̄ pigro ope c̄pleas.
Et de inde hoc modo om̄s uires cor poris & anime tuē subiciunt. quō hec prima uictoria in corpore tuo facta ē. ita ut tē in om̄ib. his pposi tis causis dñm fortissime in tua mīte cōphendas q̄d tē tā firmū p̄pugna culū ē contra insidias inimicōr tuōr. ita ut fortitudinē eī in p̄dictis reb. nullus p̄transire ualeat inimicus. quia mens tua oīa hec continere debet in se confirmans & consoli dans cuncta que agis. Hec ḡ facies toto corde tota aīa & om̄ib. uirib.
& omī mīte tua. ita ut nichil.

deficiat tibi infide. q̄tinus n̄ con sentias ulli rei que repugnat dō te diuidens in aliena. s; ut colligas te ad dulcedinē dilectionis eī. dili gens & te ipsū. Quom̄. Si diligis dñm. diligis salutē tuā. Et sic tē in his om̄ib. te diligis. sic diligēs & pxi mū tuū. qui q̄sq. fidelis homo ē. tē p̄ximū existens in xp̄iano noīe ac infide. ita ut sic gaudeas in eī recta p̄sp̄nate & sup̄na saluatione ut fi deliter infide conseruet. sicut enā letaris de tua salute. Hoc ḡ gemi nū opus carnis sit in hoīe des cendens usq. ad pedes eī idē ad fi nē cōsumationis ante ipsū scili cet apprensus in lege dī & retro in hoīs uidelicet subuentione. ut & homo sic carnatē seclat quatin in recta morte pueniat ad p̄fectio nē uite. sic enā eadē carnis sup̄ in uerbis suis declarat. Tercia autē imago significat timorē dñi. qui post hanc carnatē quā dñs hoīb. manifestauit cū filiū suū p̄p̄sis mortē subire uoluit in m̄tib. fidelīū surrexit. ita ut celestia plenius intelligerent & p̄fecti quā prius adimplerent. quā nunc uides in eo dē scemate habitu ut in priori uisione eā ui disti. quō in cōmutabilis dñs simi li & n̄ dissimili honore & reueren tia habendus ē in omni factura et creatura ipsius. ut & tē sup̄ declaratū ē. Est quoq. maioris ac longioris stature quā cet̄e ay.

uirtutes dissimilisq; humane forme quia ipsa p̄ceteris angustia & tremore re infert hoīb; ita ut magnitudi ne sume maiestatis & altitudinē diuinitatis ipsius p̄spicacib; oculis semp̄ considerando pauescant. quō d̄s omnib; hominib; multa ue neratione memendus ē q̄a ab ipso et n̄ ab alio creati s̄. Unde etiā eadē uirtus specie hoīs n̄ habet q̄a con tradictionē illā ut dō in male factis resistat ut sup̄dictū ē abiecti figens tantū in mōrē cognitionē suā in d̄m p̄gensq; reclusissima mīra uo luntatis ipsius. Idō & plurimos ocu los undiq; in se habet tota insapien tia uiuens q̄a poculos boni intel lectus ubiq; se circūspicit d̄m inui endo in omnib; mirabilib; cū ut in bonis opib; rectū in se habeat & in ma lis confusionē diaboli p̄cognitionē d̄i p̄transcat oīs tali modo insapi entia fulgens & iniquitatē relinquēs atq; sapientē domū sibi in uita edi ficans. Induta ē quoq; q̄si umbro so indumento p̄ qd̄ idē oculi p̄spici unt q̄a circūdata ē ualidissima constrictione frangens desideria carnis in hoīb; & aspiciens p̄eandē abstinentiā in lum̄ uite in quo mi rifice fulget homo in beatitudine.
Oultroq; timere tremat corā me quō angustia & tremore ponit in cordib; ignitōe hominū ita ut turbine & fragilitatē carnis sue semp̄ habeant in pauore uelabantē in peccatis & ne fiduciā suā in semet ipsos aut in alios hoīes ponant s; in eū q̄ regnat in eū uelut etiā ipsa ut sup̄dictū ē in querimonia sua confiteat. Quarta uero declarat obediētiā quō p̄ amore illū qui in inreuerētia exhibet p̄ceptis etiā in eis congrue obedit. Unde & nuicū um culū collū portat q̄a candidissimas facit mīras hominū p̄ subiectio nē fi delis obediētiis cū ubiq; fortitudi nē collū uoluntatis sue deserit & inno centi agno scilicet filio meo adherent.

Atq; manus & pedes candido religa mine habet ligatas quō ad opus xp̄i & ad uia ueritatis in albedine uere fidei ligata ē n̄ faciens neq; ua dens scdm̄ se s; scdm̄ uocē p̄sidentis d̄i ut etiā in p̄dictis uerbis suis de monstrat. Quinta autē designat fidē q̄a p̄ hanc obediētiā qua p̄p̄s p̄ceptis meis obedit mandati fit etiā credulus infidei ea fidelit̄ com plens in ope que solent p̄cipit in ad monitione. Et hec circa collū rubeū torquē habet quō undiq; in for titudine sua fidelit̄ p̄seuerans marty rio sanguinis decorat fiduciā suā n̄ in fallaces uanitates ponens s; in dō scdm̄ qd̄ & ipsa de se ut supra ostensū ē declarat. Sexta uero p̄ figurat sp̄e que p̄ fidē credendi in d̄m surgit ad uitā in q̄a n̄ habita s; in celestib; usq; ad tēpus p̄p̄e re munerationis celata ad quā eadē sp̄es toto desiderio anhelat ut mer cennarius ad mercedē suā & ut pu er ad debnā sibi hereditatē.

Unde etiā
dicit q̄a fi re circūda nata ē s;
pat hoc fi
p̄ceptis crucifixi fi
part ad q̄ cū multa d ad martir lōn desider ducia in m ad cū in m opa sua lab tione cr sup̄p̄s offe ad seip̄m p̄ quā h cū in d̄m ma qd̄ se in d̄m con in flore ca fuerit in in ardore non in uirt ut omne fi desiderat amare su manifesti
d̄m cū constante cū d̄m in Unde & ip̄s crystallo candore re det cū sole dissima in

Unde etiā tunica pallidi coloris in ducit. quā fiducia op̄is sui q̄si in pallo re circūdat cū n̄dū in p̄sentia remu nerata ē. s̄. ad q̄d semp̄ gemitib; suspi rat hoc futurū multa fatigatione ex pectat. Quod autē crux passionis crucifixi filii mei ante eā in aere ap paret ad quā ipsa oculos & manus cū multa deuotione erigit. hoc ē q̄d ad martyriū eidē unigeniti mei ce lesti desiderio q̄si in aere plurimā fi ducia in m̄tib; fidelium parat. ita ut adeū in iore uisū fidei & clarissima opa sua laboris humili & sincera in tentione erigant. sicut & uirtus eadē superius ostendit in oratione sua. .xxviii.

Sed septima p̄tendit castitatē quō p̄ quā hoīes sp̄s suā plenit̄ posu erunt in d̄m. crescit in eis p̄fectū opus. ita q̄d se incipiunt a carnalib; desi deriis constringere in castitate que in flore carnis acutissime sentit ab stinentiā. ut uiuencula scilicet sen tit ardorē concupiscentie nolens ta men in uirū respicere. Sic castitas ab icit omnē spurciā in pulcherrimis desideriis. anhelans addulcissimū amatorē suū qui ē suauissim⁹ & a manissim⁹ odor omnium bonorū in delicis cunctarū uirū uirtutis constante ab amatorib; suis aspi ciendus in iore pulchritudine aīe unde & ipsa lucidiore & puriore cristallo tunica uestit. que ita in candore relucet ut aqua resplen det cū sole p̄fundit. quia luci dissima in simplici intentione & purissima absq; omī puluere ar dentis libidinis concupiscentiarū mirabiliter confortata p̄ sp̄m sc̄m cir cūdata ē ueste innocentie lucente inclarissima albedine fontis aque uiue. qui ē splendidissimus sol cōne claritatis. Qd uero sup̄ caput ei ex pansis q̄si ad uolandum alis colūba stat. uersa sc̄dm faciē illi. hoc ē q̄d castitas in uicio suo uelut in capite suo p̄ expansionē & obumbrationē alarū idest p̄ p̄tectionē sp̄s sc̄i con fōta ē facientis eā diabolicarū insi diarū uicissitudinē transuolare. cū p̄igneū amorē sc̄e inspirationis illuc se dirigens aspiciat. ubi castitas uultū dulcedinis sue manifestat.

P̄pter q̄d apparet etiā quasi inuen ire ipsius uelut in speculo candi dissimus infans. cui fronte inscrip tū ē innocentia. quō in uiscerib; pu rissime & euidētissime uirtutis huius ē inuolabilis & pulcherri ma certissimaq; integritas. habens rudē formā p̄p̄t integritatē sim plicis infancie. sic & frons idē cog nitio ei n̄ arrogantiā & elatā sup biā. s̄. simplice ostendit innocen tiā. Et q̄d in dextera manu regale sceptū habet sinistra ad pectus suū ponens. hoc ē q̄d in dextera salua tionis p̄ filiū dī regē cunctorū una manifestata ē in castitate. sinistra libidinis p̄ eundē p̄pugnatorē con fundente & ad nichilū redigente in cordib; eā diligentiū. Quomodo.
Quia n̄ uult libidini ullā dimitte

xxv. 9

9

9

9

9

9

9

re libertate. s. ut acer uoluerit pu-tridū cadauer rapiens constringit & ad nichilū deductū. sic ipsa libidine corā dō ferente abicit & omīno conterit ita ut nec sub ea spirare ualeat. sedm qd enā in uerbis suis sup manifestat. Sed qd in sūmmitate p̄fate obumbrate colūā aliā pulcherrimā imaginē uidet. hoc ē qd sūma & p̄cellentissima pietate om-nipotentis in ipsa incarnatione saluatoris splendidissima pietate om-nipotentis incarnatione saluato-ris splendidissima uirtus scilicet grā dī manifestata ē. que fortissi-ma plenitudo existit in dō monens homines penitentia agere. ut p̄cā relaxent ab ipsis p̄petrate nequicie. que nudo capite stat. qā omib; eā querentib; apta ē dignitas & claritas ipsius. crispus & subnigrus capillos habens. quō unigenitus dī sub tortuoso & inplexo in nigredine infidelitatis sue iudaico po-pulo. humanitate absq; macula peccati in uirginea carne induit se. Et faciē uirilē habet tam ardens claritatis. ut eā p̄spicue con-siderare n̄ possis ut faciē hoīs. qā grā dī in uirtuosa uirtute omp̄s dans uitā in uita apparuit. ita ardens in clarissima diuinitate. ut omne uisū tā intiorē quā extiorē hoīs excedat dū adhuc grauedine corporali grauat. nec ita apta in secretis suis apparens. ut iudicio hominū nuda appareat. s. ab seconsa. qā iudicia diuine grē ocultata s. Qd autē ē purpurei & submgri coloris tunica induta. hoc ē qd opus grē dī ardens incarnatione se in-clinat ad nigrēdine peccatorū. q̄si in dūmū hominū. Quom̄. Ita qd mo-uet illos ad salutē eos. leuans delicto peccati ad spectaculū luminis p̄penitentia. quō ut dies fugat tenebras. sic ipsa aufert facinora reedificando in penitētia peccatores ad uitā.

Cui enā sup utriq; humerū eīdē imaginis. Zona una coloris rubicundi croci ante & retro usq; ad pedes eī se extendens in texta ē. qā grā dī se inclinans ad fideles hoīs infortitudine & pietate sua. leuat eos sursum ad celestia. Quom̄. Hoc ē his duob; m̄nerib; Zonarū tangens uidelicet anxietatē fragilis carnis in sanguinea pugna desudantis.
& uirtutē roboris aīe in corpore repentis & trahens eos in rubeo & in croceo splendore humanitatis & diuinita-tis filii dī. scilicet serenuissimi solis ad amorem supno. ita ut sibi met ipsi in concupiscentia peccati fidelis homo resistat in integritate grē tactus uidelicet corā se adiuturū & p̄ se ad mortificationē uiciorū quatinū uirilit̄ bono fine consumet opa sua in diuitis meis exoptabili et delectabili textura. S; qd circa collū habet episcopale palliū mirabili modo auro & p̄ciosissimis grēmis adornatū. hoc ē qd xpc filidī sūm' sacerdos patris existens.

ubiq; in forte habet offigēns uirtu-
m̄brū cor-di debet candidissimū nūquā nūe decorū uir-re possit qu-m̄die omp̄s ē que in uirtuactū tēporis toris in uirtutamū ab eīdē ne ita usq; a-qui circa finmano uirtutis inopis. sūm'
S; brachia & tibi adiuturū formido & grē dī in ho-
in corpore ad apparent. qcircūdat o-est totūq; um̄dia grē dī sermones orū suarū offi-nū aspiciunt
ram. om̄ia et in saluam nullo m̄ pap-
tā. Atq; hac
m̄brū diffusiflos ut sibi p-sequens pecc-

ubiq; in fortissima uirtute sacerdota le habet officiū. qđ auro sapientie et gēnis uirtutū ab imitatorib; ipsius umbrīs eorundē fidelū suorū pgrām dī debet decorari. Unde & splendor candidissim⁹ ita eā ubiq; circūdat. ut nusquā nisi in ante a capite uidelicet & deorsū usq; ad pedes ei ipsā inspicere possis. quō serenissimo candore midie om̃p̃tis grā ipsius circūdata ē que in misterio diuinitatis in tēpo achis tēporib; ante humanitatē salua toris inuisibilis et incognita latuit. tamū ab eīdē saluatoris incarnatio ne ita usq; ad ultimū m̃brox ipsius qui circa finē sēti futurus ē q̃mū hu mano intellectu possibile ē aprius in opib; suis manifestata declarat.
 S; brachia & manus atq; pedes ipsius tibi adiudendū obumbrant s; quia fortitudo & opus atq; finis m̃neris grē dī in hominib; nulli grauato corpore ad cognoscendū pleniter apparent. Qđ uero splendor qđ eā circūdat oculis undiq; plenus est totusq; uiuens. hoc ē qđ diuina midia grē dī adiuncta. multas mi serationes oculorū plurimarū midia rū suarū ostendit. indolores homi nū aspicientes qđ dīm sequi deside rant. om̃isq; uiuens in consolatione et in saluatione. animarū ipsorū. nullo m̃ parans uicis p̃dmonē s; in tā. Atq; hac & illac se diffundit ut nubes diffuere solet. quō p̃cedit in stos ut sibi p̃uideant nec cadant. sub sequens peccatores ut penitent & resurgant omnib; ipsā querentib; celesti dono se manifestans. ita ut nunc laciore nunc autē constrictio re se reddat. qđ in miseris & plan gentib; cordib; fidelū. aliquādo multa fructuositate exuberat. ali quando etiā in flagitiosis & duris mentib; peccatorū se contrahens p̃p̃t ariditatē illorū. Propt̃ qđ etiā ipsa p̃cedit & subsequit̃. tangit & mo net hoīes ut p̃dictū ē. quānquā qđ fili dī eē desiderant uerba ei ar denter suscipiant. & suscipientes compleant caduca scilicet contem nentes & mansura cōplectentes. sic et ipsa uirtus in superiore exhorta tione sua filios dī alloquit̃. Qui autē acutas aures interioris intellec tus habet. hic in ardente amore speculi mei ad uerba hec. anhelet. et ea in conscientia animi sui con scribat.

Post
hec
uidi
ultra

¶ p̄fata colūnā humanitatis saluatoris turrim lucidis simi splendoris p̄dicto la pideo muro meridiane plage eīdē edificiū ita in posita ut intra & foras ipsū edificiū uideri pos set. Itamudinis quidē ubiq; in interiori parte circumus sui q̄nq; cubitoꝝ tan te autē altitudinis ut eā discernere ne quiret. S; & int̄ turrim istā & colūnā humanitatis saluatoris fundamentū solum erat posuū muro n̄ dū desup edificato. S; tantū intruptus & uacu us locus apparens longitudinis erat cubiti unū ut etiā supra p̄monstra tū ē. Et turris hec n̄ dū fuerat ad pleniū edificata multa tam soler cia & uelocitate p̄ plurimos oparios assidue construebāt. habens mer cūm sumptus sue septē p̄pugna cula mira fortitudine constructa.
 Ab inferiore autē parte p̄dicti edificii uidi quasi scālā usq; ad eacūm tur ris eīdē erectā & ab uno usq; ad sumū in gradib; ei' quanda multitudo ho minū flammū igneas facies & alba ue stimenta s; nigra calciamēta habemū.
 & int̄ eos aliq̄s similis quidē scematis.

f. manoris turrim mu Deinde in edificiu uid fenne ad dū murū edificiu eam unū p̄p quib; multa
 p̄curfus uol matis uerbo culatue scie transibant fundit. S; qu candidissim quāz alia de uctis gaud nebant. alia diffidentia uolentia. qu quā scematis dera. septē dierat. Confi matus ei. Il uerbi castig tū ipsi diffi cū multo fud uero eadē uer uctiq; ipsa fu admodū re multaq; p̄fer solariū nant unde edificii abiecerant m bunt. alia autē nudam unum nebant. Et uid

168 f; maioris stature & splendoris: ipsa turrim multa diligentia unuentas.
Deinde in septentrionali plaga ei de edificiu uidi mundū & homines q̄ de semine ade pertant: inter p̄dictū luci dū murū specularue scientie ipsius edificii & ambitū circuli q̄ de sedente in trono p̄tendebat discurrentes: ex quib; multa idē edificii int̄ turrim p̄cursus uoluntatis di & colūna diui nitatis uerbi ipsius p̄ p̄fatu murū spe cularue scientie intrando & exiundo transibant: ut nubes hac & illac dif fundit. S; qui ipsū edificii intrabat: candidissima ueste induebantur.
Quorū alii de suauitate & lenitate ei de uestis gaudio magno letificati: ea ren nebant: alii autē q̄si de grauedine & difficultate ei tristes effecti illā exuere uolebant. Quos benigne uirtus hec quā scientiā di p̄ride nominari au dierā: sepius conpescens: unicuiq; eorū dicebat: Considera & custodi uestē: q̄ indutus es. Illi dīq; quod q̄dā eorū his uerbis castigati: quāuis idē indum tū ipsis difficile uideret: illud tamē cū multo sudore retinebant: quidā uero eadē uerba subsannantes: uesteq; ipsā furiose exuentes abiecerūt: ad mundū redeuntes unde uenerāt: multaq; p̄seruitantes: multa in uulua selariū uanitati didicerūt. Quorū alii inde edificii tandē reuersi uestē q̄m abiecerant: nerū tollentes sibi indue bant: alii autē reueru nolentes: ea de nudati in mundo ignominiose rema nebant. Et uidi q̄d q̄dā sordidissimi & ingerrimi quasi p̄insaniā exentati ab aquilone uenientes in ipsū edifi ciū currebant: turrimq; p̄fata bachan do inuadentes in eā ut serpentes sibi labant. Ex quib; quidā ab hac stulti cia cessantes mundi effecti s̄: alii in eadē nequicia & sorde sua p̄seueran tib; S; & intra idē edificii conspexi uersus eandē turrim q̄si septē albi co loris marmoreas colūnas: in murā ro tunditate tornatas stantes: abitudi nis septē cubitoꝝ: & in summitate sua quasi ferreū & rotundū habentes ta bulati: decant aliquantulū in altitudi nē sursum erectū. In cacumine autē ei de tabulati uidi q̄si pulcherrimā imaginem flammē: & ad hoīes in mundū aspicientē: cui caput uelut fulgur tanto nitore radiabat: ut illud ad plena n̄ possē considerare. Et man ad pedes suū reuertentes cōposue rat: pedib; ipsius in eodē tabulato mihi aduidentū occultans. Circulū autē in modū corone multo fulgen te splendore habebat: in capite aurei coloris induebat: in qua a pec tore deorsū usq; ad pedes Zona una descendens: p̄ciosissimarū gē marū ornatu: uiridis scilicet albi et rubei atq; aerei purpureo fulgo re int̄ lucem coloris decorabatur.

Et clamabat ad hoīes q̄ in mundo erant dicens. O tardi: cur n̄ uen tis. Nonne succurreret uobis: si ue nire uellent: cū cepertis uia di cur rere: culices & musce streptu suo uobis in pedimento s̄. S; uos flabellū

S; et cimica

p̄raui

inspirationis sp̄s sc̄i accipite. & eas a uobis q̄ntocius abigite. Vobis currendū ē. & ad dō uobis ē etiā ad ui-uandū. Ad seruiciū dī n̄ fide uos exhibere. & confortabimini manu ipsius. S; in pauim̄to ipsius edificiū tres alias imagines uidi. q̄rū una p̄fatis colūnis acclimis erat. & reli-que due ante ipsā sibi collaterales stabant. se om̄s ad colūnā humanitatis saluatoris & ad p̄fatā turri dirigentes. Que autē ipsi colūnis acclimis erat tamē latitudinis apparuit ut latitudo q̄nq; hominū sibi astantiū notari potest. tamē autē p̄cernans ut longitudinē ei p̄fecte discernere n̄ ualere. ita etiā qd̄ p̄ omne hoc edificiū p̄spiceret.
 Magnū etiā caput & claros oculos habens. acutissime in celū uidebat. tota candida & plucida existens. ut serenissima nubes ē. Aliā autē formā hōis in ea nullā conspexi.
 Et p̄ totū edificiū ad om̄s reliquas

O uirtutes clamaute dicens. m̄s strenue surgamus. q̄a lucifer tenebras suas p̄ omne mun-dū diffundit. Edificemus turre & confirmemus eas celestib; p̄ pug-naculis. quō idē diabolus aduersarius et repugnator ē electorū dī.
 Qui ut primitus plurimū uoluit & tēptauit in sua clarnate. sic etiā nē plurimū uult & tēptat in sua tenebrositate. Nā maliciā et neq̄- ciā suā sufflando & spargendo dilatat. nec ab hoc cessare uult.

Aduersū hęc uos celestes milites sumus posite. in malicia & nequicia sua illū supare. alioq̄n hōies p̄ illius aduersitate n̄ poterūt in mundo saluari. Et ut ipse in p̄mo ortu suo re-pugnare tēptauit diuinitatē. sic etiā imitator ei am̄xpc in nouissimo tēpore resistere tēptabit incarnatio-ni dñi. Lucifer cecidit in initio temporū. am̄xpc quoq; corruet in fine eorū. Tunc q̄s uerus d̄s sit cognosceat.
 & quis sit qui nūquā cecidit uidebit. Ut autē lucifer sectatores habuit demones qui eū ab altitudine ce-li subsecuti s̄ in casū dānatonis. sic & adhuc habet hōies in m̄ta qui eū subsequunt ad intermū p̄dicionis.
 S; nos uirtutes posite sum̄ contra astucias & exsufflationes ipsius. q̄s emittit in mundū ad absorbendū aīas. ita qd̄ om̄s artes ei ad nichilū p̄ nos in animab; iustorū redigant. quatinus ex om̄i parte confusus ap-pareat. Unde & p̄ nos d̄s agnosceat. q̄a n̄ debet occultari. s; manifestari. quō iustus ē in om̄ib; Prior autē illarū que ante hanc imaginē sibi collaterales stabant. armata uidebat. galea scilicet lorica ocreis. ac ferreis cirotheris induta. tenens etiā euaginatū gladiū dextra. hastā autē sinistra. Et sub pedib; suis horribilē draconē conculcans os illi ferro haste transuerberabat. ita ut idē in mundissimas spumas euomeret. S; & gladiū quē tenebat. q̄si ad feriendū fortit̄ uibrabat. Et dixit.

fortissim
 stare & t terpeni am
 eis. Unde & pugnare & lat aut me aut debilis nec nobilis aut paup uolo om̄a ar ciens inuict uolo acris ac p̄fingere p p̄que etiā su bolū. Unde certissimū ei ipse. in dēdū se. Of aduina com go uicp̄s q̄a capm̄ & m̄ apparet. in sup om̄om aduersi d̄ abant ut cla reuerberat mulierē for confidare
 a simitris ap obscuro & m candido uel uero exalbe dūa fuerat amans. Et in ei habebat magni meo roia fulgēt

.viii. s debat. instituit dicens. Incarnato dī filio uocamo noui ppli p doctri-nā ipsius in spū scō ad saluationē subleuata surgens. confortatione uirtuosorū hominū in exhortatione beatarū uirtutū munta aduersus immanissimū hostē cui nullus hominū resistere ualet nisi grā dī aduersus se in expugnabilē dī aditorio exhibet ut nulla arte insi-diarū ei euelli aut deleri possit ado. Unde & turris hec quā uides ultra p̄fata colūna humanitatis saluatoris. p̄figurat eccliam que filii mei incarnatione cōpleta noua constructio in omni bono ope ex-orta ē. in fortitudine & altitudine celestiū actiū ut munitissima turris ad resistendū iniquitati opposita diabolo. Qua pp̄t & lucidissimi splendoris ē p̄dicto lapideo muro meridiane plage eidē edificia ita imposita ut intra & foras ipsū edificiū uideri possit. q̄a serenissima luce humanitatis filii dī illustrata. uiuētes lapides p̄ calore sp̄s scī hoc modo succensos in diuino ope ha-bet. ut & inuicem scientie scripturarū celestis intellectus ac ceteri stulticie sc̄larū rerū nec n̄ fidelib; et infidelib; in edificatione illa quā sumus pat̄ p̄uigentiū suū opat̄. ap̄te demonstret. Et latitudi-nis quidē ubiq; inuicem parte circuitus sui q̄nq; cubitū ē. quō amplitudinē oīs uite in specchom̄ & intentionē totius continue me-

.ix. s ditionis p̄q̄nq; sensus sui ornat̄ infusione sp̄s scī cū omnib; uirtutib; illis q̄s uerus agnus ei manifestat.

ad honorē eidē agni uidelicet sponsi sui remittit. Tante autē altitu-dinis apparet ut eā discernere ne-queas. q̄a maior altitudo & p̄funditas diuine sapientie & scientie in ecclastico ope ē. quā cor humanū fragile & mortale p̄seruari possit sua estimatione. Sed q̄d int̄ turri istā & colūna humanitatis saluato-ris fundamentū solummodo ē posmū muro n̄dū desup edificato. s; tantū int̄ruptus & uacuis locus apparet. longitudinis cubitū unū ut ē etiā sup̄ p̄monstratū ē. hoc ē q̄d de ecclia inde sponsatione filio meo adiuncta mag-nū adhuc p̄conū in scientia dī q̄si infirmitate fundam̄to occultatū manet. q̄d n̄dū in cōpleto ope p̄fectionis p̄- palatū resplendet. s; sine ap̄tione in humanis cordib; uacat. longitudinis tam unū hōis quo sensus hominū in potestate unū ueri & omnip̄s dī s; ita q̄d etiā homo in scientia boni & mali p̄intellectū suū potest cape q̄d sibi ut aliq̄ sit. ut & tibi apta ostensio ne supra manifestatū ē. Et q̄d tur-ris hec n̄dū ē ad plēnū edificata. multa tam solertia & uelocitate p̄ plurimos oparios assidue constru-
tur. hoc ē q̄d eadē ecclia ad cursū & ad statū illū p̄uenit ad quē p̄uentura ē. quāuis multa sollicitudine & industria p̄cedentē labemū tēporū intransientib; & sup̄uenientib; filii sui confeti de cordib; uirtutib; septē pp̄-

dine confit-tudine cet̄- nabilib; dom-tūm existim-ei possit det̄- m̄s sue ad-quod am-na edificat-hoc ē q̄d in op-indiuino conē m̄ta inuicem remis in simpecclia p̄fectilōm̄ sc̄larū confortata ē mo usq; ad sū-multitudo tūm; despouq; ad nup̄- ap̄te cū sponfilio suū q̄m tūm̄s p̄ceptū ficta ē. lucet cā attritus in ne defendenti-ficti & alba umonta habent sensu ex i dē a infidelē credenp̄dore scī sp̄s om̄s ē. ita q̄d tē inuicem boni filii suis cotidie sine dilatione ad ef-fectu decoris sui ppare n cesset. xij.

Habet tam incircumsumptis sue septem ppugnacula mira fortitudine constructa quo circūdata ē in cel-stitudine celestiu opū septem inexpug-nabilib; domis scī spē que tamē vir-tutis existunt ut nullus aduersarica possit destruere uel pabitudine mris sue ad ea supbe ualeat ptingere.

Quod autē ab uniore parte p die in edificiu uidet qsi scala usq; ad caecum turrei eide creta.

hoc ē qd in ope illo qd supnus pater indiuino consilio pfiliū suū opatus ē multa in unanimitate gradus florentis in simplicitate constitutionis ecclāstice pcessionis s ad altitudinē celestiū secretū ptingentes in quib; ecclā confortata & roborata consistit. Et ab uno usq; ad sumū gradib; ei quedā multitudo hominū stat qā apmīs tēporib; desponsationis eide ecclē usq; ad nuptiale tēpus illud cū ipsa apte cū sponso suo in pleno numero filiorū suorū gaudebit in gradib; constitutionis pceptū dī cū quib; ipsa edi-ficata ē lucebunt aplica luminaria eā a tenebris infidelitatis sua timone defendentia.

Vnde etiā igneas facies & alba uestimenta s; nigra calciamenta habent quo intellectuāli sensu eorū idē aplicorū rectorū spectabilis fides credere scilicet in unū dīmpardorē scī spē in ipsis qsi facies ac-censa ē na qd & ppurissimā clari-tē inueste bonorū opū corā dō & sclo resplenduerūt ingris tam indumentis pedū apparentes qā tinea infidelitatis & sordis multipliciū scelerū in-credulorū pploz ptransierūt qsi suo exemplo aduā iusticie quāuis multa diffultate tam conuercentes pduxerūt.

Sed qd inter eos aliq; similis qdē scematis s; maioris stature & splendoris apparent hoc ē qd int eosdē ecclāsticos defensores pmi fundato-res ipsius ecclē s; qui eā primū post filiū dī suā p dicatione edificantes eundē qdē tenorē habent quē & sequaces eorū qui eos pēpue imitari noscent quo scdm hoc ut illi pcesserunt sic isti subsequuti s; ei tam forma pstantes qā ipsi nullū aliū pdecesso-rē habebant aq; exemplū noue grē habebant pter filiū dī ab cui ore uerbū uite audierūt atq; eos clari-tate pcellentes quo fulgorē incarnationis ei pēctis psemalrē uide-runt. Qui & ipsā turrē multa diligentia intuent qā sponse dī in amore diuino sue pietatis sollicitudine adesse n cessant ut in robore suo pfecte consistat ut scriptū ē.

Sicut turrei dauid collū tuū que edificata ē cū ppugnaculis. Omne clipeū pendente extra oīs armatura fortū. Hoc tale ē. Ut in carnatio filiū sumi rectoris fortis-simi scilicet leonis ex uirginea floriditate ueniens fortissimū instru-mentū noue grē posita ē sic fortū-do fidi tue onoua sponsa incorrupta durans certissimū munim fide us ppli constituta ē. Quomodo. for-tissimis uirib; tuis assunt & adherēt om̃s munitiones filioꝝ tuoꝝ q̃ iuri endi. S̃ noua illustratione de uiuo & purissimo fonte stillanti q̃s habes in hac fortitudinis coniunctione. ut collū reliquo corpori ē iunctū ē. ita ut nec destrui. nec dissipari possis. sic nec uictoriosa instrum̃ta ueri dauid poterit superari. Quom̃. Virxpi ihu filii dī fortissima turris ē. in qua uictoriosissime milicie fide-liū inuictissima p̃batione. exerceant quib; nullus aduersarius se p̃ualere glābit. q̃a in se eundē xpm̃ uerū dīm & hominē continent. p̃ quē in scdā regeneratione oīs cōpago filioꝝ tuoꝝ in salutē. decemissime p̃uendiunt. Vnde & eadē purissima incar-natio app̃his p̃dicta. & p̃ciosissimis lapidib; uirtutū adornata. cū ppugnaculis aplice doctrine. idē cū plan-tatorib; iusticie ueri luminis in uni-uersū orbe ad salutē credentiū p̃- palata ē. ut hęc parabola demonstrat.

 xvi. Om̃s q̃dā urbē marmorea habens in ipsā intonuit plurimisq; celaturis muros ei⁹ intus celauit. de quib; ipsa acutissima limationē in politoꝝ lapidū exspirauit. Quo facto. idē dñs in unico uerbo suo aq̃s aquarū dicebat. ut sua effusione equalitatē facerent supra montes.
 Et hoc enā p̃dicto. ignē ignis silentē admonuit. ut parua tabernacula pararet. Quo etiā adimpleto. eadē tabernacula ita in altū p̃ficerēt. ut urbē illā celeri p̃fectū. sua excellerent altitudine. Hoc tale ē. Dñs iste ē ille quē nūquā p̃cessit ali⁹ dñationē. S̃ ipse solus sup̃ om̃a & in om̃ib; ē. q̃a nichil ante eū nec post eū inuentū ē. ac idō dñs omniū ē. Hic nobis urbē chorū scilicet p̃phetarū aduersus rabiē sc̃larū tēptatū fortē & constanē in sua pote-state habuit. quō infusione habuit. quō infusione sp̃s sc̃i repleti erant cū in eos idē dñs intonuit. ita qd̃ in eis exspirationē illā susceperunt qd̃ misteria eū⁹ obscuris uerbis p̃tulerūt. ut p̃mū sonus audiret cū n̄ dñi uerbū cognosceret. sonū tam p̃pheticū ex uerbo filio scilicet dī incarnato subsequente. Qui dñs multiplices celaturas in cordib; exfecit cū intellectu ipsōꝝ multiplici spū sapientie infudit. ita qd̃ in spūali sensu p̃funda dī tā p̃sentis quā futuri uide-licet sc̃li p̃phetauerūt. p̃ quē acutissimo sermones contra contrarios mores hominū p̃tulerūt. in quib; durissima cor-da iudeōꝝ ad lenitatē & pietatē felicū actū puocauerūt. S̃ incarnato uerbo dī celestis pat̃ in eodē filio suo inuenit aplis q̃ hoīes existentes segregati erant de cōmuni pp̃lo. ut purissimi riuuli eligunt de ceteris aq̃s fluentib; in plano dicebat eis ut in undatione uerē fidi effluerent in orbē terrarū dep̃mentes & conuerentes magnū scisma irrifionis sufflatus sup̃bie & exaltationē culture idolōꝝ. quatinus hoīes uerū dīm cognoscendo desererent infidelitatē suā in p̃dicamone illōꝝ.

 Qua fide in pplis roborata. idē p̃u-171 rator omnium ignitas mentes electorum suorum qui accensi fuerant de ignitis cordibus. illorum quasi spiritus sanctus in ignitis linguis ad ueniens tetigerat. suauiter etiam in spiritu sancto admonuit. ut contemptores mundi effecti in contemplatione celestis uite paruuli et pauperes spiritu et non abnuent. sed ut per haec parua habitacula humilitatis sibi supernas diui-cias compararent. Que humilitatis opera dum contemptores caducorum in excel-so studio subtilissima precepta dei sepe ruminantes imitarentur. ut martyres uirgines et reliqui summet abiectores. in hac sui in hac sui commone ad amorem celestium ascenderent. ut etiam agricolae in uinea ueteris testamenti laborantes in uelocitate bonorum studi-orum suorum superarent. dum semetipsos quasi per nichilo habentes. toto deside-rio ad eternam anhelarent. Unde et mille clipei multe perfectae uidelicet defensiones perfectae fidei in noua gratia pendunt a filio dei. dum primi pasto-res ecclesie exemplum ab ipso trahentes et ob spiritum supernorum semetipsos conculcantes. catholica fide sanguinis sui effusione roborata. ab ignitis iaculis diaboli que uulnerant animas hominum prequirunt. quasi mul-tiplices uirantes armaturae celestis milicie in ceteris electis subsequen-tes. etiam in hoc seculo amoris dei obsequuntur. Quomodo. Quia antiquus ser-pens primo homini pessimum fetorem contemptus dei insufflauit. idcirco et ipse diabolus odore omnium aromatici castitatis scilicet et continentiae ac ligature preceptorum dei. nec non societatis christi iugum ei sufferre. atque contemptus totius mundi durissime in his sibi contrariis celestibus. iaculis transfigitur. ita quod abiectus decumate dei confusus et conculcat in apta sue damnationis parte aspidelibus abhorreat. Quod autem in septentrionali plaga eide edificium uides mundum et homines qui de se mine ade pereant in predictum lucum dum murum speculatiue sciencie ipsius edificium et ambitum circuli quod de se dente in throno prehendit. discurrentes. hoc est quod in carnalibus desideris que respicientia ad inbellentiam uersantur in terrenis secularium cupiditatum. mundus et mundiales homines de culpa primi parentis positi sunt. ex altera parte sciencia boni et mali ipsis apposta ut ad opus dei per bo-num accedant et malum effugiant. et ex altera potestate dei illi ostensa. ut et se sub maiestate eius sciant et omnia facta sua ab ipso examinari non dubitent. Vnde et multi idem edificium in turrim percursum uoluntatis dei et columnam diuinitatis uer-bi ipsius prefatum murum speculanue sciencie intrando et exiundo transeunt. ut nubes hac et illac diffundit. quia multi diuinum opus ueteri testamento et nouo exordio admoniti aggredientes. ipsum per speculatiua sciencia relictis carnalibus desideris intrant. multique.

xxij.

xxix.

uoluptates suas sequentes illud in malis concupiscentiis suis ibide ex eunt. ita qd inuoluntate sua siue ad bonu siue ad malu inuoluntate nubiū idē in motione cogitationū suarū se hac & illac relaxando de ducunt. S; qd hi qui ipsū edificū intant candidissima ueste indu unt. hoc ē qd hi q opus dī bona uo luntate aggrediunt purissima et lucidissima ueste uere fidei ut dī cognoscant p̄midiam ipsius uesti unt. Quorū alii de sua uirtute & lenita te eīdē uestis gaudio magno letifi cati eā retinent. quia contrito et humiliato spū uirtutis dulcissima & lenissima catholica fide ac p̄fusi mīori liquore sentant sēp mīorib; oculis letant in celestib; ea deuotū sime adimplentes & retinentes que ipsis sp̄s sc̄s inspirat. Alii autē q̄si de grauedine & difficultate eī tri stes effecti illa exuere uolunt. quō uelut grauissimo onere ponderati et q̄si difficillima uia impedita in quicissima & amarissima consuetu dine illicitē uoluptatis se intrinse cus dilanantes & macerantes fide inopib; suis abicere conant. nec di uinis p̄ceptis se cōmoneri paciunt.
Quos benigne uirtus hec quā scien tiā dī nominari audisti sepius con pescens unicuiq; eorū dicit uerba admonitionis sue ut p̄dictū ē q̄a abissim' d̄s p̄sciens molliari corda duorū lapidū in hominib; flectit se in mīa sua ad eos ut tibi ostensū

ē. frequent cōmonens illos ut intra se gentes & flentes ipsū orent q̄u nus eos libet de importunitate nequicie sue qua diabolica suasio ne p̄fusi s̄. ita ut in hac penitencia possint reueri ad intellectū bone uoluntatis. recordantes uestis inno centie quā suscepit in regeneratione ne sp̄s & aque. S; qd uidet qd q̄da eorū his uerbis castigati quā uis idē indumentū ipsis indifficile uideat. illud tamē cū multo sudore retineat. hoc ē qd in inspiratione sp̄s sc̄i admo nit in fide quā suscipiunt q̄si gra uē & difficile mītib; suis uia arripunt. s; eā quā uis multo labore tamē n̄ de spantes nec tedio torpentes tandē p̄ficiunt. Quidā uero eadē uerba subsannantes uesteq; ipsā furiose exuentes abiciunt ad mundū rede unt unde uenerūt. multa q; p̄seru tantes multa in uia seclariū uani tati discunt. isti s̄ qui legē dī & in ficiā eī derisui habentes. fide catho lica in uanitatib; errorū suorū se denu dant. eā abnegantes in opib; malig nis que p̄nunt ad mortē & ad mun di hui' uanitates se declinant q̄si p̄ri fide dimiserant. ac libidinosā facta in artib; p̄uersis sciscitantes. ardente gustū sc̄i discunt. atq; cū diabolicis irritationib; sedm deceptionē illi p̄uer tunt. Quorū alii inde edificū tandē reuerfi uestē quā abiecerant iterū tollentes sibi induunt. q̄a isti ad opus diuinū de uia erroris sui re deunt ueniunt. & scisma diaboli

172 qd sedm uoluntate illi habebant abicientes habm uere fidei que in baptismo suscepant & que ipsi in errorib; suis ueru dm deridentes ab icebant. iteru cu puro & simplici corde confidentes resumunt. Alii autem reuera nolentes ea denudari in mundo ignominiose remanent. quo ipsi addm pura penitentia re dire contempnentes ueste innocentie spoliant & idcirco nudi a bono fide liu opu s; pleni malo uicioz diaboli caru arcu in nequens mundiali uauitatu cu maxima confusione ta p semis scilicet qua fuit uita sua usq; ad mortem in penitentes deducit. xx.
Sed qd uidet. quom qda sordi dissimi & nigerrimi qsi pinsa ma excitati a baquilone uenien tes in ipsu edificiu currunt. turrig. pfata bachando inuadentes. mea ut serpentes sibilant. hoc e qd qda scelerati hoies sub mobili calore le ti stuporis sordentes p nigredine diabolice aspectionis dm despici unt. nec causa illa qua desiderant. p donu sei spe querit. s; diabolica arte aflati & incitati atq; a parte dnationis missi callida arte diu nu opus inquant ac furti subtrahen do & palu rapiendo atq; in insania bachando. temere p nefandissima pecunia horribilis diabolice ni gredinis constituta ad o officia deglutunt. & ecclesiam hoc m pin sanu furore conturbantes. mea sibilos deceptionis antiqui serpen tis dant. Quom Diabolica astutia tadiu incautos hoies afflant usq; du cos sedm uoluntate sua pmor tiferam emptione occupant. hoc sibilo iactante ecclesiam contaminantes du sic furant potestates que in ca di ordinatione constitute s. Qui quo hec faciunt a conspectu meo in penitentes pecti s. nec in his cau sis eos scio qa cas p se & n p me adepti

s. ut osee seruus ms ostendit dicens.
Ipsi regnauerunt & n ex me. principes extiterunt & n cognoui. Argenti suu & aurum suu fecerunt sibi idola ut in tuerent. Hoc tale e. Hoies uoluntate sua sequentes computant & consti tunt in semet ipsis qe qd p prius ex appetitis deliberat. Quid e hoc. Con cupiscibilis uidelicet concupiscen tia ex que ipsis suadet ut domi nent hominib; furuuo & rapto ho nore. n postulato nec sumpto nec con stituto ex me. qd tam aliquando ita fieri pmitto. ut iudicialis pena sup ueniat eis de p prius uoluntatib; suis. quia in hoc n quiescit. Et qd hoc eis pdest. qa in hoc n uiriditate s; ariditate habent. & quo hoc n plantam. s; inutilis herba nascit meis absq; trunco. Infructifere eni herbe de tra facile nascunt pse. fruc tiferse autem seminant & plantantur magno labore. Sic pmitto qd ali quando tennu desideriu hois sine radice in malo facile floreat plan tatione boni n querens. qa uiridi tate estans n habet. pmitto ena

De simoniaco.

qd aliquando rectū ei desiderū bene radicanū in bono fructū p multas miseras afficit. rigationē sentans amantiss. quō aspiciat hiemis caret. Unde etiā sepe uiles hoīes pcellunt in principatu cōmy nē & uile pplm. ut inuiles herbe aliquando excelsiores s̄ uilib. ipsi tamū posm in pprus desideris su is n̄ mea plantatione aut tactu cognitionis doni mei. aut ordina tionis mee radican. s̄; hoc iusto iu dicio pmitto fieri. q̄ illud ame n̄ quesierit s̄; intra semetipsos consti tuerit. unde & mihi de hoc iudi cio meo respondebunt. Nā felici tate optime doctrine quā maīo suo ab omī indignatione infideli tatis deberent examinare ut ar gentū purgat a cuncta falsitate.
& utilitate pfundissime sapien tie quā in uoluntate sua deberent ordinare splendidissima fide sēp uidentes quom̄ d̄s colendus ue nerandus & conseruandus sit. faci unt sibi in contrarietate uanita tis. Quom̄. Ipsi recurrunt eā ad maximā infelicitatē. intellectu uidelicet suū quē ad dō habent in facilib; concupiscentis car nis sue offerentes. q̄ si ferens & pu trida ipsa caro eorū d̄s sit. nolen tes oculos suos erigere ad dīm q̄ for mauit illos s̄; uoluntatē suā p dō habentes. quō scdm hoc uiuunt ut in semet ipsis ordinant & con stituant. Hoc autē idō n̄ faciunt.

ut agrū illū q̄ gignit cibū uite cū possideant. ut absit ab eo & in penitentia in ppetuū int̄ant. quō ille quē p dō colunt mortuus ē sic & ipsi mortui s̄. uidelicet tā uendi tores quā emptores sp̄taliū. hoc ē desiderantes qd ame n̄ quesierit.
Nā q̄ potestatem prabiē inuadit. ita qd rationabile donū sp̄s sc̄i uena le facit. quom̄ posset de uendito sal uari. q̄a homo q̄ substantiā suā alie nis uendit. ea n̄ debet ampliū ui.
Et quom̄ deberet etiā mercator iste ui emptā saluatione quā ad dō no lebat recipere. s̄; festinauit eā ad ip̄s ei pecunia. Quā tamē ut adipisceret. recto iudicio suo d̄s fieri pmissit. Nā quib; d̄s indignatus illud eos fura ri pmissit. p hoc tamē occulto iudi cio in p̄senti eos puniens & n̄ in fu turo. ut scdm qd in obliuione sp̄s sc̄i amauerit in ipsis confundat ita qd p hanc confusionē ad hoc pdu cant ut addīm in penitencia reuer tant. unde & hac pacta remissione in futuro consequunt. Quosdā autē in hoc tollerat. n̄ in p̄senti eos cruci ans s̄; iusta ex causa in futuro osten dit qd uoluntas eorū ipsis in amaris cruciatib; p̄sit. s̄; & alios tales tā in p̄senti quā in futuro punit. quō p spiciunt intellectus eorū in ipsis uite acceptabile sua uoluntate se facit. imitans diabolu in malis suis. Alios quoq; ad hoc puenire pmissit ut idē malū in penitencia eorū confun dat. cū se p ppetrata eadē iniusti in futura differens. q̄ uoluntatē suā p dō habent. qua propter ip̄s eis cia acriter puniunt. illa quae si putri dum cadauer abiciunt. Quibus dā u ne hoc adipiscantur. mittere resistit. quia si ad illud pergerent penas ge hennales non effugerent. incis fortiter cruciari mererent. Quicūque autem perstiterit aut sibi usurpauerit ca thedra potestatis in consilio patris sui qui pecunia est. quoniam ipsa pater illis efficit. in mercatu ipsi per dicio nem acquirunt. ab eadem dignitate et ille qui dedit et qui accepit abiciendus est. quia si homini pecus suum furtum ab latum et alii uenundatum fuerit. ille cui ablatum est reus cum omni iure re perit. qui uero uendidit aut qui emit absque contradictione uterque illud dimittit. Sic et dignitas potestatis que secundum iusticiam meam debet pos sideri. si palique furtiuo munere diripitur. et in alios per se dissipatur ame cum districto iudicio requiritur. ac propterea ille qui eam in mercatu po suit. uel qui eam indigne comparauit. uita illi iusto iudicio utraq; carebit. quia templum nomini meo consecratum domum rapine fecerit.

Quomodo. Sapientia et consilium quod a me in corde suo habuerit sua sen tentia in forum posuerit. sibi ex hoc pecuniam iniquitatis aliorum per dicio recipientes. Qua propter uel mercatum illum in amara penitentia abiciunt. uel in inde in igne diuini ardoris respondebunt. Nam qui uiuentem dig nitatem quam spiritus in spiritualibus a patribus uiuificat mortuo pericio comparant ad fetorem seaurientis putredinis producere conantur. ex ipsa presumptionis peruersitate. nisi citius penitent in per dicio est. ut accensus in spiritu sancto desertor erroris relinquant. omnia filius colūbe petrus. transiit turbini qui interrima nigredine lucem uolebat absorbere dicit. xxv.

Pecunia tua tecum sit in per dicio ne. quoniam donum dei existimasti pecunia possideri. Non est enim tibi pars neque sortis in sermone isto. Cor enim tuum non est rectum coram deo. Hoc tale est. Pecunia fallacis confidentie tue quam habes in aliena re ut dominum ip sa autem te habens ut nichilum sit tibi in per dicio gehennalis ignis si hoc donum quod ignei spiritus sancti est per ne fas pecunie comparatum in penitens ren nueris. quoniam intransitoria scientia aie tue accensione eadem acutissi mi inspectoris fallacem existimasti pecunia possideri. quam diffusus es te posse habere dono dei. Si autem ob causam hanc penitueris illud quod emisti dimittes pecuniamque quam per ipso dedisti sic perditam semper. quia quod eternum est cum luto mercari uolu isti ab illo qui te formauit exclamo.
Sed te in eadem emptione durante. non habebis partem lucis in consortio superiorum angelorum. quoniam in sermone lingue tue rapacitatem cordis tui perulisti. aliud concupiscens quam cuius eterne claritatis desiderant.
Unde et cor tuum in hac peruersitate coram deo iniustum est. hoc uolens ha bere pemptiōe pecunie qđ gratis a dō donandū ē. Itaq. desertores hui' diuini pacti qđ illud querere deberent gratuito dono sp̄s sc̄i & n̄ faciunt iusto iudicio p̄me uanis simulacris cōparant. quō ut illa opus manū existētia auerſa tis consorcio s̄ uacua. s. tam ab in fidelib. p̄dō colum̄. sic & isti p̄con trarietate fectū munerū illumi natione sp̄s sc̄i carentes. fallaces magistri efficiunt. n̄ electi in suspi rio aīe sue ueluti officio illo sunt indigni. s. in flagrantē supbia il lud ab hōib. accipientes uoluntate meā in hoc n̄ considerant. Qua p̄p̄ nescio unde sunt ipsi qđ alieni m̄ existentes. qđ ob hanc iniusticiā suā si sic p̄secutauerunt a me piec ti s. Si autē extoto corde penitue rint. eos suscipiens. gaudiū sup̄ ip sos faciā angloz. Sed quāuis iniuste agant qui has dignitates p̄uerso ardore desiderant. nec eis consentiendū sit qui eas sua neq̄cia inuadere nituntur. ut p̄dictū ē. ipsa tam regimina bona ad utilita tē hominū a dō bene disposita s. nec eis supbe & p̄uacit̄ resistendū ē. s. p̄u in amore meo obediendū.

Unde nullus fidelū qui dō uult digne obtemperare opponat se ma gisterio sibi p̄sidentī. quō illud imitat honorē dī custodiens & pas cens oues ipsius. q̄tinus honor ea rūndē ouū n̄ dissipet in alienū qđ fur & latro ē. qđ ut nullus debet repugnare dō insipient̄ resistere magisterio suo. Ergo oīs homo ui uens in anima & corpore. a maiorib. se dignitatib. siue corporales siue sp̄tales iusticias retineant eis sub iectus debet obedire. ut in amore magisterū carū corrigat̄ constitu ta lex hominū. ne ipsi deuantes in indisciplinata libertate uolunta tis sue. sibi metipsis legē ponant. scđm qđ uoluerint. sic errantes in uia dñi. qđ nec errent p̄p̄ hoc pote stas a dō ē. Quom̄. Inſpiratione sp̄s sc̄i regimina hominū disposita s. ut p̄p̄sa discant hōies timere dñm.

Que si illi scđm libtū suū incon trarietate p̄uerterunt. n̄ tam sic in uoluntate dī ē. s. in secreta p̄missio ne ē. ut iusto iudicio concupiscen tia illorū in p̄uerso ardore adduci mentū sui compleat̄. Ergo dignita tes potestati inſpirate a dō. ad uti litatē hominū ob magnā necessita tē eorū ab ipso iuste ordinate s. ne plebs dī more pecudū sine regimi ne uiuens. p̄dēna queq. instabili tatis sue incederet. Unde qui ipsis repugnat. nolens p̄impulsū sup bie eis in humilitatis subiectione ut iustū ē obedire. n̄ hōib. contra dicit. s. m̄ creatori qđ cuncta iuste dispono se p̄uacit̄ scđm trans gressionē ade obicit. p̄p̄ hanc re bellionē tenebras dampnationis si bi accumulans. sic & ille de gaudio merūas expulsus ē. n̄ ille qui p̄ uerſe nequicie hominū in zdo

xxii.

meo hūm faciā iust minuat tunc fecit p̄ctā f re uolū tione ad dēti ē p̄ supbe cal repugnat ma igno sp̄tantes lunatis sue tes se imp na fieri p si p̄p̄sum ingram p gēbene uolū qđ cia cōfū inade ne ramb. h monē d reſp̄scen tūciā m
tur. alus bus in ad dēti uſq nomb. in bilis. ecr moral m ma p̄dē tūrti co marmor dētiē tō mope om minū ea

meo humilitate non consentit. quia si iusticia iusticie dei potius augeat quam minuat. si hoc congruent & oportune fecerit. si quod ipsas dignitates perlatam superbia indecent opprimere uoluerit. quoniam ille mea dispositione aduulnate uiuentium ut predictum est per palam. Et quod contra eas superbe calcemat inspirationi mee repugnat. quauis aliqui in insania ignorantie timore meum non inspicientes eisdem dignitatibus inuicem uoluntatis sue diuinum preceptum per uarietas se ingerant. quod iusto iudicio na fieri primo ut desiderant. ipsi per quassima examinatione ex hoc ingraui penitentia aut in igne gehenne responsuri. Sed quod uidet quod ex his quod ab hac stulticia cessantes mundi effecti sunt. alius in eadem nequa & sordis sua per seuerantibus. hoc est quod ex eis aliqui per inspiratione diuinam apueritate sua resipiscentes. per puram & ueram penitentiam mundari & saluari merentur. alius obdurans & in penitentibus in eadem calliditas sue immundicia usque ad finem uite sue permanens. atque na suffocatus. miserabiliter & crudeliter in morte dire mortis morientibus. Quod autem in qua predictum conspicis uersus per facta turri ecclesie quasi septem albi coloris marmoreas columnas in mira rotunditate tornatas stantes. hoc est quod in ope omnipotentis patris administrum & ad decorum noue sponse spiritus sancti expirationis sue septem candidissima sustinacula omne aduersitate tempestatum sua fortitudine abstergentia declarans. summam potestatem nec inuicem nec finem in rotunditate eternitatis habentem manifestauit. Que septem altitudinis septem cubitos. quia omne fortitudine & altitudine totius humani intellectus eadem dona excedentia eum quod cuncta creauit purissima si de cotelendu demonstrant. Et in summate sua quasi ferreum & rotundum habent tabulam decent aliquantulum in altitudine sursum erectum. quoniam in excellentia sua claritatis acuta & incomprehensibile diuinitatis potestate designant regentem & sustentantem illos elegantissima rectitudine sua in celestibus. quod se hic per dona sancti spiritus separauerunt acarnalibus. uoluptatibus. Quod autem in acumine eadem tabulam uidet quasi pulcherrimam imaginem stantem. hoc est quod uirtus hec in altissimo patre ante omnem creaturam fuit ordinans in consilio illius queque instrumenta creaturarum. que in celo & intra condita sunt. ipsa scilicet magnus ornatus fulgens in domino. latissimusque gradus graduum ceterarum uirtutum existens in ipso. etque dulcissima amplexione in ardentis amoris conuincta tripudio. Que ad homines in mundum aspiciet. quoniam illos quod ea sequi uoluerunt sua protectione semper regit & custodit. eos ualde diligens quia con stant: impsa. Nā eadē imago sapientiā dī designat: q̄a om̄a p̄ ipsā a dō creata s̄ & regunt. Cui caput ut lumi fulgur: tanto nitore radiat ut illud ad pleniū n̄ possis considerare: quō diuinas t̄ribilis & blanda oī creaturae ē: oīa uidens & conside-rans: ut oculus hoīs ea diiudicet: que sibi fuerint appposita: a nullo tam hominū in profunditate miste. ~~ru sui ad finē~~ ualens p̄duci. Unde & man⁹ ad pectus reuerent̄ cōponit: que ē pote-stas sapientie quā ad semetipsā sapien̄t constringit: ita qd̄ om̄e op⁹ sui tali modo dirigit: ut nullus ei in aliquo nec prudentia nec po-tencia resistere possit: pedib; ipsius in eodē tribulato t̄ ad uiden-dū occultatis: q̄a uia illi in corde patris absconsa nulli hominū patet: soli dō secreta ei nuda & ma-nifesta: Qd̄ ū circuli in modū corone multo fulgentē splendore ha-bet: incipit: hoc ē qd̄ maiestas dī in medio & fine carens incōparabili nitet honore: tanto candore di-uinitate radiante ut acies mortaliū memū impsa reuerberet. S; qd̄ tunica aurei coloris induit: hoc ē qd̄ opus sapientie q̄si in pu-rissimo auro frequent̄ consideratur: Qua p̄p̄t & a pectore deorsū usq; ad pedes: zona una descen-dens: p̄ciosissimarū gēmarū or-natu uiridis scilicet albi & rubei atq; aerei purpureo fulgore in ter lucente coloris decorat: quō ab exordio mundi cū primū sapientia opus suū in aptā ostensionē dedit: iā se usq; ad finē setōr q̄si una una tēten-dit in scīs & iustis mandatis ornata: uidelicet p̄ma plantatione uiridis germinis patriarcharū et p̄phetarū qui meritis gemitus laboris sui maximo desiderio filiū dī flagi-tabant incarnari: & de inde deco-rata candidissima uirginitate mā-ria in uirgine & postea in robustis-sima & rubente martyriū fide ac demū in contemplationis purpurea & lucida carnate: qd̄ & p̄xim⁹ p̄ calorē scī sp̄s diligendus ē: qd̄ na-ad terminū mundi p̄cedet ad mo-nitione illi n̄ cessante. s; semp quā-dū sc̄m durat emanante. s; semp quādiu sc̄m durat emanante: ut enā eadē uirtus in exhortatione sua declarat ut supra dictū ē.

Sed qd̄ iterū in pauimento ipsius edificii tres alias imagines ui-des: hoc ē qd̄ he uirtutes t̄rena calcantes & celestia in diuino ope sectantes tria instrum̄ta p̄ que eccl̄a in filiis suis c̄na p̄pet̄ designant: nutritiū scilicet magistror & pugnā fidelīū aduersus diabolu: ac reuersionē eor de consensu uicior: q̄rū una p̄fatis colūnis ē: q̄a eccl̄astici doc-tores p̄ dona scī sp̄s in b̄m̄ requit̄ capiunt ipsius fortitudine: & reli-
que due ante ipsā sibi collaterales stant: quō dilectio dī & p̄xim⁹ ei exhortatione mistarū coniuncta

& sociabili code & se of adco saluatoris & a gunt: q̄a par di uerū dīn eccl̄a de uerū ostendunt ut namq; de fūg amq; scīs al nitione filii ip marū. Sed colūnis & cele dī: qm̄ ipsa p̄ in hoīb; cū oī tante latitudi tudo q̄nq; h nari p̄pet̄ q̄nq; sc̄m h ei quib; ipsa dī conuertit uirt a dō m̄st dī diligenti
m̄st ut longi ornare n̄ uale hoc edificii p̄ altitudine sua tū cecidit su ta sic qd̄ enā saluatoris de o saluator sc̄m orunt: q̄nq; a e moia eccl̄a sp̄s suū dīn f̄b̄ricant & co p̄pugnacilia
p̄quā consistere gunt: Qua p̄p̄

175
& sociabili continet opatione. Unde & se os ad colunā humanitatis saluatoris & ad p̄fata turrē dirigunt. q̄a pari unanimitate filiū dī uerū dīm & uerū hominē in ecclā deuotissime coli & adorari ostendunt iusticiā p̄ iusticiā eleuantes. designando uidelicet in amīq̄s scīs altissimū dīm & in incarnatione filii ipsius saluationē ammarū. Sed hec imago que ipsis colūnis acclimīs ē p̄figurāt iusticiā dī. q̄m ipsa p̄ sapientiā p̄ sp̄m sc̄m in hōib; cū oib; iusticiis suis tēpat. tante latitudinis apparens ut latitudo q̄nq; hominū sibi affantū notari potest qd̄ est expansio q̄nq; sensuū humane capacitatis cū quib; ipsa in latitudine legis dī conuersat. continens & conseruans a dō instituta p̄cepta uite ipsā diligenter. Que & tante p̄c̄ritatis ē ut longitudinē ei p̄fecte discernere n̄ ualeas. ita etiā qd̄ p̄ om̄e hoc edificii p̄spiciat. q̄a ipsa in altitudine sua humanū intellectū excedens sursum tendit ad celestia. sic qd̄ etiā in incarnatione saluatoris de celo p̄spexit cū idē saluator scilicet filius dī a patre exiit. quēra iusticia existit. unō & in oīa ecclāstica instrum̄ta a spectū suū dirigit. quō illa p̄c̄a fabricant & continent. ut a tiora p̄pugnacula ad fortissimā turrē p̄quā constare possunt coniungunt. Qua p̄p̄t & magnū caput

& claros oculos habens. acutissime in celū uidet. quō maxima & sūma bonitas iusticie lucidissimū uisū p̄ incarnatū filiū dī hominib; declarauit. cū ille in humano corpore t̄renis ac tenebrosis oculis se manifestauit celestia intuens p̄dēptione animarū. Et tota candida & plucida existit ut serenissima nubes ē. q̄a ipsa incandore & puritate mentū iustorū hominū habnat. qui om̄e studiū suū ad hoc intendant ut iusticie dī fidelissime subdm̄ sint. Unde & ipsa nubib; se assimilāt. quō in cordib; iustorū gratā sibi habnationē parat. S; qd̄ aliā formā hōis in ea nullā conspiciat. hoc ē qd̄ celestis & n̄ t̄restis manet scdm̄ qd̄ & ē declaratū ē. uidelicet humanis opib; quib; grauam̄ hōies illi n̄ adherentib; s; que ipsos ad iustificationē uite p̄ducunt. quō d̄s iustus ē. ut & ipsa diabolo opposita in ope dī ceteras uirtutes exhortans sup̄i fidelit̄ de xxviii. monstrat. Imago autē prior illarū que ante p̄dictā imaginē sibi collatales stant. ostendit fortitudinē. q̄a p̄ iusticiā dī surgit fortitudo. q̄si p̄nceps in conspectu sūmi regis. recto & scō ope repugnans in hōib; cunctis insidus aduersariorū. armata apparens. uidelicet uirtute om̄ip̄s dī quō ipsa foris infide fortit̄ resistit diabolice objectioni. Qua p̄p̄t & galea idē sup̄no uigore ad salutē credentiū induit. & lorica qd̄ ē xp̄ianorū lege que p̄uſſiciā quā continet inſe nul la ſagitta diabolice artus aboler. ac oceris ſcilicet rectis munerib; in doc trina principalium magiſtroꝝ fre quemant. atq; ferreis curotheis q̄ ſ fortiffima & acutiſſima opa que fideles p̄ficiunt in xpo. Teneat etiā euaginatū gladiū dextra. idē in bono ope nudā & aptā induit ſcriptura dī admonitionē quā ue rus dī in miſtica ſignificatione de nudauit. cū in iore dulcedinē nu clei in dēctione legis oſtendit. ha ſtā autē habens ſiniſtra. q̄a fiducia et̄noꝝ in hac etiā actione designat infidelib; hoīb; ſe habere. ubi carna lib; concupiſcentiis p̄uoluptatē car nis impugnant. Qd̄ autē ſub pedib; ſuis horribile draconē conculeat. hoc ē qd̄ p̄uā rectitudinis am quū horridū ſerpentē poteſtam ſue ſubigit. of etiā illi ferro haſte tranſ uerbetans. na ut idē inmundiſſimas ſpumas euomat. quō rictus ſordi diſſime & diabolice libidinis in acui ſſima audacia caſtrant tranſiens. conſpumationē ardentis libidinis. qua ille hoies polluit ab eo ceteror quer. Unde & gladiū quē tenet q̄ſi ad feriendū uibrat. q̄a d̄s acumiſſi mū uerbū ſuū inſicere omnē inſi delitatē idolorū & aliorū ſciſmātū que incredulitatis ſ. inextenſa fortitu dine manifeſtauit. ſic & uirtus eadē in ſup̄dicta admonitione ſua ma niſeſtat. A terra ū imago ſc̄natē ſignificat quō cū p̄fortitudine di abolo repugnat. ſc̄nas in bonis hoīb; adornatū celeſtis milicie orit. Que tricepſ ē. quō hac trina dignitate ad ſtatū ſuū p̄ducit. ita ut innatu rali loco capitis & in utroq; humero ſuo capite appareat q̄a iuſta & dig na actione d̄s caput totius uere ex ultationis & in p̄ſp̄is & in aduerſis ac quib; uel lenſicari uel contriſtari poteſt homo. metuendus & ueneran dus ē. medio tam̄ alia duo aliq̄ntu lū ſup̄ eminente. quō ille q̄ iudex bonorū & malorū exiſtit oīa ſup̄eminet ſua eq̄tate. S; qd̄ idē mediū & qd̄ ad exteriſ q̄ ē tanto fulgore radiant. ut claritas ipſorū uſū tuū reuerbe ret. na qd̄ utrū uiriſe an muliebri formā habeant p̄fecte conſiderare n̄ ualeas. hoc ē qd̄ ſc̄nas in culmine honoris & in parte p̄ſp̄itatis et̄ne dulcedinis tanto ſplendore diuine gr̄e p̄fuſa conſiſtit. ut p̄funditas miſterii ipſi na intellectū hominū excedat ut p̄ grauedine mortalna tis nec libertatē nec ſubiectionē ei in xpo poſſit inueniri. p̄ter quā qd̄ uiget in ipſo. Iſto autē capite qd̄ a ſiniſtris apparet aliq̄ntulū ob ſcuro & muliebri conſuetudine. candido uelamine uelato. quō p̄ fechio hec que ſe fortit conſtrin git ob amorē dī in aduerſitate illa qua ipſa diabolica inſeſtatione & humano ope impugnat. q̄ſi anxie tatē & ſollicitudinē quom̄ ſe diui no auxilio defendat habet. humil lima ſubiectione in albedine & pul fermer

xx. jr.

et̄tudine xpi deſtori ſumo cordiū comēda ex albo ſcribo ē hoc ē qd̄ ope uſſimū ſtud filiū inuēit candidiſſimū ita q̄a p̄mori regenerationis in m̄tib; hominū ei inuēit. Et in crucis habet dor magnus in lū aurora ſub inuēitione n diligentiſſime cordationē p̄ minar. hoc etiā claritatē ſuā in
 naſ. qd̄ ille q̄ o m̄ſa humanit lūant patris in ma ſolis que in macula peccat qd̄ autē in dē diū que p̄ſtor ei multa de uoc i qd̄ bono & ſc̄o nodo ſcriptura dicit in recorda hominū qua & deſtori ſui dicit diligit. Unde et̄ nati capitis ſer mōri facit que indignatione p̄

176 ermudine xpiani certaminis se re dextori summo gemmib; fidelium cordium comidans. Qd uero tunica ex albo serico eade imago induta e: hoc e qd ope lucidissimi & sua uissimi studii in quo pfecta scias filium imnat circumamicta apparet: candidissimis etia calciamtis mu nna qd p morte xpi incandore regenerationis sps & aque fulget in mib; hominum ut & ipsi morte ei imitent. Et in pectore suo signu crucis habet. circa qd etia splen dor magnus in eode pectore ue lut auroa fulgens rutilat. quo in memorie mentium fidelium ipsa diligentissime complectentiu re cordatione passionis xpi ihu ru minat. hoc etia ubiq; sermissima claritate fidei in eide mib; desig nans. qd ille q obediens patri talit in sca humanitate sua passus e uo luntate patris in pulcherrima au roa solis que uirgo maria e sine macula peccati natus aduenerat.
Qd autem in dextera nudu tenet gla dium que pectori suo & eide cruci cu multa deuocione opponit. hoc e qd bono & sco ope ostendit. quo modo scripturas p spm scm denu datas. in recordatione mris elector hominum qua & ipsi passionis re dextoris sui dulcissime recordent diligat. Unde etia uides in fronte mediu capitis scriptu scias. qd in miori facie que e aie absq; ulla indignatione pudoris cu gau dio uite scias cognoscit. & in fron te dextri radice boni. quo ipsa pa lam unicum & fundamentu in salua tione sciat e. & in fronte sinistri n parens sibi. qd sine torpore mol licie & uanitate carnalium uolupta tu abiciens. sep se in districtione constringit. & ornamenta ceterarum uirginitati sibi coniungens. ut possit pfi & p durare contendit. S; & me diu ad alia duo aspiciens. & illa ad ipsu uoluntate sua adinuice conferit. quo ipsa fortit in unani mitate mioris uisionis & dilecti onis consistentia. na ut nullu ex sine in adiutorio alteri durare ualeat. uerba admonitiones suas ad puectum hominum dirigunt ut pdictu e. Qui autem acutis aures mioris intellectus habet. hic in ardente amore speculi mei ad uerba hec anhelat. & ea in consci entia animi sui conscribat.

columba.

abacuc.
Daniel.
Jeremias.
Esauas.
Dauid.
Samuel.
Iosue.
Moyſes.
Abraham.

colina magna muniſ. ualde tribul. pater velleſ. apheſ. muniſ. i. angelus ſ. p. i. angelus ſ. p. i. angelus ſ. p. i.

Queda imago vni eade colina ſtat in ... prim. angul. ...

... inuſione. ... parat. quare factos in throno ſat. quendam.

Sup. pammir. ead. eodem muniſ. vnde. m. imagin. ſtat.

... vnde. m. imagin. ſtat.

huiſ. edificium queda imago ſtat. ſup. pammir.

R. inuſione ſequem.

Monstruosū caput ī muliere ante uita ab unilico deessu apparuit. iuxta super. mome. se leuam. ichu romm. us deor. sum. cabem. iunt. tnt.

Decima Visio.
Tercie partis.
Post hec in summitate.

anguli p̄monstrati edificii ubi p̄ dictę duę partes muri ipsi illa lu-cida & lapidea uidelicet comune te erant uidi q̄si septę gradus can-didissimi lapidis q̄ ad lapidē illū magnū sup̄ quē p̄fatus lucidus sedens in throno apparuit in mo-dū testudinis ad uolūm uidebant̄.
 Et sup̄ eosdē gradus sedes posita erat sup̄ quā iuuenis quidā sedes uirilē & nobilē uultū pallidi tam coloris & capillos sub nigros usq̄ ad scapulas ipsi descendentes habebat. purpurea tunica induit.
 Qui a capite suo usq̄ ad umbilicū mihi apparuit. s. ab umbilico de-orsū obumbratus in aduidentū fuerat. Et ipse respiciens in mundū maxima fortitudine uociferabatur ad hoīes q̄ in eo erant dicens.

Ostūta hoīes q̄ repide & tur-piter marcent in uobis me ipsi nolentes uel oculū unū ap-re aduidentū q̄d in bonitate sp̄e ur̄i sim. s. semp̄ ardens opari malū q̄d habet concupiscentia carnis ur̄e recusantes eē in bona conscientia & in recta speculatio-ne animi ur̄i. q̄si intellectu boni & mali n̄ habeatis. nec gl̄am hanc ut malū sciatis deuitare & bonū facere. audite me filiū hoīs dicentē ad uos. O hoī. respice q̄d es. dū coagulatio inuenire matris tue fuisti. Et nū-tunc in seculis & in potentia in inuificatione eras. S. tē datus ē tibi sp̄s & motio ac sensibilitas ut uiuēs mouearis. & te mouens intelligas fructū utilitatis. Habes enī scientiā boni & mali. atq̄. efficaciam opandi. Unde excusare te n̄ uales. q̄n oīa bona ex his habeas in te. ita ut sumas in inspiratione admonitus d̄m dili-gas in ueritate & iusticia. t. q. resi-stas in concupiscentia & delectatio-ne iniusticie. ita ut te in his crucies.

 & hoc modo martyriū meū colas tibi metaphi in his ardorib; repugnans. crucē meā scilicet in tuo corpore baiolando. idē illiētia desideria fugiendo cū te delectat peccare. Et cur ē tibi tanta potestas. uidelicet ut deuites malū. & facias bonū. De scientia enī boni & mali qua intelligis q̄d homo es. mihi responsurus es. S. bonū contēpnis & malū oparis ardens in carnalib; desideris. q̄a bonū tibi q̄si graue uidet̄ malū autē in te facile exci-tat̄. Et cū hoc ē. n̄ uis te constringere. s. libere peccare. Qd feci q̄ndo in cruce passus sū in infirmitate carnis. cū contremui ac angustiat̄ sū ego filius hoīs. Ob hoc requiro ate aduersū te martyriū qd pateris in uoluptate carnis tue & in reliq̄s tēptatib; ac in illicitis desi-deris que s atq; malis hec subsequi excusare qn le opetis costē legat diuini con triplicatōe ubi hoc inue infallia uolu quib; illud sedm qd est ē scilicet scilicet gatis. Bonū gere debet a

 spū. tēptat Unde que e & que tēptat autē delectat p̄mū inuol cū uis p̄fici do tibi ma sustinui p̄p m̄s desider
 p̄p̄ amore mū intellect etiā consus tū tibi dat rendū ē. S & adiutor tutatib; si sponsū au aduantiā sine scienti qd tibi uol est in te. idē sine p̄spici

deris que s̄ contra uoluntate meā. atq; in alius huiusmodi nequicus que hec subsequunt̄. in quib; te n̄ potes excusare q̄n noueris ubi bene & ma le operis. Sed n̄ abicio copula coste legalis conuictionis. que p diuinū consiliū constituta ē immul tiplicatione per eam om̄is filioꝝ ade ubi hoc in uero desiderio plis & n̄ in falsa uoluptate carnis ab his sit quib; illud sine iniuria licitū ē. Sed scdm qd̄ eis in lege diuina p̄ceptū ē. scilicet sc̄lo deditis & n̄ sp̄u segreg gatis. Bonū ḡ qd̄ habes a me. dili gere debes aduersū te. celestis ē in sp̄u. t̄restis in carne.
Unde que celestia s̄ debes amare.
& que t̄restia s̄ conculcare. Inope autē celestiuū demonstrō t̄ sup̄nū p̄mū. in uoluntate ū carnis tue cū uis p̄ficere qd̄ inuistū ē ibi osten do tibi martiriū meū & penas quas sustinui p̄t̄ te. ita ut tu in contra rius desideris t̄ in te ipsi resistas. p̄t̄ amorē passionis mee. Pluri mū intellectu habes in te plurimū enā census inde in te reḡret̄ a te. Oyl tū tibi datū ē multū enā a te reḡ rendū ē. S; in omnib; his. caput & adiutoriū tuū sū. Nā sup̄no tac tu tactus si inuocaueris me. re sponsū audies a me. Si pulsaueris ad ianuā. tibi ap̄iet̄. In sp̄u acutis sime scientie q̄ transfusus es. omne qd̄ tibi utile ē habes in te. Et q̄m hoc est in te. idcirco & oculi mei acutis sime p̄spicientes considerabunt

178 quid in ueniant in te. Qua p̄t̄ de conscientia tua reḡro uulnera & dolorē cordis tui. in quib; te coer ceas cū senseris te uoluntate tua trahi. Ad peccatū. & cū in meo ex arseris qd̄ totus liquefactus uix suspirare uales.
Et ecce inspicio te. Quid tē facies.
Si tē in hoc labore uulnerato cor de & madentib; oculis & concus so timore iudicii mei inuocaue ris me. & si tē enā in hoc clamore p̄seueraueris. ut t̄ succurrā aduer sus nequicias carnis tue & contra pugnas malignoꝝ sp̄uū. faciā om ne qd̄ tibi fieri desideras. atq; do mū habitationis mee ponā in te.
Nunc ḡ fili mi respice q̄nto la bore & sudore in agro labo retur. ante quā semine p̄fundat̄.
S; p̄ quā semine seminat̄ fuerit. dat fructū suū. Ergo attende & considera hec. Nonne recuso tē dare hoc. ut fructū gignat absq; sudore laboris. S; cū mihi placuerit ipsa fructib; sup̄ habun dant̄ ita replet̄ ut hoīes habun dantissime sufficientiā habeant aliq̄ndo enā sup̄ habundent̄. & cū uoluerō ita eis attenuat̄ ut hoīes aliq̄ndo p̄ fame uix uiuant. aliq̄ndo enā multi ui illi attenua ti moriant̄. Scdm modū hunc hoīes p̄ me positi s̄. Homini illi q̄ bono corde sem̄ uerbi mei uolun tate suscipit. magna dona sp̄e sc̄i ut bono agro sup̄ habundan

.iii.

ut tribuo. Ille autē q̄ aliquādo uerbū meū recipit. aliquādo etiā hoc recipe recusat. ē q̄si ager q̄ hoc tēpore uiret. hoc autē arescit. Hic homo tam omnino n̄. perit. q̄a quā uis parū uiriditatis habet. S. hic poīa mortē q̄ nulla intentione uerba mea recipere exoptat. & q̄ nec ad monitionē sp̄s sc̄i nec doctrina hominū cor suū excitare uult. ad bonū. Hec miraris o ho. & scire uis cur hec ita fiant.

Sed ut nec diuinitatē mortali obtinui uales aspicere. sic nec secretia q̄ mortali sensu poteris cape-re. nisi q̄ntū in p̄missione ipsi tibi possibile ē. Tu autē uacillante animo tuo. huc & illuc uersaris. Unde ue-luti aqua a calore ardentis camini absorbet. sic sp̄s tuus ab inquetitudine stulti animi tui obprimitur. q̄m hec scire cupis que n̄ s̄ scienda carni concepte semine humano in-peccatis. Te uia q̄ dignū tuū. & tan-ge nubes. Qd̄ n̄c. S. hoc fieri n̄ potē.
Sic nec illud. dū hoc scrutaris qd̄ t̄ sciendū n̄ ē. S. ut herbule sensu regiones cōphendere n̄ ualent. q̄a sensu & intellectu carent. nescientes qd̄ sint uel qd̄ operentur fructu suo. q̄m uis circūdent regiones utilitatis usu. & ut culices aut formice seu cetera minora aīalia n̄ desiderant dñari sup̄ reliqua sibi similia. aut scire siue intelligere uirtutē uel significationē leonis. seu aliorū maiorū animalū. sic nec tu cognosce re poteris qd̄ in scientia dī sit. Qd̄ tu fecisti tibi ubi fuisti. q̄ndo celi & t̄ra creata s̄. Qui hec creauit. auxiliū tū n̄ indiguit. Sic nec n̄c. Hic quid scrutaris iudiciū dī. Cū de sup̄ um-bre saluari tactus fueris ostende m̄ quom̄ in agro cordis tui labores.

& quom̄ eū colas. Qd̄ si labor ille m̄ placuerit. fructū optimū tibi do.
Sed m̄ labore tuū. erit & fructus tu-us cū mercede. Nūq̄d do fructū t̄re sine labore. Sic etiā nec t̄ facio o ho absq̄ sudore. quē req̄ro ate. Habes enī p̄ me illa inter. in quib. potes la-borare. Ergo diligēt in la-bore. & erit & fructū inde habebis. Et cū fructū habueris. mercedē exinde consequeris. S. qd̄ n̄c.
O ubi deuoto & puro ac simplici corde querit me & inuenientis retinent me. Multi autē uolunt mecū ioculari & ludere uolentes me adire sine labore animi & cogitationis sue. nolentes p̄meditari qd̄ facere debent me scilicet inuocando & consensū corporis sui inspiciendo. uolentes tantū me app̄- hendere q̄si de gū sōno euigilent repentino motu simulationis & deceptionis arripientes uia sc̄ita-tis. ut in semet ipsis excogitant. alii uidelicet in abiectione seclariū negociorū alii in continentia carna-liū alii in uirginitatis pudore sup̄ humeros suos assumētes iugū meū. existimantes sibi possibile ē om̄e qd̄ uoluerint. nolentes inueniri q̄ sunt. & qd sunt aut qd p̄ficere pos sunt. nec uolentes habere inscemia sua. q̄s eos formauerit aut q̄s ex de sit. uolentes cū tantū habere ut domesticū suū. qui omnē uolun tatē ipsorū p̄ficiat. Sic nolo dare donū meū. nec seminare uacuum agrū in hōie illo qui in huiusmodi uauitate se in coniungere tēptat. quasi me in alienatione ignoran tie nesciat. Unde & p̄s ei sepe in lap sū erit. Cui & dico. O hō. q̄re n̄ inspec isti agrū animi tui ut eradicares inimicū herbas & spinas ac tribulos. me uidelicet inuocando & te ipsū considerando. ante q̄m uelut ebri & insanus a te ipsū ignorans ue nires ad me. quō nullū lucidū op̄ sine adiutorio meo p̄ficere potes.

Nā p̄ hanc p̄cipitationē qua me uelut in sono quesisti. cū in seruicio meo tedio affectus recordatus fue ris sōm illius in quo prius incon suetudinalib. peccatis tuis dormi uisti. ad eadē priora scelera insan & insens. boni atq. adiutorio & consolatione sp̄s paraclēti frauda tus reuerteris. Tu autē quē quesisti ductorē & adiutorē ad hēc. fallacē scilicet & deceptibile animū tuū. qui te stulte in ariditatē ducebat sine me facere posses. Et qd tē ha bes. Certe tē miser & uacuis cades corā me & corā p̄plo. atq. ut inu lis puluis conculcaberis. Nā qd ē tibi possibile contra me. Nichil. Et quid potes mecū. Lucidissima uidelicet opa que s̄ splendidiora solis splendore & dulciora in mōre gustu sup mel & lac. cū desideranti p̄plo manifestant. Nā cū req̄ris me intimo intellectu aīe tue ut in bap tismo p̄fide doctus es. nonne facio totū qd desideras. S. post casū suū multū gēndo & dolendo requirit me. qui priusq̄m caderent me quesisse debuissent. Quib. manū meā porrigo dicēs. Quare n̄ ques istis me. Nūquid cū quereretis me. abieci uos. Et dico. O hō. si iuxta ponte p̄fundissime aque stares & p̄p̄t stultissimā iactantiā & tui ob liuionē. ut me in omib. his causis desperasti. cū possibile ē putabas ēē omē qd uoluisti q̄si n̄ indigeres adiutorii mei supbe in temetipso diceres. ponte hunc uolo deuitare.

& paquā ambulare nū prudent faceres. Qd si hoc p̄supraiose & insi pient faceres. certe in eadē creatura que ē subiecta ad utilitatē tuā crea ta ē. sp̄m tuū exalares. S. nē t̄ hoc comingat p̄caues p̄p̄t p̄sentē & ui sibile timorē aque. te absorbentis inmortē. Aut si maximā arborē abscisā reuere uideres. nē fugeres ne ab ea ledereris. Ihesu conēs aut ursos aut lupos t̄ obuios aspiceres. numq̄d si posses p̄timore quē su stineres intra te absconderes. Et cū corporis lesionē na fugis. q̄re n̄ deitas crudelissimā mortē anime timens creatorē tuū. Nū uidisti aut audisti. ullū in potuisse rebel ante casū.

lare. Nā qui n̄ ē meū dissipabit. & sup̄ quē cecidero confringet. Qd fuisti q̄ndo celū & t̄ra creata s̄. que ita faciunt ut eis constitutū est. Tū ū in consilio dī formati & illuminatione ipsi tacti. p̄cepta ei transgredieris. O magna stulticia. Ferturā que ē subiecta famu-lat̄ dīm tuū contempnis & t̄ra ac celū transilis. que creatore suū timēs ei obediunt & iussione ipsius ad-implent. qd tu n̄ facis cū nec cū incognitione aut inope tuo visscire nec ad eū respicere. ita ut velis ipsū cognoscere. Qua p̄pt̄ si n̄ penitueris infernus iusto iudicio te suscipiet sic & illū q̄ obduratus de celo p̄iectus ē. que tu imitatus es. At tam cū lapsus fueris clamans fidelit̄. quere me. & subleuati sus-cipia te. Tu autē obo multociens vis sūma tangere. q̄ nec infima cō-p̄hendere uales. Unde audi me t̄ dicente. Si p̄ me admonitis in ab-iectione sclarū negotiorū aut in commētia carnaliū iugū meū ferre desideras. ante qm̄ hoc ag-gradieris primū clama & in hoc p̄- seuerā querens me. & uiuabo te.
 Qd si etiā admonitione mea tactus me vis imitari p̄ me respiciens in uirginitatis pudore q̄a ut flos de inexcavato agro nascit̄ sic & ego sine uirili semine natus sū. ostende m̄ agrū animi tui immul-ta humilitate & alloquere me in largitate interiorū lacrimarū tua rū & dic. O d̄s m̄s. ego indignus hon̄ habeo amemetipso hanc causā p̄ficere ut uirginitatē meā possi conseruare. n̄ tu dñe adiuues me. quia totus culpabilis sū in ortu ardentis suci de quo pullulo in multis miserus. frequētē req̄res causā fragilitatis mee. Unde etiā n̄ possū mea uirtute memetipsū expugnare ingustu dulcedinis carnis mee. dū sū arbor concepta & nata in peccatis. Ob hoc tu dñe da m̄ in uirtute tua igneū donū qd in me exstinguat hanc causā et hunc ardorē pueris natus. ita ut cū rectis suspiriis bibā de aq̄ fontis uiui. qui me faciat gau-dere in uita qui sū cinis putre-dinis plus aspiciens in opa tene-brarū qm̄ in opa tenebrarū qm̄ in opa lucis. Et si tē in hac supplicatione studiosus & constans fueris. agrū illū paro m̄ in te quē ysaac filio suo p̄posuit cū dice-bat. ecce odor filii mei sicut odor agri pleni cui benedixit dñs. eun-deq. agrū meū in corde tuo benedica. & ut etiā subsequens aie-bat esto dñs fratrū tuorū & in cur-rentē ante te filii matris tue. atq. eodē modo & tu ante cōmūne populū subleuata generatio eris. Ego autē rosas & lilia ac alia optima uirtutū pignora in agrū illū seminabo & cū inspiratione sp̄s sc̄i assidue rigabo atq. in radicatione uiriditatis abscedā ab illo matu-

vii.

na ut oculos meos circūferens eo in uiriditate & in floriditate hui' in corruptu agri pascā. Istud ē meū & p me & n̄ tuū o hō nec p te.
Nā ego sū flos cāpi qm̄ ut sine arātus campus gignit florē sic ego fili' hōis sine uirili cōmixtio ne gignit sū ex uirgine. idōq; hoc donū ē meū & n̄ tuū. qā tu in peccatis conceptus in peccatis natus es ex corruptione. S; si idē donū a me fidelit̄ peneris. illud a me fiducialit̄ impetrabis. t̄ q; dabo ut corā patre meo confor tū meū habear in uirginitate.
Hoc autē p̄ fragilitate corporis tui n̄ poteris habere sine labore caloris qui int̄ ē. qā humana natura fragilitatis tue multoci ens se ostendit int̄. quā de uita re n̄ uales. quō caro de carne es.
S; in hoc ferre debes crucē meā & imitari martyriū meū te ui delicet constringendo. na ut p me de uincas te quid m̄ semp a mabile ē qā te fragile uasculū scio. t̄ & ego uolo tibi cōmunica re ac cōparū dolorib; tuis. Qd si enā hīs aliqñdo cecideris. surgens cuius penitentia ex corde fac. & suscipiens saluabo te. Quidā viii. autē decepti a diabolo & pdu rantes in malo putant se sc̄ifica tos ēē cū exteriorē hominē in se continent a coniugio abicientes circūcisionē m̄tis ubi supflui s; in inuicis cogitationib; & enā abnegantes circūcisionē sp̄e ubi p ferunt malū in locutionib; & opib; suis nolentes scire qd hoc flagitio sū sit. s; tantū tepide obseruantes ut caro eorū integra sit a cōmixtio ne. renuentes omnino integritatē sp̄e sui. Unde indigni corā me s; p iecti scilicet extra legē tā carnalē quā sp̄ualē. qā nec in carne nec in sp̄u scdm̄ iusticiā dī uixerūt. Nā nec constitutā sibi legē coniungu tenu erūt. nec qd plus ē quā qd in lege p̄ ceptū ē uirginitatis amorē serua uerūt. Quā p̄pt̄ indigni oculis meis s; qm̄ nescio qd sint. Non enī uidi eos in p̄cepto legis ambulare. nec in hac re qd plus facerent quā qd eis p̄ceptū ē. Unde & repulsi a uisio ne mea s;. Ego cōparo eos inuicis t̄re gignenti spinas & tribulos. ac inuic les herbas ad ullos usus. que in abn titudine & colore suo se simulant ro sis & lilis ac alis uerbis. florib; & herbis in se suauē & dulcē fructū atq; bonū odorē ad medicinā ha bentib; & cōparo eos cupro qd se assimilat auro inuis deceptiōne & ypocrisis auri habentib; qm̄ scdm̄ hunc modū hī hōies ostendunt se habere similitudinē prudentiū uirginū. inuicis fallacia & indigna tione pleni existentes. Unde & co rā me s; ut tepidus uentus cui' nec calor nec frigus ullū uigorē ha bet. qā nec utiles s; in calore animi sui ut p̄seuerent in uirginitatis continētia ut ceperūt. nec ualent in frigore mundane cause ut cant in secularib; reb; ut sibi pponunt. Nā nec extra legē peccāt ut publicani. nec infra legē ut iniusti. s; in semet ipsis repentes nec pfecte iusti nec in iusti s; s; ut catulus in mundo apmalū abiecit anteqm ^{se ientat uenire. ut aliq} confortet in fortitudine ciuitatis sue. sic iste ppls picit in morte qm nec se scit uiuere ad uitā. nec in se intelligit fortitudinē uirtutū que s; in domo sapientie.

Vnde & ab ore meo exsufflo eos. qā indigni s; aspectu meo si sic inpen-tentes pserauerint. Nunc autē ohorespice me. Sicut quispiā hominū tibi thesaurū daret qm te plurimū diligeret tibi q; diceret lucrare in hoc & esto diues. ita ut & sciat q; ille sit q; t; thesaurū hunc dedit. tē te oportet acutissime excogitare quom̄ illū uultū lucrifaceres dicēs in me capso. Thesaurus dñi mei in optimo lucro apparere debet in me. ita ut & ipse laudet ex hoc. ~~Et cū illū~~ ~~uultū lucrifaceres dicēs in me capso.~~ Thesaurus dñi mei in optimo lucro apparere debet in me. ita ut & ipse laudet ex hoc. Et cū illū uultū hoc modo augmentū multiplicares. bonus rumor exinde ad aures illi qui tibi ipsū dederat pueniret. In-de & ipse ex hoc recordatus tui ma-gis te diligeret. ac maiora dona tē conferret. Sic & creator tuus facit. ipse dedit tē thesaurū optimū uiuentē scilicet intellectū ualde diligens te qm creatura ipsius es. p ceptūq; tē puerba ab eo constituit legis. ut eundē intellectū lucrifacias in bonis opib; diuesq; sis in uirtutib; ita ut ipse bonus dator p hoc diligentius cognoscat. Qua ppter omī hora te oportet meditari. quom̄ hoc tā grande donū qd pcepisti uultū tā cētū qm tē in capsi factum in opib; iusticie splendore scētans reddat exte. qm uis hoīes bono exemplo tuo puocari dō honorē laudis inde exhibeant. Qd cū uultū in omī iusticia multiplicaueris. laus & grātū a dō ad cognitionē dī q; in spū scō tē uirtutes has inspirant pungit. unde & ipse in diā grē sue ad te conuertens p dulcedinē dilectionis sue ad te conuertens p dulcedinē dilectionis sue ad te conuertens p dulcedinē dilectionis sue sup habundantē magis te faciet ardere in amore ipsius. ita ut consola-tione spē scī repletus sapientē omē qd bonū ē discernas & maiora opa bona facias ardentissimo amore glificans patrē tuū q; tibi benigne dedit hec. Verba autē ista oues mee audiant & quicūq; aures intioris spē habent ea concipiant. qā m̄ placet ut sic opent hoīes q; me cog-noseunt & diligunt ut & ipsi in se metipsis intelligant qd eis in dō nis spē scī faciendū sit. S; in eadē orientali plaga uidi sup paupm̄ p̄fati edificii corā eodē iuene tres imagines iuxta se stantes. & illū deuotissime inspicientes. Contra aquilon nū q; de throno cū conf einta appare

p̄ficien edifici alia im
appare
cū mag
Et his im erat. Ut
ra. s; in om̄ quo tib; suis que ad stans mu los habe rū palli candē m pallio uestiba
appare & pter carund di color tis albi media pedū m colore do fut que m bi astan crunt cū de im noret aquilone autē int̄ circulu illū mag nū q̄ de p̄dicto lucido sedente in throno p̄tendebat̄ & int̄ idē edifi ciū conspexi^{quali} totā in aere pendente.

& in ea imaginē hōis usq; ad pectus apparentē & in mundū acutissime p̄spiciēte. Ante angulū ū eīdē edificiū ad austrū uergentē imago alia im̄a ipsū edificiu sup̄ pauim̄ apparet̄. que sc̄ ad p̄dictū iuuenē cū magna hilaritate conuerterat.
Et his imaginib; talis similitudo erat. Ut ecce uirtutes q̄s prius uide rā. sericis om̄s uestiebant̄ indumtis. om̄s quoq; albis uel am̄ib; incapi tib; suis obrecte erant. excepta illa que a dextris medie p̄dictarū triū stans nudo capite candidos capil los habere uidebat̄. Nulla autē ea rū pallio circūamicta fuerat. p̄ter eandē mediā ipsarū triū que albo pallio induebat̄. S; tunicis albis om̄s uestiebant̄ excepta illa que in rota apparentis tunicā subnigrā habebat.
& p̄ter hanc que a sinistris medie earundē triū assistens tunica palli di coloris utebat̄. Om̄s etiā calciam̄ tis albis indute fuerant. excepta media ipsarū triū cui indumta pedū nigra uidebant̄. & diuerso colore depicta. S; hec dissimilitu do fuit in eis. In pectore imaginis que media fuit triū p̄dictarū si bi āstantiū due fenestelle apparu erunt. & sup̄ ipsas ceruus ad dextrā eīdē imaginis uersus. ita ut ante riores pedes suos sup̄ fenestrā dextrā trā eīdē imaginis. uersus. ita ut an teriores pedes suos sup̄ fenestrā dextrā & posteriores sup̄ sinistrā posu isset. & se q̄si ad eundē coaptas set. Et eadē imago dicebat.

Ego sū fortissima colūna & n̄ mobilis leuitate instabilitatis. ita ut a labro uenti possi cōmoue ri ut foliū arboris qd̄ ab eo cōmo uet̄. & hac illac p̄icit̄. S; p̄durare debeo in uero lapide qui ē uerus filius dī. Et q̄s p̄ualet me cōmoue re. Quis potest me ledere. Hoc n̄ poterit fortis aut debilis princeps aut nobilis diues aut paup̄. q̄n p̄se uerē in uero dō q̄ n̄ cōmouebit̄ in cōnū. Nec ego mouebor. q̄a supra fortissimū fundamentū fundata sū. Nolo enī cē cū adulantib; qui auento tēptationis in os uias spar gunt. nūquā in requie stabilitatis p̄sistentes. S; sēp ad inferiora & de teriora cadentes. Sic autē n̄ ego. q̄m supra firmā petra posita sū. S; ima go que a dextris ei erat. p̄dictū ceruū inspiciens ait. Ueniam dū desiderat ceruus ad fontes aq̄ rū. ita desiderat aīa mea ad te d̄s.
Unde uolo transilire montes & col les ac in becullitatē dulcedinis tran sitorie uite respiciens tantū simpli ci corde ad fontē aque uiue. q̄a ipse innumerabili gl̄a plenus ē. cui suauitate nemo faciri potē tedio saturatus. Imago autē que a sinistris ei stabat. ad p̄fatas fe nestellas uidens dixit. Semp

x.

xi.

xii.

aspicio semp teneo lumē uerū & cōmū. nec cogitando aut suspirando uel intuendo satiari poterō ppetua dulcedine quē ē in supno dō. Sed imago quē contra aq̄lonē in rota apparuit. in dextra manu uirentē ramusculū habuit. Ipsa ū rota assi due circū uoluebat. eadē imagine mea immobili pmanente. In circui tu autē eīdē rote scriptū erat si q̄s m̄ ministrat me sequitur. & ubi sū ego il luc & minister m̄s erit. & in pectore ipsius imaginis sculptū ego sū ho stia laudis impuincis. Et ipsa imago dicebat. Hincem dabo ede redeligno uite qd ē in paradysō dī mei. q̄a fons salus mortē sub mergens riuulos suos in me trans fudit. & me uirentē in redemptione fecit. Imago ū quē ante angulū ad austrū respicientē apparebat tan ti splendoris in facie erat. ut eā p fecte intueri n̄ possē. S; ab utroq; latere suo alā albi coloris habebat. quarū latitudo longitudinē eīdē imaginis supabat. Et ait. Quis tamē fortitudinis ē. ut tēp̄t dō repugnare. Et q̄s hui' audacie ē. q̄ audeat me denudare & cor rūpe in turpitudine odii & inui die. Ds iustus ē. & un' insincera po testate & glā. Cū semp amplecti uo lo puro corde & leta facie. semp q; gaudere in omib; iusticiis ei'. Nolo autē eē mutabilis. s; semp in uno aīo durare. & assidue dīm laudare. Hinc nec diabolus nec malivolus homo me poterit emollire aut ad hanc rabiē dolositas decere. q̄s semp unitrix pacis in recta unanimitate p̄seuerē.

 Transcurre autē mundo. clari' in cele sti uisione apparebo. Post hec uidi. & ecce omē pauimū p̄dicti edificii totū ut albū uirū apparuit. ex se reddens splendore serenissimū. S; & splendor lucidi illi' sedentis in trono q̄ omia hec mihi demonstrabat. p̄dē pauimū usq; in abyssū resplenduit. In circui tū autē illū de sedente in trono p̄tensū & ut hoc edificii. trā tamū apparu it. & q̄si aliquātilū deorsū uergens ita ut idē edificii exinde uideret sup mon tē positi uideret. Et lucidus q̄ sede bat in trono. iterū m̄ dicebat. filius di uinitatis natus ex uirgine ipse lapis angularis existens. quē hi repbauē qui in lege dī ob salutē suā edificare debuerūt. qd tam facere recusauerūt magis diligentes tenebras quā lucē & mortē quā uitā. poterūt in his reg nat q̄ tactu sp̄s. toto annisu inplem tudine uirtutū & bonorū opū se rapi entēs. Ideirco etiā in summate orien talis anguli p̄monstrati edificii ubi p̄dictē due partes muri ipsius illa lucida & lapidea uidelicet conuinc te s; q̄si septē gradus candidissimi lapides uides. quō in altitudine iu sticie auero oriente q̄ lapis angula ris in diuino ope ē emanante. ubi due conuersiones necessarie mu nitionis scilicet speculatiua scientia & humanū opus in unanimitate q̄c tis sibi coherent. adē septenarius scī ardentes salubrit' semetipsos ceteri' conculeant. ad interiora sp̄s ascensus candidissime fortitudinis. plenus rectissima actione existens. quā dē opat̄ & pficit in homine. ut in sex dieb; opatus in septimo regerit.

Qui ad lapidē illū magnū sup quē pfatus lucidus sedens in throno apparet in modū testudinis decem aduoluti uident. q̄a om̄s actio quē fide & ope infide & ope in fidelib; hominib; pficit. timori dñi cui ipse fortissima om̄ipotentia p̄si det q̄ cuncta regit auctoritate pui dentie ipsius dignissimo cōposito nis effectu coadunat. Unde & sup eodē gradus sedes posita est. idē sup opa quē dē opat̄ in hominib; firmissimū p̄tentionis firmitatē re gentis & adiuuantis eos. q̄a quicūq; uult cū eo p̄seuerare n̄ decideret in er rore. quō ipse fortissimū substantia tū existit sup qd̄ om̄s iusticia con stituta ē. Et sup sedē iuuenis quidā sedens ē constantissimo regimine fi lius hoīs. filius uidelicet dī in om̄i iu sticia cū patre & spū scō regnans dē unus. uirile & nobile uultū habens. quia ipse fortissimus leo destruxit mortē nobili facie sine peccato scilicet uisibilis ueniens natus ex uirgine. pallidi tam coloris exi stens. qm̄ cū t̄renis t̄renū honorē n̄ quesuit s; humillim⁹ modicus & paup̄ in scā humilitate apparuit.

Unde etiā capillos sub nigros usq; ad scapulas ipsius descendentes habet. q̄a iudaicus ppl̄s clarnat fidi quē in incarnatione eidē filii mei demonstrata ē n̄ querens obum bratus in umbra exterioris intellectus legis p̄tinacit̄ & infidelit̄ tabuit. or tui tam incapite iusticie & usq; ad humerū fortitudinis ubi p̄fectum opus in humanitate ipsius filii ma floruit pueniens in incredulitate sua finē accepit. Et purpura tuni ca indutus ē. qm̄ in carnate sangui nē suū fundens hominē q̄ p̄terat redemit.

Quod autē a capite suo usq; ad umbilicū t̄ apparet. hoc ē qd̄ ab incarnatione ipsius usq; ad p̄sens tēpus. opa quē ges sit in ecclā fidelib; manifesta s̄. s; ab umbilico deorsū obumbratus tibi adiudicandū ē. q̄a illa quē atē pore hoc usq; ad cōpletionē sc̄i hui⁹ in eadē ecclā futura s̄ nec ui deri nec sciri poterit. n̄ qm̄ reue latione diuina & fide catholica p̄cipiunt. qm̄ maxime chorus can onis uirtutū quē ante nouissimū diē in hominib; manifestande s̄. adhuc hominib; incognite latent.

Et ipse respiciens in mundū. q̄a idē fili⁹ dī aspectū iudicē sue dirigens ad hoīes. p̄t̄ p̄ternas & futuras causas dicit fidelissima uer ba sue admonitionis ad eos. qm̄ ipsi in sc̄is & celestē miliciā imiten tur effugientes picula peccatorū.
 & ut fortissime p̄liando sup̄nā fe licitatē adipiscant. in factis suis contra dicentes penus impiorū.

Sed qd̄ in eadē orientali plaga uidet sup̄ paup̄m tū p̄fati edī fien corā eodē iuene. tres imagines iuxta se stantes & illū deuotissime inspicientes. hoc ē qđ in ortu iusticie carnalia desideria deprimitur. indispositione om̃p̃is patris ap-parente filio dī in carne. he tres uirtutes in deuotione unanimes puritate trinitatis constantissime manifestate s̃. ad ipsū dirigentes aspectū suū. qđ illū infidelib; hoīb; desiderant & querūt. Unde etiā contra aquilonē inter circuitū illū magnū qđ de p̃dicto lucido se-dentē in throno p̃tendit & inter idē edificium cōspiciat qđi rotā in aere pendente & in ea imaginē hoīs usq; ad pectus apparentē & in mundū acutissime p̃spiciēte. quia aduersus diabolicas artes int̃ secretā potestātē & spūale edi-ficationē ipsius circumuo nudic ei inuitib; hominū qđi in aere pendens & nē potenciā iusticie dī tangens nē opus ipsius incis firmit̃ cōfirmans uoluit. in qua p̃fectio xp̃iana incorrupti mundi usq; ad pectus fortitudinis sue apparet qđ uirtus hec in robore for-tissimi certaminis confidens in dīm hoīes in mundo sc̃lariter conuersantes acutissimo intuitu ad-monitionis sue cōmonet. ut in ab-iectione t̃renorū imitent̃ p̃cedentis filii dī exemplū. constantissi-ma intentione fortit̃ suspirantes ad ipsū. Idcirco etiā ante angulū eiđē edificii ad austrū uergente imago alia intra ipsū edificium sup-pauitū apparens. se ad p̃dictū iuene cū magna hilaritate conuer-tit. qm̃ ut casus hoīs p̃bonitate sup-ni patris in ardore fructuositatis restauraret ad uitā. hec uirtus in plenitudine diuini op̃is sc̃laria conculeat & in dulcedine sui affectus se apte manifestans. ad filiū dī in consorcio angelici ordinis cū gaudio fidelū hominū tendit. qđ in incarnatione eiđē saluatoris p̃supnā uirtutē flo-ruit. s; his imaginib; una similitu-do ē. qđ pari deuotione dīm mani-festant in hoīb; qui ipsū in op̃ib; suis concordit̃ magnificant.

Unde etiā ut ceterē uirtutes qđ prius uidisti sericis om̃s uestiunt̃ induit̃. qm̃ in uirtib; suis reliq̃s uirtutib; que tibi sup̃ius ueracissime demonstratē s̃ dissimiles n̄ ex-istunt. s; in leui negotio suauissimi op̃is fidelū hominū semp ad dīm parit̃ sursum tendentes s̃. qđ autē os albis uelaminib; in caput; suis obrecte s̃. hoc ē qđ simul. in candida p̃positione legalis institutionis cū magna colligatione ante dīm capd̃ omniū occupatē s̃. ut mulier ante uirū suū uelari solet. excepta illa que ad ext̃is medie p̃dictarū triū stans nudo capite candidos capil-los habere uidet̃ qđ eadē in p̃sp̃itate roboris p̃supnā trinitatē apparentis nulla sollicitudine hui' sc̃li grauata in candore tamū celestis desiderii querit̃ dissolui & cū xp̃o.

Propter qđ
 cū amēta uirtutis dī libertatē aspiciat impedit res nisi q p̃ter cano albo palli tatione d crea op̃is quo cadit regit ut
 s; qđ tūm ē qđ in ca dūne p̃ia qui inno infidelit̃ illa que submaga lūne dīm cū data carni dī a finit̃ sistens tū ipsa in a me mane circū dā more & culan de om̃s quō in mā paci quatinū ta medu ta p̃fū colore d

Propter quod etiam nulla earum pallio circumamicta est. quoniam ab omni officio ser-uitutis denudata sunt. per quod ab officio libertatis sue semper uidelicet in celum aspicere et ad deum anhelare possent impediri. nichil aliud desideran-tes. nisi quod autem rebus separatim est. per eandem mediam ipsarum trium que albo pallio induunt. per quod in sustentatione diuina pulchritudo discreti operis beate legis insinuat. cum quo eadem uirtus ita circumamicta ob-tegit ut homo pallio suo circumdat. scilicet quod tunicis albis omnes uestiunt. hoc est quod in candore bonorum absque ingredine prauorum morum conuersantur qui in nequiciis et uiciis obsecant infidelitatis obtenebrant. excepta illa que in rota apparent tunica sub nigra habet. quia hec inuolubilitate diuine clementie his actibus circumdata est que in distractione sua carni difficiles sunt. et propter hanc que a sinistris medie earundem trium assistens tunica pallidi coloris uirtutem ipsa in aduersitate per munimentum suum me maiestatis ad defensionem sui circumdata et uallata lacrimabili merore gentis operis. in quo flens et exulans ad deum semper suspirat. Unde de omnes calciamus albis uidetur scilicet quoniam in morte filii mei lucentes uiam pacis in mentibus hominum parant quatinus celestia desiderant. excepta media ipsarum trium cui induimur ta pedum nigra uidetur. et diuerso colore depicta. quoniam hec sub prelio ne dei manens. scilicet magna scismata infidelium in irrisione nigredinis a uia ueritatis deuotum tolerans. et tam recto minere fidei decorata in mortificatione filii mei non diffi-dens. per multas infestationes diabolicarum armum et per diuersas tribulationes diabolicarum armum et per di-uersas tribulationes morum hominum in sua fortitudine et pulchritudine perseuerans. tendit ad superna. scilicet tam dissimilitudo est in eis. quia quoniam uis unanimes et sibi inuicem in operatione sunt adherentes. tamen suas uires unaqueque in subiectis sibi hominibus singulariter demonstrat in feruore supernae claritatis. xx.iiij.

Vnde imago que media est trium predictarum sibi astantium declarat constantiam. que columna et munumen est earum que sibi adherent uirtutum in medio huius numeri trinitatem sanctam significans se-manifestans et hominibus ut in bo-nis operibus constantes sint ostendens. quia etiam christus deus et homo opera sua que in mundo operatus est bono fine consummauit. sic et uirtus hec firmitatem uirtutum in hominibus existens. cum magna discipli-na homines perducit ad deum. Ergo et in pectore ipsius due fenestelle apparent. quod est in cordibus hominum manifestatio celestium in duobus speculis fidei demonstrata. quoniam diuinas et humanas in filio dei credenda est. per que uirtus eadem in hominib; pfecta a fortitudine rec titudinis sue n̄ mouebit. S; sup ipsas fenestras ceruus addextrā eiusdē imaginis uersus apparet. q̄a sup fide hanc q̄d filiū dī d̄s & homo credit ipse p credulitatē fi delis ppli firmissime ponit. cū pcur sū uolocitatis sue celeste desiderū designans addextrā constantie uertit. q̄m uita cōa in psecramia boni opis repperit. ita ut antio res pedes suos sup fenestrā dextrā & posteriores sup sinistrā ponat. quia q̄d ipse uerus d̄s sit nec in m̄n quillitate fidi contēpnendū. aut q̄d uerus homo sit nec in eīdē fidi in pugnatione ab ullo dīm uera cū diligēte diffidendū ē. h̄nd & se q̄si ad currendū coaptat. q̄m saluatio animarū in cursu ei rep ta ē. cū ipse in magnis dolorib; p perans ad passionē crucis uitā in uernatē psecramib; conuulit. ut & uirtus hec in uerbis sue confessi onis supra designat. Sed scda imago que adextris ei ē celeste desiderū pfigurat. in celsū semp aspiciens & ad saluationē tendens. p q̄d constantia pspicit eaducō n̄ appetens. magis felicitatē cōa desiderat. Qua p̄t & p̄dictū cer uū inspicit. q̄a filiū dī in lucidissi mo ope suo assidue attendens in dulcissimis amplexib; illius satia ri n̄ poterit. quēadmodū & sup in locutione desiderii sui affir mat. Tercia autē imago asini stris ei stans ostendit cōpunctionē cor dis atq; recordationē m̄tis assidua contritione exiliū suū gementē & plo rantē. cui beata effusione constantia contrarietate sinistre partis que p̄di cio anime ē declinans. ad uitā de mor te festinat. h̄ndē etiā ad p̄fatas fene stellas uidet. q̄m in cordib; fidelū omne intentionē suā ad filiū dī tam in humanitatē q̄m in diuinitatē reg nantē intendens ei dulcedine conti nua uisione p̄frui delectat. sicut etiā uerbis suis ut p̄dictū ē apta manife statione demonstrat. Sed imago que contra aq̄lonē in rota apparet pfectionē xpi & contēptū mundi p̄tendit. q̄a plenitudo uirtutū in abiectione sclarū p̄filiū dī ap̄ssi me declarata ē. q̄ inter hoīes conuer satus t̄rens n̄ inhians. imitatores su os forū ad celestia toto ardore cō mouit anhelare. Que in dextra ma nu uertit ramusculū habet. q̄m in felicitatē saluationis aīe opus uiri dissimū & pulcherrimū germinis bea tarū uirtutū q̄d exspiratione sp̄s scī p̄fusi ē continet. Qua p̄t & ipsa rota assidue circū uoluit eadē ima gine in ea immobili p̄manente. q̄a mīdia dī pia cōpassione se ad hoīes flectens. & miseris eorū cōpatiē. se querentib; semp flexibilis ē. p̄fectio ne xpi in contēptū mundi nullā mo bilitatē in stabilitatis habente. s; semp ad ea tendente que s̄ sine ulla in tabilitatis offensione. Qd autē in cir cuitu eīdē rote scriptū ē si q̄s mihi ministrat me sequat. & ubi sū ego. illic & minister mī erit. hoc ē qđ ubiq. flexibilis mīdia dī hoc continet in se qđ quicūq; filio dī obsequiū exhibi buerit exemplū ei imitando. in cele sti beatitudine gaudebit. cū ipso consoreiū sine fine adeptus anglo.

 Unde etiā in pectore ipsius imaginis sculptū apparet. ego sū hostia lau dis impuensis. qđ xpc sapientē con tēptū docens sclarū psecretū consi liū sui cordib; electoꝝ suoz insinuat qđ ipsū omīs fidelis aīa hostiā patris oblatū in ligno crucis intima deu tione uenerat & adorat. cū etiā in toto trarū orbe glām & laudē eius uox & lingua omniū fidelū ppter remunerationē uite n̄ cessat resona re. ut etiā ipsa insup̄dicta locutio ne sua apte p̄palat. I mago uero que ante angulū ad austrū respici entē apparet. significat concordia rabiē malignoꝝ spiritūū fugientē. s; consoreiū beatoꝝ angloꝝ amplex tentē. cū ipsa ob amorē dī scissuras infidelū deuorat & aduersionē ppe tue pacis anhelat. Unde & tam splen doris in facie ē. ut eā pfecte inuēri n̄ possis. qm̄ mortifero odio & inui dia carens. maiore claritatē mani bus; hominū parat qm̄ mortalīs mens cape ualeat fragili corpore grauata. S; qđ ab utroq; latere suo alā albi coloris habet quarū latitudo longitudinē ei dē ima ginis supat. hoc ē qđ & in p̄spis & madūsis ad sudorē iusti laboris se coniungentib; eadē uirtus p̄ce tionē suē candidissime bonitatis extendens. plus quippe in latitu dine expansionis suē quā possi det in caritate supnoꝝ tenet. quā in longitudine nascentis humani generis habeat. qđ finito mundo ipsa sup̄ celos celoꝝ uolans. magis tunc quā n̄ in claritate sua ap parebit. ubi nichil tēnū nichilq; caducū querit. s; qđ celeste & et nū ē dulcissima amplexione ama tur & ubi omīa clara atq; leta p durabunt absterfa omī nebula iniquitatis. quē admodū & in uerbis p̄fessionis ipsius uirtutis fideliter denunciat. xxviii.

Quod uidēs pauimentū p̄dic ti edificii totū ut albū ui trū apparet. & ex se reddens splendore serenissimū. hoc ē qđ fortitudo uere fidei por tans et explanans opus & ciuita tē dī. tota in candore & inspecu lo simplicitatis purissima & pla nissima ē. eadē fide cū omīb; opib; ad se p̄uenit. in ipsa ciuitate dī uigilante & edificante quan tus d̄s in initio bonoꝝ opū ho minū p̄ splendore serenissime intentionis tangat & in fine ex p̄saluationē anime acutissime cognoscat. qđ pacta opatione fi des ipsa ostendit. qua deuotione queq; aīa dī quesiunt. xxviii.
Unde & splendor lucidi illi sedentis in throno qđ omīa hēc

4 tibi demonstrat. p̄de paup̄m usq̄ 4 in abyssū resplendet. qm̄ gr̄a om̄ xxx impotens dī cuncta regens & om̄a que in hac uisione cognoscis tibi manifestamus. p̄fortitudine fidi diabolu in p̄dicatione mortis ad nichilū redegit. Quom̄. Ds ser pentē antiquū & mortē cū p̄di cionis p̄purissimā fide que ē in re generatione sp̄s & aque deiecit in p̄fundū p̄petue confusionis for titer p̄transiens tenebras infideli tatis. cū filius dī fideles suos ad monuit. ut uerba doctrine sue ab ipso accepta in mundū emittē rent. Sed qd̄ inter circuli illū descendente in throno p̄tensū. & int̄ hoc edificū q̄a tantū apparet.
 & quasi aliquantū deorsū uer gens. ita ut idē edificū exinde uelut sup̄ montē posm̄ uideat. hoc ē qd̄ inter fortitudinē pote statis om̄ip̄s dī & inter electū op̄ bonitatis ipsius plurimi hoīes s̄. qui uerā fide abnegantes magis tēporalia quā ēt̄na sectant̄. ut s̄ pagani iudei ac falsi xp̄iani sēp̄ de malo in malū descendentes. nec in caducis reb; speculū catho lice fidei sursum aspicientes. s; ma gis in uoluptatib; suis prauū op̄ in p̄fundū peccatorū p̄trahere la borantes. ita ut maximū & pul cherrimū opus dī inter tenebras huius infelicitatis. om̄i hominū il lud queram in altitudine sume bonitatis pat̄a appareat. ut ioh̄s dilectus euangelista in reuelatione diui na testat̄ dicens. Et sustulit me in spū in montē magnū et altū. Et ostendit m̄ ciuitatē scām ierlm̄ des cendentē de celo. habentē claritatē dī. Hoc tale ē. Sp̄s eluat sp̄m. Quom̄.

 In uirtute sua sp̄s sc̄s trahit hominis mentē de pondere carnis. ut possit uolare in uisione oculorū sp̄s illius qui m̄iora uidet n̄ obscuratus ce citate carnaliū uoluptatū. Quid ē hoc. Scilicet sp̄s sc̄s sursum eluat sp̄m hoīs ad montē celestiū deside riorū. ut p̄spicue considerare ualeat opa opandi que in spū pagenda s̄. qd̄ ē magnitudo opū dī cui mille artes diaboli op̄is substrat̄ s̄. ita qd̄ eis dñat̄ sic mons planicie t̄re p̄fert̄. & qd̄ immobile fundamētū est sicut mons q̄ de loco suo n̄ tran sit. tantē etiā altitudinis existens qd̄ mortalis homo cā in sensu suo enarrare n̄ possit q̄a om̄nē huma nā prudentiā sup̄ excellit que de t̄renis m̄tib; t̄renarū q̄litarū ascen dit. Et sic fidei & sc̄e aīe opa sp̄s ostendunt̄. sic etiā celestis ierlm̄ si ne ope manuū carnis popus aspū scō datū sp̄italit̄ edificanda ē. ita magnitudine & altitudine scō opū in spū apparente. ut eadē ci uitas in opib; bonis que tactu sp̄s sc̄i sunt in hoīb; adornabit̄. qm̄ ipsa sic supra montē posita et in innumeris edificationib; edifica ta in se nobilissimos lapides q̄ sc̄e aīe in uisione pacis s̄ colligit̄. ab om̄i p̄uirtu

 unde etiā
 ut aurū fu sapien stat. S; & fidei pac fidei ierlm̄ orta uenit ne celi. qm̄ dit & t̄am bona opa dum & in qd̄ fidei generans adipsū s̄ sp̄s sc̄i de boni clarit nant̄. Qu boni opib;
 ita qd̄ ipse cognoscit uis cadē fidei decorat di bona opa bilib; mirab reuelatio p̄ ta. ut in spū in hoīb; pa parent. I d̄s opat̄ ab & ab occide lū suū in ante consti nam fuerit qui nouiss hoc opus su p̄dictis in 185 omni puritudine peccati purgatos.

Unde etiam cum ipsis preciosis lapidibus ut aurum fulget. quia in bonis hominibus sapientia opus sue claritatis demon-strat. Sic etiam opera in rectitudine iusticie pacta cum quibus etiam ipsa cele-stis ierusalem adornata perficitur. unde ex orta uenerunt. videlicet de altitudi-ne celi. quoniam ut ros de nubibus descendit et uiam humore suo perfundit sic bona opera a deo in homines descendunt et infusione spiritus sancti rigantur. ita quod fidelis homo bonum et suauem fructum generans consorcium superne ciuitatis adipiscitur. Sic ergo ecclesia opera per donum spiritus sancti de celo in homines uenientia ha-bent claritatem impreso a quo etiam emanauerunt. Quomodo. Quia claritas dei in bonis operibus iustorum hominum fulget ita quod ipse tanto ardentius intra cognoscitur adoratur et colitur. per quod uir-tutes eadem sancta ciuitas in ornamentis suis decoratur. quia homo adiutorio dei bona opera faciens cum innumerabilibus mirabilibus suis ueneratur. Et sic est reuelatio poculos spiritus uisus et cogni-ta. ut in inspiratione spiritus sancti recta opera in hominibus pacta coram deo in supernis apparent. Itaque ut premonstratum est xxx.ij. deus operatur ab oriente et septentrione et ab occidente ad meridiem. ubi per fi-lium suum in dilectione ecclesie omne quod ante constitutionem mundi predesti-natum fuerat ad effectum illud perducit qui nouissimus dies est. sicut etiam hoc opus suum per se educens illud cum predictis in mystica designatione uiribus et uirtutibus confirmatum et ornatum atque in summa perfectione completum reducit ad semetipsum. Quomodo. Iusticia sustentationis post casum ad designata innocenti ad nouissimum diem tendit multis miraculis circumuallata que deus in electis suis per diuersa tempora demonstrare non cessauit. ut exaratione innocenti et in ostensione in abraham et in moyse et in operatione in filio suo.

Quomodo. Ante tempora in corde celestis patris erat quod filium suum in fine teporum per uera salutem et redemptionem per deum hominibus mittere uoluit in mundum. qui natus ex uirgine omnia que antiqui sancti spiritu sancto repleti predixerant perfecto opere completum. uelut brachium hominis se primum flectit ad opus et ut deinde manus operatur.
Quid est hoc. Iusticia uidelicet iusto iudicio dei. cum ad adam de terra floriditans preclusus est cepit primum innocenti moueri ut in prima uinctura humerum ita tendens ad fortiora in abraham et in moyse quasi ad flexibiliorem secundam uincturam brachii. sic tandem perueniens ad perfectum opus in filio dei per quem omnia signa et precepta uetus legis apto opere completa sunt. et per quem omnes uirtutes cum quibus celestis ierusalem in filiis suis adornabit certissima declaratione in regeneratione spiritus et aque manifestate sunt. ut manus indignis suis opus quod operatur ad perfectam ostensionem perducit. Hoc in opus meum ad gloriam meam et actum confusio ne pficio o diabolet. t pfortitudine brachii mei oppositus in aquilone in septentrione & in occidente. nec n ena sedm solis cursu tibi resistis aboriente & a meridie in te sub uertens in occidente quam in omni parte confusus sis. q̄a in eccl̄a mea que mons ē fortitudinis ad montem tuum oturpissime falsator facio op̄ iusticie & sc̄ntis. ita ut tu de uictis omnino int̄ eas q̄ uo lebas ut plebs mea int̄ iret. Qui aut̄ acutis aures minoris intellectus habet. hic in ardente amore specu li mei ad uerba hec anhelet. & ea in conscientia animi sui c̄scribat.

ii. visio terre partis.

*En uidi
ad aquilonē.*

& ecce ibi q̄nq. bestie stabant. qua rū una erat ut canis igneus s; n̄ ar dens. una ut leo fului coloris alia ut equus pallidus alia ut niger porcus. alia ut lupus griseus. se ad occidentē uertentes. Et ibi in occi dente corā eīdē bestis. uelut q̄dā collis q̄nq. apices habens apparu it. ita ut ab ore cuiq; bestie fu nis unus adqueq; apicē eīdē col lis extensus ē. om̄s sub nigri co loris. p̄ter funē illū q̄ ab ore lupi tendebat. q̄ ex parte niger & ex parte alb; uidebat. Et ecce in ori ente iuuenē illū quē prius sup an gulū conuentionis p̄dicti lucidi & lapidei muri p̄facti edificii pur purea tunica indutū uiderā sup eundē angulū iterū uidi s; n̄ ab umbilico suo deorsū in apparentē.

ita uidelicet ut ab umbilico usq; ad locū illū ubi uir discernit q̄ si aurora fulgeret ibidē uelut lisa cū cordis suis intransuersū iacente.
& ab ipso loco usq; ad m̄surā duorū digitū transpositū sup̄ tangen tē talū suū umbrosus ē. ac ut ab eadē m̄sura sup̄ tangente talū. protos pedes suos lacte candidior appareret. S; & illa muliebris ima go quā ante altare q̄d ē ante oeu los dī prius conspexerā. n̄ enā in ibidē iterū ostensa ē. ita tam qd̄ eā modo enā ab umbilico uentris sui deorsū uiderē. Nā ab umbili co suo usq; ad locū illū ubi mu lier cognoscit. uarias & squamo sas maculas habebat. In eodē aut̄ loco muliebris cognitionis mon struosū & nigerimū caput appa ruit igneos oculos & aures ut au res asini. & nares & os ut nares & ut os leonis habens ac magno hia tu frendens. & uelut ferreos ac horribiles dentes horribilē acu tens. S; ab eodē capite usq; ad ge nua sua eadē imago alba & ru bea & uelut multa conuentione tinsa erat. ab ipsi aut̄ genib; usq; adduas bonas que p̄trans uersū sup̄ tangentes talū albe

R. in fine. none uisionis.

uidebant sanguinea apparebat. Et ecce idē monstruosū caput se tanto fragore a loco suo dissolutū qđ omīs eadē muliebris imago in omīb; mbris suis inde concurre. S; & uelut magna massa multa stercoreis ipsi capiti coniuncta ē. unde illud sup quenda montē se eleuans altitudinē celoz ascendere tēptauit. Et ecce uelut iēt tonitruū repente ueniens idē caput tanta fortitudine repcussit. qđ & de monte eodē cecidit & qđ spm suū in mortē emisit. Unde subito ferens nebula ipsū montē totū cōphendit. in qua idē caput tanta sorde inuolutū ē ut astantes ppli in maximū tōrē miterent. ipsa autē nebula circa eundē montē aliquātu diutū inmorante. Qđ astantes ppli cernēs multo timore concussus adinuicē dicebat. Heu heu qđ hoc ē. Qđ uidet uobis hoc fuisse. Ach nos miseris. qđ nos uiuabit. Aut qđ nos liberabit. Nescimus enī quom decepti sum. Omīps dñs. miserece nobis. Reuertamī igit ppete iuxta mentū euāgīi xpī. qm ach ach a mare decepti sum. Et ecce pedes p̄fate muliebris imaginis candidi apparuerūt. splendorē sup splendorē solis reddentes. Audi uq; uocē de celo m̄ dicebat. p̄mū.

Quā uis omīa que in t̄a s ad finē suū tendant. na qđ mundus in defectu uirū suarū positus ad extmū suū multis erumnis & calamitatib; opp̄sus incuruet. tam sponsa filii mē tā ap̄nunciū filii p̄dicionis. qm ab ipso p̄ditore in filius suis multū sangata nequaquā comaret. quāuis ab eis multū impugnet. cū ipsa in fine scloz robustior et ualidior exurgens pulchrior & clarior reddat. quān hoc m̄ ad amplexus dilecti sui suauis & dulcius pcedat. Qđ & hēc uisio qm cernis mystice designat. Hides enī ad aquilonē & ecce ibi qnq; bestie stant. que s in carnalib; desideris quib; macula peccati n̄ de ē qnq; ferocissimi cursus tēporaliū regnoz ferocit in se bachantes. Quarū una ē ut canis igneus s; n̄ ardens. qā cursus tēporis illoz hoīes sue constitutionis mordaces habebūt. in sua qđ estimatione uelut ignis apparet. s; iniusticia dī n̄ ardentes. Et una ut leo fului coloris ē. qm cursus ille bellicosos hoīes sustinebit. multa qđ de bella mouentes s; in eis rectitudinē dī n̄ inspicientes. qā in fuluo colore regna illa incipient sangationē debilitans incurtere. Alia autē autē ut equus pallidus. qā tēpora illa hoīes in diluio peccati lasciuos. & in uoluptatis sue opationē bonarū uirtutū transilientes pducunt. ubi tunc cor reg

.v. 7 nox illos in pallore ruine sue con-fringit: qm rubore fortitudinis sue ia pder. Sed alia ut niger porcus: qm cur sus ille rector magna nigredine tristitie in se met ipsis facientes habet: & se luto in mundicie inuoluentes ui-delicet diuina lege in multis con-trarietatib; fornicationu & aliis simulu malis pponentes: ac multa scismata diuinis pceptis .vi. 5 in seitate machinantes. Alia v ut lupus griseus: qa illa tempora habebunt hoies multas rapinas ta in potestatib; qm in reliqis suc-cessib; sibi met ipsis inferentes: cu in his certaminib; nec nigras nec albos: s; uelut griseos inuer-fucus suis se ostendentes: capta regna illos ea diuidentes dei-ciunt: quo te ueniet tempus irreucionis multaru animaru ubi error error ab inferno usq; ad celu erigit: ita qd filii lucis tortulari martyriis suis imponunt filiu di n negantes s; fi-liu pdicionis abiciunt: qui diabolicis artib; uoluntates su-as pficere temptabit. Et hec bestie se ad occidente uertunt: qm hec caduca tempora cu occidente sole cadunt: qa sic ille orit & occidit: ita etia faciunt ho-mines cu hic nascit & cu ille .vii. 5 morit. Inde etia ibi in occidente cora eis de bestis uelut qda collis qnq; apices habes

7 apparet: qa in carnalib; concu-piscenciis in ipsis excursib; dis-posita potestas qnq; altitudinu p palata ostendit: ita ut a-bore cuiq; bestie funis un ad queq; apice ei de collis extensus sit: qm ab initio eorunde tempore tenor placentis ad quaq; altitu-dine disposita potestas pndit: omis sub nigri coloris pter fune illu q ab ore lupi tendit q ex parte niger & ex parte alb; uidetur: qa iste placentis s inuarietate contumacie uoluptatis hominu tenore illo q in uerocitate rapine positus e in parte nigredinis multas iniquitates pndente: ita tam qd ex ipsa hi in multo candore iusticie pcedunt q torrentib; miraculis filio pdicionis ut ipsi resistant occurrant: queadmodu seruus ms iob de iusto uiro iusti-cia faciente ostendit dicens: .viii.
Innocens contra hy poerita suscitabit & tenebit iustus uia sua & mundis manib; addet fortudine. Hoc tale e. Qui innoces e sanguinei opis ide homicidu & fornicationis & similiu malis opu: uelut ardens scintilla contra illu excitat q sep in opib; suis mentit. Quom. Quia ille mel no minat s; uenenu deuorat: & amicu uocat que sic inimicu suffocat: uidelicet cu dulcia uerba sonat s; int se malicia habet: & cu ami-co blande loquit s; cu in insidus occidit. S. q̄ habet uirgā indigna peccora a se ipso fugans ex recto m nere cordis sui habet. etiā clara m nera corā fulgente sole. qm̄ ipse clara scintilla & clara lux in dō sus citāt q̄si fulgens facula. atq. ita fortissimis purissimisq. opib. se circūferens ipsis apponit fortē loricā et incidētē gladiū. a se etiā uicia expellens & uirtutes si bi concilians. Qua p̄pt̄ etiā in orientē iuuenē illū quē pri⁹ sup angulū coniunctionis p̄dicti luci di & lapidei muri p̄fati edificii purpurea tunica indutū uideras sup eundē angulū iterū uidēs. q̄a oriens iusticie fili⁹ hōis p̄sident fortitudini coniunctionis specu latiue sciencie & humano opi bo nitate pat̄s sursū edificante ubi idē fili⁹ hōis in uolūntate pat̄s sui sanguinē suū p̄salute mundi fu dit ut t̄ p̄monstratū ē. ibi ipse & modo sedens in eadē altitudine ad confirmationē ueritatis t̄ de nuo p̄mysteria miraculorū suorū manifestat. sic tam̄ ut nē ab um bilico suo deorsū t̄ appareat. qm̄ a fortitudine membrorū suorū qd ē electorū ipsi. ubi modo ipse spon sus ecclē uiget usq. ad cōpletionē eorundē m̄brox ipsius multa ad miranda & obscura signa uidēs.

ita uidelicet ut ab umbilico usq.
ad locū illū ubi uir discernit q̄si aurora fulgeat. q̄a ap̄fectio ne illa cū iā fidelia m̄bra sua p fectionē fortitudinis habent. usq. ad tēpus filii p̄dicionis q̄ se uirū uirtutis ēē simulabit. in rectitudi ne se deuote colemū fulgorē in ficiē demonstrabit. Unde & ibidē uelut lira cū cordis suis intransuer sū iacet. qd ē in p̄secutione illa q̄ fili⁹ iniquitatis multos cruciat. elec tis inferet gaudiū carnicorū eorū q̄ iā p̄pt̄ dura tormēta. que incorpo rib. suis paciunt̄ a corporalib. nex ib. solumt̄. ad requiē t̄nseunt̄.

Sed ab ipso loco usq. ad m̄surā duorū dignorū t̄npositorū sup tangētē talū suū umbrosus ē. qm̄ ap̄secutione hac qm̄ fideles a filio diaboli passuri s. usq. ad doctrinā duorū testiu scilicet enoch & helie t̄rena despiciētiū & ad sup na desideria labores suos ponen tiū fides ecclēstice institutionis uelut indubio habenda ē. hōib. multo merore dicentib. Quid ē qd dicit̄ de ihu. iherū ēannon.
Sed ab eadē m̄sura sup tan gentē talū p̄tos pedes suos lacte candidior apparet. qd ē a testimonio eorundē testiu cūa p̄mia expectantiū filio p̄dicio nis de uictō. fili⁹ hōis ante finē mun di in catholica fide candidissim⁹ & pulcherrim⁹ fulgebit. ita qd tē pala ueritas p̄ipsū cognosceat & qd falsitas in filio iniquitatis p̄ oia abiciat. ut & dauid seruus m̄s testat̄ ubi dicit. Rex ū leta bit̄ in dō laudabunt̄ om̄s q̄ iurant iv

5 5 5

x. 7

xy.

xy.

in eo. q̄a obstructū ē os loquentiū iniqua. Hoc tale ē. P̄funda scientia que ē magna statura in hoīe scilicet pulchrā formā linguarū homi nū uoluntate & dispositione di tangens strenue simphonizat. ^{Am.} in altari dī q̄a dīm nouit. & beati in laudib; sonantū mūū currunt. torrens iter uerborū impurissimo fonte fortissimi dñatoris facien tes. cū in p̄dno tēpore destituerūt hiatus sibilorū diabolicarū artū que m̄tes hominū turpē īficiunt.

xiii. ⁷ Sed & illa muliebris imago q̄m ⁷ ante altare q̄d ē ante oculos ⁷ dī prius conspexerās. nē etiā t̄ ibi ⁷ de iterū ostendit. q̄a sponsa filii dī purissimis orationib; scōz instans & eas sup̄ne inq̄sitioni scdm q̄d t̄ p̄monstratū ē deuotissime offerēs. m̄ etiā t̄ in eis de sacramētis passer tione iusticie declarat. ita tam q̄d etā m̄ etiā ab umbilico uentis sui de orsū uideas. q̄m ipsa apertatione illa q̄ nē ecclāstica dignitate pue bit usq; ad plenitudinē filiorū ip sius multis miraculorū misteris ad tūmonē multorū t̄ manifestatur.
⁷ Nā ab umbilico suo usq; ad locū ⁷ illū ubi mulier cognoscit uari ⁷ as & squamosas maculas habet. q̄d ē a fortitudine illa qua m̄ in filiis suis digne & laudabiliter ui get usq; ad tēpus illud ubi filius p̄dicionis artes illas q̄s diabolus p̄me mulieri inmisit p̄ficere co nabit. uarietate & duriciā in obiectionis multorū uiciorū tā infor nicatoris q̄m in mortiferis & rapa cib; malis lamentabiliter & miserabi liter sustinebit. Quom̄. Q̄m hi q̄ cā diligere deberent. eā acriter p̄se quent. Vnde etiā in eo de loco muliebris cognitionis monstruo sū & nigerimū caput apparet. q̄a cū artib; p̄me seductionis in monstruosis turpitudinib; & in nigerimis imitatib; p̄dicionis filius insaniens ueniet. igneos & oculos & aures ut aures asini & nares & os ut nares & ut os leonis habens. cū furibundos actus neq̄s simi ignis & turpissimos sonitus contradictionis dīm abnegari faci ens. hoīb; inmittit. ita pessimū fetore sensib; eorū infundens ac crude lissima rapacitate ecclāstica insti tuta dilanians. scilicet magno hia tu frendens & uelut ferreos ac hor ribiles dentes horribilit̄ acuens. q̄m uoracissimo richu uiciorū for titudinē & insaniā mordacitatis sue sibi consentientib; pessime in figit. Et ab eodē capite usq; ad genua sua eadē imago alba et rubra & uelut multa contritio ne tincta ē. q̄m a pessima decepti one qua idē fili p̄dicionis hoīes primū blande & lenit̄ seducere conabit. usq; ad tēpus illud cū eos iā crudeli inflectere & incuruare tēptabit. ecclā in filiis suis albe dinē uerē fidei. s; in ipsa angustia sanguinei stuporis ac maximas erunas diuisarū passionū sustinebit.

Ab ipsiſ aū genib. usq. adduas. xviij. bonas que p̄uſuerſū ſup̄i tan. 9 gentes talū albe uident ſanguinea. 9 apparet. q̄a cū iā uelut motuonē opp̄ſſionis ſue ſuſtinuerit usq. adduos teſtes uernans q̄ eccl̄am fortiſſime continebunt iā circa conſūmationē mundi candorē iu ſtie & rectitudinis oſtendentes ſceleratiſſimas p̄ſecutiones & cru deliſſimas effuſiones ſanguinis in hiſ qui eundē p̄dicatorē contēp ſerunt paciet. Quid ē hoc. Cū fili p̄dicationis in contraria doctrina ſua iā fiducia & fortitudine fal laciū confortatus accept. tē & eccl̄a incurſu feſtinationis ſue nobiliſ ſimo ſanguine p̄fundet. ubi et ipſa tē plenit iā celeſte habitacu lū conſtruet. Nā uos o platee ierſm tē in opimo auro p̄ ſan guinē ſcōz fulgebim. q̄a dia bolus tē extinguet q̄m m̄bra ſup̄ni regis p̄ſecutus ē. ita q̄d ipſe de magno t̄ore ſuo ad nihilū redigēt.

Sed uos hoīes q̄ in ipſis habitare de. xviii. ſideratis. illū fugite. & d̄m qui uos creauit adorare. In ſex enī dieb. p̄fecit d̄s opa ſua. & in ſep̄timo req̄ cūt ab ope ſuo. Qd ē hoc. Sex dieſ ſex numeri ſc̄i ſ. ſ. in ſexto noua miracula mundo edita ſ. ut enī in ſexto die d̄s opa ſua cōpleuit.
Nunc autē mundus in ſep̄timo nu mero ſc̄i ante nouiſſimū diē ē. ſic in die ſep̄timo. Quom. P̄phete uoces ſuas cōpleuerūt. fili enī m̄ſ uoluntatē meā in mundo p̄fecit.

& apte euſgm in toto mundo p̄di catū ē. ſ. & hoc p̄tēp̄uſ tēp̄oz pleni numeri & p̄ plus tēp̄oz annoz eīdē pleni numeri. quā uiſ in multa diuerſitate morū hominū. tam p̄ me bene fundatū p̄ſtat. xviii.

Sed nē catholica fides in p̄p̄liſ ſuacillat & euſgm in eiſdē hoīb. claudicat. fortiſſima enī uolumi na que p̄bat̄iſſimi doctores multo ſtudio enucleauerunt in turpi tedio diſſolunt & cib. uite diuinarū ſcripturarū iā tēp̄ſactū ē. unde nē loquor p̄ n̄ loquentē hominē de ſcripturis. nec edochū de t̄reno magiſtro. ſ. ego q̄ ſū. dico p̄ cū noua ſecreta & multa m̄ſtica. que hac tenus in uoluminib. latuerūt. uelut homo facit q̄ limū ſibi p̄mū cōpo nit & deinde ex eo q̄ſq. formas ſc̄dm uoluntatē ſuā diſcernit. O fruc tuoſi doctores boni lucrī. aīas uſas redimite & hunc ſermonē forti clamate nec ad ipſū increduli eſto te q̄a ſi illū ſpernit. n̄ illū. ſ. me q̄ uerax ſū contēp̄nit. Yos nāq. p̄p̄līm meū ſub lege mea nutrire debetis. habentes curā uſq. ad p̄ſentū tēp̄ illi curatio ſc̄i eū deficiet om̄is cura uſq. ad p̄ſentū tēp̄uſ illi curatio niſ cū deficiet oīſ cura omniū laboz.
ſ. de hoc tēp̄ore habetis tēpora tē porū p̄fixe p̄deſtinationis. ad tēp̄ illud currentes in quo fili p̄dicio niſ ueniet. Conualeſcite ḡ & confor

xix.

tamini electi mei precauentes ne in la-queum mortis cadatis. s; uictoriosissimum uexillum horum sermonum eleuatis & super filium iniquitatis ruit. Nam in errore seminarum illarum que precurrunt & subsequuntur filium predicationis. que uos antichristum nominatis. uestigia illi imitamini quod uos uiam ueritatis adlocut. cum in carne in mundo cum magna humilitate & non cum superbia apparuit. Audite ergo & intelligite.

xx.

Xp̄s enim dicit ecclesie. de tempore nouissimi erroris. Mors irruet in ecclesiam in ipsa hora cum in fine temporis. xx.ij. maledictus maledictionis ueniet. qui est maledictio maledictionum. uelut filius matris in euangelio de ciuitate pessimi erroris testatur dicens.

xx.ij.

Et tu capharnaum. nunquid usque in celum exaltaberis. usque in in-fernum descendes. Hoc tale est. Omni an-trum iniquitatis. fossa absconsonis ex-istens. talis simulationis ypocritarum habens. quomodo in excelso parietum stare posses cum oculus tuus nequicias uiciorum inspiciat. que ardens lumini stercore abscondunt dicentes. quod similis est paricide in ipocritis. que stulti dominatorem nomi-nantur. Nunquid celum in miraculis sig-norum habebis. cum digitum tuum tartaro intingis. Quomodo. Opera tua fundum inferni petent. in cuius uoracita-te absorpta iacebis. ita quod etiam ipse infernus fetorem illum euomet in quem mundus amaritudinem mortis in-predatore predicationum uidebit. s; caput sine uentre & absque ceteris membris et non debet. Caput ecclesie filius dei est. uenit & cetera membra que sequuntur ecclesia cum filiis suis est. Ecclesia autem nondum in membris & in filiis suis perfecta est. s; in nouissimo die cum numerus electorum implebitur. tunc & ecclesia plena est. s; & tunc in ultimo die turbatio orbis transitum fiet. cum ego de quatuor elementis abluo cum illo quod mortale in carne hominis est. cum & tunc in consummatione seculi plenum gaudium sobolis ecclesie erit. Iste enim predictum est. in sex diebus. perfecit deus opera sua. Quinq; dies quinq; nu-meri seculi sunt. in sexto noua miracula uirtutis prepalata sunt. uelut in sexta die primus homo formatus est. s; nunc seculis numerus finitus est usque ad septimum numerum. in quo non cursus mundi uelut in septima die requies positus est. quia labor ille quem prius fortissimi doctores in profunditate clausorum sigillorum secretorum scripturarum habuerunt. modo apertus existens ap-te preferendus est in lenitate uerborum uelut uerba huius libri sunt. quasi in septima quietis die. Sex enim dies operis sunt. septima requies est. numerus dierum alius non est. Quod super est tibi ob hoc sciendum non est.

s; in secreto patris est. s; uos o homines de tempore hoc. tempus temporis incursu uostro habens. ante quam homicida ille ueniat. quod fidei catholicam peruicere cupiet. Quod autem deinde fiat. nec tempus nec momentum uobis de hoc sciendum est. sic nec quod post septem dies ebdomadis sit scire poterit.

189 put sine uentre & absq; ceteris mbris eē n̄ debet. Caput eccle fili' dī ē uenter & cetera mbra que sequunt eccle cū filiis suis ē. Ecce autē n̄ dū in mbris & in filiis suis pfecta ē. In nouissimo die cū numerus electorū implebit. tē & eccle plena ē. S; & tē in ultimo die turbato orbis tūarū fit. cū ergo d's quatuor elementa abluo cū illo qd mortale in carne hoīs ē. cū & tē in consumatione scli plenū gaudiū sobolis eccle erit. Item p dictū ē in sex dieb; pfectis d's opa sua.

Sex enim dies qnq; numeri scli s; in sexto noua miracula mris p palata s; uelut in sexta die p'mus homo formatus ē. S; nē sextus numerus finitus ē usq; ad septimū numerū in quo nē cursus mundi uelut in septima die regei positus ē. qā labor ille que prius fortissimi doctores in p'funditate clausorū sigillorū scāru scripturarū habuerūt. m̄ aptus existens apte pfe rendus ē in lenitate uerborū uelut uerba hui' libri s; qsi in septima quietis die. Sex enī dies opis s; sep tima requiei ē. numerus dierū alius n̄ ē. Qd sup ē t' o homo scien dū n̄ ē. In secreto patris ē. S; uos o ho mines de tēpore hoc tēpus tēporū in cursu urō habetis. ante quā ho micida ille ueniat q' fide catholi cā puertere cupiet. Qd autē de n̄ de fiat. nec tēpus nec mōmū uob. de hoc sciendū ē. sic nec qd post septē dies ebdomadis sit scire pote stis. s; solus pat' hoc nouit q' & hec in sua potestate posuit. De dieb; enī ebdomadis aut de tēporib; tēporū scli. ampli' t' o ho sciendū n̄ ē.

Sed post qnq; numeros scli ce lestia miracula mundo edi di. sic & in qnq; dieb; alia creatu ra ante hominē creatura ante ho minē creata fuerat que homini subiecta ē. Sic enī & plenitudo paganorū & iudeorū fuerat & diuer sa scismata diuersorū malorū tā gen tilis quā iudaici ppli efferbuerāt.
& lex ac ppheta iā sudauerant. atq; om̄s ppli tā in malis quā in bonis pbatī erant. ante quā uni gentis m̄s carnē de uirgine susci peret. Nā cū mittere nolui n̄ p'mis sis om̄ib; his. idcirco ut oīs iusticia in illo pbarer. ut oīs iusticia in illo scandalizaret. Qd si idē fili' m̄s prius uenisset. hoc qsi insipienter factū fuisset uelut homo ille in pry dent agit q' fruges suas anteqm maturescant colligere uult. uel si incarnatio ei' in ipsū finē mundi dilata ēt. tē raptū ueniret qsi au ceps ille q' aues fraudulentē capite. illis nescientib; quom̄ rete ipsius intrauerit. S; filius m̄s uenit in tē pore illo uelut cū iā dies p' nonā ad uespas tendit. scilicet cū iā max ima uirtute diei abscedente frigus adeē incipit. ita p' qnq; numeros m̄di fili' m̄s mūdo affuit. cū mundus iā ad occasū currit. Qd tē. Ipse enī ueniens me dulla legis apuit. ubi aqm legis xx.iii.

xxv.

in unū cūgu conuertit ubi et maxima fluentia uirtutū emana re fecit: qđ tā tēpestiue ueniens cōpleuit: ut ecclesiastice uirtutis qđ sp̄s sc̄s incendit firmis radicib; in hominib; confortarent: ut ut uir ginitas quā in semetipso attulit dignissima germina floz suorū di latare posset. Sed insanus ho micida filius scilicet p̄dici onis in breuissimo tēpore uenit uelut cū iā dies abscedit: sole in occasū occidente uidelicet cū no uissimū tēpus iā cadit & mun dus tenorē suū deserit. Hoc aū testimoniū o fideles mei audite & illud deuote ad caussa ur̄am intelligite: ne uobis nescientib; terror isti p̄ditoris repente ue niens: in ruinā infidelitatis & p̄ dicionis uos p̄cipiet. Unde uos armate: & ad ualidissimā pugnā hoc modo fidelissimis munio rib; p̄monui uos p̄parate. Cū enī tēpus illud aduenit: quo iste nequissimus deceptor horribi liter apparebit: mat̄ illa que istū fallacē in mundū cieit a pueri cia sua in puellari etate diaboli cis artib; plena ueniens in deserto abiectionis inter nefandissimos homines enutrita ē ibi parenti bus suis cā nescientib; nec illis cū quib; morat̄ cā scientib; quā dia bolus cā illuc ire psuadet & ibi cā scđm uoluntatē suā decipien do cōponit: qđ angls sc̄s sit: s̄t idō illa ab hoib; se sepat: ut tanto facilius celari possit. Unde etiā al quib; s; tam paucis uiris neq̄ssimo latrocinio fornicationis occulte cō miscet̄: & in tanto studio turpitu dinis cū illis se polluit uelut angls. sc̄s feruorē praunans illi cā p̄fice re iubeat. Et sic in feruentissimo ardore fornicationis illi filii p̄dici onis concipit: nesciens de q̄ semine uorū illoz cū concepit. S; lucifer serpens uidelicet amiquis turpi tudine ista desectatus: coagulatio nē hanc iusto meo iudicio artib; suis afflat: & cā omib; uirib; suis totā inuentre matris illi possidet: sic illo p̄dore de uentre matris sue pleno diabolico spū egredien te. Deinde illa consuetā fornicatio nē deunat: & apte stultit & insipi entia p̄p̄lo dicit: qđ uirū n̄ habeat: nec patrē infantis sui sciat: forni cationē autē qm̄ p̄petrauit scām dicit: unde & p̄p̄s illā scām putat & nominat. Sic filius p̄dicio nis artib; usq; ad feruorē etatē enutrit: s̄p̄ noto sibi p̄p̄lo se sub trahens: s; mat̄ ipsius cū cū quib; dā magicis artib; mūdū tā p̄p̄lo dīm colem qm̄ n̄ colem ostendit: sic cū ab eis faciens uideri & amari: qui cū ad plenā etatē puenit ma nifeste contrariā doctrinā docebit: nam & electis meis repugnant tan tāq; formidīnē acq̄rens: ut in mag na potestate sua se supra nubes ele uare conet̄. Nā ego iusto iudicio meo p[re]mitto cū indueris creaturis uoluntate suā exercere. qm̄ ut diabolus in inicio dixit similis ero atissi-mo & cecidit. ita etiā p[re]mitto ut idē diabolus in tēpore nouissimo cadat cū ipse in hoc filio suo dīc saluator mundi ego sū. Et ut omē scdm̄ fide-liū cognouit qd lucifer mendax fuit. cū se in inicio dīcū simile dō ē uoluit. sic etiā omīs fidelis hō uideat qd iste filius iniquitatis mēdax ē. cū se ante nouissimū dīc filio dī simile facit. Ipsē enī ē pessima bestia hoīes q̄ ipsū negant in ficiens & regib; ducib; principib; di-umb; q; se adiungens humilitatēq; de p[re]mēns ac supbia crigens. orbēq; t[er]rarū diabolica arte sibi subiciens. Potestas nāq; ipsius usq; ad labrū ueni p[re]cedit. ita qd aerē uidet cōmouere ignēq; de celo educere & fulgura tonitrua ac gē-dines p[ro]ducere montes etiā euertere aq̄s exsiccare. siluis uiriditatē suā auferre. eisq; merū sucū suū reddere. Tales quippe illusiones induersis creaturis ostendit. ui-delicet in humore in uiriditate & in siccitate earū. s; & in hoīb; de-ceptiones suas facere n̄ desinit. Quo-modo. Uidet enī sanis in mittere egritudinē & infirmis sanitatē. demonēs eicere ac in t[er]mīnū p[re]missione mea illusiones suas ostendit. cadauer ipsius q̄ si uiuat moueri faciens. qd tam p[re]breuissimā horā et n̄ plongi spaciū facere in t[er]mīnū p[re] mittit. ne hac p[re]sūptione glā dī derideat. Qd quidā uidentes meū confidunt. qdā autē & priorē fi-dē suā habere uolunt & cū tam sibi p[re]piciū. Quos tam durū ledere no-lent. qdā infirmitates ipsis inmit-tit. Quidū medicinā medicorū querunt nec curari poterūt ad ipsū re-currunt. t[em]ptantes si eos curare ualeat. s; dū eos uidet. debilitatē quā eis intulit ipsis auferit. unde cū ^{ualde} amantes in ipsū credunt. Et sic multi decipiunt. cū ipsi oculos in-terioris hoīs obnubilant p[er] quos in me respicere debuerant uolentes in p[re]batione animi sui uelut in quadā nouitate illa scire que ceteri bus oculis uidet & que manib; pal-pant. contēpnentes illa inuisibilia que in me manent & que uera fide cōphendenda s; q̄a mortales oculi me uidere n̄ possunt. s; mi-racula mea in obumbratione illis ostendo quib; uoluerō me ipsū autē nullus uidebit dū in mortali corpore manet n̄ in obumbratio-ne misteriorū meorū ut seruo meo moysī locutus sū. ut scriptū est.

Non enī uidebit me homo. & ui-uere potest. Hoc tale ē. Obstat mortalitas sue n̄ ponet in clari-tate diuinitatis mee. ille q̄ mortalis ē. ita qd incorruptibili cinere mortale uitā possit habere. dū transeuntis tēporis ē. in m[un]datio in me ē. Nā sic culix uiuere n̄ potest si se in flammā ignis mit-

xxviii.

xxviii.

mortuos suscitare. Quom̄. Cū enī aliquādo q̄spia uitā euauerit cui anima impotestate diaboli ē. circa cadauer istū suas ostē

Sorto
inmortalitē. sol q̄ uitā unā deserit. ad aliā t[ra]nsit. quō omīa in uentia p[er] me so-lidata sūt. & q; ego uiuo nec ulla.

190^u
 ut. ita enā mortalis ho n̄ posset subsistere si coruscationē diuini tatis meē uideret. s; ego morta lib; hominib; quādiu ingraue dine mortalitatis sue grauati s me ita in obumbratione ostē do. uelut pictor ea que inuisi bilia s p̄magines picture sue hoib; declarat. Qd si oho me di legeris te amplector. & calore scī sp̄s te calefaciā. Cū enī bona intentione tua me inspeceris meq; in tua fide cognoueris. tē tecū ero. S; q̄ me contēpnunt addiabolū se conuertunt. qm̄ me scire nolunt. Unde & ego ip sos abicio. Istos autē diabolus illudit & decipit quomodo cūq; sibi placuerit. ita qd ipsi putant qd uerū sit. q̄cqd eis ostendit. Et hanc ipsā artē deceptionis sue diabolus illis infundit q̄ in ipsū confidunt. ita qd ipsi in hac arte diuersa portenta in creaturis scdm̄ uoluntatē suā hoib; fallacit̄ ostendunt. S; tam̄ nec elem̄ta nec alias creaturas que ad dō create s in aliū modū transmu tare possunt. n̄ qd solū p̄decep tiones suas quedā monstra ue lut q̄sdā nebulas in eis sibi cre demib; fingunt. Nā & adā cū plus quereret qm̄ habere de beret. glām paradysi p̄didit. sic & isti uisū & auditū immōris hoīs amittunt. qm̄ dīm deserūt & diabolū colunt. Scdm̄ hunc modū p̄dicionis deceptiones arnū suarū in elem̄tis opat̄. ostendens in eis pulcritudinē. dulcedinē et suauitatē. scdm̄ uoluntatē hoīū q̄s decipit. Sed hec potestas ei ob hoc p̄missa ē. ut fideles in recta fi decernant. qd diabolus nullā po testatē in bonis habet. s; solū in ma lis ēne moris. Quicqd enī iste fili iniquitatis opat̄ id in potestate supbia & crudelitate fac̄ mediā humili tatē & discretionē n̄ habens. s; cū impio & magno stupore hoīes ad hoc p̄cipiat. ut ipsū sequant̄. Pu rimos enī p̄p̄los sibi acquirit. dies eis. ut uoluntates suas. & pagant. nec se mutū in uigiliis aut in ieiun iis constringant. pponens eis ut tantū dīm suū diligant. quē se cē simulat. quatin̄ sic ab inferno li berati ad uitā pueniant. Unde illi hoc m̄ decepti dicunt. Oue mise ris illis q̄ ante tēpora ista fuerūt. q̄a diris cruciatib; uitā suā af fluxerūt. pietatē dī nrī heu igno rantes. Ille enī thesauros & diui cias eis ostendit. accos scdm̄ uo luntates ipsorū epulari p̄mittit. fallacib; signis doctrinā suā fir mans. ita qd ipsi putant qd n̄ oporteat eos ullo m̄ corpora sua constringere & castigare. S; & cir cūcisionē & iudaismū scdm̄ mo res iudeorū illos obseruare iubet. fortiora p̄cepta legis que euāgelios cū digna penitencia ingram

xxx.

conuertere
 ex lenora me conuer
 tui. nūc mū enā & & om̄ia p̄ dīa s̄ dō lamb; dia uidet q̄s fuerat. qm̄ tua sua sim
 go an uam gere uolo fomo libe in regno m le fallax se Et deinde gladio per donec usq;
 sue inuolū qd p̄mittit ta dōc m̄ gere simula
 m̄ scriptu animarū p̄ tradit. m̄ qd si q̄s fid ma recu totū m̄ om̄s q̄ hoc maximo tatis stupor iob; dilect tūdi oerū uel cupat

191 conuerit ipsi iuxta uoluntate eorum leuora faciens. Et dicit. Qui ad me conuerit peccata illius delebun-tur. uiuereq. mecum in eternum. Baptis-mum etiam & euangelium filii mei abiecit.
& omnia precepta illa que ecclesie tra-ditum sunt deridet. Et iterum sibi famu-lantibus diabolica irrisione dicit. uidete quod & qualis ille insanus fuerat. qui hec obseruari premanda sua simplici populo constituit.

Ego autem pro uobis & ad gloriam uiam mori & a morte resur-gere uolo & sic populum meum ab inferno liberabo ut deinceps mecum in regno meo gloriose uiuant. quod il-le fallax se prius fecisse simulauit.
Et deinde dilectis suis dicit. ut eum gladio percussit atque in munda sin-done usque addie resurrectionis sue inuoluant. illis ita deceptis quod putant se illum occidere & precepta eius hoc in perficere. Postea se resur-gere simulans dicit maledictionis scripturam uelut saluationem animarum profert. quam per signum hominibus tradens iubet ut ipsum adorent. quod si quis fidelis propter amorem nostrum mei recusauerit. diuino cruciatu tormentorum ab illo consumetur. Unde omnes qui hoc uiderunt laudierunt. maximo admirationis & dubie-tatis stupore conieciunt. uidit etiam iohannis dilectus meus ostendit dicens.

Et uidi unum decapitulum eius tamquam occisum in morte & plaga mor-tis eius curata est. Et admirata est uni-uersa terra pro bestia. Hoc tale est. Ego a-mator mysteriorum dei. uidi fallacem & maledictum in maximis & innumerabilibus iniquitatibus. omnem sceleratam circueuntem & multiplicibus uicibus eum sanguinem. quod artibus mandatorum suorum sanguinem suum in occasione se effundere & ita mori assimilabit non in corpore suo cadens. sed in fallaci umbra uelut percussus et moriens esti-matus. Unde etiam in errore fallacium uulnerum suorum quasi mortuus fuerit simulat. se quasi a sompno mortis re-uixisse. & ita admirabile & terribile stuporem omnibus hominibus qui uirtute terram sunt in horrore huius maledicti capient sic etiam populus magnitudinem & fortitudinem goliath extupuit. cum eum armatum in bello aduersum se stare uideret. Et ita ut uidet colunt electorum meorum tam de cruciatibus istis quam de contrariis & insignibus ac horribilibus signis que idem filii predi-cationis emittunt. magno stupore pa-uoris commoueri uidebunt. gemitu lamentabilis angustie emittentes.

Sed duos testes meos quos ad id tempus in secreto uoluntatis mee reseruati scilicet enoch & heliam. ut ipsi repugnet & ut errantes ad uiam ueritatis reducant emittam.
Qui fortissimas & robustissimas uirgines fidelibus ostendet. quia cum uerba testimonii eorum in ore utriusque sibi equaliter resonant fide audientibus adhibebunt. Nam idcirco hi duo testes ueritatis tandem pro me re-xxx. iij.

191
xxx.iii.

xxx.v.

seruan s̄. ut in ipsis pcedentib; sermo eorū in cordib; electorū meorū teneat et solidet. quatinus exinde germē eccle siae in magna humilitate subsi stat. Et ipsi ad filios dī quorū nomē in libro uite s̄. dicet. Quos recti et electi in glōsa laude beatorū grā. xxx.v. rū uite audite et intelligite que uobis fiducialit̄ differim. Hic ma ledictus a diabolo missus ē. ut aīas que se pceptis illi subiciunt in erro rē mittat. Nos enī de hoc mundo reclusi erant. reseruan in secretis dī que hōib; abscondita s̄. ita qd in sollicitudine et angustia hominū n̄ fuim. Nā ad hoc reseruan sum. et ad uos missi. ut errorib; isti p̄di toris contra dicam. Videte ḡ. si uo bis aut incorporali statua aut in erate similes sim. Et oīs q̄ cog noscere et confiteri uerū dīm uo lunt. hos duos senes et ueraces testes uexillū iusticie dī errorē portan tes subsequunt. iniquū errorē de serentes. qm ipsi in magnis p̄conis et corā dō. et corā p̄p̄to fulgebunt. uicos et plateas et ciuitates atq; alia loca ubicūq; fili p̄ditionis ē uariā doctrinā suā efflauert p currentes. ac in eis multa signa in. xxx.vi. spū scō facientes. ita ut oīs p̄p̄s q̄ ea uiderit in maximā admiratio nē ducat. Idcirco autē hec mag na signa sup̄firmā petā solidata illis dabunt. quatinus illa enaria et falsa signa abiciant. Nā ut ful gur incendit et cōburit. sic et fili p̄ditionis p̄uersa iniquitate et neq̄cia sua fac p̄p̄os magicis artib; uelut igne fulguris cōburens. sed enoch et helias cū recta doctrina q̄si cū ichu tonitruū omnē cohortē illi extremes daciunt. fideles ita stabi lentes. At tam in p̄missione uo luntatis mee ab illo tandē consuma ti. mercedē laborū suorū in celestib; esse quunt. Tūc flores doctrine eorū ca dent. q̄a uoces ipsorū iā in mundo cessauerit bonū fructū in celestis osten dunt. ipsis uerba et rabiē diabolice artū cōtēpnentib; in spe sup̄ne he reditatis bene firmatis. quēadmodū et salomon de bono et recto hōie ostendit dicens. Dom̄ iusti plurima fortitudo. et in fructib; impu con turbatio. Hoc tale ē. A tū habitacu lū ubi continuo et infidelitas n̄ ē spe ciale speculū oculi dī in recto hōie ē. in q̄ idē oculus fortitudinē mi raculorū suorū q̄si in appetitu p̄uici entis gladii uidet. S; in pcedentib; factis uelut in crescentib; fructib; sup̄bi cordis qd in p̄p̄is uolupta tib; suis ruinas edificat tristitia illa erit. qd idē sup̄bū cor in spe hanc n̄ confidit que in sup̄na sa turnitate floret. Sed qd uidet qd idē monstruo. Sū caput se tāto fragore a loco suo dissoluit. qd oīs p̄dicta muliebris imago in oib; m̄bris suis inde concutit. hoc ē cū se fili p̄ditionis caput iniqui tis existens. multa arrogancia sup bie uelut a prauo errore infixe sibi ne arripie ri uol finē ac lus suis inmax tans in luc mag ipsi capi

sup qu
tudine
maxim rū mult ade fili alas sup
inmax ipse etia posse p omē uol
re. ita q tāmā p delitiam omne c sibi cre uelit. S; dī adre
ita et it rū mali fortiss nure igr tonitru caput t qd et d sp̄m sui testas dī tōm̄s fi
p̄stern

192 sibi neque tollit. maiorem errorem arripientis scilicet super omnes exalta-ri uolens. idem cum deceptiones sue fine accepture sunt. omnes ecclesie in omnibus. fi-lius suus tam maioribus quam minoribus; in maximum timorem mittit. expectans insaniam presumptionis illi. Et uelut magna massa multa stercoreis. ipsi capiti coniunguntur unde illud super quendam montem se eleuant. altitudine celorum ascendere temptat. quia maxime artes diabolicarum insidia-rum multam in mundicia afferentium eius filio iniquitatis assistentes. ipsi alas superbie subministrant. ac cum tantam presumptionem erigunt quod ipse etiam secreta celestia se putat posse penetrare. Quomodo. Nam cum omne uoluntatem diaboli complererit. ita quod iusto iudicio dei amplitanta potestate iniquitatis et crudelitatis sue habere non permittit. omnem cohortem suam congregat et sibi credentibus. dicit quia ad celos ire uelit. Sic diabolus nescit filium dei ad redemptionem animarum nasci. ita et iste pessimus cum se immorsetur in malum omnium malorum inuoluit fortissimum ictum manum dei super se ue-nire ignorat. Et ecce uelut ictus tonitruus repente. Et ueniens idem caput tanta fortitudine percussit. quod et de monte eodem cadit et quod spiritum suum in mortem emittit. quoniam potestas dei se manifestans eundem per diuinitis filium tanta uirtute celi sui persternit quod et de superbia illa quae se contra deum exercebat magno precipio presumptionis sue ruit et quod unale flatum suum in mortem eterne dampnatio-nis ita consummatum euomit. ita quia sic temptationes filii mei sunt. sic cum ipse temptat diabolus dicit. uade satanas. et ille exierit fugit. sic etiam et temptationes iste quod idem filius iniquitatis ecclesie infert. in hoc bello meo consummationem accipiet. xxxix.

Unde subito ferens nebula ipsum montem totum comprehendit. in qua idem caput tanta sorde inuoluitur ut astantes populi in maximum timorem mutantur quia inmundissimum et infer-nalis fetor locum elationis illi totum replebit in quo ille pessimus criminator tanta inmundicia efferebat. ut iusto dei iudicio nec in terram nec finis eius a modo in memoria habeat quoniam illi populi cadauer ipsi sine uoce intra perstratum et multa tabe perfusum uidentes se deceptos esse cognoscunt. ipsa nebula circa eum de monte aliquantulum diutius immorante. quoniam fetor ille diabolicam damonem circum amplectens inmundicia ostendit. ut homines ab illo seducti fetorem et inmundiciam illam uidentes errorem suum declinet. et ad ueritatem redeant. Nam astantes populi hec cernentes multo timore concutuntur. quia hec ui-dentes maximum horrorem incurrunt. ita ut lugubres uoces et flebiles querelas perficiant. et se grauiter er-rasse dicant. Et ecce pedes per-fate mulieris. Et bris imaginis candidi apparent splendore solis reddentes. hęc ē qđ fortitudo funda menti & sustentatio sponse filii mei multū candore fidei ostendet & pulchritudine illā que omnē pul chritudine tēne claritas supat demonstrabit. cū filio pditionis ut pdictū ē pstrato multū cecis qđ errauerant ad ueritatē reuertent.

xl. 4.

Sed p casū illi impu qñdo nouis simū dies insolitione mundi oc currat. mortalis ho n querat. quia cū scire n poterit. qm cū pat inab sccondito secreta sui seruauit. Ad iudiciū q oboies uos pparare. Hic autē pdictū ē fili pditionis cū pa tre suo diabolo & cū omib; artib; illi in nouissimo tēpore p filiū meū fortissimū pūatore supabit. sic & inimici fortissimi samsonis in p figuratione ipsi deieci s. uelut scriptū ē. Concuissiq; fortē co lūnis cecis. Cdit dom sup os pñ cipes & ceterā multitudinē que ibi erat. multo q; plures int fecē mori ens qm ante uiuus occideret. Hoc tale ē. filio dī scilicet fortissimo samsoni p mū synagoga cūuncta ē. cuius occulta illa que in uetū testamē to abscondita erant in mirabili doctrina sua distribuit. in ueritē dulcedinē ei dē legis que fortior leone erat. ipsi benigne apient. s; ipsa decepit eū faciens ut secreta ei illuderent indoctrina illi respi cere nolens. s; cā magno fastu sup bie despicens. Qua ppter ipse cō

xl. 4.

motus regnū dī ab ea auferri & aliū gēni dari p dīcē. na in multis p dīgīs cū plurima turba ieroso limā ascendēs infidelitate illoz qđ uestimēta sua in uia strauerūt oeci sa. ubi qđ p mīserat illis p mīracu la reddidit qđ. p sponsā suā p dīcē.
Et in eodē feruore eandē sponsā suā deseruit. cū domū ei desertā derelinq p mīmauit. s; pat spon se illi uidelicet dia. blica seduc tio. alii uirō idē infidelitatem eā coniunx. Tē fili dī astutas uul pes scilicet aplos emisit. qđ igne sei spē segetes inimicoz suoz cō bussert idē qđ legalia pcepta ad spūale intellectu uertert. na sy nagoga cū patre suo cōbusta sci licet puer sa infidelitate synago ge euersa. Deinde magnis signis & stupendis miraculis in credulos occidit. na qđ os multo stupore contremuerūt cū dicerēt. se time re romanos uenire & locū & gēni tē ipsoz tollere. Qua ppter cohortē suā congregauerūt ut illū pderēt. s; ipse abscondit se in monte in oratione cū diceret ut si fieri pos set qđ calix ille ab eo transiret. s; iudas scariothis p dīdit eū. tradens eū in manus inimicoz suoz. At ipse uim fortitudinis sue abscondit quā in cruce idē in patre suo habuit. que omī ppto ignota ē n qmū infidē caput ue lut capilli in capite uident. P ea cū pan uoluit in fortitudinis sue ostendit la a finit dicere ne

fieri. na
trōre fū sic in cruce
fidi de gēni quo ipse bibe cū qđ sic con cū cēlytū et admulic dit inimicis cū custodes nēpāt. s; ipse cū duab; por dēctis suis & cū inferno lib penit. s; sic scilicet eccle gēnissime a fortitudinē scilicet autē
te. s; paulat
te. Quom. cū licā fide pēp ge & in noua nonē putaba re ambulare
tū nequoz f;
habituū qđ adhuc multū ē fortitudo hēc audient motū dī in colere. & nū scī conuersa cognita nē.

sue ostendit uidelicet mandibula asini tollens cum filiabus ierlm diceret ne super eum sed super se ipsas fierent. nam illas occidens scilicet terrore futurorum malorum eis predicans. Et sic in cruce sanguine cum simeret fons fidei de gemali populo emanauit de quo ipse bibens non erubuit. dicens etiam quod sic consummatum est. Unde cum exspirauit in gehennam uidelicet ad mulierem meretricem descendit inimicis suis eum obsidentibus. cum custodes ad sepulchrum ipsi ponerent. sed ipse a morte resurgens cum duabus porcis id est cum specialibus electis suis. et cum communi populo qui ex inferno liberauit celeste regnum petiuit. Sed sic pulcherrima sponsa scilicet ecclesia ipsi coniuncta. diligenter ab eo quesitum quomodo fortitudinem ipsi cognoscere posset. Ipse autem uires suas ei non repente. sed paulatim et cum discretionem aperit. Quomodo. Cum primum fideles catholici fide precepissent. in ueteri lege et in noua usque ad perfectam correctionem putabant secundum illorum debere ambulare. que ligatura humani neruorum. sed non dum perfecta siccitate habentium erat. Unde ecclesia rudis adhuc multis turbis dicebat. Hec est fortitudo sponsi mei. Et populus hec audiens uolebat repente motu dei inauditi uerborum tantum colere. et non in significatione spiritus sancti conuersari. Sed nam fortitudo eius cognita non est. Deinde uirginitas uelut noui funes qui nunquam in opem fuerunt sic et uirginitas ante non est glorie habita nobilitate erecta est. que ligatura filium dei forat quod de tenet. sed tam cum plenitudo non ostendit. Sed ecclesia se sursum erigens dicebat. O uos amici mei. he maxime uirtutes sponsi mei sunt. Et subito in magno strepitu multis populis super eum ruit dicens. Nos in maximis uiribus. et ipsum cepimus. Sed nec sic uires eius manifestate sunt. Postea in septe domus spiritus sancti uelut in septe criminibus illi ecclesia solidata est. ipsis foris clauo infirmamento apostolorum predicationis infixis. Unde rei fidei hoc modo contexto. ecclesia clamabat. O quam fortis sponsus meus in septe criminibus suis est. Et omnes populi illam audientes in eum irruunt. putantes ipsum maiores uires non habere. Sed hoc minus non est agnita fortitudo ipsi. Dehinc multas lacrimas ecclesia effudit. quia fortitudinem sancte trinitatis ignorauit. dicens humanitatem filii dei se quod de uidisse. sed diuinitatem ipsi non dum perfecte intellexisse. Unde ipse commotus. in dilecto suo iohanne secreta sancte trinitatis quantum homini licitum erat scire. in honore patris et in ardore spiritus sancti manifestauit. Et ita in gremium sponse sue caput suum reclinans. ibi usque ad maxima scismata que filio predicationis futura sunt requiescit. Ibi fortitudo eius ab rasis criminibus ipsi abscidit. cum homines in unum tempore illo magis filiū pdicionis qm ipsū seq studeant dicentes. Qd ē oīs. qd ta lia & tanta miracula uident. Et ita formido ipsi delinūt. cū iā uera fides incedente infidelitatis obnu bilari uidet. S; uires ei resurgunt. cū enoch & helias apparuerunt. Qua ppter supbia & p̄sūptionē fortiter concutens filiū pdicionis cū oib; diabolicis artib; & eccl̄is uicis deie cit. multoq; durī diabolica uicia comeret cū iā eccl̄a cū xp̄iano no mine dep̄sent & tēporali sc̄lo ad cūa transibit. qm̄ antea faceret cū adhuc diuinū cultus in mundo tēporalit̄ uigeret. Quid ē hoc.

 Quia cū iā sc̄m finē accipiet. tē & diabolice p̄secutiones & uirru tū fortissime opationes i hōib; enā tēporalit̄ cessabunt. Qui autē acu tas aures int̄iores intellectus ha bet. hic in ardente amore speculi mei aduerba hec anhelat. & ta
 in conscientia animi sui c̄scribat

of hee
 M
 M

uideri & ecce oīa elem̄ ta & oīs creature diu motu concussa s̄. 1g nis aer & aqua cru perit & t̄rā moueri fecerit. fulgura & to ntrua concupuerit.
 montes & silue ceciderit. ita ut omē qd mortale erat unā exalaret. Et oīa elem̄ta purgata s̄. ita ut q̄cqd meīs sordidū fuerat tali m̄ euanes ceret. qd ampli n̄ appareret. Et au diui uocē maximo clamore p̄to tū orbē t̄rā uociferantē & dicen tē. O uos filiū hominū q̄ in t̄ra iace tis. surgite oīs. Et ecce oīa ossa ho minū in quocūq; loco t̄rā erant. uelut in uno mōto congregata & sua carne obrecta s̄. & oīs hōies in tegris m̄bris & corporib; suis in sexu suo surrexerit. boni in clarita te fulgentes & mali in nigredine apparentes. ita ut & opus cuiq; in ipso apte uideret. Et qdā ex eis infide signati erant. qdā autē n̄ ita ut signati istos alii ante faciē suā uelut aureū fulgorē alii uelut umbrā haberent. quod ipsoz signū

Dedic
 iudicij.

Quodecima uisio Tercie parti

11. uisio. in p̄nt.

erat. S; su choruse filiū hōis immunda cū angli di & sup tiffame maxima
 habent
 a maere ubi & p̄ tū supm tā bonis
 tū. S; ipse gelū man no beatus iustos in de scriptū alia in q̄ opib; ex n̄ uoc ostend cuiq; siue ipso mani figuratū aquilom bant. nec
 f. tam hec dēnti finē bant. & in dabant. Et fulgura & tēporalit̄
 m̄s transi nunt. & ma ta ē. Te dē repant sp̄ filio dī. & c.

erat. S. subito ab oriente maxima choruscatio effulsit. & ibi in nube filium hominis eodem vultu quemadmodum in mundo fuerat. & apertis vulneribus cum angelicis choris aduenientem ui di. & supra sedem eademque s. non arden tis flammæ sedentem. & sub se hanc maximam tempestatem purgationis habentem. Et qui signati erant obuiam ei in aere quasi in turbine rapti s. ubi & per splendorem illius qui secre tum superni creatoris designat uide re. bonis scilicet amantibus ibi separa tis. S. ipse blanda uoce uelut uan gelium manifestat iustos celesti reg no beatificauit. ac terribili uoce in iustos infernalibus penis sic etiam ibi de scriptum est deputauit. nulla tam alia in questione & responsione de opibus. ex quo quemadmodum euangelica uox ostendit ibi facta. quoniam opus cuiusque siue bonum siue malum esset in ipso manifeste apparuit. Qui autem signati non erant a longe in parte aquilonis cum diabolica turba sta bant. nec adiudicium hoc peruenire. sed tam hec omnia uelut in turbine ui dentes fine eisdem iudicii expecta bant. & intra se amaro gemitu dabant. Et sic iudicio pacto. fulgura & tonitrua & uenti ac tempestates cessabant & quicquid in ele mentis transitorium erat subito eua nuit. & maxima tranquillitas fac ta est. Tunc electi super splendorem solis repente splendidi effecti cum eodem filio dei & cum beatis agminibus an gelos in gaudio magno celestia petebant. reprobis cum diabolo et angelis ei ad loca infernalium cum magno ululatu tendentibus. Et sic celum electos recepit. & infernum rep ros absorbit. S. subito tanta gaudia & tante laudes in celestibus.

 & tanta tristitia ac tanta ululatio in inferno exorti sunt. ultra quam hu manus sensus effari possit. Et mox omnia elementa in maxima serenitate resplenderunt uelut eis nigerri ma cum abstracta fuisset. ita quod nec ignis feruore. nec aer spissitu dinem nec aqua furorem nec terra fra gilitatem amplius ullam haberent. Sol quoque luna & stelle uelut plurimum ornatus infirmamento multo splen dore & decore rutilabant & sine motu circuitionis fixa manebant. ita quod ultra diem & noctem non discer nebant. Et ita nox erat s. dies. Et finitum est. Iterumque audiui uocem de celo me dicentem. Hec mysteria nouissima tempore ostendunt. in quibus temporalia tempora in eternitatem coruscationis illius que sine fine est transmutabunt. Nouissima enim tempora multis periculis fatigabun tur. & occasus mundi uariis sig nis demonstrabitur. Nam ut uides in ipso nouissimo die totus orbis terrarum tremoribus concutietur tempestan bus quassabitur. ita ut quicquid in eo caducum & mortale est his calamita tibus finiat. quia iam cursu mundi completo ipse amplius durare non

primū.

poterit. s; sedm diuinā disposionē consumabit. Sic enī homo cū finiendus ē multis infirmitātib; puenit deierit. ita qd etiā in ipsa hora mortis sue multo-doloze dissoluit. sic quoq; finē mundi maxime aduersitates p-current. & ipsū in fine suo diuisis trorib; dissoluent. quō elemēta trores suos tunc ostendent. qā eos ampli' exercere n̄ poterit. .ii.

Repentino & inopinato q̄p pe motu in hoc fine elemēta relaxant. os creature cōmouent. ignis erūpt. aer soluit. aq̄ efflu-it. trā concutit. fulgura feruent. tonitrua concrepant. montes scindunt. silue ruunt. & q̄cqd in aere t̄ in aqua t̄ in trā mortale ē unā reddit. Ignis cū totū aerē mouet & aq̄ totā trā replet. & hoc .v. modo oīa purgant. ut q̄cqd in mundo fedatus ē ita euanescat q̄si n̄ fuerit. uelut sal diffu-it cū in aquā mittit. Sed diuino p̄cepto ut t̄ p̄. Remonstratū ē ad resurgendū accepto mortuoz ossa ubiq; fuerunt suo loco uelut in eū oculi coniungunt & sua carne tegunt. nec ullo m̄ retardant. s; siue ab igne siue ab aqua. siue ab aere. siue ab etha consumpta fuerint emissime restitunt. ita qd ea hoc m̄ trā reddit t̄ ut sal ex aq̄ sudat. qā oculus m̄s oīa nouit nec q̄cquā me latere poterit. ita os hoīes in aīa & corpore sine ulla contractione & abscissione m̄broz suoz. ^{sed} in integritate & corporis & sexus sui uelut in eū oculi re-surgunt. electi fulgorē bonoz op̄z suoz habentes. & rep̄bi nigredinē infeliciū actiū suoz portant. ita qd ibi opa ipsoz n̄ abscondunt. s; pala in ipsis apparebunt. .iii.

Et qdā ex eis infide signati s̄ qdā autē n̄. ita ut fidē habentū conscientie alioz p̄ opa fidei in fulgore sapientie fulgeant. alioz uero in tenebrositate neglect' sui appareant. p̄ que apte discernunt. qm̄ illi fidē opib; impleuerit. isti autē eā in semet ipsis extinxerit.
Quidā autē hoc signū fidei n̄ habet. quia isti nec in ueteri lege nec in noua grā cognitionē uiuū & ueri-di habere uoluerit. Et tē inela-ritate lucis cūe s; Et tē in nu-be qua rep̄bis celestis grā abscon-dita ē filius dī in forma humanitatis & passionis sue qm̄ in uoluntate patris p̄ salute humani gene-ris passus ē ad iudicandū ipsū humanū gen' celestis exercitū circūdatus adueniet. qm̄ pat' ei hoc de-dit. ut qā ipse in mundo uisi-bilibus conuictus fuerat. que in-sibilia mundi s̄ diiudicet. ut

Et ipse in uiglo ostendit dicēs.
Et potestatem dedit ei & iudiciū facere. qā fili' hoīs ē. Hoc tale ē. Pat' testificat' de filio suo. qd ē hoc. Pat' potestatem dedit filio qm ipse semp cū patre in diuinitate manens; humanitatē de matre accipiens. sedm qd homo ē accepit etiā a patre qd oīs creatura ipsū dī filiū sentit. sic & oīs creatura in creatone forme sue ad dō creatā subsistit. Et idō quoq; opa discernunt a filio in qeūq; dignitate & in curuacione sunt.

& sedm hoc qd collocanda s ea collocat. ut qā ipse homo palpabilis & uisibilis in mundo fuit etiā illa que in mundo uisibilia fuerūt sedm qd iustū ē discernat. uidelicet in potestate iudiciali tribilis iniustis; blaudus iustis ap-parens. ipsos ita diiudicans qd etiā purgationē suā elemēta sen-tiant. Tunc & q signati s obuia Iusto iudici n̄ indis-ficultate; s; in multa celeritate ra-piunt. ut qm ipsi fidē in dīm cre-dentes habuerūt. etiā opa fidī in eis manifeste apparant. ubi et scientia dī actus eoz & in bonis et in malis n̄ ignorat ut t̄ p̄monstratū ē. ibi enī boni & mali separabuntur. qā & opa eoz dissimilia s. Nā ibi tā in malis qm in bonis certissi-me apparet. quom̄ t̄ in puericia. ^{in infamia} t̄ in iuuentute. t̄ in senectute t̄ in finita etate dīm quesierunt. Vbi ^{viij.} etiā fulminant oīs flores Vbi in mei uidelicet patriarche & p̄phete q̄ ante incarnationē ipsi fuerūt. & apli q̄ cū eo in sclo conuersati s. ac martyres confesso resurgentes & uidue. q̄ ipsū fidelit̄ imitati s. & illi q̄ eccle mee. tā in sclo rib; qm in spūalib; p̄positi erant. nec n̄ anachorite & monachi q̄ in castigatione & mortificatione carnis sue p̄pt̄ nom̄ eī dē fili mei se uiles fecerūt qd & in uestitu suo cū magna humilitate & caritate angelicū ordinē imitantes ostenderūt.

S; q̄ me hoc m̄ in contemplatiua uita querūt. qd dicunt. hec uita glōsior illa ē. hoc m̄ q̄ si nichilū ē. q̄ me querit in humilitate. in illa conuer-satione que in spūatione sp̄s scī data ē. hūic in celesti patria in pri-orib; locis collocabo. Deinde celi laudes suas int̄. Drim in silētio continent. cū fili dī iudicia-lē sententiā & adiustos & ad inustos p̄fert. auscultantes cū reueren-tia honoris quom̄ illos diiudicet. cū blande iustis supna gaudia tribuit & cū tribuit in iustos ad infernales penas mittit. S; ibi nec excusatio nec interrogatio opationū suarū maior erit. qm qd ibi con-scientie hominū & bonoz & maloz nude & apte s. Iusti autē qui ibi uerba eq̄ssi. Omn̄ iudicis p̄ci-piunt. plurimā quidē opa iusticie fecerūt. s; tam̄ ea in plenitudine p̄- fectionis dū in sclo uiuerent n̄ habuerūt. unde & nē in eis diudicandi s. in iusti uero q̄ iudicia-lē seueritatē ibi in se sentiunt mala qdē facta p̄petrauerūt. s; tam̄ ea n̄ ignorantia diuine ma-

-viij.

.x.

195 iustis qd ē iniquitate p̄ iudicare dā nationis infidelitatis egerit. & idō sententiā qd dē iudicis ibi n̄ effugi ent. quō oīa equo pondere ponde randa s̄. Illi autē q̄ infide signa ti n̄ s̄ qm̄ ipsi in dñm n̄ crediderūt. in parte aquilonis idē p̄dicionis cū diabolica turba interim tardant nec ad hoc pueniunt. s̄; tam̄ illud in ob umbratione uidentes finē. cū p̄sto lantes intra se mutū gemunt. quō ipsi in infidelitate p̄durantes uerū dñm n̄ cognouerūt. q̄a ipsi nec ante baptisimū uerū dñm in uerū testam̄to coluerūt. nec sub euglio remediū bap tismatis susceperūt. s̄; in maledictione casus ade p̄seuerauerūt dñationis penas habentes. unde & in infideli tate scelerū suorū iā iudicari inueni unt. Sicq; iudicio finito. t̄ores elem̄. Tor & fulgura tonitrua. & ueni in t̄pestatib; cessant. & om̄e qd caducū & transitoriū ē dilabit. XV. nec ampli⁹ apparebit. Fine ē desi nit que a calore solis dissoluit. max ima quiete tranquillitatis diuina dispensatione ita exorta. Et sic electi splendore cūcta. Et habentes una cū capite suo scili cet filio meo. & cū gl̄oso celesti ex erenti in magna gl̄a celestia gaudia petunt. & rep̄bi una cū diabolo & cū angelis ipsi ad cūta supplicia in multa commotione tendunt ubi cū nā mortē sibi p̄paratā cūtalit uidet. q̄a magis concupiscencias secum s̄.
 Et sic celū electos in gl̄am cūctatis recipit qm̄ ipsi dñatōrē celorū di legerūt. & infernū rep̄bos absorbet. q̄a diabolū n̄ abiecerūt. ita omniū gaudiorū tamis laudib; in celesti gl̄a resonantib; & omniū gemitū tan tis ululatib; in inferno exortis. ultra quā human⁹ intellectus cape ualeat. qm̄ illi unā cūta possident & isti mortē cūta habent. quēadmodū in euglio fili⁹ m̄s loquit̄ dices. Et ibi hi in supplicii cūta. iusti autē in unā cūta. Hoc tale ē. Qui in lenoci nio omniū malorū ferunt nec sciunt qd iustū ē haurire in sūma bonitate. p̄ter infidelitatis & nequicie sue in penas cūte p̄dicionis dimerunt. sedm̄ opa sua infernalitā torm̄ta re cipientes. Edificatores uero chorosca tionis celestis ierlm̄ q̄ porus filie syon fidelit̄ instant. fulgebunt in luce ui te cūte quā castissima uirgo in fecun ditate uirginis sue credentib; mi rabilit̄ attulit. Et ut uidet elem̄ta in maxima claritate & pulchritudine his om̄ib; p̄actis fulgebunt. om̄i in delictis in pedum̄to nigredinis & sor dis ablato. Nā ignis sine feruore tunc ut auroa rutilat & aer absq; spissitu dine purissim⁹ fulget & aqua sine im petu effusionis & submersionis p̄spicua et lenis stat. & t̄ra absq; om̄i fragilitate & torm̄tine fortissima et planissi ma apparet. his om̄ib; in magnā tran quillitatē ac pulchritudinē transla tis. S; & sol & luna ac stelle uelut p̄cio sissimi lapides in auro. ita cūta in fir mamento multa claritate & maximo suas quā p̄cepta mea ma uirga frondens de stirpe iesse. o quā magna uirtus ē qđ diuini-tas in pulcherrimā filiā aspexit. sicut aq̄la in solē oculū suū ponit. cū sup̄ius pat̄ claritatē uirginis ad tendit. ubi uerbū suū in ipsa incarnari uoluit. Nā in mystico misterio di illustrata int̄ uirgi-nis. mirabilē clarus flos ex ipsa uirgine exiit. Et iterū dicit.

11.

Glorissimi lux uiuens angeli. qui infra diuinitatē diuinos oculos cū mystica obscuritate oīs creature aspiciunt in ardorib; desideris. unde nūquā potestis faci-ari. o quā glosa gaudia illa uirginitatis habet forma. que in uobis ē intacta ab omni prauo ope qđ p̄mū ortū ē in uirō socio p̄dmo angeli qđ uolare uoluit supra int̄ latēs pinnaculū di. unde ipse tortuo-sus demersus ē in ruinā. s; ipsi infirmū casus consiliando facture digni di in firmū. Nā o uos angeli qđ custoditis p̄p̄los quorū forma fulget in facie uirginitatis & o uos ar-chan-geli qđ suscipitis aīas iustorū & uos uirtutes. potestates. principatus dñationes. & throni qđ estis cō-putati in q̄ntū secretū numerū.
& o uos cherubim & seraphim sigillū secretorū di. sit laus uobis qđ lo-culū antiqui cordis in fonte aspiciunt. videns enī in iore uim pat̄. que de corde illi spirat q̄si facies. Itēq; dicebat. Specta-biles uiri qđ p̄transistis occulta 113.

aspicientes p̄culos sp̄s & annuntian-tes in lucida umbra acutā & uiuen-tē lucē in uirga germinantē. que sola floruit de introitu radicantis luminis. uos autē qđ scī p̄dixistis saluationē oculū animarū. que immerse fuerant morti qđ circūstis ut rote mirabilē loquentes mystica montis. qđ celū tangit p̄transiens unguendo multas aquas. cū etiā int̄ uos surrex̄ lucida lucerna que ipsū montē p̄currentes ostendit. O uos felices radices cū q̄b; op̄ miraculorū & n̄ op̄ criminū p̄torrens it̄ p̄spicue umbre plantatū ē. o tu ruminans ignea uox. p̄currens luminatē lapidē subuertentē abyssū. gaudete in capite uirginitatis. nullo quē n̄ uiderēt uirginitatis multi. qđ ipsū ardentē uocauerūt. Et iterū dicit.

113.

Choors milicie floris uirge n̄ spinare. tu sonus orbis t̄re circūiens regiones in sanorū sensus epulantū cū poris qđ expugnasti p̄infusū adiutorē ponentis radices in tabernacula pleni opis uerbi pat̄. tu etiā nobilis es gens saluatoris int̄ uia regeneratio-nis aque p̄agnū qđ te misit in gladio int̄ seuissimos canes qđ suā glām destruxerūt in opib; dignorū suorū. statuentes n̄ manufactū in subiectionē manū suarū in qua n̄ inuenerūt cū. Nā o lucidissima ap̄lorū turba surgens in uera agnitione & ap̄iens clausurā magisterii diaboli abluendo captiuos in fonte uiuentis aque. tunc clarissima lux inuigerrimis tenebris. fortissimūq. genus colunarū spon sa agni sustinens in omib. ornam tis ipsi. p cui gaudiū ipsa mat. & uir go ē uexillata. Agni enī in maculat ē. sponsus ipsi. sponse & immacula te. hūq. dicebat. O uictoriosissi mi triumphatores q. ineffusione san guinis ur̄i saluantes edificationē ecclē in m̄tis sanguinē agni epulan tes cū utulo occiso. o quā magnā mercedē habent. q. corpora ur̄a ui uentes despectistis. immanes. agnū dī ornantes penā ei. in q. uos intro dux in resurrectionē hereditatis. hos flores rosarū q. ineffusione san guinis ur̄i beati estis in maximis gaudiis redolentib. & sudantib. in emptione que flux. de interiori m̄te consiliū manentis ante cui in illo in q. n̄ erat c̄strum a capite. Sic honor in c̄strum ur̄o q. estis instru mentū ecclē. & q. in uulnerib. ur̄i sanguinis undans. Et iterū dix.

Successores fortissimi leonis in tēplū & altare dñan̄tes in immu tatione ei. sic angli sonant in lau dib. & sic ad s. pplis in adiutorio. uos estis in illis q. hec faciunt sep curā habentes in officio agni. O uos imitatores excelsę p̄sone in p̄cio sissima & gl̄osissima significatione. o quā magnū ē ur̄ ornat. ubi hō p̄ce dit soluens & stringens in dō pigro & p̄grinos. etiā ornans candidos & nigros. & magna onera remittēs.

Nā & anglici ordinis officia habe tis. & fortissima fundam̄ta p̄sens ubicūq. constituenda s. unde mag nus ē ur̄ honor. hūq. dicebat. O pulchre facies dñi aspicientes & in auro edificantēs obte uigines quā nobiles estis in q. b. rex se c̄sidet. cū in uobis oīa celestia ornam̄ta p̄signauit. ubi etiā sua uissim. ort. estis in oīb. ornam̄tis re dolentib. O nobilissima uiriditas q. radicas in sole. & que incandida se renitate lucet in rotā. quā nulla t̄re na excellentia cōphendit. tu circū data es amplexib. diuinor. misterior.
Tu rubes ut aurora. & ardes ut so lis flāma. Et iterū son. ille ut uox multitudinis in querelis de reuocatis ad eos dē gradus in armo nia sic querebat. dicēs. O plangēs uox ē hec. maximi doloris. Ach. ach quēdā mirabilis uictoria in mirabili desiderio dī surrex. in qua delectatio carnis se latet. ab se condit. heu heu ubi uoluntas cri mina nesciunt & ubi desideriu hōis lasciuia fugit. Luge luge q. in his innocentia. que in pudore bono integritatē n̄ amisisti. & que aua ricia gemitus antiq. serpentis ibi n̄ deuorasti. O uiuentis fons. quā magna ē suauitas tua q. faciē istor. um n̄ amisisti. s. acutē p̄uidisti q. m̄ eos de anglico casu abstraherēs. q. se estimabant illud habē qd n̄ licet sic stare. Unde gaud. filia syon. q. d. s.
t. multos reddit q. s. serpentis de te

.v.

.vi.

.viii.

.viii.

absidere uoluit. q̄ n̄ in maiori luce fulgent. quā p̄r illoꝝ causa fuisset.
Yuuens enī lux de his die. Tortuosū serpentē scandalibam in sua suggestione. que ita plena n̄ fuerat. sic il-le putabat. Unde iurauit p̄m̄cip sū q̄d in his causis feci ampliꝝ apliꝝ. q̄m̄ in eis oserpens tuū gaudiū p̄de-ret. q̄a uirtua suggestione amputauit q̄d nūq̄m inuentū ē uirtua secura o turpissime illusor. Iteq̄. son' ille ut uox multitudinis in exhortati-one uirtutū in adiutoriu hominū. et in contradictione repugnantū diabolicarū artū. uirtutib; uicia superantib; & hoib; tandē diuina inpiratione ad penitentia rede-untib; in armonia sic clamabat.
Nos uirtutes in dō sumꝝ & in dō ma-nemꝝ. regi regū militamꝝ & mālū abono separamꝝ. Nā in p̄mo agone aparum ubi uictices extimꝝ. dū ille corruit q̄ sup se uolare uoluit.
Ergo & n̄c militemꝝ illis q̄ nos inuocant subuenientes. & diabolicas artes calcantes. & eos q̄ nos imitari uoluerint ad beatas mansiones p̄du-centes. Querela aīarū. in carne po-sitarū. O nos pegrine sumꝝ. q̄d fecimus. ad peccata deuantes. filie regis eē debuiꝝ. s; in ūbrā peccatōꝝ cecidimꝝ. O uiuens sol. porta nos in humeris tuis in iustissimā hereditatē. quā in ada p̄didimꝝ. O rex regū in tuo p̄lio pugnamꝝ. Inuocamo fidelis aīe. O dulcis diuinitas & osua uis una in qua p̄ferā uestē p̄clarā.

illud accipiens q̄d p̄didi in p̄ma ap-partione. ad te suspiro & os uirtutes inuoco. Responsū uirtutū. O felix aīa & o dulcis creatura dī. que edificata ē in p̄funda altitudine sapientie dī in ūbrā amas. fidelis anima. O libentē uenia ad uos. ut p̄- beatis m̄ osculū cordis. ^{uirtutes} Vire hōs debemꝝ militare tecū o filia regis. S; gūa ta aīa querit. O gūis labor & o du-rū pondus q̄d habeo in ueste huiꝝ uite. q̄a nimis gūe m̄ ē contra carnē pugnare. Virentes. O aīa uoluntate dī cōstima. O felix instrumentū. q̄re tā debilis es cū hoc. q̄d d̄s ē iū uirginica natura. Tu debes in nob supare diabolu. Aīa illa. Suc-curre m̄ adiuuando. ut possim stare. Scientia dī ad cande aīa dīe.
Vide q̄d illud sit q̄ ē idūta filia saluationis. & esto stabilis. & nūq̄m cades. Aīa illa. O nescio q̄d faciā. aut ubi fugiā. oue m̄ n̄ possū p̄fice-re hoc q̄ sū idūta. Certe illud uolo abicere. Virentes. O felix. Scientia. o misera aīa. q̄re abscondis faciē tuā corā creatore tuo. Scientia dī ad aīa illā. Tu nescis nec uidēs nec sapis illū. q̄ te cōstima. Aīa illa. O s; creauit mundū. n̄ facio illi iniuriā. s; uolo uti illo. Suggestio diaboli. ad cande aīa dīe. fatue fatue. q̄d p̄dē t̄ laborare. Respice mundū.
& aplectē te magno honore. Vtutes. Heu heu nos iūntes plangamꝝ & lugramꝝ q̄a ouis dī fugit uirtū.
Humilitas. Ego humilitas regina inmū dī uirtū uos eadē Responsū

ofuam Humilitas
nec uos subarbo in hoc tēp nisi sue diaboli inmū sic p̄ter m̄ me oīa tu v
q̄d d̄s ut q̄d in cū m̄ ille am lari uol
te. hūm
tam. y
pore gale gent cū ē uobis uirtū aīa i do ab n̄ am nec fu te p̄d
Nunc
q̄m i serp
Curte

198 inimū dīo. Venite ad me oīs īmīes. ⁊ enu-trīa uos ad regnandū p dīa dragmā.
⁊ ad coronandū ī p seuerantia felice.
Responsū uirtutū. O glōsa regina ⁊ osuauiissima mediatrix. libentē uenīo.
Humilitas. Idō dilectissime filie. te-neo uos ī regali thalamo. O filie īsrē. sub arbore susceperunt uos dīs. unde ī hoc tēpore recordamini plantationis sue. Gaudet g filie syon. Strept diaboli. ad humilitatē. ⁊ andrē. q īmīes. Que ē hec potestas. qd nullus sit pter dīm. Ego autē dico. Quolue-rit me ⁊ uoluntatē suā seq dabo illi oīa. tu v cū tuis seqcib; nichil habes qd dare possis. qā enā uos oīs nesci-tis qd sitis. Humilitas respondet. Ego cū meis sodalib; bene scio qd tu es ille antiquus draco. q sup sūmū uo-lare uoluisti. s; ipse dīs īabyssū pīet te. Virtutes. Nos aū oīs ī excessis habitam. Planct cīde aīe penitentis ī corpore ⁊ uirtutes ī uocant. O uos re-gales uirtutes qm speciose ⁊ qm ful-gentes estis ī sūmo sole. ⁊ qm dulcis ē uīa mansio. Idō oue ī qā a uobis fugi. Virtutes. O fugitiue ueni ueni ad nos. dīs suscipiet te. Penitēs aīa ī corpore. Ach. ach feruens dulce. do absorbit me ī peccatis. Idō nā uisa sū ītrare. Virtutes. Noli timere nec fugere. qā pastor bonū querit ī te p dīa ouē suā. Penitēs aīa ī corpore.
Nunc ē ī necesse ut suscipiamis me. qm ī uulnerib; fereō qb; antiquus serpens me cīamīnauit. Virtutes.
Curre ad nos. ⁊ sequere uestigia illa ī qb; nūquā cades ī societate nrā.

⁊ dīs curabit te. Penitēs aīa ī corpore.
Ego peccator que fugi uīa plen ulcerib; ueniā ad uos. ut pbeatis mī scitū redēptionis. Virtutes. O aīa fugitiua esto robusta. ⁊ idue te. arma lucis. Penitēs aīa ī corpore. O u oīs milicia regine ⁊ ouos candida lilia ipsi cū rosea purpura. īclina te uos ad me. qā pegrina a uob exulaui. ⁊ adiuuate me. ut ī sanguine filii dī possi surgere. Et o uīa medicina humilitas pbe m auxiliū qā supbia ī multīs uiciis fregit me. multas cicatrices ī imponēs. Nē fugio ad te. Idō suscipe me. Humilitas adūmīes. O oīs īmīes suscipite lugentē peccatōrē ī suis cicatricib; ppter uulnera xpi.
⁊ pducite eū ad me. Virtutes ad penitentē aīa ī corpore. Nolum te reducere. ⁊ nolum te deserere ⁊ oīs celestis milicia gaudet sup te. g dēcet nos ī simphonia sonare.
Humilitas ad eandē penitentē aīa.
O misera filia uolo te amplecti. qā magrī medicus dura ⁊ amara uulnera ppter te passus ē. Suggestio diaboli ad eandē penitentē aīa.
Que es. aut und uenis. Tu amplexa-ta es me. ⁊ ego foras educaui te. s; nē ī reuisione tua cūfundis me. ego aū pugna mea deiciā te. Penitēs aīa contē diabolu. Ego oīs uias tuas ma-las ēē cognoui. Idō fugi a te. ī aū o illusor pugno cū te. Penitēs aīa. ad humilitatē. Und tu o regina humilitas tuo medicamine adiuua me. Humilitas aduictoria & adreliq's uirtutes. O uictoria que istū in celo superasti curre cū sodalib; tuis.

& o's ligare diabolu hūc. Victoria adimittes. O fortissimi & gl'osissimi militēs. uenite & adiuuate me. istū fallacē uincere. Virtutes aduictoria.
Odulcissima bellatrix itorrente fonte q' absorbit lupū rapacē.
O gl'osa coronata. nos libentē militamus tecū cont' illusorē hūc. Humilitas adimittes. Ligare q' istū o uirtutes p'elare. Virtutes. O regina nrā t' parebim' & p'cepta tua iōib; adimplebim'. Victoria. Gaudere o sociq'a antiquus serpens ligat' ē. Vir-tes. Laus t' xpe rex anglō. O d's q's estu q' in te metipso hoc magnū cōsiliū habuisti q'd destrux' infernale haustū in publicanis & peccatorib; q' nūc lucet īsupna bonitate. Unde o rex. laus t' sit. O pat' om'p's exte flyte fons igneo ardore p'duc filios tuos in rectū uenitū uelox aq'rū. Naut & nos eos hoc m' p'ducam' ierlm' Et uoces iste erant ut uox multitudinis. cū multitudo uoces suas iānū extollit. Et son' earū na p'nsū me q'd eas absq; difficultate tardi-tatis intellexi. Audiuq; uocē ex eodē lucido aere dicentē m'. Laudes supno creatori i'cessabili uoce cor-dis & oris dande s' cū ipse nō solū stantes & erectos s; etiā cadentes et curuatos īsupnis sedib; sua grā collocat. Unde uidet o ho lucidissi mū aerē candorē gaudi supnoꝝ cuius designantē m'q' audis iōib; p'dictis significatiomb; mirabili m' diūsu gen' musicōꝝ īlaudib; cūm supnoꝝ gaudiōꝝ iūua uertans formē p'seuerantiū. ac ī q'retis reuocant' ad laudes eorundē gaudiōꝝ. q'm ut aer cōphendit & sustinet ea que sub celo s' nā ut audis iōib; p'monstrans t' mirabilib; dī suauis et dulcis symphonia sonat ī gaudio mi-racula electōꝝ. īsupna ciuitate existentiū & i'dō suauē deuotione p'sistentiū. ac ī queretis ī curuationē illōꝝ q's am-quis serpens p'dere tēptat. q's tam diuina uirt' ad societate beatorū gaudiōꝝ fortit' p'duc p'ferēs i' eis illa mysteria que humanis m'ib; ad t'ra inclinat s' incognita. & ī exhortatione ad salutē p'p'loꝝ q'b; diaboli c' īsidie repugnant s; ipse uirtutes eas opprimunt. na tam q'd sic fideles hoīes tandē a peccatis ad supna p'penitentiā t'nsunt. quō ibi uirtutes īm'ib; fidelium ad redēptionē ipsoꝝ uicis resistunt q'b; illi diabolico afflatu sangant' s; eis for-tissima fortitudine superant. hoīes in peccatis p'lapsi. diuino nutu ad peni-tentia reuertunt' cū p'q'r't & deflēt antiora facta. & cū cōsiderant & cauēt posteriora. Qua p'p't & son' ille ut uox multitudinis īlaudib; de supnis g'dib; ī armonia symphonie. iūuanimitate & ī concordia gl'am & hono-rē celestū cūm ruminat. ita q'd & ipsū hoc sursū tollit q'd uerbū palā p'fert. Sic & uerbū corp' designat. symphonia ū sp'm manifestat. q'm

x.

xj.

xij.

2. st.

tis & altitudinis pfusus de me hortat dices. Laudate eū in sono tube. laud eū in psalterio & cythara. laud eū in tympano & choro. laud eū in cordis & organo. laud eū in cymbalis iubilati onis. oīs sps laudet dñm. Hoc tale ē. yos q̄ dñm simplici iūmone pura deuotione scms. adorans & diligens. laud eū in sono tube. idē in sensu rationalitatis. q̄a p̄dmo anglo cum s̄ semicrib; ip̄dione cadente agni na beatorū spmū iūernate rationa bilis p̄fiterē. dñm q̄. fidei dilectione adheserit. Laudatq; eū in psalterio p̄funde deuotionis & cythara mel lissimū canoris. qm̄ tuba sonante psal teriu & psalterio canente cythara p̄cedit. sic & beatis anglis iāmore uermatis pseuerantib; de inde hoīe creato p̄phete inmirabilib; uocib; surrexerit. q̄s apli indulcissimis ubis subsecuti s̄. Et laud eū in tympano morumificationis. & in choro exultan onis. q̄a p̄ cythara tympanū. p̄ tym panū chorus exultat. quēadmodū aplis ūba salutis p̄dicantib; marty res iū honore dī iū corporib; suis diu sa supplicia sustinuerit. de q̄b; exiō sacerdotalis officii ueraces doctores surrexerit. Laudatq; eū in cordis humane redēptionis. & iū organo diuine p̄tectionis. qm̄ choro exul tante uoces cordarū & organi se manifestant. sic et ueris doctorib; iū officio beatitudinis uermate osten dentib; ūgines p̄cesserit. que dī filij uerū hominē uelut iū cordis amauerit.

& uerū dñm uelut iū organo adorauerit. eū ipsū dñm uerū hoīe & uerū dñm cre diderit. q̄d ē hoc. q̄a eū fili dī p̄salute hoīū carnē assūpsit. glām diuinā tis n̄ amisit. Unde & beate ūgines ip sū sibi sponsū eligentes. uerū hoīe in desponsatione & uerū dñm iū castitate ipsū fidei deuotione app̄henderit.
S; & laud eū in cymbalis bene sonan tib; idē in his assertionib; que bonū sanū in uero gaudio faciunt. eū hoīes inimicis peccatorū iacentes. ad sup̄nā cellitudinē diuina iūspiratione cō puncti. se sursum ab imis tollunt. Lau dateq; eū in cymbalis iubilationis. u delicet iū assertionib; diuine laudis. ubi uirtuose iūmtes uictoriā fortis sime facientes uicia iū hoīb; opp̄munt.
& eos foris desiderio ad beatitudinē uerē remunerationis iū bonis pseue rantes p̄ducunt. Unde oīs sps q̄ ben uolentiā habet credendi iū dñm & ho norandi eū laudet dñm idē illū q̄ dñs oīm ē. q̄a iūstū ē ut ille q̄ unā desiderat hūc q̄ unā ē glificet. Et iterū audiui uocē exp̄dicto lucido aere dicentē. O rex altissime laus t̄ sit. q̄ in simplici & in indocto hoīe fa cis hec S; & iterū uox de celo uocife ratione maxima clamabat. dices.
Audite & attendite oīs. q̄ sup̄nā re munerationē & beatitudinē habē desideratis. Quos hoīes q̄ credula corda habetis. & sup̄nā remunera tionē exspectatis. sermones istos suscipite. & eos in iūmiora corda urā ponite. nec a dimonitionē istā ut iūstano Nā ego test

uini & uer dico atq; m poterit. Un de que moue militans s as sine aq binē uerū refectioni culū meū
ibi ē ubi f dit. q̄d ē b quecūq; di nec iūmū inlatitudi ego sū car sup̄bia de dilatant. i Nūq̄d n̄ p scabelli s itudinē s hebetis iū unt sapien & q̄q; tu sibi parat p̄uillo ē deici. sic sup̄am. h hūi libri sup eū c reue me a decapit similabo me iūm dicta sua

inuisitatione ur̃a recusare.
 Nā ego testificator uernans uiuus & uerus loquēs & n̄ tacēs d̄s. dico atq; merū dico. Q̄s m̄ p̄ualere poterit. Qui hoc t̄ptauerit. deiciā eū. Unde hō mōtē n̄ app̄hendat quē mouere n̄ poterit. s; i ualle hu militans subsistat. S; q̄s t̄nsilī ui as sine aq̄. uidelicet ille q̄ se i tur binē uentilat. & q̄ fruct̄ sine refectiōe diuidit. Et q̄m tabna culū meū ibi erit. S; tabnaculū meū ibi ē. ubi sp̄s s̄s irrigatiōe suā fun dit. Qd̄ ē hoc. Ego i medio sū. Quom̄.
 Quicūq; digne me app̄hendit. hic nec i latitudine nec i pfunditate. nec i latitudine cadet. Qd̄ ē hoc. Quia ego sū carnis illa q̄m nec flagrans supbia deiecit. nec pfundi casus dilaniat. nec latitudo malōr̄ c̄terit.
 Nūq̄d n̄ possū edificare i latitudine scabelli solis. Fortes q̄ i uallib; for titudine suā ostendunt me c̄tēpnūt hebetes i sonitu turbinū me abici unt sapientes cibū meū renuunt.
 & q̄s q̄s turrī scdm̄ uoluntatē suā sibi parat. S; ego istos i paruo & pusillo c̄funda sic goliath i puero deieci. sic & holofernē i iudith supau. Unde & q̄s q̄s mystica ūba huius libri recusauerit arcū meū sup eū extendā. & sagittis pha rere me. eū t̄nsfigā. & coronā c̄ de capite ipsi abiciā. atq; eū illis simulabo q̄ in oreb; ceciderūt eū c̄tra me murmurauerūt. S; q̄cūq; male dicta sua cont̄ p̄phetiā istā p̄u lerit maledictio illa q̄m ysaac p̄u lit sup eū ueniat. & benedictione ce lestis rosis repleat. q̄ eā amplexus fuerit. & q̄ eā in corde suo tenuerit. ac q̄ eā in uias planas p̄duxerit. Et q̄ eā gustauerit & in memoriā suā posuerit. fiat mons myrrē & thu ris & omniū aromati. & dilatio multarū benedictionū de bene dictione i benedictionē ascendēs sic abrahā. atq; noua nupta spon sa agni sibi illū colūā in c̄spectu dī copulet. S; q̄s hec ūba digni dī temere absconderit. & ea p̄rabie suā minuerit. aut in alienū locū alienū humani sensus causa ab dux erit. & ita deriserit. ille repbat̄ sit.

 Et digni dī c̄teret illū. Laud̄ laud̄ q̄ d̄m beata uiscera in oib; his mi racul̄s que d̄s c̄struit in molli forma speciei excelsi. q̄m ipse p̄ uidit in p̄ma apparitiōe coste uiri illi que d̄s creauit. Qui autē acutas aures int̄ioris intellectus habet. hic in ardente amore spe culi mei aduerba hec anhelet. & ea in c̄scientia animi sui conscri bat. aōj.

in umbra ma n̄ d̄m illā p̄aget.

Cod. Salem. 10,16

Un. Bibl. Heidelberg

Dechthild of Magdeburg

THE FLOWING LIGHT OF THE GODHEAD

TRANSLATED AND INTRODUCED BY FRANK TOBIN

PREFACE BY
MARGOT SCHMIDT

1998

PAULIST PRESS
NEW YORK • MAHWAH

PROLOGUE TO THE LUX DIVINITATIS¹

Prologue of Brother Heinrich, Lector,
of the Order of Preaching Brothers²

We read in the Book of Judges (4:4-5) that the holy woman Deborah, the wife of Lappidoth, full of the spirit of prophecy, was accustomed to set up her tent under a palm tree in the hills of Ephraim, residing there as a solitary to devote herself to God alone. Israel, God's people, would go up to her seeking judgment in all matters. Likewise, the Fourth Book of Kings (2 Kgs 22:14-20) relates that Huldah, a prophetess living in Jerusalem, enlightened by the Holy Spirit as to the hidden judgment of God, informed the holy king Josiah about the coming scourges threatening the people. This just and pious king had sent priests and levites to her so that the holy woman might seek the Lord's guidance and pray on his behalf regarding the imminent misfortunes. Certainly there were at the time high priests of the seed of Aaron and other kinds of priests and levites learned in the law and of high moral integrity; yet, in spite of this, the Holy Spirit did not divulge his secret counsels to them. Rather, for these times he revealed them to these holy women of the weak sex, as he saw fit.

Quite often, in fact, almighty God has chosen what is weak in the world to confound what is stronger for its good. Therefore, let no one wonder or, lacking trust, fall into disbelief if God in the time of grace renews his marvels. He, who in the time of the law of Moses mercifully saw fit to perform similar works, now reveals his mysteries to the fragile sex. Because the people of Israel

believed Deborah's prophecy, they won freedom from oppression and victory over their enemies. Also, a king, a religious man, was found worthy to gain solace and mercy through the prayer and advice of the prophetess Huldah. So, too, shall all who write or read this book, if they approach it with pious intent, attain an increase in solace and spiritual grace, as the Lord promises them in the book itself.

This writing must be read in a pious spirit, however. It must be understood, as is the case with other holy writings, in a wholesome manner and in good faith. In this way the reader will find nothing scandalous or offensive in it, and the writing itself will not be subjected to any perverse claim of falsehood. Its author is the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit; it treats Christ and the church, as well as Satan and his body.³ Its manner of proceeding is both historical and mystical⁴; its purpose is the ordering of the present life, the useful calling to mind of things past, and the prophetic disclosure of things to come. The sincere devotion and dove-like simplicity of the woman through whom this writing was made public should completely suffice to guarantee the truth of what the pious faithful are asked to believe. From childhood she led a pure and innocent life. In her youth, at the urging of the Lord, she left everything she stood to gain and became an exile in a foreign land, leading a life of voluntary poverty. Finally, after many tribulations and at an advanced age, she was received into the community of holy sisters at Helfta. She lived there for twelve years and, as is confirmed by their testimony,⁵ she flourished in the perfection of all virtues. She especially practiced charity, humility, long-suffering, and meekness. Raised up above all things by contemplation and made a sharer of divine illuminations and revelations, she was worthy to perceive from the Lord through her prophetic spirit numerous intimate divine mysteries concerning things past, present, and to come. Now, having been received by the Bridegroom of virgins, this holy virgin enjoys fully him whom she loved and whose wondrous love adorned his beloved with many marvels.

The revelations and visions that almighty God has deigned to disclose to his elect are founded upon and have their origin in the directness of their faith. Their purity of mind demands and expects them. The holiness of their life authenticates and corroborates them. For celestial secrets lie open to such people, and their testimony is greeted with belief by the hearts of those who hear them.

For this reason, before beginning this book, which is written in a primitive tongue and contains certain marvelous and previously unknown mysteries, I thought it worthwhile to point out beforehand a bit about the holiness of the person to whom these things have been revealed by heaven, so that the marvels mentioned in word might have the support of deeds more marvelous. For who shall describe for us more vividly the perfection of the elect than those very ones in whom and through whom God carries out his works? And who could have made known to the church more beneficially or better the perfection of Paul than Paul himself? In like manner, this holy one made public what the divine Spirit had wrought in her and with her, and proclaims his praise and glory.⁶

*LATIN FOREWORD WITH
TABLE OF CONTENTS AND
MIDDLE HIGH GERMAN TRANSLATION¹*

In the year of our Lord 1250 and for almost fifteen years thereafter this book was revealed² in German by the Lord through grace to a certain beguine who was a holy virgin in body and spirit. In humble simplicity, in the poverty of exile, weighed down by scorn, and in heavenly contemplation, as is made clear in this writing, she served the Lord with great devotion for more than forty years, following perfectly the footsteps of the brothers of the Order of Preachers. Always progressing day by day, she continually became better. It was compiled³ by a brother of the aforementioned order and contains many good things, as is noted in these titles:

On the Trinity: II 3; III 9; IV 12 and 14; V 26
 On Christ: II 3; IV 14; V 23 and 27
 On Our Lady: I 22; II 3; V 23
 On the Nine Orders of Angels: I 6; III 1; V 1
 On the Special Excellence of Certain Saints: IV 20, 22, and 23
 On the Evilness of Demons: II 24; IV 2 and 17; V 1; V 29
 On the Dignity of a Human Being: I 44; IV 14
 On Rapture and the Separation of the Soul from the Flesh: I 5
 On the Description of Heaven: III 1
 On the Description of Hell: III 21
 On the Many Kinds of Purgatory: II 8; III 15 and 17; V 14 and 15

LATIN FOREWORD

On Many Virtues and Vices: I 22 and 25; III 7 and 14; IV 4;
and on Charity Especially: III 13
On the Order of Preachers at the End of the World at the
Time of the Antichrist: IV 27
And on many things unheard of that you shall understand if you read this book nine times in faith, humility, and devotion.⁴ Here is prophecy about the past, present, and future.
Here also is the Song of the Three Persons: V 26.

[Middle High German translation:]

In the year 1250 after God's birth and for the fifteen years thereafter this book was revealed in German by God to a sister.
She was a holy virgin both in body and in spirit. She served God devotedly in humble simplicity, in the poverty of exile, in heavenly contemplation, and weighed down by scorn, for more than forty years, and followed steadfastly and completely the light and the teaching of the Order of Preachers, and went forward from day to day and improved herself daily. But a brother of the same order gathered together and wrote this book; and much good is contained in this book on many subjects, as is noted in this list.
You should read it through nine times in faith, humility, and devotion.

Book I

One Should Receive This Book Eagerly, For It Is God Himself
Who Speaks the Words¹

This book I hereby send as a messenger to all religious people,² both the bad and the good; for if the pillars fall,³ the building cannot remain standing; and it signifies me alone and proclaims in praiseworthy fashion my intimacy. All who wish to understand this book should read it nine times.

This Book Is Called a Flowing Light of the Godhead

"Ah, Lord God, who made this book?"

"I made it in my powerlessness, for I cannot restrain myself as to my gifts."⁴

"Well then, Lord, what shall the title of the book be, which is to your glory alone?"

"It shall be called a flowing light of my Godhead into all hearts that live free of hypocrisy."

I. *How Love and the Queen Spoke to Each Other*⁵

The soul came to Love, greeted her with great deference, and said:

"God greet you, Lady Love."

"May God reward you, Mistress and Queen."

"Lady Love, you are indeed perfect."

"Mistress and Queen, that is why I am above all things."

"Lady Love, you struggled many a year before you forced the exalted Trinity to pour itself utterly into the humble virginal womb of Mary."

"Mistress and Queen, that was to your honor and benefit."

"Lady Love, you have now come here to me and have taken from me everything I ever gained on earth."

"Mistress and Queen, you have made a happy exchange."
 "Lady Love, you have taken from me my childhood."
 "Mistress and Queen, in its place I have given you heavenly freedom."
 "Lady Love, you have taken from me all my youth."
 "Mistress and Queen, in its place I have given you many a holy virtue."
 "Lady Love, you have taken from me possessions, friends, and relatives."
 "Come now, Mistress and Queen, that is a petty complaint."
 "Lady Love, you have taken from me the world, worldly honor, and all earthly riches."
 "Mistress and Queen, I shall make that up to you in one hour with the Holy Spirit on earth, just as you wish it."
 "Lady Love, you have brought me to such a pass that my body is racked by a strange weakness."
 "Mistress and Queen, in exchange I have given you much sublime knowledge."
 "Lady Love, you have devoured my flesh and my blood."
 "Mistress and Queen, you have thereby been purified and drawn into God."
 "Lady Love, you are a robber; for this as well shall you make reparation."
 "Mistress and Queen, then take me."
 "Lady Love, now you have recompensed me a hundredfold on earth."
 "Mistress and Queen, in addition you may demand God and all his kingdom."⁶

2. *Concerning Three Persons and Three Gifts*⁷

God's true greeting, coming from the heavenly flood out of the spring of the flowing Trinity, has such force that it takes away all the body's strength and reveals the soul to herself, so that she sees herself resembling the saints, and she takes on a divine radiance. Then the soul leaves the body, taking all her power, wisdom, love, and longing. Just the tiniest bit of her life force remains with the body as in a sweet sleep.⁸ Then she sees one complete God in three Persons and knows the three Persons in one God undivided.

He greets her in courtly language that one does not hear in this kitchen, clothes her in the garments that one fittingly wears in a palace, and surrenders himself into her power. Then she can

wish for and ask whatever she wants. It is granted her and she is enlightened. What she is not enlightened about is the first cause of the Three Persons.⁹ Then he draws her further to a secret place. There she is not permitted to beg on anyone's behalf or ask, because all alone with her he wants to play a game that the body does not know, nor the peasants at their plows, nor knights at their tournaments, nor his lovely mother, Mary—not even she may play it there. Then she soars further to a blissful place of which I neither will nor can speak. It is too difficult; I do not dare, for I am a very sinful person. Yet when infinite God brings the unfathomable soul to the heights, she loses sight of the earth in her astonishment and is not aware of ever having been on earth. Just when the game is at its best, one has to leave it.

Then God in full vigor speaks: "Young Miss, you must go down." She shudders and laments¹⁰ her banishment. She says: "Lord, you have raised me up¹¹ so high here that I shall not be able to praise you in any fitting degree when in my body. Rather, I shall suffer as an outcast and shall struggle against the body." And he says:

"Oh, dear dove,¹²
 Your voice is string music to my ears.
 Your words are spices for my mouth.
 Your longings are the lavishness of my gift."

She says: "Dear Lord, it has to be as the master of the house¹³ commands." And she sighs with all her might, which awakens the body.¹⁴

Then the body speaks: "Well, woman, just where have you been? You come back so love-struck, lovely, and vibrant, free and witty. Your carrying on has cost me my appetite, sense of smell, color, and all my strength."

She says: "Shut up, murderer! Quit your bellyaching. I'll always be on my guard with you around. That my enemy has been wounded—what do we care about that? It makes me glad."

This is a greeting that has many streams. It pours forth from the flowing God into the poor, parched soul unceasingly with new knowledge, in new contemplation, and in the special enjoyment of the new presence. O sweet God, inwardly on fire, outwardly blossoming, now that you have given this to the least,¹⁵ I would like to experience the life that you have given to your greatest. For that I would be willing to endure suffering even longer.

No one is able or is permitted to receive this greeting unless one has gone beyond oneself and has become nothing. In this greeting I want to die living.¹⁶ This the blind saints cannot ruin for me. They are the ones who love and do not know.¹⁷

3. *The Handmaids of the Soul and the Blow of Love*¹⁸

All holy Christian virtues are the handmaids of the soul. The sweet listlessness of the soul complains to Love of her troubles:

"Well then, dearest Maiden, for a long time now you have been my chambermaid. Now tell me, where is all this leading? You have hunted me, trapped me, bound me, and wounded me so deeply that I shall never be healthy again. You have meted out to me many a cudgel blow. Tell me, am I ever going to recover from you? If I were not going to be killed by your hand, it would be better for me never to have known you."¹⁹

Love: "That I hunted you was my fancy.

That I captured you was my desire.

That I bound you made me happy.

When I wounded you, you were joined to me.

When I cudgel you, I take you into my power.

I drove God the almighty from heaven,

Took his human life,

And returned him to his Father in honor.

How do you, vile worm, expect to survive before me?"

The Soul: "Speak, my Empress, I fear a small secret medicine God has often given to me that I might thrive even in your presence."

Love:

"If one does not want the prisoners dead,

One gives them water and bread.

The medicine that God has often given you

Is nothing other than a brief return to human life.

But when your Easter Day comes

And your body receives the death blow,

Then I'll embrace you tightly

And permeate you utterly,

And I'll steal you from your body

And give you to your Lover."

The Soul: "O Love, this letter I have written out of your mouth.
Now give me, Lady, your seal."

Love: "Whoever has succeeded in loving God more than self

Knows well where to get the seal.

It lies between the two of us."

The Soul speaks:

"Be silent, dear one, and speak no more.

Dearest of all maidens, let all creatures, myself included,

Bow down before you.

Tell my Lover that his bed is made ready.

And that I am weak with longing for him."

If this letter is too long, this is the reason: I was on the meadow where I found flowers of all kinds. This is a sweet lament: Who dies of love shall be buried in God.

4. The Soul's Journey to Court During Which God Reveals Himself

When the needy soul comes to the court, she is judicious and refined. She gazes at her God in high spirits. Oh, how tenderly is she welcomed there! She remains silent, longing boundlessly for his praise. With great longing he reveals to her his divine heart. It resembles red gold burning in a great fire of coals. He places her into his glowing heart. When the exalted Sovereign and the little waif thus embrace and are united as water and wine, she turns to nothing and is transported out of herself.²⁰ When she has no strength left, he is as lovesick for her as he always was; for he neither increases nor decreases. Then she says:

"Lord, you are my lover,
My desire,
My flowing fount,
My sun;
And I am your reflection."

This is the journey to court of a loving soul that cannot exist without God.

5. *The Torment and the Praise of the Soul*²¹

My body is in great torment, my soul is in sublime bliss; for she has both gazed upon and embraced her Lover in her arms. He causes her, poor wretch, torment. When he draws her up, she flows. She cannot hold herself in check until he brings her within himself. She would like to speak but cannot, so utterly has she been enmeshed in sublime union with the awe-inspiring Trinity. Then he leaves her for a short while, that she might feel longing. She desires his praise but does not know how to find it as she would like. She would even want him to send her into hell that he might be praised beyond measure by all creatures.²² She looks at him and says to him, "Lord, give me your blessing." He looks at her, draws her up again, and gives her a greeting²³ that the body cannot express.

Then the body speaks to the soul:

"Where have you been?
I can't take it anymore."

And the soul says:

"Quiet, you are a fool.
I want to be with my Lover,
Even if it means you would perish.
I am his joy, he is my torment."

This is her torment. May she never recover!
May you take this torment upon yourself as well,
And may you never escape it!

6. *The Nine Choirs: How They Sing*²⁴

Now hear,²⁵ my Beloved; listen with spiritual ears. Thus do the nine choirs sing:

We praise you, Lord, that you sought us in your humility.
We praise you, Lord, that you have kept us in your mercy.
We praise you, Lord, that you have glorified us in your humiliation.
We praise you, Lord, that you have provided for us in your generosity.
We praise you, Lord, that you have arranged us in rank in your wisdom.
We praise you, Lord, that you have shielded us with your might.
We praise you, Lord, that you have sanctified us with your nobility.
We praise you, Lord, that you have instructed us in your intimacy.
We praise you, Lord, that you have elevated us in your love.

7. God's Curse in Eight Things

I curse you:
May your body die.
May your words perish.
May your eyes close.
May your heart dissolve.
May your soul rise up.
May your body remain.
May your human faculties perish.
May your spirit stand in the presence of the Holy Trinity!

8. The Most Lowly Praises God in Ten Things

O you burning Mountain.
O you chosen Sun.
O you full Moon.
O you bottomless Well.
O you unscalable Height.

O you Brightness without measure.
 O Wisdom without ground.
 O Mercy without restraint.
 O Might without opposition.
 O Crown of all honors!
 The most lowly person you ever created praises you.

9. With Three Things You Duell on the Heights

Those who are on fire in true love and build on the firm ground of truth and bear abundant fruit for a blessed end—they dwell on the heights.

Explanation: This is about the Seraphim.

10. Who Loves God Triumphs over Three Things

Whoever conquers the world,
 And takes from his body all useless desires,
 And overcomes the devil,
 This is the soul that loves God.
 If the world gives her a shove,
 She does not suffer much.
 If the flesh gives her a jolt,
 The spirit will not get sick from it.
 If the devil gives her a push,
 The soul pays no heed.
 She loves
 And keeps on loving,
 And she does not know how to do otherwise.

11. Four Battle for God

O dove free of gall.²⁶
 O maiden free of blemish.
 O knight free of wounds.
 O liegeman free of hesitation.
 These are the four whom God can count on in battle.

12. *The Soul Praises God for Five Things*²⁷

O Emperor of all honors.
 O Crown of all sovereigns.
 O Wisdom of all the learned.
 O Giver of all gifts.
 O Deliverer of all imprisonments.

13. How God Comes to the Soul

I come to my beloved as the dew upon the flower.²⁸

14. How the Soul Receives and Praises God

Ah, joyous sight!
 Ah, lovely greeting!
 Ah, dear embrace!
 Lord, the wonder of you has overwhelmed me.
 Your grace has crushed me.
 O you lofty Crag,
 You are so nicely honeycombed.
 In you no one can rest but doves and nightingales.

15. How God Receives the Soul

Welcome, my precious dove.
 You have flown so keenly over the earth
 That your feathers reach to heaven.

16. God Likens the Soul to Four Things

You taste like a grape.
 Your fragrance is like balsam.²⁹
 Your radiance is like the sun.
 You are an enhancement of my most sublime love.

17. The Soul Praises God About Five Things

O you pouring God in your gift!
 O you flowing God in your love!
 O you burning God in your desire!
 O you melting God in the union with your beloved!
 O you resting God on my breasts!²⁹
 Without you I cannot exist.

18. God Likens the Soul to Five Things

O you beautiful rose among the thorns!
 O you fluttering bee in the honey!
 O you unblemished dove in your being!
 O you beautiful sun in your radiance!
 O you full moon in the firmament!
 I cannot turn away from you.

19. God Cares the Soul in Six Ways

You are my softest pillow,
 My most lovely bed,
 My most intimate repose,
 My deepest longing,
 My most sublime glory.
 You are an allurements to my Godhead,
 A thirst for my humanity,
 A stream for my burning.

20. The Soul Praises God in Return in Six Ways

You are my resplendent mountain,
 A feast for my eyes,
 A loss of myself,
 A tempest in my heart,
 A defeat and retreat of my power,
 My surest protection.³¹

21. Of Knowledge and Enjoyment

Love without knowledge is as darkness to the wise soul.³²
 Knowledge without its fruition she likens to the pains of hell.
 Fruition short of death she cannot lament enough.

22. St. Mary's Message and How One Virtue Follows Another. How the Soul Was Made in the Jubilus³³ of the Trinity, and How St. Mary Nursed All the Saints and Nurses Them Still

The sweet dew of the eternal Trinity gushed forth from the fountain of the everlasting Godhead into the flower of the chosen maid; and the fruit of this flower is an immortal God and a mortal man and a living hope of eternal life. And our Redeemer became a Bridegroom. The bride became exhilarated at the sight of his noble countenance;

Under this immense force she loses herself.
 In this most dazzling light she becomes blind in herself.
 And in this utter blindness she sees most clearly.
 In this pure clarity she is both dead and living.

The longer she is dead, the more blissfully she lives,³⁴
 The more blissfully she lives, the more she experiences,³⁵
 The less she becomes, the more flows to her.
 The more she fears,...³⁶
 The richer she becomes, the poorer she is.
 The deeper she dwells,³⁷ the more she expands.
 ..., the more forbearing she is.
 The deeper her wounds become, the more violently she struggles.

The more loving God is to her, the higher she soars.
 The more radiantly she shines in the reflected effulgence of the God-head, the closer she approaches him.
 The more she labors, the more contentedly she rests.
 ..., the more she grasps.
 The more quiet her silence, the louder she calls.
 ..., the greater the marvels she works with his strength in proportion to her power.

The more his desire grows, the more extravagant their wedding celebration becomes.
 The narrower the bed of love becomes, the more intense are the embraces.
 The sweeter the kisses on the mouth become, the more lovingly they gaze at each other.
 The greater the distress in which they part, the more he bestows upon her.
 The more she consumes, the more she has.
 The more humbly she takes her leave, the sooner she returns.
 The more ardent she remains, the sooner she bursts into flame.
 The more she burns, the more beautifully she glows.
 The more God's praise is spread abroad, the greater her desire becomes.

Tell me, where did our Redeemer become the Bridegroom?

In the jubilus of the Holy Trinity. When God could no longer contain himself, he created the soul and, in his immense love, gave himself to her as her own.³⁸

"What are you made of, Soul, that you ascend so high above all creatures, mingle with the Holy Trinity, and yet remain whole in yourself?"

"You have brought up the question of my origin. I shall tell you honestly: I was made by love in that very place.³⁹ For that reason no creature is able to give comfort to my noble nature or to open it up except love alone."

"Holy Mary, dear Lady, you are the mother of this wonder. When did this happen to you?"

"When our Father's jubilus was saddened by Adam's fall, so that he had to become angry, the Eternal Wisdom of the almighty Godhead intercepted the anger together with me. The Father chose me for his bride—that he might have something to love; for his darling bride, the noble soul, was dead. The Son chose me to be his mother, and the Holy Spirit received me as his beloved. Then I alone was the bride of the Holy Trinity and mother of orphans, and I brought them before God's eyes so that they might not all sink down, though some did. When I was thus the mother of many a banished child, my breasts became so full of the pure, spotless milk of true, generous mercy that I suckled the prophets and sages, even before I was born. Afterward, in my childhood, I suckled Jesus; later, in my youth, I suckled God's bride, Holy Christianity, under the cross when I was so desolate and wretched, as the sword of the physical suffering of Jesus cut spiritually into my soul."

Both his wounds and her breasts were open.

The wounds poured forth.

The breasts flowed.

The soul was invigorated and completely restored

As he poured the sparkling red wine

Into her red mouth.⁴⁰

As she was thus born and made healthy out of the open wounds, she was like a child, and very young. If she was going to recover completely after her death and birth, God's mother was going to have to be her mother and her nurse. This was and is as it should be, since God is her rightful father and she is his rightful bride. She resembles him in all parts.

"Lady, in your old age you suckled the holy apostles with your motherly instruction and with your powerful prayer, that God might reveal his honor and your will through them. Lady, thus did you suckle then and suckle still the hearts of martyrs with strong faith, the ears of confessors with holy protection, the virgins with your chastity, widows with constancy, married people with kindness, and sinners with patient hope."

"Lady, us, too, you must suckle, for your breasts are still so full that they are not likely to dry up. If you no longer wanted to suckle, the milk would cause you much pain. For truly, I have seen your breasts so full that seven streams pour out at one time from one breast over my body and over my soul. In that hour you relieve me of a labor that no friend of God can bear without inner suffering. In this same manner, you shall go on suckling until the last day. Then you shall become dry, for then God's children—and your children—will be weaned and fully grown for eternal life. Ah, then we shall know and see with inexpressible joy the milk and even the breasts themselves⁴¹ that Jesus so often kissed."⁴²

23. You Should Ask That God Love You Passionately, Often, and Long; Then You Shall Become Pure, Beautiful, and Holy⁴³

Ah, Lord, love me passionately, love me often, and love me long. For the more passionately you love me, the purer I shall become. The more often you love me, the more beautiful I shall become. The longer you love me, the holier I shall become here on earth.

24. How God Responds to the Soul

That I love you passionately comes from my nature, for I am love itself. That I love you often comes from my desire, for I desire to be loved passionately. That I love you long comes from my being eternal, for I am without an end and without a beginning.

25. The Way to Suffer Pain Willingly for God's Sake

God guides his chosen children along strange paths. This is a strange path and a noble path and a holy path that God himself trod: that a human being, though free of sin and guilt, suffer pain. Upon this path the soul that aches for God is joyful, for by nature she is joyful to her Lord, who suffered much pain because of his good deeds. Our dear Lord, the heavenly Father, delivered up his most beloved Son to be tormented by the heathens and martyred by the Jews despite his innocence. Now the time has come when some people, who have the appearance of being religious, torment the bodies of God's children and martyr their spirits. For he wants them to resemble his beloved Son who was tormented in body and soul.

26. The Path upon Which the Soul Draws the Senses and Is Free of Suffering of the Heart

It is a rarely traveled and lofty path upon which the devoted soul makes its way and guides the senses as one with sight guides a blind person. On this path the soul is free and lives without inner suffering, for she wants nothing but what her Lord wants, who arranges everything for the best.

27. How You Become Worthy of This Path and Keep to It and Become Perfect

Three things make a person worthy of this path—that one recognize it and enter upon it: first, that one submit to God relinquishing all human control, and that one piously hold on to God's grace and willingly keep it by being forgiving in all things as far as is possible for a human will. The second thing keeping a person on this path is that one welcome all things except for sin alone. The third thing keeping a person on this path is that one do all things equally for God's honor. Thus I think relieving my most basic need counts as much in God's sight as if I were in the highest state of contemplation that a human being can attain. Why? If I do it out of love in order to give honor to God, it is all one and the same. But when I sin, I am not on this path.

28. Love Shall Be Deadly, Boundless, and Unceasing; This Is the Folly of Fools

I delight in loving him who loves me, and I long to love him to the death, boundlessly, and without ceasing. Be happy, my soul, for your Life has died for love of you.⁴⁴ Love him so fiercely that you could die for him. Thus you burn ever more without ever being extinguished as a living flame in the vast fire of high majesty.

Thus you become full of the fire of love. This makes you here utterly happy.

You can no longer teach me anything:
 I cannot turn away from love.
 I must be its captive.
 Otherwise, I cannot go on living.
 Where it dwells, there I must remain,
 Both in death and in life.¹⁵
 This is the folly of fools
 Who live free of anguish.

29. *The Beauty of the Bridegroom and How the Bride Should Follow Him in Twenty-Three Steps of the Cross*¹⁶

Look at me, my bride.¹⁷ See how beautiful are my eyes, how comely is my mouth, how on fire is my heart, how agile are my hands, and how swift are my feet. So, follow me! You shall be martyred with me, betrayed in jealousy, hunted in ambush, taken prisoner in hate, bound in obedience, your eyes covered so that one will not tell you the truth, slapped by the rage of the world, brought to trial in confession, struck blows by penance, sent to Herod in derision, stripped naked by abandonment, scourged by poverty, crowned with trials, spat upon by disgrace, bearing your cross in the hatred of sin, crucified in voluntary withdrawal from all things, nailed to the cross by the holy virtues, wounded by love, dying on the cross in holy constancy, pierced in your heart by constant union, taken down from the cross in true victory over all your enemies, buried in oblivion, arisen from the dead in a holy end, and drawn up into heaven in God's breath.

30. *The Seven Hours*¹⁸

Matins:	Love in abundance, a sweet delight. ¹⁹
Prime:	Love's longing, a sweet burden.
Terce:	Love's pleasure, a sweet thirst.
Sext:	Love's feeling, a sweet cooling.
Nones:	Love's death, a sweet distress.
Vespers:	Love's flowing, a sweet pouring.
Compline:	Love's rest, a sweet joy. ²⁰

31. You Should Ignore Scorn

I was deeply scorned, and our Lord said: "Do not be much surprised. Since the precious unguent jar was utterly rejected and spat upon, what is going to happen to the vinegar jar, which has nothing of value about it?"

32. You Should Ignore Honors, Suffering, and Possessions. Be Sad After Sinning

If someone offers you honor, you should be ashamed.
 If someone makes you suffer, you should be glad.
 If someone does you a favor, you should be afraid.
 If you commit a sin against me, you should be sad in your heart.
 If you cannot feel sadness, then consider how greatly and how long I was saddened for your sake.

33. Concerning Food, Consolation, and Love

My soul spoke thus to her Lover:

"Lord, your generosity is food for my body wonderfully.
 Your mercy is consolation for my soul especially.
 Your love is repose for my being eternally."

34. In Suffering You Should Be a Lamb, a Turtledove, and a Bride

You are my lamb in your suffering;
 You are my turtledove in your sighing;
 You are my bride in your waiting.

35. The Desert Has Twelve Things

You should love nothingness.
 You should flee somethingness.²¹
 You should stand alone

And should go to no one.
 You should not be excessively busy.¹²
 And be free of all things.
 You should release captives
 And subdue the free.
 You should restore the sick
 And yet should have nothing yourself.
 You should drink the water of suffering
 And ignite the fire of love with the kindling of virtue:
 Then you are living in the true desert.

36. *Concerning Malice, Good Works, and Concerning a Marvel*¹³

With the malice of your enemies shall you be adorned.
 With the virtues of your heart shall you be glorified.
 With your good works shall you be crowned.
 With our mutual love shall you be raised on high.
 With my delightful marvel shall you be made holy.

37. The Soul Responds to God Saying She Is Unworthy of These Favors

O dearly Loved One, in undeserved humiliation I take delight.
 Virtues of the heart are my desire.
 Good works, alas, I do not have.
 Our mutual love I sully.
 Of your beautiful marvel I am utterly unworthy.

38. God Boasts That the Soul Has Overcome Four Sins

In heaven God boasts about the soul on earth that loves him
 and says:

“Look, how she who has wounded me comes ascending.
 She has cast from her the ape of the world.
 She has overcome the bear of wantonness.
 She has trod the lion of pride underfoot.

She has torn apart the jaws of the wolf of lust
 And, like the hunted stag, comes running to me, the spring.
 Like an eagle she rises out of the depths to the heights.”¹⁴

39. God Asks the Soul What She Is Bringing

“You rush restlessly about in your love.
 What do you bring me, my queen?”

40. She Replies: Something That Is Better than Seven Things

“Lord, I am bringing you my precious stone.
 It is greater than the mountains.
 It is wider than the world,
 Deeper than the sea,
 Higher than the clouds,
 Brighter than the sun,
 More numerous than the stars.
 It weighs more than the whole earth.”

41. God Asks in Praise What the Precious Stone Is Called

“O image of my divinity, Glorified by my humanity,
 Adorned with the Holy Spirit:
 Tell me, what is your precious stone called?”

42. The Precious Stone Is Called Heart’s Delight

“Lord, it is called my heart’s delight,
 Which I have taken back from the world,
 Retained for myself,
 And denied to all creatures.
 But now I can carry it no further.
 Lord, where shall I put it?”

43. Put Your Delight into the Trinity

"The delight of your heart
 You shall put nowhere else but into my divine heart
 And onto my human breast.
 There alone shall you be consoled
 And kissed by my Spirit."

44. The Sevenfold Path of Love, the Three Garments of the Bride, and the Dance

"Ah, loving Soul, do you wish to know what your path shall be?"
 "Yes, dear Holy Spirit, instruct me."
 "When you have passed beyond the need of sorrow and beyond the pain of confession and beyond the travail of penance and beyond the love of the world and beyond the temptations of the devil and beyond the influences of the flesh and beyond cursed self-will

that thrusts many a soul backward with such force that she never achieves genuine love; and when you have struck down all your many foes, then you are so weary that you say: 'Fair youth, I long for you. Where shall I find you?' And the youth says:

"I hear a voice;
 It speaks its piece on love.
 I have courted her many a day,
 But the voice never addressed me.
 Now I am moved;
 I must hurry to her!
 She is the one who bears anguish
 And love joined together."

In the sweet dew of the morning—this is the cloistered inwardness that first enters the soul—her chamberlains, the five senses, speak thus:

"Lady, you should dress yourself."

"Dear ones, where am I supposed to be going?"
 "We have definitely heard it whispered about that the prince intends to come to you in the dew and in the delightful song of the birds. Alas, lady, do not tarry!"

Then she puts on the slip of soft humility, so humble that it cannot bear anything underneath it. Over it comes a white dress of spotless chastity, so pure that it cannot bear anything in thought, word, or touch that might soil it. Then she puts on the cloak of her good name, which she has gilded with all the virtues. She enters into the woods, the company of holy people. There sings day and night the sweetest of the nightingales, the well-modulated union with God; and she hears many a sweet voice of birds, holy knowledge.⁵⁵ And still the young man did not come. So she sends out messengers because she is eager to dance. She sent for the faith of Abraham and the longing of the prophets and the chaste humility of our Lady, St. Mary, and all the holy virtues of our Lord Jesus Christ and all the excellence of his chosen ones. Then a splendid dance of praise takes place.

The young man finally comes and says to her: "Young lady, my chosen ones have shown off their dancing to you. Just as artfully should you now follow their lead."

She says:

"I cannot dance, Lord, unless you lead me.
 If you want me to leap with abandon,
 You must intone the song.
 Then I shall leap into love,
 From love into knowledge,
 From knowledge into enjoyment,
 And from enjoyment beyond all human sensations.
 There I want to remain, yet want also to circle higher still."⁵⁶

And the young man has to sing thus:
 "Through me into you
 And through you from me."

[The soul:] "Willingly with you,
 Woefully from you."⁵⁷

The young man speaks: "Young lady, you have done very well in this dance of praise. You shall have your way with the Son of the virgin, for you are delightfully weary. Come at noontime to the shade of the spring, into the bed of love. There in the coolness you shall refresh yourself with him."

The young lady says:

"Oh, Lord, that is too much
That she be your partner in love
Who has no love in her,
Unless she is moved by you."

Then the soul speaks to the senses, who are her chamberlains:
"Now for a while I am weary of the dance. Leave me; I must go and refresh myself."

And the senses say to the soul: "Lady, if you wish to find refreshing coolness in the love tears of Mary Magdalene, they would certainly soothe you."

[Soul:] "Be still, my lords, you do not understand at all what I mean.
Let me be on my own. For a time I want to drink undiluted wine."

[Senses:] "Lady, in the chastity of virgins great love is ready."
"That may be, but it isn't the noblest thing about me."
"In the blood of the martyrs you can cool yourself very well."
"I have been martyred so many times that I can't go there now."

"In the counsel of confessors the pure happily dwell."
"I shall always need counsel about what to do and what not to do; and yet I can't go there just now."
"In the wisdom of the apostles you will find much security."
"I have wisdom with me here. This shall always guide me to choose for the best."

"Lady, the angels are radiant and of love's color. If you wish to refresh yourself, rise up to them."

"The angels' bliss pains me in my love if I am not gazing upon their Lord and my Bridegroom."

"Then refresh yourself in the holy austere life that God granted to John the Baptist."

"The suffering I'm ready to bear, and yet the force of love transcends all austerity."

"Lady, if you want to refresh yourself in love, bow down to the small Child in the lap of the eternal virgin; and taste and see how the Joy of the angels sucked the unnatural milk."⁵⁸

"That is child's love, that one suckle and rock a baby. I am a full-grown bride. I want to go to my Lover."

[Senses:]

"Oh, Lady, if you go there,
We shall go completely blind.
The Godhead is so blazing hot,
As you well know,
That all the fire and all the glowing embers
That make the heavens and all the saints glow and burn
Have flowed out from his divine breath
And from his human mouth
According to the plan of the Holy Spirit.
How can you stay there even for an hour?"

[Soul:]

"A fish in water does not drown.
A bird in the air does not plummet.
Gold in fire does not perish.
Rather, it gets its purity and its radiant color there.
God has created all creatures to live according to their nature."

How, then, am I to resist my nature?

I must go from all things to God,

Who is my Father by nature,

My Brother by his humanity,

My Bridegroom by love,

And I his bride from all eternity.

Don't you believe I feel him intensely?⁵⁹

He can both burn powerfully and cool consolingly.
Now do not be overly sad.

You shall yet instruct me.

When I return, I shall certainly need your advice;

For the earth is full of snares."

Then the bride of all delights goes to the Fairest of lovers in the secret chamber of the invisible Godhead. There she finds the bed and the abode of love prepared by God in a manner beyond what is human. Our Lord speaks:

"Stay, Lady Soul."
 "What do you bid me, Lord?"
 "Take off your clothes."
 "Lord, what will happen to me then?"
 "Lady Soul, you are so utterly formed to my nature"⁶⁰
 That not the slightest thing can be between you and me.
 Never was an angel so glorious
 That to him was granted for one hour
 What is given to you for eternity.
 And so you must cast off from you
 Both fear and shame and all external virtues.
 Rather, those alone that you carry within yourself
 Shall you foster forever.
 These are your noble longing
 And your boundless desire.
 These I shall fulfill forever
 With my limitless lavishness."

"Lord, now I am a naked soul
 And you in yourself are a well-adorned God.
 Our shared lot is eternal life Without death."

Then a blessed stillness
 That both desire comes over them.
 He surrenders himself to her,
 And she surrenders herself to him.
 What happens to her then—she knows—
 And that is fine with me.⁶¹
 But this cannot last long.
 When two lovers meet secretly,
 They must often part from one another inseparably.⁶²

Dear friend of God, I have written for you this path of love.
 May God infuse it into your heart! Amen.

45. *The Eight Days in Which What the Prophets Longed For Was Accomplished*⁶³

This is a day of longing and blessed joy in the Annunciation of Christ.
 This is a day of peace and dear tenderness in the Birth of Christ.
 This is a day of charity and blessed communion,
 Maundy Thursday.
 This is a day of generosity and heartfelt love,
 Good Friday.
 This is a day of might and happy joy,
 the Resurrection.
 This is a day of faith and the pain of separation,
 the Ascension.
 This is a day of truth and burning consolation, Pentecost.
 This is a day of justice and the hour of truth,
 the Last Judgment.
 This is a week whose seven days we should celebrate with constancy.
 The eighth day our Lord wants to celebrate on the last day with us all.

46. The Diverse Adornments of the Bride; How She Comes to Her Brideroom; and How the Retinue Is Composed, Which Is Ninefold

The bride is clothed with the sun and has trodden the moon underfoot, and she is crowned with union.⁶⁴ She has a chaplain; this is fear. He has in his hand a golden rod; this is wisdom. The chaplain is clothed with the blood of the lamb and is crowned with honor; and wisdom is clothed with contentment and crowned with eternity. The bride has four bridesmaids. The first is love, who leads the bride. She is clothed with chasteness and is crowned with dignity. The second is humility, who holds the bride. She is clothed with lowliness and is crowned with eminence. The third bridesmaid is sorrow. She is clothed with small grapes⁶⁵ and is crowned with joy. The fourth bridesmaid is mercy. She is clothed with unguents⁶⁶ and is crowned with bliss. These two carry the coat of the bride, which is her holy reputation.

She has a bishop, which is faith. He brings the bride before the bridegroom. The bishop is clothed in precious stones and is crowned with the Holy Spirit. The bishop has two knights. The one is might and is clothed with battle and is crowned with victory. The other is daring and is clothed with boldness and crowned with all blessedness.

She has a chamberlain. That is watchfulness. He is clothed with constancy and is crowned with persistence. He carries a light before the bride and from behind her train. The light is understanding. It is clothed with insight and is crowned with generosity. The train is a holy conscience. It is clothed with good intention and is crowned with God's approval. She has a cup-bearer, which is longing. He is clothed with desire and is crowned with peace. She has a minstrel who is amiability. His harp is intimacy. He is clothed with favor and crowned with help.

The bride has five kingdoms. The first are her eyes. They are founded in tears and adorned with restraint. The second are thoughts. They are founded in struggle and are adorned with good counsel. The third is speaking. It is founded in usefulness and is adorned with trust. The fourth is hearing. It is founded in the word of God and is adorned with consolation. The fifth is touch. It is founded in strength and is adorned with noble habit. These five kingdoms have an overseer. This is guilt. He is clothed with confession and crowned with penance. She has a judge. He is clothed with discipline and crowned with patience.

The bride has a beast of burden. This is the body. It is bridled with worthlessness: contempt is its fodder and its stable is confession. The pack it carries is innocence. The bride has a crimson silk cloth, which is hope. It is clothed with truth and crowned with song. She has a palm in her hand, which is victory over sin. In her other hand she has a canister that is full of longing and love. This she wants to bring to her Lover. She is wearing a hat of peacock feathers, which are her good name on earth and high honor in heaven. She follows a path, which is meekness. This is clothed with honey and crowned with safety.

And she sings:

"Chosen Lover, I long for you.
You take and give me many a heartache.
I have from you, besides, invisible suffering.
If you, Lord, command,
I shall be freed from myself."

And he speaks:

"Dearest love, think of the hour
When you may grasp the full treasure.
Do not let the time seem too long.
After all, I hold you constantly Embraced in my arms."

Then our Lord says to his chosen bride:

"Come, my beloved, come. You shall be crowned."⁶⁷

And he gives her a crown of truth that no one may wear but religious people.⁶⁸ On the crown one sees four virtues: wisdom and sorrow, longing and perseverance. May God give us all this crown! Amen.

Dechthild of Magdeburg

THE FLOWING LIGHT OF THE GODHEAD

TRANSLATED AND INTRODUCED BY
FRANK TOBIN

PREFACE BY
MARGOT SCHMIDT

1998

PAULIST PRESS
NEW YORK • MAHWAH

PROLOGUE TO THE LUX DIVINITATIS¹

Prologue of Brother Heinrich, Lector,
of the Order of Preaching Brothers²

We read in the Book of Judges (4:4-5) that the holy woman Deborah, the wife of Lappidoth, full of the spirit of prophecy, was accustomed to set up her tent under a palm tree in the hills of Ephraim, residing there as a solitary to devote herself to God alone. Israel, God's people, would go up to her seeking judgment in all matters. Likewise, the Fourth Book of Kings (2 Kgs 22:14-20) relates that Huldah, a prophetess living in Jerusalem, enlightened by the Holy Spirit as to the hidden judgment of God, informed the holy king Josiah about the coming scourges threatening the people. This just and pious king had sent priests and levites to her so that the holy woman might seek the Lord's guidance and pray on his behalf regarding the imminent misfortunes. Certainly there were at the time high priests of the seed of Aaron and other kinds of priests and levites learned in the law and of high moral integrity; yet, in spite of this, the Holy Spirit did not divulge his secret counsels to them. Rather, for these times he revealed them to these holy women of the weak sex, as he saw fit.

Quite often, in fact, almighty God has chosen what is weak in the world to confound what is stronger for its good. Therefore, let no one wonder or, lacking trust, fall into disbelief if God in the time of grace renews his marvels. He, who in the time of the law of Moses mercifully saw fit to perform similar works, now reveals his mysteries to the fragile sex. Because the people of Israel

believed Deborah's prophecy, they won freedom from oppression and victory over their enemies. Also, a king, a religious man, was found worthy to gain solace and mercy through the prayer and advice of the prophetess Huldah. So, too, shall all who write or read this book, if they approach it with pious intent, attain an increase in solace and spiritual grace, as the Lord promises them in the book itself.

This writing must be read in a pious spirit, however. It must be understood, as is the case with other holy writings, in a wholesome manner and in good faith. In this way the reader will find nothing scandalous or offensive in it, and the writing itself will not be subjected to any perverse claim of falsehood. Its author is the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit; it treats Christ and the church, as well as Satan and his body.³ Its manner of proceeding is both historical and mystical⁴; its purpose is the ordering of the present life, the useful calling to mind of things past, and the prophetic disclosure of things to come. The sincere devotion and dove-like simplicity of the woman through whom this writing was made public should completely suffice to guarantee the truth of what the pious faithful are asked to believe. From childhood she led a pure and innocent life. In her youth, at the urging of the Lord, she left everything she stood to gain and became an exile in a foreign land, leading a life of voluntary poverty. Finally, after many tribulations and at an advanced age, she was received into the community of holy sisters at Helfta. She lived there for twelve years and, as is confirmed by their testimony,⁵ she flourished in the perfection of all virtues. She especially practiced charity, humility, long-suffering, and meekness. Raised up above all things by contemplation and made a sharer of divine illuminations and revelations, she was worthy to perceive from the Lord through her prophetic spirit numerous intimate divine mysteries concerning things past, present, and to come. Now, having been received by the Bridegroom of virgins, this holy virgin enjoys fully him whom she loved and whose wondrous love adorned his beloved with many marvels.

The revelations and visions that almighty God has deigned to disclose to his elect are founded upon and have their origin in

the directness of their faith. Their purity of mind demands and expects them. The holiness of their life authenticates and corroborates them. For celestial secrets lie open to such people, and their testimony is greeted with belief by the hearts of those who hear them.

For this reason, before beginning this book, which is written in a primitive tongue and contains certain marvelous and previously unknown mysteries, I thought it worthwhile to point out beforehand a bit about the holiness of the person to whom these things have been revealed by heaven, so that the marvels mentioned in word might have the support of deeds more marvelous. For who shall describe for us more vividly the perfection of the elect than those very ones in whom and through whom God carries out his works? And who could have made known to the church more beneficially or better the perfection of Paul than Paul himself? In like manner, this holy one made public what the divine Spirit had wrought in her and with her, and proclaims his praise and glory.⁶

*LATIN FOREWORD WITH
TABLE OF CONTENTS AND
MIDDLE HIGH GERMAN TRANSLATION¹*

In the year of our Lord 1250 and for almost fifteen years thereafter this book was revealed² in German by the Lord through grace to a certain beguine who was a holy virgin in body and spirit. In humble simplicity, in the poverty of exile, weighed down by scorn, and in heavenly contemplation, as is made clear in this writing, she served the Lord with great devotion for more than forty years, following perfectly the footsteps of the brothers of the Order of Preachers. Always progressing day by day, she continually became better. It was compiled³ by a brother of the aforementioned order and contains many good things, as is noted in these titles:

On the Trinity: II 3; III 9; IV 12 and 14; V 26
 On Christ: II 3; IV 14; V 23 and 27
 On Our Lady: I 22; II 3; V 23
 On the Nine Orders of Angels: I 6; III 1; V 1
 On the Special Excellence of Certain Saints: IV 20, 22, and 23
 On the Evilness of Demons: II 24; IV 2 and 17; V 1; V 29
 On the Dignity of a Human Being: I 44; IV 14
 On Rapture and the Separation of the Soul from the Flesh: I 5
 On the Description of Heaven: III 1
 On the Description of Hell: III 21
 On the Many Kinds of Purgatory: II 8; III 15 and 17; V 14 and 15

LATIN FOREWORD

On Many Virtues and Vices: I 22 and 25; III 7 and 14; IV 4;
and on Charity Especially: III 13
On the Order of Preachers at the End of the World at the
Time of the Antichrist: IV 27
And on many things unheard of that you shall understand if you read this book nine times in faith, humility, and devotion.⁴ Here is prophecy about the past, present, and future.
Here also is the Song of the Three Persons: V 26.

[Middle High German translation:]

In the year 1250 after God's birth and for the fifteen years
thereafter this book was revealed in German by God to a sister.
She was a holy virgin both in body and in spirit. She served God
devotedly in humble simplicity, in the poverty of exile, in heavenly contemplation, and weighed down by scorn, for more than forty years, and followed steadfastly and completely the light and
the teaching of the Order of Preachers, and went forward from
day to day and improved herself daily. But a brother of the same order gathered together and wrote this book; and much good is contained in this book on many subjects, as is noted in this list.
You should read it through nine times in faith, humility, and devotion.

Book I

One Should Receive This Book Eagerly, For It Is God Himself
Who Speaks the Words¹

This book I hereby send as a messenger to all religious people,² both the bad and the good; for if the pillars fall,³ the building cannot remain standing; and it signifies me alone and proclaims in praiseworthy fashion my intimacy. All who wish to understand this book should read it nine times.

This Book Is Called a Flowing Light of the Godhead

"Ah, Lord God, who made this book?"

"I made it in my powerlessness, for I cannot restrain myself as to my gifts."⁴

"Well then, Lord, what shall the title of the book be, which is to your glory alone?"

"It shall be called a flowing light of my Godhead into all hearts that live free of hypocrisy."

I. *How Love and the Queen Spoke to Each Other*⁵

The soul came to Love, greeted her with great deference, and said:

"God greet you, Lady Love."

"May God reward you, Mistress and Queen."

"Lady Love, you are indeed perfect."

"Mistress and Queen, that is why I am above all things."

"Lady Love, you struggled many a year before you forced the exalted Trinity to pour itself utterly into the humble virginal womb of Mary."

"Mistress and Queen, that was to your honor and benefit."

"Lady Love, you have now come here to me and have taken from me everything I ever gained on earth."

"Mistress and Queen, you have made a happy exchange."
 "Lady Love, you have taken from me my childhood."
 "Mistress and Queen, in its place I have given you heavenly freedom."
 "Lady Love, you have taken from me all my youth."
 "Mistress and Queen, in its place I have given you many a holy virtue."
 "Lady Love, you have taken from me possessions, friends, and relatives."
 "Come now, Mistress and Queen, that is a petty complaint."
 "Lady Love, you have taken from me the world, worldly honor, and all earthly riches."
 "Mistress and Queen, I shall make that up to you in one hour with the Holy Spirit on earth, just as you wish it."
 "Lady Love, you have brought me to such a pass that my body is racked by a strange weakness."
 "Mistress and Queen, in exchange I have given you much sublime knowledge."
 "Lady Love, you have devoured my flesh and my blood."
 "Mistress and Queen, you have thereby been purified and drawn into God."
 "Lady Love, you are a robber; for this as well shall you make reparation."
 "Mistress and Queen, then take me."
 "Lady Love, now you have recompensed me a hundredfold on earth."
 "Mistress and Queen, in addition you may demand God and all his kingdom."⁶

2. *Concerning Three Persons and Three Gifts*⁷

God's true greeting, coming from the heavenly flood out of the spring of the flowing Trinity, has such force that it takes away all the body's strength and reveals the soul to herself, so that she sees herself resembling the saints, and she takes on a divine radiance. Then the soul leaves the body, taking all her power, wisdom, love, and longing. Just the tiniest bit of her life force remains with the body as in a sweet sleep.⁸ Then she sees one complete God in three Persons and knows the three Persons in one God undivided.

He greets her in courtly language that one does not hear in this kitchen, clothes her in the garments that one fittingly wears in a palace, and surrenders himself into her power. Then she can

wish for and ask whatever she wants. It is granted her and she is enlightened. What she is not enlightened about is the first cause of the Three Persons.⁹ Then he draws her further to a secret place. There she is not permitted to beg on anyone's behalf or ask, because all alone with her he wants to play a game that the body does not know, nor the peasants at their plows, nor knights at their tournaments, nor his lovely mother, Mary—not even she may play it there. Then she soars further to a blissful place of which I neither will nor can speak. It is too difficult; I do not dare, for I am a very sinful person. Yet when infinite God brings the unfathomable soul to the heights, she loses sight of the earth in her astonishment and is not aware of ever having been on earth. Just when the game is at its best, one has to leave it.

Then God in full vigor speaks: "Young Miss, you must go down." She shudders and laments¹⁰ her banishment. She says: "Lord, you have raised me up¹¹ so high here that I shall not be able to praise you in any fitting degree when in my body. Rather, I shall suffer as an outcast and shall struggle against the body." And he says:

"Oh, dear dove,¹²
 Your voice is string music to my ears.
 Your words are spices for my mouth.
 Your longings are the lavishness of my gift."

She says: "Dear Lord, it has to be as the master of the house¹³ commands." And she sighs with all her might, which awakens the body.¹⁴

Then the body speaks: "Well, woman, just where have you been? You come back so love-struck, lovely, and vibrant, free and witty. Your carrying on has cost me my appetite, sense of smell, color, and all my strength."

She says: "Shut up, murderer! Quit your bellyaching. I'll always be on my guard with you around. That my enemy has been wounded—what do we care about that? It makes me glad."

This is a greeting that has many streams. It pours forth from the flowing God into the poor, parched soul unceasingly with new

knowledge, in new contemplation, and in the special enjoyment of the new presence. O sweet God, inwardly on fire, outwardly blossoming, now that you have given this to the least,¹⁵ I would like to experience the life that you have given to your greatest. For that I would be willing to endure suffering even longer.

No one is able or is permitted to receive this greeting unless one has gone beyond oneself and has become nothing. In this greeting I want to die living.¹⁶ This the blind saints cannot ruin for me. They are the ones who love and do not know.¹⁷

3. *The Handmaids of the Soul and the Blow of Love*¹⁸

All holy Christian virtues are the handmaids of the soul. The sweet listlessness of the soul complains to Love of her troubles:

"Well then, dearest Maiden, for a long time now you have been my chambermaid. Now tell me, where is all this leading? You have hunted me, trapped me, bound me, and wounded me so deeply that I shall never be healthy again. You have meted out to me many a cudgel blow. Tell me, am I ever going to recover from you? If I were not going to be killed by your hand, it would be better for me never to have known you."¹⁹

Love: "That I hunted you was my fancy.

That I captured you was my desire.

That I bound you made me happy.

When I wounded you, you were joined to me.

When I cudgel you, I take you into my power.

I drove God the almighty from heaven,

Took his human life,

And returned him to his Father in honor.

How do you, vile worm, expect to survive before me?"

The Soul: "Speak, my Empress, I fear a small secret medicine

God has often given to me that I might thrive even in your presence."

Love:

"If one does not want the prisoners dead,

One gives them water and bread.

The medicine that God has often given you

Is nothing other than a brief return to human life.

But when your Easter Day comes

And your body receives the death blow,

Then I'll embrace you tightly

And permeate you utterly,

And I'll steal you from your body

And give you to your Lover."

The Soul: "O Love, this letter I have written out of your mouth.
Now give me, Lady, your seal."

Love: "Whoever has succeeded in loving God more than
self

Knows well where to get the seal.

It lies between the two of us."

The Soul speaks:

"Be silent, dear one, and speak no more.

Dearest of all maidens, let all creatures, myself
included,

Bow down before you.

Tell my Lover that his bed is made ready.

And that I am weak with longing for him."

If this letter is too long, this is the reason: I was on the meadow
where I found flowers of all kinds. This is a sweet lament: Who dies of love shall be buried in God.

4. The Soul's Journey to Court During Which God Reveals Himself

When the needy soul comes to the court, she is judicious and refined. She gazes at her God in high spirits. Oh, how tenderly is she welcomed there! She remains silent, longing boundlessly for his praise. With great longing he reveals to her his divine heart. It resembles red gold burning in a great fire of coals. He places her into his glowing heart. When the exalted Sovereign and the little waif thus embrace and are united as water and wine, she turns to nothing and is transported out of herself.²⁰ When she has no strength left, he is as lovesick for her as he always was; for he neither increases nor decreases. Then she says:

"Lord, you are my lover,
My desire,
My flowing fount,
My sun;
And I am your reflection."

This is the journey to court of a loving soul that cannot exist without God.

5. *The Torment and the Praise of the Soul*²¹

My body is in great torment, my soul is in sublime bliss; for she has both gazed upon and embraced her Lover in her arms. He causes her, poor wretch, torment. When he draws her up, she flows. She cannot hold herself in check until he brings her within himself. She would like to speak but cannot, so utterly has she been enmeshed in sublime union with the awe-inspiring Trinity. Then he leaves her for a short while, that she might feel longing. She desires his praise but does not know how to find it as she would like. She would even want him to send her into hell that he might be praised beyond measure by all creatures.²² She looks at him and says to him, "Lord, give me your blessing." He looks at her, draws her up again, and gives her a greeting²³ that the body cannot express.

Then the body speaks to the soul:

"Where have you been?
I can't take it anymore."

And the soul says:

"Quiet, you are a fool.
I want to be with my Lover,
Even if it means you would perish.
I am his joy, he is my torment."

This is her torment. May she never recover!
May you take this torment upon yourself as well,
And may you never escape it!

6. *The Nine Choirs: How They Sing*²⁴

Now hear,²⁵ my Beloved; listen with spiritual ears. Thus do the nine choirs sing:

We praise you, Lord, that you sought us in your humility.
We praise you, Lord, that you have kept us in your mercy.
We praise you, Lord, that you have glorified us in your humiliation.
We praise you, Lord, that you have provided for us in your generosity.
We praise you, Lord, that you have arranged us in rank in your wisdom.
We praise you, Lord, that you have shielded us with your might.
We praise you, Lord, that you have sanctified us with your nobility.
We praise you, Lord, that you have instructed us in your intimacy.
We praise you, Lord, that you have elevated us in your love.

7. God's Curse in Eight Things

I curse you:
May your body die.
May your words perish.
May your eyes close.
May your heart dissolve.
May your soul rise up.
May your body remain.
May your human faculties perish.
May your spirit stand in the presence of the Holy Trinity!

8. The Most Lowly Praises God in Ten Things

O you burning Mountain.
O you chosen Sun.
O you full Moon.
O you bottomless Well.
O you unscalable Height.

O you Brightness without measure.
 O Wisdom without ground.
 O Mercy without restraint.
 O Might without opposition.
 O Crown of all honors!
 The most lowly person you ever created praises you.

9. With Three Things You Duell on the Heights

Those who are on fire in true love and build on the firm ground of truth and bear abundant fruit for a blessed end—they dwell on the heights.

Explanation: This is about the Seraphim.

10. Who Loves God Triumphs over Three Things

Whoever conquers the world,
 And takes from his body all useless desires,
 And overcomes the devil,
 This is the soul that loves God.
 If the world gives her a shove,
 She does not suffer much.
 If the flesh gives her a jolt,
 The spirit will not get sick from it.
 If the devil gives her a push,
 The soul pays no heed.
 She loves
 And keeps on loving,
 And she does not know how to do otherwise.

11. Four Battle for God

O dove free of gall.²⁶
 O maiden free of blemish.
 O knight free of wounds.
 O liegeman free of hesitation.
 These are the four whom God can count on in battle.

12. *The Soul Praises God for Five Things*²⁷

O Emperor of all honors.
 O Crown of all sovereigns.
 O Wisdom of all the learned.
 O Giver of all gifts.
 O Deliverer of all imprisonments.

13. How God Comes to the Soul

I come to my beloved as the dew upon the flower.²⁸

14. How the Soul Receives and Praises God

Ah, joyous sight!
 Ah, lovely greeting!
 Ah, dear embrace!
 Lord, the wonder of you has overwhelmed me.
 Your grace has crushed me.
 O you lofty Crag,
 You are so nicely honeycombed.
 In you no one can rest but doves and nightingales.

15. How God Receives the Soul

Welcome, my precious dove.
 You have flown so keenly over the earth
 That your feathers reach to heaven.

16. God Likens the Soul to Four Things

You taste like a grape.
 Your fragrance is like balsam.²⁹
 Your radiance is like the sun.
 You are an enhancement of my most sublime love.

17. The Soul Praises God About Five Things

O you pouring God in your gift!
 O you flowing God in your love!
 O you burning God in your desire!
 O you melting God in the union with your beloved!
 O you resting God on my breasts!²⁹
 Without you I cannot exist.

18. God Likens the Soul to Five Things

O you beautiful rose among the thorns!
 O you fluttering bee in the honey!
 O you unblemished dove in your being!
 O you beautiful sun in your radiance!
 O you full moon in the firmament!
 I cannot turn away from you.

19. God Cares the Soul in Six Ways

You are my softest pillow,
 My most lovely bed,
 My most intimate repose,
 My deepest longing,
 My most sublime glory.
 You are an allurements to my Godhead,
 A thirst for my humanity,
 A stream for my burning.

20. The Soul Praises God in Return in Six Ways

You are my resplendent mountain,
 A feast for my eyes,
 A loss of myself,
 A tempest in my heart,
 A defeat and retreat of my power,
 My surest protection.³¹

21. Of Knowledge and Enjoyment

Love without knowledge is as darkness to the wise soul.³²
 Knowledge without its fruition she likens to the pains of hell.
 Fruition short of death she cannot lament enough.

22. St. Mary's Message and How One Virtue Follows Another. How the Soul Was Made in the Jubilus³³ of the Trinity, and How St. Mary Nursed All the Saints and Nurses Them Still

The sweet dew of the eternal Trinity gushed forth from the fountain of the everlasting Godhead into the flower of the chosen maid; and the fruit of this flower is an immortal God and a mortal man and a living hope of eternal life. And our Redeemer became a Bridegroom. The bride became exhilarated at the sight of his noble countenance;

Under this immense force she loses herself.
 In this most dazzling light she becomes blind in herself.
 And in this utter blindness she sees most clearly.
 In this pure clarity she is both dead and living.

The longer she is dead, the more blissfully she lives,³⁴
 The more blissfully she lives, the more she experiences,³⁵
 The less she becomes, the more flows to her.
 The more she fears,...³⁶
 The richer she becomes, the poorer she is.
 The deeper she dwells,³⁷ the more she expands.
 ..., the more forbearing she is.
 The deeper her wounds become, the more violently she struggles.

The more loving God is to her, the higher she soars.
 The more radiantly she shines in the reflected effulgence of the God-head, the closer she approaches him.
 The more she labors, the more contentedly she rests.
 ..., the more she grasps.
 The more quiet her silence, the louder she calls.
 ..., the greater the marvels she works with his strength in proportion to her power.

The more his desire grows, the more extravagant their wedding celebration becomes.
 The narrower the bed of love becomes, the more intense are the embraces.
 The sweeter the kisses on the mouth become, the more lovingly they gaze at each other.
 The greater the distress in which they part, the more he bestows upon her.
 The more she consumes, the more she has.
 The more humbly she takes her leave, the sooner she returns.
 The more ardent she remains, the sooner she bursts into flame.
 The more she burns, the more beautifully she glows.
 The more God's praise is spread abroad, the greater her desire becomes.

Tell me, where did our Redeemer become the Bridegroom?

In the jubilus of the Holy Trinity. When God could no longer contain himself, he created the soul and, in his immense love, gave himself to her as her own.³⁸

"What are you made of, Soul, that you ascend so high above all creatures, mingle with the Holy Trinity, and yet remain whole in yourself?"

"You have brought up the question of my origin. I shall tell you honestly: I was made by love in that very place.³⁹ For that reason no creature is able to give comfort to my noble nature or to open it up except love alone."

"Holy Mary, dear Lady, you are the mother of this wonder. When did this happen to you?"

"When our Father's jubilus was saddened by Adam's fall, so that he had to become angry, the Eternal Wisdom of the almighty Godhead intercepted the anger together with me. The Father chose me for his bride—that he might have something to love; for his darling bride, the noble soul, was dead. The Son chose me to be his mother, and the Holy Spirit received me as his beloved. Then I alone was the bride of the Holy Trinity and mother of orphans, and I brought them before God's eyes so that they might not all sink down, though some did. When I was thus the mother of many a banished child, my breasts became so full of the pure, spotless milk of true, generous mercy that I suckled the prophets and sages, even before I was born. Afterward, in my childhood, I suckled Jesus; later, in my youth, I suckled God's bride, Holy Christianity, under the cross when I was so desolate and wretched, as the sword of the physical suffering of Jesus cut spiritually into my soul."

Both his wounds and her breasts were open.

The wounds poured forth.

The breasts flowed.

The soul was invigorated and completely restored

As he poured the sparkling red wine

Into her red mouth.⁴⁰

As she was thus born and made healthy out of the open wounds, she was like a child, and very young. If she was going to recover completely after her death and birth, God's mother was going to have to be her mother and her nurse. This was and is as it should be, since God is her rightful father and she is his rightful bride. She resembles him in all parts.

"Lady, in your old age you suckled the holy apostles with your motherly instruction and with your powerful prayer, that God might reveal his honor and your will through them. Lady, thus did you suckle then and suckle still the hearts of martyrs with strong faith, the ears of confessors with holy protection, the virgins with your chastity, widows with constancy, married people with kindness, and sinners with patient hope."

"Lady, us, too, you must suckle, for your breasts are still so full that they are not likely to dry up. If you no longer wanted to suckle, the milk would cause you much pain. For truly, I have seen your breasts so full that seven streams pour out at one time from one breast over my body and over my soul. In that hour you relieve me of a labor that no friend of God can bear without

inner suffering. In this same manner, you shall go on suckling until the last day. Then you shall become dry, for then God's children—and your children—will be weaned and fully grown for eternal life. Ah, then we shall know and see with inexpressible joy the milk and even the breasts themselves⁴¹ that Jesus so often kissed."⁴²

23. You Should Ask That God Love You Passionately, Often, and Long; Then You Shall Become Pure, Beautiful, and Holy⁴³

Ah, Lord, love me passionately, love me often, and love me long. For the more passionately you love me, the purer I shall become. The more often you love me, the more beautiful I shall become. The longer you love me, the holier I shall become here on earth.

24. How God Responds to the Soul

That I love you passionately comes from my nature, for I am love itself. That I love you often comes from my desire, for I desire to be loved passionately. That I love you long comes from my being eternal, for I am without an end and without a beginning.

25. The Way to Suffer Pain Willingly for God's Sake

God guides his chosen children along strange paths. This is a strange path and a noble path and a holy path that God himself trod: that a human being, though free of sin and guilt, suffer pain. Upon this path the soul that aches for God is joyful, for by nature she is joyful to her Lord, who suffered much pain because of his good deeds. Our dear Lord, the heavenly Father, delivered up his most beloved Son to be tormented by the heathens and martyred by the Jews despite his innocence. Now the time has come when some people, who have the appearance of being religious, torment the bodies of God's children and martyr their spirits. For he wants them to resemble his beloved Son who was tormented in body and soul.

26. The Path upon Which the Soul Draws the Senses and Is Free of Suffering of the Heart

It is a rarely traveled and lofty path upon which the devoted soul makes its way and guides the senses as one with sight guides a blind person. On this path the soul is free and lives without inner suffering, for she wants nothing but what her Lord wants, who arranges everything for the best.

27. How You Become Worthy of This Path and Keep to It and Become Perfect

Three things make a person worthy of this path—that one recognize it and enter upon it: first, that one submit to God relinquishing all human control, and that one piously hold on to God's grace and willingly keep it by being forgiving in all things as far as is possible for a human will. The second thing keeping a person on this path is that one welcome all things except for sin alone. The third thing keeping a person on this path is that one do all things equally for God's honor. Thus I think relieving my most basic need counts as much in God's sight as if I were in the highest state of contemplation that a human being can attain. Why? If I do it out of love in order to give honor to God, it is all one and the same. But when I sin, I am not on this path.

28. Love Shall Be Deadly, Boundless, and Unceasing; This Is the Folly of Fools

I delight in loving him who loves me, and I long to love him to the death, boundlessly, and without ceasing. Be happy, my soul, for your Life has died for love of you.⁴⁴ Love him so fiercely that you could die for him. Thus you burn ever more without ever being extinguished as a living flame in the vast fire of high majesty.

Thus you become full of the fire of love. This makes you here utterly happy.

You can no longer teach me anything:
 I cannot turn away from love.
 I must be its captive.
 Otherwise, I cannot go on living.
 Where it dwells, there I must remain,
 Both in death and in life.¹⁵
 This is the folly of fools
 Who live free of anguish.

29. *The Beauty of the Bridegroom and How the Bride Should Follow Him in Twenty-Three Steps of the Cross*¹⁶

Look at me, my bride.¹⁷ See how beautiful are my eyes, how comely is my mouth, how on fire is my heart, how agile are my hands, and how swift are my feet. So, follow me! You shall be martyred with me, betrayed in jealousy, hunted in ambush, taken prisoner in hate, bound in obedience, your eyes covered so that one will not tell you the truth, slapped by the rage of the world, brought to trial in confession, struck blows by penance, sent to Herod in derision, stripped naked by abandonment, scourged by poverty, crowned with trials, spat upon by disgrace, bearing your cross in the hatred of sin, crucified in voluntary withdrawal from all things, nailed to the cross by the holy virtues, wounded by love, dying on the cross in holy constancy, pierced in your heart by constant union, taken down from the cross in true victory over all your enemies, buried in oblivion, arisen from the dead in a holy end, and drawn up into heaven in God's breath.

30. *The Seven Hours*¹⁸

Matins:	Love in abundance, a sweet delight. ¹⁹
Prime:	Love's longing, a sweet burden.
Terce:	Love's pleasure, a sweet thirst.
Sext:	Love's feeling, a sweet cooling.
Nones:	Love's death, a sweet distress.
Vespers:	Love's flowing, a sweet pouring.
Compline:	Love's rest, a sweet joy. ²⁰

31. You Should Ignore Scorn

I was deeply scorned, and our Lord said: "Do not be much surprised. Since the precious unguent jar was utterly rejected and spat upon, what is going to happen to the vinegar jar, which has nothing of value about it?"

32. You Should Ignore Honors, Suffering, and Possessions. Be Sad After Sinning

If someone offers you honor, you should be ashamed.
 If someone makes you suffer, you should be glad.
 If someone does you a favor, you should be afraid.
 If you commit a sin against me, you should be sad in your heart.
 If you cannot feel sadness, then consider how greatly and how long I was saddened for your sake.

33. Concerning Food, Consolation, and Love

My soul spoke thus to her Lover:

"Lord, your generosity is food for my body wonderfully.
 Your mercy is consolation for my soul especially.
 Your love is repose for my being eternally."

34. In Suffering You Should Be a Lamb, a Turtledove, and a Bride

You are my lamb in your suffering;
 You are my turtledove in your sighing;
 You are my bride in your waiting.

35. The Desert Has Twelve Things

You should love nothingness.
 You should flee somethingness.²¹
 You should stand alone

And should go to no one.
 You should not be excessively busy.¹²
 And be free of all things.
 You should release captives
 And subdue the free.
 You should restore the sick
 And yet should have nothing yourself.
 You should drink the water of suffering
 And ignite the fire of love with the kindling of virtue:
 Then you are living in the true desert.

36. *Concerning Malice, Good Works, and
 Concerning a Marvel*¹³

With the malice of your enemies shall you be adorned.
 With the virtues of your heart shall you be glorified.
 With your good works shall you be crowned.
 With our mutual love shall you be raised on high.
 With my delightful marvel shall you be made holy.

37. *The Soul Responds to God Saying She Is Unworthy
 of These Favors*

O dearly Loved One, in undeserved humiliation I take delight.
 Virtues of the heart are my desire.
 Good works, alas, I do not have.
 Our mutual love I sully.
 Of your beautiful marvel I am utterly unworthy.

38. God Boasts That the Soul Has Overcome Four Sins

In heaven God boasts about the soul on earth that loves him
 and says:

“Look, how she who has wounded me comes ascending.
 She has cast from her the ape of the world.
 She has overcome the bear of wantonness.
 She has trod the lion of pride underfoot.

She has torn apart the jaws of the wolf of lust
 And, like the hunted stag, comes running to me, the spring.
 Like an eagle she rises out of the depths to the heights.”¹⁴

39. God Asks the Soul What She Is Bringing

“You rush restlessly about in your love.
 What do you bring me, my queen?”

40. She Replies: Something That Is Better than Seven Things

“Lord, I am bringing you my precious stone.
 It is greater than the mountains.
 It is wider than the world,
 Deeper than the sea,
 Higher than the clouds,
 Brighter than the sun,
 More numerous than the stars.
 It weighs more than the whole earth.”

41. God Asks in Praise What the Precious Stone Is Called

“O image of my divinity,
 Glorified by my humanity,
 Adorned with the Holy Spirit:
 Tell me, what is your precious stone called?”

42. The Precious Stone Is Called Heart’s Delight

“Lord, it is called my heart’s delight,
 Which I have taken back from the world,
 Retained for myself,
 And denied to all creatures.
 But now I can carry it no further.
 Lord, where shall I put it?”

43. Put Your Delight into the Trinity

"The delight of your heart
 You shall put nowhere else but into my divine heart
 And onto my human breast.
 There alone shall you be consoled
 And kissed by my Spirit."

44. The Sevenfold Path of Love, the Three Garments of the Bride, and the Dance

"Ah, loving Soul, do you wish to know what your path shall be?"
 "Yes, dear Holy Spirit, instruct me."
 "When you have passed beyond the need of sorrow
 and beyond the pain of confession
 and beyond the travail of penance
 and beyond the love of the world
 and beyond the temptations of the devil
 and beyond the influences of the flesh
 and beyond cursed self-will

that thrusts many a soul backward with such force that she never
 achieves genuine love; and when you have struck down all your
 many foes, then you are so weary that you say: 'Fair youth, I long
 for you. Where shall I find you?' And the youth says:

"I hear a voice;
 It speaks its piece on love.
 I have courted her many a day,
 But the voice never addressed me.
 Now I am moved;
 I must hurry to her!
 She is the one who bears anguish
 And love joined together."

In the sweet dew of the morning—this is the cloistered inwardness that first enters the soul—her chamberlains, the five senses,
 speak thus:

"Lady, you should dress yourself."

"Dear ones, where am I supposed to be going?"
 "We have definitely heard it whispered about that the prince
 intends to come to you in the dew and in the delightful song of the birds. Alas, lady, do not tarry!"

Then she puts on the slip of soft humility, so humble that it cannot bear anything underneath it. Over it comes a white dress of spotless chastity, so pure that it cannot bear anything in thought, word, or touch that might soil it. Then she puts on the cloak of her
 good name, which she has gilded with all the virtues. She enters into the woods, the company of holy people. There sings day and night the sweetest of the nightingales, the well-modulated union
 with God; and she hears many a sweet voice of birds, holy knowledge.⁵⁵ And still the young man did not come. So she sends out messengers because she is eager to dance. She sent for the faith of Abraham and the longing of the prophets and the chaste humility
 of our Lady, St. Mary, and all the holy virtues of our Lord Jesus Christ and all the excellence of his chosen ones. Then a splendid dance of praise takes place.

The young man finally comes and says to her: "Young lady, my chosen ones have shown off their dancing to you. Just as artfully should you now follow their lead."

She says:

"I cannot dance, Lord, unless you lead me.
 If you want me to leap with abandon,
 You must intone the song.
 Then I shall leap into love,
 From love into knowledge,
 From knowledge into enjoyment,
 And from enjoyment beyond all human sensations.
 There I want to remain, yet want also to circle higher still."⁵⁶

And the young man has to sing thus:
 "Through me into you
 And through you from me."

[The soul:] "Willingly with you,
 Woefully from you."⁵⁷

The young man speaks: "Young lady, you have done very well in this dance of praise. You shall have your way with the Son of the virgin, for you are delightfully weary. Come at noontime to the shade of the spring, into the bed of love. There in the coolness you shall refresh yourself with him."

The young lady says:

"Oh, Lord, that is too much
That she be your partner in love
Who has no love in her,
Unless she is moved by you."

Then the soul speaks to the senses, who are her chamberlains:
"Now for a while I am weary of the dance. Leave me; I must go and refresh myself."

And the senses say to the soul: "Lady, if you wish to find refreshing coolness in the love tears of Mary Magdalene, they would certainly soothe you."

[Soul:] "Be still, my lords, you do not understand at all what I mean.
Let me be on my own. For a time I want to drink undiluted wine."

[Senses:] "Lady, in the chastity of virgins great love is ready."
"That may be, but it isn't the noblest thing about me."
"In the blood of the martyrs you can cool yourself very well."
"I have been martyred so many times that I can't go there now."

"In the counsel of confessors the pure happily dwell."
"I shall always need counsel about what to do and what not to do; and yet I can't go there just now."
"In the wisdom of the apostles you will find much security."
"I have wisdom with me here. This shall always guide me to choose for the best."

"Lady, the angels are radiant and of love's color. If you wish to refresh yourself, rise up to them."

"The angels' bliss pains me in my love if I am not gazing upon their Lord and my Bridegroom."

"Then refresh yourself in the holy austere life that God granted to John the Baptist."

"The suffering I'm ready to bear, and yet the force of love transcends all austerity."

"Lady, if you want to refresh yourself in love, bow down to the small Child in the lap of the eternal virgin; and taste and see how the Joy of the angels sucked the unnatural milk."⁵⁸

"That is child's love, that one suckle and rock a baby. I am a full-grown bride. I want to go to my Lover."

[Senses:]

"Oh, Lady, if you go there,
We shall go completely blind.
The Godhead is so blazing hot,
As you well know,
That all the fire and all the glowing embers
That make the heavens and all the saints glow and burn
Have flowed out from his divine breath
And from his human mouth
According to the plan of the Holy Spirit.
How can you stay there even for an hour?"

[Soul:]

"A fish in water does not drown.
A bird in the air does not plummet.
Gold in fire does not perish.
Rather, it gets its purity and its radiant color there.
God has created all creatures to live according to their nature."

How, then, am I to resist my nature?

I must go from all things to God,

Who is my Father by nature,

My Brother by his humanity,

My Bridegroom by love,

And I his bride from all eternity.

Don't you believe I feel him intensely?⁵⁹

He can both burn powerfully and cool consolingly.
Now do not be overly sad.

You shall yet instruct me.

When I return, I shall certainly need your advice;

For the earth is full of snares."

Then the bride of all delights goes to the Fairest of lovers in

the secret chamber of the invisible Godhead. There she finds the bed and the abode of love prepared by God in a manner beyond what is human. Our Lord speaks:

"Stay, Lady Soul."
 "What do you bid me, Lord?"
 "Take off your clothes."
 "Lord, what will happen to me then?"
 "Lady Soul, you are so utterly formed to my nature"⁶⁰
 That not the slightest thing can be between you and me.
 Never was an angel so glorious
 That to him was granted for one hour
 What is given to you for eternity.
 And so you must cast off from you
 Both fear and shame and all external virtues.
 Rather, those alone that you carry within yourself
 Shall you foster forever.
 These are your noble longing
 And your boundless desire.
 These I shall fulfill forever
 With my limitless lavishness."

"Lord, now I am a naked soul
 And you in yourself are a well-adorned God.
 Our shared lot is eternal life Without death."

Then a blessed stillness
 That both desire comes over them.
 He surrenders himself to her,
 And she surrenders herself to him.
 What happens to her then—she knows—
 And that is fine with me.⁶¹
 But this cannot last long.
 When two lovers meet secretly,
 They must often part from one another inseparably.⁶²

Dear friend of God, I have written for you this path of love.
 May God infuse it into your heart! Amen.

45. *The Eight Days in Which What the Prophets Longed For Was Accomplished*⁶³

This is a day of longing and blessed joy
 in the Annunciation of Christ.
 This is a day of peace and dear tenderness
 in the Birth of Christ.
 This is a day of charity and blessed communion,
 Maundy Thursday.
 This is a day of generosity and heartfelt love,
 Good Friday.
 This is a day of might and happy joy,
 the Resurrection.
 This is a day of faith and the pain of separation,
 the Ascension.
 This is a day of truth and burning consolation, Pentecost.
 This is a day of justice and the hour of truth,
 the Last Judgment.
 This is a week whose seven days we should celebrate with constancy.
 The eighth day our Lord wants to celebrate on the last day with us all.

46. The Diverse Adornments of the Bride; How She Comes to Her Brideroom; and How the Retinue Is Composed, Which Is Ninefold

The bride is clothed with the sun and has trodden the moon underfoot, and she is crowned with union.⁶⁴ She has a chaplain; this is fear. He has in his hand a golden rod; this is wisdom. The chaplain is clothed with the blood of the lamb and is crowned with honor; and wisdom is clothed with contentment and crowned with eternity. The bride has four bridesmaids. The first is love, who leads the bride. She is clothed with chasteness and is crowned with dignity. The second is humility, who holds the bride. She is clothed with lowliness and is crowned with eminence. The third bridesmaid is sorrow. She is clothed with small grapes⁶⁵ and is crowned with joy. The fourth bridesmaid is mercy. She is clothed with unguents⁶⁶ and is crowned with bliss. These two carry the coat of the bride, which is her holy reputation.

She has a bishop, which is faith. He brings the bride before the bridegroom. The bishop is clothed in precious stones and is crowned with the Holy Spirit. The bishop has two knights. The one is might and is clothed with battle and is crowned with victory. The other is daring and is clothed with boldness and crowned with all blessedness.

She has a chamberlain. That is watchfulness. He is clothed with constancy and is crowned with persistence. He carries a light before the bride and from behind her train. The light is understanding. It is clothed with insight and is crowned with generosity. The train is a holy conscience. It is clothed with good intention and is crowned with God's approval. She has a cup-bearer, which is longing. He is clothed with desire and is crowned with peace. She has a minstrel who is amiability. His harp is intimacy. He is clothed with favor and crowned with help.

The bride has five kingdoms. The first are her eyes. They are founded in tears and adorned with restraint. The second are thoughts. They are founded in struggle and are adorned with good counsel. The third is speaking. It is founded in usefulness and is adorned with trust. The fourth is hearing. It is founded in the word of God and is adorned with consolation. The fifth is touch. It is founded in strength and is adorned with noble habit. These five kingdoms have an overseer. This is guilt. He is clothed with confession and crowned with penance. She has a judge. He is clothed with discipline and crowned with patience.

The bride has a beast of burden. This is the body. It is bridled with worthlessness: contempt is its fodder and its stable is confession. The pack it carries is innocence. The bride has a crimson silk cloth, which is hope. It is clothed with truth and crowned with song. She has a palm in her hand, which is victory over sin. In her other hand she has a canister that is full of longing and love. This she wants to bring to her Lover. She is wearing a hat of peacock feathers, which are her good name on earth and high honor in heaven. She follows a path, which is meekness. This is clothed with honey and crowned with safety.

And she sings:

"Chosen Lover, I long for you.
You take and give me many a heartache.
I have from you, besides, invisible suffering.
If you, Lord, command,
I shall be freed from myself."

And he speaks:

"Dearest love, think of the hour
When you may grasp the full treasure.
Do not let the time seem too long.
After all, I hold you constantly Embraced in my arms."

Then our Lord says to his chosen bride:

"Come, my beloved, come. You shall be crowned."⁶⁷

And he gives her a crown of truth that no one may wear but religious people.⁶⁸ On the crown one sees four virtues: wisdom and sorrow, longing and perseverance. May God give us all this crown! Amen.

NYPL RESEARCH LIBRARIES

3 3433 06823218 4

THE
MONKS OF THE WEST,

FROM ST. BENEDICT TO ST. BERNARD.

BY
THE COUNT DE MONTALEMBERT, MEMBER OF THE FRENCH ACADEMY.

FIDE ET VERITATE.

VOL. II.

BOSTON
PATRICK DONAHOE.
1872.

THE
NEW YORK
LIBRARY

CONTENTS.

BOOK IX.

ST. COLUMBA, THE APOSTLE OF CALEDONIA, 521-597.

CHAPTER I.

THE YOUTH OF COLUMBA AND HIS MONASTIC LIFE IN IRELAND.

The biographers of Columba. — His different names. — His royal origin. — The supreme kings of Ireland; the O'Neills and O'Donnells; Red Hugh. — Birth of Columba; vision of his mother. — His monastic education; jealousy of his comrades; Kieran; the two Finnians; the school of Clonard. — Vision of the guardian angel and the three brides. — The assassin of a virgin struck by death at the prayer of Columba. — His youthful influence in Ireland; his monastic foundations, especially at Durrow and at Derry; his song in honor of Derry. — His love for poetry; his connection with the travelling bards. — He was himself a poet, a great traveller, and of a quarrelsome disposition. — His passion for manuscripts. — Longard of the hairy legs and his bag of books. — Dispute about the Psalter of Finnian; judgment of King Diarmid, founder of Clonmacnoise. — Protest of Columba; he takes to flight, chanting the Hymn of Confidence, and raises a civil war. — Battle of Cul-Dreimhne; the Cathac or Psalter of battle. — Synod of Teltown; Columba is excommunicated. — St. Brendan takes part with Columba, who consults several hermits, and among others Abban, in the Cell of Tears. — The last of his advisers, Molaise, condemns him to exile. — Twelve of his disciples follow him; devotion of the young Mochonna. — Contradictory reports concerning the first forty years of his life, Page 1

CHAPTER II.

COLUMBA AN EMIGRANT IN CALEDONIA, OR THE HIGHER ISLE OF IONA.

Aspect of the Hebridean archipelago. — Columba first lands at Oronsay, but leaves it because Ireland is visible from its shores. — Description of Iona. — First buildings of the new monastery. — What remains of it. — Enthusiasm of Johnson on landing there in the eighteenth century. — Columba bitterly regrets his country. — Passionate elegies on the pains of exile. — Note upon the poem of Altus. — Proofs in his biography of the continuance of that patriotic regret. — The stork comes from Ireland to Iona. . Page 24

CHAPTER III.

THE APOSTOLATE OF COLUMBA AMONG THE SCOTS AND PICTS.

Moral transformation of Columba. — His progress in spiritual life. — His humility. — His charity. — His preaching by tears. — The hut which formed his abbatial palace at Iona. — His prayers; his work of transcription. — His crowd of visitors. — His severity in the examination of monastic vocations. — Aíðus the Black, the murderer of Columba's enemy King Diarmid, rejected by the community. — Penance of Libran of the Rushes. — Columba encourages the despairing and unmasks the hypocrites. — Monastic propaganda of Iona; Columba's fifty-three foundations in Scotland. — His relations with the people of Caledonia: First with the colony of Dalriadans from Ireland, whose king was his relative; he enlightens and confirms their Imperfect Christianity. — Ambushes laid for his chastity. — His connection with the Picts, who occupied the north of Britain, The dorsum Britanniae. — Columba their first missionary. — The fortress gates of their king Brudus open before him. — He struggles with the Druids in their last refuge. — He preaches by an interpreter. — His respect for natural virtue. — Baptism of two old Pictish chiefs. — Columba's humanity: he redeems an Irish captive. — Frequent journeys among the Picts, whose conversion he accomplishes before he dies. — His fellow-workers, Malruve and Drosta; the Monastery of Tears. . Page 34

CHAPTER IV.

COLUMBA CONSECRATES THE KING OF THE SCOTS. — HE GOES TO THE NATIONAL ASSEMBLY OF IRELAND, DEFENDS THE INDEPENDENCE OF THE HIBERNO-SCOTIC COLONY, AND SAVES THE CORPORATION OF BARDS.

Passionate solicitude of Columba for his relatives and countrymen. — He protects King Aídan in his struggle with the Anglo-Saxons of Northumbria. — The same king is crowned by Columba at Iona; the first example of a Christian consecration of kings. — The Stone of Destiny; the descendants of Aídan. — Synod or parliament of Drumceitt in Ireland. — Aedh, king of Ireland, and Aídan, king of the Irish colonists in Scotland. — The independence of the new Scottish kingdom is recognized through the influence of Columba. — He interposes in favor of the bards, whom the king had proposed to outlaw. — Power and expenses of that corporation. — By means of Columba, the good grain is not burned with the weeds. — The bards' song of gratitude in honor of their savior. — Columba, reproved by his disciple, desires that this song should not be repeated during his life. — Superstitious regard attached to it after his death. — Intimate union between music, poetry, and religion in Ireland. — The bards, transformed into minstrels, are the first champions of national independence and Catholic faith against the English conquest. — Fiercely assailed, they yet continue to exist up to our own day. — Moore's Irish Melodies. — The Celtic muse at the service of the vanquished in the Highlands of Scotland as in Ireland, Page 54

CHAPTER V.

COLUMBA'S RELATIONS WITH IRELAND—CONTINUED.

Cordial intercourse of Columba with the Irish princes. — Prophecy upon the future of their sons. — Domnall, the king's son, obtains the privilege of dying in his bed. — Columba visits the Irish monasteries. — Popular enthusiasm. — Vocation of the young idiot afterwards known as St. Ernan. — Solitude of Columba for the distant monasteries and monks. — He protects them from excessive labors and accidents. — He exercises authority over laymen. — Baithen, his cousin-german and principal assistant. — The respect shown to both in an assembly of learned men, Page 68

CHAPTER VI.

COLUMBA THE PROTECTOR OF SAILORS AND AGRICULTURISTS, THE FRIEND OF LAYMEN, AND THE AVENGER OF THE OPPRESSED.

His universal solicitude and charity during all his missionary life. — The sailor-monks: seventy monks of Iona form the crew of the monastic fleet; their boats made of osiers covered with hides. — Their boldness at sea: the whirlpool of Corryvreckan. — Columba's prayer protects them against sea monsters. — Their love of solitude leads them into unknown seas, where they discover St. Kilda, Iceland, and the Farøe Isles. — Cormac in Orkney, and in the icy ocean. — Columba often accompanies them: his voyages among the Hebrides. — The wild boar of Skye. — He subdues tempests by his prayer; he invokes his friend St. Kenneth. — He is himself invoked during life, and after his death, as the arbiter of winds. — Filial complaints of the monks when their prayers are not granted. — The benefits which he conferred on the agricultural population disentangled from the maze of fables: Columba discovers fountains, regulates irrigations and fisheries, shows how to graft fruit trees, obtains early harvests, interferes to stop epidemics, cures diseases, and procures tools for the peasants. — His special solicitude for the monkish laborers: he blesses the milk when it is brought from the cow: his breath refreshes them on their return from harvest. — The blacksmith carried to heaven by his alms. — His relations with the layman whose hospitality he claims: prophecy touching the rich miser who shuts his door upon him. — The five cows of his Lochaber host. — The poacher's spear. — He pacifies and consoles all whom he meets. — His prophetic threats against the felons and reivers. — Punishment inflicted upon the assassin of an exile. — Brigands of royal blood put down by Columba at the risk of his life. — He enters into the sea up to his knees to arrest the pirate who had pillaged his friend. — The standard-bearer of Cæsar and the old missionary, Page 74

CHAPTER VII.

COLUMBA'S LAST YEARS—HIS DEATH—HIS CHARACTER.

Columba the confidant of the joys and consoler of the sorrows of domestic life.—He blesses little Hector with the fair locks.—He prays for a woman in her delivery; he reconciles the wife of a pilot to her husband.—Vision of the saved wife who receives her husband in heaven.—He continues his missions to the end of his life.—Visions before death.—The Angels' Hill.—Increase of austerities.—Nettle-soup his sole food.—A supernatural light surrounds him during his nightly work and prayers.—His death is retarded for four years by the prayers of the community.—When this respite has expired, he takes leave of the monks at their work; he visits and blesses the granaries of the monastery.—He announces his death to his attendant Diarmid.—His farewell to his old white horse.—Last benediction to the Isle of Iona; last work of transcription; last message to his community.—He dies in the church.—Review of his life and character, Page 96

CHAPTER VIII.

SPIRITUAL DESCENDANTS OF ST. COLUMBA.

His posthumous glory: miraculous visions on the night of his death: rapid extension of his worship.—Note upon his supposed journey to Rome, and residence there, in search of the relics of St. Martin.—His solitary funeral and tomb at Iona.—His translation to Ireland, where he rests between St. Patrick and St. Bridget.—He is, like Bridget, feared by the Anglo-Norman conquerors.—John de Courcy and Richard Strongbow.—The Vengeance of Columba.—Supremacy of Iona over the Celtic churches of Caledonia and the north of Ireland.—Singular privilege and primacy of the abbot of Iona in respect to bishops.—The ecclesiastical organization of Celtic countries exclusively monastic.—Moderation and respect of Columba for the episcopal rank.—He left behind him no special rule.—That which he followed differed in no respect from the usual customs of the monastic order, which proves the exact observance of all the precepts of the Church, and the chimerical nature of all speculations upon the primitive Protestantism of the Celtic Church.—But he founded an order, which lasted several centuries under the title of the Family of Columb-Kill.—The clan and family spirit was the governing principle of Scottish monasticism.—Baithen and the eleven first successors of Columba at Iona were all members of the same race.—The two lines, lay and ecclesiastical, of the great founders.—The headquarters of the order transferred from Iona to Kells, one of Columba's foundations in Ireland.—The Coarbs.—Posthumous influence of Columba upon the Church of Ireland.—Lex Columille.—Monastic Ireland in the seventh century the principal centre of Christian knowledge and piety.—Each monastery a school.—The transcription of manuscripts, which had been one of Columba's favorite occupations, continued and extended by his family even upon the continent.—Historic Annals.—The Festiloge of Angus the Culdee.—Note upon the Culdees, and upon the foundation of St. Andrews in Scotland.—Propagation of Irish monasticism abroad.—Irish saints and monasteries in France, Germany, and Italy.—The Irish saint Cathal venerated in Calabria under the name of San Cataldo.—Monastic university of Lismore: crowd of foreign students, especially of Anglo-Saxons, in Irish monasteries. — Confusion of temporal affairs in Ireland. — Civil wars and massacres. — Notes upon king-monks. — Patriotic intervention of the monks. — Adamnan, biographer and ninth successor of Columba, and his Law of the Innocents. — They are driven from their cloisters by the English. — Influence of Columba in Scotland. — Traces of the ancient Caledonian Church in the Hebrides. — Apostolical mission of Kentigern in the country between the Clyde and the Mersey. — His meeting with Columba. — His connection with the king and queen of Strath-Clyde. — Legend of the queen's ring. — Neither Columba nor Kentigern acted upon the Anglo-Saxons, who continued pagans, and maintained a threatening attitude. — The last bishops of conquered Britain desert their churches, Page 109

BOOK X.

ST. AUGUSTIN OF CANTERBURY AND THE ROMAN MISSIONARIES IN ENGLAND, 597-633.

CHAPTER I.

MISSION OF ST. AUGUSTIN.

Origin and character of the Anglo-Saxons. — They have not to struggle, like the Franks, against the Roman decadence. — The seven kingdoms of the Heptarchy. — Institutions, social and political: government patriarchal and federal; seignury of the proprietors the witenagemot or parliament; social inequality, the ceorls and the eorls; individual independence and aristocratic federation; fusion of the two races. — The conquered Britons lose the Christian faith. Vices of the conquerors: slavery; commerce in human flesh. — The young Angles in the Roman market seen and bought by the monk Gregory. — Elected Pope, Gregory undertakes to convert the Angles by means of the monks of his Monastery of Mt. Cœlius, under the conduct of the abbot Augustin. — Critical situation of the Papacy. — Journey of the missionary monks across Gaul; their doubts; letters of Gregory. — Augustin lands at the same spot as Cæsar and the Saxon conquerors in the Isle of Thanet. — King Ethelbert; the queen, Bertha, already a Christian. — First interview under the oak; Ethelbert grants leave to preach. — Entry of the missionaries into Canterbury. — The spring-tide of the Church in England. — Baptism of Ethelbert. — Augustin Archbishop of Canterbury. — The palace of the king changed into a cathedral. — Monastery of St. Augustin beyond the walls of Canterbury. — Donation from the king and the parliament, Page 137

CHAPTER II.

HOW POPE GREGORY AND BISHOP AUGUSTIN GOVERNED THE NEW CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Joy of Gregory on learning the success of the monks. — His letters to Augustin; to the patriarch of Alexandria; to Queen Bertha. — A new monastic colony sent out. — Letter to the king. — Advice to Augustin regarding his miracles. — Opinion of Burke. —

Answer of Gregory to the questions of Augustin. — The Pope's arrangements for the heathen; his admirable moderation. — Supremacy over the British bishops accorded to Augustin. — Opposition of the Welsh Celts. — Nature of the dissensions which separated the British from the Roman Church. — Celebration of Easter. — Origin and insignificance of the religious dispute. — It is increased and complicated by patriotic antipathy to the Saxons. — First conference between Augustin and the British. — Miracle of the blind man. — Second conference; rapture. — The abbot of Bangor. — Augustin's threatening prediction concerning the monks of Bangor fulfilled by the fierce Ethelfrid of Northumbria. — Sequel of Augustin's mission. — He is insulted by the fishermen of Dorsetshire. — Foundation of King Ethelbert. — Bishops of London and of Rochester. — Laws of Ethelbert; the first reduced to writing. — Guarantee given to the Church property. — Death of Gregory and Augustin, Page 161

CHAPTER III.

FIRST SUCCESSORS OF ST. AUGUSTIN — PAGAN REACTION.

Special characteristics of the conversion of England. — All the details of it are known: it has neither martyrs nor persecutions; it has been the exclusive work of Benedictine or Celtic monks. — All the Roman missionaries were monks; their monasteries served for cathedrals and parish churches. — Laurence, first successor of Augustin. — Mellitus at the council of Rome at 610; Pope's letter to Ethelbert; monks of Saxon origin. — Efforts of Laurence to reconcile the British; his letter to the Irish bishops. — Conversion of the kings of East Anglia and Essex. — Foundation of Westminster; legend of the fisher; King Sebert the first to be buried there; monastic burials; Nelson and Wellington. — Canterbury and Westminster, the metropolis and national necropolis of the English, due to the monks. — Death of Bertha and of Ethelbert; the abbot Peter drowned. — Eadbald, the new king of Kent, remains a pagan; his subjects, as also the Saxons of the East, return to paganism. — Flight of the bishops of London and Rochester; Archbishop Laurence held back by St. Peter. — Conversion of Eadbald. — Apostasy of the king of East Anglia; he admits Christ among the Scandinavian gods. — Mellitus and Justus, the second and third successors of Augustin, Page 187

CHAPTER IV.

FIRST MISSION IN NORTHUMBRIA — ITS SUCCESSES AND ITS DISASTER — BISHOP PAULINUS AND KING EDWIN.

Extent and origin of the Anglo-Saxon settlements in Northumbria; thanks to their compatriot Bede, their history is better known than that of the others. — Ida and Ella, founders of the two kingdoms of Deira and Bernicia; Bamborough and the Fair Trellis. — War of the Northumbrians and Britons: Ethelfrid the Ravager, conqueror of the Welsh and of the Scots under Aïdan, the friend of St. Columba. — Edwin, representing the rival dynasty, a refuge in East Anglia; on the point of being delivered over to his enemies, he is saved by the queen; vision and promise. — He becomes king of Northumbria and Bretwalda; list of Bretwaldas. — He marries the Christian Ethelburga, daughter of the king of Kent. — Mission of Bishop Paulinus, who accompanies the princess to York. — Influence of women in the conversion of the Saxons. — Fruitless preaching of Paulinus; letters of Boniface V. to the king and queen. — Edwin saved from the poniard of an assassin; birth of his daughter; war against the West Saxons. — Hesitation of Edwin; last effort of Paulinus. — Edwin promises to accept the faith after consulting his parliament. — Speeches of the high priest and of the chief captain. — Baptism of Edwin and of his nobility. — Bishopric and monastic cathedral of York. — The king and the bishop labor for the conversion of the Northumbrians. — General baptism by immersion. — Paulinus to the south of the Humber. — Foundations of Southwell and Lincoln. — Consecration of Honorius, fourth successor of Augustin at Canterbury. — Letter of Pope Honorius to the two metropolitans and to King Edwin. — Prosperous reign of Edwin. — Conversion of East Anglia; foundation of Edinburgh; conquest of Anglesea; public security; the woman and the foster-child; the copper cups; the tufa of the Bretwalda. — League of the Saxons and Britons of Mercia against the Saxons of Northumbria: Cadwallon and Penda. — Edwin is killed. — Flight of Paulinus and Ethelburga. — Overthrow of Christianity in Northumbria and East Anglia. — Check of the Roman missionaries; their virtues and their faults. — There remain to them only the metropolis and the abbey of St. Augustin at Canterbury, which continue to be the two citadels of Roman influence, Page 201

BOOK XI.

THE CELTIC MONKS AND THE ANGLO-SAXONS.

CHAPTER I.

ST. OSWALD AND THE REVIVAL OF CHRISTIANITY IN NORTHUMBRIA.

The Celtic monks revive, in Northumbria, the work of conversion abandoned by the Roman monks. — Oswald, son of Ethelfrid, the Ravager, an exile among the Scots, is baptized according to the Celtic rite. — He returns to Northumbria, plants there the first cross, and gains the battle of Denisesburn over the Mercians and Britons. — He reigns over the whole of Northumbria, and makes it the predominant power in the Anglo-Saxon Confederation. His desire to convert his kingdom to Christ. — The Italian deacon, James, keeps Christianity alive in Deira; but in Bernicia everything has yet to be. — Oswald begs for missionaries from the Celtic monasteries. — Failure of the first missionary from Iona: he is succeeded by Aidan. — Bede's eulogy of the Abbots of Iona. — The religious capital of the north of England is fixed in the monastic isle of Lindisfarne: description of that island: its resemblance to Iona. — Authority of the abbots of Lindisfarne even over the bishops. — Virtues of the monk-bishop Aidan: his disinterestedness: his care of children and slaves. — King Oswald acts as assistant and interpreter to the missionary Aidan. — Oswald marries the daughter of the King of Wessex, and converts his father-in-law. — Note regarding the local and provincial opposition of the monks of Bardene. — War with Penda, chief of the coalition of the Britons and Mercians. — Battle of Maserfeld: Oswald is killed there at the age of thirty-eight. — Venerated as a martyr. — Miracles wrought at his tomb. — Prediction of Bishop Aidan with regard to his hand, Page 223

CHAPTER II.

NORTHUMBRIA UNDER THE SUCCESSORS OF OSWALD — THE CELTIC BISHOPS — THE GREAT ABBESSES, HILDA AND EBBA.

Oswald's successors in Northumbria: Oswy in Bernicia; Oswin in Deira. — Oswin's intimacy with Bishop Aidan. — The son of the mare and the son of God. — New outrages of Penda. — Aidan stops the burning of Bamborough. — Struggle between Oswy and Oswin. — Murder of Oswin. — Death of Aidan twelve years after his friend. — The double monastery of Tynemouth, built above the tomb of Oswin. — The wife of the murderer dedicates a monastery to the expiation of the murder. — Reign of Oswy, who was venerated as a saint, notwithstanding his crime, because of his zeal for the truth. — Successors of Aidan at Lindisfarne, sent by the monks of Iona. — Episcopate of the Scot Finan. — He builds the Cathedral of Lindisfarne of wood. — Colman, second successor. — Novitiate at Melrose. — The young Anglo-Saxons go to study in Ireland. — The female monasteries of Northumbria. — Heia, the first nun. — Hartlepool. — Aidan gives the veil to Hilda, princess of Deira: her rule of thirty years at Whitby. — Description of the place. — The six bishops who issued from the double monastery. Ceadmon, the cowherd, vassal of Hilda; the first Anglo-Saxon poet; precursor of Milton, he sings the Paradise Lost; his holy life and death. — The Princess Ebba, of the rival dynasty, sister of Oswald and Oswy, foundress and Abbess of Coldingham: she also rules for thirty years. — Notable disorders in her monasteries. — Fervor and austerity of the Northumbrian monks: extraordinary fasts: different characteristics of Lindisfarne, Coldingham, and Melrose. — A precursor of Dante. — Foundation of Lastingham: Cedd, monk of Lindisfarne. — Testimony borne by the Romano-Benedictine Bede to the virtue, disinterestedness, and popularity of the Celtic missionaries. — Nevertheless, resistance and opposition are not awanting. — Contrast and fickleness of character in the kings as in the people. — Joy of the natives of the coast on seeing the monks shipwrecked, Page 246

CHAPTER III.

PROPAGATION OF CHRISTIANITY BY THE KINGS AND MONKS OF NORTHUMBRIA — FINAL TRIUMPH OF NORTHUMBRIA UNDER OSWY.

Influence of the three Northumbrian Bretwaldas and their Celtic clergy on the other kingdoms of the Heptarchy.

1. East Anglia. — Vicissitudes of Christianity. — The king, converted by Edwin, is assassinated. — His brother, excited in France, returns a convert with the missionary bishop, Felix. — The king and the bishop evangelize East Anglia. — Supposed origin of Cambridge. — The Irish monk, Fursy, assists in their work. — The visions which make him a forerunner of Dante. — King Sigebert becomes a monk; he issues from his cloister to fight, armed with a staff, against Penda; and dies on the field of battle. — A king-monk among the Cambrians perishes in the same way fighting against the Saxons. — Anna, the successor of Sigebert, is, like him, killed by Penda.
2. Wessex. — Christianity is brought hither by King Oswald and the Italian bishop, Birinus. — Oswald, son-in-law and godfather of the King of the West Saxons. — Pop-

- ular verses about Birinus. — The son of the first Christian king, who had continued a heathen, and had been dethroned by Penda, is converted during exile; re-established in Wessex, he summons thither as bishop a Frank who had been educated among the Celts, but afterwards desires a bishop acquainted with Anglo-Saxon. — Foundation of Malmesbury and of Winchester. — An English abbot at Glastonbury. — The Anglo-Saxons begin to occupy the episcopal sees. — A West Saxon becomes the first English Archbishop of Canterbury. — Ercombert, King of Kent, destroys the idols.
3. Essex. — King Oswy converts his friend Sigobert, King of Essex, baptized by Finan in the villa of the Northumbrian king. — A monk of Lindisfarne becomes Bishop of London. — The first Christian king of Essex killed by his cousin, because he is too ready to forgive. — The first bishop dies of the plague, and thirty of his friends go to die on his tomb. — Relapse of the East Saxons into idolatry. — A new king and a new bishop, educated by the Celts, bring them back to the faith.
4. Mercia. — Influence of the King of Northumbria and of the Bishop of Lindisfarne on the conversion of the Mercians. — The son of King Oswy, married to a daughter of the King of Mercia, converts the brother of his wife, and marries him to his sister. — The Celtic missionaries in Mercia. — Unexpected tolerance of the ferocious Penda towards his son and his converted subjects. But he continues his devastations in Northumbria. — Last conflict between him and Oswy. — Battle of Winwæd. — Defeat and death of Penda, the last hero of Saxon Paganism. — Oswy offers his daughter to God in acknowledgment of the victory, and founds twelve monasteries. — Final triumphs of the Northumbrians and of Christianity. — Conquest and conversion of Mercia. — Its first five bishops issue from Celtic cloisters. — Opposition of the monks of Bardenev to the worship of St. Oswald. — The Mercians, revolting against the Northumbrians, nevertheless remain Christians.
- Summary*. — Of eight Anglo-Saxon kingdoms, one only is exclusively converted by the Roman missionaries; four are converted by the Celtic monks alone; and two by the combined action of the Celts and of bishops sent from Rome. — Sussex alone remains to be won, where a Celtic colony resides without influence, Page 276

BOOK XII.

ST. WILFRID ESTABLISHES ROMAN UNITY AND THE BENEDICTINE ORDER, 634-709.

CHAPTER I.

BEGINNING OF WILFRID'S CAREER—ASSEMBLY OF WHITBY.

Birth and early years of Wilfrid. — Note on his biographer Eddi. — Protected by the Queen of Northumbria, he enters at Lindisfarne, then goes to Rome, where no Anglo-Saxon had yet been. — He passes by Canterbury and stops at Lyons, where he separates from his companion Benedict Biscop, and where the archbishop wishes to give him his niece in marriage. — Wilfrid at Rome. — In returning by Lyons he receives the Romish tonsure and escapes, against his will, from martyrdom. — Returned to England, he becomes the intimate friend of Alchfrid, son of King Oswy. — New monastery founded at Ripon, from whence the monks of the Celtic ritual are expelled. — Popularity of Wilfrid. — He is ordained priest by a French bishop. — Southern Ireland had already adopted the Romish computation for the celebration of Easter. — The dispute on this question revived by Wilfrid in Northumbria, and division of the royal family. — The King Oswy follows the Celtic ritual; his wife and son that of Rome. — Importance and nature of the Pascāl difference. — Moderation of the Romish Church throughout the dispute. — A rivalry of influence mingles with the ritualistic dispute. — Assembly of Whitby, convoked by the king to end the controversy; composition of the assembly: the two chambers: principal persons: on the side of the Celts, the Abbess Hilda and her two communities, the Bishops of Lindisfarne and London; on the side of Rome, the young King Alchfrid, the old deacon James, and Wilfrid. — The authority of Columba unwisely invoked. — The king pronounces for the Romish Easter, and the assembly ratifies his decision. — Bishop Colman protests, abdicates, and returns to Iona, carrying with him the bones of his predecessor St. Aidan, the Celtic apostle of Northumbria, Page 303

CHAPTER II.

WILFRID, BISHOP OF YORK, AND THE GREEK MONK THEODORE, PRIMATE OF ENGLAND.

Colman founds a half-Saxon, half-Celtic monastic colony in Ireland. — He is succeeded in Northumbria by the Anglo-Saxon Eata as prior of Lindisfarne, and by Tuda, an Irishman converted to the Romish ritual, as bishop. — Dedication of the great Monastery of Peterborough, founded by the Christian descendants of Penda, the last Pagan leader; at which Mercians and Northumbrians, Celts and Romanists, are present together; speech of King Wulphere. — Pestilence of 664; death of Tuda; Wilfrid elected Bishop of Northumbria. — Treating the Anglo-Saxon bishops as schismatics, he goes to be consecrated by the Bishop of Paris at Compiègne, and removes his see from Lindisfarne to York. — On his return he is shipwrecked on the coast of Sussex, and fights with the natives. — Celtic reaction against Wilfrid; King Oswy replaces him during his absence by an Irish abbot, Ceadda. — Sanctity and popularity of Ceadda. — The Northumbrians observe the decree of Whitby as to the celebration of Easter, but refuse to retain Wilfrid as bishop. — He retires to his Monastery of Ripon. — He resides with the Kings of Mercia and of Kent. — He assists the holy Queen Ermenilda in completing the conversion of the Mercians. — He introduces the Gregorian chant and the Benedictine rule into Northumbria. — The Kings of Kent and Northumbria leave to the Pope the choice of the new metropolitan of Canterbury. — The Pope chooses a Greek monk Theodore, and associates with him Adrian, an African, and the Anglo-Saxon Benedict Biscop. — They are all three seized on their way by Ebroïn, but released. — The pontificate of St. Theodore, the first metropolitan recognized by all England. — He re-establishes Wilfrid in the see of York, who makes Ceadda bishop of the Mercians. — Holy and peaceful death of Ceadda. — Theodore and Adrian visit all England. — Theodore's ecclesiastical legislation; his book of penance. — He consecrates the Celtic Cathedral of Lindisfarne. — He creates the parochial system as it now exists, and holds the first Anglo-Saxon council at Hertford. — He fails in increasing the number of bishoprics, but introduces the Benedictine order into the monasteries. — Literary development of the English monasteries due to Theodore and Adrian. — The Church of England is constituted, and the English nation becomes a lever in the hands of the Papacy, . Page 223

CHAPTER III.

BEGINNING OF THE TRIALS OF WILFRID: ST. ETHELDREDA. — 669-678.

Wilfrid, reduced to a subordinate position, reconciles himself to King Oswy, who dies after a prosperous reign of twenty-eight years. — Extension of Northumbrian domination, and of Wilfrid's jurisdiction towards the north. — At the commencement of the new reign, alliance between him and King Egfrid, who triumphs both in the insurrection of the Picts and the invasion of the Mercians. — Episcopal virtues and austerities of Wilfrid. — His confirmation journeys; the child resuscitated. — Wilfrid's monasteries become centres of public education. — Services which he renders to the arts; music, spread of the Gregorian chant. — Great architectural works at York, at Ripon, and especially at Hexham, where he builds the finest church on this side the Alps on land given by Queen Etheldreda. — Connection of Wilfrid with Etheldreda, the first and most popular of English female saints. — Her origin and connections. — Twice married, she succeeds in consecrating her virginity to God. — Wilfrid encourages her in her resistance to King Egfrid, and gives her the veil at Coldingham; Egfrid pursues her. — She flies to Ely. — Legends of her journey. — Foundation and monastic life at Ely. — The major-domo Owen. — Wilfrid continues to advise Etheldreda. — His quarrel with Egfrid provoked by the new queen, Ermenburga. — The Archbishop Theodore interferes in their disputes. — He deposes Wilfrid, and divides his diocese into three new bishoprics, which he confides to Celtic monks. — Wilfrid appeals to Rome. — The saints and great abbots of his country remain indifferent or hostile. — Strange ignorance of ecclesiastical right, even among the saints, Page 355

CHAPTER IV.

JUSTICE DONE TO WILFRID AT ROME: IN ENGLAND HE IS DEPOSED, IMPRISONED, EXILED, AND RESTORED. — 678-686.

Wilfrid himself carries his cause to Rome. — A storm lands him in Friesland, where he evangelizes the people. — He thus becomes the first of the Anglo-Saxon apostles of Germany. — Generosity of the King of the Frisians and King of the Lombards, both of whom refuse to deliver him up to Ebroïn. — Wilfrid in Austrasia: Dagobert II. — Wilfrid at Rome. — Theodore and Hilda denounce him to the Pope St. Agathon. — His cause is tried by a council at which the Pope presides. — He obtains justice; but the principle of the division of dioceses is maintained, and the authority of the primate confirmed. Wilfrid hears at Rome of the death of Etheldreda. — He is present at the Council against the Monothelites, and bears witness to the faith of all the Churches of the British Isles. — He returns to England with the Papal charter for Peterborough. — He is repulsed by the king and assembly of the Northumbrians, and then imprisoned. — Connivance of Archbishop Theodore. — Wilfrid refuses to treat with the king. — He is put in irons at Dunbar: afterwards delivered by the intervention of the Abbess Edda of Coldingham, but exiled. — Obligated to leave Mercia and Wessex, where the brothers-in-law of Egfrid reign, he takes refuge among the Saxons of the South, whom he converts to Christianity. — He teaches them to fish with nets, and frees the serfs on the domains of his new Abbey of Selsey. — His connection with the proscribed Ceadwalla, who becomes King of Wessex, and afterwards dies at Rome. — Theodore again disposes of the diocese of Wilfrid: St. Cuthbert is made bishop of Lindisfarne. — King Egfrid ravages Ireland cruelly: in spite of the entreaties of Bishop Cuthbert he invades Caledonia, and perishes there. — Queen Ermenburga, informed by Cuthbert of the death of her husband, becomes a nun. — Consequences of the defeat of Egfrid. — The Saxon bishop of the Picts takes refuge at Whitby, where Elfreda, sister of Egfrid, had succeeded Hilda. — Archbishop Theodore acknowledges his faults towards Wilfrid: he wishes to choose him as his successor: writes in his favor to the King of the Mercians and to the Abbess Elfreda. — Connection of Elfreda with Bishop Cuthbert. — Aldfrid, long an exile at Iona, becomes King of Northumbria. — Wilfrid is recalled and re-established in his diocese. — Storms raised by him at Lindisfarne, which he abandons to another bishop. — Death of Archbishop Theodore, Page 378

CHAPTER V.

SECOND EXILE OF WILFRID, AND SECOND APPEAL TO ROME. — 686-705.

Rupture of Wilfrid with King Aldfrid. — New accusations against Wilfrid. — He is exiled the second time. — He is received by the King of Mercia, who gives him the bishopric of Lichfield. — He there lives eleven years in tranquil obscurity. — Theodore's successor hostile to Wilfrid, as also Abbot Adrian. — Assembly of Nesterfield. — Degrading proposals made to Wilfrid; he rejects them. — His speech. — He appeals to Rome. — Precocious talent of the Anglo-Saxons in diplomacy and despotism. — King Ethelred of Mercia remains faithful to Wilfrid. — The monks of Ripon are excommunicated. — Wilfrid's third voyage to Rome. — Contrast with the first. — Pope John VI. — The trial lasts four months, and occupies seventy sittings. — Wilfrid is acquitted. — Returning to England, he falls ill at Meaux. — His friend Acca. — His life is prolonged in answer to the prayers of his monks. — He is reconciled to the archbishop. — He goes to visit his faithful friend Ethelred, now become a monk at Bardenev. — Aldfrid, King of Northumbria, refuses to recognize the sentence of the Holy See. — He dies. — His successor expels Wilfrid within six days, but is himself dethroned. — National assembly on the banks of the Nid. — The Abbess Elfreda and the Ealdorman Bertfrid interpose on behalf of Wilfrid. — General reconciliation. — The Monasteries of Ripon and Hexham given up to him. — Influence of Anglo-Saxon princesses on the destiny of Wilfrid, . . . Page 411

CHAPTER VI.

THE LAST YEARS OF WILFRID. — 705-709.

Wilfrid's illness assembles all the abbots of his monasteries about him. — He divides his treasures: his farewell to the monks of Ripon. — His last journey to Mercia. — He consecrates the Church of Evesham monastery. — Bishop Egwin of Worcester and the smiths. — Vision of the three virgins in the forest. — Simon de Montfort, creator of the House of Commons, buried at Evesham. — Wilfrid narrates all his life to his successor Tatbert. — His death. — His funeral at Ripon. — His worship and his miracles. — He appears with St. Cuthbert to relieve Hexham against the Scots: the Christian Dioscouri. — His banner appears at the battle of the Standard. — Services which he rendered to the monastic order, to the Church of England, to the universal Church, to the English nation. (Note on the Culdees of York.) — He begins that long succession of pontiff-confessors which has no rival out of the Church of England. — His character, . Page 434

BOOK XIII.

CONTEMPORARIES AND SUCCESSORS OF ST. WILFRID, 650-735.

CHAPTER I.

ST. CUTHBERT. — 637-687.

Contrast between Wilfrid and the saints of the Northumbrian coast. — His glory eclipsed by that of Cuthbert. — Childhood of Cuthbert, a shepherd on the Scottish borders. — He becomes a novice at Melrose. — He evangelizes the Scottish marches. (Note upon the Monastery of Dull, cradle of the University of St. Andrews.) — His austerities: his baths: legend of the otters. — He goes from Melrose to Ripon, from which he is expelled by Wilfrid, along with all the Celtic monks. — He becomes prior at Lindisfarne, where he establishes the customs of Rome and the Benedictine rule. — His life at Lindisfarne in its cloistral and in its external aspect. — His extreme modesty. — He becomes a hermit in a cave of the Isle of Farne. — Popular traditions concerning this portion of his life. — The birds of St. Cuthbert, and the beads of his chaplet. — His charity towards the crowd of penitents who sought him there. — His hospitality. — His humility. — King Egfrid takes him from his rock to make him Bishop of Lindisfarne. — He continues both monk and missionary during his short episcopate. — His compassion for the sufferings of his penitents. — The mad countess. — The mother consoled. — His affection for his foster-mother, for Queen Etheldreda, and the great abbesses Ebba of Coldingham and Eilfeda of Whitby. (Note upon the exclusion of women from his monastery.) — His last visit to the Abbess Verca. — He returns to his rock to die. — The abbess's shroud. — Last exhortations of Cuthbert: his death. — His closest friend dies at the same hour on the same day. — Their annual interview upon the rock of Farne. — Great and lasting popularity of his memory. — Translation of his relics to

Durham. — Magnificence and wealth of that cathedral, after Toledo the richest in the world. — Right of asylum. — Efficacy of his protection to the oppressed. — Alfred, Canute, and William the Conqueror. — The independence, almost sovereign, of Cuthbert's successors under the Anglo-Norman monarchy. — He is invoked by the English against the Scottish invasions. — Battle of Neville's Cross. — His banner appears for the last time in the insurrection of the North against Henry VIII. — It is profaned and burned with his body. — His popularity at sea. — The sailor-monks. — Cuthbert, while a child, saw them like sea-birds on the waves. — His appearance to sailors in danger. — The hermit Ethelwold prays for the shipwrecked. — Grace Darling, the Christian heroine of these islands in the nineteenth century, Page 455

CHAPTER II.

ST. BENEDICT BISCOP, AND THE MONASTERIES OF WEARMOUTH AND YARROW.

Benedict Biscop represents science and art, as Wilfrid represents public, and Cuthbert spiritual, life. — His birth and conversion. — His four first expeditions to Rome. — He gains the heart of King Egfrid. — Foundation of Wearmouth. — He brings masons and glassmakers from France. — His fifth and sixth visits to Rome, from which he brings back many relics, books, and pictures. — Important works of painting in the new monasteries. — A Roman abbot teaches liturgical music to all the Northumbrian monasteries, and assures himself of the orthodoxy of the English clergy in respect to the heresy of the Monothelites. — Foundation of Yarrow. — Fraternal union of the two monasteries in imitation of their patrons Saints Peter and Paul. — Benedict takes his nephew Easterwine as his coadjutor. — The occupations of a Saxon noble transformed into a monk. — Death of Easterwine. — Severe illness of Benedict. — His last injunctions. — His touching death by the side of his dying coadjutor. — After him Ceolfrid, the son of an ealdorman, disciple of Wilfrid and Botolph, governs the two monasteries. — History of Botolph, the founder of Boston and apostle of the Benedictine order. — Ceolfrid, as abbot, takes great pains to increase the libraries. — He makes an exchange of a book for an estate with the King of Northumbria. — His desire to die at Rome. — Grief of the six hundred monks who accompanied him to the spot where he embarked. — Their letter to the Pope. — He is able to go only as far as Langres, where he dies. — How Christianity taught the barbarous Saxons to love each other, Page 493

CHAPTER III.

END OF THE CELTIC HERESY — ADAMNAN, EGBERT, ST. ALDHELM.

The king of the Picts requests Ceolfrid to send him architects, and arguments in favor of Roman unity. — Answer of Ceolfrid, in which he quotes from Plato. — The Picts abandon the Celtic peculiarities. — The monks of Iona leave their monasteries rather than adopt the Roman ritual. — Their abbot, Adamnan, biographer of Columba, and the last great personage of the Celtic Church. — His relations with King Aldfrid and the Abbot Ceolfrid. — He attempts in vain to lead the monks of Iona back to Roman rule, but has more success in Ireland, where he dies. — Iona is brought back to Catholic unity by the Anglo-Saxon Egbert, the head of a colony of Saxon monks in Ireland. — His austere and holy life. — He loses his most intimate friend, who reproaches him for desiring to survive him. — He uses his influence with the Anglo-Saxons to send them as missionaries to Germany. — After thirteen years' struggle, he overcomes the resistance of Iona, and dies on the very day when the feast of Easter is celebrated by both parties together. — Ireland and Caledonia having been thus brought back to Catholic unity, only the Britons of Cambria and Cornwall remain outside its pale, by reason of their national antipathy for the Saxon conquerors. — Note upon Bede's injustice to them. — Attempt of St. Aldhelm to bring them in. — His royal birth, and education — half Celtic, half Roman — at Malmesbury and Canterbury. — He becomes Abbot of Malmesbury. — His literary fame greater than his merit; his vernacular songs; intellectual development of Anglo-Saxon cloisters. — Extent and variety of his studies. — His continual solicitude for souls. — His great monastic character. — His zeal for preaching. — He interferes in favor of Wilfrid. — He goes to Rome to obtain the privilege of exemption for Malmesbury, the monks of which persist in retaining him as abbot, even after his promotion to the episcopate. — Anecdote about the importation of Bibles. — Death of Aldhelm. — His exertions for bringing back Celtic dissenters. — His letter to the King of Cornwall. — The Britons of Cambria, who had resisted all the efforts of Roman and Saxon missionaries, adopt the Roman ritual by the influence of one of their own bishops. — Their pilgrimages to Rome. — End of the struggle. — Opinion of Mabillon. — Resistance proportioned to the dangers which beset the special nationality. — Union the work of Benedictines. — In the Britannie Isles, as among the Gauls, Celtic monasticism conquered and eclipsed by the Benedictine order, Page 514

CHAPTER IV.

THE VENERABLE BEDE.

The entire history of this period is summed up in the Venerable Bede. — His works. — Encyclopædical character of his genius. — His theological and scientific writings; his love for the classics. — His History of the English. — His scrupulous care to prove its truth. — His soul. — The love of virtue and truth evident in all his writings. — He is himself the type of the noble lives he records. — His life passed entirely in the cloister of Yarrow. — He is spared in his youth by the pestilence which carries off the whole community except himself and his abbot. — His different masters; his diligence in work. — His extensive connections. — His friendship with Abbot Aeca. — His works on Holy Scripture. — His celebrated letter to Bishop Egbert of York upon the abuses of ecclesiastical government and monastic life. — His bold freedom does not diminish his authority. — He is accused of heresy in popular drinking songs. — His intimacy with the monks of Lindisfarne. — Narrative of his death by an eye-witness. — His worship and his relics. — Contrast between the country he lived in and the actual condition of Northumberland, Page 518

CHAPTER V.

THE ROYAL MONKS.

The star of Northumbria pales, notwithstanding the erection of the see of York into an archbishopric. — Sad end of the lineage of Oswy. — King Ceolfrid, to whom Bede dedicates his History, becomes a monk at Lindisfarne. — His successor Eadbert follows his example. — Other monk-kings. — Almost each dynasty of the Heptarchy furnishes its share; in East Anglia, Sigebert, who dies on the field of battle; in Essex, Sebbi, who leads back his people to the faith — his desire to die in solitude; and Offa, who dies at Rome; in Mercia, which inherited the preponderating power of Northumbria, Ceonred, the travelling companion and fellow-novice of Offa; Ethelred, founder, monk, and abbot of Bardeney. — Another Mercian king, Ceolred, dies in a debauch. — Ethelbald, pursued by Ceolred, takes refuge in the marsh of Croyland with the hermit Guthlac, who predicts to him that he will be King of Mercia. — What Guthlac had been before he became an anchorite. — His solitary life resembles those of some of the most illustrious saints in the monastic order. — Death of Guthlac. — Foundation of the celebrated Abbey of Croyland upon the site of his cell. — Continuation and end of the reign of Ethelbald. — Remonstrances of the Anglo-Saxon missionaries in Germany. — The supremacy passes from Mercia to Wessex. — Three West Saxon kings abdicate to become monks or pilgrims to Rome: Centwin; Ceadwalla, the friend of Wilfrid, who lives just long enough to be baptized by the Pope; and Ina the friend of St. Aldhelm. — Reign of Ina, the legislator, victor, and pacificator of the Britons; restorer of the Celtic sanctuary of Glastonbury, the first protector of St. Boniface. — In consequence of a surprise prepared for him by his wife, he goes to Rome as a penitent to die, and founds the Schola Saxonum there. — Crowd of Anglo-Saxon pilgrims of both sexes to Rome. — Abuses and disorders. — False monks and false pilgrims. — The age of gold a chimera in the Church as elsewhere, Page 575

BOOK XIV.

SOCIAL AND POLITICAL INFLUENCE OF THE MONKS AMONG THE ANGLO-SAXONS.

The conversion and religious organization of England entirely the work of monks. — Their patience and perseverance; letter of Bishop Daniel to the missionary Boniface; no violence; mildness and toleration. — Their influence over the nature they had converted; evil survives, but the good outweighs it. — Alliance between the Church and secular society, without the exclusive preponderance of either. — These apostolic monks were no longer fathers of the desert, but the creators of a Church and nation. — Towns grow up around the great communities. — The monasteries give rise to cathedrals and parishes. — Propagation of the Benedictine order. — Protection assured to the monastic order by the Councils of Beccanelde and Cloveshoe. — Religious instruction in the national tongue. — Musical liturgy. — Crosses in the open air. — Services rendered to education by monasteries and monastic bishops.—St. John of Beverley.—Fondness of the Anglo-Saxon students for horsemanship.—Services rendered to agriculture.—Position of the monks as landlords.—Close alliance between the monastic order and the Anglo-Saxon aristocracy.—Intervention in political matters.—Their place in the national councils.—Authority, composition, and powers of these councils.—The distinction between the temporal and spiritual is not forgotten.—Influence of monks in these assemblies, and through them on laws and manners.—They contribute to the formation of that national unity which, since the ninth century, has never been disturbed.—Their devotion to the cause of the poor: expiation for the sins of the rich gives rise to public almsgiving.—Their zeal for the liberation of slaves; contest between an archbishop and an abbot for a young captive.—The rights of man as well as those of God vindicated by the monks throughout the history of their conquest of England.—Religion is too often left defenceless, but her ministers respect honor and the freedom of thought in regard to the things of God.—The monastic missionaries perfect the national character without changing it; the spirit of the Saxons still lives in modern England; modern liberty, self-government, and parliamentary rule are rooted in the Saxon times.—Conformity of monastic rules with the tone of Anglo-Saxon institutions.—Splendor and prodigality of the aristocracy.—Motives of their gifts.—Abuse of their grants of land.—Folc-land and boc-land.—Monastic possessions exempt from military service and from taxes.—Public danger remarked by Bede.—Repression of many abuses by the Council of Cloveshove; it decrees against monastic luxury and wealth, and against the false ideas prevalent as to almsgiving.—The monastic riches arising from the munificence of kings and nobles soon excite envy; fluctuations and oppressions noticed by St. Boniface; necessity of a limit which might be imposed by the Church herself on the increase of monastic possessions.—Their value forms a pretext for spoliation and heresy.—Lacordaire and Mabillon.—A Spanish Benedictine martyred in 1608.—Before reaching this point England becomes the home of Christian propagandism and the instructress of the Teutonic races.—At the death of Bede, Boniface is already the apostle of Germany, Page 599

BOOK XV.

THE ANGLO-SAXON NUNS.

I.

Convents of women as numerous and important as the monasteries of men.—Important position of women among the Teutonic races.—Contrast with the Romans of the Empire.—Among the Anglo-Saxons, descendants of the Cimbri, the influence of women even greater and happier than in other nations.—Importance of dynastic alliances.—Anglo-Saxon queens.

The Teutonic barbarians, though less corrupt than the Romans, nevertheless required an immense effort of the Christian apostles to conquer their sensual excesses.—The debt owed by women to Christianity.—The Church could only emancipate women by the ideal of Christian virginity.—This virginity nowhere more honored than among the Anglo-Saxons. — Influence and authority of abbesses. They appear in the national councils. — Cereimonial of the solemn benediction of a nun.

II.

Anglo-Saxon queens and princesses in the cloister. — The first nuns trained in France, at Faremoutier, Jouarre, and Chelles. — Saint Botolph and the two East Anglian princesses at Chelles.

Each dynasty of the Heptarchy supplies its share of virgins, wives, and widows.

The Northumbrian nuns already well known, except Bega. — Legend of this princess, an Irishwoman by birth. — Perpetual confusion of history and tradition.

The Ascings, or princesses of the Kentish dynasty. — Ethelburga, Queen of Northumbria, afterwards foundress of Lyminge. — Her sister Eadburga, and her niece Earnswida, foundress of Folkestone. — The legend of Domneva and her brothers. — The hind's run in the Isle of Thanet. — Great popularity of St. Mildred. — Legend of the box on the ear. — Mildred's sisters. — Milburga and the dead child.

The Mercian princesses. — The race of the cruel Penda furnished the greatest number of saints and nuns. — Three of his daughters nuns, and four of his granddaughters saints.

The Uffings of East Anglia. — The three daughters of King Anna who fell in battle. — Withburga and her community fed on hind's milk. — Three generations of saints of the race of Odin at Ely, which had for its three first abbesses a Queen of Northumbria, a Queen of Kent, and a Queen of Mercia. — Wereburga, the fourth sainted Abbess of Ely, and the shepherd of Weedon.

Nuns of the race of Cerdic in Wessex; the wife and sisters of King Ina. — St. Cuthburga, foundress of Winbourne. — The monastery of Frideswida, a West Saxon princess, is the cradle of the University of Oxford; the kiss of the leper.

III.

Literary, biblical, and classical studies among the Anglo-Saxon nuns — chiefly at Barking, under Abbess Hildelida. — St. Aldhelm addresses to them his Eulogy of Virginity; his letters to other nuns. — Winbourne, another centre of intellectual activity. — Abbess Tetta and her five hundred nuns; the novices dance on the tomb of their mistress.

IV.

Winbourne, a double monastery. — Origin of these singular institutions. — They flourished chiefly in the Irish colonies in Gaul; from thence introduced into England. — A monastery of men joined to every great abbey of women, and always governed by the abbess. — Interdicted by Archbishop Theodore. — The double monasteries disappeared after the Danish invasion; resemblance to the boys' schools managed by young girls in the United States. — In the seventh and eighth centuries no disorders are remarked in them except at Coldingham. — What were the abuses of the Anglo-Saxon cloisters. — Splendor of dress; attempts upon the modesty of the nuns foreseen and punished by Anglo-Saxon legislation. — Decrees of Archbishop Theodore and Egbert against the criminal relations of the clergy with nuns; their importance should not be exaggerated.

V.

The letters of St. Boniface contain the surest accounts of the state of souls in the Anglo-Saxon cloisters. — All there was not calm and happiness. — Tender and impassioned character of the letters addressed by the nuns to Boniface and his companions. — The not less affectionate answers of the missionaries. — The three Buggas and the two Eadburgas. — Earnest desire to make pilgrimages to Rome. — Grievances of the Abbess Eangytha and her daughter. — How St. Lioba became connected with St. Boniface. — Other letters written to the saint by his friends: Cœna, Egburga. — Lamentation of a nun for the absence of her brother.

VI.

Excesses of feeling vanish before death, but death itself does not put an end to the sweet friendships of the cloister. — St. Galla. — Hilda and her friend; Ethelburga and her friend; the daughters of Earl Pech. — Visions of light. — The daughter of the King of Kent and the lay sister at Faremontier. — The shining shroud at Barking; the extinguished lamp.

VII.

History has preserved only these names, but many others have disappeared after glorifying the Church and their country. — Masculine character of these Anglo-Saxon nuns: their monastic ideal unites the types of man, woman, and child.

Conclusion. — The whole ancient Catholic world has perished except the army of sacrifice. — Number and endurance of contemporary vocations, Page 645

APPENDIX.

I. IONA,	Page 737
II. CONCLUSIONS OF THE TWO PAPERS OF M. VARIN,	Page 742
III. LINDISFARNE,	Page 744
IV. PETERBOROUGH,	Page 747
V. HEXHAM,	Page 751
VI. GENEALOGICAL TABLE OF THE KINGS OF NORTHUMBRIA.
BERNICIAN DYNASTY,	Page 752
DEIRIAN DYNASTY,	Page 753
VII. GENEALOGICAL TABLE OF NUNS DESCENDED FROM THE
KINGS OF KENT,	Page 754
VIII. GENEALOGICAL TABLE OF NUNS DESCENDED FROM THE KINGS OF MERCIA,	Page 755
IX. GENEALOGICAL TABLE OF NUNS OF THE RACE OF THE KINGS OF EAST ANGLIA,	Page 756
X. GENEALOGICAL TABLE OF THE KINGS OF WESSEX,	Page 757

BOOK IX.

ST. COLUMBA, THE APOSTLE OF CALEDONIA, 521-597.

“I send thee unto the Gentiles, to open their eyes, and to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, that they may receive forgiveness of sins, and inheritance among them which are sanctified.”—ACTS xxvi. 18.

CHAPTER I.

THE YOUTH OF COLUMBA AND HIS MONASTIC LIFE IN IRELAND.

The biographers of Columba.—His different names.—His royal origin.—The supreme kings of Ireland: the O’Neills and O’Donnells; Red Hugh.—Birth of Columba; vision of his mother.—His monastic education; jealousy of his comrades; Kieran; the two Finnians; the school of Clonard.—Vision of the guardian angel and the three brides.—The assassin of a virgin struck by death at the prayer of Columba.—His youthful influence in Ireland; his monastic foundations, especially at Durrow and at Derry; his song in honor of Derry.—His love for poetry; his connection with the travelling bards.—He was himself a poet, a great traveller, and of a quarrelsome disposition.—His passion for manuscripts.—Longarad of the hairy legs and his bag of books.—Dispute about the Psalter of Finnian; judgment of King Diarmid, founder of Clonmacnoise.—Protest of Columba; he takes to flight, chanting the Hymn of Confidence, and raises a civil war.—Battle of Cul-Dreimhne; the Cathac or Psalter of battle.—Synod of Teltown; Columba is excommunicated.—St. Brendan takes part with Columba, who consults several hermits, and among others Abban, in the Cell of Tears.—The last of his advisers, Molaise, condemns him to exile.—Twelve of his disciples follow him; devotion of the young Mochonna.—Contradictory reports concerning the first forty years of his life.

ST. COLUMBA, the apostle and monastic hero of Caledonia, has had the good fortune to have his history written by another monk, almost a contemporary of his own, whose biography of him is as delightful as it is edifying. This biographer, Adamnan, was the ninth successor of Columba as abbot of his principal establishment at Iona, and in addition was related to him. Born only a quarter of a century later, he had seen in his childhood the actual companions of Columba and those who had received his last breath.¹ He wrote at the very fountain-head, on the spot where his glorious predecessor had dictated his last words, surrounded by scenes and recollections which still bore the trace of his presence, or were connected with the incidents of his life. A still earlier narrative, written by another abbot of Iona,² and reproduced almost word for word by Adamnan, forms the basis of his work, which he has completed by a multitude of anecdotes and testimonies collected with scrupulous care, and which altogether, though unfortunately without chronological order, forms one of the most living, attractive, and authentic relics of Christian history.³

The biographers of Columba.

His different names. Like twenty other saints of the Irish calendar, Columba bore a symbolical name borrowed from the Latin, a name which signified the dove of the Holy Ghost, and which was soon to be rendered illustrious by his countryman Columbanus, the celebrated founder of Luxeuil, with whom many modern historians have confounded him.⁴ To distinguish the one from the other, and to indicate specially the greatest Celtic missionary of the British Isles, we shall adopt, from the different versions of his name, that of Co-

¹ "Ut ab aliquibus, qui præsentes inerant, didicimus." — ADAMNAN, lib. iii. c. 23.

² By Comyn the Fair (Cummeneus Albus), the seventh bishop of Iona, 657 to 669. This narrative was first published by Colgan in the Trias Thaumaturga, afterwards in the first volume of the Acta Sanctorum ordinis S. Benedicti, and finally by the Bollandists, vol. ii. June.

³ Adamnan, who was born in 624, must have written the biography of St. Columba between 690 and 703, a period at which he gave up the liturgical traditions of the Scots and the direction of the Monastery of Iona to settle near the Anglo-Saxon king of Northumbria, Aldfrid (VARIN, Premier Mémoire, p. 172). Adamnan's work was first published by Canisius in his Thesaurus Antiquitatum in 1604; afterwards with four other biographies of the same saint by the Franciscan Colgan, in his Trias Thaumaturga (Louvain, 1647); by the Bollandists in 1698; and finally by Pinkerton, a Scotch antiquary of the last century. It has just been reprinted, after a MS. of the eighth century, by the Rev. Dr. W. Reeves, for the Celtic Archæological Society of Dublin, with maps, glossary, and appendix; Dublin, 1857. This excellent publication, which is distinguished by an impartiality too rare among learned English authors, has rendered a considerable service both to the hagiography and to the national history of Ireland and Scotland.

⁴ Among others, Camden, in the sixteenth century; Fleury at certain points (book xxxix. c. 36); and Augustin Thierry, in the first editions of his Histoire de la Conquête d'Angleterre.

lumba. His countrymen have almost always named him Columb-Kill or Cille, that is to say, the dove of the cell, thus adding to his primitive name a special designation, intended to recall either the essentially monastic character of the saint, or the great number of communities founded and governed by him.⁵ He was a scion of one of those great Irish races, of whom it is literally true to say that they lose themselves in the night of ages, but which have retained to our own day, thanks to the tenacious attachment of the Irish people to their national recollections, through all the vicissitudes of conquest, persecution, and exile, a rank more patriotic and popular than that of mere nobility or aristocratic lineage. This was the great race of the Nialls or O'Donnells⁶ (clan Domhnaill), which, native to and master of all the north-western part of the island (the modern counties of Tyrconnell, Tyrone, and Donegal), held sovereign sway in Hibernia and Caledonia, over the two shores of the Scottish sea, during the sixth century. Almost without interruption, up to 1168, kings, springing from its different branches, exercised in Ireland the supreme monarchy — that is to say, a sort of primacy over the provincial kings, which has been compared to that of metropolitan over bishops, but which rather recalls the feudal sovereignty of the Salic emperors, or of the kings of the family of Capet over the great vassals of Germany and France, in the eleventh and twelfth centuries. Nothing could be more unsettled or stormy than the exercise of this sovereignty. It was incessantly disputed by some vassal king, who generally succeeded by force of arms in robbing the supreme monarch of his crown and his life, and replacing origin.

His royal

The monarchs or supreme kings of Ireland.

⁵ “Qui videlicet Columba nunc a nonnullis, composito a cella et columba nomine, Columcelli vocatur.” — BEDE, Hist. Eccles., v. 9. “Eo quod multarum cellarum, id est, monasteriorum vel ecclesiarum institutor, fundator et rector fuit.” — NOTKER BALBULUS, Martyrol., 9 Jun.

⁶ There is a history of the saint in Irish by Magnus O'Donnell, who describes himself as prince of Tyrconnell. It was put together in 1532, and the original MS. is to be found in the Bodleian. It is a legendary compilation, founded upon the narrative of Adamnan, but augmented by a crowd of fabulous legends, though at the same time by important Irish traditions and historical details in honor of the race of O'Donnell, which was that of the saint and of the historian. It has been abridged, translated into Latin, and published by Colgan in the Triades Thaumaturgæ. This volume is the second of the author's collected works, entitled Acta Sanctorum Hiberniæ, seu sacra ejusdem insulæ antiquitates, which he was not able to finish, and which unfortunately includes only the saints of the first three months of the year. I have found a copy of this very rare collection in only one of all the Paris libraries, that of St. Geneviève.

him upon the throne of Tara, with a tolerable certainty of being himself similarly treated by the son of the dethroned prince.⁷ Besides, the right of succession in Ireland was not regulated by the law of primogeniture. According to the custom known under the name of Tanistry, the eldest blood-relation succeeded every deceased prince or chief, and the brother in consequence preceded the son in the order of succession.

The O'Neills and O'Donnells. After the English conquest, the warlike and powerful race of Nialls was able to maintain, by dint of dauntless perseverance, a sort of independent sovereignty in the north-west of Ireland. The names of the O'Neills and O'Donnells, chiefs of its two principal branches, and too often at war with each other, are to be found on every page of the annals of unhappy Ireland. After the Reformation, when religious persecution had come in to aggravate all the evils of the conquest, these two houses supplied their indignant and unsubdued country with a succession of heroic soldiers who struggled to the death against the perfidious and sanguinary despotism of the Tudors and Stuarts. Ten centuries passed in such desperate struggles have not weakened the traditions which link the saint whose history we are about to tell to those champions of an ancient faith and an outraged country. Even under the reign of Elizabeth, the vassals of young Hugh O'Donnell, called Red Hugh,⁸ so renowned in poetical records and popular traditions of Erin, and the most dangerous antagonist of English tyranny, recognized in him the hero indicated in the prophetic songs of Columb-kill, and thus placed his glory and that of his ancestors under the wing of the dove of the cells, as under a patronage at once domestic and celestial.⁹

⁷ Let us recall in this connection the very ancient division of Ireland into four provinces or kingdoms: — to the north, Ulster, or Ultonia; to the south, Munster or Mommonia; to the east, Leinster or Lagenia; to the west, Connaught or Cannocia. A distinct district, the antique Sacred Middle of Ireland, represented by the counties of Meath and Westmeath, surrounded the royal residence of Tara, celebrated in Moore's melodies, and some ruins of which still remain. This district was exclusively dependent on the supreme monarch. See the map annexed to this volume.

⁸ Taken prisoner by the English in his cradle, he died at the age of twenty-nine, in 1602, at Simancas, where he had gone to seek aid from Spain. His brother, the heir of his power in Ireland, also died in exile in Rome, where his tomb may still be seen in San Pietro in Montorio.

⁹ REEVES, Adamnan, p. 34. O'CURRY, Lectures on the Manuscript Materials of Ancient Irish History, 1861, p. 328. The eight great races of Ireland, sung by the bards and celebrated in the national history, are these: —

The father of Columba was descended from one of the eight sons of the great king Niall of the Nine Hostages,¹⁰ who was supreme monarch of all Ireland from 379 to 405, at the period when Patrick was brought to the island as a slave. Consequently he sprang from a race which had reigned in Ireland for six centuries; and in virtue of the ordinary law of succession, might himself have been called to the throne.¹¹ His mother belonged to a reigning family in Leinster, one of the four subordinate kingdoms of the island. He was born at Gartan, in one of the wildest districts of the present county of Donegal — where the slab of stone upon which his mother lay at the moment of his birth is still shown. He who passes a night upon that stone is cured forever from the pangs of nostalgia, and will never be consumed, while absent or in exile, by a too passionate love for his country. Such at least is the belief of the poor Irish emigrants, who flock thither at the moment when they are about to abandon the confiscated and ravaged soil of their country to seek their living in America, moved by a touching recollection of the great missionary who gave up his native land for the love of God and human souls.

The kindred of Columba.

His birth.
7th December, 521.

Before his birth, his mother had a dream, which posterity has accepted as a graceful and poetical symbol of her son's career. An angel appeared to her, bringing her a veil covered with flowers of wonderful beauty, and the sweetest variety of colors; immediately after she saw the veil carried away by the wind, and rolling out as it fled over plains,

O'Neill
and O'Donnell, } in the north.
O'Brien
and McCarthy, } in the south.

O'Moore
and O'Byrne, } in the east.
O'Connor
and O'Rourke, } in the west.

The principality of Tyreonnell, confiscated by James I., contained 1,165,000 acres. "I would rather," said the most illustrious of the O'Neills in 1597, "be O'Neill of Ulster than king of Spain." Nevertheless the chiefs of these two great races are generally described by the annalists of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries as earls of Tyrconnell, a title which had been conferred upon them by the English crown in the hope of gaining them over. The articles upon the O'Neills and O'Donnells in Sir Bernard Burke's interesting work, Vicissitudes of Families, should be read on this subject. The posterity of the O'Donnells still flourishes in an elevated position in Austria.

¹⁰ Because he had received nine hostages from a king whom he had conquered.

¹¹ An ancient life of the saint, in Irish, quoted by Dr. Reeves, p. 269, expressly states this fact, and adds that he gave up his right to the throne only for the love of God.

woods, and mountains: then the angel said to her, "Thou art about to become the mother of a son, who shall blossom for heaven, who shall be reckoned among the prophets of God, and who shall lead numberless souls to the heavenly country."¹² This spiritual power, this privilege of leading souls to heaven, was recognized by the Irish people, converted by St. Patrick, as the greatest glory which its princes and great men could gain.

Education of Colum-
ba.

The Irish legends, which are always distinguished, even amidst the wildest vagaries of fancy, by a high and pure morality, linger lovingly upon the childhood and youth of the predestined saint. They tell us how, confided in the first place to the care of the priest who had baptized him, and who gave him the first rudiments of literary education, he was accustomed from his earliest years to the heavenly visions which were to occupy so large a place in his life. His guardian angel often appeared to him; and the child asked if all the angels in heaven was as young and shining as he. A little later Columba was invited by the same angel to choose among all the virtues those which he would like best to possess. "I choose," said the

Vision of the three sisters.

youth, "chastity and wisdom;" and immediately three young girls of wonderful beauty, but foreign air, appeared to him, and threw themselves on his neck to embrace him. The pious youth frowned, and repulsed them with indignation. "What!" they said; "then thou dost not know us?" "No, not the least in the world." "We are three sisters whom our father gives to thee to be thy brides." "Who, then, is your father?" "Our father is God, he is Jesus Christ, the Lord and Saviour of the world." "Ah, you have indeed an illustrious father. But what are your names?" "Our names are Virginité, Wisdom, and Prophecy; and we come to leave thee no more, to love thee with an incorruptible love."¹³

¹² "Quoddam miræ pulchritudinis peplum detulit, in quo veluti universorum decorosi colores florum depicti videbantur. . . . Peplum a se elongari volando videbat, camporumque latitudinem in majus crescendo excedere, montesque et saltus majore sui mensura superare. . . . Talem filium editura es floridum, qui quasi unus prophetarum Dei inter ipsos connumerabitur, innumerabilisque animarum dux ad cœlestem a Deo patriam est prædestinatus." — ADAMN., iii. 1.

¹³ "Ergo ne angeli omnes ita juvenili ætate floretis, ita splendide vestiti ornatique inceditis? . . . Age ergo, quid eligis ediscere. . . . Tres adsittere virgines admirandi decoris et peregrini vultus, quas statim in ejus amplexus et oscula improvise ruentes, pudicitia cultor contracta fronte . . . abigebat. Ergo ne nos non agnoscis quarum basia et amores viliter aspernas? . . .

From the house of the priest, Columba passed into the great monastic schools, which were not only a nursery for the clergy of the Irish Church, but where also young laymen of all conditions were educated. Columba, like many others, there learned to make his first steps in that monastic life to which he had been drawn by the call of God. He devoted himself not only to study and prayer, but also to the manual toil then inseparable, in Ireland and everywhere else, from a religious profession. Like all his young companions, he had to grind over night the corn for the next day's food: but when his turn came, it was so well and quickly done that his companions suspected him of having been assisted by an angel.¹⁴ The royal birth of Columba procured him several distinctions in the schools which were not always to the satisfaction of his comrades. One of the latter, named Kieran, who was also destined to fill a great place in Scotie legend, became indignant at the ascendancy of Columba: but while the two students disputed, a celestial messenger came to Kieran and placed before him an auger, a plane, and an axe, saying, "Look at these tools, and recollect that these are all thou hast sacrificed for God, since thy father was only a carpenter; but Columba has sacrificed the sceptre of Ireland, which might have come to him by right of his birth and the grandeur of his race."¹⁵

Jealousy
of his comrades.

We learn from authentic documents that Columba completed his monastic life under the direction of two holy abbots, both bearing the name of Finnian. The first, who was also a bishop, ordained him deacon, but seems to have had him for a shorter time under his authority than the second Finnian, who, himself trained by a disciple of St. Patrick, had long lived in Cambria, near St. David. Columba's first steps in life are thus con-

The two Finnians.
Monastic
school of Clonard.

Prorsus quæ sitis ignoro. . . . Tres sumus sorores et sponsæ tibi nuper a patre nostro desponsatæ. . . . Ecquis vero est vester pater? . . . Magni estis profecto parentis filiæ; pergite, quæso, etiam nomina vestra recludere." — O'DONNELL, Vita quinta S. Columbæ, i. 36, 37, 38, ap. COLGAN, Trias Thaumaturga, p. 394.

¹⁴ "Ordinariæ illis epulæ cibarius panis; labor vero in singulos per vices distributus, nocturna lucubratione grana emolere, ex quibus hujusmodi panis pro communi omnium victu conficeretur. Id labori cum Columbæ, quia contubernalis esset, sæpius obtigisset, prompte et humillime acceptavit." — O'DONNELL, i. 42.

¹⁵ "Delapsus e cælo bonus genius . . . terebram, asciam et securim Kierano præsentans. Hæcce, inquit, aliaque hujusmodi, quibus tuus pater carpentariam exercebat, pro Dei amore reliquisti. Columba vero Hiberniæ sceptrum avito suo et generis potentia sperandum antequam offerretur abrenuntiavit." — O'DONNELL, i. 44.

nected with the two great monastic apostles of Ireland and Cambria, the patriarchs of the two Celtic races which up to this time had shown the most entire fidelity to the Christian faith, and the greatest predilection for monastic life. The abbot Finnian who ordained Columba priest, ruled at Clonard the monastery which he had founded, and of which we have already spoken — one of those immense conventual establishments which were to be found nowhere but among the Celts, and which recalled to recollection the monastic towns of the Thebaïd. He had made of his monastery one great school, which was filled with the Irish youth, then, as always, consumed by a thirst for religious instruction; and we again find here the favorite number, so often repeated by Celtic tradition, of three thousand pupils, all eager to receive the instructions of him who was called the Master of Saints.¹⁶

The assassin of a young girl falls dead before him.

While Columba studied at Clonard, being still only a deacon, an incident took place which has been proved by authentic testimony, and which fixed the general attention upon him by giving a first evidence of his supernatural and prophetic intuition.

An old Christian bard (the bards were not all Christians), named Gemmaïn, had come to live near the Abbot Finnian, asking from him, in exchange for his poetry, the secret of fertilizing the soil. Columba, who continued all his life a passionate admirer of the traditionary poetry of his nation, determined to join the school of the bard, and to share his labors and studies. The two were reading together out of doors, at a little distance from each other, when a young girl appeared in the distance pursued by a robber. At the sight of the old man the young fugitive made for him with all her remaining strength, hoping, no doubt, to find safety in the authority exercised throughout Ireland by the national poets. Gemmaïn, in great trouble, called his pupil to his aid to defend the unfortunate child, who was trying to hide herself under their long robes, when her pursuer reached the spot. Without taking any notice of her defenders, he struck her in the neck with his lance, and was making off, leaving her dead at their feet. The horrified old man turned to Columba. "How long," he said, "will God leave unpunished this crime which dishonors us?" "For this moment only," said Columba, "not longer; at this very hour, when the soul of this innocent creature ascends to heaven, the soul of the murderer shall go down to hell." At the instant, like Ananias at the words of Peter, the assassin fell dead. The news of this sudden punishment, the story goes, went over all Ireland, and spread the fame of the young Columba far and wide.¹⁷

¹⁶ VARIN, Deuxième Mémoire, p. 47. "Magister sanctorum Hiberniæ, habuit in sua schola de Cluain-Evaïrd tria millia sanctorum." — Martyrol. Dungal, ap. MOORE, History of Ireland, vol. i. ch. 13. The holy abbot Finnian died in 549. The other Finnian, the first master of Columb-Kill, is also known under the name of Finnbar, and was abbot at Maghbile (Down), and died in 579. It is believed that he was St. Fredianus (Frediano), bishop and patron of Lucca, where there is a fine and curious church under his invocation. Colgan has published the lives of both, 28th February and 18th March, Acta Sanctorum Hiberniæ. The two saints are frequently confounded. — Compare ADAMNAN, i. 1; ii. 1; iii. 4.

It is easy to perceive, by the importance of the monastic establishments which he had brought into being even before he had attained the age of manhood, that his influence must have been as precocious as it was considerable. Apart from the virtues of which his after life afforded so many examples, it may be supposed that his royal birth gave him an irresistible ascendancy in a country where, since the introduction of Christianity, all the early saints, like the principal abbots, belonged to reigning families, and where the influence of blood and the worship of genealogy continue, even to this day, to a degree unknown in other lands. Springing, as has been said, from the same race as the monarch of all Ireland, and consequently himself eligible for the same high office, which was more frequently obtained by election or usurpation than inheritance — nephew or near cousin of the seven monarchs who successively wielded the supreme authority during his life — he was also related by ties of blood to almost all the provincial kings.¹⁸ Thus we see him, during his whole career, treated on a footing of perfect intimacy and equality by all the princes of Ireland and of Caledonia, and exercising a sort of spiritual sway equal or superior to the authority of secular sovereigns.

Before he had reached the age of twenty-five he had presided over the creation of a crowd of monasteries. As many ¹⁷ "Carminator . . . habens secum carmen magnificum." — Vita S. Finiani, ap. COLGAN, Acta SS., p. 395. "Senex perturbatus tali subitatione Columbam eminus legentem advocavit, ut ambo in quantum valuissent filiam a persequente defenderent. . . . Filiam sub vestimentis eorum jugulavit, et, relinquens jacentem mortuam super pedes eorum, abire cœpit. . . . Quanto, sancte puer Columba, hoc scelus temporis spatio inultum fieri iudex justus patietur. . . . Eadem hora qua interfectæ ab eo filie anima ascendet ad cœlos, anima ipsius interfectoris descendet ad inferos." — ADAMNAN, ii. 25.

¹⁸ See the genealogical tables, Dr. Reeve's Appendix.

His foundations in Ireland.

as thirty-seven in Ireland alone recognized him as their founder. The most ancient and important of these foundations were situated, as was formerly that of St. Bridget at Kildare,¹⁹ in vast oak-forests, from which they took their name. The first, Durrow (Dair-mach, Roboreti campus), where a cross and well bearing the name of Columba are still to be seen, was erected in the central region called the umbilical, or sacred middle of Ireland. The other, Derry (Doire-chalgaich, Roboretum Calgachi), is situated in the northern part of the island, in Columba's native province, in the hollow of a bay of that sea which separates Ireland from Scotland. After having long been the seat of a great and rich Catholic bishopric, it became, under its modern name of Londonderry, one of the principal centres of English colonization, and was, in 1690, the bulwark of the Protestant conquest against the powerless efforts of the last of the Stuart kings.²⁰ But nothing then indicated the possibility of those lamentable changes, nor of the miserable triumphs of inhuman force and wicked persecution.

The young Columba was specially attached to Derry, where he habitually lived. He superintended with care not only the discipline and studies of his community, but external matters, even so far as to watch over the preservation of ¹⁹ See ante, p. 546.

²⁰ Dr. Reeves gives in his appendix G a detailed enumeration of the thirty-seven foundations of Columb-Kill in Ireland. In the north of the island, and in his native province, we remark the name of Raphoe, until lately the seat of a diocese, and Tory, in an isle of the coast of Donegal; in the central district Sord, now Swords, seven miles from Dublin, which has retained, like Tory, its round tower; and Kells, which gained celebrity only in 807 as the refuge of the monks driven from Iona by the threats of the Norsemen. This monastery was completed in 814, and from that day became the headquarters of the Columbian monks. Here is still to be seen one of the finest round towers of Ireland (seventy feet high); an oratory called St. Columb-Kill's house; a cemetery-cross with this inscription on the plinth — Cruz Patricii et Columbe. Two celebrated Gospels of the Trinity College Bible at Dublin are called the Book of Kells and the Book of Durrow. In the important work of Dr. Petrie, called Inquiry into the Origin and Uses of the Round Towers of Ireland, 1845, 2d ed., p. 430, will be found an engraving of a building near the cemetery of Kells, called St. Columba's house. It is a square building, 23 feet long, 21 broad, and 38 feet high, but not vaulted. The walls are 4 feet in thickness; the roof is of stone, with two gables. It has little circular windows at a height of 15 feet. It was formerly divided into three chambers and two stories. In one of these chambers is to be seen a great flat stone 6 feet long, which is called the bed of Columba. The roof of this building is entirely covered with ivy. In the isle of Tory a round tower, belonging to the monastery constructed by Columba, still remains. Petrie (p. 389) also recognizes round towers in the buildings quoted in connection with the two miracles told by Adamnan, c. 15, in which mention is made of bells and belfries.

the neighboring forest. He would never permit an oak to be cut down. Those which fell by natural decay, or were struck down by the wind, were alone made use of for the fire which was lighted on the arrival of strangers, or distributed to the neighboring poor. The poor had a first right, in Ireland as everywhere else, to the goods of the monks; and the Monastery of Derry fed a hundred applicants every day with methodical regularity.²¹

At a more advanced age our saint gave vent to his tenderness for his monastic creations in songs, an echo of which has come down to us. The text of these songs, such as has been preserved, is probably later than Columba; but it is written in the oldest Irish dialect, and it expresses, naturally enough, the sentiments of the founder and his disciples:—

His songs
in honor of Derry.

“Were all the tribute of Scotia²² mine, From its midland to its borders, I would give all for one little cell In my beautiful Derry.
For its peace and for its purity, For the white angels that go In crowds from one end to the other,
I love my beautiful Derry.
For its quietness and its purity, For heaven’s angels that come and go Under every leaf of the oaks,
I love my beautiful Derry.

My Derry, my fair oak grove, My dear little cell and dwelling, Oh God in the heavens above!
Let him who profanes it be cursed.
Beloved are Durrow and Derry, Beloved is Raphoe the pure, Beloved the fertile Drumhome, Beloved are Sords and Kells!
But sweeter and fairer to me The salt sea where the sea-gulls cry When I come to Derry from far,

²¹ O'DONNELL, ap. COLGAN, p. 397, 398.

²² Let us repeat here that the names of Scotia, Scotti, when they occur in works of the seventh to the twelfth century, are almost exclusively applied to Ireland and the Irish, and were extended later to Scotland proper, the north and west of which were peopled by a colony of Irish Scots, only at a later period. From thence comes the name of Erse, Erysche, or Irish, retained up to our own day, by the Irish dialect, otherwise called Gaelic. In Adamnan, as in Bede, Scotia means Ireland, and modern Scotland is comprehended in the general title of Britannia. At a later period the name of Scotia disappeared in Ireland, and became identified with the country conquered and colonized by the Scots in Scotland, like that of Anglia in Britain, and Francia in Gaul.

It is sweeter and dearer to me — Sweeter to me.”²³

Nor was it only his own foundations which he thus celebrated: another poem has been preserved which is attributed to him, and which is dedicated to the glory of the monastic isle of Arran, situated upon the western coast of Ireland, where he had gone to venerate the inhabitants and the sanctuaries.²⁴

“O Arran, my sun; my heart is in the west with thee. To sleep on thy pure soil is as good as to be buried in the land of St. Peter and St. Paul. To live within the sound of thy bells is to live in joy. O Arran, my sun, my love is in the west with thee.”²⁵

These poetic effusions reveal Columba to us under one of his most attractive aspects, as one of the minstrels of the national poetry of Ireland, the intimate union of which with the Catholic faith,²⁶ and its unconquerable empire over the souls of that generous people, can scarcely be exaggerated. Columba was not only himself a poet, but lived always in great and affectionate sympathy with the bards who, at that time, occupied so high a place in the social and political institutions of Ireland, and who were to be met with everywhere, in the palaces and monasteries, as on the public roads. What he did for this powerful corporation, and how, after having been their brother and friend, he became their protector and saviour, will be seen further on.

His taste for poetry, And his connection with the bards. Let us merely state at present that, himself a great traveller, he received the travelling bards in the different communities where he lived; among others, in that which he had built upon an islet²⁷ of the lake which the Boyle traverses before it throws itself into the Shannon. He confided to them the care of arranging the monastic and ²³ See REEVES, pp. 288, 289. The origin and continuation of this poem will be seen further on.

²⁴ “Invisit aliquando S. Endeum aliosque sanctos, qui plurimi in Ara insula angelicam vitam ducebant . . . in ea insula quam sanctorum vestigiis tritam et monumentis inclytam magno affectu venerabatur.” — O'DONNELL, book i. c. 105, 106. Compare COLGAN, Act. SS. Hiberniæ, vol. i. p. 704-714. There were still thirteen churches on this island in 1645, with the tombs of St. Enda and of a hundred and twenty other saints.

²⁵ Quoted in the Transactions of the Gaelic Society, p. 183.

²⁶ See ante, p. 545.

²⁷ The ruins of a church attributed to Columba are still to be seen there. Two miles from this island, on the banks of a cascade formed by the Boyle, as it throws itself into the lake (Loch Key), rises another monastery founded by him, and which became, in 1161, a Cistercian abbey of some celebrity — the Abbey of Boyle.

provincial annals, which were to be afterwards deposited in the charter-chest of the community; but above all, he made them sing for his own pleasure and that of his monks; and the latter reproached him energetically if he permitted one of those wandering poets to depart without having asked to hear some of his chants, accompanied by his harp.²⁸

The monk Columba was, then, a poet. After Ossian and his glorious compeer of the Vosges, he opens the series of two hundred Irish poets, whose memories and names, in default of their works, have remained dear to Ireland. He wrote his verses not only in Latin, but also and more frequently in Irish. Only three of his Latin poems survive; but two centuries ago eleven of his Irish poems were still in existence,²⁹ which have not all perished, and the most authentic of which is dedicated to the glory of St. Bridget, the virgin slave, patroness of Ireland and foundress of female religious life in the Isle of Saints. She was still living when Columba was born.³⁰ Through the obscure and halting efforts of this infantine poetry, some tones of sincere and original feeling may yet be disentangled:—

“Bridget, the good and the virgin Bridget, our torch and our sun, Bridget, radiant and unseen, May she lead us to the eternal kingdom!
May Bridget defend us Against all the troops of hell,
And all the adversities of life;
May she beat them down before us.
All the ill movements of the flesh, This pure virgin whom we love, Worthy of honor without end, May she extinguish in us.
Yes, she shall always be our safeguard, Dear saint of Lagenia;
After Patrick she comes first,
The pillar of the land,

²⁸ “Quidam Scoticus poeta. . . . Cur a nobis regredienti Cronano poetæ aliquod ex more suæ artis canticum non postulasti laudabiliter decantari?” — ADAMNAN, book i. c. 42.

²⁹ “Diversa poemata S. Columbæ patrio idiomate scripta exstant penes me.” — COLGAN, Trias Thaumaturga, p. 472. He gives the title and quotes the first verse of each Irish poem. Dr. Reeves has given in his Appendix F the Irish text and English translation of two of these pieces, the MS. of which has passed from the hands of the Franciscans of Louvain, where the pious and patriotic Colgan wrote, to the library of Bourgogne at Brussels. They are also to be found in the Bodleian at Oxford, in a MS. which contains thirty-six Irish poems attributed to Columba.

³⁰ He was born in 519, and she died in 523, according to the chronology of Colgan.

Glorious among all glories, Queen among all queens.
 When old age comes upon us, May she be to us as the shirt of hair, May she fill us with her grace, May Bridget protect us."³¹

It seems thus apparent that Columba was as much a bard as a monk during the first part of his life; he had the vagabond inclination, the ardent, agitated, even quarrelsome character of the race. Like most Irish saints and even monks whom history has kept in mind, he had a passionate love for travelling;³² and to that passion he added another which brought him more than one misadventure. Books, which were less rare in Ireland than everywhere else, were nevertheless much sought after, and guarded with jealous care in the monastic libraries, which were their sole depositories. Not only an excessive value was put upon them, but they were even supposed to possess the emotions and almost the passions of living beings. Columba had a passion for MSS. for fine manuscripts, and one of his biographers attributes to him the laborious feat of having transcribed with his own hand three hundred copies of the Gospel or of the Psalter.³³ He went everywhere in search of volumes, which he could borrow or copy, often experiencing refusals which he resented bitterly. There was then in Ossory, in the south-west, a holy recluse, very learned, doctor in laws and in philosophy, named Longarad with the white legs, because in walking barefoot his legs, which were covered with white hair, were visible. Columba having gone to visit him asked leave to examine his books. The old man gave a direct refusal; then Columba burst forth in denunciations—"May thy books no longer do thee any

Longarad
 with the hairy legs.

³¹ "Nos defendamur omni tempore Per meam sanctam de Lagenia Suppar columna regni, Post Patricium primarium: Quæ decor decorum Quæ regina regia. . . .
 Erit post senium Nostrum corpus in cilicio: Ejus gratia respergamur.
 Nos protegat Brigicta."

Trias Thaummat., p. 606.

³² "Omnes regni provincias continuo peragrans, urbes, oppida, paga circumiens."—O'DONNELL, p. 398.

³³ O'DONNELL, ap. COLGAN, p. 438. The same number has been seen above attributed to Dega. Irish narratives know scarcely any numerals but those of three hundred and three thousand.

good, neither to thee nor to those who come after thee, since thou takest occasion by them to show thy inhospitality." This curse was heard, according to the legend. As soon as old Longarad died his books became unintelligible. They still exist, says an author of the ninth century, but no man can read them. The legend adds that in all the schools of Ireland, and even in Columba's own cell, the leathern satchels in which the monks and students carried their books, unhooked themselves from the wall and fell to the ground on the day of the old philosopher's death.³⁴

A similar narrative, more authentic but not less singular, serves as an introduction to the decisive event which changed the destiny of Columba, and transformed him from a wandering poet and ardent bookworm into a missionary and apostle. While visiting his ancient master, Finnian, our saint found means to make a clandestine and hurried copy of the abbot's Psalter, by shutting himself up at night in the church where the Psalter was deposited, lighting his nocturnal work, as happened to I know not what Spanish saint, by the light which escaped from his left hand while he wrote with the right. The abbot Finnian discovered what was going on by means of a curious wanderer, who, attracted by that singular light, looked in through the keyhole, and while his face was pressed against the door had his eye suddenly torn out by a crane, one of those familiar birds who were permitted by the Irish monks to seek a home in their churches.³⁵ Indignant at what he thought a theft, Finnian claimed the copy when it was finished, on the ground that a copy made without permission ought to belong to the master of the original, seeing that the transcription is the son of the original book. Columba refused to give up his work, and the question was referred to the king in his palace at Tara.

Contest about the Psalter, which Columba would have copied against his master's will.

King Diarmid, or Dermott, supreme monarch of Ireland, was, like Columba, descended from the great king Niall, but by another son than he whose great-grandson Columba was. He lived, like all the princes of his country, in a close union with the Church, which was represented in Ireland, more completely than anywhere else, by the monastic order. Exiled and persecuted in his King Diarmid, founder of Clonmacnoise, 538 or 548.

³⁴ Festilogium of Angus the Culdee, quoted by O'Curry.

³⁵ "Admoto ad januæ fissuram oculo, mirari cœpit. . . . Grus quædam cicurata, quæ in ecclesia erat, incauti hominis oculum inspecto rostro effodit." — O'DONNELL, book ii. c. 1.

youth, he had found refuge in an island, situated in one of those lakes which interrupt the course of the Shannon, the chief river of Ireland, and had there formed a friendship with a holy monk called Kieran, who was no other than the son of the carpenter, the jealous comrade of Columba at the monastic school of Clonard, but since that time his generous rival in knowledge and in austerity. Upon the still solitary bank of the river the two friends had planned the foundation of a monastery, which, owing to the marshy nature of the soil, had to be built upon piles. "Plant with me the first stake," the monk said to the exiled prince, "putting your hand under mine; and soon that hand shall be over all the men of Erin;" and it happened that Diarmid was very shortly after called to the throne. He immediately used his new power to endow richly the monastery which was rendered doubly dear to him by the recollection of his exile and of his friend. This sanctuary became, under the name of Clonmacnoise, one of the greatest monasteries and most frequented schools of Ireland, and even of Western Europe. It was so rich in possessions and even in dependent communities, daughters or vassals of its hierarchical authority, that, according to a popular saying, half of Ireland was contained within the enclosure of Clonmacnoise. This enclosure actually contained nine churches, with two round towers; the kings and lords of the two banks of the Shannon had their burying-place there for a thousand years, upon a green height which overlooks the marshy banks of the river. The sadly picturesque ruins may still be seen, and among them a stone cross, over which the prince and the abbot, holding between them the stake consecrated by the legend, are roughly sculptured.³⁶

Judgment
of King
Diarmid.

This king might accordingly be regarded as a competent judge in a contest at once monastic and literary; he might even have been suspected of ³⁶ Clonmacnoise, which is situated on the eastern bank of the Shannon, seven miles below Athlone, and was afterwards made a bishop's see, must not be confounded with Cloyne, though the Latin designation, Clonensis or Cluanensis, is the same. This great abbey is chiefly remarkable on account of its abbot Tighernach (1088), a much quoted historian, whose annals have been published in the second volume of Rerum Hibernicarum Scriptores by O'Connor. Within its vast enclosure was a community of those lay monks called Culdees, of whom we shall have occasion to speak further on, who had been created by a lay brother of the monastery called Conn of the poor, by reason of his great charity. Later in the twelfth century it passed into the hands of the regular canons of St. Augustin, who retained it up to the general spoliation. — O'CURRY, p. 60. The Gentleman's Magazine of February, 1864, publishes a plan of the actual condition of Clonmacnoise, with a very interesting notice of the architecture of the ruins by Mr. Parker.

partiality for Columba, his kinsman — and yet he pronounced against him. His judgment was given in a rustic phrase which has passed into a proverb in Ireland — To every cow her calf,³⁷ and consequently, to every book its copy. Columba protested loudly. “It is an unjust sentence,” he said, “and I will revenge myself.” After this incident a young prince, son of the provincial king of Connaught, who was pursued for having committed an involuntary murder, took refuge with Columba, but was seized and put to death by the king. The irritation of the poet-monk knew no bounds. The ecclesiastical immunity which he enjoyed in his quality of superior and founder of several monasteries ought to have, in his opinion, created a sort of sanctuary around his person, and this immunity had been scandalously violated by the execution of the youth whom he protected. He threatened the king with prompt vengeance. “I will denounce,” he said, “to my brethren and my kindred thy wicked judgment, and the violation in my person of the immunity of the Church; they will listen to my complaint, and punish thee sword in hand.”³⁸ Bad king, thou shalt no more see my face in thy province until God, the just Judge, has subdued thy pride. As thou hast humbled me to-day before thy lords and thy friends, God will humble thee on the battle day before thine enemies.” Diarmid attempted to retain him by force in the neighborhood; but, evading the vigilance of his guards, he escaped by night from the court of Tara, and directed his steps to his native province of Tyrconnell. His first stage was Monasterboyce, where he heard from the monks that the king had planted guards on all the ordinary roads to intercept him. He then continued his course by a solitary pathway over the desert hills which lay between him and the north of Ireland; and as he went upon his lonely way, his soul found utterance in a pious song. He fled, chanting the Song of

Protest of Columba.

He flies, chanting the Song of Trust.

³⁷ “Le gach boin a boinin, le gach leabhar a leabhran.”

³⁸ “Scito, rex inique, quia amodo faciem meam in tua provincia non videbis donec. . . . Sicut me hodie coram senioribus tuis iniquo iudicio despexisti, sic te Deus æternus in conspectu inimicorum tuorum te despiciet in die belli.” — ANON. ap. USSERIUM, De Primord. Eccles. Brit., cited by Colgan, p. 462. “Ego expostulabo cum fratribus et cognatis meis iniquum arbitrium tuum, et contemptum in me temeratumque Ecclesiæ immunitatem . . . et si non meam, at certe Dei regni atque Ecclesiæ causam ducto in te exercitu vindicabunt.” — O'DONNELL, book ii. c. 7. This is assuredly a much modernized version of Columba's declaration of war; but the true facts are to be found in the unanimous statements of Irish tradition. Adamnan preserves a prudent silence upon all events anterior to the saint's mission to Scotland.

Trust, which has been preserved to us, and which may be reckoned among the most authentic relics of the ancient Irish tongue. We quote from it the following verses:—

“ Alone am I on the mountain, O royal Sun; prosper my path,
 And then I shall have nothing to fear.
 Were I guarded by six thousand,
 Though they might defend my skin,
 When the hour of death is fixed,
 Were I guarded by six thousand,
 In no fortress could I be safe.
 Even in a church the wicked are slain, Even in an isle amidst a lake;
 But God's elect are safe Even in the front of battle.
 No man can kill me before my day, Even had we closed in combat;
 And no man can save my life When the hour of death has come.
 My life!
 As God pleases let it be;
 Nought can be taken from it, Nought can be added to it:
 The lot which God has given Ere a man dies must be lived out.
 He who seeks more, were he a prince,
 Shall not a mite obtain.
 A guard!
 A guard may guide him on his way;
 But can they, can they guard Against the touch of death? . . .
 Forget thy poverty a while;
 Let us think of the world's hospitality.
 The Son of Mary will prosper thee,
 And every guest shall have his share.
 Many a time
 What is spent returns to the bounteous hand, And that which is kept back Not the less has passed away.
 O living God!
 Alas for him who evil works!
 That which he thinks not of comes to him,
 That which he hopes vanishes out of his hand.
 There is no *Sreod*³⁹ that can tell our fate, Nor bird upon the branch, Nor trunk of gnarled oak. . . .
 Better is He in whom we trust,
 The King who has made us all,
 Who will not leave me to-night without refuge.
 I adore not the voice of birds, Nor chance, nor the love of a son or a wife.
 My Druid is Christ, the Son of God,

³⁹ An unknown Druidical term, probably meaning some pagan superstition of the same description as the flight of birds and the knots in the trees, mentioned immediately after.

The Son of Mary, the great Abbot, The Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit.
My lands are with the King of kings; My order at Kells and at Moone."⁴⁰

"Thus sang Columba," says the preface to this Song of Trust, "on his lonely journey; and this song will protect him who repeats it while he travels."

Columba arrived safely in his province, and immediately set to work to excite against King Diarmid the numerous and powerful clans of his relatives and friends, who belonged to a branch of the house of Niall distinct from and hostile to that of the reigning monarch. His efforts were crowned with success. The Hy-Nialls of the North armed eagerly against the Hy-Nialls of the South, of whom Diarmid was the special chief.⁴¹ They naturally obtained the aid of the king of Connaught, father of the young prince who had been executed. According to other narratives, the struggle was one between the Nialls of the North and the Picts established in the centre of Ireland. But in any case, it was the north and west of Ireland which took arms against the supreme king. Diarmid marched to meet them, and they met in battle at Cool-Drewny, or Cul-Dreimhne, upon the borders of Ultonia and Connacia. He was completely beaten, and obliged to take refuge at Tara. The victory was due, according to the analyst Tighernach, to the prayers and songs of Columba, who had fasted and prayed with all his might to obtain from Heaven the punishment of the royal insolence,⁴² and who, besides, was present at the battle, and took upon himself before all men the responsibility of the bloodshed.

He raises civil war.

Defeat of the king while Columba prays against him.

As for the manuscript which had been the object of this ⁴⁰ Moone, in the county of Kildare, where the abbatial cross of St. Columba is preserved. The translation here printed is from the version given by Dr. Reeves, with some slight modifications. — Translator's note.

⁴¹ "Contulit se ad domus Conalli, Gulbanis et Eugenii proceres carne sibi propinquos, et coram eis de malis injuriis querelam instituit." — COLGAN, Act. SS. Hibern., vol. i. p. 645. Compare the genealogical table of the descendants of Niall given by Dr. Reeves, p. 251. There were ten supreme kings of the branch of Hy-Nialls of the North, or of Tyrconnell, to which Columba belonged, and seventeen of the southern branch, of which Diarmid was a member. These kings alternated for two centuries, mutually killing and dethroning each other. See the notes of Kelly, to Lynch, Cambrensis Eversus, vol. ii. pp. 12, 15.

⁴² "Diem ineundi prælii jejuniis et oratione prævertit, Deum afflicte rogans ut regie insolentie vindicibus sine suorum damno annuat victoriam." — O'DONNELL, loc. cit.

strange conflict of copyright elevated into a civil war, it was afterwards venerated as a kind of national, military, and religious palladium. Under the name of Cathac, or Fighter, the Latin Psalter transcribed by Columba, enshrined in a sort of portable altar, became the national relic of the O'Donnell clan. For more than a thousand years it was carried with them to battle as a pledge of victory, on the condition of being supported upon the breast of a clerk pure from all mortal sin. It has escaped as by miracle from the ravages of which Ireland had been the victim, and exists still, to the great joy of all learned Irish patriots.⁴³

Synod of Teilte, 502.
Columba is excommunicated.

Columba, though victor, had soon to undergo the double reaction of personal remorse and the condemnation of many pious souls.⁴⁴ The latter punishment was the first to be felt. He was accused by a synod convoked in the centre of the royal domain at Teilte,⁴⁵ of having occasioned the shedding of Christian blood, and sentence of excommunication was in his absence pronounced against him. Perhaps this accusation was not entirely confined to the war which had been raised on account of the copied Psalter. His excitable and vindictive character, and, above all, his passionate attachment to his relatives, and the violent part which he took in their domestic disputes and in their continually recurring rivalries, had engaged him in other struggles, the date of which is perhaps later than that of his first departure from Ireland, but the responsibility of which is formally imputed to him by various authorities,⁴⁶ and which also ended in bloody battles.

⁴³ The annals of the Four Masters report that in a battle waged in 1497 between the O'Donnells and the MacDermotts, the sacred book fell into the hands of the latter, who, however, restored it in 1499. It was preserved for thirteen hundred years in the O'Donnell family, and at present belongs to a baronet of that name, who has permitted it to be exhibited in the Museum of the Royal Irish Academy, where it can be seen by all. It is composed of fifty-eight leaves of parchment, bound in silver. The learned O'Curry (p. 322) has given a fac-simile of a fragment of this MS., which he does not hesitate to believe is in the handwriting of our saint, as well as that of the fine copy of the Gospels called the Book of Kells, of which he has also given a fac-simile. See Reeves's notes upon Adamnan, p. 250, and the pamphlet upon Marianus Scotus, p. 12.

⁴⁴ "Cum illata regi Diermitio clades paulo post ad aures sanctorum Hiberniæ pervenit, Columbam, quod tantæ cladis vel auctor vel occasio fuisset, taxabant." — O'DONNELL, ii. 5. "In synodo sanctorum Hiberniæ gravis querela contra S. Columbam, tanquam auctorem tam multi sanguinis effusi, instituta est." — COLGAN, Act. SS. Hibern., p. 645.

⁴⁵ Now Teltown, a little village near Kells, in the county of Meath.

⁴⁶ Especially by the argument in Irish of the Latin poem of Columba called Altus prosator, which will be mentioned further on. This argument is quoted textually by Dr. Reeves, p. 253. This author is of opinion that

Columba was not a man to draw back before his accusers and judges. He presented himself before the synod which had struck without hearing him. He found a defender there in the famous Abbot Brendan, the founder of the Monastery of Birr. When Columba made his appearance, this abbot rose, went up to him, and embraced him. "How can you give the kiss of peace to an excommunicated man?" said some of the other members of the synod. "You would do as I have done," he answered, "and you never would have excommunicated him, had you seen what I see — a pillar of fire which goes before him, and the angels that accompany him. I dare not disdain a man predestined by God to be the guide of an entire people to eternal life." Thanks to the intervention of Brendan, or to some other motive not mentioned, the sentence of excommunication was withdrawn; but Columba was charged to win to Christ by his preaching as many pagan souls as the number of Christians who had fallen in the battle of Cool-Drewny.⁴⁷

Other wars of Columba. St. Brendan takes up his defence.

It was then that his soul seems first to have been troubled, and that remorse planted in it the germs at once of a startling conversion and of his future apostolic mission. Sheltered as he was from all vengeance or secular penalties, he must have felt himself struck so much the more by the ecclesiastical judgment pronounced against him. Various legends reveal him to us at this crisis of his life, wandering long from solitude to solitude, and from monastery to monastery, seeking out holy monks, masters of penitence and Christian virtue, and asking them anxiously what he should do to obtain the pardon of God for the murder of so many victims.⁴⁸ One of these, Froëch, who had long been his friend, reproached him with affectionate severity for the legendary writers have antedated all these troublesome occurrences out of consideration for the Apostle of Caledonia, in order to concentrate all his eccentricities in the earlier part of his life before his voluntary expiation. Adamnan, who follows no chronological order, keeps silence on most of the events which preceded the voluntary exile of the saint, and only mentions vaguely the synod by which he was excommunicated; but he proves that after that exile Columba several times returned to Ireland, where his influence was always very considerable. "Cum a quodam synodo pro quibusdam venialibus et tam excusabilibus causis, non recte, ut post in fine claruit, excommunicaretur Columba . . . ad eandem contra ipsum collectam venit congregationem. . . . Hoc tamen factum est in Teilte." — Book iii. c. 3.

He consults several confessors.

⁴⁷ COLGAN, loc. cit., p. 645.

⁴⁸ "Petens . . . quo scilicet modo post necem multorum occisorum, benevolentiam Dei ac remissionem peccatorum obtinere mereretur." — Vita S. Molassii, ap. Trias Thaum., p. 461.

having been the instigator of that murderous fight. "It was not I who caused it," said Columba with animation; "it was the unjust judgment of King Diarmid — it was his violation of ecclesiastical immunity which did it all." "A monk," answered the solitary, would have done better to bear the injury with patience than to avenge it with arms in his hands." "Be it so," said Columba; "but it is hard for a man unjustly provoked to restrain his heart and to sacrifice justice."⁴⁹

He was more humble with Abban, another famous monk of the time, founder of many religious houses, one of which was called the Cell of Tears, because the special grace of weeping for sin was obtained there.⁵⁰ This gentle and courageous soldier of Christ was specially distinguished by his zeal against the fighting men and disturbers of the public peace. He had been seen to throw himself between two chiefs at the moment when their lances were crossed at each other's breasts;⁵¹ and on another occasion had gone alone and unarmed to meet one of the most formidable rieviers of the island, who was still a pagan and a member of a sovereign family, had made his arms drop from his hands, and had changed first into a Christian and then into a monk the royal robber, whose great-grandson has recorded this incident.⁵² When Columba went to Abban, he said, "I come to beseech thee to pray for the souls of all those who have perished in the late war, which I raised for the honor of the Church. I know they will obtain grace by thy intercession, and I conjure thee to ask what is the will of God in respect to them from the angel who talks with thee every day." The aged solitary, without reproaching Columba, resisted his entreaties for some time, by reason of his great modesty, but ended by ⁴⁹ "Non ego, sed iniquum in me Diermitii regis arbitrium, et prævaricatio ecclesiasticæ immunitatisisti prælio et malis inde secutis causam præbuit. . . . Præstaret religioso viro injuriam patienter perferre, quam pugnaciter propulsare. Ita est, inquit S. Columba, sed injuste provocato haud pronum est erumpentem animi motum, præsertim cum justus esse videtur, cohibere." — O'DONNELL, Vita quinta, ii. 8.

⁵⁰ "Et istud monasterium a multis vocatur Cealt nà ndèr, id est cellula lacrymarum: eo quod hominibus ibi a Deo pœnitentiales lacrymæ . . . donantur." — Vita S. Abbani, ap. COLGAN, lib. i. p. 615.

⁵¹ "Tam appropinquabat ad alterutrum, ut lanceæ eorum ante se mixtæ essent invicem." — Ibid., p. 619.

⁵² "Quidam ex regali genere istius terræ . . . heros et tyrannus, qui semper occidit et rapit et vivit in latrociniiis . . . videntes comites S. Abbani virum armigerum, horridissimum in incessu et habitu, cum simili turba militum . . . unusquisque hinc et inde cœpit se abscondere. Vir autem Dei fide armatus intrepidus viam ibat. . . . Ego autem qui vitam S. Abbani collegi sum nepos ipsius filii quem baptizavit." — Vita S. Abbani, ap. COLGAN, lib. i. p. 617.

consenting ; and after having prayed, gave him the assurance that these souls enjoyed eternal repose.⁵³

Columba, thus reassured as to the fate of the victims of his rage, had still to be enlightened in respect to his own duty. He found the light which he sought from a holy monk called Molaise, famed for his studies of Holy Scripture,⁵⁴ who had already been his confessor, and whose ruined monastery is still visible in one of the isles of the Atlantic.⁵⁵ This severe hermit confirmed the decision of the synod ; but to the obligation of converting to the Christian faith an equal number of pagans as there were of Christians killed in the civil war he added a new condition, which bore cruelly upon a soul so passionately attached to country and kindred. The confessor condemned his penitent to perpetual exile from Ireland.⁵⁶ Columba bowed to this sentence with sad resignation — “ What you have commanded,” he said, “ shall be done.”⁵⁷

Molaise
condemns him to perpetual exile.

He announced his future fate in the first place to his relations, the warlike Nialls of Tyrconnell. “ An angel has taught me that I must leave Ireland and remain in exile as long as I live, because of all those whom you slew in the last battle, which you fought on my account, and also in others which you know of.”⁵⁸ It is not recorded that any among his kindred attempted to hold him back ; but when he acquainted his disciples with his intended emigration, twelve among them decided to follow him. The most ardent of all was a young monk called Mochonna, son of the provincial king of Ulster. In vain Columba represented to him that he ought not to abandon his parents and native soil. “ It is thou,” answered the young man, “ who art my father, the Church is my mother, and my country is where I can gather the largest harvest for Christ.” Then, in order to render all resistance impossible, he made a solemn vow aloud to leave his country and follow Columba — “ I swear

Devotion of the young Mochonna.

⁵³ “ Ut ores pro animabus illorum qui occisi fuerunt in bello commissio nuper nobis suadentibus, causa Ecclesiæ. . . . Et angelus ait: Requiem habebunt.” — Ibid., p. 624, after the MS. of Salamanca, which is more complete on this point than the ordinary text.

⁵⁴ “ Visitavit S. Lasrianum confessorem suum. . . . Divinarum scripturarum scrutator.”

⁵⁵ Innishmurry, on the coast of Sligo.

⁵⁶ Vita S. Molassii, ubi supra.

⁵⁷ “ Quod indictum est, inquit ad Molassium, fiet.” — O'DONNELL, ii. 5.

⁵⁸ “ Mihi, juxta quod ab angelo præmonitus sum, ex Hiberniæ migrandum est, et dum vixero exsulandum, quod mei causa per vos plurimi extincti sunt.” — Ibid., ii. 4.

to follow thee wherever thou goest, until thou hast led me to Christ, to whom thou hast consecrated me.”⁵⁹ It was thus, says his historian, that he forced himself rather than offered himself as a companion to the great exile in the course of his apostolical career among the Picts — and he had no more active or devoted auxiliary.

Columba accepted, though not without sadness, as has been seen, the sentence of his friend. He dedicated the rest of his life to the expiation of his faults by a voluntary exile, and by preaching the faith to the heathen. Up to this time we have had difficulty in disentangling the principal events of the first forty years of his life from a maze of confused and contradictory narratives. We have followed what has seemed to us the most probable account, and one most calculated to throw light upon the character of the saint, his people, and his country. Henceforward we shall find a surer guide in Adamnan, who only touches very slightly upon the first half of his hero's life, and who, with an apparent contempt for the unanimous testimony of Irish witnesses, while agreeing that the departure of the saint took place after the battle in which the King of Ireland had been beaten by Columba's kindred,⁶⁰ attributes his departure solely to his desire for the conversion of the heathens of the great neighboring isle.⁶¹

CHAPTER II.

COLUMBA AN EMIGRANT IN CALEDONIA — THE HOLY ISLE OF IONA.

Aspect of the Hebridean archipelago. — Columba first lands at Oronsay, but leaves it because Ireland is visible from its shores. — Description of Iona. — First buildings of the new monastery. — What remains of it. — Enthusiasm or Johnson on landing there in the eighteenth century. — Columba bitterly regrets his country. — Passionate elegies on the pains of exile. — Note upon the poem of Altus. — Proofs in his biography of the continuance of that patriotic regret. — The stork comes from Ireland to Iona.

⁵⁹ “Se peregrinationis socium non magis obtulit, quam obtrusit. . . . Tu mihi pater es, Ecclesia mater, et patria ubi uberiores bene merendi segetem et majorem Christo deserviendi ansam invenero. . . . Te quocumque ieris sequar, donec ad Christum perduxeris, cui me pridem consecraras.” — O'DONNELL, Vita Columbæ, lib. iii. c. 24, 25, 26.

⁶⁰ “Post bellum Cule Drebene . . . quo tempore vir beatus de Scotia peregrinaturus primitus enavigavit.” — ADAMN., i. 7. What is said of the poem called Altus, the composition of which was suggested by the remorse of Columba after his three battles, will be seen further on, p. 732.

⁶¹ “De Scotis ad Britanniam pro Christo peregrinari volens, enavigavit.” — ADAMN., Præf. The MS. of Salamanca, quoted by Colgan, adds: “Ad convertendos ad fidem Pictos.”

HE who has not seen the islands and gulfs of the western coast of Scotland, and who has not been tossed upon the sombre sea of the Hebrides, can scarcely form any image of it to himself. Nothing can be less seductive at the first glance than that austere and solemn nature, which is picturesque without charm, and grand without grace. The traveller passes sadly through an archipelago of naked and desert islands, sowed, like so many extinct volcanoes, upon the dull and sullen waters, which are sometimes broken by rapid currents and dangerous whirlpools. Except on rare days, when the sun — that pale sun of the North — gives life to these shores, the eye wanders over a vast surface of gloomy sea, broken at intervals by the whitening crest of waves, or by the foamy line of the tide, which dashes here against long reefs of rock, there against immense cliffs, with a forlorn roar which fills the air. Through the continual fogs and rains of that rude climate may be seen by times the summits of chains of mountains, whose abrupt and naked sides slope to the sea, and whose base is bathed by those cold waves which are kept in constant agitation by the shock of contrary currents, and the tempests of wind which burst from the lakes and narrow ravines farther inland. The melancholy of the landscape is relieved only by that peculiar configuration of the coast, which has been remarked by the ancient authors, and especially by Tacitus — a configuration which exists besides only in Greece and Scandinavia.⁶² As in the fiords of Norway, the sea cuts and hollows out the shores of the islands into a host of bays and gulfs, of strange depth, and as narrow as profound.⁶³ These gulfs take the most varied forms, penetrating by a thousand tortuous folds into the middle of the ⁶² “Nusquam latius dominari mare, multum fluminum huc atque illuc ferre, nec littore tenus adrescere aut resorberi, sed influere penitus atque ambire, etiam jugis atque montibus inseri velut in suo.” — TACITUS, Agri-colæ Vita, c. 10. “Diversorum prolixioribus promonteriorum tractibus, quæ arenatis Oceani sinibus ambiuntur.” — GILDAS, vol. iii. p. 11, ed. Stevens.

⁶³ “Mare, quo latus ingens Dant scopuli, et multa litus se valle receptat.”

PERSEUS, Sat. vi.

These lines of Perseus upon the Riviera of Genoa describe still better the western coast of Scotland.

land, as if to identify themselves with the long and winding lakes of the Highland interior. Numberless peninsulas, terminating in pointed headlands, or summits covered with clouds; isthmuses so narrow as to leave the sea visible at both sides; straits so closely shut between two walls of rock that the eye hesitates to plunge into that gloom; enormous cliffs of basalt or of granite, their sides perforated with rents; caverns, as at Staffa, lofty as churches, flanked through all their length by prismatic columns, through which the waves of the ocean dash with groans; and here and there, in contrast with that wild majesty, perhaps in an island, perhaps upon the shore of the main land, a sandy beach, a little plain covered with scanty prickling grass; a natural port, capable of sheltering a few frail boats; everywhere, in short, a strangely varied combination of land and sea, but where the sea carries the day, penetrates and dominates everything, as if to affirm her empire, and, as Tacitus has said, "inseri velut in suo."

Such is the present aspect — such must have been, with the addition of the forests which have disappeared, the aspect of those shores when Columba sought them to continue and end his life there. It was from this point that he was to assail the Land of Woods,⁶⁴ that unconquerable Caledonia, where the Romans had been obliged to relinquish the idea of establishing themselves, where Christianity hitherto had appeared only to vanish, and which for long seemed to Europe almost outside the boundaries of the world. To Columba was to fall the honor of introducing civilization into the stony, sterile, and icy Escolse la Sauvage,⁶⁵ which the imagination of our fathers made the dwelling-place of hunger, and of the prince of demons. Sailing by these distant shores, who could refrain from evoking the holy memory and forgotten glory of the great missionary? It is from him that Scotland has derived that religious spirit which, led astray as it has been since the Reformation, and in spite of its own rigid narrowness, remains still so powerful, so popular, so fruitful, and so free.⁶⁶ Half veiled by the misty distance, Columba stands first among those original and touching historical figures to whom Scotland owes the great place she has occupied in the memory and imagination of modern nations, from the noble chivalry of the feudal and Catholic kingdom of the Bruces and Douglasses, down to the unparalleled misfortunes of Mary Stuart and Charles Edward, and all the poetic and romantic recollections which the pure and upright genius of Walter Scott has endowed with European fame.

⁶⁴ In Gaelic, Calyddon, land of forests, according to Augustin Thierry; according to Camden this name is derived from kaled, which means hard and wild.

⁶⁵ See the expressions of Jean de Meung, Froissart, and others, collected by M. Francisque Michel, in his fine and learned work, Les Ecossais en France et les Français en Ecosse, printed by Gounouilhou, Bordeaux, 1862, p. 3-5. The words addressed by St. Louis when sick to his son are well known: "I pray thee to make thyself loved by the people of thy kingdom; for if thou rulest ill, I had rather that a Scot came from Scotland and reigned in thy place." — JOINVILLE, p. 4.

A voluntary exile, at the age of forty-two, from his native island, Columba embarked with his twelve companions⁶⁷ in one of those great barks of osier covered with hide which the Celtic nations employed for their navigation. He landed upon a desert island situated on the north of the opening of that series of gulfs and lakes which, extending from the south-west to the north-east, cuts the Caledonian peninsula in two, and which at that period separated the still heathen Picts from the district occupied by the Irish Scots, who were partially Christianized. This isle, which he has made immortal, took from him the name of I-Colm-Kill (the island of Columb-Kill), but is better known under that of Iona.⁶⁸ A legend, suggested by one of our saint's most marked characteristics, asserts that he first landed upon another islet called Oronsay,^{68a} but that, having climbed a hill near the shore immediately on landing, he found that he could still see Ireland, his beloved country. To see far off that dear soil which he had left forever, was too hard a trial. He came down from the hill, and immediately took to his boat to seek, farther off, a shore from which he could not see his native land. When he had reached Iona he climbed the highest point in the island, and, gazing into the distance,

Columba
lands at Iona.

⁶⁶ This is evidenced by the wonderful outburst of the Free Kirk, produced in 1843 by a local dispute upon the lay patronage of parishes, and which has established in almost every village of Scotland a new community and a new church, sustained by voluntary contributions in face of the official Church, which continues to hold a portion of the ecclesiastical possessions of Catholic times.

⁶⁷ See their names in Appendix A of Reeves. Let us at present remark two among them whom we shall meet again further on — Baithen, Columba's secretary, and his successor as abbot of Iona, and Diormit or Dermott, his minister (ministrator), the monk specially attached to his person, after the young Mochonna, of whom mention has already been made.

⁶⁸ The primitive name was Ily, Ilii, or I — that is to say, the isle, the isle par excellence. Iona, according to various authors, means the blessed isle. This last word is written Iova by Adamnan and the ancient authors; but usage has turned it into Iona.

^{68a} To the south of Colonsay, not far from the large island of Islay.

found no longer any trace of Ireland upon the horizon. He decided, accordingly, to remain upon this unknown rock. One of those heaps of stones, which are called cairns in the Celtic dialect, still marks the spot where Columba made this desiredly unfruitful examination, and has long borne the name of the Cairn of Farewell.⁶⁹

Description of the isle
of Iona.

Nothing could be more sullen and sad than the aspect of this celebrated isle, where not a single tree has been able to resist either the blighting wind or the destroying hand of man. Only three miles in length by two in breadth, flat and low, bordered by gray rocks which scarcely rise above the level of the sea, and overshadowed by the high and sombre peaks of the great island of Mull,⁷⁰ it has not even the wild beauty which is conferred upon the neighboring isles and shores by their basalt cliffs, which are often of prodigious height — or which belongs to the hills, often green and rounded at the summit, whose perpendicular sides are beaten incessantly by those Atlantic waves, which bury themselves in resounding caverns hollowed by the everlasting labors of that tumultuous sea. Upon the narrow surface of the island white stretches of sand alternate with scanty pastures, a few poor crops, and the turf-moors where the inhabitants find their fuel. Poor as the culture is, it seems everywhere resisted and disputed by the gneiss rocks, which continually crop out, and in some places form an almost inextricable labyrinth. The only attraction possessed by this sombre dwelling-place is the view of the sea, and of the mountains of Mull and the other islands, to the number of twenty or thirty, which may be distinguished from the top of the northern hill of Iona.⁷¹ Among these is Staffa, celebrated for the grotto of Fingal, which has been known only for about a century, and which, in the time of Columba, moaned and murmured in its solitary and unknown ⁶⁹ Carn cul ri Erin — literally, the back turned on Ireland. Many historians are of opinion that the isle had been formerly inhabited by Druids, whose burying-place is still shown — Clachnan Druineach. O'Donnell says that they resisted the landing of the Irish emigrants; but Dr. Reeves contests this idea with very strong arguments. His edition of Adamnan contains a detailed map of Iona, with all the names of places in Celtic.

⁷⁰ “Where a turret’s airy head O’erlooked, dark Mull! thy mighty Sound, Where thwarting tides, with mingled roar, Part thy swarth hills from Morven’s shore.”

WALTER SCOTT, Lord of the Isles, i. 7.

⁷¹ This hill, the highest in the island, is only 320 feet above the level of the sea.

majesty, in the midst of that Hebridean archipelago which is at present haunted by so many curious admirers of the Highland shores and ruined feudal castles, which the great bard of our century has enshrined in the glory of his verse.⁷²

The bay where Columba landed is still called the bay of the osier bark, Port' a Churraich; and a long mound is pointed out to strangers as representing the exact size of his boat, which was sixty feet long. The emigrant did not remain in this bay, which is situated in the middle of the isle; he went higher up, and, to find a little shelter from the great sea winds, chose for his habitation the eastern shore, opposite the large island of Mull, which is separated from Iona only by a narrow channel of a mile in breadth, and whose highest mountains,⁷³ situated more to the east, approach and almost identify themselves with the mountain-tops of Morven, which are continually veiled with clouds. It was there that the emigrants built their huts of branches, for the island was not then, as now, destitute of wood.⁷⁴ When Columba had made up his mind to construct for himself and his people a settled establishment, the build-First establishment of the new monastery.
ings of the new-born monastery were of the greatest simplicity. As in all Celtic constructions, walls of withes or branches, supported upon long wooden props, formed the principal element in their architecture. Climbing plants, especially ivy, interlacing itself in the interstices of the branches, at once ornamented and consolidated the modest shelter of the missionaries.⁷⁵ The Irish built scarcely any churches of stone, and retained, up to the twelfth century, as St. Bernard testifies, the habit of building their churches of wood. But it was not for some years after their first establishment that the monks of Iona permitted themselves the luxury of a wooden church; and when they did so, great ⁷² In the Lord of the Isles Scott has given a poetic itinerary of all the archipelago so frequented by St. Columba. The powerful Celtic dynasties who, under the title of Lords of the Isles, ruled the Hebrides during the middle ages, were of the clan Macdonald: their sway extended over the district of Morven, which is the part of the main land nearest to Iona.

⁷³ The highest mountain in Mull is 3178 feet in height.

⁷⁴ It is said that Columba retired in saltibus to pray. At present the inhabitants of Iona have no other wood than that which is thrown by the sea upon the beach. See in the Appendix No. 1 some notes upon the present condition of Iona.

⁷⁵ "Virgarum fasciculos ad hospitium construendum. . . Binales sudes." — ADAMNAN, ii. 3-7. Dr. Reeves has put together several ancient authorities upon the materials of chapels and churches in Wales and Brittany. "Virgis torquatis muros perficientes . . . museo silvestri solum et hederæ nexibus adornato. . . Virgas et fenum ad materiam cellæ construendæ . . ."

oaks, such as the sterile and wind-beaten soil of their islet could not produce, had to be brought for its construction from the neighboring shore.⁷⁶

Thus the monastic capital of Scotland, and the centre of Christian civilization in the north of Great Britain, came into being thirteen centuries ago. Some ruins of a much later date than the days of Columba, though still very ancient, mingled among a few cottages scattered on the shore, still point out the site.

"We were now treading," said, in the eighteenth century, the celebrated Johnson, who was the first to recall the attention of the British public to this profaned sanctuary—"we were now treading that illustrious island which was once the luminary of the Caledonian regions, whence savage clans and roving barbarians derived the benefits of knowledge and the blessings of religion. To abstract the mind from all local emotion would be impossible, if it were endeavored, and would be foolish, if it were possible. Whatever withdraws us from the power of our senses, whatever makes the past, the distant, or the future predominate over the present, advances us in the dignity of thinking beings. Far from me, and from my friends, be such frigid philosophy as may conduct us indifferent and unmoved over any ground which has been dignified by wisdom, bravery, or virtue. That man is little to be envied whose patriotism would not gain force upon the plain of Marathon, or whose piety would not grow warmer among the ruins of Iona!"⁷⁷

Columba, who had been initiated into classic recollections, like all the monks of his time, had no doubt heard of Marathon; but certainly it could never have occurred to him that a day would come in which a descendant of the race he came to save should place his humble shelter in the same rank with the most glorious battle-field of Hellenic history.

Far from having any prevision of the glory of Iona, his soul was still swayed by a sentiment which never abandoned him—regret for his lost country. All his life he retained for Ireland the passionate tenderness of an exile, a love which displayed itself in the songs which have been preserved to us, and which date perhaps from the first moments of his exile. It is possible that their authenticity is not altogether beyond dispute; and that,

Columba
passionately regrets his country.

⁷⁶ "Cum roboreæ . . . duodecim currucis congregatis, materiæ ad nostrum renovandum traherentur monasterium."

⁷⁷ BOSWELL'S Tour to the Hebrides.

like the poetic lamentations given forth by Fortunatus in the name of St. Radegund,⁷⁸ they were composed by his disciples and contemporaries. But they have been too long repeated as his, and depict too well what must have passed in his heart, to permit us to neglect them. "Death in faultless Ireland is better than life without end in Albyn." After this cry of despair follow strains more plaintive and submissive. In one of his elegies,⁷⁹ he laments that he can no longer sail on the lakes and bays of his native island, nor hear the song of the swans, with his friend Comgall. He laments above all to have been driven from Erin by his own fault, and because of the blood shed in his battles. He envies his friend Cormac, who can go back to his dear monastery at Durrow, and hear the wind sigh among the oaks, and the song of the black-bird and cuckoo. As for Columba, all is dear to him in Ireland except the princes who reign there. This last particular shows the persistence of his political rancor. No trace of this feeling, however, remains in a still more characteristic poem,⁸⁰ which must have been confided to some traveller as a message from the exile of Iona to his country. In this he celebrates, as always, the delight of voyaging round the coast of Ireland, and the beauty of its cliffs and beach. But, above all, he mourns over his exile:—

"What joy to fly upon the white-crested sea, and to watch the waves break upon the Irish shore! what joy to row the little bark, and land among the whitening foam upon the Irish shore! Ah! how my boat would fly if its prow were turned to my Irish oak-grove! But the noble sea now carries me only to Albyn,⁸¹ the land of ravens. My foot is in my little boat, but my sad heart ever bleeds. There is a gray eye which ever turns to Erin; but never in this life shall it see Erin, nor her sons, nor her daughters.⁸² From the high prow ⁷⁸ See ante, p. 488.

⁷⁹ Published by REEVES, Appendix, p. 275.

⁸⁰ REEVES, p. 285–87. The original text of this poem is in very ancient Irish.

⁸¹ Alba, Albania, is the name generally applied by Irish writers to that part of Great Britain which afterwards became Scotland. It is evidently the same as Albion, and later took the form of Albany, which has been always employed in the heraldic language of the two kingdoms as a title borne by the princes of the royal house. Everybody knows that the widow of Charles Edward, when married a second time to Alfieri, called herself Countess of Albany.

⁸² This seems to refer to a vow which he is said to have made at the moment of his departure, to see neither man nor woman of his country—a vow which he evaded on his journey to the national assembly of Drum-

I look over the sea, and great tears are in my gray eye when I turn to Erin — to Erin, where the song of the birds are so sweet, and where the clerks sing like the birds; where the young are so gentle, and the old so wise; where the great men are so noble to look at, and the women so fair to wed. Young traveller, carry my sorrows with thee, carry them to Comgall of eternal life. Noble youth, take my prayer with thee, and my blessing; one part for Ireland — seven times may she be blessed! and the other for Albyn. Carry my blessing across the sea — carry it to the west. My heart is broken in my breast: if death comes to me suddenly, it will be because of the great love I bear to the Gael.⁸³

But it was not only in these elegies, repeated His regret lasts all his life. and perhaps retouched by Irish bards and monks, but at each instant of his life, in season and out of season, that this love and passionate longing for his native country burst forth in words and in musings; the narratives of his most trustworthy biographers are full of it. The most severe penance which he could imagine for the guiltiest sinners who came to confess to him, was to impose upon them the same fate which he had voluntarily inflicted upon himself — never to set foot again upon Irish soil.⁸⁴ But when, instead of forbidding to sinners all access to that beloved isle, he had to smother his envy of those who had the right and happiness to go there at their pleasure, he dared scarcely trust himself to name its name; and when speaking to his guests, or to the Ceitt by covering his eyes with a bandage, over which he drew his cowl. — REEVES.

⁸³ The Gaoidhil or Gaédhil. This was the name which the Irish gave themselves before the Roman missionaries had given them the name of Scoti. It is generally argued that the best known and most authentic, though in our opinion the least interesting, of Columba's Latin poems, dates from the first years of his sojourn at Iona. It is called by the name of Altus, from the first word of the first verse —

“Altus prosator vertustus dierum et ingenitus.”

It is composed of twenty-four stanzas. The first word of each verse begins with a different letter, in the order of the letters of the alphabet. Each verse comments in very imaginative language on a text of Scripture, indicated in the argument, on such subjects as the Creation, the Fall, Hell, the Last Judgment, &c. The argument (in Irish) of this poem expressly states that it was suggested to Columba by his desire to obtain the pardon of God for his three battles. The text has been published by Colgan. Dr. Todd announces a more complete edition. Colgan states formally that the poem was composed at Iona. He adds that, according to some, the saint occupied some years in meditation on the subject before he wrote it; and that, according to others, he sent it to Pope Gregory the Great, who received it with the most sympathetic respect.

⁸⁴ See further on an incident related by Adamnan, i. 22.

monks who were to return to Ireland, he could only say to them, "You will return to the country that you love."⁸⁵

This melancholy patriotism never faded out of his heart, and was evidenced much later in his life by an incident which shows an obstinate regret for his lost Ireland, along with a tender and careful solicitude for all the creatures of God. One morning he called one of the monks and said to him, "Go and seat thyself by the sea, upon the western bank of the island; there thou wilt see arrive from the north of Ireland and fall at thy feet a poor travelling stork, long beaten by the winds and exhausted by fatigue. Take her up with pity, feed her and watch her for three days; after three days' rest, when she is refreshed and strengthened, she will no longer wish to prolong her exile among us—she will fly to sweet Ireland, her dear country where she was born. I bid thee care for her thus, because she comes from the land where I, too, was born." Everything happened as he had said and ordered. The evening of the day on which the monk had received the poor traveller, as he returned to the monastery, Columba, asking him no questions, said to him, "God bless thee, my dear child, thou hast cared for the exile; in three days thou shalt see her return to her country." And, in fact, at the time mentioned the stork rose from the ground in her host's presence, and, after having sought her way for a moment in the air, directed her flight across the sea, straight upon Ireland.⁸⁶ The sailors of the Hebrides all know and tell this tale; and I love to think that among all my readers there is not one who would not fain have repeated or deserved Columba's blessing.

⁸⁵ "In tua quam amas patria . . . per multos eris annos."—ADAMN., i. 17.

⁸⁶ "Nam de aquilonali Hiberniæ regione quædam hospita grus, valde fessa et fatigata, superveniet, coram te in litore cadens recumbet; quam misericorditer sublevare curabis, ad propinquam deportabis domum; et post expleto recreata triduo, nolens ultra apud nos peregrinari, ad priorem Scotiæ duleem, unde orta, remeabit regionem . . . quam ideo tibi sic diligenter commendo, quia de nostræ paternitatis regione est oriunda. . . . Benedicat te Deus, mi fili, quia peregrinæ bene ministrasti hospitæ . . . quæ post ternos soles ad patriam repedabit . . . paulisperque in aere viam speculata . . . recti volatus cursu ad Hiberniam se repedavit tranquillo."—ADAMN., i. 48.

His solicitude for the stork which came from Ireland.

CHAPTER III.

THE APOSTOLATE OF COLUMBA AMONG THE SCOTS AND PICTS.

Moral transformation of Columba. — His progress in spiritual life. — His humility. — His charity. — His preaching by tears. — The hut which formed his abbatial palace at Iona. — His prayers; his work of transcription. — His crowd of visitors. — His severity in the examination of monastic vocations. — Aidus the Black, the murderer of Columba's enemy King Diarmid, rejected by the community. — Penance of Libran of the Rushes. — Columba encourages the despairing and unmasks the hypocrites. — Monastic propaganda of Iona; Columba's fifty-three foundations in Scotland. — His relations with the people of Caledonia: First with the colony of Dalriadians from Ireland, whose king was his relative; he enlightens and confirms their imperfect Christianity. — Ambushes^g laid for his chastity. — His connection with the Picts, who occupied the north of Britain. — The dorsum Britannia. — Columba their first missionary. — The fortress gates of their king Brudus open before him. — He struggles with the Druids in their last refuge. — He preaches by an interpreter. — His respect for natural virtue. — Baptism of two old Pictish chiefs. — Columba's humanity: he redeems an Irish captive. — Frequent journeys among the Picts, whose conversion he accomplishes before he dies. — His fellow-workers, Malruve and Drostan; the Monastery of Tears.

HOWEVER bitter the sadness might be with which exile filled the heart of Columba, it did not for a moment turn him from his work of expiation. As soon as he had installed himself with his companions in that desert isle, from whence the Christian faith and monastic life were about to radiate over the north of Great Britain, a gradual and almost complete transformation became apparent in him. Without giving up the lovable peculiarities of his character and race, he gradually became a model for penitents, and at the same time for confessors and preachers. Without ceasing to maintain an authority which was to increase with years, and which does not seem ever to have been disputed, over the monasteries which he had founded in Ireland, he applied himself at once to establish, on the double basis of manual and intellectual labor, the new insular community which was to be the centre of his future activity. Then he proceeded to unite himself in friendly relations with the inhabitants of the neighboring districts,

Change in Columba:
his progress in spiritual life.

whom it was needful to evangelize or confirm in the faith, before thinking of carrying the light of the Gospel further off to the north. He prepared himself for this grand mission by miracles of fervor and austerity, as well as humble charity, to the great profit in the first place of his own monks, and afterwards of the many visitors who came, whether from Ireland or from the Caledonian shores, to seek at his side the healing or the consolation of penitence.

This man, whom we have seen so passionate, so irritable, so warlike and vindictive, became little by little the most gentle, the humblest, the most tender of friends and fathers. It was he, the great head of the Caledonian Church, who, kneeling before the strangers who came to Iona, or before the monks returning from their work, took off their shoes, washed their feet, and after having washed them respectfully kissed them. But charity was still stronger than humility in that transfigured soul. No necessity, spiritual or temporal, found him indifferent. He devoted himself to the solace of all infirmities, all misery, and pain, weeping often over those who did not weep for themselves.⁸⁷ These tears became the most eloquent part of his preaching, the means which he employed most willingly to subdue inveterate sinners, to arrest the criminal on the brink of the abyss, to appease and soften and change those wild and savage but simple and straightforward souls, whom God had given him to subdue.

His humility and charity.

In the midst of the new community Columba inhabited, instead of a cell, a sort of hut built of planks, and placed upon the most elevated spot within the monastic enclosure. Up to the age of seventy-six he slept there upon the hard floor, with no pillow but a stone. This hut was at once his study and his oratory. It was there that he gave himself up to those prolonged prayers which excited the admiration and almost the alarm of his disciples. It was there that he returned after sharing the out-door labor of his monks,⁸⁸ like the least among them, to consecrate the rest of his time to the study of Holy Scripture and the transcription of the sacred text. The work of transcription remained until his last day the occupation of his old age, as it had been the passion of his youth; it had such an attraction for him, and seemed to him so essential to a knowledge of the truth, that, as we have already said, three hundred copies of the Holy Gospels, copied by his own hand, have been attributed to him.

Prayer and work.

⁸⁷ "Cum laborantibus laborabat, cum infirmantibus infirmabatur, cum flentibus semper, et cum non flentibus sæpe flebat. . . . Quando vel pervicaces in nefarium aliquod facinus ruentes cohibere non poterat . . . lacrymas ubertim emittebat." — O'DONNELL, lib. iii. c. 40.

⁸⁸ "Nullum horæ momentum transibat, quo non pie occupatum reperiri potuerit. . . . In manuali laboratione cum aliis fratribus non secus ac eorum minimus, collaborabat." — O'DONNELL, Vita quinta, iii. 37, 39.

His crowd of visitors. It was in the same hut that he received with unwearied patience the numerous and sometimes importunate visitors who soon flowed to him, and of whom sometimes he complained gently—as of that indiscreet stranger, who, desirous of embracing him, awkwardly overturned his ink upon the border of his robe.⁸⁹ These importunate guests did not come out of simple curiosity; they were most commonly penitent or fervid Christians, who, informed by the fishermen and inhabitants of the neighboring isles of the establishment of the Irish monk, who was already famous in his own country, and attracted by the growing renown of his virtues, came from Ireland, from the north and south of Britain, and even from the midst of the still heathen Saxons, to save their souls and gain heaven under the direction of a man of God.⁹⁰

His scrupulous severity in the examination of monastic vocations. Far from making efforts to attract or lightly admitting these neophytes, nothing in his life is more clearly established than the scrupulous severity with which he examined into all vocations, and into the admission of penitents. He feared nothing so much as that the monastic frock might serve as a shelter for criminals who sought in the cloister not only a place of penitence and expiation, but a shelter from human justice. On occasion he even blamed the too great facility of his friends and disciples. One of the latter, Finchán, had founded upon Eigg,⁹¹ another Hebridean island, a community resembling that of Iona, and possibly dependent upon it: he had there admitted to clerical orders, and even to the priesthood, a prince of the clan of Picts established in Ireland, Aëdh or Aïdus, called the Black, a violent and bloodthirsty man, who had ⁸⁹ “Tuguriolum hospitium, in eminentiore loco fabricatum, in quo vir beatus scribebat. . . . Hospes molestus supervenit, sanctumque osculandum appetens, ora vestimenti inclinatum effudit atramenti corniculum.”—ADAMNAN, i. 25.

⁹⁰ Adamnan has among the list of the first companions of the holy abbot the names of two Saxons, one of whom was a baker, and also that of a Briton, who died first of all the Iona monks. This was that Odhrán or Orain who has left his name to the burying-ground, which is still called Reilig Orain. “Bonis actibus intentans qui primus apud nos in hac insula mortuus est.”—ADAMNAN, iii. 6.

⁹¹ To the north of Iona, near the large island of Skye.

assassinated Diarmid, the king of Ireland. It was this king, as will be remembered, who pronounced the unjust sentence which drove Columba frantic, and was the occasion of all his faults and misfortunes. The abbot of Iona was not the less on this account indignant at the weakness of his friend. "The hand which Finchan has laid, in the face of all justice and ecclesiastical law, upon the head of this son of perdition," said Columba, "shall rot and fall off, and be buried before the body to which it is attached. As for the false priest, the assassin, he shall himself be assassinated." This double prophecy was accomplished.⁹²

Let us lend an ear to the following dialogue which Columba held with one of those who sought shelter Libran of the Rushes. under his discipline. It will explain the moral and spiritual condition of that age better than many commentaries, and will, besides, show the wonderful influence which Columba, penitent and exiled in the depths of his distant island, exercised over all Ireland. It was one day announced to him that a stranger had just landed from Ireland, and Columba went to meet him in the house reserved for guests, to talk to him in private, and question him as to his dwelling-place, his family, and the cause of his journey. The stranger told him that he had undertaken this painful voyage in order, under the monastic habit and in exile, to expiate his sins. Columba, desirous of trying the reality of his penitence, drew a most repulsive picture of the hardship and difficult obligations of the new life. "I am ready," said the stranger, "to submit to the most cruel and humiliating conditions that thou canst command me." And after having made confession, he swore, still upon his knees, to accomplish all the requirements of penitence. "It is well," said the abbot; "now rise from thy knees, seat thyself, and listen; you must first do penance for seven years in the neighboring island of Tiree, after which I will see you again." "But," said the penitent, still agitated by remorse, "how can I expiate a perjury of which I have not yet spoken? Before I left my own country I killed a poor man. I was about to suffer the punishment of death for that crime, and I was already in irons, ⁹² "Finchanus, Christi miles, Aidum . . . regio genere ortum, Cruthinium gente, de Scotia ad Britanniam sub clericatus habitu secum adduxit. . . . Qui valde sanguinarius homo et multorum fuerat trucidator. . . . Darmitium totæ Scotiæ regnatorem Deo auctore ordinatum interfecerat. . . . Manus . . . contra fas et jus ecclesiasticum super caput filii perditionis, mox computrescet." — ADAMNAN, i. 36.

when one of my relations, who is very rich, delivered me by paying the composition demanded. I swore that I would serve him all the rest of my life ; but after some days of service I abandoned him, and here I am, notwithstanding my oath." Upon this the saint added that he would only be admitted to the paschal communion after seven years of penitence. When these were completed, Columba, after having given him the communion with his own hand, sent him back to Ireland to his patron, carrying a sword with an ivory handle for his ransom. The patron, however, moved by the entreaties of his wife, gave the penitent his pardon without ransom. "Why should we accept the price sent to us by the holy Columba? We are not worthy of it. The request of such an intercessor should be granted freely. His blessing will do more for us than any ransom." And immediately he detached the girdle from his waist, which was the ordinary formula in Ireland for the manumission of captives or slaves. Columba had besides commanded his penitent to remain with his old father and mother until he had rendered to them the last services. This accomplished, his brothers let him go, saying, "Far be it from us to detain a man who has labored for seven years for the salvation of his soul with the holy Columba." He then returned to Iona, bringing with him the sword which was to have been his ransom. "Henceforward thou shalt be called Libran, for thou art free, and emancipated from all ties," said Columba; and he immediately admitted him to take the monastic vows. But when he was commanded to return to Tiree, to end his life at a distance from Columba, poor Libran, who up to this moment had been so docile, fell on his knees and wept bitterly. Columba, touched by his despair, comforted him, as best he could, without, however, altering his sentence. "Thou shalt live far from me, but thou shalt die in one of my monasteries, and thou shalt rise again with my monks, and have part with them in heaven," said the abbot. Such was the history of Libran, called Libran of the Rushes, because he had passed many years in gathering rushes — the years probably of his penitence.⁹³

⁹³ "Libranus de Arundinet . . . plebeius nuper, sumpto clericatus habitu . . . ad delenda in peregrinatione peccamina longo fatigatum itinere. . . . Cui sanctus, ut de suæ pœnitudinis exploraret qualitate, dura et laboriosa ante oculos monasterialia proposuisset imperia. . . . Paratus sum ad omnia quæcumque mihi jubere volueris, quamlibet durissima, quamlibet indigna. . . . Surge et reside. . . . Quid agere oportet de quodam meo falso juramento? Nam in patria trucidavi homuncionem. . . . Machæram belluinis

This doctor, learned in penitence, became day by day more gifted in the great art of ruling souls; and, with a hand as prudent as vigorous, raised up on one side the wounded and troubled conscience — while, on the other, he unveiled the false monks and false penitents. To a certain monk, who, in despair at having yielded during a journey to the temptations of a woman, rushed from confessor to confessor without ever finding himself sufficiently repentant or sufficiently punished, he restored peace and confidence, by showing him that his despair was nothing but an infernal hallucination, and by inflicting upon him a penance hard enough to convince him of the remission of his sin.⁹⁴ To another sinner from Ireland, who, guilty of incest and fratricide, had insisted, whether Columba pleased or not, on taking refuge in Iona, he imposed perpetual exile from his native country, and twelve years of penance among the savages of Caledonia, predicting at the same time that the false penitent would perish in consequence of refusing this expiation.⁹⁵ Arriving one day in a little community formed by himself in one of the neighboring islets,⁹⁶ and intended to receive the penitents during their time of probation, he gave orders that certain delicacies should be added to their usual repast, and that even the penitents should be permitted to enjoy them. One of the latter, however, more scrupulous than needful, refused to accept the improved fare, even from the hand of the abbot. “Ah!” said Columba, “thou refuseth the solace which is offered to thee by thy superior and myself. A day will come when thou shalt again be a robber as thou hast been, and shalt ornatam dolatis dentibus. . . . Ut quid nobis hoc accipere quod sanctus pretium misit Columba? Hoc non sumus digni . . . liberetur ei pius hic gratis ministrator. . . . Continuo gratis liberavit servum . . . cingulum ex more captivi de lumbis resolvens. . . . Ut tanto tempore patri debitam, sed neglectam redintegres pietatem. . . . Nullo modo nos oportet fratrem in patria retentare qui per septem annos apud S. Columbam in Britannia salutem exercuit animæ. . . . Tu Libranus vocaberis quod sis liber. . . . Qui ideo Arundineti est vocitatus, quia in arundineto multis annis arundines colligendo laboraverat.” His death occurred long after that of Columba, at Durrow, one of the first of the great abbot’s foundations in Ireland. — ADAMNAN, ii. 39.

He encourages the penitents, and unmasks the hypocrites.

⁹⁴ “Magna est, o frater, hallucinatio tua. Ego quindecim tibi annos in pane et aqua jejunandos pro pœnitentia injungo, quo tibi vel ipsa pœnitentiæ gravitas persuadeat peccatum tuum esse remissum.” — O’DONNELL, vol. i. c. 24.

⁹⁵ “Si duodecim annis inter Brittones cum fletu et lachrymis pœnitentiam egeris, nec ad Scotiam usque ad mortem reversus fueris, forsán Deus peccato ignoscat tuo.” — ADAMNAN, i. 22.

⁹⁶ Himba, the modern name of which is unknown.

steal, and eat the venison in the forests wherever thou goest." And this prophecy too was fulfilled.⁹⁷

Notwithstanding these precautions, and his apparent severity, the number of neophytes who sought the privilege of living under the rule of Columba increased more and more. Every day, and every minute of the day, the abbot and his companions, in the retirement of their cells, or at their outdoor labors, heard great cries addressed to them from the other side of the narrow strait which separates Iona from the neighboring island of Mull. These shouts were the understood signal by which those who sought admission to Iona gave notice of their presence, that the boat of the monastery might be sent to carry them over.⁹⁸ Among the crowds who crossed in that boat some sought only material help, alms, or medicines; but the greater part sought permission to do penance, and to pass a shorter or longer time in the new monastery, where Columba put their vocation to so many trials. Once only was he known to have at the very moment of their arrival imposed, so to speak, the monastic vows, upon two pilgrims, whose virtues and approaching death had been by a supernatural instinct revealed to him.⁹⁹

Monastic
propaganda
of Iona.
Foundations of Columba in Scotland.

The narrow enclosure of Iona was soon too small for the increasing crowd, and from this little monastic colony issued in succession a swarm of similar colonies, which went forth to plant new communities, daughters of Iona, in the neighboring isles, and on the main land of Caledonia, all of which were under the authority of Columba. Ancient traditions attribute to him the foundation of three hundred monasteries or churches, as many in Caledonia as in Hibernia, a hundred of which were in the islands or upon the sea-shore of the two countries. Modern learning has discovered and registered the existence of ninety churches, whose origin goes back to Columba, and to all or almost all of which, according to the custom of the ⁹⁷ "Ut etiam pœnitentibus aliqua præcipit consolatio indulgeretur. . . . Erit tempus quo cum furacibus furtive carnem in sylva manducabis." — ADAMNAN, i. 21.

⁹⁸ "Alia die, ultra fretum Ionæ insulæ clamatum est, quem sanctus, sedens in tuguriolo tabulis suffulto audiens, clamorem. . . . Mane eadem quarta feria, alius ultra fretum clamitabat proselytus. . . . Quadam die, quemdam ultra fretum audiens clamitantem, sanctus. . . . Valde miserandus est ille clamitans homo, qui aliqua ad carnalia medicamenta petiturus pertinentia, ad nos venit. . . . Ite, ait, celeriter peregrinosque de longinqua venientes regione, ad nos ocius adducite." — ADAMNAN, i. 25, 26, 27, 32, 43.

⁹⁹ "Apud me, ut dicitis, anni unius spatio peregrinari non poteritis, nisi prius monachicum promiseretis votum." — ADAMNAN, i. 32.

time, monastic communities must have been attached.¹⁰⁰ Traces of fifty-three of these churches remain still in modern Scotland, unequally divided among the districts inhabited by the two races which then shared Caledonia between them.¹⁰¹ Thirty-two are in the western isles, and the country occupied by the Irish-Scots, and the twenty-one others mark the principal stations of the great missionary in the land of the Picts. The most enlightened judges among the Scotch Protestants agree in attributing to the teachings of Columba—to his foundations and his disciples—all the primitive churches, and the very ancient parochial division of Scotland.¹⁰²

But it is time to tell what the population was whose confidence Columba had thus gained, and from which the communities of his monastic family were recruited. The portion of Great Britain which received the name of Caledonia did not include the whole of modern Scotland; it embraced only the districts to the north of the isthmus which separates the Clyde from the Forth, or Glasgow from Edinburgh. All this region to the north and to the east was in the hands of those terrible Picts whom the Romans had been unable to conquer, and who were the terror of the Britons. But to the west and south-west, on the side where Columba landed, he found a colony of his own country and race—that is to say, the Scots of Ireland, who were destined to become the sole masters of Caledonia, and to bestow Connection of Columba with the population of Caledonia.

The Irish colony of Dalriadians in Scotland.

¹⁰⁰ Jocelyn, in his Vie de St. Patrice, c. 89, attributes a hundred to him; and this number is increased to three hundred by O'Donnell, book iii. c. 32. Colgan has named sixty-six of which Columba must have been, directly or indirectly, the founder (six more than St. Bernard). Fifty-eight of these foundations were in Ireland. But Colgan regards as founded by him almost all the churches built in Scotland before his death in 597. Bede, iii. 4, seems to give Durrow and Iona as the only direct foundations of Columba, and the others as proceeding from these two: “Ex utroque monasterio plurima exinde monasteria per discipulos et in Britannia et in Scotia propagata sunt.” But he evidently is in the wrong, so far at least as Derry is concerned. All the communities erected under the supremacy of the abbot of Iona bore the name of Familia Columba-Cille.

¹⁰¹ The enumeration of Dr. Reeves (Appendix H) might be much augmented, according to what he himself says. The thirty-two churches or monasteries inter Scottos comprehended those of the Hebridean isles, such as Skye, Mull, Oronsay, even down to the distant islet of St. Kilda, one of the three churches of which bears his name. In those inter Pictos is included Incheolm, an island near Edinburgh. These fifty-three, and the thirty-seven already brought to light by Dr. Reeves, make very nearly the number of one hundred given by the author of the Vie de St. Patrice.

¹⁰² See specially Cosmo Innes, the modest and learned author of the excellent works entitled Scotland in the Middle Ages, 1860, and Sketches of Early Scottish History, 1861.

upon it the name of Scotland.¹⁰³ More than half a century before, following in the train of many similar invasions or emigrations, a colony of Irish, or, according to the name then in use, of Scots, belonging to the tribe of Dalriadians,¹⁰⁴ had crossed the sea which separates the north-east coast of Ireland from the north-west of Great Britain, and had established itself—between the Picts of the north and the Britons of the south—in the islands and upon the western coast of Caledonia, north of the mouth of the Clyde, and in the district which has since taken the name of Argyll. The chiefs or kings of this Dalriadian colony, who were destined to become the parent stock of those famous and unfortunate Stuarts who once reigned over both Scotland and England, had at that time strengthened their growing power by the aid of the Niall princes who reigned in the north of Ireland, and to whose family Columba belonged. Columba had also a very close tie of kindred with the Dalriadians themselves, his paternal grandmother having been the daughter of Lorn, the first, or one of the first kings of the colony.¹⁰⁵

He was thus a relation of King Connal, the sixth successor of Lorn, who, at the moment of Columba's arrival, had been for three years the chief of the Scotie emigrants in Caledonia. Iona, where the abbot established himself, was at the northern extremity of the then Columba is related to their chiefs.

¹⁰³ We again repeat what it required all the learning of Ussher, White, Colgan, and Ward to prove—namely, that the holy and learned Scotia of the ancients was Ireland. The name of Scotia became the exclusive possession of the Scotch—that is to say, of the Irish colonists in Caledonia—only in the eleventh or twelfth century, in the time of Giraldus Cambrensis, at the moment when the power of the true Scots declined in Scotland under the influence of the Anglo-Norman conquest. The Bollandists have applied the very appropriate name of Scotia Nova or Hiberno-Scotia to the Scotie colonies in Scotland.—Vita S. Cadroë, ap. ACT. SS. MARTII, vol. i. p. 473, and Vita S. Domnani, ACT. SS. APRILIS, vol. ii. 487. The modern English also use a title historically exact in describing as North Britain the kingdom of Scotland since its union with England. M. Varin, in the papers which we have already quoted, has proved the obscurity of the political and religious origin of Caledonia. He remarks that, of the three primitive populations successively noted in that part of Great Britain, the only one which has retained its name is that which was the last to arrive upon the soil, which from it is still called Scotland. He is even disposed to believe that Ireland sometimes claimed for herself the credit of the civil and religious acts accomplished in her colony.

¹⁰⁴ These Dalriadians were themselves descended from Picts, who, under the name of Cruithne or Cruithnii, had long swayed a part of Ireland.—See REEVES, pp. 33, 67, and 94; O'KELLY, notes to the new edition of Cambrensis Eversus, of Lynch, vol. i. pp. 436, 463, 495. In Columba's time they still occupied the counties of Antrim and Down.

¹⁰⁵ See the genealogical table of REEVES, p. 8, note 4.

very limited domain of the Dalriadians, and might be regarded as a dependency of their new state, not less than of that of the Picts, who occupied all the rest of Caledonia. Columba immediately entered into alliance with this prince. He visited him in his residence on the main land, and obtained from him, in his double title of cousin and countryman, a gift of the uninhabited island where he had just established his community.¹⁰⁶

These Scots who had left Ireland after the conversion of the island by St. Patrick were probably Christians, like all the Irish, at least in name; but no certain trace of ecclesiastical organization or of monastic institutions is visible among them before Columba's arrival at Iona. The apostolate of Ninian and of Palladius does not seem to have produced a durable impression upon them any more than upon the southern Picts.¹⁰⁷ A new apostolical enterprise by Celtic monks was necessary to renew the work at which the Roman missionaries had labored a century before.¹⁰⁸ Columba and his disciples neglected no means of fortifying and spreading religion among their countrymen, who were emigrants like themselves. We see him in the narratives of Adamnan administering baptism and the other rites of religion to the people of Scotie race, through whose lands he passed, planting there the first foundations of monastic communities. Many narratives, more or less legendary, indicate that this people, even when Christian, had great need to be instructed, directed, and established in the good way; while at the same time the Dalriadians showed a certain suspicion and doubt of the new apostle of their race, which only yielded to the prolonged influence of his self-devotion and unquestionable virtue.

He enlightens and completes their imperfect Christianity.

Columba was still in the flower of his age when he established himself at Iona; he was not more at the most than forty-two. All testimonies agree in celebrating his manly beauty, his remarkable height, his sweet and sonorous voice, the cordiality of his manner, the gracious dignity of his deportment and person.¹⁰⁹ These external advantages, added to ¹⁰⁶ TIGHERNACH, Annales; ADAMNAN, 574, i. 7.

¹⁰⁷ This explains the name of apostates given by St. Patrick to the Scots and Picts of his time — “Socii Scotorum atque Pictorum apostatarum . . . pessimorum atque apostatarum Pictorum.”

¹⁰⁸ The Irish Scots, newly converted, reconquered to Christianity the Scots of Caledonia. The Picts, forgetful of Ninian and of Rome, received the gospel the second time from Hibernia in the name of Britain. — VARIN, 2d paper.

¹⁰⁹ “Erat aspectu angelicus. . . . Omnibus carus, hilarem semper faciem the fame of his austerities and the inviolable purity of his life, made a singular and varied impression upon the pagans and the very imperfect Christians of Caledonia. The Dalriadan king put his virtue to the proof by presenting to him

His chastity put to trial by the king and by a neighbor.

his daughter, who was remarkably beautiful, and clothed in the richest ornaments. He asked if the sight of a creature so beautiful and so adorned did not excite some inclination in him. "Without doubt," answered the missionary, "the inclination of the flesh and of nature; but understand well, lord king, that not for all the empire of the world, even could its honors and pleasures be secured to me to the end of time, would I yield to my natural weakness."¹¹⁰ About the same time, a woman who lived not far from Iona spread for him a more dangerous and subtle snare. The celebrated and handsome exile having inspired her with a violent and guilty passion, she conceived the idea of seducing him, and succeeded in drawing him to her house. But as soon as he understood her design, he addressed to her an exhortation upon death and the last judgment, which he ended by blessing her, and making the sign of the cross. The temptress was thus delivered even from her own temptations. She continued to love him, but with a religious respect. It is added that she herself became a model of holiness.¹¹¹

ostendens . . . cujus alta proceritas. . . ."—ADAMN., Præf., and i. 1. "Vir tantæ deditus austeritati . . . tamen exteriori forma et corporis habitu speciosus, genis rubicundus et vultu hilaris . . . semper apparebat et omnibus. . . . Colloquio affabilem, benignum, jucundum et interioris lætitiæ Spiritu Sancto infusæ indicia, hilari vultu prodentem se semper exhibebat."—O'DONNELL, Vita quinta, l. iii. c. 43.

¹¹⁰ "Puellam valde speciosam purpura, auro, gemmis, aliisque id generis regii amictus ornamentis . . . exornatam . . . coram S. Columba sistit. . . . Percontatus an filiæ et pulchritudo et ornatus placeant. Respondit sanctus omnino placere. Iterum compellat an non etiam ejus formæ ducatur complacentia. . . . Respondit se natura ad talem complacentiam propensum esse. Ecce, inquit rex . . . hiccine est qui nullo carnali desiderio inquinatus deprædicatur? Tunc S. Columba . . . O rex, sciat altitudo tua, et si insita carnis propensio meam naturam ad prohibitas inclinet complacentias, pro universi tamen imperio, honoribus et voluptatibus, si usque mundi finem ad concederetur, me nolle talibus complacenter indulgere."—O'DONNELL, lib. ii. c. 39. The king who figures in this anecdote does not appear to have been Aidan, as O'Donnell would assert. Aidan began to reign over the Scotie colony only in 574, eleven years after the arrival of Columba at Iona. It must have been his predecessor Connell.

¹¹¹ "Ipsam in Ionam jam commorantem, multisque . . . percelebrem. . . . Quamdam de vicino feminam S. viri concupiscentia inflamat (antiquus serpens). . . . Deinde eam aucto crucis signo benedicens, ab omni mox tentatione liberam dimisit. . . . Casto deinceps amore, magnaque reverentia coluit, ipsa tandem sanctitate celebris."—O'DONNELL, lib. ii. c. 25.

But it was towards another race, very different from his Scotie countrymen and much less accessible, that Columba felt himself drawn as much by the penance imposed upon him as by the necessities of the Church and of Christendom. While the Irish Scots occupied the islands and part of the western coast of Caledonia, all the north and east — that is to say, by far the greater part of the country — was inhabited by the Picts, who were still heathens. Originally from Sarmatia, according to Tacitus — according to Bede, descendants of the Scythians — these primitive inhabitants of Great Britain, who had remained untouched by Roman or Christian influences, owed their name to their custom of fighting naked, and of painting their bodies in various colors, which had been the wont of all the ancient Britons at the time of Cæsar's invasion. We have already seen that the holy bishop Ninian more than a century before had preached the Christian faith to the Southern Picts¹¹² — that is to say, to those who lived on the banks of the Forth or scattered among the Britons in the districts south of that river. But while even the traces of Ninian's apostolic work seemed at that moment effaced, although destined afterwards to reappear, the great majority of the Picts — those who inhabited the vast tracts to the north of the Grampians, into which no missionary before Columba had ever dared to penetrate¹¹³ — had always continued heathen. The thirty-four years of life which Columba had still before him were chiefly spent in missions, undertaken for the purpose of carrying the faith to the hilly straths, and into the deep glens and numerous islands of northern Caledonia. There dwelt a race, warlike, grasping, and bold, as inaccessible to softness as to fear, only half clothed notwithstanding the severity of the climate, and obstinately attached to their customs, belief, and chiefs. The missionary had to preach, to convert, and even at need to brave those formidable tribes, in whom Tacitus recognized the farthest off of the earth's inhabitants, and the last champions of freedom — "terrarum ac libertatis extremos;" those barbarians who, having gloriously resisted Agricola, drove the frightened Romans from Britain, and devastated and desolated the entire island up to the arrival of the Saxons; and

Columba
becomes the missionary of the Northern Picts.

555-575.

The Picts.

¹¹² Book viii. chap. 1.

¹¹³ "Primus doctor fidei Christianæ transmontanis Pictis ad Aquilonem." — BEDE, v. 9. "Gentem illam verbo et exemplo ad fidem Christi convertit."
— Ibid., iii. 4.

whose descendants, after filling the history of Scotland with their feats of arms, have given, under the name of Highlanders, to the fallen Stuarts their most dauntless defenders, and to modern England her most glorious soldiers.

Columba crossed again and again that central mountain range in which rise those waters which flow, some north and west to fall into the Atlantic Ocean, and some to the south to swell the North Sea — a range which the biographer of the saint calls the backbone of Britain (dorsum Britannicæ), and which separates the counties of Inverness and Argyll, as now existing, from the county of Perth, and includes the districts so well known to travellers under the names of Breadalbane, Atholl, and the Grampians. This was the recognized boundary between the Scots and Picts,¹¹⁴ and it was here that the ancestors of the latter, the heroic soldiers of Galgacus, had held their ground against the father-in-law of Tacitus, who even when victorious did not venture to cross that barrier.¹¹⁵ Often, too, Columba followed the course of that long valley of waters which, to the north of these mountains, traverses Scotland diagonally from the south-west, near Iona, to the north-east beyond Inverness. This valley is formed by a series of long gulfs and of inland lakes which modern industry has linked together, making it possible for boats to pass from one sea to the other without making the long round by the Orcadian Isles. Thirteen centuries ago religion alone could undertake the conquest of those wild and picturesque regions, which a scanty but fierce and suspicious population disputed with the fir-forests and vast tracts of fern and heather, which are still to be encountered there.

The first glance thrown by history upon this watery highway discovers there the preaching and miracles of Columba. He was the first to traverse in his little skiff Loch Ness and the river which issues from it; he penetrated thus, after a long and painful journey, to the principal fortress of the Pictish king, the site of which is still shown upon a rock north ¹¹⁴ Such at least is the assertion of Adamnan, ii. 46. But his contemporary Bede and all modern authors give another frontier. According to the latter, the Scots extended through all the west of the Caledonian peninsula, and the Southern Picts occupied, to the south of the Grampians, the counties of Perth, Forfar, and Fife. See the map of Scotland in the eleventh century, in the Sketches of Early Scotch History, by Cosmo Innes. “Prædicaturus verbum Dei provinciis septentrionalium Pictorum, hoc est, eis quæ arduis atque horrentibus montium jugis ab australibus eorum sunt regionibus sequestratæ.” — BEDE, iii. 4.

¹¹⁵ WALTER SCOTT, History of Scotland, c. 1.

of the town of Inverness. This powerful and redoubtable monarch, whose name was Bruidh or Brude, son of Malcolm, gave at first a very inhospitable reception to the Irish missionary. The companions of the saint relate that, priding himself upon the royal magnificence of his fortress, he gave orders that the gates should not be opened to the unwelcome visitor; but this was not a command to alarm Columba. He went up to the gateway, made the sign of the cross upon the two gates, and then knocked with his hand. Immediately the bars and bolts drew back, the gates rolled upon their hinges and were thrown wide open, and Columba entered like a conqueror. The king, though surrounded by his council, among whom no doubt were his heathen priests, was struck with panic; he hastened to meet the missionary, addressed to him pacific and encouraging words, and from that moment gave him every honor.¹¹⁶ It is not recorded whether Bruidh himself became a Christian, but during all the rest of his life he remained the friend and protector of Columba. He confirmed to him the possession of Iona, the sovereignty of which he seems to have disputed with his rival the king of the Dalriadan Scots, and our exile thus saw his establishment placed under the double protection of the two powers which shared Caledonia between them.¹¹⁷

He overcomes the resistance of King Bruidh.

But the favor of the king did not bring with it that of the heathen priests, who are indicated by the Christian historians under the name of Druids or Magi, and who made an energetic and persevering resistance to the new apostle. These priests do not seem either to have taught or practised the worship of idols, but Struggles with the Druids in their last refuge.

¹¹⁶ "Bridio rege potentissimo." — BEDE, iii. 4. "In prima sancti fatigatione itineris ad regem Brudeum . . . ex fastu elatus regio munitionis suæ superbe agens . . . homo Dei, cum comitibus, ad valvas portarum accedens . . . tunc manum pulsans contra ostia, quæ continuo sponte, retro retrusis fortiter seris, cum omni celeritate aperta sunt. Rex cum senatu valde per timescunt." — ADAMN., i. c. 35. It is supposed that this royal fortress occupied the site of the vitrified fort of Craig Pharrick, on a rock 1200 feet above the Ness, near its embouchure into the Moray Firth. These vitrified walls — that is to say, walls the stones of which have been dipped, instead of cement, into a vitreous substance produced by the action of fire — are to be found in some districts of Brittany and of Maine, and are everywhere imputed to the Celtic period.

¹¹⁷ "Quæ videlicet insula ad jus quidem Britanniae pertinet, sed donatione Pictorum qui illas Britanniae plagas incolunt, jamdudum monachis Scotorum tradita, eo quod illis prædicantibus fidem Christi perceperint. . . . Unde et Columba . . . præfatam insulam ab eis in possessionem monasterii faciendi accepit." — BEDE, iii. 3, 4. Compare REEVES, p. 76.

rather that of natural forces, and especially of the sun and other celestial bodies. They followed or met the Irish preacher in his apostolic journeys, less to refute his arguments than to hold back and intimidate those whom his preaching gained to Christ. The religious and supernatural character which was attributed by the Druids of Gaul to the woods and ancient trees, was attached by those of Caledonia to the streams and fountains, some of which were, according to their belief, salutary and beneficial, while others were deadly to man. Columba made special efforts to forbid among the new Christians the worship of sacred fountains, and, braving the threats of the Druids, drank in their presence the water which they affirmed would kill any man who dared to put it to his lips.¹¹⁸ But they used no actual violence against the stranger whom their prince had taken under his protection. One day, when Columba and his monks came out of the enclosure of the fort in which the king resided, to chant vespers according to the monastic custom, the Druids attempted to prevent them from singing, lest the sound of the religious chants should reach the people; but the abbot instantly intoned the sixty-fourth psalm, "Eructavit cor meum verbum bonum: dico opera mea regi," with so formidable a voice, that he reduced his adversaries to silence, and made the surrounding spectators, and even the king himself, tremble before him.¹¹⁹

He preaches by an interpreter.

But he did not confine himself to chanting in Latin; he preached. The dialect of the Picts, however, being different from that of the Scots, and unknown to him, it was necessary to employ the services of an interpreter.¹²⁰ But his words were not the less efficacious on this account, though everywhere he was met by the rival exhortations or derisions of the pagan priests. His impassioned nature, as ready to love as to hate, made itself as apparent in his apostolic preachings as formerly in the struggles of his youth; and ties of tender intimacy, active and never appealed to in vain, were soon formed between himself and his converts. One of the Picts, who, having heard him preach by his interpreter, was converted with his wife and all his family, became his friend, and received many visits from him. One of the sons of this new convert fell dangerously ill; the Druids profited by the misfortune to reproach the anxious parents, making it appear that the sickness of their child was the punishment of their apostasy, and boasting the power of the ancient gods of the country, as superior to that of the Christian's God. Columba having been informed hastened to his friend's aid: when he arrived the child had just expired. As soon as he had done all that in him lay to console the father and mother, he asked to be allowed to enter alone into the place where the body of the child was. There he knelt down and prayed long, bathed in tears; then rising, he said, "In the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, return to life and arise!" At the same moment the soul came back to the child's body. Columba helped him to rise, supported him, led him out of the cabin, and restored him to his parents. The power of prayer was thus as great, says Adamnan, in our saint as in Elijah and Elisha under the old law, or in St. Peter, St. Paul, and St. John under the new.¹²¹

¹¹⁸ ADAMNAN, ii. 2.

¹¹⁹ "Dum cum paucis fratribus extra regis munitionem vespertinales Dei laudes ex more celebraret, quidam Magi."

¹²⁰ "Verbum vitæ per interpretatorem sancto prædicante viro." — ADAMN., ii. 32. Bede states that there were five different languages spoken in Great Britain, and compares them with the five books of the Pentateuch. "Anglorum videlicet" (that is to say, the Anglo-Saxons), "Britonum, Scottorum, Pictorum et Latinorum quæ meditatione Scripturarum cæteris omnibus est facta communis." — Hist. Eccl., i. 1. The text, which is so important for the history of philology, is not less important as a proof to what point the knowledge of the Holy Scriptures had already spread among the Catholic nations.

While thus preaching faith and the grace of God by the voice of an interpreter, he at the same time recognized, admired, and proclaimed among those savage tribes the lights and virtues of the law of nature. He discovered the rays of its radiance in many an unknown hearer, by the help of that supernatural gift which enabled him to read the secrets of the heart, and to penetrate the darkness of the future; a gift which developed itself more and more in him as his apostolic career went on. One day while laboring in his evangelical work in the principal island of the Hebrides, the one which lies nearest to the main land,¹²² he cried out all at once, "My sons, to-day you

His respect for natural virtue.

¹²¹ "Quidam plebeius" (this term is always used by Adamnan to express a layman, but at the same time a man either rich or of consideration). . . . "Magi parentibus sæpe cum magna exprobratione cœperunt illudere, suosque quasi fortiores magnificare deos, Christianorum Deo quasi infirmiori derogare. . . . Hoc noster Columba cum Elia et Eliseo. . . . Petro et Paulo et Joanni . . . habebat sibi commune virtutis miraculum." — ADAMNAN, ii. 32.

¹²² Skye, the same in which Charles-Edward took refuge in 1746, after the defeat of Culloden, and where he met Flora Macdonald.

Baptism of the old Pictish
chief in the isle of Skye.

will see an ancient Pictish chief, who has kept faithfully all his life the precepts of the natural law, arrive in this island; he comes to be baptized and to die." Immediately after, a boat was seen to approach the shore with a feeble old man seated in the prow, who was recognized as the chief of one of the neighboring tribes. Two of his companions took him up in their arms and brought him before the missionary, to whose words, as repeated by the interpreter, he listened attentively. When the discourse was ended the old man asked to be baptized; and immediately after breathed his last breath, and was buried in the very spot where he had just been brought to shore.¹²³

And in Glen Urquhart.

whole life to extreme old age: we must baptize him before he dies." Then hastening his steps and stripping his disciples, as much as was possible at his great age, he reached a retired valley, now called Glen Urquhart, where he found the old man who awaited him. Here there was no longer any need of an interpreter, which makes it probable that Columba in his old age had learned the Pictish dialect. The old Pict heard him preach, was baptized, and with joyful serenity gave up to God the soul which was awaited by those angels whom Columba saw.¹²⁴

His humanity.

In this generous heart humanity claimed its rights no less than justice. It was in the name of humanity,¹²⁵ his biographer expressly tells us, that he begged the freedom of a young female slave, born in Ireland, and the ¹²³ "O filii, hodie in hae terrula quidam gentilis senex naturale per totam bonum custodiens vitam, et baptizabitur et morietur. . . . Navicula ejus in prora advectus est decrepitus senex Geonæ primarij cohortis, quem bini juvenes de navi sublevantes, ante beati conspectum viri deponunt. . . . Verbo Dei a sancto per interpretem recepto. . . ." — ADAMNAN, i. 33.

¹²⁴ "Ultra Britanniae dorsum iter agens. . . . Properemus sanctis obviam angelis qui de cœlis ad præferendam alicujus gentilijs animam emissi nos illuc expectant, ut ipsum naturale bonum per totam vitam usque ad extremam senectutem conservantem, priusquam moriatur, opportune baptizemus. . . . Sanctus senex in quantum potuit comites festinus præcedebat. . . . et credens baptizatus est et continuo lætus et securus, cum angelis observantibus ad Deum commigravit." — ADAMNAN, iii. 14.

¹²⁵ "Scoticam postulavit servam . . . humanitatis miseratione liberandam." — Ibid., ii. 33.

captive of one of the principal Druids or Magi. This Druid was named Broïchan, and lived with the king, whose foster-father ¹²⁶ he was, a tie of singular force and authority among the Celtic nations. Either from a savage pride, or out of enmity to the new religion, the Druid obstinately and cruelly refused the prayer of Columba. "Be it so," said the apostle; "but learn, Broïchan, that if thou refusest to set free this foreign captive, thou shalt die before I leave the province." When he had said this he left the castle, directing his steps towards that river Ness which appears so often in his history. But he was soon overtaken by two horsemen who came from the king to tell him that Broïchan, the victim of an accident, was dying, and fully disposed to set the young Irish girl free. The saint took up from the river bank a pebble, which he blessed, and gave to two of his monks, with the assurance that the sick man would be healed by drinking water in which this stone had been steeped, but only on the express condition that the captive should be delivered. She was immediately put under the charge of Columba's companions, and was thus restored at the same moment to her country and her freedom.¹²⁷

The Druid, though healed, was not thereby rendered less hostile to the apostle. Like the magicians of Pharaoh, he attempted to raise nature and her forces against the new Moses. On the day fixed for his departure, Columba found, on reaching, followed by a numerous crowd, the banks of the long and narrow lake from which the Ness issues, and by which he meant to travel, a strong contrary wind and thick fog, as Broïchan had threatened, which the Druids exulted to see. But Columba, entering his boat, bade the frightened ¹²⁶ The reciprocal duties of foster fathers and children (fosterage) were minutely regulated by the British laws. In the twelfth century, Giraldus Cambrensis still remarked that among the Irish foster brothers and sisters were united by a tie almost stronger and more tender than brothers and sisters of the same blood. Dr. Lynch, in his Cambrensis Eversus (first published in 1662, and re-edited by Prof. Kelly in 1850), enlarges upon the importance of the tie which united the Irish princes and lords to their foster fathers and brothers. He recalls Mordecai, the foster-father of Esther, and Clitus, the foster-brother of Alexander the Great, among many examples of sacred and profane history which support his idea. His new editor asserts (ii. 141, 162) that at the Council of Trent the Irish bishop of Raphoe, Donald MacCongal, demonstrated that fosterage and gossipred (cognato spiritualis) were the principal safeguard of the public peace in Ireland.

¹²⁷ "Scito, Broichane, scito quia si mihi hanc peregrinam liberare captivam nolueris, priusquam de hac revertar provincia, citius morieris. . . . Nunc formidabiliter correptus ancillulam liberare est paratus . . . eademque hora liberata famula sancti legatis viri assignatur." — ADAMNAN, ii. 33.

rowers set the sail against the wind, and the assembled people saw him proceed rapidly on his course, as if borne by favorable breezes, towards the south end of the lake, by which he returned to Iona. But he left only to make a speedy return, and came so often as to accomplish the conversion of the Pictish nation, by destroying forever the authority of the Druids in this last refuge of Celtic paganism.¹²⁸ This sanguinary and untamable race was finally conquered by the Irish missionary. Before he ended his glorious career he had sown their forests, their defiles, their inaccessible mountains, their savage moors, and scarcely inhabited islands, with churches and monasteries.

He completes in his life the conversion of the Picts.

Columba's assistants, in his numerous missions among the Picts, were the monks who had come with him, or who had followed him from Ireland. The fame of the obscure benefactors and civilizers of so distant a region has still more completely disappeared than that of Columba: it is with difficulty that some lingering trace of them is to be disentangled from the traditions of some churches whose sites may yet be found upon the ancient maps of Scotland. Such was Malruve (642-722),¹²⁹ a kinsman of Columba, and like him descended from the royal race of Niall, but educated in the great Monastery of Bangor, which he left to follow his illustrious cousin into Albyn, passing by Iona. He must have long survived Columba, for he was for fifty-one years abbot of a community at Apercrossan,¹³⁰ upon the north-west coast of Caledonia, opposite the large island of Skye, before he met his death, which was, according to local tradition, by the sword of Norwegian pirates.

Upon the opposite shore, in that striking promontory which forms the eastern extremity of Scotland, a district now known as Buchan, various churches trace their origin to Columba, and to one of his Irish disciples called Drostan. The mor-maer or chief of the country had at first refused them his permission to settle there, but his son fell dangerously ill, ¹²⁸ "Ventum tibi contrarium caliginemque umbrosam superinducam. . . . Christum invocat, cymbulamque ascendens nautis hæsitantibus, ipse constanter factus velum contra ventum jubet subrigi . . . omnique inspectante turba, navigium flatus contra adversos mira occurrit velocitate."—ADAM-NAN, ii. 34. The place where he landed is at present occupied by Fort Augustus, at the commencement of the Caledonian Canal.

¹²⁹ W. REEVES, St. Maelrubha, his History and Churches. Edinburgh, 1861. Compare Act. SS. Bolland., vol. vi. August, p. 132.

¹³⁰ At present Applecross. Twenty-one parishes in the north of Scotland were in primitive times dedicated to this saint.

and he hastened after the missionaries, offering them the land necessary for their foundation, and begging them to pray for the dying boy. They prayed, and the child was saved. After having blessed the new church, and predicted that none who profaned it should ever conquer their enemies or enjoy long life, Columba installed his companions in their new home, and himself turned to continue his journey. When Drostan saw himself thus condemned to live at a distance from his master, he could not restrain his tears; for these old saints, in their wild and laborious career, loved each other with a passionate tenderness, which is certainly not the least touching feature in their character, and which places an inextinguishable light upon their heads amid the darkness of the legends. "Then," Columba said, "let us call this place the Monastery of Tears;"¹³¹ and the great abbey which lasted a thousand years upon that spot always retained the name. "He who sows in tears shall reap in joy."

The Monastery of Tears.

¹³¹ Said Columb-Cille: "Let Déar (Tear) be its name henceforward." This incident is found in the Celtic language in the most ancient manuscript which exists relative to Scotland; it has been recently discovered in Cambridge, and is of the ninth century. It is about to be published under the name of the Book of Deir. COSMO INNES, Scotland in the Middle Ages, p. 325. WHITLEY STOKES, Saturday Review, 8th December, 1860. The Monastery of Deir was rebuilt for the Cistercians by the Earl of Buchan in 1213. The prophecy of Columba was verified in the family of the Earl Marischal, head of the great house of Keith, who was, after the Reformation, the first spoliator of the monastery, which had been given to him by James VI. In vain his wife, a daughter of Lord Home, begged him not to accept the sacrilegious gift. He would not listen to her. The following night she saw in a dream a multitude of monks, clothed like those of Deir, surround the principal castle of the Earl, Dunnotter-Craig, which was situated on an immense rock on the coast. They began to demolish the rock with no other tools than penknives: at this sight the Countess hastened to look for her husband, that he might stop their work of destruction; but when she returned the rock and the castle had already been undermined and overthrown by the penknives of the monks, and nothing was to be seen but the fragments of the furniture floating on the sea. This vision was immediately interpreted as the announcement of a future catastrophe, and the use of penknives as a sign of the length of time which should pass before its fulfilment. From that moment this powerful house began to diminish, and finally fell in 1715 in the Stuart rebellion.

CHAPTER IV.

COLUMBA CONSECRATES THE KING OF THE SCOTS. — HE GOES TO THE NATIONAL ASSEMBLY OF IRELAND, DEFENDS THE INDEPENDENCE OF THE HIBERNO-SCOTIC COLONY, AND SAVES THE CORPORATION OF BARDS.

Passionate solicitude of Columba for his relatives and countrymen. — He protects King Aídan in his struggle with the Anglo-Saxons of Northumbria. — The same king is crowned by Columba at Iona; the first example of a Christian consecration of kings. — The Stone of Destiny: the descendants of Aídan. — Synod or parliament of Drumceitt in Ireland. — Aedh, king of Ireland, and Aídan, king of the Irish colonists in Scotland. — The independence of the new Scottish kingdom is recognized through the influence of Columba. — He interposes in favor of the bards, whom the king had proposed to outlaw. — Power and excesses of that corporation. — By means of Columba, the good grain is not burned with the weeds. — The bards' song of gratitude in honor of their savior. — Columba, reproved by his disciple, desires that this song should not be repeated during his life. — Superstitious regard attached to it after his death. — Intimate union between music, poetry, and religion in Ireland. — The bards, transformed into minstrels, are the first champions of national independence and Catholic faith against the English conquest. — Fiercely assailed, they yet continue to exist up to our own day. — Moore's Irish Melodies. — The Celtic muse at the service of the vanquished in the Highlands of Scotland as in Ireland.

It would not, however, be natural to suppose that the mission of Columba among the Picts could entirely absorb his life and soul. That faithful love for his race and country which had moved him with compassion for the young Irish girl in captivity among the Picts did not permit him to remain indifferent to the wars and revolutions which were at the bottom of all national life among the Irish Scots as well as the Irish colony in Scotland. There was not a more marked feature in his character than his constant solicitude, his compassionate sympathy, as well after as before his removal to Iona, for the bloody struggles in which his companions and relatives in Ireland were so often engaged. Nothing was nearer to his heart than the claim of kindred; for that reason alone he occupied himself without cease with the affairs of individual relatives. "This man," he said to himself, "is of my

Anxious
solicitude
of Columba for his relatives and
country-
men.

race; I must help him. It is my duty to pray for him, because he is of the same stock as myself. This other is of kin to my mother," &c. And then he would add, "My friends and kindred, who are descended like me from the Nialls, see how they fight!"¹³² And from the far distance of his desert isle he fought with them in heart and thought, as of old he had aided them in person. He breathed from afar the air of battle; he divined the issue by what his companions considered a prophetic instinct, and told it to his monks, to his Irish countrymen, and to the Caledonian Scots who sought him in his new dwelling. With better reason still his soul kindled within him when he foresaw any struggle in which his new neighbors the Dalriadan colonists were to be engaged, either with the Picts, whom they were one day to conquer, or with the Anglo-Saxons.

One day towards the end of his life, being alone with Diarmid his minister (as the monk attached to his personal service was called), he cried out all at once, "The bell! let the bell be rung instantly!" The bell of the modest monastery was nothing better than one of the little square bells made of beaten iron, which are still shown in Irish museums, exactly similar to those which are worn by the cattle in Spain and the Jura. It was enough for the necessities of the little insular community. At its sound the monks hastened to throw themselves on their knees around their father. "Now," said he, "let us pray—let us pray with intense fervor for our people, and for King Aïdan; for at this very moment the battle has begun between them and the barbarians." When their prayers had lasted some time, he said, "Behold, the barbarians flee! Aïdan is victorious!"¹³³

The bell of Iona rings for the battle between the Scots and their enemies.

The barbarians, against whom Columba rang his bells and called for the prayers of his monks, were the Anglo-Saxons ¹³² "Quia est mihi cognationalis, et ex meæ matris parentela. . . . Mei cognationales amici. . . . Nellis nepotes." — ADAMN., ii. 40; i. 49; i. 7.

¹³³ "Subito ad suum dicit ministratorem Diormitium, Cioccam pulsa. . . . Nunc intende pro hoc populo et Aidano rege oremus; hac cum hora incipiunt bellum. . . . Nunc barbari in fugam vertuntur, Aidanoque quanquam infelix concessa victoria." — ADAMN., i. 8. This quanquam infelix refers to the fact that in this battle, de bello Miathorum (as this chapter of Adamnan is entitled), the king lost three hundred and three men and two of his sons. His third son also fell in battle against the Saxons: "In Saxonia Celtica in strage." — Ibid., c. 9. Adamnan speaks of the war as de bello Miathorum, but he does not explain if these Miathi, or Meatæ, who are always associated with the Caledonians, were the allies or the enemies of the Dalriadan Scots.

of Northumbria, who were still pagans, and whose descendants were destined to owe the inestimable blessings of Christianity to the monks of Iona and the spiritual posterity of Columba. But at that time the invaders thought only of taking a terrible revenge for the evils which Britain, before they conquered it, had endured from Scoto-Pictish incursions, and of extending their power ever farther and farther

Aïdan, on the Caledonian side. As for King Aïdan,¹³⁴ he king of the had replaced his cousin-german, King Connall, who Caledonian had guaranteed to Columba the possession of Iona, Scots, 574. as chief of the Dalriadan colony in Argyll. His accession to the throne took place in 574, eleven years after the arrival of Columba; and nothing proves more fully the influence acquired by the Irish missionary during this short interval than Aïdan's resolution to have his coronation blessed by the Abbot of Iona. Columba, though his friend, did not wish him to be king, preferring his brother; but an angel appeared to him three times in succession, and commanded him to consecrate Aïdan according to the ceremony prescribed in a book covered with crystal which was left with him for that purpose.¹³⁵ Columba, who was then in a neighboring island, went back to Iona, where he was met by the new king. The abbot, obedient to the celestial vision, Conse- laid his hands upon the head of Aïdan, blessed him, crated by and ordained him king.¹³⁶ He inaugurated thus not Columba. only a new kingdom, but a new rite, which became at a later date the most august solemnity of Christian national life. The coronation of Aïdan is the first authentic instance known in the West. Columba thus assumed, in respect to the Scotie or Dalriadan kingdom, the same authority with which the abbots of Armagh, successors of St. Patrick, were already invested in respect to the kings of Ireland. That this supreme authority and these august functions were conferred upon abbots instead of bishops, has been the cause of much surprise. But at that period of the ecclesiastical history of ¹³⁴ "Ædan, rex Scottorum qui Britanniam inhabitant." — BEDE, i. 34.

¹³⁵ "Qui in manu vitreum ordinationis regum habebat librum." — ADAMN., iii. 5. This is the famous Vitreus Codex which, according to a narrative given by Reeves, was only shown to Columba by the angel, and did not remain in his hands.

¹³⁶ "Aïdanum, iisdem adventantibus diebus, regem, sicut erat jussus, ordinavit . . . imponensque manum super caput ejus, ordinans benedixit." — Martene (De Antiquis Ritibus Ecclesiæ, vol. iii. l. ii. c. 10, in the treatise De Solemni Regum Benedictione) says that the consecration of Aïdan is the first known example of that solemnity.

Celtic nations the episcopate was entirely in the shade; the abbots and monks alone appear to have been great and influential, and the successors of St. Columba long retained this singular supremacy over the bishops.

According to Scotch national tradition, the new king Aïdan was consecrated by Columba upon a great stone called the Stone of Fate. This stone was afterwards transferred to Dunstaffnage Castle, the ruins of which may be seen upon the coast of Argyll, not far from Iona; then to the Abbey of Scone, near Perth; and was finally carried away by Edward I., the cruel conqueror of Scotland, to Westminster, where it still serves as a pedestal for the throne of the kings of England on the day of their coronation. The solemn inauguration of the kingdom of Aïdan marks the historical beginning of the Scotch monarchy, which before that period was more or less fabulous. Aïdan was the first prince of the Scots who passed from the rank of territorial chief to that of independent king, and head of a dynasty whose descendants were one day to reign over the three kingdoms of Great Britain.¹³⁷

But to secure the independence of the new Scottish royalty, or rather of the young nation whose stormy and poetic history was thus budding under the breath and blessing of Columba, it was necessary to break the link of subjugation or vassalage which bound the Dalriadian colony to the Irish kings. All this time it had remained tributary to the monarchs of the island which it had left nearly a century before to establish itself in Caledonia. To obtain by peaceable means the abolition of this tribute, Columba — who was Irish by heart as well as by birth, yet who at the same time was, like the Dalriadians, his kinsmen, an emigrant in Caledonia, and, like the new king, descended from the monarchs of ¹³⁷ Aïdan married a British wife, a daughter of those Britons who occupied the banks of the Clyde, and were neighbors of the Scots. With them for his allies, he made war vigorously, though unfortunately, as will be afterwards seen, upon the Anglo-Saxons. He survived Columba, and died in 606, after a reign of thirty-two years. His direct descendants reigned up to 689. They were then replaced by the house of Lorn, another branch of the first Dalriadian colony, whose most illustrious prince, Kenneth Macalpine, reduced the Picts to recognize him as their king in 842. The famous Macbeth and his conqueror Malcolm Canmore, the husband of St. Margaret, were both descended from Aïdan, or of the lineage of Fergus. The male line of these Scottish kings of Celtic race ended only with Alexander III. in 1283. The dynasties of Bruce and Stuart were of the female line. According to local and domestic traditions, the great modern clans of Macquarie, Mackinnon, Mackenzie, Mackintosh, MacGregor, Maclean, Macnab, and Macnaughten are descended from the primitive Dalriadians.

Ireland—must have seemed the mediator indicated by nature. He accepted the mission, and returned to Ireland, which he had thought never to see again, in company with the king whom he had just crowned, to endeavor to come to an agreement with the Irish monarch and the other princes and chiefs assembled at Drumkeath. His impartiality was above all suspicion; for the very day of the coronation of Aïdan he had announced to him, in the name of God, that the prosperity of the new Scotie kingdom depended upon peace with Ireland, its cradle. In the midst of the ceremony he had said aloud to the king whom he had crowned, “Charge your sons, and let them charge their grandchildren, never to expose their kingdom to be lost by their fault. The moment that they attempt any fraudulent enterprise against my spiritual descendants here, or against my countrymen and kindred in Ireland, the hand of God will weigh heavily upon them, the heart of men will be raised against them, and the victory of their enemies will be assured.”¹³⁸

The king of Ireland, Diarmid, who was, like Columba, of the race of Niall, but of the Nialls of the North, and whom our saint had so violently resisted, had died immediately after the voluntary exile of Columba. He perished, as has been mentioned, by the hand of a prince called Black Aedh, chief of the Antrim Dalriadians, who remained in Ireland when a part of their clan emigrated to Scotland. Some time afterwards the supreme throne of Ireland fell to another Aedh, of the southern branch of the race of Niall, and consequently of the same stock as Columba.¹³⁹ He was also the

¹³⁸ “Inter ordinationis verba . . . prophetare cœpit dicens: Tu filiis commenda ut et ipsi filiis et nepotibus et posteris suis commendent ne per consilia mala eorum sceptrum regni hujus de manibus suis perdant. . . . In me et in posteris meos . . . aut adversus cognatos meos qui sunt in Hibernia.” — ADAMN., iii. 5. Colgan, in remarking this passage in his preface, cannot refrain from returning sadly upon the atrocities committed in Ireland by the Scots and Britons of his time, under the last descendants of the Dalriadian dynasty, James I. and Charles I. “Unde moderni Scoto-Britanni, qui cognatos sancti Columbæ in Hibernia nostris diebus ferro et flamma infestant, e suis sedibus pellunt et in ore crudelis gladii mactant, debent prædictam vindictam ore veridico Dei prophetæ prædictam formidare, si inter posteros Aidani regis velint numerari; si non, certe non minus metuenda sunt illa sacri eloquii oracula, quibus dicitur: Qui gladio perimit, gladio peribit.” — Trias Thaum., p. 320.

¹³⁹ The poet-historian, Thomas Moore, by a singular confusion, looks upon Aedh the Black, the murderer of King Diarmid, and Aedh, son of Aímnire, the king of the Drumkeath parliament, as the same person. — History of Ireland, pp. 254, 263, Paris edition. I spare the reader all the other Aedhs or Aïdus, who are to be found mixed up with the history of the age of Columba in the inextricable Irish genealogies. My learned friend, M. Foisset, friend and benefactor of his emigrant cousin, to whom he had given before his exile the site of Derry,¹⁴⁰ the most important of his Irish foundations. The first synod or parliament of Aedh's reign had been convoked in a place called Drumceitt,¹⁴¹ the Whale's Back, situated in his special patrimony, not far from the sea and the gulf of Lough Foyle, where Columba had embarked, and at the further end of which was his dear monastery of Derry. It was there that he returned with his royal client, the new king of the Caledonian Scots, whose confessor, or, as the Irish termed it, friend of his soul, he had become.¹⁴² The two kings, Aedh and Aïdan, presided at this assembly, which sat for fourteen months, and the recollection of which has been preserved among the Irish people, the most faithful nation in the world, for more than a thousand years.

Aedh, king of Ireland, and Aïdan, king of the Irish in Scotland, at the synod of Drumkeath.

The Irish lords and clergy encamped under tents like soldiers during the entire duration of this parliament.¹⁴³ The most important question discussed among them was no doubt that of the tribute exacted from the king of the Dalriadians. It does not appear that the Irish king demanded tribute on account of the new kingdom founded by his ancient subjects, but rather on account of that part of Ireland itself, at present the county of Antrim, from whence the Dalriadian colonists had gone, and which was the hereditary patrimony of their new king.¹⁴⁴ This was precisely the position in which the Norman princes, who had become kings of England, while like a zealous Burgundian as he is, has pointed out to me the resemblance between the name of Aedh, which occurs so often among the Irish princes and kings, and that of the Ædui, the first inhabitants of Burgundy. He thinks, with reason, that the Celts of Gaul, conquered by Cæsar, had also lived, like their brethren in Ireland and Scotland, in clans, and is persuaded that the Ædui of Bibracte signified originally the clan of the sons of Aedh.

¹⁴⁰ LYNCH'S Cambrensis Eversus, vol. ii. c. 9, p. 16.

¹⁴¹ Dorsum Cetæ in Latin, Drum Ceitt or Ceat in Irish, at present called Drumkeath, near Newtown Limavaddy, in the county of Londonderry.

¹⁴² Irish MS. quoted by Reeves, p. lxxvi. note 4.

¹⁴³ "Condictum regum."—ADAMNAN. "Collectis totius regni optimatibus, universoque clero . . . ad instar militum per papiliones et tentoria turmatim dispersi."—O'DONNELL, book iii. c. 2, 5. "Hiberniæ proceribus Drum-Keathian ad leges condendas cocuntibus et quatuordecim mensibus illic hærentibus."—LYNCH, c. 9. Colgan, who lived in 1645, narrates that the site of the assembly then was still frequented by numerous pilgrims, and that a procession was formerly celebrated there on the day of All-Saints: "cum summo omnium vicinarum partium accursu."—Acta Sanctorum Hiberniæ, vol. i. p. 204. The site is still to be seen upon an elevation at Roe Park, near Newtown Limavaddy. —REEVES, p. 37.

¹⁴⁴ MOORE'S History of Ireland, vol. i. c. 12, p. 256.

still dukes of Normandy, found themselves, five centuries later, in respect to the kings of France. Columba, the friend of both kings, was commissioned to solve the difficulty. According to some Irish authors, the Abbot of Iona, when the decisive moment arrived, refused to decide, and transferred to another monk, St. Colman, the responsibility of pronouncing the judgment. At all events, the Irish king renounced all suzerainty over the king of the Dalriadians of Albania, as Scotland was then called. Independence and freedom from all tribute were granted to the Albanian Scots, who, on their side, promised perpetual alliance and hospitality to their Irish countrymen.¹⁴⁵

Columba had another cause to plead at the parliament of Drumceitt, which was almost as dear to his heart as the independence of the Scotie kingdom and colony of which he was the spiritual head. The question in this case was nothing less than that of the existence of a corporation as powerful as, and more ancient and national than, the clergy itself: it concerned the bards, who were at once poets and genealogists, historians and musicians, and whose high position and popular ascendancy form one of the most characteristic features of Irish history. The entire nation, always enamoured of its traditions, its fabulous antiquity, and local and domestic glory, surrounded with ardent and respectful sympathy the men who could clothe in a poetic dress all the lore and superstitions of the past, as well as the passions and interests of the present. In the annals of Ireland, as far back as they can be traced, the bards or ollambh, who were regarded as oracles of knowledge, of poetry, history, and music, are always to be found. They were trained from their infancy with the greatest care in special communities, and so greatly honored that the first place at the royal table, after that of the king himself, was reserved for them.¹⁴⁶ Since the introduction of Christianity, the bards, like the Druids of earlier times, whose successors they are supposed to have been, continued to form a powerful and popular band. They were then divided into three orders: the Filcas, who sang of religion and of war; the Brehons, whose name is associated with the ancient laws of the country, which they versified and recited;¹⁴⁷ the Seanachies, who en-

The independence of the new kingdom recognized by the intervention of Columba.

He interposes in favor of the bards.

Power and excesses of this corporation.

¹⁴⁵ REEVES, pp. lxxvi. and 92.

¹⁴⁶ EUGENE O'CURRY'S Lectures on the MS. Materials of Irish History. Dublin, 1861.

¹⁴⁷ The code known under the name of Laws of the Brehons continued to shrined in verse the national history and antiquities, and, above all, the genealogies and prerogatives of the ancient families who were specially dear to the national and warlike passions of the Irish people. They carried this guardianship of historical recollections and relics so far as to watch over the boundaries of each province and family domain.¹⁴⁸ They took part, like the clergy, in all the assemblies, and with still greater reason in all the fights. They were overwhelmed with favors and privileges by the kings and petty princes, on whom their songs and their harp could alone bestow a place in history, or even a good name among their contemporaries. But naturally this great power had produced many abuses, and at the moment of which we speak, the popularity of the bards had suffered an eclipse. A violent opposition had been raised against them. Their great number, their insolence, their insatiable greed, had all been made subjects of reproach; and, above all, they were censured for having made traffic and a trade of their poetry — of lavishing praises upon the nobles and princes who were liberal to them, and making others the subject of satirical invectives, which the charm of their verse spread but too readily, to the great injury of the honor of families. The enmities raised against them had come to such a point, that King Aedh felt himself in sufficient force to propose to the assembly of Drumceitt the radical abolition of this dangerous order, and the banishment, and even outlawry, if not, as some say, the massacre of all the bards.

Whom
King Aedh
proposes to proscribe.

It is not apparent that the clergy took any part whatever in this persecution of a body which they might well have regarded as their rivals. The introduction of Christianity into the country of Ossian, under St. Patrick, seems scarcely, if at all, to have affected the position of the bards. They became Christians without either inflicting or suffering any violence, and they were in general the auxiliaries and friends of the bishops, monks, and saints. Each monastery, like each prince and lord, possessed a bard, whose office it was to sing regulate the civil life of the Irish even under the English conquest; it was only abolished under James I. at the beginning of the seventeenth century; it had lasted, according to the most moderate calculations, since the time of King Cormac, in 266 — that is to say, fourteen centuries.

¹⁴⁸ "Rei antiquariæ professores et poetas . . . quos tempore gentilismi Druidas, Vates, et Bardos . . . vocabant. . . . His ex officio incumberebat . . . familiarum nobilium et prærogativas studiose observare; regionum agrorumque metas ac limites notare ac distinguere." — O'DONNELL, book iii. c. 2 and 7.

the glory, and often to write the annals, of the community.¹⁴⁹ Notwithstanding, it is apparent, through many of the legends of the period, that the bards represented a pagan power, in the eyes of many ecclesiastical writers, and that they were willingly identified with those Druids or Magi who had been the principal enemies of the evangelical mission of Patrick in Ireland and of Columba in Scotland.¹⁵⁰ Even in the legend of Columba¹⁵¹ it is noted that some among them had determined to make him pay for his ransom according to their custom, and had for this end addressed to him importunate solicitations, threatening, if he refused, to abuse him in their verse.

Notwithstanding, it was Columba who saved them. He who was born a poet and remained a poet to the last day of his life, interceded for them, and gained their cause. His success was not without difficulty, for King Aedh was eager in their pursuit; but Columba, as stubborn as bold, made head against all. He represented that care must be taken not to pull up the good corn with the tares; that the general exile of the poets would be the death of a venerable antiquity and of that poetry which was so dear to the country and so useful to those who knew how to employ it.¹⁵² The ripe corn must not be burned, he said, because of the weeds that mingle with it. The king and the assembly yielded at length, under condition that the number of bards should be henceforward limited, and that their profession should be put under certain rules determined by Columba himself. It was his eloquence alone which turned aside the blow by which they were threatened; and knowing themselves to be saved by him, they showed their gratitude by exalting his glory in their songs and by leaving to their successors the charge of continuing his praise.¹⁵³

The good grain must not be burned with the weeds.

¹⁴⁹ HERSART DE LA VILLEMARQUÉ, La Poésie des Cloîtres Celtiques, Correspondant du 25 Novembre, 1863.

¹⁵⁰ "Poetæ impudentes," says the legend of St. Colman, BOLL. Act. SS. Junii, vol. ii. p. 27.

¹⁵¹ "Cum aliquot vernaculæ seu Hibernicæ poeseos professores, quos bardos vocant, cum nihil tum ad manum habentem, non importune tantum, sed improbe divexassent, nescio quod donativum ab eo sub interminatione invec-tivi poematis contententes." — O'DONNELL, book i. c. 57.

¹⁵² "Ne inter Antiquariorum vitia extirpanda, simul et interiret venerandæ antiquitatis studium. . . . Artem regno et recte usuris valde proficuum." — O'DONNELL.

¹⁵³ All the authorities of Irish history, printed or in manuscript, confirm this tradition (see REEVES, p. 79, and MOORE, p. 257). Adamnan alone

Columba himself had a profound pleasure in this poetical popularity. The corporation of bards had a chief, Dallan Fergall, who was blind, and whose violent death (he was murdered by pirates) has given him a place among the holy martyrs, of whom there are so few in Ireland. Immediately after the favorable decision of the assembly, Dallan composed a song in honor of Columba, and came to sing it before him. At the flattering sounds of this song of gratitude the Abbot of Iona could not defend himself from a human sentiment of self-satisfaction. But he was immediately reproved by one of his monks, Baithen, one of his twelve original companions in exile, and who was destined to be his successor. This faithful friend was not afraid to accuse Columba of pride, nor to tell him that he saw a sombre cloud of demons flying and playing round his head. Columba profited by the warning. He imposed silence upon Dallan,¹⁵⁴ reminding him that it was only the dead who should be praised, and absolutely forbade him to repeat his song.¹⁵⁵ Dallan obeyed reluctantly, and awaited the death of the saint to make known his poem, which became celebrated in Irish literature under the name of Ambhra, or the Praise of St. Columbcille. It was still sung a century after his death throughout all Ireland and Scotland, and even the least devout of men repeated it with tenderness and fervor, as a safeguard against the dangers of war and every other accident.¹⁵⁶ It even Song of gratitude from the bards in honor of their savior.

Superstitious devotion with which this song was regarded.

says nothing of it; but he speaks of numerous songs in the Scotie language in honor of Columba, which circulated everywhere in Scotland and in Ireland.

¹⁵⁴ "Composuit patrio sermone rhythmum illum . . . qui in scholis Antiquariorum publice perlegi et scholiis ac commentariis exponi consuevit." — O'DONNELL, book i. c. 6. This poem, which has been the subject of innumerable commentaries, still exists in MS., and is to be published with all the Liber Hymnorum by Dr. Todd. Colgan possessed a copy which seemed to him almost unintelligible: "Est penes me exemplar hujus operis egregie scriptum, sed seclusis fuis, quos habet annexos, commentariis, hodie paucis, iisque peritissimis, penetrabile." — Ubi supra.

¹⁵⁵ Vita Sancti Dallani Martyris, ap. COLGAN, Acta Sanctorum Hiberniæ, p. 204.

¹⁵⁶ "Ejusdem beati viri per quædam Scoticæ linguæ laudum ipsius carmina, et nominis commemorationem, quidam, quamlibet sceleratis laicæ conversationis homines et sanguinarii, ea nocte qua eadem decantaverant cantica, de manibus inimicorum qui eandem eorumdem cantorum domum circumsteterant, sunt liberati. . . . Pauci ex ipsis, qui eandem sancti viri commemorationes, quasi parvi pendentes, canere noluerant decantationes . . . soli disperierunt. Hujus miraculi testes . . . centeni et amplius. Hoc idem ut contigisse probatur non in uno loco aut tempore, sed diversis locis et temporibus in Scotia et Britannia, simili tamen modo et causa liberationis factum fuisse. Ilæc ab expertis uniuscujusque regionis, ubicumque res came to be believed that every one who knew this Ambhra by heart and sang it piously would die a good death. But when the unenlightened people came so far as to believe that even great sinners, without either conversion or penitence, had only to sing the Ambhra of Columbcille every day in order to be saved, a wonder happened, says the historian and grand-nephew of the saint, which opened the eyes of the faithful, by showing to them how they ought to understand the privileges accorded by God to his saints. An ecclesiastic of the metropolitan church of Armagh, who was a man of corrupt life, and desired to be saved without making any change in his conduct, succeeded in learning the half of the famous Ambhra, but never could remember the other half. It was in vain that he made a pilgrimage to the tomb of the saint, fasted, prayed, and spent the entire night in efforts to impress it upon his memory — the next morning he found that, though he had at length succeeded in learning the latter half, he had completely forgotten the first.¹⁵⁷

The gratitude of the bards to him who had preserved them from exile and outlawry, has certainly had some share in the wonderful and lasting popularity of Columba's name. Shrined in the national and religious poetry of the two islands, his fame has not only lasted in full brilliancy in Ireland, but it has survived even the Reformation — which has destroyed almost all other traces of their past history as Christians — in the memory of the Celts of Scotland.

On the other hand, the protection of Columba certainly confirmed the popularity of the bards in the heart of the Irish nation. All opposition between the religious spirit and the bardic influence disappeared from his time. Music and poetry after that period identified themselves more and more with ecclesiastical life. Among the relics of the saints the harps on which they had played found a place. At the first English conquest, the bishops and abbots excited the surprise of the invaders by their love of music, and by accompanying themselves on the harp.¹⁵⁸ Irish poetry, which was in the days

Intimate
connection of poetry and music with religion in Ireland.

eadem simili contigit miraculo, indubitanter didicimus." — ADAMNAN, i. 1. Let us add that the disciples of Columba continued to cultivate music and poetry after his death. A modern poet, James Hogg, has written some English verses, in themselves insignificant, to an old air which had been sung by the monks of Iona. — WHITELAW, The Book of Scottish Song. Glasgow, 1857.

¹⁵⁷ VICOMTE DE LA VILLEMARQUÉ, Poésie des Cloîtres Celtiques, after COLGAN and O'DONNELL, ubi supra.

¹⁵⁸ "Hinc accidit ut episcopi et abbates et sancti in Hibernia viri citharas of Patrick and Columba so powerful and so popular, has long undergone in the country of Ossian the same fate as the religion of which these great saints were the apostles. Rooted like it in the heart of a conquered people, and like it proscribed and persecuted with unwearied vehemence, it has come ever forth anew from the bloody furrow in which it was supposed to be buried. The bards became the most powerful allies of patriotism, the most dauntless prophets of national independence, and also the favorite victims of the cruelty of spoilers and conquerors. They made music and poetry weapons and bulwarks against foreign oppression, and the oppressors used them as they had used the priests and the nobles. A price was set upon their heads. But while the last scions of the royal and noble races, decimated or ruined in Ireland, departed, to die out under a foreign sky amid the miseries of exile, the successor of the bards, the minstrel, whom nothing could tear from his native soil, was pursued, tracked, and taken like a wild beast, or chained and slaughtered like the most dangerous of rebels.

In the annals of the atrocious legislation directed by the English against the Irish people, as well before¹⁵⁹ as after the Reformation, special penalties against the minstrels, bards, rhymers, and genealogists, who sustained the lords and gentlemen in their love of rebellion and of other crimes,¹⁶⁰ are to be met at every step. An attempt was made, under the sanguinary Elizabeth, to give pecuniary recompense to those who would celebrate "her Majesty's most worthy praise." The bargain was accepted by none. All preferred flight or death to this salary of lies. Wandering over hill and dale, hidden in the depths of the devastated country, they perpetuated there the poetic traditions of their condemned race, and sang the glory of ancient heroes and new martyrs, the shame of apostates, and the crimes of the sacrilegious stranger.

In order the better to brave tyranny in the midst of a subdued and silent people, they had recourse to allegory and the elegies of love. Under the figure of an enslaved queen — or circumferre et in iis modulando pie delectari consueverint. . . . Sancti Kevini cithara ab indigenis in reverentia non modica et pro reliquiis virtuosus et magnis usque hodie habetur." — GIRALDUS, Cambriæ Descriptio, c. 12.

The bards, transformed into minstrels, are the chief champions of national independence and the Catholic faith.

¹⁵⁹ For instance, at the parliament of Kilkenny under Edward I.

¹⁶⁰ These are the words of an act of the time of Elizabeth, quoted by Moore, p. 257.

of a woman loved with an everlasting love and fought for with despairing faithfulness, in face of the jealous fury of a step-mother — they celebrated again and again the Irish Fatherland, the country in mourning and tears, once queen and now a slave.¹⁶¹ The Irish, says a great historian of our own day, loved to make of their country a real being whom they loved, and who loved them. They loved to address her without naming her name, and to identify the austere and perilous devotion which they had vowed to her with all that is sweetest and most fortunate in the affections of the heart, like those Spartans who crowned themselves with flowers when about to perish at Thermopylæ.¹⁶²

Proscribed
with vehemence.

Up to the time of the ungrateful Stuarts, this proscription of the national poets was permanent, increasing in force with every change of reign and every new parliament. The rage of the Cromwellian Protestants carried them so far as to break, wherever they met with them, the minstrel's harps¹⁶³ which were still to be found in the miserable cottages of the starving Irish, as they were eleven centuries before, at the time when the courageous and charitable Bridget saw them suspended on the wall of the king's palace.¹⁶⁴ Nevertheless the harp has remained the emblem of Ireland even in the official arms of the British empire; and during all last century the travelling harper, last and pitiful successor of the bards protected by Columba, was always to be found at the side of the priest to celebrate

They nevertheless lasted up to our own day.

the holy mysteries of the proscribed worship. He never ceased to be received with tender respect under the thatched roof of the poor Irish peasant, whom he consoled in his misery and oppression by the plaintive tenderness and solemn sweetness of the music of his fathers.

The continuance of these distinctive features of Irish char-

¹⁶¹ "Erin of the sorrows, once a queen, now a slave."

¹⁶² AUGUSTIN THIERRY, Dix Ans d'Etudes Historiques.

¹⁶³ "Efferati quidem excursores in obvias quasque lyras earum proscissione multis in locis immaniter sæviant." — LYNCH, Cambrensis Eversus, book i. c. 4, p. 316. This author, who wrote in 1662, feels himself obliged to give a detailed description of the harp, lest the instrument should disappear in the general ruin of Ireland. "Quare operæ me pretium facturum existimo, si lyræ formam lectori ob oculos ponam, ne illius memoris gentis excidio . . . innexa oblitteretur." Charles II., as soon as he was established on the throne, permitted the passing of an act of Parliament "against the vagabond minstrels, to repress their rhymes and scandalous songs."

¹⁶⁴ "Et vidit citharas in domo regis, et dixit: Citharizate nobis citharis vestris." — Tertia Vita Sanctæ Brigitæ, c. 75, p. 536, ap. COLGAN.

acter through so many centuries is so striking, and the misfortunes of that noble race touch us so nearly, that it is difficult to resist the temptation of leaving behind us those distant ages, and of following through later generations the melancholy relics of all that has been discovered or admired in the most ancient days. We may be pardoned for adding that, if the text of those poetic and generously obstinate protests against the enslavement of Ireland have perished, the life and spirit of them has survived in the pure and penetrating beauty of the ancient Irish airs. Their harmonies and their refrains, which are inimitably natural, original, and pathetic, move the depths of the soul, and send a thrill through all the fibres of human sensibility. Thomas Moore, in adapting to them words which are marked with the impression of a passionate fidelity to the proscribed faith and oppressed country, has given to the Irish Melodies a popularity which was not the least powerful among those pleas which determined the great contest of Catholic Emancipation.

The genius of Celtic poetry has, however, survived not only in Ireland, in the country of Columba and of Moore, but has found a refuge in the glens of the Scottish Highlands, among those vast moors and rugged mountains, and beside the deep and narrow lakes, which Columba, bearing the light of the faith to the Caledonian Picts, had so often traversed. In those districts where, as in a great part of Ireland, the Erse or Gaelic language is still spoken, the Celtic muse, always sad and always attached to the cause of the people, has been found in recent times, at the most prosaic moment of modern civilization, in the eighteenth century itself, inspiring the warlike songs and laments which the Highlanders have consecrated to the conquered Pretender and his followers slain. And if we may believe a competent and impartial judge,¹⁶⁵ the last effusions of the soul of the Gaelic race surpass, in plaintive beauty and in passionate feeling, even those delicious Anglo-Scottish songs which no traveller can hear without emotion, and which have assured the palm, at least of poetry, to the cause of the Stuarts, which has been so sadly represented by its princes, and so ill served by events, but which the popular and national muse has thus avenged, even for the irremediable defeat of Culloden.

The Celtic muse at the service of the vanquished in Scotland as in Ireland.

¹⁶⁵ CHARLES MACKAY, The Jacobite Songs and Ballads of Scotland from 1688 to 1746, Introduction, p. 18.

CHAPTER V.

COLUMBA'S RELATIONS WITH IRELAND — CONTINUED.

Cordial intercourse of Columba with the Irish princes.— Prophecy upon the future of their sons.— Domnall, the king's son, obtains the privilege of dying in his bed.— Columba visits the Irish monasteries.— Popular enthusiasm.— Vocation of the young idiot afterwards known as St. Ernan.— Solicitude of Columba for the distant monasteries and monks.— He protects them from excessive labors and accidents.— He exercises authority over laymen.— Baithen, his cousin-german and principal assistant.— The respect shown to both in an assembly of learned men.

Cordial intercourse between Columba
and the Irish
princes.

IN the national parliament of Drumceitt which saved the bards, and where all the ecclesiastical chiefs of the Irish nation, along with their princes and provincial kings, were assembled, Columba, already invested by his apostolical labors with great power and authority, found himself surrounded by public homage, and tokens of universal confidence. To all the kings, whose kinsman and friend he was, he preached peace, concord, the pardon of affronts, and the recall of exiles, many of whom had found shelter in the island monastery which owed its existence to his own exile.¹⁶⁶ Nevertheless, it was not without trouble that he obtained from the supreme monarch the freedom of a young prince, named Scandlan, son of the chief of Ossory, whom Aedh detained in prison, in contempt of his sworn faith, and of an agreement to which Columba himself had been a witness. The noble abbot went to the prisoner in his dungeon, blessed him, and predicted to him that he should be twice exiled, but that he should survive his oppressor, and reign for thirty years in his paternal domain. The king yielded on this point, but with a bad grace; he feared the influence of the illustrious exile, and had seen him return to Ireland with dissatisfaction. His eldest son had publicly ridiculed the monks of Iona, and had thus drawn upon himself the curse of Columba, which brought misfortune, for he was afterwards dethroned and assassinated. But the king's second son Domnall, who was still young, took openly the part of the Abbot of Iona, who predicted for him not only a long and glorious

Prophecies
of the future.

reign, but the rare privilege of dying in his bed, on the condition of receiving the Holy Communion every eight days, and of keeping at least one in seven of his promises¹⁶⁷ — a somewhat satirical limit, which betrays either the old contradictory spirit of the converted Niall, or the recollection of his own legitimate resentment against certain princes. His prophecy, extremely improbable as it was, in a country where all the princes perished on the battle-field or by a violent death, was nevertheless fulfilled. Domnall, who was the third successor of his father, following after two other kings who were destroyed by their enemies, had a long and prosperous reign; he gained numerous victories, marching to battle under a banner blessed by St. Columba, and died, after an illness of eighteen months, in his bed, or, as Columba specified, with a precision which marks the rareness of the occurrence, on his down-bed.¹⁶⁸ His father, although reconciled to Columba, did not escape the common law. The great abbot bestowed upon him his monastic cowl, promising that it should always be to him as an impenetrable cuirass. After this, he never went into battle without putting on his friend's cowl above his armor. But one day when he had forgotten it, he was killed in a combat with the King of Lagenia or Leinster.¹⁶⁹ Columba had previously warned him against waging war with the people of Leinster, which was the country of his mother, and which he loved with that impassioned clan or family affection which is so distinctive a feature in his character. The Lagenians had not lost the opportunity of working upon this sentiment; for one day, when he was at his Abbey of Durrow, upon their boundary, a numerous assembly of all ages, from children to old men, came to him, and, surrounding him, pleaded with such animation their kindred with his mother, that they obtained from him the promise, or prophecy, that no king should ever be able to overcome them, so long as they fought for a just cause.¹⁷⁰

There is no doubt that, after the assembly of Drumceitt, Columba made many journeys to Ireland. The direction of the various monasteries which he had founded there before his voluntary exile, and

He visits his Irish monasteries.

¹⁶⁷ Irish MS. quoted by Reeves, p. 38.

¹⁶⁸ "Super plumatiunculam." — ADAMNAN, i. 15. Compare c. 10.

¹⁶⁹ LYNCH, Cambrensis Eversus, with Kelly's notes, 17, 19. — O'DONNELL, book i. c. 60.

¹⁷⁰ "Id prolixæ afflictæque allegata cognatione flagitantes." — O'DONNELL, loc. cit. Compare REEVES, p. 221.

of which he had kept the government in his own hands, must have led him often back ; but after that assembly, his visits were always made notable by miracles of healing, prophecy, or revelation, and still more by the tender solicitude of his paternal heart. Sometimes, towards the decline of his life, while traversing a hilly or marshy country, he travelled in a car, as St. Patrick had done ; but the care with which his biographers note this fact, proves that formerly the greater part of his journeys had been made on foot.¹⁷¹ He did not limit himself to communities of which he was the superior or founder ; he loved to visit other monastic sanctuaries also, such as that of Clonmacnoise, whose importance has already been pointed out.¹⁷² And on such occasions the crowding and eagerness of the monks to pay their homage to the holy and beloved old man was redoubled ; they left their outdoor work, and, crossing the earthen intrenchment, which like the vallum of Roman camps, enclosed the Celtic monasteries, came to meet him, chanting hymns. When they came up to him, they prostrated themselves on the ground at his feet, ere they embraced him ; and in order to shelter him from the crowd during the solemn processions which were made in his honor, a rampart of branches was carried like a dais by four men, who surrounded him, treading with equal steps.¹⁷³ An ancient author even goes so far as to say, that on the occasion of his return and prolonged stay in his native country, he was invested with a sort of general supremacy over all the religious of Ireland, both monks and nuns.¹⁷⁴

Vocation of the idiot afterwards known as
St. Ernan.

During the journey from Durrrow to Clonmacnoise, Columba made a halt at one of his own monasteries, where a poor little scholar, "of thick speech, and still more heavy aspect," whom his superiors employed in the meanest services, glided into the crowd, and stealthily approaching the great abbot, touched the end of his robe behind him, as the Canaanitish woman touched the robe of our Lord. Columba, perceiving it, stopped, ¹⁷¹ "Per loca aspera et inaquosa. . . . Pergunt sic tota die per loca aspera, cœnosa et saxosa."—O'DONNELL, book iii. c. 17. Compare ADAMNAN, ii. 43.

¹⁷² See ante, p. 716.

¹⁷³ "Undique ab agellulis monasterio vicinis . . . congregati . . . egressi . . . vallum monasterii, unanimes pergunt. . . . Quandam de lignis pyramidem erga sanctum deambulantem constringentes . . . ne sanctus senior fratrum multitudinis constipatione molestaretur."—ADAMNAN, i. 3.

¹⁷⁴ Vita S. Farannani Confessoris, 15th February, c. 3, in COLGAN, Acta SS. Hiberniæ, p. 377. This author, who wrote only in the thirteenth century, cannot be considered of great authority.

turned round, and, taking the child by the neck, kissed him. "Away, away, little fool!" cried all the spectators. "Patience, my brethren," said Columba: then turning to the boy, who trembled with fear, "My son," he said, "open thy mouth and show me thy tongue." The child obeyed, with increasing timidity. The abbot made the sign of the cross upon his tongue, and added, "This child, who appears to you so contemptible, let no one henceforward despise him. He shall grow every day in wisdom and virtue; he shall be reckoned with the greatest among you; God will give to this tongue, which I have just blessed, the gift of eloquence and true doctrine."¹⁷⁵ The boy grew to manhood, and became celebrated in the churches of Scotland and Ireland, where he was venerated under the name of St. Ernan. He himself told this prophecy, so well justified by the event, to a contemporary of Adamnan, who has preserved all the details for us.

These journeys, however, were not necessary to prove Columba's solicitude for the monks who filled his monasteries. He showed the same care when distant as when at hand, by the help of that miraculous foresight which came to the assistance of his paternal anxiety in all their spiritual and temporal necessities. One day, after his return from Ireland, he was heard to stop suddenly short in the correspondence or transcription in which he had been engaged in his little cell in Iona, and cry with all his strength, "Help, help!" This cry was addressed to the guardian angel of the community, and the appeal was made on behalf of a man who had fallen from the top of the round tower which was then being built at Durrow, in the centre of Ireland — so great was his confidence in what he himself called the indescribable and lightning speed of the flight of angels; and greater still was his trust in their protection.¹⁷⁶ Another time, at Iona, in a day of chilly fog, such as occurs often in that sombre climate, he was suddenly seen to burst into tears. When asked the reason of his distress, he answered, "Dear son, it is not without reason that I weep. At this very hour I see my dear monks of Durrow condemned by their abbot to exhaust themselves in this dreary weather building the great round tower of the monastery, and the sight overwhelms me." The same day, and at the same hour, as was afterwards ascertained, Laisran, the abbot of Durrow, felt within himself something like an internal flame, which reawakened in his heart a sentiment of pity for his monks. He immediately commanded them to leave their work, to warm themselves, and take some food, and even forbade them to resume their building until the weather had improved. This same Laisran afterwards came to deserve the name of Consoler of the Monks, so much had he been imbued by Columba with that supernatural charity which, in monastic life, as in every other Christian existence, is at once a light and a flame, ardens et lucens.¹⁷⁷

Tender care of Columba for his distant monks and monasteries.

¹⁷⁵ "Valde despectus vultu et habitu . . . cervicem pueri tenet, ipsunque trahens ante faciem suam statuit. Omnibus dicentibus. . . . Dimitte, dimitte, quare hunc infelicem et injuriosum retines puerum. . . . Sinite, fratres, hunc. . . . O fili, aperi os et porrige linguam . . . cum ingenti tremore. . . . In hac vestra congregatione grandis est futurus et lingua ejus salubri et doctrina et eloquentia a Deo donabitur. Hic erat eminens . . . postea per omnes Scotiæ ecclesias famosus et valde notissimus: qui hæc omnia supra scripta verba Segineo abbati de se prophetata enarravit, meo decessore Failbeo intentius audiente . . . cujus revelatione et ego ipse cognovi hæc eandem quæ enarravi." — ADAMNAN, i. 3. St. Ernan died in 635. M. de la Ville-marqué has cited this incident in his Légende Celtique, as a type of the initiation of the children of barbarians into intellectual life by means of the monasteries.

Authority
of Columba
over the laymen.

Columba not only retained his superior jurisdiction over the monasteries which he had founded in Ireland, or which had been admitted to the privileges of his foundations, but he also exercised a spiritual authority, which it is difficult to explain, over various laymen of his native island. On one occasion, he is known to have sent his cousin, friend, and principal disciple to the centre of Ireland, to Drum-Cuill, to pronounce sentence of excommunication against a certain family, whose crime, however, is not specified. This disciple was Baithen, whom we have seen to be one of Columba's companions from the moment of his exile, and who warned his superior against the fumes of pride, at the time when the bards began to express their enthusiastic gratitude. The gentle Baithen, when he had arrived at the appointed place, after having passed the whole night in prayer under an oak, said to his companions, "No, I will not excommunicate this family before making sure that it will not repent. I give it a year's respite, and during the year the fate of this tree shall be a warning to it." Some time after the tree was struck by lightning; but we are not informed if the family thus warned was brought to repentance.

¹⁷⁶ "In tuguriolo suo scribens. . . . Auxiliare, auxiliare. . . . Duo fratres ad januam sancti . . . causam talis subte vocis interrogant. . . . Angelo qui nunc inter vos stabat, jussi. . . . Valde mirabilis et pene indicibilis est angelici violatus pernicitas, fulgure ut aestimo, celeritati paritas." — ADAMNAN, iii. 15.

¹⁷⁷ "Quanta animi teneritudine . . . et quam mirabili divinitus infusæ scientiæ dono . . . non secus ac si oculis præsentibus essent, intuebatur." — O'DONNELL, ii. 65. "Quadam brumali et valde frigida die, magno molestatus morore, fleuit. . . . Non immerito, filiule, ego hac in hora contristor, meos videns monachos quos Laisrannus nunc gravi fatigatos labore in alicujus majoris domus fabrica molestat . . . eodem momento horæ Laisrannus . . . quasi quadam pyra intrinsecus succensus." — ADAMNAN, i. 29. Compare book iii. c. 15 for a similar incident relating to the same Monastery of Durrow and its round tower. Abbot Laisran was a near relative of Columba, and became his third successor at Iona.

Baithen was a man of tender soul, of whom we would fain speak at greater length, if it were not needful to circumscribe the wide and confused records of Celtic hagiography. Columba compared him to St. John the Evangelist; he said that his beloved disciple resembled him who was the beloved disciple of Christ, by his exquisite purity, his penetrating simplicity, and his love of perfection.¹⁷⁸ And Columba was not alone in doing justice to the man who, after having been his chief lieutenant in his work, was to become his first successor. One day in an assembly of learned monks, probably held in Ireland, Fintan, a very learned and very wise man,¹⁷⁹ and also one of the twelve companions of Columba's exile, was questioned upon the qualities of Baithen. "Know," he answered, "that there is no one on this side of the Alps who is equal to him in knowledge of the Scriptures, and in the greatness of his learning." "What!" said his questioners — "not even his master, Columba?" "I do not compare the disciple with the master," answered Fintan. "Columba is not to be compared with philosophers and learned men, but with patriarchs, prophets, and apostles. The Holy Ghost reigns in him; he has been chosen by God for the good of all. He is a sage among all sages, a king among kings, an anchorite with anchorites, a monk of monks; and in order to bring himself to the level even of laymen, he knows how to be poor of heart among the poor;¹⁸⁰ thanks to the apostolic charity which inspires him, he can rejoice with the joyful, and weep with the unfortunate. And amid all the gifts which God's generosity has lavished on him, the true humility of Christ is so royally rooted in his soul, that it seems to have been born with him." It is added that all the learned hearers assented unanimously to this enthusiastic eulogium.

Baithen, his principal fellow-worker.

Testimony to the character of both from an assembly of learned men.

¹⁷⁸ "Nolo hac vice hanc familiam excommunicare donec sciam an ad pœnitentiam convertatur, an non. . . . Dicebat quod . . . in innocentia sincerissima et in simplicitate prudentissima, et in disciplina rigoris perfectorum operum non dissimiles fuerunt." — ACT. SS. BOLLAND., vol. ii. June, p. 238. Let us add what these Actes relate of his incessant fervor in prayer: "Cum iter aliquod faceret aut alioquin alloqueretur . . . manus suas sub vestimento suo ad orandum Deum menti alacri interim dirigebat. . . . Inter duas particulas ori appositas, simul inter duo sorbitiuncula . . . et quod difficilior est, tempore metendi cum manipulum in terra collectum portaret ad cervicem, alterna brachia ad cælum extendens, Tonantem interpellabat." — Ibid., p. 237.

¹⁷⁹ So much so, that the Bollandists suppose this Fintan, described as filius Lappani in the Acts of St. Baithen, to be the same as the Fintan, filius Aidi, of Adamnan, book ii. c. 32. Compare REEVES, p. 144.

CHAPTER. VI.

COLUMBA THE PROTECTOR OF SAILORS AND AGRICULTURISTS, THE FRIEND OF LAYMEN, AND THE AVENGER OF THE OPPRESSED.

His universal solicitude and charity during all his missionary life. — The sailor-monks: seventy monks of Iona form the crew of the monastic fleet; their boats made of osiers covered with hides. — Their boldness at sea: the whirlpool of Corryvreckan. — Columba's prayer protects them against sea monsters. — Their love of solitude leads them into unknown seas, where they discover St. Kilda, Iceland, and the Farøe Isles. — Cormac in Orkney, and in the icy ocean. — Columba often accompanies them: his voyages among the Hebrides. — The wild boar of Skye. — He subdues tempests by his prayer: he invokes his friend St. Kenneth. — He is himself invoked during life, and after his death, as the arbiter of winds. — Filial complaints of the monks when their prayers are not granted. — The benefits which he conferred on the agricultural population disentangled from the maze of fables: Columba discovers fountains, regulates irrigations and fisheries, shows how to graft fruit trees, obtains early harvests, interferes to stop epidemics, cures diseases, and procures tools for the peasants. — His special solicitude for the monkish laborers: he blesses the milk when it is brought from the cow : his breath refreshes them on their return from harvest. — The blacksmith carried to heaven by his alms. — His relations with the layman whose hospitality he claims : prophecy touching the rich miser who shuts his door upon him. — The five cows of his Lochaber host. — The poacher's spear. — He pacifies and consoles all whom he meets. — His prophetic threats against the felons and reivers. — Punishment inflicted upon the assassin of an exile. — Brigands of royal blood put down by Columba at the risk of his life. — He enters into the sea up to his knees to arrest the pirate who had pillaged his friend. — The standard-bearer of Cæsar and the old missionary.

¹⁸⁰ "Scitote quod nullus ultra Alpes compar illi in cognitione Scripturarum divinarum et in magnitudine scientiæ reperitur. . . . Numquid ille sapientior est quam sanctus Columba nutricius illius? Ille enim non tam sapientibus litteratis, sed patriarchis et prophetis Dei et apostolis magis comparandus est. . . . Vera humilitas Christi robustissime in eo regnat, tanquam a natura ei hæreret. . . . Cum hoc testimonium vir sanctus in medio sapientum proferret. . . . Ille enim sapiens cum sapientibus, rex cum regibus, anachoreta cum anachoretis, et monachus cum monachis . . . et pauper corde cum pauperibus." — ACT. S. BOLLAND., vol. ii. June, p. 238.

DURING all the rest of his life, which was to pass in his island of Iona, or in the neighboring districts of Scotland which had been evangelized by his unwearied zeal, nothing strikes and attracts the historian so much as the generous ardor of Columba's charity. The history of his whole life proves that he was born with a violent and even vindictive temper ; but he had succeeded in subduing and transforming himself to such a point that he was ready to sacrifice all things to the love of his neighbor. It is not merely an apostle or a monastic founder whom we have before us — beyond and beside this it is a friend, a brother, a benefactor of men, a brave and untiring defender of the laborer, the feeble, and the poor : it is a man occupied not only with the salvation but also with the happiness, the rights, and the interests of all his fellow-creatures, and in whom the instinct of pity showed itself in a bold and continual interposition against all oppression and wickedness.

Fatherly solicitude and charity the most marked features of his missionary life.

Without losing the imposing and solemn character which always accompanied his popular fame, he will now be revealed to us under a still more touching aspect, through all the long succession of his apostolic labors, and in the two principal occupations — agriculture and navigation — which gave variety to his missionary life.

For navigation alternated with agriculture in the labors of the cenobites of Iona. The same monks who cultivated the scanty fields of the holy island, and who reaped and threshed the corn, accompanied Columba in his voyages to the neighboring isles, and followed the sailor's trade, then, it would seem, more general than now among the Irish race.¹⁸¹ Communication was then frequent, Maritime life of the monks of Iona.

¹⁸¹ "Lugbeus quadam ad Sanctum die post frugum veniens triturationem. . . Idem simul cum sancto viro ad Caput Regionis (Cantyre) pergens, nauclerum et nautas adventantis barcæ interrogans." — ADAMNAN, i. 28.

not only between Ireland and Great Britain, but between Ireland and Gaul. We have already seen in the port of Nantes an Irish boat ready to carry away the founder of Luxeuil.¹⁸² The Gaulish merchants came to sell or offer their wines as far as to the centre of the island, to the Abbey of Clonmacnoise.¹⁸³ In the life of our saint, seafaring populations,¹⁸⁴ are constantly spoken of as surrounding him, and receiving his continual visits; and exercises and excursions are also mentioned, which associate his disciples with all the incidents of a seafaring life. As a proof of this we quote four lines, in very ancient Irish, which may be thus translated:— “Honor to the soldiers who live at Iona; There are three times fifty under the monastic rule, Seventy of whom are appointed to row,

And cross the sea in their leathern barks.”

Boats of osier covered with hides.

These boats were sometimes hollowed out of the trunks of trees, like those which are still found buried in the bogs or turf-mosses of Ireland; but most generally they were made of osier, and covered with buffalo-skins, like those described by Cæsar.¹⁸⁵ Their size was estimated by the number of skins which had been used to cover them. They were generally small, and those made of one or two skins were portable. The abbot of Iona had one of this description for the inland waters when he travelled beyond the northern hills (dorsum Britannie), which he crossed so often to preach among the Picts.¹⁸⁶ At a later ¹⁸² Vol. i. p. 567. “Navis quæ Scotorum commercia vexerat,” says the biography of St. Columbanus.

¹⁸³ Vita S. Kiarani, c. 31, cited by REEVES, p. 57.

¹⁸⁴ “Nautæ, navigatores, remiges, nautici.”

¹⁸⁵ “Corpus navium viminibus contextum coriis integebatur.” — Bell. Civil., i. 54.

“Primum cana salix, madefacto vimine, parvam Textitur in puppim cæsoque induta juvenco.”

LUCAN, iv.

These boats were called in Celtic Curach, from which comes curruca or currica in monkish Latin. These osier canoes are still in use, under the name of coracle, in the Welsh seaports. They are composed of a light construction of willow lathes, covered either with skin or with tarpaulin. After their day's work the fishers put the coracle to dry, and, taking it on their backs, carry it to their cottage door. This has been seen by M. Alphonse Esquiros at Caermarthen. — Revue des Deux Mondes, 15th February, 1865.

¹⁸⁶ “Mitte te in navim unius pellis. . . . Carabum ex duobus tantum coriis et demidio factum. . . . Nunc, nunc celerius nostram quam ultra rivum naviculam posuistis in domum, huc citius advehite, et in viciniore domuncula ponite.” — ADAMNAN, i. 34.

period the community possessed many of a much larger size, to convey the materials for the reconstruction of the primitive monastery at Iona, and the timber which the sons of Columba cut down and fashioned in the vast oak forests which then covered the whole country, now so sadly deprived of wood. They went like galleys, with sail or oar, and were furnished with masts and rigging like modern boats. The holy island had at last an entire fleet at its disposal, manned and navigated by the monks.¹⁸⁷

In these frail skiffs Columba and his monks ploughed the dangerous and stormy sea which dashes on the coasts of Scotland and Ireland, and penetrated boldly into the numberless gulfs and straits of the sombre Hebridean archipelago. They knew the perils to which their insular existence exposed them; but they braved those dangers without fear, accustomed as they were to live in the midst of storms,¹⁸⁸ upon an isle which the great waves of ocean threatened continually to swallow up. Not less alarming was their position when the winds carried them towards the terrible whirlpool, named after a prince of the Niall family, who had been drowned there, the Caldron of Brechan, and which there was always a risk of being driven upon while crossing from Ireland to Scotland. The winds, when blowing from certain directions,

Their boldness at sea.

The whirlpool of Corry-vreckan.

¹⁸⁷ This passage of Adamnan is very important for the history of the primitive Celtic navigation. "Cum dolatæ per terram pineæ et roboreæ traherentur longæ trabes et magnæ navium pariter et domus materiæ eveherentur. . . . Ea die qua nostri nautæ, omnibus præparatis, supra memoratarum ligna materiarum proponunt scaphis per mare et curucis trahere. . . . Per longas et obligas vias tota die properis flatibus, Deo propitio famulantibus, et plenis sine ulla retardatione velis, ad Ionam insulam omnis illa navalis emigratio prospere evenit."—ii. 45. The words in italics are the text given by the Bollandists (Acta Sanctorum, Junii, vol. ix. p. 275), which seems to us preferable to that of the MS. followed by Dr. Reeves. There is here question of three kinds of boats: naves, scaphæ, and curucæ; and it is evident that there must have been a workshop on the island for the building of the larger vessels, because great logs of wood were carried there destined to be employed in the building of boats as well as for the monastic buildings. In another passage (ADAMNAN, ii. 35), a transport boat, oneraria navis, is spoken of, manned by monks, and laden with osiers, which the abbot Columba had sent for to a neighboring property: "Virgarum fasciculos ad hospitium construendum."

¹⁸⁸ "Die fragosæ tempestatis et intolerabilis undarum magnitudinis. . . . Quis, ait (sanctus), hac die valde ventosa et nimis periculosa, licet breve, fretum prospere transnavigare potest?"—ADAMNAN, i. 4. This recalls the lines of the poet—

"Quid rigor æternus cœli, quid frigora possunt, Ignotumque fretum?"

CLAUDIAN, in Consulat. III. Honor., v. 54.

hollow out in their whirl such terrible abysses about this spot, that even to our own time it has continued the terror of sailors. The holiest of Columba's guests passed it by with trembling, raising their hands towards heaven to implore the miracle which alone could save them.¹⁸⁹ But he himself, who one day was almost swallowed up in it, and whose mind was continually preoccupied by the recollection of his kindred, imagined that he saw in this whirlpool a symbol of the torments endured in purgatory by the soul of his relative who had perished at that spot, and of the duty of praying for the repose of that soul at the same time as he prayed for the safety of the companions of his voyage.¹⁹⁰

Columba's prayers protect them against the sea-monsters.

Columba's prayers, his special and ardently desired blessing, and his constant and passionate intercession for his brethren and disciples, were the grand safeguard of the navigators of Iona, not only against wind and shipwrecks, but against other dangers which have now disappeared from these coasts. Great fishes of the cetaceous order swarmed at that time in the Hebridean sea. The sharks ascended even into the Highland rivers, and one of the companions of Columba, swimming across the Ness, was saved only by the prayer of the saint, at the moment when he was but an oar's length from the odious monster, which had before swallowed one of the natives.¹⁹¹ The entire crew of a boat manned by monks took fright and turned back one day on meeting a whale, or per-

¹⁸⁹ "Nunc in undosis Charybdis Brecani æstibus valde periclitatur, amasque ad cælum, in prora sedens, palmas elevat." — ADAMNAN, i. 5. "Est vorago periculosissima marina, in qua, si qua navis intrat, non evadit." — Vita Sancti Kiarani, apud REEVES, 263. Compare GIRALDUS CAMBRENSIS, Topogr. Hiberniæ, ii. 41. Walter Scott has not omitted this spot in his poetical itinerary —

"I would
That your eye could see the mood Of Corryvreckan's whirlpool rude, When dons the Hag her whitened hood. . . .
And Scarba's isle, whose tortured shore Still rings to Corryvreckan's roar."

It must be remarked that as the name of Scotia has been transferred from Ireland to Scotland, the name of the abyss so feared by the sailors of Iona has also been transferred to the whirlpool which tourists see in the distance between the isles of Scarba and Iona, in the much-frequented route from Oban to Glasgow.

¹⁹⁰ "Illa sunt ossa Brecani cognati nostri, quæ voluit Christus ita nobis ostendi, ut pro defuncti refrigerio, ac pro nostro a præsentis periculo liberationem simul apud Dominum intercedamus." — O'DONNELL, ii. 21, apud COLGAN, p. 434.

¹⁹¹ ADAMNAN, ii. 27.

haps only a shark more formidable than its neighbors ; but on another occasion, the same Baithen who was the friend and successor of Columba, encouraged by the holy abbot's blessing, had more courage, continued his course, and saw the monster bury itself in the waves. "After all," said the monk, "we are both in the hands of God, both this monster and I."¹⁹² Other monks, sailing in the high northern sea, were panic-struck by the appearance of hosts of unknown shell-fish, which, attaching themselves to the oars and sides of the boat, made holes in the hide with which the framework was covered.¹⁹³

It was neither curiosity nor love of gain, nor even a desire to convert the pagans, which stimulated Columba's disciples to dare all the dangers of navigation in one of the most perilous seas of the world ; it was the longing for solitude, the irresistible wish to find a more distant retreat, an asylum still further off than that of Iona, upon some unknown rock amid the loneliness of the sea, where no one could join them, and from which they never could be brought back. They returned to Iona without having discovered what they were in search of, sad yet not discouraged ; and after an interval of rest always took to sea again, to begin once more their anxious search.¹⁹⁴ It was thus that the steep and almost inaccessible island of St. Kilda,¹⁹⁵ made famous

The love of solitude sends them into unknown seas.

Discovery of St. Kilda, the Farøe Isles, and Iceland.

¹⁹² "Ecce cetus miræ et immensæ magnitudinis, se instar montis erigens, ora aperuit patula nimis dentosa. . . . Remiges, deposito velo, valde perterriti . . . illam obortam ex belluino motu fluctuationem vix evadere potuerunt. . . . Cui Baitheneus : Ego et illa bellua sub Dei potestate sumus. . . . Æquor et cectum, ambabus manibus elevatis, benedicit intrepidus. . . . Bellua magna se sub fluctu immergens . . . nusquam apparuit." — ADAMNAN, i. 19. Up to the eighteenth century whales frequented these parts, and they have been seen to capsize fishing-boats. — MARTIN'S Western Islands, p. 5. The whales have disappeared, as have also the seals, which as late as 1703 supplied food to the Hebridean islands. The Monastery of Iona kept a flock of them in a neighboring island : "Parvam insulam ubi marini nostri juris vituli generantur et generant." A robber attempted to take them away, but sheep were given up to him in preference." — ADAMNAN, i. 42.

¹⁹³ "Quædam, usque in id temporis invisæ mare obtgentes occurrerant tetrae et infestæ nimis bestiolæ quæ horribili impetu carinam et latera, puppinque et proram ita forti ferebant percussura, ut pellicum tectum navis penetrale putarentur penetrare posse. Prope ranarum magnitudinem aculeis permolestæ, non volatiles, sed natatiles, sed et remorum palmulas infestabant." — ADAMNAN, ii. 42.

¹⁹⁴ "Desertum in pelago intransmeabili invenire optantes." — ADAMNAN, ii. 42. "Baitheneus . . . benedici a sancto petivit cum ceteris, in mari cremum quæsiturus, post longos per ventosa circuitus æquora, cremo non repperito, in patriam reversus." — Ibid., i. 20.

¹⁹⁵ Several religious buildings of a very early date, and a church dedicated by the daring of its bird-hunters, was first discovered; then far to the north of the Hebrides and even of the Orcades, they reached the Shetland Isles, and even, according to some, Iceland itself, which is only at the distance of a six days' voyage from Ireland, and where the first Christian church bore the name of St. Columba. Another of their discoveries was the Faröe Islands, where the Norwegians at a later date found traces of the sojourn of the Irish monks, Celtic books, crosses, and bells.¹⁹⁶ Cormac, the boldest of these bold explorers, made three long, laborious and dangerous voyages with the hope, always disappointed, of finding the wilderness of which he dreamed. The first time on landing at Orkney he escaped death, with which the savage inhabitants of that archipelago threatened all strangers, only by means of the recommendations which Columba had procured from the Pictish king, himself converted, to the still pagan king of the northern islanders.¹⁹⁷ On another occasion the south wind drove him for fourteen successive

Cormac at the Ork-
neys.

to St. Columba, were to be found in St. Kilda as late as 1758. The inhabitants of the island, though Calvinists, still celebrated the saint's day by carrying all the milk of their dairies to the governor or farmer of the isle, which belonged then to a chief of the clan Macleod. This farmer distributed it in equal portions to every man, woman, and child in the island. — See History of St. Kilda, by Kenneth Macaulay. This islet, which is the most western spot in Europe, is celebrated for the exploits of the bird-catchers, who are suspended by long cords over perpendicular cliffs. It has scarcely eighty inhabitants. The site of the chapel called that of Columba is still shown, with a cemetery and some medicinal and consecrated springs. St. Columba's day is still observed by the people.

¹⁹⁶ Landnamabok, ap. Antiq. Celto-Scand., p. 14. Dicuil, who wrote in 795, states that a hundred years before the Faröe Islands had been inhabited by "eremite ex nostra Scotia navigantes." — Ed. Letronne, p. 39. Compare INNES, Scotland in the Middle Ages, p. 101, and LANIGAN, Eccles. History of Ireland, c. 3, p. 225, where the question of the first discovery of Iceland is thoroughly investigated.

¹⁹⁷ "Brudeo regi, præsentī Orcadum regulo, commendavit dicens: Aliqui ex nostris nuper emigraverunt, desertum in pelago intransmeabili invenire optantes, qui si forte post longos circuitus Orcades devenerunt insulas, huic regulo ejus obsides in manu tua sunt, diligenter commenda . . . et propter supradictam S. viri commendationem, de morte in Orcadibus liberatus est vicina." — ADAMNAN, ii. 42. This passage will recall that of Ariosto, where he places in the Hebrides the scene of Olympia's deliverance by Roland, and attributes to the inhabitants of these islands the habit of exposing their women to sea monsters: —

"Per distrugger quell' isola d'Ebuda Che di quante il mar cinge è la piu cruda.
Voi dovete saper ch'oltre l'Irlanda, Fra molte, che vi son, l'isola giace Nomata Ebuda, che per legge manda Rubando intorno il suo popol rapace."

Orlando Furioso, ix. 11-12.

days and nights almost into the depths of the icy ocean, far beyond anything that the imagination of man had dreamed of in those days.¹⁹⁸

Columba, the father and head of those bold and pious mariners, followed and guided them by his ever vigilant and prevailing prayers. He was in some respects present with them, notwithstanding the distance which separated them from the sanctuary and from the island harbors which they had left. Prayer gave him an intuitive knowledge of the dangers they ran. He saw them, he suffered and trembled for them; and immediately assembling the brethren who remained in the monastery by the sound of the bell, offered for them the prayers of the community. He implored the Lord with tears to grant the change of wind which was necessary for those at sea, and did not rise from his knees until he had a certainty that his prayers were granted. This happened often, and the saved monks, on returning from their dangerous voyages, hastened to him to thank and bless him for his prophetic and beneficent aid.¹⁹⁹

Often he himself accompanied them in their voyages of circumnavigation or exploration, and paid many visits to the isles of the Hebridean archipelago discovered or frequented by the sailors of his community, and where cells or little colonies from the great island monastery seem to have existed. This was specially the case at Eigg, where a colony of fifty-two monks, founded and ruled by a disciple of the abbot of Iona, were killed by pirates twenty years after his death.²⁰⁰ This

His voyages and visits to the other Hebridean isles.

¹⁹⁸ "Cormacus, qui tribus non minus vicibus eremum in Oceano laboriose quæsit, nec tamen invenit." — ADAMNAN, i. 6. "Postquam a terris per infinitum Oceanum plenis enavigavit velis . . . usque ad mortem periclitari cæpit. Nam cum ejus navis a terris per quatuordecim æstivi temporis dies, totidemque noctes, plenis velis, austro flante vento, ad septentrionalis plagam cæli directo excurreret cursu, ejusmodi navigatio ultra humani excursus modum et irremediabilis videbatur." — Ibid., ii. 42.

¹⁹⁹ "Eadem hora et sanctus noster, quamlibet longe absens corpore, spiritu tamen præsens in navi cum Cormaco erat. Unde . . . personante signo fratres ad orationem convocant. . . . Ecce enim nunc Cormacus cum suis nautis. . . . Christum intentius precatur: et nos ipsum orando adjuvamus. . . . Et post orationem cito surgit, et abstergens lacrymas . . . quia Dominus austrum nunc in aquilonarem convertit flatum, nostros de periculis commembres retrahentem, quos hic ad nos iterum reducat." — ADAMNAN, ii. 42.

²⁰⁰ The tragedy of Eigg, which took place in 617, deserves special mention. According to Irish annals, St. Donnan, the founder of the community, was the friend and disciple of Columba. Desirous of finding a more solitary retreat, he established himself with some companions in the island in Eigg, which was then inhabited only by the sheep of the queen of the country (many of the islets near Staffa are at present used as pasture). The queen, was a favorite spot which he loved to visit, no doubt to enjoy the solitude which was no longer to be found at Iona, where the crowds of penitents, pilgrims and petitioners increased from day to day. And he took special pleasure also in Skye, the largest of the Hebridean isles, which, after the lapse of twelve centuries, was recalled to the attention of the world by the dangerous and romantic adventures of Prince Charles-Edward and Flora Macdonald. It was then scarcely inhabited, though very large and covered by forests, in which

The wild
boar of Skye.

he could bury himself and pray, leaving even his brethren far behind him. One day he met an immense wild boar pursued by dogs; with a single word he killed the ferocious brute, instead of protecting it; as in similar cases the saints of the Merovingian legends were so ready to do.²⁰¹ He continued during all the middle ages the patron of Skye, where a little lake still bears his name, as well as several spots, and monuments in the neighboring isles.²⁰²

While sailing with his monks he stills the storms by prayer.

Storms often disturbed these excursions by sea, and then Columba showed himself as laborious and bold as the most tried of his monastic mariners. When all were engaged in rowing, he would not informed of this invasion of her territory, commanded that all should be killed. When the murderers arrived on the island it was the eve of Easter, and mass was being said. Donnán begged them to wait until mass was over. They consented, and when the service was at an end the monks gave themselves up to the sword. According to another version the queen or lady of the soil sent pirates (latrones) to kill them. They were surprised singing psalms in their oratory, from whence they went into the refectory, in order that they might die where the most carnal moments of their life had been passed. There were fifty-two of them. This is the version given by the Bollandists, vol. ii. April, p. 487. As if by the special blessing of these martyrs, this isle was still Catholic in 1703, and St. Donnán was venerated.—MARTIN'S Journey to the Western Islands, p. 279.

²⁰¹ "Cum in Scia insula aliquantisper demoraretur diebus, paulo longius solus, orationis intuitu, separatus a fratribus, silvam ingressus. . . Venatici canes. . . Ulterius huc procedere nolo: in loco ad quem devenisti morere." — ADAMNAN, ii. 26.

²⁰² This lake has been drained by Lord Macdonald, the present proprietor of the island. The memory and name of Columba are distinctly to be found at Eilean Naomh, where a well which he had hollowed in the rock, and the tomb of his mother Eithne, are still shown; and also at Tiree, so often mentioned by Adamnan under the name of Terra Ethice. In all the bleak islands of the western coast of Scotland, and especially of the district of Lorn (Argyllshire), there are sculptured crosses of curious and varied forms, tombstones, ruined chapels, buildings of coarse construction and singular shape, Druidical stones, and churches more or less ancient, almost always dedicated to Columba. These are carefully described in a small volume with engravings, which has been published anonymously by Thomas Muir, a Leith merchant, entitled The Western Islands; Edinburgh, 1861.

remain idle, but rowed with them.²⁰³ We have seen him brave the frequent storms of the narrow and dangerous lakes in the north of Scotland.²⁰⁴ At sea he retained the same courageous composure in the most tempestuous weather, and took part in all the sailors' toils. During the voyage which he made from Iona to Ireland, to attend with King Aïdan the parliament of Drumceitt, his vessel was in great danger; the waves dashed into the boat till it was full of water, and Columba took his part with the sailors in baling it out. But his companions stopped him. "What you are doing at present is of little service to us," they said to him; "you would do better to pray for those who are about to perish." He did so, and the sea grew calm from the moment when, mounting on the prow, he raised his arms in prayer.

With these examples before them, his companions naturally appealed to his intercession whenever storms arose during any of his voyages. On one occasion he answered them, "It is not my turn; it is the holy abbot Kenneth who must pray for us." Kenneth was the abbot of a monastery in Ireland, and a friend of Columba's who came often to Iona to visit him. At the very same hour he heard the voice of his friend echo in his heart, and, warned by an internal voice, left the refectory where he was, and hastened to the church to pray for the shipwrecked, crying, "We have something else to do than to dine when Columba is in danger of perishing at sea." He did not even take the time to put on both his shoes before he went to the church, for which he received the special thanks of his friend at Iona;²⁰⁵ an incident which recalls another Celtic legend — that of the bishop St. Paternus, who obeyed the call of his metropolitan with a boot upon one foot only.²⁰⁶

²⁰³ Vita S. Comgelli, ap. COLGAN, p. 458.

²⁰⁴ See ante, p. 51.

²⁰⁵ "In mari periclitari cœpit; totum namque vas navis, valde concussum, magnis undarum cumulis fortiter ferebatur. Nautæ tum forte sancto sentinam cum illis exhaurire conanti aiunt: Quod nunc agis non magnopere nobis proficit periclitantibus, exorare potius debes pro pereuntibus. Et intentans precem . . . aquam cessat amaram exinanire . . . dulcem fundere cœpit. Sæva nimis insistente et periculosa tempestate: Hac in die non est meum pro vobis in periculo orare, sed est abbatis Cainnachii sancti viri. . . . Spiritu revelante sancto, supradictam sancti Columbæ interiore cordis aure vocem audiens. . . . Non est tempus prandere quando in mari periclitatur navis sancti Columbæ. . . . Nunc valde nobis proficit tuus ad ecclesiam velox cum uno calceamento cursus." — ADAMNAN, ii. 12, 13.

²⁰⁶ Vol. i. p. 472. Cainnach or Kenneth, a saint very popular in Scotland, whose name has been borne by several Scottish kings, was abbot of Aghaboe, in the diocese of Ossory. Born about 517, he died in 600, and

He is invoked everywhere as the master of the winds.

Under all these legendary digressions it is evident that the monastic apostle of Caledonia, apart from the prevailing efficacy of his prayers, had made an attentive study of the winds and of all the phenomena of nature which affected the lives of the insular and maritime people whom he sought to lead into Christianity. A hundred different narratives represent him to us as the Eolus of those fabulous times and dangerous seas. He was continually entreated to grant a favorable wind for such or such an expedition; it even happened one day that two of his monks, on the eve of setting out in two different directions, came to him to ask, the one a north wind, and the other a south wind. He granted the prayer of both, but by delaying the departure of the one who was going to Ireland until after the arrival of the other, who went only to the neighboring isle of Tiree.²⁰⁷

Thus it happened that from far and near Columba was invoked or feared by the sailors as the master of all the winds that blew. Libran of the Rushes, the generous penitent whose curious history has been already recorded, wishing to return from Ireland to Iona, was turned back by the crew of the boat which was leaving the port of Derry for Scotland, because he was not a member of the community of Iona. Upon which the disappointed traveller mentally invoked across the sea the help of his absent friend. The wind immediately changed, and the boat was driven back to land. The sailors saw poor Libran still lingering upon the shore, and called to him from the deck, "Perhaps it is because of thee that the wind has changed; if we take thee with us, art thou disposed to make it once more favorable?" "Yes," said the monk; "the holy abbot Columba, who imposed upon me seven years of penitence, whom I have obeyed, and to whom I wish to return, will obtain that grace for you." And the result was that he was taken on board, and the journey was happily accomplished.²⁰⁸ left his name to the neighboring islet of Inch-Kenneth, near Iona, which was visited by Johnson.

²⁰⁷ "Simul unanimes postulans ut ipse a Domino postulans impetraret prosperum crastina die ventum sibi dari diversa emigraturis via." — ADAMNAN, ii. 15.

²⁰⁸ "Clamitans de litore rogat ut ipsum nautæ cum eis susciperent navigaturum ad Britanniam. Sed ipsi refutaverunt eum, quia non erat de monachis sancti Columbæ. . . . Videntes virum . . . secus flumen cursitantem . . . ad ipsum de navi clamitantes. . . . Qui statim, rate ascensa: In nomine Omnipotentis, ait, cui sanctus Columba inculpabiliter servit, tensis rudentibus, levate velum." — ADAMNAN, ii. 39.

These events took place in his lifetime ; but during at least a century after his death he remained the patron, always popular and propitious, of sailors in danger. A tone of familiar confidence, and sometimes of filial oburgation, may be remarked in their prayers, such as may be found among the Celts of Armorica and the Catholic nations of the south of Europe. Adamnan confesses that he himself and some other monks of Iona, embarked in a flotilla of a dozen boats charged with oaken beams for the reconstruction of the monastery, were so detained by contrary winds in a neighboring island that they took to accusing their Columba. "Dear saint," they said to him, "what dost thou think of this delay? We thought up to this moment that thou hadst great favor with God." Another time, when they were detained by the same cause in a bay near the district of Lorn, precisely on the vigil of St. Columba's day, they said to him, "How canst thou leave us to pass thy feast to-morrow among laymen, and not in thine own church? It would be so easy for thee to obtain from the Lord that this contrary wind should become favorable, and permit us to sing mass in thy church!" On these two occasions their desires were granted; the wind changed suddenly, and permitted them to get to sea and make their way to Iona in those frail boats whose spars, crossing upon the mast, formed the august symbol of redemption. More than a hundred witnesses of these facts were still living when the biographer of our saint wrote his history.²⁰⁹

This tender and vigilant charity, which lent itself to all the incidents of a sailor's and traveller's life, becomes still more strongly apparent during all the phases of his existence, in his relations with the agricultural population, whether of Ireland, which was his cradle, or of his adopted country Caledonia. Amid the fabulous legends and apocryphal and childish miracles with which Irish historians have filled out the glorious story of the great missionary,²¹⁰ it is pleasant to ²⁰⁹ "Quodam modo quasi accusare nostrum Columbam cœpimus. . . . Placetne tibi, sancte, hæc nobis adversa retardatio? huc usque a te, Deo propitio, aliquod nostrorum laborum speravimus consolationum adjumentum, te æstimantes alicujus esse grandis apud Deum honoris. . . . Placetne tibi, sancte, crastinam tuæ festivitatis inter plebeios et non in tua ecclesia transigere diem? . . . tui natalis missarum solemniam celebremus. . . . Proinde orantes nautæ vela subrigunt . . . tum nautæ antennas, crucis instar, et vela protensis sublevans rudentibus, prosperis et lenibus ventis eadem die appetentes insulam." — ADAMNAN, ii. 45.

²¹⁰ The pious Franciscan Colgan, who has included in his collection of Acta Sanctorum Hiberniæ (unhappily incomplete) so many fables, has, not-

Benefits conferred upon agriculturists. be able to discover the unmistakable evidence of his intelligence and fruitful solicitude for the necessities, the labors, and the sufferings of the inhabitants of the rural districts, and his active intervention on their behalf. When the legend tells us how, with one stroke of his crosier, he made fountains of sweet waters spring in a hundred different corners of Ireland or Scotland, in arid and rocky districts, such as that of the peninsula of Ardnamurchan;²¹¹ when it shows him lowering, by his prayers, the cataracts of a river so that the salmon could ascend in the fishing season, as they have always done since, to the great benefit of the dwellers by the stream;²¹² we recognize in the tale the most touching expression of popular and national gratitude for the services which the great monk rendered to the country, by teaching the peasants to search for the fountains, to regulate the irrigations, and to rectify the course of the rivers, as so many other holy monks have done in all European lands.

It is equally apparent that he had with zeal and success established the system of grafting and the culture of fruitwithstanding, omitted a crowd of incredible narratives which his predecessors had adopted. "Nonnulla . . . tanquam ex monumentis vel apocryphis, vel ex rerum forte vere gestorum nimia exaggeratione speciem fabulæ præferentibus, consulte omittenda duximus. . . . Quia nobis apparent vel exegetum vel libriorum (qui miris mirabilia immiscuerunt) licentiis et commentis ita essa depravata ut solum fabularum speciem præferant."—Trias Thaumaturga, p. 441. The Bollandists protested with still greater energy, and repeatedly, against the fables which they, nevertheless, thought themselves obliged to reproduce. "Vitæ hujus auctor aliquid habere videtur de genio Hibernico, cui solet esse perquam familiare, ambulare in mirabilibus, in rebus, inquam, supra fidem prodigiosis, ne dicam portentosis."—Vol. iii. August, p. 658. Compare the same volume, p. 742, and vol. ii. July, p. 241, and 299.

²¹¹ "Tergemino pedi in terram ictu, tergeminos fontes erumpere fecit."—O'DONNELL, book i. c. 86; ADAMNAN, i. 12, ii. 10.

²¹² "Columba ratus eam fluminis sterilitatem a prædicta cataracta derivari, et in commune vergere accolarum dominorumque ejus ditionis damnum, fluvium benedixit, rupique in Christi nomine jussit tantum subsidere quantum opus esset ut pisces ultro citroque libere commearent. Paruit confestim sancti viri imperio præfracta rupes et . . . facta est demissior, ut exinde et confluentium illuc piscium, præsertim vero salmonum (quorum et frequentissima et copiosissima ab eo tempore per universum fluvium fit captura) ascensui non obsistat, et nihilominus subjecto vertici adeo promineat, ut videatur a naturalibus contra impetuose ruentis fluvii ictum, magis sancti viri merito, quam innata agilitate conscendi."—O'DONNELL, Vita Quinta, book ii. c. 92. The river here spoken of is the Erne, a river of Ulster, which throws itself into the sea after having crossed the two great lakes called Lough Erne. In recollection of this benefit the historian tells us that all the produce of the fisheries on St. Columba's day was left for the coarb—that is to say, for the abbot, who held the first rank among the successors of the saint in the monasteries he had founded.

trees, when we read the legend which represents him to us, at the beginning of his monastic career in Durrow, the most ancient of his foundations, approaching, in autumn, a tree covered with sour and unwholesome fruit, to bless it, and saying, "In the name of Almighty God, let thy bitterness leave thee, O bitter tree, and let thy apples be henceforward as sweet as up to this time they have been sour!"²¹³ At other times he is said to have obtained for his friends quick and abundant harvests, enabling them, for example, to cut barley in August which they had sown in June—a thing which then seemed a miracle, but is not without parallel in Scotland at the present time.²¹⁴ Thus almost invariably the recollection of a service rendered, or of a benefit asked or spontaneously conferred, weds itself in the legend to the story of miracles and outbursts of wonder-working prayer—which, in most cases, were for the benefit of the cultivators of the soil: it is evident that he studied their necessities and followed their vicissitudes with untiring sympathy.

In the same spirit he studied and sought remedies for the infectious diseases which threatened life, or which made ravages among the cattle of the country. Seated one day upon a hillock in his island, he said to the monk who was with him, and who belonged to the Dalriadan colony, "Look at that thick and rainy cloud which comes from the north; it has within it the germs of a deadly sickness; it is about to fall upon a large district of our Ireland, bringing ulcers and sores upon the body of man and beast. We must have pity on our brethren. Quick, let us go down, and to-morrow thou shalt embark and go to their aid." The monk obeyed, and, furnished with bread which Columba had blessed, he went over all the district smitten by the pestilence, distributing to the first sick persons he met, water, in which the bread blessed by the exiled abbot, who concerned himself so anxiously about the lot of his countrymen, had been steeped. The remedy worked so well, that against epidemics.

His zeal

²¹³ "Quædam arbor valde pomosa . . . de qua cum incolæ loci quoddam haberent pro nimia fructus amaritudine querimonium. . . . Vident lignum incassum abundos habere fructus qui ex eis gustantes plus læderent quam delectarent. . . . In nomine omnipotentis Dei, omnis tua amaritudo, o arbor amara, a te recedat; tua huc usque amarissima nunc in dulcissima vertantur poma. . . . Dicto citius eodemque momento, omnia poma . . . in miram versa sunt dulcedinem."—ADAMNAN, ii. 2. "Arborem plenam fructu qui erat hominibus inutilis præ nimia amaritudine," it is said in a similar legend told of another Irish saint, Mochoénoroc.—AP. COLGAN, Acta Sanctorum Hiberniæ, p. 592.

²¹⁴ New Statistical Account, quoted by REEVES, p. 459.

from all parts both men and beasts crowded round the messenger of Iona, and the praises of Christ and his servant Columba resounded far and wide.²¹⁵

Thus we see the saint continually on the watch for those evils, losses, and accidents which struck the families or nations specially interesting to him, and which were revealed to him either by a supernatural intuition or by some plaintive appeal. Sometimes we find him sending the blessed bread, which was his favorite remedy, to a holy girl who had broken her leg in returning from mass; sometimes curing others of ophthalmia by means of salt also blessed; everywhere on his evangelical journeys, or other expeditions, we are witnesses of his desire, and the pains he took, to heal all the sick that were brought to him, or who awaited him on the roadside, eager, like the little idiot of Clonmacnoise, to touch the border of his robe — an accompaniment which had followed him during the whole course of his journey to the national assembly of Drumceitt.²¹⁶

His entire life bears the mark of his ardent sympathy for the laborers in the fields. From the time of his early travels as a young man in Ireland, when he furnished the ploughmen with ploughshares, and had the young men trained to the trade of blacksmith,²¹⁷ up to the days of his old age, when he could only follow far off the labor of his monks, his paternal tenderness never ceased to exercise on their account its salutary and beneficent influence. Seated in the little wooden hut which answered the purpose of a cell, he interrupted his studies, and put down his pen, to bless the monks as they came back from the fields, the pastures, or the barns.

²¹⁵ "Hæc nubes valde nocua hominibus et pecoribus erit . . . velocius transvolans super Scotiæ portum . . . purulenta humanis in corporibus et in pecorum uberibus nasci faciet ulcera. . . . Sed nos eorum miserati subvenire languoribus, Domino miserante, debemus. Tu ergo, nunc mecum descendens, navigationem præpara crastina die. . . . Cujus rumor per totam illam morbo pestilentiore vastatam regionem cito divulgatus, omnem morbidum ad sancti Columbæ legatum invitavit populum . . . homines cum pecudibus salvati Christum in sancto Columba laudarunt." — ADAMNAN, ii. 7.

²¹⁶ "Maugina, sancta virgo . . . ab oratorio post missam domum reversa titubavit. . . . Sorori et suæ nutrici profecturam quæ ophthalmiæ laborabat valde gravi labore. . . . Diversorum languores infirmorum invocato Christi nomine, sanavit . . . ad regum pergens conductum in Dorsi Cete. Aut sanctæ manus protensione . . . aut etiam fimbriæ ejus tactu amphibali." — ADAMNAN, ii. 5, 6, 7, 35.

²¹⁷ "Conquerentibus agricolis deesse ad arandum ferramenta, amissum aratri vomerem (restituit); juvenem quemdam . . . nunquam alias fabrilibus assuetum solo verbo protinus ferramentorum fabrum effecit; qui mox ad sancti imperium pro colonis vomerem, cultrumque faberrime cudit." — O'DONNELL, Quinta Vita, i. 68.

The younger brethren, after having milked the cows or the community, knelt down, with their pails full of new milk, to receive from a distance the abbot's blessing, sometimes accompanied by an exhortation useful to their souls.²¹⁸

During one of the last summers of his life, the monks, returning in the evening from reaping the scanty harvest of their island, stopped short as they approached the monastery, suddenly touched with strange emotion. The steward of the monastery, Baithen, the friend and future successor of Columba, asked them, "Are you not sensible of something very unusual here?" "Yes," said the oldest of the monks, "every day, at this hour and place, I breathe a delicious odor, as if all the flowers in the world were collected here. I feel also something like the flame of the hearth which does not burn but warms me gently; I experience, in short, in my heart a joy so unusual, so incomparable, that I am no longer sensible of either trouble or fatigue. The sheaves which I carry on my back, though heavy, weigh upon me no longer; and I know not how, from this spot to the monastery, they seem to be lifted from my shoulders. What, then, is this wonder?" All the others gave the same account of their sensations. "I will tell you what it is," said the steward; "it is our old master, Columba, always full of anxiety for us, who is disturbed to find us so late, who vexes himself with the thought of our fatigue, and who, not being able to come to meet us with his body, sends us his spirit to refresh, rejoice, and console us."²¹⁹

It must not be supposed, however, that he reserved his solicitude for his monastic laborers alone. Far from that, he knew how to appreciate the work of laymen when sanctified by Christian

The reapers of Iona perfumed and refreshed by his spirit.

The blacksmith carried to heaven by his alms.

²¹⁸ "Sedens in tuguriolo tabulis suffulto. . . . Juvenis ad januam tugurioli in quo vir beatus scribebat, post vaccarum reversus mulsionem, in dorso portans vasculum novo plenum lacte, dicit ad sanctum ut juxta morem tale benediceret onus." — ADAMNAN, i. 25, ii. 16, iii. 22.

²¹⁹ "Post messianis opera vespere ad monasterium redeuntes. . . . Quandam miri odoris fragrantiam ac si universorum florum in unum sentio collectorum; quanquam quoque quasi ignis ardorem, non pœnalem, sed quodam modo suavem; sed et quandam in corde insuetam et incomparabilem infusionem lætificationem, quæ me subito consolatur et lætificat ita ut nullius mœroris, nullius laboris meminisse possim. Sed et onus quod meo, quanquam grave, porto in dorso, ab hoc loco usque ad monasterium, in tantum relevatur, ut me oneratum non sentiam. . . . Sic omnes operarii sed singillatim profitentur. . . . Scitis quod senior noster Columba de nos anxie cogitet et nos ad se tardius pervenientes ægre ferat nostri memor laboris, et idcirco quia corporaliter obviam nobis non venit, spiritus ejus nostris obviat gressibus, qui taliter non consolans lætificat." — ADAMNAN, i. 37.

virtue. "See," he said one day to the elders of the monastery, "at this moment while I speak, such a one who was a blacksmith yonder in Ireland — see him, how he goes up to heaven! He dies an old man, and he has worked all his life; but he has not worked in vain. He has bought eternal life with the work of his hands; for he dispensed all his gains in alms; and I see the angels who are going for his soul." ²²⁰ It will be admitted that the praise of manual labor, carried to a silly length in our days, had been rarely expressed in a manner so solemn and touching.

It is also recorded that he took pleasure in the society of laymen during his journeys, and lived among them with a free and delightful familiarity. His relations with the laymen whose hospitality he received. This is one of the most attractive and instructive phases of his history. He continually asked and received the hospitality not only of the rich, but also of the poor; and sometimes, indeed, received a more cordial reception from the poor than from the rich. To those who refused him a shelter he predicted prompt punishment. "That miser," he said, "who despises Christ in the person of a traveller, shall see his wealth diminish from day to day and come to nothing; he will come to beggary, and his son shall go from door to door holding out his hand, which shall never be more than half filled." ²²¹ When the poor received him under their roof, he inquired with his ordinary thoughtfulness into their resources, their necessities, all their little possessions.

At that period a man seems to have been considered very poor in Scotland who had only five cows. The five cows of his host at Lochaber. This was all the fortune of a Lochaber peasant in whose house Columba, who continually traversed this district when going to visit the king of the Picts, passed a night and found a very cordial welcome notwithstanding the poverty of the house. Next morning he had the five little cows brought into his presence and blessed them, predicting to his host that he should soon have five hundred, and that the blessing of the grateful missionary should go down to his children and grandchildren — a prophecy which was faithfully fulfilled. ²²²

²²⁰ "Faber ferrarius non incessum laboravit, qui de propria manuum laboratione suarum præmia felix comparuit æterna. Ecce nunc anima ejus vehitur a sanctis angelis ad cœlestis patriæ gaudia." — ADAMNAN, iii. 9.

²²¹ "De quodam viro divite tenacissimo . . . qui sanctum Columbam despexerat nec cum hospitio receperat . . . et illius avari divitiæ. qui Christum in peregrinis hospitibus sprexit. . . Ipse mendicabit, et filius cum semivacua de domo in domum perula discurrat." — Ibid., ii. 20.

²²² "Hic Nesanus cum esset valde inops . . . hospitaliter et secundum

In the same district of Lochaber, which is still the scene of those great deer-stalking expeditions in which the British aristocracy delight, our saint was one day accosted by an unfortunate poacher, who had not the means of maintaining his wife and children, and who asked alms from him. "Poor man," said Columba, "go and cut me a rod in the forest." When the rod was brought to him, the abbot of Iona himself sharpened it into the form of a spear. When he had done this he blessed the improvised javelin, and gave it to his suppliant, telling him that if he kept it carefully, and used it only against wild beasts, venison should never be wanting in his poor house. This prophecy also was fulfilled. The poacher planted his blessed spear in a distant corner of the forest, and no day passed that he did not find there a hart or doe, or other game, so that he soon had enough to sell to his neighbors as well as to provide for all the necessities of his own house.²²³

Gift of a blessed spear to the poacher.

Columba thus interested himself in all that he saw, in all that went on around him, and which he could turn to the profit of the poor or of his fellow-creatures; even in hunting or fishing he took pains to point out the happy moment and most favorable spot where the largest salmon or pike might be found.²²⁴ Wherever he found himself in contact with the poor or with strangers, he drew them to himself and comforted them even more by the warm sympathy of his generous heart than by material benefits. He identified himself with their fears, their dangers, and their vexations. Always a peacemaker and consoler,

He pacifies and consoles all those whom he meets.

vires unius noctis spatio ministrasset . . . ab eo inquit ejus boculas numeri haberet . . . quinque . . . Ab hac die tuæ paucæ vacullæ crescent usque ad centum et quinque vaccarum numerum. Nesanus homo plebeius erat cum uxore et filiis. . . . Vir sanctus, quadam nocte quum apud supramemoratam . . . inopem bene hospitaretur, mane primo de quantitate et qualitate substantiæ plebeium hospitem interrogat." — ADAMNAN, ii. 21. The district of Lochaber, celebrated in the modern wars of Scotland, is situated upon the borders of the counties of Argyle and Inverness, on the way from Iona to the residence of the Pictish king, and was consequently often crossed by Columba.

²²³ "Plebeius pauperrimus, mendicus . . . quo unde maritam et parvulos cibaret non habebat quadam nocte. . . . Miselle homuncio, tolle de silva contulum vicina et ad me ejus defer. . . . Quem sanctus excipiens in veru exauit propria manu, benedicens et illi assignans inopi. . . . Quamdiu talem habebis sudem, nunquam in domo tua cervinæ carnis cibatio abundans deerit. Miser mendiculus . . . valde gavisus . . . veru in remotis infexit terrulæ locis, quæ silvestres frequentabant feræ . . . nulla transire poterat dies in quo non aut cervum aut cervam reperiret in veru infixio cecidisse." — ADAMNAN, ii. 37.

²²⁴ Ibid., ii. 19.

he took advantage here of the night's shelter given him by a rich mountaineer to end a dispute between two angry neighbors;²²⁵ and there made a chance meeting in a Highland gorge with a countryman an occasion for reassuring the peasant as to the consequences of the ravages made in his district by Pictish or Saxon invaders. "My good man," he said, "thy poor cattle and thy little all have fallen into the hands of the robbers; but thy dear little family is safe — go home and be comforted."²²⁶

Such was this tender and gentle soul. His charity might sometimes seem to have degenerated into feebleness, so great was the pleasure he took in all the details of benevolence and Christian brotherhood; but let there appear an injustice to repair, an unfortunate individual to defend, an oppressor to punish, an outrage against humanity or misfortune to avenge, and Columba immediately awoke and displayed all the energy of his youth. The former man reappeared in a moment; his passionate temperament recovered the mastery — his distinctive character, vehement in expression and resolute in action, burst forth at every turn; and his natural boldness led him, in the face of all dangers, to lavish remonstrances, invectives, and threats, which the justice of God, too rarely visible in such cases, sometimes deigned to fulfil.

Among the many sufferers whom he found on his way, it is natural to suppose that the exiles, who were so numerous in consequence of the discords which rent the Celtic races, would most of all call forth his sympathy. Himself an exile, he was the natural protector of all who were exiled.²²⁷ He took under his special guardianship a banished Pict, of noble family, probably one of those who had received him with kindness, and listened to his teachings at the time of his first missions in Northern Caledonia. Columba confided, or, as ²²⁵ "In domo cujus plebei divitis. . . . Fortgini nomine . . . ubi cum sanctus hospitaretur, inter rusticanos contententes duos . . . recta iudicatione iudicavit." — ADAMNAN, ii. 17.

²²⁶ "Ubi, ait, habitas . . . tuam quam dicis provinciolum nunc barbari populantur vastatores. Quo audito, miser plebeius maritum et filios deplangere cepit. Valde moerentem consolans inquit: Vade, homuncule, vade, tua familiola tota in montem fugiens evasit: tua vero omnia pecuscula . . . omnemque suppellectilem cum præda sævi raptores rapuerunt." — Ibid., i. 46.

²²⁷ "Almus pater, exsulum et depressorum pius patronus," says Manus O'Donnell (b. ii. c. 3), who was at once the grandnephew and biographer of the saint, with a sentiment only too natural to a scion of one of those great Irish families which have always preferred exile and destitution to apostasy.

the historian says, recommended, assigned in manum, according to the custom which came to be general in feudal times, his banished friend to a chief called Feradagh, who occupied the large island of Islay, south of Iona, praying him to conceal his guest for some months among his clan and dependants. A few days after he had solemnly accepted the trust, this villain had the noble exile treacherously murdered, no doubt for the sake of the articles of value he had with him. When he received the news, Columba ^{Punishment of the exile's assassin.} cried, "It is not to me, it is to God, that this wretched man, whose name shall be effaced out of the book of life, has lied. It is summer now, but before autumn comes — before he can eat of the meat which he is fattening for his table — he shall die a sudden death, and be dragged to hell." The indignant old man's prophecy was reported to Feradagh, who pretended to laugh at it, but nevertheless kept it in his mind. Before the beginning of autumn, he ordered a fattened pig to be killed and roasted, and even before the animal was entirely cooked gave orders that part of it should be served to him, in order to prove, at the earliest possible moment, the falsehood of the prophesied vengeance. But scarcely had he taken up the morsel, when, before he had carried it to his mouth, he fell back and died. Those who were present admired and trembled to see how the Lord God honored and justified His prophet;²²⁸ and those who knew Columba's life as a young man recalled to each other how, at the very beginning of his monastic life, the murderer of the innocent maiden had fallen dead at the sound of his avenging voice.²²⁹

In his just wrath against the spoilers of the poor ^{Robbers of royal race.} and the persecutors of the Church, he drew back before no danger, not even before the assassin's dagger.

²²⁸ "Quemdam de nobili Pictorum genere exsulem, in manum alicujus Feradachi divitis viri . . . diligenter assignans commendavit, ut in ejus comitatu, quasi unus de amicis, aliquos menses conversaretur. Quem cum tali commendatione de sancti manu viri commendatum suscepisset . . . trucidavit. . . . Non mihi, sed Deo infelix homunculus mentitus est, cujus nomen de libro vitæ delebitur. . . . Antequam de suilla degustet carne arborco saginata fructu. . . . Despiciens irrisit sanctum. Scrofa nucum impinguata nucleis jugulatur . . . de qua celeriter ex interita partem sibi in veru celerius assari præcipit, ut de ea impatiens prægustans beati viri prophetationem destrueret . . . ad quam extensam manum priusquam ad os converteret . . . mortuus retro in dorsum cecidit. . . . Valde tremefacti, admirantes, Christum in sancto propheta honorificantes glorificarunt." — ADAMNAN, ii. 23.

²²⁹ See ante, page 8.

Among the reivers who infested Scottish Caledonia, making armed incursions into their neighbors' lands, and carrying on that system of pillage which, up to the eighteenth century, continued to characterize the existence of the Scottish clans, he had distinguished the sons of Donnell, who belonged to a branch of the family which ruled the Dalriadan colony. Columba did not hesitate to excommunicate them. Exasperated by this sentence, one of these powerful ill-doers, named or surnamed Lamm-Dess (Right-hand) took advantage of a visit which the great abbot paid to a distant island, and undertook to murder him in his sleep. But Finn-Lugh, one of the saint's companions, having had some suspicion or instinctive presentiment of danger, and desiring to save his father's life by the sacrifice of his own, borrowed Columba's cowl, and wrapped himself in it. The assassin struck him whom he found clothed in the well-known costume of the abbot, and then fled. But the sacred vestment proved impenetrable armor to the generous disciple, who was not even wounded. Columba, when informed of the event, said nothing at the moment. But a year after, when he had returned to Iona, the abbot said to his community, "A year ago Lamm-Dess did his best to murder my dear Finn-Lugh in my place; now at this moment it is he who is being killed." And, in fact, the news shortly arrived that the assassin had just died under the sword of a warrior, who struck the fatal blow while invoking the name of Columba, in a fight which brought the depredations of these reivers to an end.²³⁰

Some time before, another criminal of the same family, called Joan, had chosen for his victim one of the hosts of Columba, one of those poor men whom the abbot had enriched by his blessing in exchange for the hospitality which even in their poverty they had not refused. This poor man lived on the wild and barren peninsula of Ardnamurchan, a sombre mass which rises up out of the waves of the Atlantic, and forms the most western point of the Scottish mainland. The benediction of the missionary had brought him good fortune, as had been the case with the peasant of Lochaber, and his five cows, too, had multiplied, and were then more than a hundred in number. Columba was not satisfied with merely enriching his humble friend, but gave him also a place in his affections, and had even bestowed upon him his own name: so that all his neighbors called him Columbain, the friend of St. Columba. Three times in succession, Joan, the princely spoiler, had pillaged and ravaged the house of the enriched peasant, the friend of the abbot of Iona; the third time, as he went back with his bravos, laden with booty, to the boat which awaited him on the beach, he met the great abbot, whom he had supposed far distant. Columba reproved him for his exactions and crimes, and entreated him to give up his prey; but the reiver continued his course, and answered only by an immovable silence, until he had gained the beach and entered his boat. As soon as he was in his vessel he began to answer the abbot's prayers by mockeries and insults. Then the noble old man plunged into the sea, up to his knees, as if to cling to the boat which contained the spoils of his friend; and when it went off he remained for some time with his two hands raised towards heaven, praying with ardor. When his prayer was ended, he came out of the water, and returned to his companions, who were seated on a neighboring mound, to dry himself. After a pause he said to them, "This miserable man, this evil-doer, who despises Christ in his servants, shall never more land upon the shore from which you have seen him depart—he shall never touch land again. To-day a little cloud begins to rise in the north, and from that cloud comes a tempest that shall swallow him up, him and his; not one single soul shall escape to tell the tale." The day was fine, the sea calm, and the sky perfectly serene. Notwithstanding, the cloud which Columba had announced soon appeared; and the spectators, turning their eyes to the sea, saw the tempest gather, increase, and pursue the spoilers. The storm reached them between the islands of Mull and Colonsay, from whose shores their boat was seen to sink and perish, with all its crew and all its spoils.²³¹

²³⁰ "In insula Himba commoratus. . . . Ille vero sceleratus, cujus nomen latine Manus dextera dicitur. . . . Usque in hanc diem integratus est annus ex quo Lamm-Dess in quantum potuit Finn-Lughum meum meo jugulavit vice; sed et ipse, ut æstimo, hac in hora jugulatur. In aliqua virorum utrinque acta belligeratione, Cronani filii Baithani jaculo transfixus in nomine, ut fertur, sancti Columbæ, emissio, interimit, et post ejus interitum viri belligerare cessarunt." — ADAMNAN, ii. 24.

²³¹ "Columbanum, quem de paupere virtus benedictionis ejus ditem fecit, valde diligebat. . . . Quidam malefactor homo, bonorum persecutor . . . prosequabatur sancti amicum Columbæ. . . . Accidit ut tertia vice . . . beatum virum, quem quasi longius positum despexerat, ad navem revertens mæste obviam haberet. . . . Immitis et insuadibilis permanens . . . navimque cum præda ascendens, beatum virum subsannabat et deridebat. Quem sanctus ad mare usque prosecutus est, vitreæque intrans aquas usque ad genua æquoreas, levatis ad cælum ambis manibus, Christum intente precatur. . . . Hic miserabilis homuncio, qui Christum in suis despexit servis, ad

We have all read in Cæsar's Commentaries how, when he landed on the shores of Britain, the standard-bearer of the tenth legion threw himself into the sea, up to the knees in water, to encourage his comrades. Thanks to the perverse complaisance of history for all feats of force, this incident is immortal. Cæsar, however, moved by depraved ambition, came but to oppress a free and innocent race, and to bring it under the odious yoke of Roman tyranny, of which, happily, it has retained no trace. How much grander and more worthy of recollection, I do not say to every Christian, but to every upright soul, is the sight offered to us at the other extremity of the great Britannic Isle, by this old monk, who also rushed into the sea up to his knees—but to pursue a savage oppressor, in the interest of an obscure victim, thus claiming for himself, under his legendary aureole, the everlasting greatness of humanity, justice, and pity!

CHAPTER VII.

COLUMBA'S LAST YEARS—HIS DEATH—HIS CHARACTER.

Columba the confidant of the joys and consoler of the sorrows of domestic life.—He blesses little Hector with the fair locks.—He prays for a woman in her delivery; he reconciles the wife of a pilot to her husband.—Vision of the saved wife who receives her husband in heaven.—He continues his missions to the end of his life.—Visions before death.—The Angels' Hill.—Increase of austerities.—Nettle-soup his sole food.—A supernatural light surrounds him during his nightly work and prayers.—His death is retarded for four years by the prayers of the community.—When this respite has expired, he takes leave of the monks at their work; he visits and blesses the granaries of the monastery.—He announces his death to his attendant Diarmid.—His farewell to his old white horse.—Last benediction to the isle of Iona; last work of transcription; last message to his community.—He dies in the church.—Review of his life and character.

portum, a quo nuper coram vobis emigravit, nunquam revertetur; sed nec ad alias quas appetit, terras . . . cum suis perveniet malis cooperatorem. Hodie, quam mox videbitis, de nube a borea orta immitis immissa procella eum cum sociis submerget: nec de eis etiam unus remanebit fabulator. . . . Die serenissima, et ecce de mari oborta, sicut sanctus dixerat, nubes cum magno fragore venti emissa, raptorem cum præda inter Maleam et Colonsam insulas inveniens . . . submersit."—ADAMNAN, ii. 22.

By the side of the terrible acts of vengeance which have just been narrated, the student loves to find in this bold enemy of the wicked and the oppressor a gentle and familiar sympathy for all the affections as well as all the trials of domestic life. Rich and poor, kings and peasants, awoke in his breast the same kindly emotion, expressed with the same fulness. When King Aïdan brought his children to him, and spoke of his anxiety about their future lives, he did not content himself with seeing the eldest. "Have you none younger?" said the abbot; "bring them all—let me hold them in my arms and on my heart!" And when the younger children were brought, one fair-haired boy, Hector (Eochaidh Buidhe), came forward running, and threw himself upon the saint's knees. Columba held him long pressed to his heart, then kissed his forehead, blessed him, and prophesied for him a long life, a prosperous reign, and a great posterity.²³²

Let us listen while his biographer tells how he came to the aid of a woman in extremity, and how he made peace in a divided household. One day at Iona he suddenly stopped short while reading, and said with a smile to his monks, "I must now go and pray for a poor little woman who is in the pains of childbirth and suffers like a true daughter of Eve. She is down yonder in Ireland, and reckons upon my prayers, for she is my kinswoman, and of my mother's family." Upon this he hastened to the church, and when his prayer was ended returned to his brethren, saying—"She is delivered. The Lord Jesus, who deigned to be born of a woman, has come to her aid; this time she will not die."²³³

²³² "Sed nunc si alios juniores habes, ad me veniant, et quem ex eis elegerit Dominus regem, subito super meum irrumpit gremium . . . quibus accessit. . . . Echodius Buidhe adveniēns in sinu ejus recubuit. Statimque sanctus eum osculatus benedixit." — ADAMNAN, i. 9. Columba had predicted that none of the four elder sons of the king should succeed him, and that they should all perish in war. The three eldest were actually killed in the battle for which Columba had rung the bells of his new monastery (see page 55), and the fourth also died sword in hand "in Saxonia bellica, in strage." The kings of Scotland, whose lineage is traced to the Dalriadians, were probably descendants of the fair-haired Hector.

²³³ "A lectione surgit et subridens ait: Nunc ad oratorium mihi properandum est ut pro quadam miscellula deprecem femina, quæ nunc in Hibernia nomen hujus inelamitans commemorat Columba, in magnis parturitionis, ut filia Evæ, difficillimæ torta punctionibus . . . quia et mihi cognationis est . . . de parentela matris meæ. . . . Ad ecclesiam currit. . . . Nunc propitius Dominus Jesus, de muliere progenitus, opportune miseræ subveniens, prospere prolem peperit; nec hac vice morietur. Eadem hora, nomen ejus invocans, absoluta salutem recuperavit. Ita ab aliquibus postea de Scotia et de eadem regione ubi mulier inhabitabat, transmeantibus, intimatum est." — ADAMNAN, ii. 40.

He reconciles a pilot's wife with her husband.

Another day, while he was visiting an island on the Irish coast, a pilot came to him to complain of his wife, who had taken an aversion for him. The abbot called her and reminded her of the duties imposed upon her by the law of the Lord. "I am ready to do everything," said the woman — "I will obey you in the hardest things you can command. I do not draw back from any of the cares of the house. I will go even, if it is desired, on pilgrimage to Jerusalem, or I will shut myself up in a nunnery — in short, I will do everything except live with him."

The abbot answered that there could be no question of pilgrimage or of a convent so long as her husband lived; "but," he added, "let us try to pray God, all three, fasting — you, your husband, and myself."

"Ah," said the woman, "I know that you can obtain even what is impossible from God." However, his proposal was carried out — the three fasted, and Columba passed the whole night in prayer without ever closing his eyes. Next morning he said to the woman, with the gentle irony which he so often employed, "Tell me to what convent are you bound after your yesterday's projects?" "To none," said the woman; "my heart has been changed to-night. I know not how I have passed from hate to love." And from that day until the hour of her death she lived in a tender and faithful union with her husband.²³⁴

But Columba fortunately was connected with other households more united, where he could admire the happiness of his friends without feeling himself compelled to make peace. From his sanctuary at Iona his habitual solicitude and watchful sympathy followed them to their last hour. One day he was alone with one of the Saxons whom he had converted and attached to his community, and who was the baker of the monks; while this stranger prepared his bread, he heard ²³⁴ "De quodam guberneta. . . . De sua querebatur uxore quæ . . . eum ad maritalium nullo modo admittebat concubitum. . . . Omnia quæcumque mihi præceperis, sum parata, quamlibet sint valde laboriosa, adimplere, excepto uno, ut me nullo modo in uno lecto dormire eum Lugneo. Omnem domus curam exercere non recuso, aut etiam si jubeas, maria transiens in aliquo puellarum monasterio permanere. . . . Scio quod tibi impossibile non erit ut ea quæ . . . vel impossibilia videmus, a Deo impetrata donentur. . . . Nocte subsequenti sanctus insomnis pro eis deprecatus est. . . . O femina, si, ut hesternæ dicebas die, parata hodie es ad feminarum emigrare monasteriolum? . . . Nunc quem heri oderam, hodie amo: cor enim meum hac nocte præterita, quo modo ignoro, in me immutatum est de odio in amorem. . . . Anima ejusdem maritæ indissociabiliter in amore conglutinata est mariti, ut illa maritalis concubitus debita . . . nullo modo deinceps recusaret." — ADAMNAN, ii. 41.

the abbot say, looking up to heaven — “Oh ! happy, happy woman ! She goes into heaven with a guard of angels.” Exactly a year after, the abbot and the Saxon baker were again together. “I see the woman,” said Columba, “of whom I spoke to thee last year coming down from heaven to meet the soul of her husband, who has just died. She contends with powerful enemies for that dear soul, by the help of the holy angels : she gains the day, she triumphs, because her goodman has been a just man — and the two are united again in the home of everlasting consolation.”²³⁵

This vision was preceded and followed by many others of the same description, in which the blessed death of many bishops and monks, his friends and contemporaries, were announced to him. They seem to have been intended to give him a glimpse of that heaven into which God was shortly to call him. Nor was it only at Iona that these supernatural graces were accorded to him, for he did not limit his unwearied activity to the narrow enclosure of that island, any more in the decline of his life than in the earlier period of his emigration. Up to old age he continued to have sufficient strength and courage to return to the most northern regions where he had preached the faith to the Picts ; and it was in one of his last missionary journeys, when upon the banks of Loch Ness, to the north of the great line of waters which cuts Caledonia in two, at a distance of fifty leagues from Iona, that he was permitted to see the angels come to meet the soul of the old Pict, who, faithful during all his life to the law of nature, received baptism, and with it eternal salvation, from the great missionary’s hands.²³⁶

At this period the angels, whom he saw carrying to heaven the soul of the just and penitent, and aiding the believing wife to make an entrance there for her husband, continually appeared to him and hovered about him. Making all possible allowance for the exaggerations and fables which the proverbial credulity of Celtic nations have added to the legends of their saints,²³⁷ no Christian will be tempted to deny the verified narratives which bear witness, in Columba's case as well as in that of the other saints, to supernatural appearances which enriched his life, and especially his old age. Those wonderful soldiers of virtue and Christian truth needed such miracles to help them to support the toils and live through the trials of their dangerous mission. They required to ascend from time to time into celestial regions to find strength there for their continual struggle against all obstacles and perils and continually renewed temptations — and to learn to brave the enmities, the savage manners, and blind hatreds of the nations whom it was the aim of their lives to set free.

²³⁵ “Quidam religiosus frater, Genereus nomine, Saxo, pistor, opus pistorum exercens. . . . Felix mulier, felix bene morata, cujus animam nunc angeli Dei ad paradisum evehunt. . . . Ecce mulier, de qua te præsentè dixeram præterito anno. Nunc mariti sui religiosi cujusdam plebei in aere obviat animæ, et cum sanctis angelis contra amulas pro eo belligerat potestates ; quorum adminiculo ejusdem homuncionis justitia suffragante, a dæmoniis belligerationibus crepta, ad æternæ refrigerationis locum anima ipsius est perducta.” — ADAMNAN, iii. 10.

²³⁶ See ante, page 50. “Ultra Britannię Dorsum iter agens, secus Nisæ fluminis lacum . . . sanctus senex.” — Ibid., iii. 14.

"Let no one follow me to-day," Columba said one morning with unusual severity to the assembled community: "I would be alone in the little plain to the west of the isle." He was obeyed; but a brother, more curious and less obedient than the rest, followed him far off, and saw him, erect and motionless, with his hands and his eyes raised to heaven, standing on a sandy hillock, where he was soon surrounded by a crowd of angels, who came to bear him company and to talk with him. The hillock has to this day retained the name of the Angels' Hill.²³⁸ And the citizens of the celestial country, as they were called at Iona, came often to console and strengthen their future companion during the long winter nights which he passed in prayer in some retired corner, voluntarily exposed to all the torments of sleeplessness and cold.²³⁹

For as he approached the end of his career this great servant of God consumed his strength in vigils, fasts, and dangerous macerations. His life, which had been so full of generous struggles, hard trial, and toil in the service of God and his neighbor, seemed to him neither full enough nor pure enough. In proportion as the end drew near he redoubled his austerities and mortifications. Every night, according to one of his biographers, he plunged into cold water and remained there for the time necessary to recite an entire psalter.²⁴⁰ One day, when, bent by age, he sought, perhaps in a neighboring island, a retirement still more profound than usual, in which to pray, he saw a poor woman gathering wild herbs and even nettles, who told him that her poverty was such as to forbid her all other food. Upon which the old abbot reproached himself bitterly that he had not yet come to that point. "See," he said, "this poor woman, who finds her miserable life worth the trouble of being thus prolonged; and we, who profess to deserve heaven by our austerities, we live in luxury!" When he went back to his monastery he gave orders that he should be served with no other food than the wild and bitter herbs with which the beggar supported her existence; and he severely reproved his minister, Diarmid,²⁴¹ who had come from Ireland with him, when he, out of compassion for his master's old age and weakness, threw a little butter into the caldron in which this miserable fare was cooked.²⁴²

²³⁷ Let us quote on this point, from the most illustrious of hagiographers, Bollandus himself, in his prefatory remarks to the life of the first Irish saint who came before him: "Multa continet admiranda portenta, sed usitata apud gentem illam simplicem et sanctam; neque sacris dogmatibus aut Dei erga electos suos suavissimæ providentiæ repugnantia; sunt tamen fortassis nonnulla imperitorum liberatorum culpa vitiata aut amplificata. Quod in gentilium suorum rebus gestis animadverti oportere nos docuit Henricus Fitzsimon societatis nostræ theologus, egregio rerum usu præditus. . . . Satis est lectorem monuisse ut cum discretione ea legat quæ prodigiosa, et crebro similia miracula commemorant, nisi ab sapientibus scripta auctoribus sunt." — Acta Sanctorum, January, vol. i. p. 43.

²³⁸ Cnocan Aingel (colliculus Angelorum), in the map of the island by Graham.

²³⁹ "Cum ingenti animadversione dixit: Hodie . . . solus exire cupio, nemo itaque ex vobis me sequatur. . . . Cœlestis patriæ cives . . . sanctum virum orantem circumstare . . . albatis induti vesibus, et post aliquam sermocinationem cum beato viro. . . . Quantæ et quales ad beatum virum in hyemalibus plerumque noctibus insomnen, et in locis remotioribus, aliis quiescentibus, orantem, angelicæ fuerint et suaves frequentationes." — ADAMNAN, iii. 16.

The celestial light which was soon to receive him began already to surround him like a garment or a shroud. His monks told each other that the solitary cell in the isle of Himba, near Iona, which he had built for himself, was lighted up every night by a great light, which could be seen through the chinks of the door and keyhole, while the abbot chanted unknown canticles till daybreak. After having remained

A supernatural light surrounds him during his nocturnal work and prayers.

²⁴⁰ O'DONNELL, iii. 37. This incredible power of supporting cold in the damp and icy climate of the British Isles is one of the most marked features in the penances which the Irish saints inflicted on themselves. — See COLGAN, Acta SS. Hiberniæ.

²⁴¹ MS. quoted by Reeves, p. 245, Appendix. The name of Diarmid or Diornid — the same as that of the king against whom Columba raised a civil war — was at a later date changed into that of Dermott, which is still to be found among the Irish.

²⁴² "Cum senio jam gravatus in quodam secessu ab aliis remotiori orationi vocali intentus deambulare. . . . Ecce paupercula hæc femina. . . . Et quid nos qui . . . laxius vivimus? . . . Diermitius . . . qui debebat eam misellam escam parare . . . per fistulam instillatoriam modicum liquefacti butyri et ollæ . . . infudit. . . . Sic Christi miles ultimam senectutem in continua carnis maceratione usque ad exitum . . . perduxit." — O'DONNELL, Vita Quinta, iii. 32.

there three days and nights without food, he came out, full of joy at having discovered the mysterious meaning of several texts of Holy Scripture, which up to that time he had not understood.²⁴³ When he returned to Iona to die, continuing faithful to his custom of spending a great part of the night in prayer, he bore about with him everywhere the miraculous light which already surrounded him like the nimbus of his holiness. The entire community was involuntarily agitated by the enjoyment of that foretaste of paradise. One winter's night, a young man who was destined to succeed Columba as fourth abbot of Iona remained in the church while the others slept: all at once he saw the abbot come in preceded by a golden light which fell from the heights of the vaulted roof, and lighted all the corners of the building, even including the little lateral oratory where the young monk hid himself in alarm.²⁴⁴ All who passed during the night before the church, while their old abbot prayed, were startled by this light, which dazzled them like lightning.²⁴⁵ Another of the young monks, whose education was specially directed by the abbot himself, resolved to ascertain whether the same illumination existed in Columba's cell; and notwithstanding that he had been expressly forbidden to do so, he got up in the night and went groping to the door of the cell to look in, but fled immediately, blinded by the light that filled it.²⁴⁶

These signs, which were the forerunners of his deliverance, showed themselves for several years towards the end of his life, which he believed and hoped was nearer its termination than it proved to be. But this remnant of existence, from which he sighed to be liberated, was held fast by the filial love of his disciples, and the ardent prayers of so many new Christian communities founded or ministered to

²⁴³ "De qua domo immensæ claritatis radii, per rimulas valvarum et clavium foramina, erumpentes, noctu videbantur. Carmina quoque spiritalia et ante inaudita decantari ab eo audiebantur. . . . Scripturarum . . . quæque obscura et difficillima, plana et luce clarius aperta, mundissimi cordis oculis patebant." — ADAMNAN, iii. 18.

²⁴⁴ "Simulque cum eo (ingreditur) aurea lux, de cæli altitudine descendens, totum illud ecclesiæ spatium replens . . . et penetrans usque in illius exedriolæ separatum conclave ubi se Virgnous in quantum potuit latitare conabatur . . . exterritus." — Ibid., iii. 19. Virgnous, or Fergna Brit, fourth abbot of Iona, from 605 to 625. He told this incident to his nephew, by whom it was told to Adamnan.

²⁴⁵ "Fulguralis lux." — Ibid., iii. 20.

²⁴⁶ "Cuidam suo sapientiam discenti alumno . . . qui, contra interdictum, in noctis silentio accessit . . . callide explorans . . . oculos ad clavium foramina posuit. . . . Repletum hospitium cælestis splendore claritudinis, quam non sustinens intueri, aufugit." — Ibid., iii. 20.

by his zealous care. Two of his monks, one Irish and one Saxon, of the number of those whom he admitted to his cell to help him in his labor or to execute his instructions, saw him one day change countenance, and perceived in his face a sudden expression of the most contrary emotions: first a beatific joy, which made him raise to heaven a look full of the sweetest and tenderest gratitude; but a minute after this ray of supernatural joy gave place to an expression of heavy and profound sadness. The two spectators pressed him with questions which he refused to answer. At length they threw themselves at his knees and begged him, with tears, not to afflict them by hiding what had been revealed to him. "Dear children," he said to them, "I do not wish to afflict you. . . . Know, then, that it is thirty years to-day since I began my pilgrimage in Caledonia. I have long prayed God to let my exile end with this thirtieth year, and to recall me to the heavenly country. When you saw me so joyous, it was because I could already see the angels who came to seek my soul. But all at once they stopped short, down there upon that rock at the farthest limit of the sea which surrounds our island, as if they would approach to take me, and could not. And, in truth, they could not, because the Lord had paid less regard to my ardent prayer than to that of the many churches which have prayed for me, and which have obtained, against my will, that I should still dwell in this body for four years. This is the reason of my sadness. But in four years I shall die without being sick; in four years, I know it and see it, they will come back, these holy angels, and I shall take my flight with them towards the Lord." ²⁴⁷

At the end of the four years thus fixed he arranged everything for his departure. It was the end of May, and it was his desire to take leave of the monks who worked in the fields in the only fertile part of Iona, the western side. His great age prevented him from walking, and he was drawn in a car by oxen. When he

He takes
leave of the monks at their work.

²⁴⁷ "Facies ejus subita, mirifica et lætifica hilaritate effloruit. . . . Incomparabili repletus gaudio, valde lætificabatur. Tum illa sapida et suavis lætificatio in mæstam convertitur tristificationem. . . . Duo . . . qui . . . ejus tugurioli ad januam stabant . . . illacrymati, ingemisculantes. . . . Quia vos, ait, amo, tristificari nolo. . . . Usque in hunc præsentem diem, meæ in Britannia peregrinationis terdeni completi sunt anni. . . . Sed ecce nunc, subito retardati, ultra nostræ fretum insulæ stant in rupe . . . cum sanctis mihi obviaturis illo tempore, ad Dominum lætus emigrabo."—ADAM-NAN, iii. 22.

reached the laborers he said to them, "I greatly desired to die a month ago, on Easter-day, and it was granted to me; but I preferred to wait a little longer, in order that the festival might not be changed into a day of sadness for you." And when all wept he did all he could to console them. Then turning towards the east, from the top of his rustic chariot he blessed the island and all its inhabitants — a blessing which, according to local tradition, was like that of St. Patrick in Ireland, and drove, from that day, all vipers and venomous creatures out of the island.²⁴⁸

He visits and blesses the monastic granary. On Saturday in the following week he went, leaning on his faithful attendant Diarmid, to bless the granary of the monastery. Seeing there two great heaps of corn, the fruit of the last harvest, he said, "I see with joy that my dear monastic family, if I must leave them this year, will not at least suffer from famine." "Dear father," said Diarmid, "why do you thus sadden us by talking of your death?" "Ah, well," said the abbot, "here is a little secret which I will tell thee if thou wilt swear on thy knees to tell no one before I am gone. To-day is Saturday, the day which the Holy Scriptures call Sabbath or rest. And it will be truly my day of rest, for it shall be the last of my laborious life. This very night I shall enter into the path of my fathers. Thou weepest, dear Diarmid, but console thyself; it is my Lord Jesus Christ who deigns to invite me to rejoin Him; it is He who has revealed to me that my summons will come to night."²⁴⁹

His farewell to the old white horse. Then he left the storehouse to return to the monastery, but when he had gone half-way stopped to rest at a spot which is still marked by one of the ancient crosses of Iona.²⁵⁰ At this moment an ancient and faithful servant, the old white horse which had been employed to carry milk from the dairy daily to the monastery, came towards him. He came and put his head upon his master's shoulder, as if to take leave of him. The eyes of the old horse had an expression so pathetic that they seemed to be bathed in tears. Diarmid would have sent the animal away, but the good old man forbade him. "The horse loves me," he said, "leave him with me; let him weep for my departure. The Creator has revealed to this poor animal what he has hidden from thee, a reasonable man." Upon which, still caressing the faithful brute, he gave him a last blessing.²⁵¹ When this was done he used the remnants of his strength to climb to the top of a hillock from which he could see all the isle and the monastery, and there lifted up his hands to pronounce a prophetic benediction on the sanctuary he had created. "This little spot, so small and low, shall be greatly honored, not only by the Scots kings and people, but also by foreign chiefs and barbarous nations; and it shall be venerated even by the saints of other Churches."

²⁴⁸ "Ad visitandos fratres operarios senex senio fessus, planstro vectus, pergit. . . . In occidua insulæ Ionæ laborantes parte . . . ut erat in vehiculo sedens, ad orientem suam convertens faciem, insulam cum insulanis benedixit habitatoribus. . . . Ex qua die, viperarum venena trisulcarum linguarum usque in hodiernam diem nullo modo aut homini aut pecori nocere potuere." — ADAMNAN, ii. 28, iii. 53.

²⁴⁹ "Quod cum benedixisset et duos in eo frugum sequestratos acervos. . . . Valde congratulor meis familiaribus monachis, quia hoc etiam anno si a vobis emigrare me oportuerit, annum sufficientem habebitis. . . . Aliquem arcanum habeo sermusculum (sic). . . . Et mihi vere est sabbatum hæc hodierna dies . . . in qua post meas laborationum molestias sabbatizo. . . . Jam enim Dominus meus Jesus Christus me invitare dignatur." — Ibid., iii. 23.

²⁵⁰ The monument called Maclean's Cross.

After this he went down to the monastery, entered his cell, and began to work for the last time. He was then occupied in transcribing the Psalter. When he had come to the 33d Psalm and the verse, Inquirentes autem Dominum non deficient omni bono, he stopped short. "I must stop here," he said, "Baithen will write the rest." Baithen, as has been seen, was the steward of Iona, and was to become its abbot. After this the aged saint was present at the vigil service before Sunday in the church. When he returned to his cell he seated himself upon the naked stones which served the septuagenarian for bed and pillow, and which were shown for nearly a century near his tomb.²⁵² Then he

²⁵¹ "Media via ubi postea crux molari lapide infixâ, hodieque stans . . . in margine cernitur viæ. . . . Senio fessus, paululum sedens. . . . Ecce albus occurrit caballus, obediens servitor . . . caput in sinu ejus ponens . . . dominum a se suum mox emigraturum . . . cœpit plangere uberumque quasi homo funderet et valde spumæas flere lacrymas. . . . Sine hunc, sine nostri amantorem, ut in hunc meum sinum fletus effundat amarissimi plangoris. . . . Mœstum a se equum benedixit ministratorem." — ADAMNAN, iii. 23.

²⁵² "Monticellum monasterio supereminentem ascendens, in vertice ejus paululum stans, elevatis manibus, benedixit cœnobium: Huic loco, quamlibet angusto et vili, non tantum Scotorum reges cum populis, sed etiam barbararum et exterarum gentium regnatores cum plebibus suis. . . . Sedebat in tugurio Psalterium scribens. . . . Post talem perscriptum versum paginæ, ad vespertinalem dominicæ noctis missam" (note this singular expression for vigiles) "ingreditur ecclesiam. Qua consummata, ad hospitium revertens, in lectulo residet pernox, ubi pro stramine nudam habebat petram et pro pulvillo lapidem, qui hodie quasi quidam juxta sepulcrum ejus titulus stat monumenti." — Ibid, iii. 23.

intrusted to his only companion a last message for the community: "Dear children, this is what I command with my last words—let peace and charity, a charity mutual and sincere, reign always among you! If you act thus, following the example of the saints, God who strengthens the just will help you, and I, who shall be near Him, will intercede on your behalf, and you shall obtain of Him not only all the necessities of the present life in sufficient quantity, but still more the rewards of eternal life, reserved for those who keep His law."²⁵³

These were his last words. As soon as the midnight bell had rung for the matins of the Sunday festival, he rose and hastened before the other monks to the church, where he knelt down before the altar. Diarmid followed him, but as the church was not yet lighted he could only find him by groping and crying in a plaintive voice, "Where art thou, my father?" He found Columba lying before the altar, and, placing himself at his side, raised the old abbot's venerable head upon his knees. The whole community soon arrived with lights, and wept as one man at the sight of their dying father. Columba opened his eyes once more, and turned them to his children on either side with a look full of serene and radiant joy. Then with the aid of Diarmid he raised, as best he might, his right hand to bless them all; his hand dropped, the last sigh came from his lips; and his face remained calm and sweet like that of a man who in his sleep had seen a vision of heaven.²⁵⁴

²⁵³ "Hæc vobis, o filioli, novissima commendo verba, ut inter vos mutuam et non fictam habeatis charitatem, cum pace." — ADAMNAN, iii. 23.

²⁵⁴ "Post quæ conticuit. . . . Vix media nocte pulsata personante clocca, festinus surgens ad ecclesiam pergit, citiorque ceteris currens, solus ingressus juxta altare. Diormitius ecclesiam ingrediens flebili ingeminat voce: Ubi es, pater? Et needum allatis fratrum lucernis, per tenebras palpan, sanctum ante altarium recubantem invenit: quem paululum erigens et juxta sedens sanctum in suo gremio posuit caput. Et inter hæc cætus monachorum cum luminaribus accurrens, patre viso moriente, cæpit plangere. Et, ut ab aliquibus qui præsentibus inerant didicimus, sanctus, needum egrediente animo, apertis sursum oculis, ad utrumque latus cum mira vultus hilaritate et lætitia circumspiciebat; sanctos scilicet obvios intuens angelos. Diormitius tum sanctam sublevat ad benedicendum sancti monachorum chorum dexteram manum. Sed et ipse venerabilis pater in quantum poterat, simul suam movebat manum. Et post sanctam benedictionem taliter significatam, continuo spiritum exhalavit. Facies rubens, et mirum in modum angelica visione exhilarata, in tantum remansit, ut non quasi mortui, sed dormientis videretur viventis." — ADAMNAN, iii. 23. The narrative of Adamnan is an almost literal reproduction of that of Cummian, the first known biographer of the saint.

Such was the life and death of the first great apostle of Great Britain. We have lingered, perhaps, too long on the grand form of this monk, rising up before us from the midst of the Hebridean sea, who, for the third part of a century, spread over those sterile isles, and gloomy distant shores, a pure and fertilizing light. In a confused age and unknown region he displayed all that is greatest and purest, and, it must be added, most easily forgotten in human genius: the gift of ruling souls by ruling himself.²⁵⁵ To select the most marked and graphic incidents from the general tissue of his life, and those most fit to unfold that which attracts the modern reader — that is, his personal character and influence upon contemporary events — from a world of minute details having almost exclusive reference to matters supernatural or ascetical, has been no easy task. But when this is done, it becomes comparatively easy to represent to ourselves the tall old man, with his fine and regular features, his sweet and powerful voice, the Irish tonsure high on his shaven head, and his long locks falling behind, clothed with his monastic cowl, and seated at the prow of his coracle, steering through the misty archipelago and narrow lakes of the north of Scotland, and bearing from isle to isle and from shore to shore, light, justice, and truth, the life of the conscience and of the soul.

One loves above all to study the depths of that soul, and the changes which had taken place in it since its youth. No more than his namesake of Luxeuil, the monastic apostle of Burgundy, was he of the Picts and Scots a Columba. Gentleness was of all qualities precisely the one in which he failed the most. At the beginning of his life the future abbot of Iona showed himself still more than the abbot of Luxeuil to be animated by all the vivacities of his age, associated with all the struggles and discords of his race and country. He was vindictive, passionate, bold, a man of strife, born a soldier rather than a monk, and known, praised, and blamed as a soldier — so that even in his lifetime he was invoked in fight; ²⁵⁶ and continued a soldier, insulanus miles,²⁵⁷ even upon the island rock from which he rushed forth to preach, convert, enlighten, reconcile, and reprimand both princes and nations, men and women, laymen and clerks.

²⁵⁵ "Animarum dux," said the angel who announced his birth to his mother. This expression is also found in Adamnan (i. 2), but placed in the mouth of Columba, and applied by him to another saint.

²⁵⁶ See ante, page 94, note.

²⁵⁷ ADAMNAN, Præfat.

He was at the same time full of contradictions and contrasts — at once tender and irritable, rude and courteous, ironical and compassionate, caressing and imperious, grateful and revengeful — led by pity as well as by wrath, ever moved by generous passions, and among all passions fired to the very end of his life by two which his countrymen understand the best, the love of poetry and the love of country. Little inclined to melancholy when he had once surmounted the great sorrow of his life, which was his exile; little disposed even, save towards the end, to contemplation or solitude, but trained by prayer and austerities to triumphs of evangelical exposition; despising rest, untiring in mental and manual toil; ²⁵⁸ born for eloquence, and gifted with a voice so penetrating and sonorous that it was thought of afterwards as one of the most miraculous gifts that he had received of God; ²⁵⁹ frank and loyal, original and powerful in his words as in his actions — in cloister and mission and parliament, on land and on sea, in Ireland as in Scotland, always swayed by the love of God and of his neighbor, whom it was his will and pleasure to serve with an impassioned uprightness. Such was Columba. Besides the monk and missionary there was in him the makings of a sailor, soldier, poet, and orator. To us, looking back, he appears a personage as singular as he is lovable, in whom, through all the mists of the past and all the cross-lights of legend, the man may still be recognized under the saint — a man capable and worthy of the supreme honor of holiness, since he knew how to subdue his inclinations, his weakness, his instincts, and his passions, and to transform them into docile and invincible weapons for the salvation of souls and the glory of God.

²⁵⁸ "Nullum etiam unius horæ intervallum transire poterat, quo non orationi, aut lectioni, vel scriptioni, vel etiam alicui operationi, incumberet. Jejunionum et vigilarum indefessis laboribus, sine ulla intermissione, die noctuque ita occupatus, ut supra humanam possibilitatem pondus uniuscujusque videretur specialis operis. Et inter hæc omnibus carus, hilarem semper faciem ostendens, spiritus sancti gaudio intimis lætificabatur præcordiis." — ADAMNAN, Præf. ii.

²⁵⁹ "Ab expertis quibusdam de voce beati psalmodiæ viri indubitanter traditum est. Quæ vox in ecclesia cum fratribus decantatis, aliquando per quingentos passus . . . aliquando per mille incomparabiliter elevata modo audiebatur. Mirum dictum! Nec in auribus eorum qui secum in ecclesia stabant vox ejus modum humanæ vocis in clamoris granditate excedebat. . . . Similiter enim in auribus prope et longe audientium personabat." — Ibid., i. 37. In another passage he calls it "sermone nitidus."

CHAPTER VIII.

SPIRITUAL DESCENDANTS OF ST. COLUMBA.

His posthumous glory : miraculous visions on the night of his death : rapid extension of his worship. — Note upon his supposed journey to Rome, and residence there, in search of the relics of St. Martin. — His solitary funeral and tomb at Iona. — His translation to Ireland, where he rests between St. Patrick and St. Bridget. — He is, like Bridget, feared by the Anglo-Norman conquerors. — John de Courcy and Richard Strongbow. — The Vengeance of Columba. — Supremacy of Iona over the Celtic churches of Caledonia and the north of Ireland. — Singular privilege and primacy of the abbot of Iona in respect to bishops. — The ecclesiastical organization of Celtic countries exclusively monastic. — Moderation and respect of Columba for the episcopal rank. — He left behind him no special rule. — That which he followed differed in no respect from the usual customs of the monastic order, which proves the exact observance of all the precepts of the Church, and the chimerical nature of all speculations upon the primitive Protestantism of the Celtic Church. — But he founded an order, which lasted several centuries under the title of the Family of Columb-Kill. — The clan and family spirit was the governing principle of Scottish monasticism. — Baithen and the eleven first successors of Columba at Iona were all members of the same race. — The two lines, lay and ecclesiastical, of the great founders. — The headquarters of the order transferred from Iona to Kells, one of Columba's foundations in Ireland. — The Coarbs. — Posthumous influence of Columba upon the Church of Ireland. — Lex Columille. — Monastic Ireland in the seventh century the principal centre of Christian knowledge and piety. — Each monastery a school. — The transcription of manuscripts, which had been one of Columba's favorite occupations, continued and extended by his family even upon the continent. — Historic Annals. — The Festiloge of Angus the Culdee. — Note upon the Culdees, and upon the foundation of St. Andrews in Scotland. — Propagation of Irish monasticism abroad. — Irish saints and monasteries in France, Germany, and Italy. — The Irish saint Cathal venerated in Calabria under the name of San Cataldo. — Monastic university of Lismore : crowd of foreign students, especially of Anglo-Saxons, in Irish monasteries. — Confusion of temporal affairs in Ireland. — Civil wars and massacres. — Notes upon king-monks. — Patriotic intervention of the monks. — Adamnan, biographer and ninth successor of Columba, and his Law of the Innocents. — They are driven from their cloisters by the English. — Influence of Columba in Scotland. — Traces of the ancient Caledonian Church in the Hebrides. — Apostolical mission of Kentigern in the country between the Clyde and the Mersey. — His meeting with Columba. — His connection with the king and queen of Strath-Clyde. — Legend of the queen's ring. — Neither Columba nor Kentigern acted upon the Anglo-Saxons, who continued pagans, and maintained a threatening attitude. — The last bishops of conquered Britain desert their churches.

THE influence of Columba, as of all men really superior to their fellows, and especially of the saints, far from ceasing with his life, went on increasing after his death. The supernatural character of his virtues, the miracles which were attributed to his intercession with God, had for a long time left scarcely any doubt as to his sanctity. It was universally acknowledged after his death, and has since remained uncontested among all the Celtic races. The visions and miracles which went to prove it would fill a volume. On the night, and at the very hour, of his death, a holy old man in a distant monastery in Ireland, one of those whom the Celtic chroniclers call the victorious soldiers of Christ,²⁶⁰ saw with the eyes of his mind the isle of Iona, which he had never visited, flooded with miraculous light, and all the vault of heaven full of an innumerable army of shining angels, who went, singing celestial canticles, to bring away the holy soul of the great missionary. Upon the banks of a river,²⁶¹ in Columba's native land, another holy monk, while occupied with several others in fishing, saw, as also did his companions, the sky lighted up by a pillar of fire, which rose from earth to the highest heaven, and disappeared only after lighting up the whole scene with a radiance as of the sun at noon.²⁶²

²⁶⁰ "Sanctus senex, Christi miles . . . justus et sapiens . . . cuidam æque Christiano militi . . . suam enarravit visionem. . . . Christi victor miles."

²⁶¹ The Finn, which, after having marked the boundary between the two countries of Tyrone and Donegal, throws itself into the Foyle, which flows by Derry.

²⁶² "Hæc præterita nocte media, . . . et in hora beati exitus ejus Ionam insulam, ad quam corpore nunquam perveni, totam angelorum claritudine in spiritu vidi irradiatam, totaque spatia aeris usque ad æthera cœlorum eorumdem angelorum claritate illustrata; qui ad sane ipsius animam preferendam, de cœlis missi descenderunt innumeri. Altisona carminalia et valde suavia audivi angelicorum cœtuum cantica eodem momento egressionis inter angelicos sanctæ ipsius animæ ascendentes choros. . . . Ego et alii necum viri laborantes in captura piscium in valle piscosi fluminis Fendæ subito totum aerei illustratum cœli spatium vidimus . . . et ecce, quasi quædam pergrandis ignea apparuit columna, quæ in illa nocte media sursum ascendens ita nobis videbatur mundum illustrare totum sicuti æsteus et meridianus sol, et postquam illa penetravit columna cœlum, quasi post occasum solis tenebræ succedunt. Non tantum nos . . . sed et alii multi piscatores, qui sparsim per diversas fluminales piscinas ejusdem fluminis piscabantur, sicut nobis post retulerunt, simili apparitione visa, magno pavore sunt perculsi." Adamnan takes pains to prove that he received the account of those nocturnal visions,

Thus began the long succession of wonders by which the worship of Columba's holy memory is characterized among the Celtic races. This worship, which seemed at one time concentrated in one of the smallest islets of the Atlantic, extended in less than a century after his death, not only throughout all Ireland and Great Britain, but into Gaul, Spain and Italy, and even to Rome,²⁶³ which some legends, insufficiently verified, describe him as having visited during the last years of his life, in order to renew the bonds of respectful affection and spiritual union which are supposed to have united him to the great pope St. Gregory, who ascended the pontifical throne seven years before the death of the Hebridean apostle.²⁶⁴

Rapid extension of his worship even at Rome.

It was expected that all the population of the neighboring districts would hasten to Iona and fill the island during the funeral of the great

His funeral and his grave at Iona.

the first, from old monks at Iona, to whom it had been told by a hermit from Ireland; and the second, from the very monk who had directed the fishing on that memorable night.

²⁶³ "Et hæc etiam eidem beatæ memoriæ viro a Deo non mediocris est collata gratia qua nomen ejus non tantum per totam nostram Scotiam et omnium totius orbis insularum maximam Britanniam, clare divulgari promeruit, in hac parva et extrema oceani Britannici commoratus (sic) insula; sed etiam ad trigonam usque Hispaniam, et Gallias, et ultra Alpes Penninas Italiam sitam pervenire, ipsam quoque Romanam civitatem, quæ caput est omnium civitatum." — ADAMNAN, in finem.

²⁶⁴ According to an account given by Colgan (p. 473), the famous hymn Altus Prosator was composed by Columba while the envoys of St. Gregory the Great were at Iona, and was sent by him to the Pontiff, who listened to it standing up, in token of respect. We are obliged to acknowledge the same want of proof in the tradition which connects the holy abbot of Iona with the great wonder-worker of the Gauls, St. Martin, and which attributes to him a work similar to that of the great archbishop who, in our own days, has undertaken to restore to an honorable condition the profaned grave of his greatest predecessor, by rebuilding the basilica which covers that glorious sepulchre. According to the narrative of O'Donnell (book iii. c. 27), Columba, on his return from Rome, went to Tours to seek the gospel which had lain for a century upon the breast of St. Martin, and carried it to Derry, where this relic was exhibited up to the twelfth century. The people of Tours had forgotten the situation of St. Martin's grave; and when they begged Columba to find it for them, he consented, only on condition of being allowed to keep for himself everything found in St. Martin's tomb, except his bones. The legend adds that Columba left one of his disciples there, the same Mochonna who had followed him first to Iona, and that he afterwards became bishop of Tours. This alone is sufficient to disprove the narrative, since at the only period in the life of Columba at which this journey could have taken place, the bishop of Tours was St. Gregory the historian, whose predecessor and successor are well known. Let us remark, at the same time, the curious traditional ties between the Church of Tours and that of Ireland, which lasted for several centuries. St. Patrick, the apostle of Ireland, is supposed to have been the grand-nephew of St. Martin, and to have been encouraged by him in his mission.

abbot; and this had even been intimated to him before he died. But he had prophesied that the fact would be otherwise, and that his monastic family alone should perform the ceremonies of his burial. And it happened, accordingly, during the three days which were occupied with those rites, that a violent wind made it impossible for any boat to reach the island. Thus this friend and counsellor of princes and nations, this great traveller, this apostle of an entire nation which, during a thousand years, was to honor him as its patron saint, lay solitary upon his bier, in the little church of his island retirement; and his burial was witnessed only by his monks. But his grave, though it was not dug in presence of an enthusiastic crowd, as had been looked for, was not the less visited and surrounded by floods of successive generations, who for more than two hundred years crowded there to venerate the relics of the holy missionary, and to drink the pure waters of his doctrine and example at the fountain-head.

The remains of Columba rested here in peace up to the ninth century, until the moment when Iona, like all the British isles, fell a prey to the ravages of the Danes. These cruel and insatiable pirates seem to have been attracted again and again by the wealth of the offerings that were lavished upon the tomb of the apostle of Caledonia. They burnt the monastery for the first time in 801; again in 805, when it contained only so small a number as sixty-four monks; and finally, a third time, in 877. To save from their rapacity a treasure which no pious liberality could replace, the body of St. Columba was carried to Ireland. And it is the unvarying tradition of Irish annals that it was deposited finally at Down, in an episcopal monastery not far from the western shore of the island, between the great Monastery of Bangor on the north, from which came Columbanus of Luxeuil, and Dublin, the future capital of Ireland, to the south. There already lay the relics of Patrick and of Bridget; and thus was verified one of the prophecies in Irish verse attributed to Columba, in which he says

Removal
of his remains to Down, in Ireland,
where they were laid by those of Patrick and of Bridget.

“They shall bury me first at Iona;
But, by the will of the living God,
It is at Dun that I shall rest in my grave, With Patrick and with Bridget the immaculate.
Three bodies in one grave.”²⁶³

²⁶³ See REEVES, pp. lxxix. 313, 317, 462; compare COLGAN, p. 446. These

The three names have remained since that time inseparably united in the dauntless heart and fervent tenacious memory of the Irish people. It is to Columba that the oppressed and impoverished Irish seem to have appealed with the greatest confidence in the first English conquest in the twelfth century. The conquerors themselves feared him, not without reason, for they had learned to know his vengeance. John de Courcy, a warlike Anglo-Norman baron, he who was called the Conqueror (Conquestor) of Ulster, as William of Normandy of England, carried always with him the volume of Columba's prophecies;²⁶⁶ and when the bodies of the three saints were found in his new possessions in 1180, he prayed the Holy See to celebrate their translation by the appointment of a solemn festival. Richard Strongbow, the famous Earl of Pembroke, who had been the first chief of the invasion, died of an ulcer in the foot which had been inflicted upon him, according to the Irish narrative, at the prayer of St. Bridget, St. Columba, and other saints, whose churches he had destroyed. He himself said, when at the point of death, that he saw the sweet and noble Bridget lift her arm to pierce him to the heart. Hugh de Lacy, another Anglo-Norman chief of great lineage, perished at Durrow, "by the vengeance of Columb-cille," says a chronicler, while he was engaged in building a castle to the injury of the abbey which Columba had founded, and loved so much.²⁶⁷ A century after, this vengeance was still popularly dreaded; and some English pirates, who had pillaged his church in the island of Inchcolm, having sunk like lead in sight of land, their countrymen said that he should be called, not St. Columba, but St. *Quhalme*²⁶⁸ — that is to say, the saint of Sudden Death.

A nation has special need to believe in these vengeance of God, always so tardy and infrequent, and which, in Ireland, above all, have scarcely sufficed to light with a fugitive gleam the long night of the conquest, with all its iniquities three bodies were found at Down in 1185, after the disasters of the first English conquest, and again united in one tomb by the bishop Malachi, and by John de Courcy, one of the great Anglo-Norman barons, conqueror (conquestor, according to the office) of Ulster. A special holiday was instituted by the Holy See in memory of this translation. The office for this festival, printed first at Paris in 1620, has been given by Colgan at the beginning of his precious work, Trias Thaumaturga.

²⁶⁶ KELLEY, note to LYNCH, Cambrensis Eversus, vol. i. p. 386.

²⁶⁷ O'DONOVAN'S Four Masters, vol. i. pp. 25, 75.

²⁶⁸ Quhalme in Anglo-Saxon meant sudden death, from whence the modern English word qualm.

and crime. Happy are the people among whom the everlasting justice of the appeal against falsehood and evil is placed under the shadow of God and the saints; and blessed also the saints who have left to posterity the memory of their indignation against all injustice.

As long as the body of Columba remained in his island grave, Iona, consecrated henceforward by the life and death of so great a Christian, continued to be the most venerated sanctuary of the Celts. For two centuries she was the nursery of bishops, the centre of education, the asylum of religious knowledge, the point of union among the British isles, the capital and necropolis of the Celtic race. Seventy kings or princes were buried there at the feet of Columba, faithful to a kind of traditional law, the recollection of which has been consecrated by Shakespeare.²⁶⁹ During these two centuries, she retained an uncontested supremacy over all the monasteries and churches of Caledonia, as over those of half Ireland;²⁷⁰ and we shall hereafter see how she disputed with the Roman missionaries the authority over the Anglo-Saxons of the north. Later still, if we are permitted to follow this narrative so far, at the end of the eleventh century, we shall see her ruins raised up and restored to monastic life by one of the most noble and touching heroines of Scotland and Christendom, the holy Queen Margaret, the gentle and noble exile, so beautiful, so wise; so magnanimous and beloved, who used her influence over Malcolm her husband only for the regeneration of the Church in his kingdom, and whose dear memory is worthy of being associated in the heart of the Scottish people with that of Columba, since she obtained by his intercession that grace of maternity which has made her the origin of the dynasty which still reigns over the British Isles.²⁷¹

²⁶⁹ "ROSSE. Where is Duncan's body?

MACDUFF. Carried to Colmes-Kill,
The sacred storehouse of his predecessors,
And guardian of their bones."

SHAKESPEARE, Macbeth.

²⁷⁰ "Plurima exinde monasteria per discipulos ejus in Britannia et in Hibernia propagata sunt: in quibus omnibus idem monasterium insulanum, in quo ipse requiescit corpore, principatum tenet."—BEDE, iii. 4. "Cujus monasterium in cunctis pene septentrionalium Scotorum et omnium Pictorum monasteriis non parvo tempore arcem tenebat regendisque eorum populis præerat."—Ibid., iii. 3.

²⁷¹ ORDERIC VITAL, l. viii. 702; FORDUN, Scotichronicon, v. 37. On the summit of the picturesque rock upon which Edinburgh Castle is built, may still be seen the chapel dedicated to St. Margaret, recently restored by order of the Queen. She is the Christian Minerva of that Acropolis of the North.

Let us here reconsider the privilege which gave to the abbots of Iona a sort of jurisdiction over the bishops of the neighboring districts²⁷²—a privilege unique, and which would even appear fabulous, if it were not attested by two of the most trustworthy historians of the time, the Venerable Bede and Notker of St. Gall. In order to explain this strange anomaly it must be understood that in Celtic countries, especially in Ireland and in Scotland, ecclesiastical organization rested, in the first place, solely upon conventual life. Dioceses and parishes were regularly constituted only in the twelfth century. Bishops, it is true, existed from the beginning, but either without any clearly fixed territorial jurisdiction, or incorporated as a necessary but subordinate part of the ecclesiastical machinery with the great monastic bodies; and such was specially the case in Ireland. It is for this reason that the bishops of the Celtic Church, as has been often remarked, are so much overshadowed not only by great founders and superiors of monasteries, such as Columba, but even by simple abbots.²⁷³ Nevertheless, it is evident that during the life of Columba, far from assuming any superiority whatever over the bishops who were his contemporaries, he showed them the utmost respect, even to such a point that he would not celebrate mass in the presence of a bishop who had come, humbly disguised as a simple convert, to visit the community of Iona.²⁷⁴ At the same time the ²⁷² "Habet insula rectorem semper abbatem presbyterum, cujus jura omnis provincia, et ipsi etiam episcopi, ordine inusitato, debeant esse subjecti." — BEDE, l. iii. 4. Compare Anglo-Saxon Chronicle, ad an. 565, ed. Giles. "In Scotia insula Hibernia depositio sancti Columbæ, cognomento apud suos Columb-Killi, eo quod multarum cellarum, id est monasteriorum vel ecclesiarum institutor, fundator et rector exstiterit: adeo ut abbas monasterii, cui novissime præfuit et ubi requiescit, contra morem ecclesiasticum primus omnium Hibernensium habeatur episcoporum." — NOTKER BALBULUS, Martyrologium. Mabillon quotes the charter of the Irish Abbey of Honau in Germany, where the signature of the abbot precedes those of seven bishops, all bearing Celtic names. — Annales Benedictini, vol. ii. Appendix, p. 70. Who were the bishops subject to the primacy of Iona? If Colgan is to be believed — in Præf., Triad. Thaum., "prærogativo forte jurisdictioni legitimus concessum, quod ejus abbas primatum et præcedentiam habeat ante omnes Scotorum episcopos" — it must be supposed that all the bishops of Ireland and Scotland were under its authority.

²⁷³ See the curious incident narrated by Adamnan (i. 36), where a bishop hesitated to confer the priesthood on Aidus the Black before having the authority of the abbot of Tiree, an insular cella dependent upon Iona. — "Episcopus non ausus est super caput ejus manum imponere, nisi prius presbyter Findchanus . . . suam capiti ejus pro confirmatione imponeret dextram."

²⁷⁴ "Quidam proselytus ad sanctum venit qui se in quantum potuit occultabat humiliter, ut nullus sciret quod esset episcopus." — ADAMNAN, i. 44.

abbots scrupulously abstained from all usurpation of the rank, privileges, or functions reserved to bishops, to whom they had recourse for all the ordinations celebrated in the monasteries.²⁷⁵ But as most of the bishops had been educated in monastic schools, they retained an affectionate veneration for their cradle, which, in regard to Iona especially, from which we shall see so many bishops issue, might have translated itself into a sort of prolonged submission to the conventual authority of their former superior. Five centuries later the bishops who came from the great French abbeys of Cluny and Cîteaux took pleasure in professing the same filial subordination to their monastic birthplace.

The uncontested primacy of Iona over the bishops who had there professed religion, or who came there to be consecrated after their election, may be besides explained by the influence exercised by Columba over both clergy and people of the districts evangelized by him—an influence which was only increased by his death.

Did the great abbot of Iona, like his namesake of Luxeuil, leave to his disciples a monastic rule of his own, distinct from that of other Celtic monasteries? This has been often asserted, but without positive proof—and in any case no authentic text of such a document exists.²⁷⁶ That which bears the name of the Rule of Columb-kill, and which has been sometimes attributed to him, has no reference in any way to the cenobites of Iona, and is only applicable to hermits or recluses, who lived perhaps under his authority, but isolated, and who were always very numerous in Ireland.²⁷⁷

²⁷⁵ "Accito episcopo . . . apud supradictum Findchanum presbyter ordinatus est."—ADAMNAN, i. 36.

²⁷⁶ Colgan (Trias Thaum., p. 471) and Hæften (Disquisitiones Monasticæ, i. i. tr. 8, p. 84) had in their hands the text of a rule attributed to Columba, and reprinted by Reeves in 1850, but both have acknowledged that it would be applicable only to anchorites. — O'CURRY, Lectures, pp. 374, 612. The only proof of the existence of a cenobitical rule originated by Columba, is the mention made of it by Bede in the address of Wilfrid at the celebrated conference of Whitby between the Benedictines and the Celtic monks, which will be discussed hereafter: "De Patre Vestro Columba et sequacibus ejus, quorum sanctitatem vos imitari et Regulam ac præcepta celestibus signis confirmata." The word Regula, however, which occurs so often in the lives of the Irish saints, can scarcely mean anything more than observance, discipline; each considerable saint had his own. Reeves has proved that the Ordo monasticus, attributed to Columba by the last edition of Holsteinus, does not go farther back than to the twelfth century.

²⁷⁷ The recluses or anchorites, who passed their life in a little cell containing an altar, at which to say mass, sometimes solitary, sometimes attached to their church (like that of Marianus Scotus at Fulda), existed for a very

A conscientious and attentive examination of all the monastic peculiarities which can be discovered in his biography²⁷⁸ reveals absolutely nothing in respect to observances or obligations different from the rules borrowed by all the religious communities of the sixth century from the traditions of the Fathers of the Desert. Such an examination brings out distinctly in the first place, the necessity for a vow²⁷⁹ or solemn profession to prove the final admission of the monk into the community after a probation more or less prolonged; and, in the second place, the absolute conformity of the monastic life of Columba and his monks to the precepts and rites of the Catholic Church in all ages. Authorities unquestionable and unquestioned demonstrate the existence of auricular confession, the invocation of saints, the universal faith in their protection and intervention in temporal affairs, the celebration of the mass, the real presence in the Eucharist, ecclesiastical celibacy, fasts and abstinences, prayer for the dead, the sign of the cross, and, above all, the assiduous and profound study of the Holy Scriptures.²⁸⁰ Thus the assumption made by certain writers of having found in the Celtic Church some sort of primitive Christianity not Catholic, crumbles to the dust; and the ridiculous but inveterate prejudice which accuses our fathers of having ignored or interdicted the study of the Bible is once again proved to be without foundation.

As to the customs peculiar to the Irish Church, and which were afterwards the cause of so many tedious struggles with the Roman and Anglo-Saxon missionaries, no trace of them is to be discovered in the acts or words of Columba. There long time in Ireland. Sir Henry Piers has proved the existence of one of these recluses, and described his cell in the county of Westmeath in 1682. — REEVES, Memory of the Church of St. Duilech, 1859.

²⁷⁸ See the Appendix N to the volume of Reeves, entitled Institutio Hyensis. It is an excellent epitome of all the monastic customs of the period.

²⁷⁹ "Votum monachiale voverunt . . . votum monachicum devotus vovit." — ADAMNAN, i. 31, ii. 39.

²⁸⁰ To prove our assertion we indicate several passages from Adamnan: Auricular Confession is expressly pointed out in the history of Libranus, ii. 39.

The Invocation of Saints at each page. Columba is even invoked during his life. Their protection and intervention in temporal affairs, ii. 5, 15, 39, 40.

The celebration of festivals and offices in their honor.

The real presence — All the elements of the Eucharist. "A sancto jussus Christi corpus conficere. . . . Eucharistiæ mysteria celebrare pro anima sancta." — COLGAN, Vita Prima, c. 8; ADAMNAN, iii. 12.

Solemn mass on Sunday, iii. 12; on other days, i. 40.

is no mention of the tiresome disputes about the tonsure, or even of the irregular celebration of Easter, except perhaps in a prophecy vaguely made by him on the occasion of a visit to Clonmacnoise, upon the discords which this difference of opinion in respect to Easter would one day excite in the Scotie Church.²⁸¹

If Columba made no rule calculated, like that of St Benedict, to last for centuries, he nevertheless left to his disciples a spirit of life, of union, and of discipline, which was sufficient to maintain in one great body, for several centuries after his death, not only the monks of Iona, but the numerous communities which had gathered round them. This monastic body bore a noble name; it was long called the Order of the Fair Company,²⁸² and still longer the Family of Columb-kill. It was governed by abbots, who succeeded Columba as superiors of the community of Iona. These abbots proved themselves worthy of, and obtained from Bede, one of the most competent of judges, who began to write a hundred years after the death of Columba, a tribute of admiration without reserve, and even more striking than that which he gave to their founder:—"Whatever he may have been," said the Venerable Bede, with a certain shadow of Anglo-Saxon suspicion in respect to Celtic virtue and sanctity, "it is undeniable that he has left successors illustrious by the purity of their life, their great love of God, and their zeal for monastic order; and, although separated from us as to the observance of Easter, which is caused by their distance from all the rest of the world, ardently and closely devoted to the observance of those laws of piety and chastity which they have learned in the Old and New Testaments."²⁸³ These praises are justified by the great number of saints who have issued from the spiritual lineage of Columba;²⁸⁴ but they should be specially applied to his successors in the abbatial see of Iona, and, in the first place, to his first successor, whom he had himself pointed out, the holy and amiable Baithen, who

²⁸¹ ADAMNAN, i. 3.

²⁸² "Cujus ordo dicebatur pulchræ societatis."—Vita Sancti Kierani, apud HÆFTEN, op. cit., pp. 61, 64.

²⁸³ "Qualiscunque fuerit ipse, nos hoc de illo certum tenemus, quia reliquit, successores magna continentia et divino amore regulæque monasticæ insignes . . . pietatis et castitatis opera diligenter observantes."—BEDE, iii. 4.

²⁸⁴ The number may be seen in Colgan, who names as many as a hundred and twelve, the most part of whom are commemorated in the Irish martyrologies.

was so worthy to be his lieutenant and friend, and could so well replace him. He survived Columba only three years, and died on the anniversary of his master's death.²⁸⁵ The cruel sufferings of his last illness did not prevent him from praying, writing, and teaching to his last hour. Baithen was, as has been said, the cousin-german of Columba, and almost all the abbots of Iona who succeeded him were of the same race.

The family spirit, or, to speak more truly, the clan spirit, always so powerful and active in Ireland, and which was so striking a feature in the character of Columba, had become a predominating influence in the monastic life of the Celtic Church.

Preponderance of the clan in the constitution of Celtic monachism.

It was not precisely hereditary succession, since marriage was absolutely unknown among the regular clergy; but great influence was given to blood in the election of abbots, as in that of princes or military leaders. The nephew or cousin of the founder or superior of a monastery seemed the candidate pointed out by nature for the vacant dignity. Special reasons were necessary for breaking through this rule. Thus it is apparent that the eleven first abbots of Iona after Columba, proceeded, with the exception of one individual, from the same stock as himself, from the race of Tyrconnel, and were all descended from the same son of Niall of the Nine Hostages, the famous king of all Ireland.²⁸⁶ Every great monastery became thus the centre and appanage of a family, or, to speak more exactly, of a clan, and was alike the school and the asylum of all the founder's kindred. At a later period a kind of succession, purely laic and hereditary, developed itself by the side of the spiritual posterity, and was invested with the possession of most of the monastic domains. These two lines of descendants, simultaneous but distinct, from the principal monastic founders, are distinguished in the historical genealogies of Ireland under the names of ecclesiastica progenies and of plebilis progenies.²⁸⁷

²⁸⁵ During his short abbacy, it is apparent that all was not unanimous adhesion and enthusiasm. A certain Bevan, described as a persecutor of the Churches, once sent to ask the remains of the meal which the monks of Iona had just eaten, in order to turn them into derision. "Nec ob aliud hoc postulabat, nisi ut causam blasphemiae ac despectionis fratrum inveniret." Baithen sent to him what remained of the milk which had made the repast of the brethren. After he had drunk it, the scoffer was seized with such suffering, that he was converted, and died confessing his repentance. — ACT. SS. BOLLAND., vol. ii. June, p. 238.

²⁸⁶ See the genealogical table given by Dr. Reeves, at page 313 of his edition of Adamnan.

²⁸⁷ Dr. Reeves has thoroughly examined this curious question in a special

After the ninth century, in consequence of the relaxation of discipline, the invasion of married clerks, and the increasing value of land, the line of spiritual descent confounded itself more and more with that of natural inheritance, and there arose a crowd of abbots purely lay and hereditary, as proud of being the collateral descendants of a holy founder, as they were happy to possess the vast domains with which the foundation had been gradually enriched. This fatal abuse made its appearance also in France and Germany, but was less inveterate than in Ireland, where it still existed in the time of St Bernard; and in Scotland, where it lasted even after the Reformation.

It was never thus at Iona, where the abbatial succession was always perfectly regular and uninterrupted up to the invasions and devastations of the Danes at the commencement of the ninth century. From the time of those invasions the abbots of Iona began to occupy an inferior position. The radiant centre from which Christian civilization had shone upon the British Isles grew dim.²⁸⁸ The headquarters of the communities united under the title of the Family or Order of Columb-kill, were transferred from Iona to one of the other foundations of the saint at Kells, in the centre of Ireland, where a successor of Columba, superior-general of the order, titular abbot of Iona, Armagh, or some other great Irish monastery, and bearing the distinctive title of Coarb, resided for three centuries more.²⁸⁹

We have lingered too long over the great and touching figure of the saint whose life we have just recorded. And it now remains to us to throw a rapid glance at the influence which he exercised on all around him, and even upon posterity.

paper, On the Ancient Abbatial Succession in Ireland, ap. Proceedings of the Royal Irish Academy, vol. vii., 1857.

²⁸⁸ Magnns, king of Norway, after having conquered the Hebrides, visited Iona in 1097, and annexed the islands to the bishopric of Sodor and Man (Sodorensis), under the metropolitan of Drontheim, which destroyed the ancient ecclesiastical tradition in the island. In 1203, an abbot of Iona, who came from Ireland, and belonged to the family of Columba, is mentioned for the last time. In 1214, there is mention of a priory of the order of Cluny, the origin of which is unknown. — LANIGAN, vol. iv. p. 347; COSMO INNES, p. 110. The temporal sovereignty fell to the famous Lords of the Isles, immortalized by Walter Scott, and whose tombs may still be seen there. — See Appendix A.

²⁸⁹ See the detailed chronology of the forty-nine successors of Columba, and of their arts and laws, from 597 to 1219, in the Chronicon Hyense of Reeves, from page 359. These Coarbs have been strangely confounded by Ussher, Ware, Lanigan, and other writers, with the chorepiscopi of the continent.

This influence is especially evident in the Irish Church, which seems to have been entirely swayed by his spirit, his successors, and his disciples, during the time which is looked upon as the Golden Age in its history, and which extends up to the period of the Danish invasions, at the end of the eighth century. During all this time the Irish Church, which continued, as from its origin, entirely monastic, seems to have been governed by the recollections or institutions of Columba. The words Lex Columbcille are found on many pages of its confused annals, and indicate sometimes the mass of traditions preserved by its monasteries, sometimes the tributes which the kings levied for the defence of the Church and country, while carrying through all Ireland the shrine which contained his relics.²⁹⁰ The continued influence of the great abbot of Iona was so marked, even in temporal affairs, that more than two centuries after his death, in 817, the monks of his order, Congregatio Columbcille, went solemnly to Tara, the ancient capital of Druidical Ireland, to excommunicate there the supreme monarch of the island, who had assassinated a prince of the family of their holy chief.²⁹¹

Posthumous influence of Columba upon the Irish Church.

Lex Columbcille.

It has been said, and cannot be sufficiently repeated, that Ireland was then regarded by all Christian Europe as the principal centre of knowledge and piety. In the shelter of its numberless monasteries a crowd of missionaries, doctors, and preachers were educated for the service of the Church and the propagation of the faith in all Christian countries. A vast and continual development of literary and religious effect²⁹² is there apparent, superior to anything that could be seen in any other country of Europe. Certain arts—those of architecture, carving, metallurgy, as applied to the decoration of churches—were successfully cultivated, without speaking of music, which continued to flourish both among the learned and among the people. The classic languages—not only Latin but Greek—were cultivated, spoken, and written with a sort of passionate pedantry, which shows at least how powerful was the sway of intellectual influences over these ardent souls. Their mania for Greek was even carried so far that they wrote the Latin of the church books

Great intellectual development of the Irish monasteries.

²⁹⁰ This occurred in 753, 757, and 778.

²⁹¹ Annals of Ulster, ann. 817.

²⁹² "Scripturarum tam liberalium quam ecclesiasticarum."

in Hellenic characters.²⁹³ And in Ireland more than anywhere else, each monastery was a school, and each school a workshop of transcription, from which day by day issued new copies of the Holy Scriptures and the Fathers of the primitive Church—copies which were dispersed through all Europe, and which are still to be found in Continental libraries. They may easily be recognized by the original and elegant character of their Irish writing, as also by the use of the alphabet common to all the Celtic races, and afterwards employed by the Anglo-Saxons, but to which in our day the Irish alone have remained faithful. Columba, as has been seen, had given an example of this unwearied labor to the monastic scribes; his example was continually followed in the Irish cloisters, where the monks did not entirely limit themselves to the transcription of Holy Scripture, but reproduced also Greek and Latin authors, sometimes in Celtic character, with gloss and commentary in Irish, like that Horace which modern learning has discovered in the library of Berne.²⁹⁴ These marvellous manuscripts, illuminated with incomparable ability and patience by the monastic family of Columba, excited, five hundred years later, the declamatory enthusiasm of a great enemy of Ireland, the Anglo-Norman historian, Gerald de Barry; and they still attract the attention of archæologists and philologists of the highest fame.²⁹⁵

Exact annals of the events of the time were also made out in all the monasteries. These annals replaced the chronicles of the bards; and so far as they have been preserved, and already published or about to be so, they now form the principal source of Irish history.²⁹⁶ Ecclesiastical records have naturally a greater place in them than civil history. They celebrate especially the memory of the saints, who have always been so numerous in the Irish Church, where each of the great communities can count a circle of holy men, issued from its bosom or attached to its confraternity. Under the name of *sanctilog*y or *festilog*y (for martyrs were too little known in Ireland to justify the usual term of martyrology), this circle of biographies was the spiritual reading of the monks, and the familiar instruction of the surrounding people. Several of these festilogies are in verse, one of which, the most famous of all, is attributed to Angus, called the Culdee, a simple brother, miller of the Monastery of Tallach.²⁹⁷ In this the principal saints of other countries find a place along with three hundred and sixty-five Irish saints, one for each day of the year, who were all celebrated with that pious and patriotic enthusiasm, at once poetical and moral, which burns so naturally in every Irish heart.

²⁹³ REEVES'S Adamnan, pp. 158, 354. In a MS. life of St. Brendan this curious passage occurs: "Habebat . . . missalem librum scriptum Græcis litteris. . . . Et positus est ille liber super altare. . . . Illico jam litteras Græcas scivit sanctus Brendanus, sicuti Latinas quas didicit ab infantia. Et cepit missam cantare."

²⁹⁴ Orelli, in his edition of Horace, says that this Codex of Berne, with its Irish gloss, is of the eighth or ninth century: "Scotice scriptus, antiquissimum omnium quotquot adhuc innotuerunt."

²⁹⁵ "Hæc equidem quanto frequentius et diligentius intueor, semper quasi novis obstupeo, semperque magis et magis admiranda conspicio."—GIRALDUS CAMBRENSIS, Topogr. Hiber., ii. c. 38. Most of these admired and quoted MSS. in Continental or Anglo-Saxon libraries, are of Irish origin, as has been proved by Zeuss, Keller, and Reeves. The MSS. used by the celebrated philologist Zeuss in the composition of his Grammatica Celtica (Lipsiæ, 1853) contain Irish glosses upon the Latin text of Priscian, at St. Gall, on St. Paul's epistles, at Wurzburg, on the commentary of St. Columbanus upon the Psalms, which has been brought from Bobbio to Milan, and on Bede, brought from Reichenau to Carlsruhe.

The name of Culdee leads us to point out in passing the absurd and widespread error which has made the Culdees be looked upon as a kind of monkish order, married and indigenous to the soil, which existed before the introduction of Christianity into Ireland and Scotland by the Roman missionaries, and of whom the great abbot of Iona was the founder or chief. This opinion, propagated by learned Anglicans, and blindly copied by various French writers, is now universally acknowledged as false by sincere and competent judges.²⁹⁸ The Culdees, a sort of third

Angus, the Culdee.

The Cul-
dees.

²⁹⁶ These precious collections were continued by the more recent Orders after the English conquest, and even after the Reformation, up to the seventeenth century. See especially the valuable collection entitled Annals of the Four Masters, that is to say, of the four Franciscans of Donegal, which come down to 1634.

²⁹⁷ See the analysis made of it by O'Curry, Lectures, &c., pp. 364, 371, and, after him, M. de la Villemarqué in his Poésie des Cloîtres Celtiques.

²⁹⁸ According to Dr. Reeves, the name of Culdee or Ceile Dei, answering to the Latin term Servus Dei, appeared for the first time in authentic history with the name of this Angus, who lived in 780. It was afterwards applied to the general body of monks, that is to say, to all the clerks living under a monastic rule in Ireland and Scotland. According to the lamented O'Curry, the Culdees were nothing more than ecclesiastics or laymen, attached to the monasteries, and whose first founder was a St. Malruain, who died in 787 or 792. This information, which the author has derived from the two princes of Irish erudition, agrees perfectly with the conclusions of Dr. Lanigan in his very learned and impartial ecclesiastical history of Ireland, vol. iv. p. 295-300; as also with those of the new Bollandists, vol. viii. of October, p. 86, Disquisitio in Culdeos, ap. Acta S. Reguli. According to the worthy con-order, attached to the regular monasteries, appeared in Ireland, as elsewhere, only in the ninth century, and had never anything more than a trifling connection with the Columban communities.²⁹⁹

Missionary
efforts of the Irish monks out of Ireland.

Still more striking than the intellectual development of which the Irish monasteries were at this period the centre, is the prodigious activity displayed by the Irish monks in extending and multiplying themselves over all the countries of Europe — here to create new schools and sanctuaries among nations already evangelized — there to carry the light of the Gospel, at peril of their lives, to the countries that were still pagan. We should run the risk of forestalling our future task if we did not resist the temptations of the subject, which would lead us to go faster than time, and to follow those armies of brave and untiring Celts, always adventurous and often heroic, into the regions where we shall perhaps one day find them again. Let us content ourselves with a simple list, which has a certain eloquence even in the dryness of its figures. Here is the number, probably very incomplete, given by an ancient writer, of the monasteries founded out of Ireland by Irish monks, led far from their country by the love of souls, and, no doubt, a little also by that love of travel which has always been one of their special distinctions : —

Thirteen in Scotland, Twelve in England,
Seven in France,
Twelve in Armorica,
Seven in Lorraine,
Ten in Alsatia,
Sixteen in Bavaria,
Fifteen in Rhetia, Helvetia, and Allemania; tinuators of the Acta Sanctorum, the Culdees were not monks, but secular brothers, or rather canons, and appeared at soonest in the year 800. At the same time our learned contemporaries remit to the ninth century that translation of the relics of the apostle St. Andrew, who became the patron saint of Scotland in the middle ages, which the legends have attributed to the fourth or sixth. This translation, made by a bishop named Regulus (Rule), occasioned the foundation of the episcopal see and town of St. Andrews on the east coast of Scotland, in the county of Fife, which was made metropolis of the kingdom in 1472, and possesses a university, which dates from 1411. Very fine ruins of the churches destroyed by the Reformers in 1559 are still to be seen there. Since the preceding note was written, a new publication, by Dr. Reeves, The Culdees of the British Islands as they appear in History, with an appendix of Evidences, Dublin, 1864, has summed up and ended all controversy upon this long-disputed question, and given the last blow to the chimeras of sectarian erudition.

²⁹⁹ REEVES'S Adamnan, p. 368.

without counting many in Thuringia and upon the left bank of the Lower Rhine; and, finally, six in Italy.

And that it may be fully apparent how great was the zeal and virtue of which those monastic colonies were at once the product and the centre, let us place by its side an analogous list of saints of Irish origin, whom the gratitude of nations converted, edified, and civilized by them, have placed upon their altars as patrons and founders of those churches whose foundations they watered with their blood:—

A hundred and fifty (of whom thirty-six were martyrs) in Germany,

Forty-five (of whom six were martyrs) in Gaul,

Thirty in Belgium,

Thirteen in Italy,

Eight, all martyrs, in Norway and Iceland.³⁰⁰

In the after part of this narrative we shall meet many of the most illustrious, especially in Germany. Let us confine ourselves here to pointing out, among the thirteen Irish saints honored with public veneration in Italy, him who is still invoked at the extremity of the peninsula as the patron of Tarento under the name of San Cataldo.

His name in Ireland was Cathal, and before he left his country to go on a pilgrimage to Jerusalem, and to become a bishop at Tarento, he had presided over the great monastic school of Lismore,³⁰¹ in the south of Ireland.³⁰² Thanks to his zeal and knowledge, this school had become a sort of university, to which he attracted an immense crowd of students, not only Irish, but foreigners, from Wales, England, France, and even from Germany. When their education was concluded, a portion of them remained to increase the already numerous communities in the holy and lettered city of Lismore; the others carried back with them to their different countries a recollection of the advantages which they owed to Ireland and her monks.³⁰³ ³⁰⁰ STEPHEN WHITE, Apologia, in HAVERTY's History of Ireland.

³⁰¹ See his acts, in COLGAN, p. 542-562, and the BOLLANDISTS, vol. ii. May, p. 569-578. Lanigan (vol. iii. p. 121-128) quotes a life of this saint in Latin verse by Bonaventura Moroni. His father, St. Donatus, is supposed to have been bishop of Lecce, in the same province as Tarento.

³⁰² See the legend of the founder of Lismore, Book VIII. chap. iii.

³⁰³ "Egregia jam et sancta civitas est Lismor, cujus dimidium est asylum, in quo nulla mulier audet intrare, sed plenum est cellis et monasteriis sanctis: et multitudo virorum sanctorum semper illi manet. Viri enim religiosi ex omni parte Hiberniæ, et non solum ex Anglia et Britannia confluent ad eam, volentes ibi migrare ad Christum."—Act. Sanct. Bolland., vol. iii. May, p. 388. "Ad eam brevi excellentiam pervenit, ut ad ipsum audiendum Galli,

Crowd of foreign students, especially of Anglo-Saxons, in
the Irish
cloisters.

For it is important to prove that, while Ireland sent forth her sons into all the regions of the then known world, numberless strangers hastened there to seat themselves at the feet of her doctors, and to find in that vast centre of faith and knowledge all the remnants of ancient civilization which her insular position had permitted her to save from the flood of barbarous invasions.

The monasteries which gradually covered the soil of Ireland were thus the hostelrys of a foreign emigration. Unlike the ancient Druidical colleges, they were open to all. The poor and the rich, the slave as well as the freeman, the child and the old man, had free access and paid nothing. It was not, then, only to the natives of Ireland that the Irish monasteries, occupied and ruled by the sons of Columba, confined the benefits of knowledge and of literary and religious education. They opened their door with admirable generosity to strangers from every country and of every condition; above all, to those who came from the neighboring island, England, some to end their lives in an Irish cloister, some to search from house to house for books, and masters capable of explaining those books. The Irish monks received with kindness guests so greedy of instruction, and gave them both books and masters, the food of the body and the food of the soul, without demanding any recompense.³⁰⁴ The Anglo-Saxons, who were afterwards to repay this teaching with ingratitude so cruel, were of all nations the one which derived most profit from it. From the seventh to the eleventh century English students flocked into Ireland, and for four hundred years the monastic schools of the island maintained the great reputation which brought so many suc-

Angli, Scoti, Teutones aliique finitarum regionum quam plurimi Lesmorum conveniunt." — Officium S. Cataldi, ap. LANIGAN, loco cit. This monastic town of Lismore, the seat of a bishopric since united with that of Waterford, must not be identified with another bishopric called Lismore, situated in an island of the Hebridean archipelago. The Irish Lismore is now specially remarkable for a fine castle of the Duke of Devonshire on the picturesque banks of the Blackwater.

³⁰⁴ "Erant ibidem multi nobilium simul et mediocrium de gente Anglorum qui . . . relicta patria, vel divinæ lectionis, vel continentioris vitæ gratia illo secesserant. Et quidam mox se monasticæ conversationi fideliter mancipaverunt, alii magis circumeundo per cellas magistrorum lectioni operam dare gaudebant, quod omnes Scoti libentissime suscipientes victum eis quotidianum sine pretio, aliis quoque ad legendum et magisterium gratuitum præbere curabant." — BEDE, iii. 27, ad ann. 664. There still existed in Armagh, in 1092, a locality called Trien-Saxon, inhabited by Anglo-Saxon students. — COLGAN, Trias Thaum., p. 300; compare LANIGAN, iii. 490, 493.

cessive generations to dip deeply there into the living waters of knowledge and of faith.

This devotion to knowledge and generous munificence towards strangers, this studious and intellectual life, nourished into being by the sheltering warmth of faith, shone with all the more brightness amid the horrible confusion and bloody disasters which signalize, in so far as concerned temporal affairs, the Golden Age of ecclesiastical history in Ireland, even before the sanguinary invasions of the Danes at the end of the eighth century. It has been said with justice that war and religion have been in all ages the two great passions of Ireland. But it must be allowed that war seems almost always to have carried the day over religion, and that religion did not prevent war from degenerating too often into massacres and assassinations. It is true that after the eighth century there are fewer kings murdered by their successors than in the period between St. Patrick and St. Columba; it is true that three or four of these kings lived long enough to have the time to go and expiate their sins as monks at Armagh or Iona.³⁰⁵ But it is not less true that the annals of the monastic family of Columba present to us at each line with mournful laconism a spectacle which absolutely contradicts the flattering pictures which have been drawn of the peace which Ireland should have enjoyed. Almost every year, such words as the following are repeated with cruel brevity: —

Bellum.

Bellum lacrymabile.

Bellum magnum.

Vastatio.

Spoliatio.

Violatio.

Obsessio.

Strages Magna.

Jugulatio.

And above all, Jugulatio. It is the word which returns oftenest, and in which seems to be summed up the destiny of these unhappy princes and people.

Such an enumeration should give rise to the reflection, what this wild tree of Celtic nature would have been without

³⁰⁵ These kings are, according to the Annals of Tigherneach — Comgall, who died a monk at Lotra (? — perhaps Lure) in 710.

Feachlbeartach, who abdicated in 729, and was a monk for thirty years at Armagh.

Domhnall, or Donald III., who died at Iona in 764.

Niall Fiosach, who died at Iona in 777, after having been a monk for seven years.

The principal kings or monarchs of the island are alone mentioned here. As for the provincial kings, or chieftains of clans, who took the monastic habit, it would be impossible to count them. Many are named in the Cambrensis Eversus of Lynch, c. 30.

Terrible confusions of existence
in Ireland.

the monastic graft. We can thus perceive with what ferocious natures Columba and his disciples had to do. If notwithstanding the preaching of the monks, a state of affairs so barbarous continued to exist, what might it have been had the Gospel never been preached to those savages, and if the monks had not been in the midst of them like a permanent incarnation of the Spirit of God?

The monks were at the same time neither less inactive nor more spared than the women, who fought and perished in the wars precisely like the men, up to the time when the most illustrious of Columba's successors delivered them from that terrible bondage. A single incident drawn from the sanguinary chaos of the period will suffice at once to paint the almost atrocious habits of those Celtic Christians, and the always beneficent influence of monastic authority. A hundred years after the death of Columba, his biographer

Adamnan,
the ninth successor
of Columba,
and his
Law of the Innocents.

and ninth successor, Adamnan, was crossing a plain, carrying his old mother on his back, when they saw two bands fighting, and in the midst of the battle a woman dragging another woman after her, whose breast she had pierced with an iron hook. At this horrible spectacle the abbot's mother seated herself on the ground, and said to him, "I will not leave this spot till thou hast promised me to have women exempted forever from this horror, and from every battle and expedition." He gave her his word, and he kept it. At the next national assembly of Tara, he proposed and carried a law which is inscribed in the annals of Ireland as the Law of Adamnan, or Law of the Innocents, and which forever freed the Irish women from the obligation of military service and all its homicidal consequences.³⁰⁶

At the same time, nothing was more common in Ireland than the armed intervention of the monks in civil wars, or in the struggles between different communities. We may be permitted to believe that the spiritual descendants of Columba reckoned among them more than one monk of character as warlike as their great ancestor, and that there were as many monastic actors as victims in these desperate conflicts. Two centuries after Columba, two hundred monks of his abbey at Durrow perished in a battle with the neighboring monks of Clonmacnoise ; and the old annalists of Ireland speak of a battle which took place in 816, at which eight hundred monks of Ferns were killed. The Irish religious had not given up either the warlike humor or the dauntless courage of their race.

³⁰⁶ "Lex Adamnani. . . . Adamnanus ad Hiberniam pergit et. . . dedit legem innocentium populis."—Annales Ultoniæ, an. 696. Compare PETRIE's Tara, p. 147. REEVES, pp. 51, 53, 179. The assembly was composed of forty ecclesiastics and thirty-nine laymen. They also decreed an annual tribute to be collected over all Ireland for the benefit of the abbot of Iona and his successors.

Nor is it less certain that the studious fervor and persevering patriotism which were such marked features in the character of Columba remained the inalienable inheritance of his monastic posterity — an inheritance which continued up to the middle ages, to the time of that famous statute of Kilkenny, which is an ineffaceable monument of the ferocious arrogance of the English conquerors, even before the Reformation. This statute, after having denounced every marriage between the two races as an act of high treason, went so far as to exclude all native Irish from the monasteries — from those same monasteries which Irishmen alone had founded and occupied for eight centuries, and where, before and after Columba, they had afforded a generous hospitality to the British fugitives and to the victorious Saxons.

Immortal
patriotism of the Irish monks.

But we must not permit ourselves to linger on the Irish coasts. We shall soon again meet her generous and intrepid sons, always the first in the field, and the most ready to expose themselves to danger, among the apostles and propagators of monastic institutions, upon the banks of the Scheldt, the Rhine, and the Danube, where also they were eclipsed and surpassed by the Anglo-Saxons, but where their names, forgotten in Ireland, still shine with a pure and beneficent light.

The influence of Columba, so universal, undeniable, and enduring in his native island, should not have been less so in his adopted country — in that Caledonia which became more and more an Irish or Scotie colony, and thus merited the name of Scotland, which it retained. Notwithstanding, his work has perhaps left fewer authentic traces there. All unite in attributing to him the conversion of the Northern Picts, and the introduction or re-establishment of the faith among the Picts of the South and the Scots of the West. It is also pretty generally agreed to date from his times — even though there is no evidence of their direct subordination to Iona — the great monasteries of Old Melrose,³⁰⁷ Abercorn, Tyn-

Influence
of Columba
in Scotland.

Remains of the ancient Caledonian
Church.

³⁰⁷ Old Melrose, which was the cradle of the great and celebrated Cister-ninghame, and Coldingham, situated between the Forth and the Tweed, and which afterwards became the centres of Christian extension among the Saxons of Northumbria. Further north, but still upon the east coast, the round towers which are still to be seen at Brechin and Abernethy bear witness to their Irish origin, and consequently to the influence of Columba, who was the first and principal Irish missionary in these districts. The same may be said of those primitive and lowly constructions, built with long and large stones laid upon each other, without cement, which are to be found in St. Kilda and other Hebridean isles, and also upon certain points of the neighboring shore, resembling exactly in form the deserted monasteries which are so numerous in the isles of western Ireland.³⁰⁸ Another relic of the primitive Church is found in the caves, hollowed out or enlarged by the hand of man, in the cliffs or mountains of the interior, inhabited of old, as were the grotts of Subiaco and Marmoutier, and as the caves of Meteores in Albania³⁰⁹ are still by hermits, or sometimes even by bishops (as St. Woloc, St. Regulus³¹⁰). Kentigern, the apostle of Strathclyde, appears to us in the legend at the mouth of his episcopal cave, which was hollowed out in the side of a cliff, and where the people looked at him from afar with respectful curiosity, while he studied the direction of the storms at sea, and breathed in with pleasure the first breezes of the spring.

The bishop, Welsh by birth, has already been mentioned in connection with the principality of Wales, where, as we have already seen, he founded an immense monastery during an exile, the cause of which it is impossible to ascertain, but which was the occasion of a relapse into idolatry among his diocesans.³¹¹ The district of Strathclyde or Cumbria, on the west coasts of Britain, from the mouth of the Clyde to that of the Mersey — that is to say, from Glasgow to Liverpool — cian Abbey of Melrose, whose ruins are admired by all travellers and readers of Walter Scott. The site alone now remains.

³⁰⁸ Studied carefully by Lord Dunraven and other members of the learned company called the Irish Archaeological and Celtic Society.

³⁰⁹ CURZON'S Monasteries of the Levant.

³¹⁰ See above, the note of the Bollandists upon the apostolic labors of St. Regulus. An auge or lavatory in stone is still shown near the ruined church of Strath Deveron, which is called St. Woloc's bath, and where mothers came to bathe their sick children. This holy bishop lived in a house built like the first church of Iona. "Pauperculam casam calamis viminibusque contextam." — Breviarium Aberdonense, Propr. SS., p. 14.

³¹¹ Acta SS. Bolland., vol. i. January, p. 819.

was occupied by a mingled race of Britons and Scots, whose capital was Al-Cluid, now Dumbarton. A prince called Roderick (Rydderch Haël), whose mother was Irish, and who had been baptized by an Irish monk, hastened, when the authority fell into his hands, to recall Kentigern, who returned, bringing with him a hive of Welsh monks, and established definitively the seat of his apostleship at Glasgow, where Ninian had preceded him nearly a century before without leaving any lasting traces of his passage. Kentigern, more fortunate, established upon the site of a burying-ground consecrated by Ninian the first foundation of the magnificent cathedral which still bears his name.³¹²

It was consecrated by an Irish bishop, brought from Ireland for the purpose, and who celebrated that ceremony without the assistance of other bishops, according to Celtic customs. Kentigern collected round him numerous disciples, all learned in holy literature, all working with their hands, and possessing nothing as individuals — a true monastic community.³¹³ He distinguished himself during all his episcopate by his efforts to bring back to the faith the Picts of Galloway, which formed part of the kingdom of Strathclyde; and afterwards by numerous missions and monastic foundations throughout all Albyn — a name which was then given to midland Scotland. His disciples penetrated even to the Orkney Isles, where they must have met with the missionaries of Iona.³¹⁴

The salutary and laborious activity of Kentigern must often have encroached upon the regions which were specially within the sphere of Columba. But the generous heart of Columba was inaccessible to jealousy. He was besides the personal friend of Kentigern and of King Roderick.³¹⁵ The fame of the Bishop of Strathclyde's apostolic ³¹² St. Mungo's. This is the name borne by Kentigern in Scotland, and means dearest. Kentigern seems to be derived from Ken, which means head, and Tiern, lord, in Welsh (BOLLAND., p. 820). The existing cathedral of Glasgow was begun in 1124 by Bishop Jocelyn, a monk of Melrose, who at the same time caused a life of his predecessor Kentigern, derived from ancient authorities, to be written by another Jocelyn, a monk of Ferness.

³¹³ "Accito autem de Hibernia uno episcopo, more Britonum et Scotorum, in episcopum ipsum consecrari fecerunt. . . . In singulis casulis, sicut ipse sanctus Kentigernus, commorabantur. Unde et singulares clerici a vulgo Caldeei nuncupabantur." — JOCELYN, Vita S. Kentig. This last passage, quoted by Reeves, The Culdees of the British Isles, p. 27, is not in the text given by the Bollandists.

³¹⁴ See above, p. 81.

³¹⁵ ADAMNAN, i. 15.

labors drew him from his isle to do homage to his rival. He arrived from Iona with a great train of monks, whom he arranged in three companies at the moment of their entrance into Glasgow. Kentigern distributed in the same way the numerous monks who surrounded him in his episcopal monastery, and whom he led out to meet the abbot of Iona. He divided them, according to their age, into three bands, the youngest of whom marched first; then those who had reached the age of manhood; and, last of all, the old and gray-haired, among whom he himself took his place. They all chanted the anthem In viis Domini magna est gloria Domini, et via justorum facta est: et iter sanctorum præparatum est. The monks of Iona, on their side, chanting in choir the versicle, Ibunt sancti de virtute in virtutem: videbitur Deus eorum in Sion. From each side echoed the Alleluia; and it was to the sound of those words of Holy Scripture, chanted in Latin by the Celtic monks of Wales and Ireland, that the two apostles of the Picts and Scots met at what had been the extreme boundary of the Roman Empire and limit of the power of the Cæsars, and upon a soil henceforth forever freed from paganism and idolatry. They embraced each other tenderly, and passed several days in intimate and friendly intercourse.

The historian who has preserved for us the account of this interview does not conceal a less edifying incident. He confesses that some robbers had joined themselves to the following of the abbot of Iona, and that they took advantage of the general enthusiasm to steal a ram from the bishop's flock. They were soon taken; but Kentigern pardoned them. Columba and his fellow-apostle exchanged their pastoral cross before they parted, in token of mutual affection.³¹⁶ Another annalist describes them as living together for six months in the monastery which Columba had just founded at Dunkeld, and together preaching the faith to the inhabitants of Atho, and the mountainous regions inhabited by the Picts.³¹⁷

I know not how far we may put faith in another narrative ³¹⁶ "Sancti viri famam audiens, ad illum venire, visitare et familiaritatem ejus habere cupiebat . . . cum multa discipulorum turba. . . . In tertia turma senes decora canitie venerabiles. . . . Appropinquant ad invicem sancti in amplexus mutuos et oscula sancta ruunt. . . . Venerunt cum sancto Columba quidam filii Belial ad furta et peccata assueti. . . . In signum mutuae dilectionis alterius baculum suscepit."—BOLLAND., p. 821. The cross given by Columba to Kentigern was long preserved and venerated in the Anglo-Saxon Monastery of Ripon, Yorkshire.

³¹⁷ HECTOR BOETIUS, Hist. Scotorum, l. ix.

of the same author, which seems rather borrowed from the Gallo-Breton epic of Tristan and Iseult than from monastic legend, but which has nevertheless remained Kentigern's most popular title to fame. The wife of King Roderick, led astray by a guilty passion for a knight of her husband's court, had the weakness to bestow upon him a ring which had been given to her by the king. When Roderick was out hunting with this knight, the two took refuge on the banks of the Clyde during the heat of the day, and the knight, falling asleep, unwittingly stretched out his hand, upon which the king saw the ring which he had given to the queen as a token of his love. It was with difficulty that he restrained himself from killing the knight on the spot; but he subdued his rage, and contented himself by taking the ring from his finger and throwing it into the river, without awakening the guilty sleeper. When he had returned to the town he demanded his ring from the queen, and, as she could not produce it, threw her into prison, and gave orders for her execution. She obtained, however, a delay of three days, and having in vain sought the ring from the knight to whom she had given it, she had recourse to the protection of St. Kentigern. The good pastor knew or divined all—the ring, found in a salmon which he had caught in the Clyde, was already in his hands. He sent it to the queen, who showed it to her husband, and thus escaped the punishment which awaited her. Roderick even asked her pardon on his knees, and offered to punish her accusers. From this, however, she dissuaded him, and hastening to Kentigern, confessed her fault to him, and was commanded to pass the rest of her life in penitence. It is for this reason that the ancient effigies of the apostle of Strathclyde represent him as holding always the episcopal cross in one hand, and in the other a salmon with a ring in its mouth.³¹⁸

But neither Kentigern, whose labors can scarcely be said to have survived him, nor Columba, whose influence upon the Picts and Scots was so powerful and lasting, exercised any direct or efficacious ac-

The legend
of the queen's ring.

Neither
Kentigern
nor Columba affect the Anglo-
Saxons,

³¹⁸ "Contigit reginam . . . pretiosum annulum ob immensum amorem sibi a rege commendatum eidem militi contulisse. . . . Discopulatis canibus. . . . Fatigatus autem miles extenso brachio dormire cepit. . . . Quum illa secreto militi in vanum mittens proferre non posset. . . . Lacrymosis precibus rem gestam sancto Kentigerno per nuntium exposuit. . . . Contristatus rex pro illatis reginæ injuriis, et veniam flexis genibus petens." — BOLLAND., p. 820; compare p. 815.

who continue always pagan, and more and more formidable.

tion upon the Anglo-Saxons, who became stronger and more formidable from day to day, and whose ferocious incursions threatened the Caledonian tribes no less than the Britons. It is apparent, however, that the great abbot of Iona, did not share the repugnance, which had hardened into a system of repulsion, of the Welsh clergy for the Saxon race: express mention, on the contrary, is made in the most authentic documents connected with his history, of Saxon Monks, who had been admitted into the community of Iona. One of them, for instance, had the office of baker there, and was reckoned among Columba's intimates.³¹⁹ But nothing indicates that these Saxons, who were enrolled under the authority of Columba, exercised any influence from thence upon their countrymen. On the contrary, while the Scotie-Briton missionaries spread over all the corners of Caledonia, and while Columba and his disciples carried the light of the Gospel into the northern districts where it had never penetrated, the Christian faith and the Catholic Church languished and gave up the ghost in the southern part of the island under the ruins heaped up everywhere by the Saxon conquest.

Paganism and barbarism, vanquished by the Gospel in the Highlands of the north, again arose and triumphed in the south—in the most populous, accessible, and flourishing districts—throughout all that country, which was destined hereafter to play so great a part in the world, and which already began to call itself England. From 569 to 586—ten years before the death of Columba, and at the period when his authority was best established and most powerful in the north—the last champions of Christian Britain were finally cast out beyond the Severn, while at the same time new bands of Anglo-Saxons in the north, driving back the Picts to the other side of the Tweed, and crossing the Humber to the south, founded the future kingdoms of Mercia and Northumbria. It is true that at a later period the sons of Columba carried the Gospel to those Northumbrians and Mercians. But at the end of the sixth century, after a hundred and fifty years of triumphant invasions and struggles, the Saxons had not yet encountered in any of the then Christian, or at least converted nations (Britons, Scots, and Picts), which they had assailed, fought, and vanquished, either missionaries disposed to announce the good news to them, nor priests capable of maintaining the precious nucleus of faith among the conquered races. In 586 the two last bishops of conquered Britain, those of London and York, abandoned their churches and took refuge in the mountains of Wales, carrying with them the sacred vessels and holy relics which they had been able to save from the rapacity of the idolaters. Other husbandmen were then necessary. From whence were they to come? From the same inextinguishable centre, whence light had been brought to the Irish by Patrick, and to the Britons and Scots by Palladius, Ninian, and Germain.

³¹⁹ Cummineus (apud Colgan, p. 320) mentions two Saxons: "Quidam religiosus frater, Genereus nomine, Saxo natione, pictor opere." And subsequently: "Duo ejus discipuli, Lugneus filius Blas et Pillo Saxo genere." Adamnan (iii. 10-22) corrects the conclusions which some authors have drawn from the word pictor by employing the words, opus pistorium exercens. See ante, p. 86.

And already they are here! At the moment when Columba approached the term of his long career in his northern isle, a year before his death, the envoys of Gregory the Great left Rome, and landed where Cæsar had landed, upon the English shore.

BOOK X.

ST. AUGUSTIN OF CANTERBURY AND THE ROMAN MISSIONARIES IN ENGLAND, 597-633.

“Hodie illuxit nobis dies redemptionis novæ, reparationis antiquæ, felicitatis æternæ.” — Christmas Office, Roman Breviary.

CHAPTER I.

MISSION OF ST. AUGUSTIN.

Origin and character of the Anglo-Saxons. — They have not to struggle, like the Franks, against the Roman decadence. — The seven kingdoms of the Heptarchy. — Institutions, social and political: government patriarchal and federal; seignury of the proprietors: the witenagemot or parliament; social inequality, the ceorls and the eorls; individual independence and aristocratic federation; fusion of the two races. — The conquered Britons lose the Christian faith. — Vices of the conquerors: slavery; commerce in human flesh. — The young Angles in the Roman market seen and bought by the monk Gregory. — Elected Pope, Gregory undertakes to convert the Angles by means of the monks of his Monastery of Mt. Cælius, under the conduct of the abbot Augustin. — Critical situation of the Papacy. — Journey of the missionary monks across Gaul; their doubts; letters of Gregory. — Augustin lands at the same spot as Cæsar and the Saxon conquerors in the Isle of Thanet. — King Ethelbert; the queen, Bertha, already a Christian. — First interview under the oak; Ethelbert grants leave to preach. — Entry of the missionaries into Canterbury. — The spring-tide of the Church in England. — Baptism of Ethelbert. — Augustin Archbishop of Canterbury. — The palace of the king changed into a cathedral. — Monastery of St. Augustin beyond the walls of Canterbury. — Donation from the king and the parliament.

Who then were the Anglo-Saxons, upon whom so many efforts were concentrated, and whose conquest is ranked, not without reason, among the most fruitful and most happy that the Church has ever accomplished? Of all the Germanic tribes, the most stubborn, intrepid, and independent, this people seems to have transplanted with themselves into the great island which owes to them its name, the genius of the Germanic race, in order that it might bear on this predestined soil its richest and most abundant fruits. The Saxons brought with them a language, a character, and institutions stamped with a strong and invincible originality. Language, character, institutions, have triumphed, in their essential features, over the vicissitudes of time and fortune — have outlived all ulterior conquests, as well as all foreign influences, and, plunging their vigorous roots into the primitive soil of Celtic Britain, still exist at the indestructible foundation of the social edifice of England. Different from the Franks and Goths, who suffered themselves to be speedily neutralized or absorbed in Gaul, Italy, and Spain by the native elements, and still more by the remains of the Roman Decadence, the Saxons had the good fortune to find in Britain a soil free from imperial pollution. Less alienated from the Celtic Britons by their traditions and institutions — perhaps even by their origin — than by the jealousies and resentments of conquests, they had not after their victory to struggle against a spirit opposed to their own. Keeping intact and untamable their old Germanic spirit, their old morals, their stern independence, they gave from that moment to the free and proud genius of their race a vigorous upward impulse which nothing has ever been able to bear down.

The seven kingdoms
of the Heptarchy.

Starting in three distinct and successive emigrations from the peninsular region which separates the Baltic from the North Sea, they had found in the level shores of Britain a climate and an aspect like those of their native country. At the end of a century and a half of bloody contests they had made themselves masters of all that now bears the name of England, except the coast and the hilly regions of the west. They had founded there, by fire and sword, the seven kingdoms so well known under the title of the Heptarchy, which have left their names to several of the existing divisions of that country, where nothing falls into irreparable ruin, because everything there, as in nature, takes a new form and a fresh life. The Jutes, the first and most numerous immigrants, had established in the angle of the island nearest to Germany, the kingdom of Kent, and occupied a part of the coast of the Channel (the Isle of Wight and Hampshire). Then the Saxons, properly so called, spreading out and consolidating themselves from the east to the south, and from the south to the west, had stamped their name and their authority on the kingdoms of Essex, Sussex, and Wessex.¹ Finally, the Angles laid hold of the north and the east, and there planted, first, the kingdom of East Anglia on the coast of the North Sea, and next that of Mercia in the unoccupied territory between the Thames and the Humber; then, to the north of the latter river, the largest of all the Saxon kingdoms, Northumbria, almost always divided into two, Deira and Bernicia, the confines of which stretched away to join the Picts and Scots, beyond even the limits which the Roman domination had lately reached.

This race of pirates and plunderers, hunters and robbers of their kind, possessed nevertheless the essential elements of social order. They made this clearly apparent as soon as they were able to settle down, and to adjust their settlements on that insular soil which the Britons had not been able to defend against the Romans, nor the Romans against the barbarians of the north, nor these last against the hardy seamen from the east. The Anglo-Saxons alone have been able to establish there an immovable order of society, whose first foundations were laid when the missionary monks came to bring to them the lights of faith and of Christian virtue.

Political and social institutions
of the Anglo-
Saxons.

At the end of the sixth century the Anglo-Saxons already formed a great people, subject, as the Celtic races had been, to the patriarchal and federal rule, which so happily distinguished those brave and free nations from the rabble corrupted by the solitary despotism of Rome. But among them, as among all the Germanic races, this government was secured by the powerful guarantee of property.

The wandering and disorderly clan, the primitive band of pirates and pillagers, disappears, or transforms itself, in order to make room for the family permanently established by the hereditary appropriation of the soil; and this soil was not only snatched from the vanquished race, but laboriously won from the forests, fens, and untilled moors. The chiefs and men of substance of these leading families formed a sovereign and warlike aristocracy, controlled by the kings, assemblies, and laws.

Property.

The kings all belonged to a kind of caste composed of ¹ Saxons of the East, the South, and the West. The existing county of Middlesex bears witness to the same origin; it is the region inhabited by the Saxons of the Middle.

The kings. the families which professed to trace their descent from Odin or Woden, the deified monarch of German mythology:² their royalty was elective and limited: they could do nothing without the consent of those who accepted them as chiefs, but not as masters. The assemblies, which at first resembled those which Tacitus has recorded as existing among the Germans, and composed of the entire tribe (volk-mot) were speedily limited to the elders, to the wise men (witena-gemot) to the chiefs of the principal families of each tribe or kingdom, and to men endowed with the double prerogative of blood and property. They were held in the open air, under venerable oaks, and at stated periods; they took part in all the affairs of the body politic, and regulated with sovereign authority all rights that were established or defended by the laws.

Laws. The laws themselves were simply treaties of peace discussed and guaranteed by the grand council of each little nation, between the king and those on whom depended his security and his power; between the different parties in every process, civil and criminal; between different groups of free men, all armed and all possessors of lands, incessantly exposed to risk their life, their possessions, the honor and safety of their wives, children, kindred, dependents, and friends, in daily conflicts springing from that individual right of making war which is to be found at the root of all German liberty and legislation.³

Social inequalities: Ceorls and Eorls. Disparity of rank, which was in ancient times the inseparable companion of freedom, existed among the Saxons, as it did everywhere. The class of freemen — ceorls — possessors of land and of political power, who constituted the vital strength of the nation, had under them not only slaves, the fruit of their wars and conquests, but in much greater number servitors, laborers, dependants, who had not the same rights as they possessed; but they in their turn acknowledged as superiors the nobles, the eorls, who were born to command, and to fill the offices of priest, judge, and chief, under the primary authority of the king.⁴

² ETHELWERDI Chronic., lib. i. p. 474, ap. Savile.

³ PALGRAVE, The Rise and Progress of the English Commonwealth, London, 1832. LAPPENBERG, Geschichte von England, Hamburg, 1834. KEMBLE, Codex Diplomaticus Ævi Saxonici (London, 1839-48), and The Saxons in England, London, 1849. Baron D'ECKSTEIN, various notices and memoirs.

⁴ The Anglo-Saxon laws and diplomas, and particularly the charters of

Thus that part of Great Britain which has since taken the name of England, was at this early period made up of an aggregation of tribes and independent communities, among which the exigencies of a common struggle against their warlike neighbors of the north and west helped to develop a gradual tendency towards union. It settled into an aristocratic federation, in which families of a reputedly divine origin presided over the social and military life of each tribe, but in which personal independence was at the base of the whole fabric. This independence was always able to reclaim its rights when a prince more than ordinarily dexterous and energetic encroached upon them. Its influence was everywhere felt in establishing and maintaining social life on the principle of free association for mutual benefit.⁵ All that the freemen had not expressly given over to the chiefs established by themselves, or to associates freely accepted by them, remained forever their own inviolable possession. Such, at that obscure and remote epoch, as in our own day, was the fundamental and gloriously unalterable principle of English public life.

The British population, which had survived the fury of the Saxon Conquest, and which had not been able or willing to seek for refuge in the mountains and peninsulas of Wales and Cornwall, seems to have accommodated itself to the new order of things. When the conquest was fully achieved, in those districts where the indigenous race had not been completely exterminated,⁶ no traces of insurrection or of general discontent are to be found among the British; and the opinion of those who maintain that the condition of the mass of the British population remaining in the conquered regions was not worse under the Saxon invaders than it had been under the yoke of the Romans, or even under that of their native princes, so reviled by their compatriot the historian Gildas, may be admitted as probable.⁷ It may even be supmonastic endowments, constantly repeat this distinction between ceorls and eorls, which is found in the Scandinavian mythology, between the Karls and the Jarls, the offspring of the intercourse of a god with two different women. See the song of the first Edda, entitled Rigsmal. The word ceorl is the parent of the churl of modern English; as eorl is perpetuated in earl. The one has fallen in dignity, the other has risen.

⁵ KEMBLE, Saxons in England, vol. ii. p. 312.

⁶ It has been already stated that in some districts the Saxons annihilated the conquered population. But this was only in exceptional cases. See on this subject the excellent summary of Burke in his Abridged Essay on the History of England — a work too much forgotten, though altogether worthy of the greatest of Englishmen.

⁷ Such is, especially, the opinion of Kemble, who otherwise generalizes posed that this fusion of the conquerors and the conquered was productive of great benefit to the former. It would be hard to say whether the heroic tenacity which has become the distinctive characteristic of the English may not have been derived mainly from that vigorous race which, after having coped with Cæsar, proved itself the only one among all the nations subjected to the Roman yoke capable of struggling for two centuries against the invasion of the barbarians.⁸

The vanquished Britons
lose the Christian
faith.

But this assimilation of the two races could not but operate to the prejudice of the Christian faith. Unlike the barbarian invaders of the Continent, the Saxons did not adopt the religion of the people they had subdued. In Gaul, Spain, and Italy, Christianity had flourished anew, and gained fresh strength under the dominion of the Franks and the Goths; it had conquered the conquerors. In Britain it disappeared under the pressure of the alien conquest. No traces of Christianity remained in the districts under Saxon sway when Rome sent thither her missionaries. Here and there a ruined church might be found, but not one living Christian amongst the natives;⁹ conquerors and conquered alike were lost in the darkness of paganism.

It is not necessary to inquire whether, along with this proud and vigorous independence, in which we have recognized a rare and singularly advanced condition of political intelligence and social vitality, the Anglo-Saxons exhibited moral virtues of an equally elevated order. Such an assertion no one would be disposed to believe. Certainly "there existed under this native barbarism noble dispositions unknown to the Roman world. Under the brute the free man, and also the man of heart, might always be discovered."¹⁰ Even more, intermingled with daily outbursts of daring and of violence there might also be found miracles of heroic and simple devotion — of sincere and lofty enthusiasm — which emulated or forestalled Christianity. But alongside of these too freely upon the exaggerations of history in relation to the oppression or extermination of vanquished nations. The events which since 1772 have occurred in Poland, in Lithuania, in Circassia, and elsewhere, prove that it is very possible, even in the full light of modern civilization, and under princes consecrated before the altar of the living God, to proceed with an invincible determination to the destruction of human races.

⁸ LA BORDERIE, p. 231.

⁹ BURKE, Works, vol. vi. p. 216.

¹⁰ TAINÉ, Histoire de la Littérature Anglaise.

wonders of primitive virtue, what miracles of vice and crime, of avarice, lust, and ferocity! The religion of their Scandinavian forefathers, whose primitive myths concealed no small amount of traditional truth under symbols full of grace and majesty, was only too soon corrupted or obscured. It did not preserve them from any excess, superstition, or fetishism: perhaps not even from the human sacrifices which were known to all other pagan nations. What could be expected in point of morality from people accustomed to invoke and to worship Worden, the god of massacres, Freya, the Venus of the North, the goddess of sensuality, and all these bloody and obscene gods of whom one had for his emblem a naked sword, and another the hammer with which he broke the heads of his enemies? ¹¹ The immortality which was promised to them in their Walhalla but reserved for them new days of slaughter and nights of debauch, spent in drinking deep from the skulls of their victims. And in this world their life was but too often only a prolonged orgie of carnage, rapine, and lechery. The traditional respect for woman which marked the Germanic tribes was limited among the Saxons, as elsewhere, by singular exceptions, and did not extend beyond the princesses or the daughters of the victorious and dominant race.

Vices of the conquerors.

Such mercy as they ever showed to the vanquished consisted only in sparing their lives in order to reduce them to servitude, and sell them as slaves. That frightful slave-traffic which has disgraced successively all pagan and all Christian nations was among them carried on with a kind of inveterate passion. ¹² It needed, as we shall see, whole centuries of incessant efforts to extirpate it. Nor was it only captives and vanquished foes that they condemned to this extremity of misfortune and shame: it was their kindred, their fellow-countrymen; even, like Joseph's brethren, those of their own blood, their sons and daughters, that they set up to auction and sold to merchants who came from the Continent to supply themselves in the Anglo-Saxon market with these human chattels. It was by this infamous commerce that Great

Slavery.

The trade in human cattle.

¹¹ See the interesting chapter on the religion of the Germans in Ozanam's Germaines avant le Christianisme, 1847.

¹² "Venales ex Northumbria pueri, familiari et pene ingenita illi nationi consuetudine, adeo ut, sicut nostra quoque sæcula viderunt non dubitarent arctissimas necessitudines sub prætextu minimorum commodorum distrahere." — WILLELMUS MALMESBURIENSIS, De Gestis Regum Anglorum, 1. 3.

Britain, having become almost as great a stranger to the rest of Europe as she was before the days of Cæsar, re-entered the circle of the nations, making herself known once more, as in the time of Cæsar, when Cicero anticipated no other profit to Rome from the expedition of the proconsul than the produce of the sale of British slaves.¹³

Nevertheless, it was from the depth of this shameful abyss that God was about to evolve the opportunity of delivering England from the fetters of paganism, of introducing her by the hand of the greatest of the Popes into the bosom of the Church, and, at the same time, of bringing her within the pale of Christian civilization.

Who will ever explain to us how these traffickers in men found a market for their merchandise at Rome? Yes, at Rome, in the full light of Christianity, six centuries after the birth of the Divine Deliverer, and three centuries after the peace of the Church; at Rome, governed since Constantine by Christian emperors, and in which was gradually developing the temporal sovereignty of the Popes. It was so, however, in the year of grace 586 or 587, under Pope Pelagius II. Slaves of both sexes and of all countries, and among them some children, young Saxons, were exposed for sale in the Roman forum like any other commodity. Priests and monks mingled with the crowd that came to bid or to look on at the auction; and among the spectators appears the gentle, the generous, the immortal Gregory.¹⁴ He thus learned to detest this leprosy of slavery which it was afterwards given him to restrict and to contend against, though not to extirpate it.¹⁵

This scene, which the father of English history found among the traditions of his Northumbrian ancestors, and the dialogue in which are portrayed with such touching and quaint originality the pious and compassionate spirit of Gregory, and at the same time his strange love of punning, has been a hundred times rehearsed. Every one knows how, at the sight of these young slaves, struck with the beauty of their counte-

Anglo-Saxon children sold at Rome.

St. Gregory the Great inquires about, and redeems them.

¹³ "Britannici belli exitus expectatur. . . . Illud cognitum est, neque argenti scripulum ullum esse in illa insula, neque ullam spem prædæ nisi ex mancipiis."—Epist. ad. Attic., iv. 16.

¹⁴ "Die quadam cum advenientibus nuper mercatoribus multa venalia in forum fuissent collata, multique ad emendum confluxissent, et ipsum Gregorium inter alios advenisse, ac vidisse inter alia pueros venales positos."—BEDE, ii. 1.

¹⁵ JOAN. DIAC., Vita S. Gregorii, iv. 45, 46, 47. S. GREG., Epist., iv. 9, 13; vii. 24, 38, and elsewhere.

nances, the dazzling purity of their complexions, the length of their fair locks (probably index of aristocratic birth) he inquired what was their country and their religion. The slave-dealer informed him that they came from the island of Britain, where every one had the same beauty of complexion, and that they were heathens. Heaving a profound sigh, "What evil luck," cried Gregory, "that the Prince of Darkness should possess beings with an aspect so radiant, and that the grace of these countenances should reflect a soul void of the inward grace! But what nation are they of?" "They are Angles." "They are well named, for these Angles have the faces of angels; and they must become the brethren of the angels in heaven. From what province have they been brought?" "From Deira" (one of the two kingdoms of Northumbria). "Still good," answered he. "De ira eruti—they shall be snatched from the ire of God, and called to the mercy of Christ. And how name they the king of their country?" "Alle or Ælla." "So be it; he is right well named, for they shall soon sing the Alleluia in his kingdom."¹⁶

It is natural to believe that the rich and charitable abbot bought these captive children, and that he conveyed them at once to his own home—that is to say, to the palace of his father, where he was born, which he had changed into a monastery, and which was not far from the forum where the young Britons were exposed for sale. The purchase of these three or four slaves was thus the origin of the redemption of all England.

An Anglo-Saxon chronicler, a Christian but a layman, who wrote four centuries later, but who exemplifies the influence of domestic traditions among that people by giving to his own genealogy a very high rank in the history of his race,¹⁷

¹⁶ "Nec silentio prætereunda opinio quæ de beato Gregorio traditione majorum ad nos usque perlata est. . . . Candidi et lactei corporis, venusti vultus, capillorum forma egregia . . . crine rutila. . . . Intimo ex corde suspiria ducens . . . interrogavit mercatorem. . . . De Britannia insula cujus incolarum omnis facies simili candore fulgescit. . . . Heu proli dolor! quod tam lucidi vultus . . . tantaque gratia frontispicii. . . . Bene Angli quasi angeli, quia et angelicos vultus habent . . . Bene quia rex dicitur Ælle. Alleluia etenim in partibus illis oportet decantari."—BEDE, loc. cit. PAUL DIAC., Vita S. Gregorii, c. 14. JOAN DIAC., Vita S. Gregorii, i. 21. GOTSELINI, Historia Maior de Vita S. Augustini, c. 4. LAPPENBERG, p. 138. The name of Ælla fixes the date of this incident to a period necessarily prior to the death of this prince in 588.

¹⁷ ETHELWERDI Chronic., lib. ii. c. 1. See his curious preamble to his cousin Matilda, in Savile, and the remarks of Lappenberg, p. 55.

says expressly that Gregory lodged his guests in the triclinium, where he loved to serve with his own hand the table of the poor, and that after he had instructed and baptized them, it was his desire to take them with him as his companions, and to return to their native land in order to convert it to Christ. All authors unanimously admit that from that moment he conceived the grand design of bringing over the Anglo-Saxons to the Catholic Church. To this design he consecrated a perseverance, a devotion, and a prudence which the greatest men have not surpassed. We have already seen how, after this scene in the slave-market, he sought and obtained from the Pope permission to go as a missionary to the Anglo-Saxons, and how, at the tidings of his departure, the Romans, after overwhelming the Pope with reproaches, ran after their future pontiff, and, overtaking him three days' journey from Rome, brought him back by force to the Eternal City.¹⁸

590.

Scarcely had he been elected Pope, when his great and cherished design became the object of his constant thought. His intrepid soul dwells on it with an unfailing interest, and his vast correspondence everywhere testifies its existence.¹⁹ While waiting until he should discover the fit man to conduct this special mission, he never forgot the English slaves — the heathen children whose sad lot had been the means of revealing to him the conquest which God had in store for him, and whose brothers were to be found in the slave-markets of other Christian countries. He writes to the priest Candidius, who had the management of the patrimony of the Roman Church in Gaul, "We charge you to lay out the money which you have received, in the purchase of young English slaves, of seventeen or eighteen years of age, whom you shall train in the monastery for the service of God. In this way the coins of Gaul, which are not current here, will be put on the spot to a suitable use. If you can draw anything from the revenues which they say have been withheld from us, you must employ it equally either to procure clothing for the poor or to buy these young slaves. But as they will yet be heathens, they must be accompanied by a priest, who may baptize them if they fall sick by the way."²⁰ At last, in the ¹⁸ See ante, vol. i. p. 361.

¹⁹ Epist., ix. 108, ad Syagrium episc. Augustodunensem. "Cum pro convertendis Anglis-Saxonibus, quemadmodum in monachatu suo proposuerat, assiduâ cogitationum fluctibus urgeretur." — JOAN. DIAC., ii. 33.

²⁰ "Volumus ut dilectio tua . . . quatenus solidi Galliarum qui in terra sixth year of his pontificate, he decided to select as the apostles of the distant island, whither his thoughts continually carried him, the monks of the Monastery of St. Andrew, on Mount Cœlius, and to appoint as their leader Augustine, the prior of that beloved house.

This monastery is the one which now bears the name of St. Gregory, and is known to all who have visited Rome. That incomparable city contains few spots more attractive and more worthy of eternal remembrance. The sanctuary occupies the western angle of Mount Cœlius, and the site of the hallowed grove and fountain which Roman mythology has consecrated by the graceful and touching fable of Numa and the nymph Egeria.²¹ It is at an equal distance from the Circus Maximus, the baths of Caracalla, and the Coliseum, and near to the church of the holy martyrs John and Paul. The cradle of English Christianity is thus planted on the soil steeped with the blood of many thousands of martyrs. In front rises the Mons Palatinus, the cradle of heathen Rome, still covered with the vast remains of the palace of the Cæsars. To the left of the grand staircase which leads to the existing monastery, three small buildings stand apart on a plot of grass.²² On the door of one you read these words—Triclinium Pauperum; and within is preserved the table at which every day were seated the twelve beggars whom Gregory fed and personally waited upon. The other is dedicated to the memory of his mother, Silvia, who had followed his example in devoting herself to a religious life, and whose portrait he had caused to be painted in the porch of his monastery.²³

The monastery whence issued the apostles of England.

Between these two small edifices stands the oratory dedicated by Gregory, while still a simple monk, to the apostle St. Andrew, at the time when he transformed his patrimonial mansion into the cloister whence were to issue the apostles of England. In the church of the monastery, which now belongs to the Camaldolites, is still shown the pulpit from which Gregory preached, the bed on which he took his brief repose, the altar before which he must have so often prayed for the conversion of his beloved English. On the façade of the nostra expendi non possunt apud locum proprium utiliter expendantur. . . . Sed quia pagani sunt . . . volo ut cum eis presbyter transmittatur ne quid ægritudinis contingat in via, ut quos morituros conspexerit, debeat baptizare."

— Epist., vi. 7.

²¹ AMPERE, L'Histoire Romaine à Rome, pp. 4, 370, 498.

²² GERBET, Esquisse de Rome Chrétienne, vol. i. p. 447.

²³ JOAN DIAC., Vita Gregorii, iv. c. 83.

church an inscription records that thence set out the first apostles of the Anglo-Saxons, and preserves their names.²⁴ Under the porch are seen the tombs of some generous Englishmen who died in exile for their fidelity to the religion which these apostles taught them; and, among other sepulchral inscriptions, this which follows may be remarked and remembered: "Here lies Robert Pecham, an English Catholic, who, after the disruption of England and the Church, quitted his country, unable to endure life there without the faith, and who, coming to Rome, died, unable to endure life here without his country."²⁵

Where is the Englishman worthy of the name who, in looking from the Palatine to the Coliseum, could contemplate without emotion and without remorse this spot from whence have come to him the faith and name of Christian, the Bible of which he is so proud—the Church herself of which he has preserved but the shadow? Here were the enslaved children of his ancestors gathered together and saved. On these stones they knelt who made his country Christian. Under these roofs was the grand design conceived by a saintly mind, intrusted to God, blessed by Him, accepted and carried out by humble and generous Christians. By these steps descended the forty monks who bore to England the word of God and the light of the Gospel along with Catholic unity, the apostolical succession, and the rule of St. Benedict. No country ever received the gift of salvation more directly

²⁴ The following is the exact text of the inscription transcribed by the friendly hand of an eloquent monk of our time and country, Father Hyacinth, of the Barefooted Carmelites:—

EX HOC MONASTERIO
PRODIERVNT

S. GREGORIUS. M. FVNDATOR. ET. PARENS. — S. ELVTHERIVS. AB. — S. IULI-RION. AB. — S. AVGVSTINVS. ANGLOR. APOSTOL. — S. LAVRENTIVS. CANTUAR.
ARCHIEP. — S. MELLITVS. LONDINEN. EP. MOX. ARCHIEP. CANTVAR. — S.
JYSTVS EP. ROFFENSIS. — S. PAVLINVS. EP. EBORAC. — S. MAXIMIANVS. SYRA-CVSAN. EP. — SS. ANTONIVS. MERVLVS. ET. JOANNES. MONACHI. — S. PETRVS.
AB. CANTVAR.

HONORIVS. ARCHIEP. CANTVAR. — MARINIANVS. ARCHIEP. RAVEN. — PROBVS.
XENODOCHI. IEROSOLYMIT. CURATOR. A. S. GREGORIO. ELECT. — SABINVS.
CALLIPOLIT. EP. — FELIX. MESSANEN. EP. — GREGORIUS. DIAC. CARD. S. EU-STACH.

HIC. ETIAM. DIU. VIXIT. M. GREGORII. MATER. S. SILVIA. HOC. MAXIME. COLEN-DA. QVOD. TANTVM. PIETATIS. SAPIENTIAE. ET. DOCTRINAE.

LVMEN. PEPPERERIT.

²⁵ Quoted in the address of M. Augustin Cochlin to the Congress at Malines, 20th August, 1863.

from popes and monks, and none, alas ! so soon and so cruelly betrayed them.

Nothing could be more sad and sombre than the state of the Church at the epoch when Gregory resolved to put his project into execution. This great man — by turns soldier, general, statesman, administrator, and legislator, but always, and before all, pontiff and apostle — had need of more than human boldness to take in hand distant conquests, surrounded as he was by perils and disasters, and at a moment when Rome, devastated by plague, famine, and the inundations of the Tiber, mercilessly taxed and shamelessly abandoned by the Byzantine emperors, was struggling against the aggressions of the Lombards, which became every day more menacing.²⁶ It is not without reason that a writer more learned than enthusiastic represents the expedition of Augustin as an act as heroic as Scipio's departure for Africa while Hannibal was at the gates of Rome.²⁷

Critical
state of the Papacy.

Absolutely nothing is known of Augustin's history previous to the solemn days on which, in obedience to the commands of the pontiff, who had been his abbot, he and his forty comrades tore themselves from the motherly bosom of that community which was to them as their native land. He must, as prior of the monastery, have exhibited distinguished qualifications ere he could have been chosen by Gregory for such a mission. But there is nothing to show that his companions were at that time animated with the same zeal which inspired the Pope. They arrived without hinderance in Provence, and stopped for some time at Lerins, in that Mediterranean isle of the Saints where, a century and a half before, Patrick, the monastic apostle of the western isle of Saints, had sojourned for nine years before he was sent by Pope Celestine to evangelize Ireland. But, there or elsewhere, the Roman monks received frightful accounts of the country which they were going to convert. They were told that the Anglo-Saxon people, of whose language they were ignorant, were a nation of wild beasts, thirsting for innocent blood — a race whom it was impossible to approach or conciliate, and to land on whose coast was to rush to certain destruction. They took fright at these tales ; and in place of continuing their route, they persuaded Augustin to return to Rome to beseech the Pope to relieve them

Journey of the monk-ish missionaries across
Gaul.

²⁶ See ante, vol. i. p. 356.

²⁷ KEMBLE, Saxons in England, vol. ii. p. 357.

from a journey so toilsome, so perilous, and so useless.²⁸ Instead of listening to their request, Gregory sent Augustin back to them with a letter in which they were ordered to recognize him henceforth as their abbot — to obey him in everything, and, above all, not to let themselves be terrified by the toils of the way or by the tongue of the detractor. “Better were it,” wrote Gregory, “not to begin that good work at all, than to give it up after having commenced it. . . . Forward, then, in God’s name! . . . The more you have to suffer, the brighter will your glory be in eternity. May the grace of the Almighty protect you, and grant to me to behold the fruit of your labors in the eternal country; if I cannot share your toil, I shall none the less rejoice in the harvest, for God knows that I lack not good will.”²⁹

Augustin was the bearer of numerous letters of the same date,³⁰ written by the Pope first of all to the Abbot of Lerins, to the Bishop of Aix, and to the Governor of Provence, thanking them for the hearty welcome they had given to his missionaries; and next to the Bishops of Tours, of Marseilles, of Vienne, and of Autun; and, above all, to Virgilius, Metropolitan of Arles, warmly recommending to them Augustin and his mission, but without explaining its nature or its aim.

He acted differently in his letters to the two young kings of Austrasia and of Burgundy, and to their mother, Brunehaut, who reigned in their name over the whole of Eastern France. In appealing to the orthodoxy which distinguished beyond all others the Frank nation, he announces to them that he has learned that the English were disposed to receive the Christian faith, but that the priests of the neighboring regions (that is, of Wales) took no pains to preach it to them; wherefore he asks that the missionaries sent by him to enlighten and save the English may obtain interpreters to go with them across the Straits, and a royal safe-conduct to guarantee their safety during their journey through France.³¹

Thus stimulated and recommended, Augustin and his ²⁸ “Augustini sanctorumque fratrum a maternis visceribus monasterialis ecclesiæ avulserunt. . . . Nuntiatur quod gens quam peterent immanior belluis existeret.” — GOTSELINUS, Historia Maior, c. 3, 6. “Perculsi timore inertī . . . ne tam periculosam, tam laboriosam, tam inutilem prædicationem adire deberent.” — BEDE, i. 23.

²⁹ “Quatenus etsi vobiscum laborare nequeo, simul in gaudio retributionis inveniar, quia laborare scilicet volo.” — BEDE, i. 23.

³⁰ 23d July, 596.

³¹ Epist., vi. 53-59.

monks took courage and again set out upon their way. Their obedience won the victory which the magnanimous ardor of the great Gregory had failed to secure. They traversed the whole of France, ascending the Rhone and descending the Loire, protected by the princes and bishops to whom the Pope had recommended them, but not without suffering more than one insult at the hands of the lower orders, especially in Anjou, where these forty men, in pilgrim garb, walking together, resting sometimes at night under no other shelter than that of a large tree, were regarded as were-wolves, and were assailed (by the women particularly) with yellings and abuse.³²

After having thus traversed the whole of Frankish Gaul, Augustin and his companions brought their journey to a close on the southern shore of Great Britain, at the point where it approaches nearest to the Continent, and where the previous conquerors of England had already landed: Julius Cæsar, who revealed it to the Roman world; and Hengist with his Saxons, who brought to it with its new name the ineffaceable impress of the Germanic race. To these two conquests, a third — destined to be the last — was now about to succeed. For it is impossible to place in the same rank the victorious invasions of the Danes and the Normans, who, akin to the Saxons in blood and manners, have indeed cruelly troubled the life of the English people, but have effected no radical change in its social and moral order, and have not been able to touch either its language, its religion, or its national character.

Augustin
lands where previously Cæsar and the first Saxons had disembarked.

The new conquerors, like Julius Cæsar, arrived under the ensigns of Rome — but of Rome the Eternal, not the Imperial. They came to restore the law of the Gospel which the Saxons had drowned in blood. But in setting, forever, the seal of the Christian faith upon the soil of England, they struck no blow at the independent character and powerful originality of the people, whom, in converting them to the true faith, they succeeded in consolidating into a nation.

On the south side of the mouth of the River Thames, and at the north-east corner of the county of Kent, lies a district which is still called the Isle of Thanet, although the name of ³² "Tot homines peregrinos pedestri incesu et habitu humiles quasi tot lupos et ignota monstra repulere. Muliereculæ simul conglomeratæ tanta . . . insania, tribulatu, despectu, subsannatione, derisione in sanctos Dei sunt debacchata. . . . Stabat juxta ulmus ampla . . . sub hac sancti volentes ipsa nocte requiescere." — GOTSELINUS, c. 10.

isle no longer befits it, as the arm of the sea which at one time separated it from the mainland is now little better than a brackish and marshy brook. There, where the steep white cliffs of the coast suddenly divide to make way for a sandy creek, near the ancient port of the Romans at Richborough, and between the modern towns of Sandwich and Ramsgate,³³ the Roman monks set foot for the first time on British soil.³⁴ The rock which received the first print of the footsteps of Augustin was long preserved and venerated, and was the object of many pilgrimages, in gratitude to the living God for having led thither the apostle of England.³⁵

Immediately on his arrival the envoy of Pope Gregory despatched the interpreters, with whom he had been provided in France, to the king of the country in which the missionaries had landed, to announce to him that they came from Rome, and that they brought to him the best of news — the true glad tidings — the promise of celestial joy, and of an eternal reign in the fellowship of the living and true God.³⁶

The king's name was Ethelbert, which means in Anglo-Saxon noble and valiant.³⁷ Great-grandson of Hengist, the first of the Saxon conquerors, who himself was supposed to be a descendant of one of the three sons of Odin, he reigned for thirty-six years over the oldest kingdom of the Heptarchy — that of Kent — and had just gained over all the other Saxon kings and princes, even to the confines of Northumbria, that kind of military supremacy which was attached to ³³ It is pleasant to know that in this same town of Ramsgate, on the shore where the Abbot Augustin landed, the sons of St. Benedict have been able, after the lapse of thirteen centuries, to erect a new sanctuary, near to a church dedicated to St. Augustin, designed and built by the liberality of the great Catholic architect Pugin. This monastic colony belongs to the new Benedictine province of Subiaco.

³⁴ In a book entitled Historical Memorials of Canterbury, 1855, Dr. Stanley, Dean of Westminster, has examined and determined, with no less enthusiasm than scrupulous exactness, the facts relative to the arrival of St. Augustin. He has confirmed the already old opinion which fixes the very place of his landing at a farm now called Elbsfleet, situated upon a promontory, from which the sea has now withdrawn.

³⁵ STANLEY, p. 14. OAKLEY, Life of St. Augustin, 1844, p. 91. This life forms part of the interesting series of Lives of the English Saints, published by the principal writers of the Puseyite school before their conversion.

³⁶ "Mandavit se venisse de Roma et nuntium ferre optimum . . . æterna in cœlis gaudia et regnum sine fine cum Deo vivo et vero futurum." — BEDE, i. 25.

³⁷ The root Ethel, which we shall find in almost all the names, male and female, which we shall quote, corresponds to the German adjective edel, noble.

the title of Bretwalda, or temporary chief of the Saxon Confederation.³⁸

It was to be supposed that he would have a natural prepossession in favor of the Christian religion. Queen Bertha.
It was the faith of his wife Bertha, who was the daughter of Caribert, king of the Franks of Paris, and grandson of Clovis, and whose mother was that Ingoberga whose gentle virtues and domestic troubles have been recorded by Gregory of Tours.³⁹ She had been affianced to the heathen king of the Saxons of Kent only on the condition that she should be free to observe the precepts and practices of her faith, under the care of a Gaulo-Frankish bishop, Liudhard of Senlis, who had remained with her until his death, which occurred immediately before the arrival of Augustin. Tradition records the gentle and lovable virtues of Queen Bertha, and her judicious zeal for the conversion of her husband and his subjects. It is believed to have been from her that Gregory received his information as to the desire of the English to be converted, with which he had enlisted the interest of Brunehaut and her sons.⁴⁰ The great-granddaughter of St. Clotilda seemed thus destined to be herself the St. Clotilda of England. But too little is known of her life: she has left but a brief and uncertain illumination on those distant and dark horizons over which she rises like a star, the herald of the sun of truth.

Meanwhile King Ethelbert did not immediately permit the Roman monks to visit him in the Roman city of Canterbury where he dwelt. While providing for their maintenance, he forbade their leaving the island on which they had landed until he had deliberated on the course he should pursue. At the close of some days he himself went to visit them, but he would not meet them except in the open air. It is difficult to imagine what pagan superstition made him dread foul play if he allowed himself to be brought under the same roof with the strangers. At the sound of his approach they advanced to meet him in procession.

"The history of the Church," says Bossuet,⁴¹ "contains ³⁸ BEDE, i. 25; ii. 3, 5.

³⁹ GREG. TURON., Hist. Franc., iv. 26; ix. 26.

⁴⁰ "Quam ea conducere a parentibus acceperat, ut ritum fidei ac religionis suæ cum episcopo quem ei adiutorem fidei dederant, nomine Liudhardo, inviolatam servare licentiam haberet." — BEDE, loc. cit. "Pervenit ad nos Anglorum gentem ad fidem Christianam Deo miserante desideranter velle converti." — S. GREGORII Epist., vi. 58; compare Epist., xi. 29.

⁴¹ Discours sur l'Histoire Universelle.

nothing finer than the entrance of the holy monk Augustin into the kingdom of Kent with forty of his companions, who, preceded by the cross and the image of the great king our Lord Jesus Christ, offered their solemn prayers for the conversion of England." At that solemn moment when, upon a soil once Christian, Christianity found itself once more face to face with idolatry, the strangers besought the true God to save, with their own souls, all those souls for whose love they had torn themselves from their peaceful cloister at home, and had taken this hard enterprise in hand. They chanted the litanies in use at Rome in the solemn and touching strains which they had learnt from Gregory, their spiritual father and the father of religious music. At their head marched Augustin, whose lofty stature and patrician presence attracted every eye, for, like Saul, "he was higher than any of the people from his shoulders and upwards."⁴²

The king, surrounded by a great number of his followers, received them seated under a great oak, and made them sit down before him. After having listened to the address which they delivered to him and to the assembly, he gave them a loyal, sincere, and, as we should say in these days, truly liberal answer. "You make fair speeches and promises," he said, "but all this is to me new and uncertain. I cannot all at once put faith in what you tell me, and abandon all that I, with my whole nation, have for so long a time held sacred. But since you have come from so far away to impart to us what you yourselves, by what I see, believe to be the truth and the supreme good, we shall do you no hurt: on the contrary, we shall show you all hospitality, and shall take care to furnish you with the means of living. We shall not hinder you from preaching your religion, and you shall convert whom you can." By these words the king intimated to them his desire to reconcile fidelity to the national customs, with a respect for liberty of conscience too rarely found in history. The Catholic Church thus met, from her first entrance into England, that promise of liberty which has during so many ages been the first and most fundamental article of all English charters and constitutions.

Faithful to his engagement, Ethelbert allowed the missionaries to follow him to Canterbury, where he assigned them a dwelling, which still exists under the name of the Stable ⁴² "Beati Augustini formam et personam patriciam, staturam proceram et arduam, adeo ut a scapulis populo superemineret." — GOTSSEL, Vita, c. 45.

Gate. The forty missionaries made a solemn entry into the town, carrying their silver cross, along with a picture of Christ painted on wood, and chanting in unison the response of their litany, "We beseech Thee, O Lord, by Thy pity, to spare in Thy wrath this city and Thy holy house, for we have sinned. Alleluia." It was thus, says a monastic historian, that the first fathers and teachers of the faith in England entered their future metropolis, and inaugurated the triumphant labors of the cross of Jesus.⁴³

There was outside the town, to the east, a small church dedicated to St. Martin, dating from the time of the Romans, whither Queen Bertha was in the habit of going to pray, and to celebrate the offices of religion. Thither also went Augustin and his companions to chant their monastic office, to celebrate mass, to preach, and to baptize.⁴⁴ Here, then, we behold them, provided, thanks to the royal munificence, with the necessities of life, endowed with the supreme blessing of liberty, and using that liberty in laboring to propagate the truth. They lived here, says the most truthful of their historians, the life of the apostles in the primitive Church — assiduous in prayer, in vigils, in fasts; they preached the word of life to all whom they could reach, and, despising this world's goods, accepting from their converts nothing beyond what was strictly necessary, lived in all harmony with their doctrine, and ever ready to suffer or to die for the truth they preached. The innocent simplicity of their life, and the heavenly sweetness of their doctrine, appeared to the Saxons arguments of an invincible eloquence; and every day the number of candidates for baptism increased.⁴⁵

Such fair days occur at the outset of all great undertak-

⁴³ "Ad jussionem regis residentes, verbum Dei vitæ, una cum omnibus qui aderant ejus comitibus, prædicarent. . . . Pulehra sunt quidem verba et promissa, sed quia nova sunt et incerta. . . . Nec prohibemus quin omnes quos potestis fidei vestræ religionis prædicando societis. . . . Crucem pro vexilla ferentes argenteam et imaginem Domini salvatoris in tabula depictam, lætantiasque canentes. . . . Pro sua simul et eorum propter quos et ad quos venerant salute æterna . . . consona voce." — BEDE, i. 25. "Tali devotione proto-doctoribus et in fide Christi proto-patribus Angliæ metropolim suam cum triumphali crucis labore ingredientibus: Aperite portas," &c. — GOTSSELINUS, Historia Minor de Vita S. Aug., c. 12.

⁴⁴ The existing church rebuilt in the thirteenth century, occupies the place of that which is forever consecrated by the double memory of Bertha the Queen and Augustin the Archbishop. The baptismal fonts are shown there in which, according to tradition, King Ethelbert was baptized by immersion.

⁴⁵ "Paratum ad patiendum adversa quæque, vel etiam ad moriendum animum habendo. . . . Mirantes simplicitatem innocentis vitæ ac dulcedinem doctrinæ eorum cælestis." — BEDE, i. 26.

The springtime of the Church in England.

ings. They do not last, thanks to the lamentable and incurable infirmity of all human things ; but yet they should never be forgotten nor remembered without honor. They are the blossoming time of noble lives. History serves no more salutary purpose than in transmitting their perfume to us. The Church of Canterbury for a thousand years possessed unparalleled splendors ; no Church in the world, after the Church of Rome, has been governed by greater men, or has waged more glorious conflicts. But nothing in her brilliant annals could eclipse the sweet and pure light of that humble beginning, where a handful of strangers, Italian monks, sheltered by the generous hospitality of an honest-hearted king, and guided by the inspiration of the greatest of the Popes, applied themselves in prayer, and abstinence, and toil, to the work of winning over the ancestors of a great people to God, to virtue, and to truth.

Baptism of
King
Ethelbert.

The good and loyal Ethelbert did not lose sight of them ; soon, charmed like so many others by the purity of their life, and allured by their promises, the truth of which was attested by more than one miracle, he sought and obtained baptism at the hand of Augustin. It was on Whit Sunday,⁴⁶ in the year of grace 597, that this Anglo-Saxon king entered into the unity of the Holy Church of Christ. Since the baptism of Constantine, and excepting that of Clovis, there had not been any event of greater moment in the annals of Christendom.⁴⁷

A crowd of Saxons followed the example of their king, and the missionaries issued from their first asylum to preach in all quarters, building churches also here and there. The king, faithful to the last to that noble respect for the individual conscience of which he had given proof even before he was a Christian, was unwilling to constrain any one to change his religion. He allowed himself to show no preference, save a deeper love for those who, baptized like himself, became his fellow-citizens in the heavenly kingdom. The Saxon king had learned from the Italian monks that no constraint is compatible with the service of Christ.⁴⁸ It was not to unite England to the Roman Church, it was in order to tear her from it, a thousand years after this, that another king and other apostles had to employ the torture and the stake.

⁴⁶ 2d June, 597.

⁴⁷ STANLEY, p. 19.

⁴⁸ " Ipse etiam inter alios delectatus vita mundissima sanctorum et promissis . . . quæ vere esse miraculorum quoque multorum ostensione firmaverant. . . . Unitati se sanctæ Ecclesiæ Christi credendo sociare. Quorum fidei et conversioni ita congratulatus esse rex perhibetur, ut nullum tamen cogcret ad Christianismum : sed tantummodo credentes arctiori dilectione,

In the meanwhile Augustin, perceiving that he should henceforward be at the head of an important Christian community, and in conformity to the Pope's instructions, returned to France in order to be there consecrated Archbishop of the English by the celebrated Metro-^{25th Dec., 597.}politan of Arles, Virgilinus, the former abbot of Lerins, whom Gregory had appointed his vicar over all the churches of the Frankish kingdom.

On his return to Canterbury he found that the example of the king and the labors of his companions had borne fruit beyond all expectation; so much so, that at the festival of Christmas in the same year, 597, more than 10,000 Anglo-Saxons presented themselves for baptism; and that sacrament was administered to them in the Thames at the mouth of the Medway, opposite that Isle of Sheppey, where is now situated one of the principal stations of the British fleet, and one of the grand centres of the maritime power of Great Britain.⁴⁹

The first of the converts was also the first of the benefactors of the infant Church. Ethelbert, more and more imbued with respect and devotion for the faith which he had embraced, desired to give a notable pledge of his pious humility by transferring to the new archbishop his own palace in the town of Canterbury, and establishing henceforth his royal residence at Reculver, an ancient Roman fortress on the adjacent shore of the island on which Augustin had landed. Beside the dwelling of the king thus transformed into a monastery for the archbishop and his monks, and on the site of an old church of the time of the Romans, a basilica which was hereafter to become, under the name of Christchurch, the metropolitan church of England, was commenced. Of this church Augustin was at once the first archbishop and the first abbot.⁵⁰ quasi concives sibi regni cœlestis, amplecteretur. Didicerat enim a doctoribus auctoribusque suæ salutis, servitium Christi voluntarium, non coactitium esse debere." — BEDE, i. 26. Yet Bede himself speaks, farther on, of those who had embraced the faith, "vel favore, vel timore regio." — ii. 5.

The king's palace converted into a monastic cathedral.

⁴⁹ S. GREGOR., Epist., viii. 30. STANLEY, op. cit., p. 19.

⁵⁰ The immense cathedral of Canterbury, the reconstruction of which was begun by Lanfranc in the eleventh century, occupies the site of this earlier church and of the palace of Ethelbert.

The Pope had at first designed, as the seat of the new metropolis, the city of London, a Roman colony already famous from the time of the Emperors; whereas he had, perhaps, never heard the name of the residence of the Saxon kings at Canterbury. But London was not within the kingdom of Ethelbert, and the selection of the Pope could not prevail against the motives which determined Augustin to choose, as the head and centre of the religious life of England, the capital of the king who had become his proselyte and his friend, standing, as it did, in the region where he had first landed on British soil, and whose inhabitants had welcomed him with such genial sympathy.⁵¹

Abbey of
St. Augustin
at Canterbury.

But the splendors and the influence of the official metropolis were for long ages to be eclipsed, in the opinion of the English people, and of the Christian world, by another foundation, equally owing its origin to Augustin and Ethelbert, the first archbishop and the first Christian king of England. To the west of the royal city, and half-way to that Church of St. Martin whither the queen went to pray, and where the king had been baptized, Augustin, always on the outlook for any traces which the old faith had left in Britain, discovered the site of a church which had been transformed into a pagan temple, and encircled with a sacred wood. Ethelbert gave up to him the temple, with all the ground surrounding it. The archbishop forthwith restored it to its original use as a church, and dedicated it to St. Pancras, a young Roman martyr, whose memory was dear to the Italian monks, because the Monastery of Mount Cœlius, whence they had all come, and where their father Gregory was born, had been built upon lands formerly belonging to his family. Round this new sanctury Augustin raised another monastery, of which Peter, one of his companions, was the first abbot, and which he intended to be the place of his own burial, after the Roman custom which placed the cemeteries out of the towns, and by the side of the highroads. He consecrated this new foundation in the names of the apostles of Rome, Peter and Paul; but it was under his own name that this famous abbey became one of the most opulent and most revered sanctuaries of Christendom. It was for several centuries the burying-place of the kings and primates of England,⁵² and at the same time the ⁵¹ GREGOR., Epist., xi. 65. WILLELM. MALMESBURIENSIS, De Gest. Reg., i. c. 4, and De Dorobernensibus Episcopis, p. 111.

⁵² Ecclesiastical historians abound in testimonies of admiration for this first and brightest centre of religious and intellectual life in the south of Great Britain.

Seven years were needed to complete the monastery, the church attached to which could not even be dedicated during the lifetime of him whose name it was to assume and preserve. But some months before his death, Augustin had the satisfaction of seeing the foundation of the first Benedictine monastery in England sanctioned by the solemn ratification of the king and the chiefs of the nation whom he had converted.

The charter of this monastery has been brought to light in our day as the oldest authentic record of the religious and political history of England.⁵³ Our readers will thank us for quoting the text and the signatures of the witnesses. The Anglo-Saxon king appears in this transaction at once as a Christian prince and as the chief of the aristocratic assembly whose consent was necessary to the validity of all his deeds.⁵⁴ He begins thus: — immense house, whose patrimony extended to 11,860 acres of land, and whose façade was 250 feet long. Perhaps one could read on that façade these verses quoted by a chronicler, and which recall the inscription on the front of St. John Lateran at Rome: —

“Hoc caput Anglorum datur esse monasteriorum Regum cunctorum fons pontificumque sacrorum.”

The abbot of St. Augustin of Canterbury received from Pope Leo IX. in 1055, the privilege of sitting in the first place after the abbot of Mount Cassino, in the general councils. The Monasticon Anglicanum of Dugdale, vol. i. p. 23, gives a very curious view of the state of the ruins of this abbey, towards the middle of the seventeenth century; a great tower, called Ethelbert's, but built much later than his time, can still be distinguished. In the Vestiges of Antiquities at Canterbury, by T. Hastings, 1813, folio, there are plates representing in great detail the remains, still considerable, but cruelly profaned and neglected, which existed in 1812 — the best preserved portion used as a brewery, and beside it a tavern with an enclosure used for cock-fights. It has been restored recently, to a certain extent, thanks to the munificence of Mr. Beresford Hope, and is used at present as a seminary for the Anglican missions. The house has had several historians, among others William Thorne (de Spina), who was abbot about 1358, and chiefly Thomas de Elmham, treasurer of the monastery in 1407, whose chronicle was edited by Mr. Hardwick in 1858, for the collection of Rerum Britannicarum Medii Ævi Scriptores.

⁵³ The authenticity of this deed has been admitted by one of the most learned and competent critics of our day, Sir Francis Palgrave, Rise and Progress of the British Commonwealth, vol. ii. pp. 215-18. Kemble, again, in his Codex Diplomaticus Ævi Saxonici, vol. i. p. 2, has published it with the asterisk which marks documents suspected or false; but he nowhere enters into any justification of this sentence.

⁵⁴ “Convocato ibidem concilio communi, tam cleri quam populi, omnium et singulorum approbatione et consensu, monasterium . . . monachis hic perpetuo Deo servituris . . . cum dotatione, confirmatione ac perpetua libertate donavit.” — ELMHAM, p. 111.

"I, Ethelbert, king of Kent, with the consent of the venerable archbishop Augustin, and of my nobles, give and concede to God, in honor of St. Peter, a certain portion of the land which is mine by right, and which lies to the east of the town of Canterbury, to the end that a monastery may be built thereon, and that the properties hereinafter named may be in full possession of him who shall be appointed thereof. Wherefore I swear and ordain, in the name of Almighty God, who is the just and sovereign judge, that the land thus given is given forever — that it shall not be lawful either for me or for my successors to take any part of it whatsoever from its possessors; and if any one attempt to lessen or to annul our gift, that he be in this life deprived of the holy communion of the body and blood of Christ, and at the day of judgment cut off from the company of the saints.

"† I, Ethelbert, king of the English, have confirmed this gift, by my own hand, with the sign of the holy cross.

"† I, Augustin, by the grace of God archbishop, have freely subscribed.

"† I, Eadbald, son of the king, have adhered.

"† I, Hamigisile, duke, have approved

"† I, Hocca, earl, have consented.

"† I, Angemundus, referendary, have approved.

"† I, Graphio, earl, have said it is well.

"† I, Tangisile, regis optimas, have confirmed.

"† I, Pinca, have consented.

"† I, Geddi, have corroborated." ⁵⁵

⁵⁵ "Ego Ethelbertus, rex Cantiae, cum consensu venerabilis archiepiscopi Augustini," &c. — KEMBLE, loc. cit. The deeds of gift executed by the Anglo-Saxon kings always announce the consent, ducum, comitum, optimatumque, and are always signed by the counts and principal lords, or by the bishops and abbots; the formula Favi, or consensi, or approbavi, often accompanies the proper name, which is always preceded by a cross: †. This cross did not occupy the place of the signature, as has been represented, nor did it at all indicate that the subscriber could not write. Kemble, in a note to his preface, p. 91, seems to indicate that the two signatures of Angemundus and Graphio, with the accompanying qualifications, warrant him in ranking the whole deed in the list of apocryphal documents. Palgrave gives, after Somner's Canterbury, p. 47, another text with the same title, where the signatures, arranged in the same order, are not accompanied with any qualification. He proves elsewhere, p. 214, that the most disputed of the Anglo-Saxon documents have almost always some authentic deeds as their basis, the original authenticity of which ought not to be called in question on account of real or apparent anachronisms resulting from subsequent amplifications or alterations. Almost all the Anglo-Saxon deeds that we can still read are strongly confirmed, according to him, by what he calls their internal evidence. These charters rest on history, which in its turn rests on them; each thus confirming the other.

CHAPTER II.

HOW POPE GREGORY AND BISHOP AUGUSTIN GOVERNED
THE NEW CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Joy of Gregory on learning the success of the monks. — His letters to Augustin; to the patriarch of Alexandria; to Queen Bertha. — A new monastic colony sent out. — Letter to the king. — Advice to Augustin regarding his miracles. — Opinion of Burke. — Answer of Gregory to the questions of Augustin. — The Pope's arrangements for the heathen; his admirable moderation. — Supremacy over the British bishops accorded to Augustin. — Opposition of the Welsh Celts. — Nature of the dissensions which separated the British from the Roman Church. — Celebration of Easter. — Origin and insignificance of the religious dispute. — It is increased and complicated by patriotic antipathy to the Saxons. — First conference between Augustin and the British. — Miracle of the blind man. — Second conference; rupture. — The abbot of Bangor. — Augustin's threatening prediction concerning the monks of Bangor fulfilled by the fierce Ethelfrid of Northumbria. — Sequel of Augustin's mission. — He is insulted by the fishermen of Dorsetshire. — Foundation of King Ethelbert. — Bishops of London and of Rochester. — Laws of Ethelbert; the first reduced to writing. — Guarantee given to the Church property. — Death of Gregory and Augustin.

SOME time before this solemn national consecration of his work, and after the first year of his mission, Augustin had sent to Rome two of his companions — Lawrence, who was to succeed him as archbishop, and Peter, who was to be the first abbot of the new monastery of St. Peter and St. Paul — to announce to the Pope the great and good news of the conversion of the king, with his kingdom of Kent; next, to demand from him new assistants in the work, the harvest being great and the laborers but few; and, lastly, to consult him on eleven important and delicate points touching the discipline and the management of the new Church.

The joy of Gregory when, in the midst of the perils and trials of the Church, and of his own sufferings, material and moral, he saw the realization of his soul's most cherished dream, may be understood. The boldest of his projects was crowned with success. A new people had been brought into the fold of the Church through his gentle but persevering activity. Till the end of the world, innumerable souls would

Joy of St.
Gregory on learning the success of his
monks.

owe to him their admission to the great brotherhood of souls here below — to the eternal joys that are above. He could not foresee the great men, the famous saints, the immense resources, the dauntless champions, that England was to furnish to the Catholic Church; but neither had he the sorrow of foreknowing the sad revolt which was yet to rob so much glory of its lustre, nor that base ingratitude which has dared to despise or to underrate, in his case as in that of his subordinates, the incomparable blessings which he conferred on the people of England by sending to them the light of the Gospel.

The joy of Gregory, as pure as it was natural, infused its spirit into that vast correspondence in which he has left us so faithful an image of his mind and of his life. To Augustin, as might have been expected, its first overflow was directed. "Glory be to God in the highest," he writes — "glory to that God who would not reign alone in heaven, whose death is our life, whose weakness is our strength, whose suffering cures our sufferings, whose love sends us to seek even in the island of Britain for brothers whom we knew not, whose goodness causes us to find those whom we sought for while yet we knew them not!"⁵⁶ Who can express the exultation of all faithful hearts, now that the English nation, through the grace of God and thy brotherly labor, is illumined by the Divine light, and tramples under foot the idols which it ignorantly worshipped, in order that it may now bow down before the true God? He then hastened to re-echo into the East the happy news which had reached him from the extreme West. He writes to the patriarch of Alexandria: "The bearer of your letters found me sick and leaves me sick. But God grants to me gladness of heart to temper the bitterness of my bodily sufferings."⁵⁷ The flock of the holy Church grows and multiplies; the spiritual harvests gather in the heavenly garner. . . . You announced to me the conversion of your heretics — the concord of your faithful people. . . . I make you a return in kind, because I knew you will rejoice in my joy, and that you have aided me with your prayers. Know, then, that the nation of the Angles, situated at the extremest angle of the world,⁵⁸ had till now continued in idolatry, worshipping stocks and stones.

⁵⁶ "Ne solus regnaret in cœlo, ejus morte vivimus, ejus infirmitate roboramur, ejus passione a passione cripimur, ejus amore in Britannia fratres quærimus quos ignorabamus." — Epist., xi. 28.

⁵⁷ "Ægrum me reperit, ægrum reliquit . . . quatenus mentis lætitia immanitatem meæ molestiæ temperaret." — Epist., viii. 30, ad Eulogium.

⁵⁸ "Gens Anglorum, in mundi angulo posita suo." — Epist., viii. 30, ad Eulogium. Always this singular taste for puns!

God inspired me to send thither a monk of my monastery here, to preach the Gospel to them. This monk, whom I caused to be ordained bishop by the Frankish bishops, has penetrated to this nation at the uttermost ends of the earth; and I have now received tidings of the happy success of his enterprise. He and his companions have wrought miracles that seem to come near to those of the apostles themselves, and more than 10,000 English have been baptized by them at one time."

After having thus quickened the zeal of the Egyptian patriarch by these tidings from England, he turns to the queen of the newly converted nation — Bertha, born a Christian, and the granddaughter of a saint — to congratulate her on the conversion to her own faith of her husband and her people, and to encourage her to new efforts by telling her that she was remembered in the prayers of the faithful, not only at Rome, but at Constantinople, and that the fame of her good works had reached the ears of the most serene Emperor himself. "Our very dear sons, Lawrence the priest and Peter the monk, he writes to her, "have rehearsed to me, on their arrival here, all that your Majesty has done for our reverend brother and cobishop Augustin — all the comfort and the charity that you have so liberally bestowed on him. We bless the Almighty, who has seen meet to reserve for you the conversion of the English nation. Even as He found in the glorious Helena, mother of the most pious Constantine, an instrument to win over the hearts of the Romans to the Christian faith, so we feel assured will His mercy, through your agency, work out the salvation of the English. Already, for a long time, it must have been your endeavor to turn, with the prudence of a true Christian, the heart of her husband towards the faith which you profess, for his own well being and for that of his kingdom. Well-instructed and pious as you are, this duty should not have been to you either tedious or difficult. If you have in any wise neglected it, you must redeem the lost time. Strengthen in the mind of your noble husband his devotion to the Christian faith; pour into his heart the love of God; inflame him with zeal for the complete conversion of his subjects, so that he may make an offering to Almighty God by your love and your devotion. I pray God that the completion of your work may make the angels in heaven feel the same joy which I already owe to you on earth." 59

59 "Qualis erga R. fratrem . . . gloria vestra exstiterit, quantaque illi

About the same time, in revising his commentaries on the Scriptures, and his exposition of the Book of Job, he cannot help adding then this cry of triumph: "Look at that Britain whose tongue has uttered only savage sounds, but now echoes the Hallelujah of the Hebrews! Behold that furious sea — it gently smoothes itself beneath the feet of the saints! These savage clans, that the princes of the earth could not subdue by the sword — see them enchained by the simple word of the priests! That people which, while yet pagan, defied undauntedly the arms and the renown of our soldiers, trembles at the speech of the humble and weak. It knows fear now, but it is the fear of sin; and all its desires are centred on the glory everlasting."⁶⁰

A new monastic colony sent over. Far, however, from resting indolently in this joy, he remained to his latest day faithful to the warm and active interest with which his beloved England had inspired him.⁶¹ He sent to Augustin a new monastic colony, provided with relics, sacred vessels, priestly robes, the ornaments of the altar, and all that was necessary to give effect to the pomp of religious service. He sent also books, which were intended to form the nucleus of an ecclesiastical library.⁶²

23d June, 601. At the head of this new swarm of monks was a man of noble birth, by name Mellitus, and his companion Justus, who were to succeed each other on the metsolatia vel qualem charitatem impenderit, retulerunt. . . . Postquam et recta fide gloria vestra munita et litteris docta est, hoc vobis nec tardum nec debuit esse difficile." — Epist., v. 29. It will be observed that this letter is placed in the catalogue of the pontifical correspondence apart from the other letters which Gregory addressed to the husband of Bertha, as well as to the princes and bishops in order to recommend to them the new assistants of Augustin.

⁶⁰ "Ecce lingua Britanniae quae nil aliud noverat quam barbarum frendere, jamdudum in divinis laudibus Hebraeum coepit alleluia sonare. Ecce tumidus quondam, jam substratus pedibus sanctorum, servit Oceanus. . . . Qui catervas pugnantium infidelis nequaquam metuerat, jam nunc fidelis humilium linguam timet . . . ut prave agere metuat ac totis desideriis ad aeternitatis gloriam pervenire concupiscat." — S. GREG., Moral., book xxviii. c. 11.

⁶¹ "Semper pro amatis Anglis vigilantissimus." — GOTSSELINUS, Hist. Maior., c. 24.

⁶² "Nec non et codices plurimos." — BEDE, i. 29. Many of the books sent to Augustin by the hands of the abbot Peter were carefully preserved, and escaped the ravages of time for six centuries. In the days of Henry VIII. Leland still speaks of them with admiration: "Majusculis literis Romanis more veterum scriptis . . . incredibilem prae se ferentes antiquitatis majestatem." An old catalogue of this first consignment of books ends with these words: "This is the origin of the library of the whole English Church." — A. D. 601. In the library of the college of Corpus Christi, at Cambridge, a Latin MS. of the four evangelists is preserved, which, according to an old tradition, is the copy brought from Rome by St. Augustin in 596.

ropolitan throne of Canterbury, and with them Paulinus, the future apostle of Northumbria. The Pope provided them with very urgent letters, all of the same date, for Queen Brunehaut, for her grandsons, kings Theodebert and Theodoric; for their rival king Clotaire of Neustra,⁶³ who had treated Augustin with great kindness, and heartily seconded his enterprise; and for the bishops of Arles, Lyons, Gap, Toulon, Marseilles, Châlons, Paris, Rouen, and Angers — thus marking beforehand the possible halting-places of the new missionaries.⁶⁴

In a special letter to Virgilius, the legate at Arles, he recommends him most particularly to receive their common brother, Augustin, with the greatest affection, in the event of his visiting him; and he adds: "As it often happens that those who are at a distance need to be made aware of disorders which require to be repressed, if he should inform you of faults on the part of his priests or others, examine everything along with him with the minutest care, and act with the greatest strictness, but ever be heedful that you do not let the innocent suffer with the guilty."⁶⁵

The passionate yet intelligent and impartial tenderness towards his friends, which is one of the most attractive features in Gregory's admirable character, is nowhere more beautifully displayed than in his relations with Augustin. We see him ever engaged in extending and consolidating the authority of his envoy; but not the less anxious for the welfare of his soul, and resolute to give precedence before all else to the interests of the newly Christianized country. He intrusted to the new missionaries a long letter addressed to King Ethelbert, in which, while congratulating him on his conversion, and comparing him to Constantine, as he had compared Bertha to St. Helena, he exhorted him to spread the faith among his subjects — to forbid the worship of idols, to overthrow their temples, and to establish good morals by exhortations, kindnesses, and threats, but above all by his own example. He adds: "You have with you our very reverend brother, bishop Augustin, trained according to the monastic rule, full of the knowledge of the Scriptures, abounding in good works in the sight of God. Hearken ⁶³ Epist., xi. 61, ad Clotarium Francorum regem.

⁶⁴ Epist., xi. 54-62. Compare BEDE, i. 29.

⁶⁵ "Si communem fratrem Augustinum episcopum ad nos venire contigerit, ita illum dilectio vestra, sicut decet, affectuose dulciterque suscipiat, ut et ipsum consolationis suæ bono refoveat, et alios, qualiter fraterna charitas colenda sit, doceat." — Epist., xi. 68.

devoutly to him, and faithfully accomplish all that he tells you ; for the more you listen to what he will tell you on the part of God, the more will God grant his prayers when he prays to Him on your behalf. Attach yourself, then, to him with all the strength of your mind, and all the fervor of faith ; and second his efforts with all the force that God has given you.”⁶⁶

The same day, in a public letter, he confers on Augustin the right of bearing the pallium in celebrating mass, as a reward for having established the new English Church. This honor was to descend to all his successors on the archiepiscopal throne.⁶⁷ He constitutes him metropolitan of twelve bishoprics, which he enjoins him to erect in southern England. He gives him authority to appoint whom he will metropolitan bishop in the ancient Roman and episcopal city of York, subordinating to the see of York twelve new bishoprics yet to be erected, but reserving to Augustin during his lifetime the supremacy over the northern metropolitan. Over and above all the bishops to be ordained by him or by the future bishop of York in the conquered territory, Gregory places under the jurisdiction of Augustin all the bishops of Britain, “in order,” says the Pope, “that they may learn by your word and by your life how they must believe, and how they must live, in order to fulfil their office and gain an inheritance in heaven.”⁶⁸ He here treats of the bishops who were established in Wales, or who had fled thither for refuge — the prelates and teachers of the Christian Celtic populations which had escaped the Saxon yoke.

But while he thus openly evidenced the fulness of his confidence and the authority with which he invested Augustin, he addressed to him, in secret, advices meant to preserve him from the dangerous snare of pride. “In our joy,” he wrote, “there is much to fear. I know, beloved brother, ⁶⁶ “Fanorum ædificia evertē, subditorum mores ex magna vitæ munditia, exhortando, terrendo, blandiēdo, corrigēdo et boni operis exempla monstrando, ædificā. . . . Augustinus episcopus, in monasterii regula edoctus.” Epist., xi. 66. It is surprising to find in this beautiful letter a paragraph warning the Saxon king that the end of the world is at hand — that he must watch for it day by day, and not be astonished, seeing that it is near, at marvellous things which are about to happen in England as elsewhere.

⁶⁷ Since the schism of Henry VIII., the English archbishops of Canterbury, by the strangest of anomalies, have still preserved this pallium in the arms of their see.

⁶⁸ “Quatenus ex lingua et vita tuæ sanctitatis, et recte credendi et bene vivendi formam percipiant, atque officium fide ac moribus exsequentes, ad cœlestia, cum Dominus voluerit, regna pertingant.” — Epist., xi. 65.

that God has by thee wrought great miracles in this nation. It is right to rejoice that the minds of the English are drawn by visible miracles to the invisible grace; but we ought to fear lest these prodigies incline the weak mind to presumption, and make the inner man fall to a worse depth through vainglory than he is raised up outwardly. When the disciples said to their divine Master, 'Lord, in thy name even the devils are subject unto us,' he answered them, 'Rejoice not because the devils are subject to you, but rather rejoice because your names are written in heaven.' The names of all the elect are written there, and yet all the elect work not miracles. And while God thus acts outwardly by thee, thou oughtest, brother beloved, to judge thyself scrupulously within, and to know well what thou art. If thou rememberest that thou hast offended God by word or deed, have thy faults ever present to thy memory to repress the vainglory which may rise in thy heart. Reflect that this gift of miracles is not given to thee for thyself, but for those whose salvation is committed to thee. The reprobate have wrought miracles; and we, we know not even if we are among the elect. It is needful, then, sternly to humble and subdue the mind in the midst of all these prodigies and signs, lest it should seek in them only its own glory and its private advantage. God has given us but one sign whereby we may know his elect: it is this, that we have love one to another." ⁶⁹

Immediately after, to reassure the friend whom he had thus corrected, by a return to his wonted tenderness and sympathy, he continues in these terms: "I speak thus because I desire to subdue to humility the soul of my dear hearer. But let even thy humility have confidence. All sinful as I am, I have a sure hope that all thy sins will be remitted unto thee, inasmuch as thou hast been chosen to bring to others the remission of their sins. If there is joy in heaven over one sinner that repenteth more than over ninety and nine just persons that need no repentance, what joy must not there be over a great nation which, in coming to the true faith, repents of all the evil it has done! And it is thou who hast given this joy to heaven." ⁷⁰

⁶⁹ Fleury, in quoting this letter, says with justice, "Nothing proves more completely the truth of St. Augustin's miracles than these serious counsels of Gregory."

⁷⁰ "Hæc autem dico quia auditoris mei animum in humilitate sternere cupio. Sed ipsa tua humilitas habeat fiduciam suam. Nam peccator ego spem certissimam teneo." — Epist., xi. 23.

In one of Gregory's former letters, addressed, not to Augustin, but to his friend Eulogius, Patriarch of Alexandria, the Pope also refers to the miracles which had signalized the mission of Augustin; he does not hesitate even to compare them to the signs and wonders which accompanied the preaching of the apostles.⁷¹ Twelve centuries after Gregory, the greatest genius that modern England has produced, the immortal Burke, bows respectfully before that tradition, misunderstood by his frivolous contemporaries. The introduction of Christianity into any country whatsoever is, according to him, the most inestimable benefit that can be conferred on humanity. Why, then, in view of an end so worthy, should not Providence itself sometimes directly interpose? Miracles, of old time accepted with a blind credulity, have been since rejected with "as undistinguishing a disregard." "But," adds the great orator, "it is the reality or opinion of such miracles that was the principal cause of the early acceptance and rapid progress of Christianity in this island."⁷² It is singular that neither Bede nor any other historian gives the least detail of these wonders which awoke at once the admiration, the gratitude, and the prudent deprecations of St. Gregory the Great. But of all possible miracles, the greatest is assuredly "to have detached from paganism without violence a violent people; to have introduced it into the Christian commonwealth, not man by man, and family by family, but at one stroke, with its kings, its warlike nobility, and all its institutions."⁷³ This king, who believes himself descended from the gods of the Scandinavian paradise, yet who resigns his capital to the priests of the crucified God; this people, fierce and idolatrous, which by thousands prostrates itself at the feet of a few foreign monks, and by thousands plunges into the icy waters of the Thames, in mid winter, to receive baptism from these unknown strangers; this rapid and complete transformation of a proud and victorious, and at the same time sensual and rapacious race, by means of a doctrine pre-eminently fitted to quell lust, pride, and sensuality, and which, once received into these savage hearts, rests forever implanted there,—is not this, of all miracles, the most marvellous, as it is the most indisputable?

⁷¹ "Tantis miraculis vel ipse vel hi qui cum ipso transmissi sunt in gente eadem coruscant, ut apostolorum virtutes in signis, quæ perhibent, imitari videantur." — Epist., viii. 30.

⁷² BURKE, Essay towards an Abridgment of English History, book ii. ch. 1.

⁷³ OZANAM, p. 159.

Finally, after all these letters, Gregory wrote a very long and very detailed answer to the eleven questions which Augustin had put to him, as to the principal difficulties which he had encountered, or which he foresaw might still be met with in the course of his mission. To convey a just idea of this reply, which is an admirable monument of enlightenment, of conciliatory reason, of gentleness, wisdom, moderation, and prudence, and which was destined to become, as has been most justly said, the rule and the code of Christian missions,⁷⁴ it would have to be quoted entire; but besides its extreme length, it embraces certain details from which our modern prudery recoils. Here, however, is the substance of its most important passages.

Answer of Gregory to the questions of Augustin: true law of Catholic missions.

The Pope, consulted as to the use and the division to be made of the offerings of the faithful, reminds Augustin that the revenues of the Church should be divided into four portions; the first for the bishop and his family, because of the hospitality which he ought to exercise; the second for the clergy; the third for the poor; the fourth for the maintenance and repair of churches. "But you," he says to the archbishop—"you who have been brought up in monastic discipline, ought not to live apart from your clergy, but to initiate in the new English Church the life in common which our fathers practised in the primitive Church."⁷⁵

Why, asked Augustin, are there divers customs in the Church, when the faith is one? and why does the liturgy according to which the mass is celebrated in the churches of Gaul (which Bertha probably followed in her oratory of St. Martin), differ from that of the Roman Church?

"You, my brother," replies the Pope, "know the usage of the Roman Church, in which you cannot forget that you were brought up. But if it should happen that you find in the Church of Rome, or in that of Gaul, or in any other, some usage which you believe to be more pleasing to God, I enjoin you to select it with care, and give it a place in the new Church of England. For institutions are not to be loved because of the places whence they are derived; but rather are places to be beloved for the sake of the good institutions that exist therein. Choose therefore among the Churches all that is pious and reasonable, and out of what you thus collect form the use of the English Church." ⁷⁶

⁷⁴ OZANAM, Civilisation Chrétienne chez les Francs, p. 154.

⁷⁵ "Interrogatio beati Augustini episcopi Cantuariorum Ecclesiæ. . . . Respondit Gregorius papa urbis Romæ. . . . Tua fraternitas monasterii, regulis erudita, seorsum vivere non debet a clericis suis."—BEDE, i. 27. GREG., Epist., xi. 64.

In these words it is easy to recognize the pontiff who had already braved the criticisms of some petty spirits, by introducing at Rome various usages that were believed to be borrowed from Constantinople, and who had said to his critics, "I shall be always ready to deter my subordinates from evil, but to imitate them in good, borrowing it from it matters not what Church. He is but a fool who could make his primacy a reason for disdaining to learn whatever good can be learnt." ⁷⁷

Consulted as to the punishment to be inflicted on sacrilegious robbers, and as to the administration of the Roman law, which imposed on the robber a double or fourfold restitution, Gregory advises that, in the punishment, the poverty or the riches of the depredator be taken into account; and that it be administered always with a fatherly love and a moderation which shall keep the mind within the limits of reason. As to restitution—"God forbid," said he, "that the Church should seek to gain by what she has lost, and to draw a profit from the folly of men." ⁷⁸

Augustin had further inquired what rule he should follow in regard to marriages within the forbidden degrees, to the duties of the married state, and how much ought to be retained of the purifications prescribed to women by the Mosaic law. Gregory, in reply, interdicts absolutely marriages between mothers-in-law and sons-in-law, which were common among the Saxons: as also between brothers and sisters-in-law. But, for the latter case, he does not require that converts, who had contracted such marriages before their conversion, should be deprived of the holy communion, "lest,"

⁷⁶ "Novit fraternitas tua Romanæ Ecclesiæ consuetudinem in qua se meminit eruditam. Sed mihi placet, sive in Romana, sive Galliarum, seu in qualibet Ecclesia, aliquid invenisti quod plus omnipotenti Deo possit placere, sollicite eligas, et in Anglorum Ecclesiæ quæ adhuc ad fidem nova est, institutione præcipua, quæ de multis Ecclesiis colligere potuisti, infundas. Non enim pro licitis res, sed pro bonis rebus loci amandi sunt. Ex singulis ergo quibusque Ecclesiis quæ pia, quæ religiosa, quæ recta sunt, elige: et hæc quasi in fasciculum collecta, apud Anglorum mentes in consuetudinem depone." ⁷⁷

"Si quid boni vel ipsa vel altera Ecclesia habet, ego et minores meos quos ab illicitis prohibeo in bono imitari paratus sum. Stultus est enim qui in eo se primum existimat, ut bona quæ viderit discere contemnat." — Epist., x. 12, ad Joann., Syracus. Episc.

⁷⁸ "Ita ut mens extra rationis regulam omnino nihil faciat. . . . Absit ut Ecclesia cum augmento recipiat quod de terrenis rebus videtur amittere, et luera de vanis quærere."

he says, "you should appear to punish them for what they have done in mere ignorance; for there are things which the Church corrects with strictness, and there are others which, for kindness' sake, she tolerates, or prudently overlooks; but always in such wise as to restrain the evil which she bears with, or winks at." He would, in general, treat the English as St. Paul treated his converts—nourishing them not on solid food, but with milk, as newborn babes. Further on "he prescribes to the marriage bed these severe laws which secure health and vigor and the fruitfulness of the Christian family."⁷⁹ He does not permit that the woman who has just borne a child should be excluded from the Church, and that thus her suffering should be made a crime.

But he protests with energy against the unnatural custom of mothers who will not be nurses, and who disdain to suckle the children they have brought forth. He sought thus to impress upon the heart of the Saxon woman all a wife's duties, while at the same time he marked her proper place in the Christian family by exalting her dignity and protecting her modesty.⁸⁰

Reflection only served to confirm the Pope in this wise and generous indulgence towards the new converts, allied, as it was in him, with a zeal at once pure and ardent for the service and progress of the truth. Scarce had he addressed to Ethelbert the letter in which he exhorted him to destroy the temples of the ancient national worship, when he reconsidered the matter, and a few days later despatched entirely different instructions to Mellitus, the chief of the new mission, whom he had designated abbot, and to whom he had intrusted the letter for the king—hoping to overtake him on his journey. "Since your departure and that of your company," he writes, "I have been much disquieted, for I have learnt nothing of the success of your journey. But when Almighty God shall have carried you in safety to our most reverend brother Augustin, say to him that, after having long revolved in my own mind the affairs of the English, I have come to the conclusion that it is not necessary to overthrow all the temples of the idols, but only the idols that are in them. After having sprinkled these temples with holy water, let altars and relics be placed in them; for if they are strongly built, it were well that they were made to pass from the worship of demons to the service of the true God—to the end that the people, seeing that their temples are not destroyed, may the more readily accept the religious change and come to adore God in the places familiar to them. And as it is their custom to slay many oxen in sacrifices to the demons, some solemnity which should take the place of this sacrifice must be established. On the day of the dedication, or on the feast of the martyrs whose relics may be given to them, they may be permitted to make huts of leaves around the temples thus changed into churches, and celebrate the feast with social repasts. But in place of sacrificing beasts to a demon, they will kill them only to be eaten with thankfulness to God who provides their food; and thus, by leaving to them some of the enjoyments of the senses, they will be more easily led to desire the joys of the soul. For it is impossible to change all at once the whole habits of the savage mind: a mountain is not climbed by leaps and bounds, but step by step.”⁸¹

New concessions of Gregory in a letter to the Abbot Mellitus.

⁷⁹ OZANAM, op. cit., 161.

⁸⁰ "In hoc enim tempore sancta Ecclesia quædam per fervorem corrigit, quædam per mansuetudinem tolerat, quædam per considerationem dissimulat, atque ita portat et dissimulat, ut sæpe malum quod adversatur portando et dissimulando compescat. . . . Si enim mulierem prohibemus ecclesiam intrare, ipsam ei pœnam suam in culpam deputamus. . . . Prava autem in conjugatorum moribus consuetudo surrexit, ut mulieres . . . dum se continere nolunt, despiciunt lactare quos gignunt."—Ibid. Compare Epist. xiv. 17, ad Felicem Messanensem Episcopum.

Among the enemies of the Roman Church, pedants and hypercritics are found to accuse St. Gregory of having compromised matters with his conscience in thus opening the entrance of the sanctuary to paganism. Far from sympathizing with them, let us, on the contrary, learn to admire the great and wise teacher who could so well distinguish the essential from the accidental, and who, repudiating the pretensions of minute and vexatious uniformity, and sacrificing the pettiness of prejudice to the majesty of a great design, could thus develop the worship of the truth even among the superstitions of Germanic paganism. Let us admire above all, “a religion which penetrates thus to the depths of human nature—which knows what needful combats against his passions it demands from man, and which has no desire to impose unnecessary sacrifices upon him. The only way of ⁸¹ “Post discessum congregationis vestræ quæ tecum est, valde sumus suspensi reddit, quia nihil de prosperitate vestri itineris audisse nos contigit. . . . Dicite ei quid diu mecum de causa Anglorum cogitans tractavi. . . . Nam duris mentibus simul omnia abscondere impossibile esse non dubium est, quia et is qui summum locum ascendere nitetur, gradibus vel passibus, non saltibus elevatur.”—Epist., xi. 76.

knowing human nature is to love it, and it can be won only at this price.”⁸²

In his last question Augustin had asked how he — as yet the only bishop among the English — should deal by the bishops of Gaul and Britain. Gregory admonishes him not to keep at a distance the bishops of Gaul who might wish to be present at his ordinations of new bishops in England, “for to conduct successfully spiritual affairs it is lawful to draw lessons from temporal affairs; and as, in the world, persons already married are invited together to take part in the festivities of a wedding, so nothing forbids the participation of bishops already ordained in that ordination which is the espousal of man with God.” The Pope added: “We do not assign to you any authority over the bishops of Gaul, and you can reform them only through persuasion and good example, except at the risk of thrusting your sickle into another’s harvest. As to the British bishops, we commit them entirely to your care, that you may instruct the ignorant, strengthen the feeble, and correct the evil.”⁸³

Supremaey
accorded to Augustin
over the British
bishops.

Gregory, who knew so well how to read the hearts and win the minds of men, could have only a very imperfect knowledge of the geography as well as of the political condition of Great Britain. He seems to have held on that subject the antiquated notions which prevailed at Rome regarding an island which had been the first to escape from the imperial yoke. He evidently had no idea of the national and only too legitimate antipathy which inflamed the Christian Brittons against the heathen Saxons, who had for a century and a half overrun, ravaged, and usurped their country. He imagined that those Christians, always faithfully united to the Roman Church, who had so energetically repudiated Pelagianism, and whose bishops had sat in the ancient councils presided over by the legates of Rome, would lend a cordial support to the mission of the Roman monks, commissioned by him to evangelize the Saxons. He did not know the implacable hate of the conquered for the conquerors; and he forgot certain points of difference which, though they did not touch the great verities of the Christian faith, and were completely removed from all idea of a national or schismatic

⁸² OZANAM, Œuvres, i. 167.

⁸³ “Nam in ipsis rebus spiritualibus ut sapienter et mature disponantur, exemplum trahere a rebus etiam carnalibus possumus. . . . Britannorum omnes episcopos tuæ fraternitati committimus.” — Epist., xi. 64.

Church, raised, nevertheless, a formidable barrier between the British clergy and his Roman missionaries.

Augustin at issue with the Celtic bishop. It is evident that Augustin always showed himself capable of understanding and applying the precepts of his friend and master. No incident of his life, recorded in his history, indicates any opposition to, or departure from, the rules laid down for him by the prudence and charity of Gregory. He was faithful to these rules in his relations with the British bishops placed by the Pope under his jurisdiction, as well as in all other respects. A rapid survey of this conflict would even lead the reader to protest against the unjust and calumnious accusations of which it has been the object, and will prove that Augustin was exclusively guided by a natural desire to put an end to dissensions which impaired the unity of the efforts necessary for the conversion of the Saxons.

Wherein, then, consisted those differences between Rome and the Celtic Christianity of Wales, of Ireland, and of Caledonia, which occupy so prominent a place in the religious history of the sixth and seventh centuries, and which the irritable and haughty zeal of St. Columbanus carried over into France, and with which he tried the patience of St. Gregory ;⁸⁴ while Augustin, on his side, found in them the chief stumbling-block to his mission in Great Britain? It cannot be too often repeated, that they affected none of the essential doctrines of Christianity, no article of faith defined by the Church either before or since that period, no question of morals, and, above all, that they did not offer any opposition to the supremacy of the Holy See, as it was then exercised or accepted by the rest of the Christian world.

Modern research has finally dispersed all the imaginary chimeras of certain English and German writers who attributed these differences to a pretended influence of Eastern Christianity on the British Churches, of which no authentic trace exists ; or more readily still, to a traditional repugnance on the part of the Celtic population to the yoke of Rome — a repugnance belied by the history of the past, as well as by the living testimony of the races, the most tenacious and most illustrious members of which, the Irish and the Armoricans, have purchased, at the cost of the most generous and cruel sacrifices, the right of placing themselves in the foremost rank of the faithful children of the Church of Rome.⁸⁵

⁸⁴ See ante, vol. i. p. 555.

⁸⁵ The most weighty writers of Protestant Germany in our day, such as

The principal difference turned on the question of the date of the festival of Easter. This nice question — the bugbear of all who embark on the study of the primitive annals of the Church — has already emerged in the course of our history, and will often again recur.⁸⁶

The dissension regarding Easter.

From the earliest Christian ages prolonged discussions were raised regarding the day on which the greatest festival of the Church should be celebrated. The Council of Nice fixed the date of the Pascal solemnities for the Sunday after the full moon of the vernal equinox, and that date, sanctioned by the Roman Church, had been received along with the Christian faith by all the Churches of Britain, and had been carried by St. Patrick to Ireland, and by St. Columba to Caledonia. But the Church of Alexandria, having discovered an astronomical error, originating in the employment of the ancient Jewish computation by the Christians, had introduced a more exact calculation, which was adopted by all the Eastern Churches; and the result was, that from the pontificate of St. Leo the Great (440–61) a difference of an entire month had arisen between Easter-day at Rome and Easter-day at Alexandria. Towards the middle of the sixth century, the difference ceased to exist; Rome adopted the calculation of Denys le Petit, which demonstrated clearly the error of the day fixed by the Council of Nice, and from this date uniformity was re-established in the Church. But the Saxon invasion had interrupted the ordinary intercourse between Rome and the British Churches; they retained the ancient Roman usage, and it was precisely their attachment to that usage which was their argument against the more exact computation which Augustin and the Italian monks brought with them, but which the British rejected as suspicious novelties, to receive which would be an insult to the traditions of their fathers.⁸⁷ It was thus from their very fidelity to the early teachings of Rome that they resisted the new Roman missionaries.

Gieseler, have already abandoned this hypothesis, so long accepted by their co-religionists. It has been learnedly refuted by the illustrious Professor Dollinger in his Manual of Ecclesiastical History, and it may be said annihilated by the two Memoirs of M. Varin on the Causes of the Dissension between the British and the Roman Church, published by the Academy of Inscriptions and Belles Lettres, 1858. A digest of the conclusions of these two Memoirs will be found in Appendix II.

⁸⁶ See ante, vol. i. book vii.

⁸⁷ WALTER, Alte Wales, p. 225. DOLLINGER, op. cit., i. 2d part, 216.

This cause of dissension, by far the most important, was of a very recent date, and all the disputes that can be made out on other points (except that regarding the form of the tonsure) were equally new, without being at all more essential. If it had been otherwise — had there been the slightest difference touching doctrine or morals between the British and the Roman Church — Augustin would never have been guilty of the folly of soliciting the aid of the Celtic clergy in the conversion of the heathen Saxons. This would have been but to sow the seeds of confusion and discord in the new Church, which it was his business to organize by means of the energetic co-operation of the native Christians and the envoys of Rome.⁸⁸

There is nothing more painful than to meet in history with endless and passionate contentions upon questions and causes which, after some time has passed, are interesting or even intelligible to no human creature. But it is not Christian antiquity alone that offers us such a spectacle: we find it in all ages. And to those who profess to be scandalized at the overweening importance that the most pious minds of their time have attached to equal trifles, it should be enough to recall the determined obstinacy which prompted great nations, such as the English and the Russians, to resist the reform of the Gregorian calendar — the one for nearly two centuries, the other amidst the complete uniformity of the entire civilized world.

It is no less true that, by that obstinate fidelity to a venerable, though false, computation, the British set themselves at variance on this question of Easter, not only with Rome and the whole West, but also with the East, which celebrated that festival, like the Jews, on the precise day of the week on which it fell, while the British, in common with the whole Western Church, always held the celebration on Sunday. But this Sunday was, or might be, another day than that kept as Easter-day at Rome.

Who could imagine that this pitiful and absurd difference should have kept the two Churches for two centuries on a footing of direct hostility? Since the British Celts received their ancient custom from Rome itself, why could they not follow Rome in her perfected reckoning as all the rest of the West did? Why should they have positively decided to hold festival while the Romans fasted; and to fast while at Rome they chanted the Hallelujah?

⁸⁸ DOLLINGER, p. 217. REES, Welsh Saints, p. 288.

Was there not a more serious, a deeper cause for this dissension, of which the Pascal controversy was but the outward aspect? It is impossible to doubt it; and of all causes it was the most natural and excusable — the instinct of national preservation, exasperated by hatred of the triumphant enemy, and expressing itself in distrust of the stranger, who seemed to be an accomplice of that enemy.

Augustin knew well that he needed the aid of the Celtic Christians in order to carry on successfully the great work which the Papacy had intrusted to him. Trained in the conciliatory and moderate school of St. Gregory the Great, fresh from his recent instructions, he was very far from being exclusive in regard to local personages or customs; and in order to effect the conversion of the Saxons, he claimed in all good faith the co-operation of the numerous and powerful clergy who, for more than a century, had been the very soul of the resistance to the heathen, and who peopled those great cloisters of Wales, into which the sword of the invader had never penetrated.

But the British resisted him with a jealous and obstinate opposition. They would not join him in evangelizing their enemies; they had no wish to open to them the gates of heaven.⁸⁹

Augustin, however, succeeded in obtaining the consent of the principal bishops and doctors of Wales to a conference with him. It was arranged that they should meet on the confines of Wessex, near the banks of the Severn, which separated the Saxons from the Britons. The interview, like that of Augustin with Ethelbert, after his landing in Kent, took place in the open air, and under an oak, which for a long time afterwards was known as Augustin's oak. He began, not by claiming the personal supremacy which the Pope had conceded to him, but by exhorting his hearers to live in Catholic peace with him, and to unite their efforts to his for the evangelization of the pagans — that is to say, the Saxons. But neither his entreaties, nor his exhortations, nor his reproaches, nor the eloquence of his attendant monks joined to his own, availed to bend the Britons, who persisted in appealing to their own traditions in opposition to the new rules. After a long and laborious disputation, Augustin at last said, "Let us pray God, who maketh brethren to dwell together

First conference between Augustin and the British bishops.

509?-603?

⁸⁹ VARIN, Memoir cited.

in unity, to show us by a sign from heaven what traditions we ought to follow. Let a sick man be brought hither, and he whose prayers shall cure him shall be the one whose faith is to be followed." The British consented reluctantly. An Anglo-Saxon blind man was brought, whom the British bishops could not cure. Then Augustin fell on his knees, and implored God to enlighten the conscience of many of the faithful, by giving sight to this man. Immediately the blind man recovered his vision. The British were touched; ⁹⁰ they acknowledged that Augustin's course was just and straightforward, but that they could not renounce their old customs without the consent of their people, and demanded a second assembly, in which their deputies should be more numerous.

The second conference was held soon after. Augustin there found himself in the presence of seven British bishops and of the most learned doctors of the great Monastery of Bangor, which contained more than 3000 monks, and which was, as we have seen, the centre of religious life in Wales. Before this new meeting, the Britons went to consult an anchorite, much famed among them for his wisdom and his sanctity, and asked him if they ought to give heed to Augustin, and abandon their traditions. "Yes," said the hermit, "if he is a man of God." "But how shall we know that?" "If he is meek and lowly of heart, as says the Gospel, it is probable that he carries the yoke of Jesus Christ, and that it is His yoke he offers you; but if he is hard and proud, he comes not from God, and you ought to give no heed to his discourse. In order to prove him, let him arrive the first at the place of council; and if he rises when you approach, you will know that he is a servant of Christ, and you will obey him; but if he rises not to do you honor, then despise him, as he will have despised you."⁹¹

The instructions of the anchorite were obeyed. Unfortunately, on arriving at the place of council they found Augustin already seated, more Romano, says an historian, and he did not rise to receive them.⁹² This was enough to set them

⁹⁰ "Ut pace catholica secum habita, communem evangelizandi gentibus pro domino laborem susciperent. . . . Laboriosi atque longi certaminis finem fecit. . . . Quidam de genere Anglorum, oculorum usu privatus. . . . Confitentur intellexisse se veram esse viam justitiæ quam prædicaret Augustinus." — BEDE, ii. 2.

⁹¹ "Sin autem vos spreverit, nec coram vobis adsurgere voluerit, cum sitis plures, et ipse spernatur a vobis." — BEDE, ii. 2.

⁹² "Cum ergo convenisset, et Augustinus Romano more in sella residens iis non assurrexisset." — HENR. HUNTINGDON, iii. 186, ed. Savile.

against him. "If this man," said they, "deigns not to rise at our arrival now, how will he slight us when we shall have acknowledged his authority!" From that hour they became intractable, and studied to thwart him at every point. Neither then nor at the first conference did the archbishop make any effort to induce them to acknowledge his personal authority. Let it be added, to the honor of this headstrong race, and rebellious but earnest and generous clergy, that Augustin did not reproach them with any of those infringements of the purity of the priestly life which some authors have imputed to them.⁹³ With moderation, in scrupulous conformity to the instructions of the Pope, he reduced all his claims to three main points. "You have," said he, "many practices which are contrary to our usage, which is that of the universal Church; we will admit them all without difficulty, if only you will believe me on three points: to celebrate Easter at the right time; to complete the sacrament of baptism⁹⁴ according to the usage of the holy Roman Church; and to preach the word of God along with us to the English nation." To this threefold demand the Celtic bishops and monks offered a threefold refusal, and added that they would never acknowledge him as archbishop.⁹⁵ In thus refusing to recognize the personal supremacy of Augustin, they in nowise rejected that of the Holy See. What they dreaded was not a Pope at a distance from them, impartial and universally respected at Rome, but a kind of new pope at Canterbury, within the territory and under the influence of their hereditary foes, the Saxons.⁹⁶ And, above all else, they objected to ⁹³ "Errorem Bretonum . . . quo alia plura ecclesiasticæ castitati et paci contraria gerunt." — BEDE, v. 18. Compare GILDAS, De Excidio, p. 23. Dollinger believes that he refers here to the subintroducæ, so often denounced by the councils. He notices elsewhere that the British priests alone have been the object of these accusations, which have never been brought against the other branches of the Celtic Church.

⁹⁴ He referred probably to Confirmation.

⁹⁵ "Quia in multis quidem nostræ consuetudini, immo universalis Ecclesiæ contrariæ geritis; et tamen si in tribus his mihi obtemperare vultis; ut Pascha suo tempore celebretis, ut ministerium baptizandi, quo Deo renascimur, juxta morem sanctæ Romanæ et apostolicæ Ecclesiæ compleatis, ut genti Anglorum una nobiscum verbum Domini prædicetis, cætera quæ agitis, quamvis moribus nostris contraria, æquanimiter cuncta tolerabimus." — BEDE, v. 18.

⁹⁶ Hook, the most recent English historian of the archbishops of Canterbury, acknowledges this fact with an impartiality which is not always habitual to him. We shall be excused discussing the pretended anti-papal reply of the orator of Bangor, an English invention, published in the collections of Spelman and Wilkins, and complacently repeated by M. Augustin Thierry. Lingard, Döllinger, op. cit., p. 218, and Professor Walter, have demonstrated be told of the duty of laboring for the conversion of the odious Saxons, who had slaughtered their forefathers and usurped their lands. "No," said the abbot of Bangor, "we will not preach the faith to this cruel race of strangers who have treacherously driven our ancestors from their country, and robbed their posterity of their heritage."⁹⁷

Threatening prophecy of Augustin
against the monks of Bangor.

It is easy to see which of the three conditions Augustin had most at heart by the threatening prediction with which he met the refusal of the British monks. "Since you will not have peace with brethren, you shall have war with enemies: since you will not show to the English the way of life, you shall receive from their hands the punishment of death."

This prophecy was only too cruelly fulfilled some 613? years later. The king of the northern English, Ethelfrid, still a pagan, invaded the district of Wales in which stood the great Monastery of Bangor. At the moment when the battle began between his numerous army and that of the Welsh, he saw at a distance, in an elevated position, a body of men, unarmed and on their knees. "Who are these?" he asked. He was told they were the monks of the great Monastery of Bangor, who, after fasting for three days, had come to pray for their brethren during the battle. "If they pray to their God for my enemies," said the king, "they are fighting against us, unarmed though they be." And he directed the first onslaught to be made against them. The Welsh prince, who should have defended them, fled shamefully, and 1200 monks were massacred on the field of battle, martyrs of Christian faith and of Celtic patriotism.⁹⁸ Thus ended, say the annals of Ireland, the day of the slaughter of the saints.⁹⁹ its falsity, already exposed by Turberville in his Manuale Controversiarum; Rees, Stephenson, Hussey, and all the modern English writers of any weight, have agreed to renounce it. Let us recall here the learned and deeply-to-be-lamented Abbé Gorini's excellent refutation of the inexcusable errors committed by M. Augustin Thierry in his narrative of the mission of St. Augustin.

⁹⁷ Welsh chronicle, entitled Brut Tysilio, and GALFRID. MONMOUTH, xi. 2, ap. WALTER, op. cit., pp. 225, 227.

⁹⁸ "Cum videret sacerdotes . . . seorsum in loco tutiore consistere, sciscitabatur quid essent hi, quidve acturi illo convenissent. . . . Ergo si adversum nos at Deum suum clamant, profecto et ipsi quamvis arma non ferant contra nos pugnant. Itaque in hos primum arma verti jubet, et sic cæteras nefandæ militiæ copias . . . delevit . . . ut etiam temporalis interitus ultione sentirent perfidi, quod oblata sibi perpetuæ salutis consilia spreverant." — BEDE, v. 18.

⁹⁹ Annales Tighernach, ad. ann. 606.

An old calumny, revived in our day, makes Augustin answerable for this invasion, and accuses him of having pointed out the monastery of Bangor to the Northumbrian heathens.¹⁰⁰ But the Venerable Bede expressly states that he had been for a long time a saint in heaven when this invasion took place. It is enough that Bede himself, much more Saxon than Christian whenever he treats of the British, applauds this massacre more than a century afterwards, and sees in it Heaven's just vengeance on what he calls the infamous army of the disloyal Welsh—that is to say, on the heroic Christians who, in defence of their hearths and altars, fell beneath the sword of the pagan Anglo-Saxons, under the orders of a chief who, according to the testimony of Bede himself, slew more of the native population than any of his predecessors.¹⁰¹

After such an explosion of his own national antipathies, he seems to be singularly little entitled to reproach the Celts of Wales with the steadfastness of their resentment, as he does in stating that even in his time they made no account of the religion of the Anglo-Saxons, and would hold no more communion with them than with pagans.¹⁰²

It is possible, as an ingenious critic has said, that Augustin and his companions did not treat with sufficient tact the national and insular pride of the British, heightened by a long warlike resistance, by the traditions of the monks, and the patriotic songs of the bards.¹⁰³ But nothing, I repeat, indicates the slightest departure on his part from the counsel and example of the glorious pontiff whose disciple and emulator he was. Condemned by the obstinacy of the British to deprive himself of their assistance, he none the less continued his “hunt of men,” as his biographer calls it, by evangelizing the Saxons, who at least did not wear him out, ¹⁰⁰ This false imputation can be traced back to Geoffrey of Monmouth, bishop of St. Asaph in the twelfth century, and mouthpiece of the national rancors of Wales. Certain obscure writers, unworthy descendants of the Anglo-Saxons, such as Goodwin and Hammond, have adopted it out of hatred of the Romish Church, and not knowing how to reconcile it with Bede's positive assertion of the prior death of Augustin, have pretended that this passage of the Venerable historian had been interpolated. But all the modern editors of Bede have been obliged to acknowledge that the contested passage existed in all the MSS. of that author without exception. Compare LINGARD, Anglo-Saxon Church, vol. i. p. 74; VARIN, Premier Mémoire, pp. 25-29; GORINI, op. cit., vol. ii. p. 77.

¹⁰¹ BEDE, i. 34.

¹⁰² BEDE, ii. 20. See the text already cited, p. 687.

¹⁰³ OZANAM, p. 153.

like the Welsh, with their wordiness and their endless discussions.¹⁰⁴ And yet, even among the former he sometimes encountered an opposition which expressed itself in insult and derision, especially when he passed beyond the bounds of Ethelbert's kingdom. On one occasion, while traversing that region of the country of the West Saxons which is now called Dorsetshire, he and his companions found themselves in the midst of a seafaring population, who heaped on them affronts and outrages. These heathen savages not only refused to hear them, but even drove them away with acts of violence, and in hunting them from their territory, with a rude derision truly Teutonic, fastened to the black robes of the poor Italian monks, as a mark of contempt, the tails of the fish which formed their livelihood.¹⁰⁵ Augustin was not a man to be discouraged by such trifles. Besides, he found in other places crowds more attentive and more impressible. And thus he persevered for seven entire years, until his death, in his apostolic journeys — travelling after, as well as before, his archiepiscopal consecration, like a true missionary, always on foot, without carriage or baggage, and adding to his unwearied preaching good works and miracles — here making unknown springs gush from the ground, there healing by his touch the sick believed to be incurable or dying.¹⁰⁶

Founda-
tions of Ethelbert.
Bishoprics
of London and Rochester.

Meanwhile Ethelbert did not fail in solicitude for and generosity to the Church of which he had become the ardent disciple. Not content with the gifts which he had bestowed on the two great monasteries of Canterbury — on that which surrounded the metropolitan church, and on the Abbey of St. Peter and ¹⁰⁴ "Vix crediderim Augustinum a quoquam paganorum majori fatigatum verborum ambage. . . . In occidentalem ab Aquiloni plagam divertit, non tam viatoris quam venatoris aut aucupis morem gerens." — GOTSSELINUS, Hist. Maior, c. 32, 41.

¹⁰⁵ "Plebs impia . . . tota ludibriorum et opprobriorum in sanctos debacchata . . . nec manu pepercisse creditur. . . . Fama est illos effulminandos provenientes marinorum piscium caudas sanctis appendisse." — GOTSSELINUS, c. 41.

¹⁰⁶ "Tam post præsulatum quam ante, semper pede, absque vehiculo, patiens ambulando, liber et expeditus prædicationi evangelicæ." — ELMHAM, Hist. Monaster. S. Augustini, p. 106. Compare GOTSSELINUS, c. 44 and 49. This historian reproduces the story of an old man whose grandfather had, while still young, been a scoffer at the wonderful stranger whom the crowd followed and surrounded as though he were an angel from heaven, because he went about healing all their infirmities. "Cum vero audissem illum omnium debilium ac moribundorum curare corpora, ampliori incredulus cachinnabam vesania." He ended, nevertheless, in being baptized by the hand of Augustin himself.

St. Paul without the walls — he seconded with all his might the introduction of Christianity into a kingdom adjacent to his own and placed under his suzerainty — that of the Saxons of the East, or of Essex, the king of which was the son of his sister, and which was only separated from Kent by the Thames. Augustin having sent thither as bishop the monk Mellitus, one of the new missionaries sent to him by Gregory, Ethelbert built at London, the chief city of the West Saxons, a church, dedicated to St. Paul, intended for a cathedral, which it still is. In his own kingdom of Kent he authorized the erection of a second bishopric, situated at Rochester, a Roman city, twenty miles west of Canterbury; Augustin placed there as bishop another of the new missionaries, Justus by name; and the king caused a cathedral to be built there, which he named after St. Andrew, in memory of the Roman monastery whence Pope Gregory had drawn all the apostles of the Anglo-Saxon race.¹⁰⁷

All these foundations, destined to last to our own times in spite of so many strange and unhappy changes, invest him with an imperishable claim on the gratitude of Christian posterity; and long afterwards, when the Norman nobility had in their turn seized upon the supreme power and changed the aspect of the Church of England, King Ethelbert became apparent to her as the first who had provided with seigniorial strongholds, in the shape of bishops' seats and monasteries, the kingdom which he desired to hold in fee for the Lord God.¹⁰⁸

He did yet more for the Church of his country by securing for her property and her liberties what we may call, in modern rather than just terms, a legal and parliamentary sanction. In one of those periodical assemblies of the sages and chief men of the Saxon people, which bore the name of Witena-gemot, and which were the origin of the modern Parliament, he caused certain laws — the text of which is still preserved — to be committed to writing and published in the Anglo-Saxon tongue. They confirmed at once the old rights of the people, and the new rights conceded to the new Church. The first of the ninety articles of that legislative act enacts that those who should rob the goods of the Church, of the bishops,

Laws of Ethelbert guaranteeing the possessions and peace of the Church.

¹⁰⁷ BEDE, ii. 3.

¹⁰⁸ "Tum episcopia et monasteria tanquam dominica castella, quibus Dominicum regnum teneatur, liberaliter ac regaliter passim machinatur." — GOTSELINUS, Hist. Maior, c. 23.

or other orders of the clergy, shall make restitution eleven or twelve times beyond the value of the robbery.¹⁰⁹ The same article sanctioned implicitly what the English have since named the right of sanctuary — that is, the right of asylum and protection recognized as belonging to the precincts of Churches and monasteries — by visiting the violation of that peace of the Church with a penalty the double of that incurred by violation of the public peace. The whole nation thus sanctioned and ratified the work of its king by placing under the safeguard of penal laws the property and safety of the ministers of the religion which it had adopted.¹¹⁰

These laws, long known by the name of Dooms or Judgments of Ethelbert, are the first written laws known to us, not only of the English, but perhaps of any of the Germanic races. The best informed critics attribute to the influence of the Roman monks on the Anglo-Saxon king, this commencement of the national, or rather penal code.¹¹¹ For its enactments were chiefly penal, and we cannot but admire the wisdom of those missionaries who, trained in the traditions of Roman jurisprudence, nevertheless established and sanctioned the principle of pecuniary compensation universally adopted by the Germanic races. In these laws of Ethelbert a classification of social position is clearly apparent from the minutely exact enumeration of crimes committed against the life or safety of men, the honor of women, religion, and public peace. Every trespass is punished by a penalty proportionate — first, to the gravity of the offence, and next, to the rank of the victim. In case of murder, the compensation is due not only to the family of the deceased, but also to the community of which he was a member, and to the king who was his sovereign. This system, applied for the first time to the defence of the Christian Church by the Saxons of Kent, and for the first time reduced to a written form under the guidance of the Roman monks, will be found in all the subsequent legislation of the Saxon kingdoms, which the bishops and monks, successors of Augustin, continued to guide with a strong yet gentle hand into the ways of Christian civilization.

¹⁰⁹ “ Ut ecclesiæ peculium duodecies, episcopi undecies emendaretur.” — According to the instructions given by Gregory to Augustin, this surplus value of the restitution did not profit the Church, which was bound to be content with the simple restoration of what had been taken.

¹¹⁰ “ Inter cætera bona quæ genti suæ conferendo conferebat, etiam decreta illi judiciorum juxta exempla Romanorum, cum concilio sapientium constituit. . . . Volens scilicet tuitionem eis quos et quorum doctrinam susceperat, præstare.” — BEDE, ii. 5. Compare KEMBLE, Saxons in England, ii. 205; HOOK, op. cit., p. 59; WILKINS, Concilia, p. 25; THORPE, Ancient Laws and Institutes of England, 1840, c. 1. This last publication, executed by order of the English Government, gives the Saxon text of the laws of Ethelbert, with a very intelligent commentary.

¹¹¹ LAPPENBERG, vol. i. p. 142; LINGARD, Hist. of England, c. 11; Lord CAMPBELL, Lives of the Chancellors, art. Angemundus; especially PHILLIPS, Geschichte des Angelsachsischen Rechts, p. 61.

Great men, commissioned by God to begin works which are to be truly great and enduring, seldom live to old age; and when one of them disappears, it often happens that he carries with him on his way to a better world those who have been on earth his companions, servants, and friends. St. Gregory the Great, whose pontificate has left an ineffaceable impression upon the memory of Christendom, and a peerless example in the annals of the Church, reigned only fifteen years. He died in the early month of the year 605, and two months after Augustin followed his father and friend to the tomb.¹¹² The Roman missionary was interred, after the Roman custom, by the side of the public way, the great Roman road which led from Canterbury to the sea, and in the unfinished church of the famous monastery which was about to assume and to preserve his name.

Death of Gregory
and of Augustin.
605.
12th March.
12th May.

The name of Gregory will remain always identified with that conversion of England which was the labor of love of his whole life, and the greatest glory of his pontificate. His large and tender heart had been the first to conceive the thought of that conquest. His patient and conciliating genius, at once ardent and gentle, prudent and resolute, revealed to him the conditions of success. It is to him that the English race — at this day the most numerous and powerful of all Christian races — owes the revelation of the light of the Gospel.

He was the true apostle, the conqueror of England for God, and, through England, of immense countries which she has subjected to her laws, to her language, and to her religion. It is, then, with good reason that the first English historian claims for him this title. "Called," says Bede, "to a supreme pontificate over all the nations already converted to the faith, to our nation which was in bondage to idols, and out of which he has formed a Christian Church, he has been ¹¹² There has been much dispute about the date of the death of Augustin, which Mabillon had fixed in 607. But the majority of English historians are now agreed upon the date 605. Wharton would even place it as early as 604. — Anglia Sacra, vol. i. p. 91.

something more. We may well say of Gregory what Paul said of himself to the Corinthians — that if he has not been the apostle of others, he has been our apostle. Yes, we are the seal of his apostleship in the Lord — we, the people whom he rescued from the fangs of the old enemy, to make us partakers of the eternal freedom.”¹¹³

The nature of the means that Gregory employed to accomplish his work, and the moral perfection of the arrangements which he brought to bear on it, are even more to be admired than the work itself; — zeal, devotion, wisdom, moderation, love of souls, and respect for their freedom, pity, generosity, vigilance, indomitable perseverance, divine gentleness, intelligent patience — nothing was wanting in him. We leave the history of his pontificate, and especially of his intercourse with England, with no other regret than that inseparable from witnessing the end of so noble a life; and in losing sight of him, are left uncertain which should be the most admired — his good sense or his good heart, his genius or his virtue.

The figure of St. Augustin of Canterbury naturally pales beside that of St. Gregory the Great; his renown is, as it were, absorbed into the brilliant centre of the Pontiff's glory. And recent English and German historians¹¹⁴ have taken delight in bringing out the inferiority of the man whom Gregory chose for his vicegerent and his friend. They have vied with each other in decrying his character and services — accusing him by turns of hauteur and of feebleness, of irresolution and of obstinacy, of softness and of vanity, — trying, especially, to heighten and magnify the indications of hesitation and of self-seeking which they discover in his life. Let it be permitted to these strange precisians to reproach him with having stopped short of the ideal of which they pretend to dream, and which no hero of theirs has ever approached. To our judgment, the few shadows which fall on the noble career of this great saint are left there to touch the hearts and console the spirits of those who are, like him, infirm, and charged sometimes with a mission which, like him, they judge to be beyond their strength.

¹¹³ “Quia etsi aliis non est apostolus, sed tamen nobis est; nam signaculum apostolatus ejus nos sumus in Domino. . . . Quod nostram gentem per prædicatorum quos huc direxit, de dentibus antiqui hostis eripiens æternæ libertatis fecit esse participem.” — BEDE, ii. 1.

¹¹⁴ Stanley, Hook, Lappenberg.

Among the workers of great works who have changed the history of the world and decided the fate of nations one loves to meet with those infirmities, which give encouragement to the common average of men.

Let us, then, preserve intact our admiration and our gratitude for the first missionary — the first bishop and abbot of the English people. Let us give our meed of applause to that council which, a century and a half after his death, decreed that his name should be always invoked in the Litanies after that of Gregory, “because it is he who, sent by our father Gregory, first carried to the English nation the sacrament of baptism and the knowledge of the heavenly country.”¹¹⁵

CHAPTER III.

FIRST SUCCESSORS OF ST. AUGUSTIN — PAGAN REACTION.

Special characteristics of the conversion of England. — All the details of it are known: it has neither martyrs nor persecutions; it has been the exclusive work of Benedictine or Celtic monks. — All the Roman missionaries were monks; their monasteries served for cathedrals and parish churches. — Laurence, first successor of Augustin. — Mellitus at the council of Rome at 610; Pope's letter to Ethelbert; monks of Saxon origin. — Efforts of Laurence to reconcile the British; his letter to the Irish bishops. — Conversion of the kings of East Anglia and Essex. — Foundation of Westminster; legend of the fisher; King Sebert the first to be buried there; monastic burials; Nelson and Wellington. — Canterbury and Westminster, the metropolis and national neropolis of the English, due to the monks. — Death of Bertha and of Ethelbert; the abbot Peter drowned. — Eadbald, the new king of Kent, remains a pagan; his subjects, as also the Saxons of the East, return to paganism. — Flight of the bishops of London and Rochester; Archbishop Laurence held back by St. Peter. — Conversion of Eadbald. — Apostasy of the king of East Anglia; he admits Christ among the Scandinavian gods. — Mellitus and Justus, the second and third successors of Augustin.

THE preaching of the Gospel in England is marked by several characteristics altogether peculiar to itself, and distinguishing it from those Special characteristics of the conversion of England.

¹¹⁵ “Qui genti Anglorum a præfato Papa et patre nostro missus . . . scientiam fidei, baptismi sacramentum et cœlestis patriæ notitiam primus attulit.” — Concilium Cloveshoviense, anno 747.

revolutions which introduced Christianity into the western nations previously converted to the faith.

In Italy, Gaul, and Spain, the propagation of the Gospel and the extinction of paganism are surrounded with such obscurity that it is impossible to be sure of the date at which the first evangelists of most of the dioceses lived.

Its details known. In England, on the other hand, nothing is vague or uncertain. Year by year, and day by day, we witness the various phases of the grand event. We take part, as it were, in the very work—the conversion of a great country—which it is so rarely possible to study in detail. We can follow it in all its changes of fortune with the same certainty and precision as if it were an incident in our contemporary missions.

Neither martyrs nor persecutors. Moreover, in the great lands and illustrious churches which have just been named, the baptism of blood everywhere accompanied or preceded the conversion of the people. Like the apostles at Rome and in the East, the missionaries of the Gospel in the West had, for the most part, to water with their blood the first furrows that they were honored to draw in the field of the divine Husbandman. Even after the great imperial persecutions had come to an end, martyrdom often crowned the apostolate of the first bishops or their auxiliaries.

In England there was nothing at all like this: from the first day of St. Augustin's preaching, and during the whole existence of the Anglo-Saxon Church, there was neither martyr nor persecutor there. When brought within the circle of the pure and radiant light of Christianity, and even before they acknowledged and worshipped it, these fierce Saxons, pitiless as they were to their enemies, showed themselves very much more humanely disposed and accessible to the truth than the enlightened and civilized citizens of Imperial Rome. Not one drop of blood was shed for the sake of religion, or under any religious pretext; and this wonder occurred at a time when blood flowed in torrents for the most frivolous motives, and in that island where afterwards so many piles were to be lighted, and so many scaffolds raised, to immolate the English who should remain true to the faith of Gregory and Augustin.

The conversion the exclusive work of the monks. A third distinctive feature of the conversion of England is that it was exclusively the work of monks; first, of Benedictine monks sent from Rome—and afterwards, as we shall see, of Celtic monks, who seemed for a moment about to eclipse or supplant the Italian monks, but who soon suffered themselves to be absorbed by the influence of the Benedictines, and whose spiritual posterity is inseparably connected with that of the Roman missionaries in the common observance of the rule of the great legislator of the monks of the West.

The monastic profession of these first missionaries has been the subject of frequent and long dispute. While it has been admitted that many were of the order to which he himself belonged, it has been denied that all the monks sent by St. Gregory the Great were Benedictines. But the unerring and unrivalled learning of Mabillon has settled the question by irrefutable arguments.¹¹⁶ It is possible that some clerks or secular priests were to be found among the assistants of the first Archbishop of Canterbury; but it is distinctly proved, by the authority of Bede and of all the earliest records, that Augustin himself and his successors, as well as all the religious of his metropolitan church and the great abbey which bore his name, followed the rule of St. Benedict, like the great Pope whose mission they carried out. Gregory, as has been seen, was desirous of taking advantage of the new ecclesiastical organization of England to introduce ¹¹⁶ In the preface of the first century of the Acta Sanctorum Ordinis S. Benedicti, paragraph 8, Mabillon has completely proved against Baronius and Marsham, one of the editors of the Monasticon Anglicanum, that Gregory, Augustin, and their disciples belonged to the order of St. Benedict. The brethren of Saint-Maur, in the life of Gregory placed at the beginning of their edition of his works, have completed the proof (book iii. c. 5, 6, 7). These brief but weighty pages say more on the subject than the folio entitled Apostolatus Benedictinorum in Anglia, sive Disceptatio Historica de Antiquitate Ordinis Congregationisque Monachorum Nigrorum in Regno Angliæ, opera R. P. CLEMENTIS REYNERI, Duaci, 1626. This ill-arranged and tedious compilation is nevertheless important for the later history of England, on account of the numerous and curious articles which it contains. One of the most curious is the note asked and obtained by the author from the four most celebrated and learned English Protestants of his time, Cotton, Spelman, Camden, and Selden, who unanimously declare that all their researches have led them to the conclusion that St. Augustin, his companions, and his successors, were Benedictines. The English text of this is to be found in STEVENS, Continuation of Dugdale, vol. i. p. 171. A modern Anglican, Soames, has recently asserted that the Benedictines did not arrive till the tenth century with St. Dunstan; but he has been refuted by the two most distinguished of modern English archaeologists, the Protestant Kemble and the Catholic Lingard. The latter, however, is in error in supposing (History and Antiquities of the Anglo-Saxon Church, vol. i. p. 152) that Augustin placed in the Cathedral of Canterbury clerks and not monks. He has mistaken the early synonymy of the words clerici and monachi, in modern times used to express two entirely distinct ideas, but which were employed indifferently from the days of Gregory of Tours to those of the Venerable Bede, and even later.

there that close alliance of the monastic and ecclesiastical life which, to his mind, realized the ideal of the apostolic church. For more than a century that alliance was universal and absolute. Wherever the pagan temples were transformed into churches—wherever the old churches of the time of the Romans and Britons rose from their ruins—there monastic life prevailed among the missionaries who served the cures. The converted country was thus, little by little, overspread by monasteries; the small ones for a long time held the place of rural parish churches; the large served for cathedrals, chapter-houses, and residences for the bishops, who were all produced by the monastic orders.

Laurence,
first successor of Augustin.
—
605-619.

The first thirty-eight archbishops of Canterbury were all monks; and the first four successors of St. Augustin were taken from among the monks of the Monastery of St. Andrew at Rome, whom Pope Gregory had appointed to be his fellow-workmen. During his life, Augustin had chosen as his successor in the primacy his companion Laurence, and had procured his consecration beforehand, thus meaning, with fatherly anxiety, to make the best provision for the frail fortunes of the new-born Church of the English.¹¹⁷ The new archbishop did honor to the choice which had honored him. He devoted himself nobly to the consolidation of the Church which he had seen founded; he conciliated all hearts, and increased the number of the faithful by the unwearied activity of his preaching no less than by the saintly example of his life.

Laurence lived for ten years in an intimate union with the good king Ethelbert, and acted as the medium of communication between that prince and the Holy See. The third successor of Gregory, Boniface IV.—he who consecrated the Roman Pantheon to Christian worship in memory of all the martyrs—exhibited towards the king and the missionary monks of the kingdom of Kent a goodwill and confidence worthy of his illustrious predecessor.

¹¹⁷ "Ne se defuncto adhuc status ecclesiæ tam rudis, vel ad horam pastore destitutus, vacillare inciperet."—BEDE, ii. 4. The last historian of the archbishops of Canterbury, Dr. Hook, maintains that Laurence was not a monk, taking as his ground the passage in which Bede describes him as priest to distinguish him from his companion Peter the monk: "Misit continuo Romam Laurentium presbyterum et Petrum monachum."—i. 27. He forgets that this same Peter is himself described as priest some pages farther on: "Primus ejusdem monasterii abbas Petrus presbyter fuit."—i. 33. The title of priest was not at all incompatible with the monastic profession. That point was settled at the Council of Rome in 610—only then, as now, all monks were not in priest's orders.

Mellitus, the new bishop of the East Saxons, was sent by Laurence to Rome to consult the Pope upon different matters affecting the interests of the Church of England. ^{27th Feb., 610.} He was one of the members of the Council of Rome, in which were promulgated the canons which confirmed the rule of St. Benedict, and accorded to the monks the right of administering the sacraments and of being admitted to all the grades of the priesthood.¹¹⁸ Mellitus brought back to England the decrees of this council, which he had himself signed along with the other bishops; he brought likewise very gracious letters from the Pope to the archbishop and to the king. "Glorious king," Boniface wrote to Ethelbert, "we accord to you with right good will that which you have demanded of the Apostolic See through our co-bishop Mellitus: to wit, that in the monastery which your holy teacher Augustin, the disciple of Gregory, of blessed memory, consecrated under the name of the Holy Saviour, in your city of Canterbury, and over which our very dear brother Laurence now presides, you should establish a dwelling for monks, living together in complete regularity; and we decree, by our apostolic authority, that the monks who have preached the faith to you may take this new monastic community into association with themselves, and teach its members to live a holy life."¹¹⁹

Through the obscurity of this language it seems natural to conclude that the introduction of new monks, probably of Saxon origin, into the Italian community founded by Augustin, is here indicated. A century passed, however, ere an abbot born in England could be chosen to preside over it.

Like Augustin, Archbishop Laurence was not content to labor for the salvation of the Saxons with his monkish brethren only: his pastoral anxiety urged him to search for the means of bringing the Christians of the ancient British race into unity

Efforts of Laurence to bring about the conversion of the Britons.

¹¹⁸ "Cum idem Papa cogeret synodem episcoporum Italiae, de vita monachorum et quiete ordinaturus." — BEDE, loc. cit.

¹¹⁹ "Fili gloriose, quod ab Apostolica sede per coepiscopum nostrum Mellitum postulatis, libenti animo concedimus; id est, ut vestra benignitas in monasterio in Dorobernensi civitate constituto, quod sanctus doctor vester Augustinus, beatae memoriae Gregorii discipulus, sancti Salvatoris nomini consecravit, cui ad praesens praesse dignoscitur dilectissimus frater noster Laurentius, licenter per omnia monachorum regulariter viventium habitationem statuatur, apostolica auctoritate decernentes ut ipsi vestri praedicatores monachi monachorum gregem sibi associet et eorum vitam sanctitatum (sic) moribus exornent." — GUILLELMUS MALMESBUR., De Gestis Pontificum Anglorum, lib. i. p. 118, ed. Savile.

with Rome, so that he and they might work together for the conversion of the pagans. His experience of the conditions under which the Christian religion might be successfully extended made him bitterly deplore the hostile attitude of the Celtic monks, and the polemical rancor which broke out in them whenever they sought or consented to discuss the matters in dispute. It was at the same moment that the illustrious Columbanus impaired the effect of the admirable example which he set to France, Burgundy, and Switzerland, by his extraordinary eccentricities. The rumor of them had reached even Laurence, who could not forbear referring to it in an epistle which he addressed to the bishops and abbots of all Scotia — that is to say, of Ireland — the chief centre of the Celtic Church. Having failed, like Augustin, in a direct advance which, with his two suffragans, he had made to the clergy of the Welsh Britons, he sought to ascend to the source of the evil by writing to their brethren in the neighboring island to expostulate with them on their universal intolerance. His letter begins thus: —

“To our very dear brethren, the lords, bishops, and abbots of Ireland, — we, Laurence, Mellitus, and Justus, servants of the servants of God, greeting. The Holy See having directed us, as is its wont, to these western regions, there to preach the faith to the heathen, we have entered this island of Britain, not knowing what we did. Believing that they all followed the rules of the universal Church, we held in great veneration the piety of the Britons and the Scots. When we came to know the Britons, we thought the Scots were better than they. But now, when the bishop Dagan has come to us from Ireland, and when the abbot Columbanus has betaken himself to Gaul, we know that the Scots differ in nothing from the Britons; for the bishop Dagan has not only refused to partake of our hospitality — he has not even deigned to eat in the place which serves as our dwelling.”¹²⁰ Dagan was a monk of the great Irish Monastery of Bangor: he had come to confer with the mission at Canterbury, and he had undoubtedly been offended by the firm determination of the Roman prelates to maintain the conditions of liturgical unity. No trace has survived of any overtures towards reconciliation on his part, or on that of any other representative of the Celtic Churches.

The Roman monks were for some time more successful among the Saxon settlements — neighbors or vassals of the monarchy of Ethelbert. The most eastern district of the island — that which, lying between the Thames and the sandy outlets of the Ouse, forms a sort of circular projection looking towards Scandinavia — was occupied, towards the north, by the tribe of East Angles, or English of the East. Their king, Redwald, who had paid a visit to the king of Kent, received baptism like him; and his conversion awakened hopes of the conversion of his people — a population much more numerous than that of the country already won for Christ, occupying as it did the large modern countries of Norfolk and Suffolk, with a part of the shires of Cambridge, Huntingdon, Bedford, and Hertford. Between East Anglia and Kent lay the kingdom of Essex, or of the Saxons of the East, already converted during Augustin's life, thanks to its king Sebert, the nephew of the Bretwalda Ethelbert. This kingdom was particularly important on account of its capital, the ancient Roman colony of LONDON, where Mellitus had been appointed bishop by Augustin.

¹²⁰ BEDE, loc. cit.

Conversion
of the kings of
East Anglia
and of
Essex.

He had founded there, as we have seen, on the ruins of an ancient temple of Diana, a monastic cathedral dedicated to St. Paul. Soon after, to the west of the episcopal city, and on the site of a temple of Apollo, which had supplanted, after the Diocletian persecution, a church occupied by the first British Christians,¹²¹ the new bishop of London built, with the concurrence of Sebert the king, another church and a monastery dedicated to St. Peter. Thus on the banks of the Thames, as on those of the Tiber, and in expressive and touching remembrance of Rome, the two princes of the apostles found in these two sanctuaries, separate yet near, a new consecration of their glorious brotherhood in the apostolate and martyrdom.

Foundation of Westminster.
610.

This modest monastic colony established itself on a frightful and almost inaccessible site,¹²² in the middle of a deep marsh, on an islet formed by an arm of the Thames, and so covered with briars and thorns that it was called Thorney Island. From its position to the west of London it took a new name, destined to rank among the most famous in the world — that of WESTMINSTER, or Monastery of the West.

As far as our history can extend, it will always find the ¹²¹ DUGDALE, Monasticon Anglicanum, vol. i. p. 55.

¹²² "In loco terribili." — Charter quoted by RIDGWAY, The Gem of Thorney Island, p. 4.

national sanctuary of England encircled with growing splendor and celebrity. But at present our business is only to record the legend which brightens its humble cradle—a legend which we have already met with among the British at Glastonbury, and which we shall find among other nations at the beginning of other great monastic foundations—in France at that of St. Denis, in Switzerland at Einsiedlen—and which has exercised on the imagination of the English people an influence more durable and powerful than is generally produced by the best authenticated facts. Up to the sixteenth century it was still told from generation to generation that in the night preceding the day fixed for the consecration of the new church, and while Bishop Mellitus, within his tent, was preparing for the ceremony of the morrow, St. Peter, the great fisher of men, appeared under the form of an unknown traveller to a poor fisherman whose boat was moored on the bank of the Thames opposite the Isle of Thorns. The water was rough, and the river in flood. The stranger persuaded the fisherman to row him across to the opposite bank, and when he landed he made his way towards the new church. As he crossed its threshold, the fisherman with amazement saw the interior of the edifice lighted up. From floor to roof, within and without, a chorus of angelic voices filled the air with a music such as he had never heard, and with the sweetest odors. After a long interval the music ceased, and all disappeared except the stranger, who, returning, charged the fisherman to go and tell the bishop what he had seen, and how he, whom the Christians called St. Peter, had himself come to the consecration of the church which his friend king Sebert had raised to him.¹²³

This king Sebert and his wife were buried at Westminster; and subsequently, through many vicissitudes, the great abbey, becoming more and more dear to the Church, to the princes, nobles, and people, was the chosen burial-place of the kings and the royal family. It is still, in our time, as every one knows, the Pantheon of England, who has found no nobler consecration for the memory of her heroes, orators, and poets, her most glorious children, than to give them their last resting-place under the vaults of the old monastic sanctuary.¹²⁴ Near that sanctuary the royalty of England long sojourned; in one of its dependent buildings the House of Commons held its first meeting; ¹²⁵ under its shadow the English Parliament, the most ancient, powerful, and glorious assembly in the world, has always flourished, and still remains. Never has a monument been more identified with the history of a people. Each of its stones represents a page of the country's annals!

¹²³ "Ecce subito lux cœlestis emicuit. . . . Affuit cum apostolo multitudo civium supernorum . . . aures angelicæ voces mulcebat sonoritas, nares indicibilis odoris fragrantia perfundebat. . . . Nova Dei nupta, consecrante eo qui cœlum claudit et aperit, cœlestibus resplendet luminaribus. . . . Fixis tentoriis a dimidio milliario. . . . Rediit ad piscatorem piscium egregius piscator hominum. . . . Ego sum quem Christiani sanctum Petrum apostolum vocant, qui hanc ecclesiam meam hac nocte Deo dedicavi . . . quam mihi ille meus amicus Sebertus fabricavit." — RIC. CIRENCESTER, Speculum Hist. de Gestis Reg. Angl., ii. 27. Dugdale quotes no less than four original versions of this miracle, extracted from ancient English chronicles. Compare BARONIUS, Annal., an. 610, c. 10, and Acta SS. Bolland., January i. p. 246. Hook gives a plausible enough explanation of the tradition.

Canterbury embodies the religious life of England, Westminster has been the centre of her political life and her real capital; and England owes Canterbury, as she owes Westminster, to the sons of St. Benedict.

Meanwhile a shadow was about to fall on the dawn of the faith in England. The noble granddaughter of Clotilda, the gentle and pious Queen Bertha, was dead. She preceded her husband in her death, as in her faith, and was buried beside the great Roman missionary who had given her the joy of seeing her husband's kingdom, and her husband himself, converted to Christianity.

Death of Queen
Bertha,

When the first successor of Augustin celebrated the solemn consecration of the great monastic church which was to be the burying-place, or, as they said then, the bed of rest (thalamus) for Christian kings and primates, the remains of the queen, and of the first archbishop of Canterbury, were transferred thither; those of the queen were laid in front of the altar sacred to St. Martin, the great wonder-worker of Gaul, and those of the primate before the altar of his father and friend, St. Gregory.¹²⁶ Three years later, Ethelbert, who had married again, also died, and was buried by Bertha's side in the Church of St. Augustin. He reigned fifty-six years, twenty of which he had been a Christian. "He was," says Bede, "the first English king who ascended to heaven, and the Church numbered him among her saints."¹²⁷

613.

¹²⁴ Chatham, Pitt, Fox, Sheridan, Grattan, Canning, Peel — all the great modern orators and statesmen, the poets, the admirals, the generals slain on the battle-field — there repose by the side of Edward the Confessor, and the kings and heroes of the middle ages. The words of Nelson at the moment of beginning the battle of Aboukir, "Now for a peerage or Westminster Abbey!" will be remembered by our readers. In our day the custom has been introduced of burying the great military chiefs at St. Paul's. Nelson and Wellington both rest in the vaults of the church which bears the name and occupies the site of the first foundation of Augustin's companion.

¹²⁵ It was in the fine chapter-house of Westminster Abbey that the Commons sat. Although their violent debates were lamented as disturbing the monastic worship, they remained there till the Reformation; when St. Stephen's Chapel, on the site of which the present House of Commons is placed, was allotted to them.

Laurence thus remained the sole survivor of all who had taken part, twenty years before, in the famous conference in the isle of Thanet, at which the Saxon king and Frankish queen met the Roman missionaries. His companion, Peter, the first abbot of the monastery of St. Augustin, was drowned on the French coast, some time before, while fulfilling a mission on which King Athelbert had sent him. Laurence had thus to encounter all alone the storm which burst forth immediately after the death of Ethelbert. The conversion of that monarch had not insured that of all his people; and Eadbald, his son who succeeded to the throne, had not embraced Christianity along with his father. The looseness of his morals had helped to keep him in idolatry. When he became king he wished to marry his father's widow, the second wife whom Ethelbert had married after the death of Bertha. This kind of incest, with which St. Paul reproached the first Christians of Corinth,¹²⁸ was only too consonant with the usages of several of the Teutonic races;¹²⁹ but such a case had been anticipated, and formally forbidden in Gregory's reply to Augustin, when consulted as to the matrimonial relations of the Saxons. This was not Eadbald's only crime. He gave himself up to such transports of fury that he was commonly regarded as beside himself, and possessed with a demon. But his example sufficed to draw into apostasy those who had embraced Christian faith and chastity only from motives of fear, or from a desire to stand well with King Ethelbert.

The tempest which threatened to engulf the recent Christianity of England, became more and more formidable when ¹²⁶ GUILLELM THORNE, Chron. S. August., p. 1765; THOMAS DE ELMHAM, Hist. Monast. S. August., p. 432, ed. Hardivicke; STANLEY, Memorials of Canterbury, p. 26.

¹²⁷ Act. SS. Bolland., vol. iii. February, p. 470.

¹²⁸ 1 Corinth. v. 1.

¹²⁹ KEMBLE, Saxons in England, ii. 407.

the death of Sebert, nephew of Ethelbert, and founder of Westminster, raised to the sovereignty of the kingdom of Essex his three sons, who, like the son of the king of Kent, had remained pagans. They immediately resumed the public practice of the idolatry which they had but for a short time foregone during the life of their father, and gave full liberty to all their subjects to worship idols. At the same time they still went occasionally to witness the ceremonies of the Christian worship; and one day, when the bishop Mellitus was administering, in their presence, the communion to the faithful, they said to him, with the freedom of their barbarian pride, "Why do you not offer us that white bread which you gave to our father, and which you continue to give to the people in your church?" "If you will be washed," answered the bishop, "in the fountain of salvation, as your father was, you may, like him, have your share of the holy bread; otherwise, it is impossible."

Reaction to heathenism among the East
Saxons.

Expulsion
of the Bishop of London.

"We have no desire," replied the princes, "to enter your fountain—we have no need of it; but we want to refresh ourselves with that bread:" and as they insisted on it, the bishop repeated again that it was needful that they should be cleansed from all sin before being admitted to the communion. Then they flew into a rage, and ordered him to quit their kingdom with all that belonged to him: "Since you will not gratify us in a matter so simple, you shall stay no longer in our country."¹³⁰

The Bishop of London thus driven away, crossed the Thames, and came into the kingdom of Kent, in order to confer with the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of Rochester as to the course he should pursue. These were the only three bishops of the Christian church in England, and all three lost courage in presence of the new peril which threatened them. They decided that it was better that they should all return to their own country, there to serve God in freedom, than that they should remain uselessly among barbarians who had revolted from the faith. The two bishops were the first to fly, and crossed over to France. Laurence prepared to

Archbishop
Laurence
wishes to leave
England.

¹³⁰ "Auxit procellam hujus perturbationis mors Sabercti. . . . Barbari inflati stultitia dicebant: Quare non et nobis panem nitidum porrigis. . . . Si vultis ablui fonte illo salutari. . . . Nolumus fontem illum intrare. . . . si non vis adsentire nobis in tam facili causa quam petimus, non poteris jam in nostra provincia demorari."—BEDE, ii. 5.

follow them, but in the night before his intended departure, wishing to pray and to weep without restraint over that English Church which he had helped to found a quarter of a century before, and which he was now obliged to abandon, he had his bed placed in the church of the monastery where reposed Augustin, Ethelbert, and Bertha. Scarcely had he fallen asleep when St. Peter appeared to him, as Jesus Christ had erewhile appeared to St. Peter himself when the prince of the apostles, flying from Nero's persecution, met on the Appian Way his divine Master coming towards Rome, there to be, in his default, a second time crucified.¹³¹ The prince of the apostles overwhelmed with reproaches, and even scourged till the blood came, the bishop who was ready to abandon Christ's flock to the wolves, instead of braving martyrdom to save it.

On the morrow Lawrence showed his bruised and bleeding sides to the king, who, at the sight, asked who had dared thus to maltreat such a man as he. "It was St. Peter," said the bishop, "who inflicted on me all these blows and sufferings for your salvation."¹³² Eadbald, moved and terrified, renounced idolatry, gave up his incestuous marriage, and promised to do his best for the protection of the Church. He called the two bishops, Mellitus and Justus, back from France, and sent them back to their dioceses to re-establish the faith in all freedom. After his conversion he continued to serve God with his people; he even built a new church dedicated to the Holy Virgin, in the monastery founded by St. Augustin, where he reckoned upon being buried beside his father and mother.

But he had not the same authority over the other Saxon realms with which Ethelbert had been invested in his capacity of Bretwalda, or military chief of the Saxon federation. He could not succeed in restoring Mellitus to his diocese. The princes of Essex who had expelled him had all perished in a war with the Saxons of the West; but their subjects persevered in idolatry, and the people of London offered the most determined resistance to the re-establishment of the Roman bishop, declaring that they greatly preferred their idolatrous priests.¹³³

After the vision of St. Peter, he is retained by King Eadbald, who is converted.

¹³¹ Every one has seen at Rome, on the Appian Way, the church called Domine quo vadis, built on the spot where, according to tradition, St. Peter put that question to the Lord, who answered him, Vado Romam iterum crucifigi. — S. AMBR., Contra Auxentium.

¹³² "Flagellis arctioribus afficiens. . . . An mei, inquit, oblitus es exempli qui pro parvulis Christi . . . vincula, verbera, carceres, afflictiones, ipsam postremo mortem, mortem autem crucis, ab infidelibus et inimicis Christi ipse cum Christo coronandus pertuli. . . . Retecto vestimento . . . quantis esset verberibus laceratus ostendit. Qui . . . inquirens quis tanto viro ausus esset plagas infligere." — BEDE, ii. 6.

The kingdom of Essex seemed thus altogether lost to the faith; and as to East Anglia, the conversion of its king, Redwald, had not been serious and permanent. No sooner had he returned from the visit to Ethelbert, during which he received baptism, than he allowed himself to be brought back to the worship of his fathers by the influence of his wife and his principal councillors; but he made the same concession to the new religion which had been already accorded to it by a Roman emperor — a concession much more worthy of a Cæsar of the Roman decadence than of the impetuous instincts of a barbarian king. He vouchsafed to assign to the Son of the only true God a place by the side of his Scandinavian deities, and established two altars in the same temple — the one for the sacrifice of Jesus Christ, and the other for the victims offered to the idols.¹³⁴

Defection
of East
Anglia.

Of all the conquests made by the envoys of Gregory, there remained now only a portion of the country and of the people of Kent surrounding the two great monastic sanctuaries of Canterbury, — the metropolitan church dedicated to Christ, and the abbey of St. Augustin, then bearing the names of St. Peter and St. Paul. Roman missionaries, one after another, succeeded to the government of these two monasteries, which were now the only centres in which the fire of Christian life still burned in England. During more than a century all the abbots of St. Augustin's monastery were chosen from among the Roman monks, and probably from those who came from Mount Cælius to follow or join him.¹³⁵

¹³³ "Nec, licet auctoribus perditis, excitatum ad scelera vulgus potuit corrigi. . . . Londonienses episcopum recipere noluerunt, idololatriis magis pontificibus servire gaudentes. Non enim tanta erat ei, quanta patri ipsius regni potestas, ut etiam nolentibus ac contradicentibus paganis antistitem suæ posset ecclesiæ reddere." — BEDE, ii. 6, 7.

¹³⁴ "Rediens domum, ab uxore et quibusdam perversis doctoribus seductus, in eodem fano et altare haberet ad sacrificium Christi et arulam ad victimas demoniorum." — BEDE, iii. 15. Bede adds that in his lifetime there was a king of East Anglia who in his childhood had seen that temple still standing.

¹³⁵ The succession of these abbots, as given by Thomas Elmham in his chronicle of the Abbey of St. Augustin, is as follows: John, † 618; Rufinianus, † 626; Gratosus, † 638; this last, Romanus natione, as well as his 619.

2d Feb.,

624.

Mellitus,
Justus, and Honorius companions and successors of Augustin
at Can-
terbury.

In the archiepiscopal see, Laurence, who died three years after his reconciliation to the new king, was succeeded by Mellitus, who thus finally renounced all idea of again settling among the Saxons of the east. After Mellitus, who, though tortured by the gout, showed an indefatigable devotion to his apostolic duties, Justus, the bishop of Rochester, became archbishop. Like Augustin, he received the pallium, along with the privilege of ordaining bishops at his pleasure, a privilege conferred upon him by the Pope Boniface V., careful, as his predecessor Boniface IV. had been, to maintain the mission which Gregory had bequeathed to the special charge of the Pontiff. The Pope had received letters from King Eadbald which filled him with comfort and hope; and in placing under the jurisdiction of Archbishop Justus the English not only of Kent but of all the neighboring kingdoms, he exhorted him to persevere with commendable patience in the work of the redemption of the English people.¹³⁵

624-627.

Justus occupied the archbishop's throne for three years only, and was succeeded by Honorius, also a disciple of St. Gregory and St. Augustin, and the last of the companions of the great missionary who was to fill his place in the primacy of the new Christian kingdom.

The Nor-
thumbrian
Saxons.

In the midst of these mistakes, perils, and difficulties, and while the third successor of Augustin maintained, as best he could, the remains of the Roman mission in the still modest and often menaced metropolis of Canterbury, the horizon suddenly brightened toward the north of England. An event occurred there which seemed to realize the first designs of St. Gregory, and to open new and vast fields for the propagation of the gospel. It is in this northern region that the principal interest of the great drama which gave England to the Church is henceforth to be concentrated.

successor Petronius, † 654; Nathaniel, "quondam cum Mellito a Justo a Roma ad Angliam destinatus," † 667; after him the celebrated Adrian, the African, whose successor Albin, elected in 708, was the first de gente nostra, says the historian, and was, moreover, the disciple of Adrian, a great Latinist, Hellenist, and collaborateur of Bede.

¹³⁵ "Hoc illa repensatione vobis collatum est, qua injuncto ministerio jugiter persistentes, laudabili patientia redemptionem gentis illius expectastis." — BEDE, ii. 8.

CHAPTER IV.

FIRST MISSION IN NORTHUMBRIA—ITS SUCCESSES AND ITS DISASTER—BISHOP PAULINUS AND KING EDWIN.

Extent and origin of the Anglo-Saxon settlements in Northumbria; thanks to their compatriot Bede, their history is better known than that of the others. — Ida and Ella, founders of the two kingdoms of Deira and Bernicia; Bamborough and the Fair Traitor. — War of the Northumbrians and Britons: Ethelfrid the Ravager, conqueror of the Welsh and of the Scots under Aidan, the friend of St. Columba. — Edwin, representing the rival dynasty, a refugee in East Anglia; on the point of being delivered over to his enemies, he is saved by the queen; vision and promise. — He becomes king of Northumbria and Bretwalda; list of Bretwaldas. — He marries the Christian Ethelburga, daughter of the king of Kent. — Mission of Bishop Paulinus, who accompanies the princess to York. — Influence of women in the conversion of the Saxons. — Fruitless preaching of Paulinus; letters of Boniface V. to the king and queen. — Edwin saved from the poniard of an assassin; birth of his daughter; war against the West Saxons. — Hesitation of Edwin; last effort of Paulinus. — Edwin promises to accept the faith after consulting his parliament. — Speeches of the high priest and of the chief captain. — Baptism of Edwin and of his nobility. — Bishopric and monastic cathedral of York. — The king and the bishop labor for the conversion of the Northumbrians. — General baptism by immersion. — Paulinus to the south of the Humber. — Foundations of Southwell and Lincoln. — Consecration of Honorius, fourth successor of Augustin at Canterbury. — Letter of Pope Honorius to the two metropolitans and to King Edwin. — Prosperous reign of Edwin. — Conversion of East Anglia; foundation of Edinburgh; conquest of Anglesea; public security; the woman and the foster-child; the copper cups; the tufa of the Bretwalda. — League of the Saxons and Britons of Mercia against the Saxons of Northumbria: Cadwallon and Penda. — Edwin is killed. — Flight of Paulinus and Ethelburga. — Overthrow of Christianity in Northumbria and East Anglia. — Check of the Roman missionaries; their virtues and their faults. — There remain to them only the metropolis and the abbey of St. Augustin at Canterbury, which continue to be the two citadels of Roman influence.

Of all the settlements made by the Teutonic conquerors of Britain, that of the Angles to the north of the river Humber, which seems to divide into two parts the island of Great Britain, and from which is derived the name of Northumbria, was, beyond comparison, the most important. This kingdom occupied the whole eastern coast from the mouth of the Humber to the Firth of Forth, including the existing counties of York, Durham, and Northumberland, with all the south-eastern portion of modern Scotland. To the west it extended to the borders of the British territories of Cambria and Strathclyde, and even approached, on the frontiers of Caledonia, that new kingdom of the Scots of Ireland which the great missionary Columba had just inaugurated.

Origin and extent of the kingdom of Northumbria.

Its history the best known through
the Nor-
thumbrian
Bede.

Northumbria was not merely the largest kingdom of the Saxon Heptarchy — it is also that whose history is the most animated, dramatic, and varied — the richest in interesting and original characters. It is that, in short, where the incidents of the conversion of the Anglo-Saxon conquerors, and of the propagation of monastic institutions, appear to us in fullest light. This is naturally explained by the fact that it is the birth-place of the Venerable Bede. This great and honest historian — the English Gregory of Tours, and the father of British history — was born and always lived in Northumberland. Hence in his interesting narratives a natural prominence is given to the men and the affairs of his native region, along with an exact and detailed reproduction of the local traditions and personal recollections which he treasured up and repeated with such scrupulous care.

547.

Bede informs us that about a century after the first landing of the Saxons, under Hengist, in the country of Kent, their neighbors, the Angles, crossing the North Sea, founded on the opposite coast of Britain two colonies, long distinct, sometimes united, but finally combined together under the name of Northumbria.¹³⁷ The wall anciently raised by the Emperor Severus from the mouth of the Solway to that of the Tyne to check the Caledonian incursions, was their boundary. The oldest of the two kingdoms was that of the Bernicians to the north. Their chief,

Ida, founder of the kingdom of Bernicia.

Ida — who, like Hengist, claimed to be a descendant of Odin — established his residence in a fortress which he called Bamborough, after his wife Bebbu, with that conjugal reverence so often illustrated even among the most savage Germans. The British bards, in return, have named this queen the Fair Traitor, because she was of British origin, and fought in the foremost ranks on the field of battle against her countrymen.¹³⁸ The imposing remains of this fortress, situated on a detached rock on the coast, still surprise and arrest the traveller. From this point the invasion of the Angles spread over the fertile valleys of the Tweed and Tyne.

¹³⁷ United from 588 to 633; separated at the death of Edwin in 634; and reunited anew under Oswald and Oswy.

The second colony, that of the Deirians, to the south, was concentrated principally in the valley of the Tees and in the extensive region which is now known as Yorkshire.

The first chief of the Deirians of whom anything is known, was that Alla or Ella, whose name — pronounced by the young slaves exposed for sale in the Forum — suggested to St. Gregory the hope of soon hearing the Hallelujah echo through his kingdom.¹³⁹ This region, to the north of the Humber, was precisely that which had suffered most from the Caledonian incursions; and, according to some authors, the Saxons of Hengist, called in the character of allies by the Britons to their aid, were already established before the arrival of the Deirian colony. But Ida and his Angles would not in any character hold tenure under their Germanic compatriots from the south of the island, and instead of fighting against the Picts or the Scots they leagued themselves with them to crush the ill-starred Britons.

Ella,
founder of the kingdom of Deira.
559-588.

Ida, who had twelve sons, and who reigned twelve years, used fire and sword against the natives with such animosity that the British bards surnamed him the Man of Fire, or the Great Burner. They withstood him to the last extremity, and he fell in battle against them. But his grandson, Ethelfrid, took a terrible revenge. He was Ella's son-in-law; and at the death of the latter, and to the prejudice of the rights of the chief's son, Ethelfrid reunited the two kingdoms of Deira and Bernicia, and mustering to his own standard all the Anglo-Saxons of Northumbria, he subdued or massacred a greater multitude of the Britons than any other of the invading chiefs.¹⁴⁰ He was, says Bede, the ravaging wolf of Holy Writ: in the morning he devoured his prey, and in the evening he divided his spoil. The vanquished, who had 547-559.

588.

Ethelfrid
the Rav-
ager,

¹³⁸ A. DE LA BORDERIE, Luttes des Bretons Insulaires contre les Anglo-Saxons, p. 155.

¹³⁹ See ante, p. 145.

¹⁴⁰ "Nemo in tribunis, nemo in regibus plures eorum terras, exterminatis vel subjugatis indigenis, aut tributarias genti Anglorum, aut habitabiles fecit." — BEDE, i. 34.

called his grandfather the Burner, had only too good cause to call Ethelfrid the Ravager.

Conqueror
of the Scots and Britons.
The greatness of Northum-
bria due to him.
588-616.

He had not, however, like his predecessors, the Caledonians for auxiliaries. They had become Christians, thanks to the apostolic zeal of Columba and his Irish missionaries; and far from seconding the pagan invaders, the Dalriadian Scots, recently established in Great Britain,¹⁴¹ came to the succor of the Britons, who were their fellow-Christians.

Their king, Aīdan — the same who had been consecrated by Columba, the monastic apostle of Caledonia — marched against Ethelfrid at the head of a numerous army. But his friend, the holy monk of Iona, was no longer there, as of old,¹⁴² to protect him with his prayers, and aid him with his ardent sympathies. The Scots and the Saxons met at Deg-stane, near the existing frontier of England and Scotland. After a desperate struggle the Scots army was cut to pieces; and this defeat put an end forever to any desire on the part of the northern Celts to undertake the defence of their brethren of the south against the Teutonic conquerors.

603.

607 or 613.

Having conquered the Scots, the formidable hea- then threw himself on the Britons of Wales; and it was then that he fulfilled the prophecy of Augustin by exterminating the twelve hundred monks of Bangor. After this he completed the conquest of Northumbria, and fell, ten years later, in an encounter with his countrymen, the East Angles, under the command of that King Redwald whom we have seen professing Christianity for a time to please King Ethelbert.¹⁴³

East Anglia, as the name itself indicates, was occupied by a colony of the same race as the Angles of Northumbria. On the death of the first Christian king of Kent, Redwald inherited the title of Bretwalda, which gave him a certain military supremacy over the whole Anglo-Saxon federation. He had given shelter to the son of Ella, who, while still a child, had been dethroned by his brother-in-law, the terrible Ethelfrid. This young prince, named Edwin, grew up at Redwald's court, and had even been married to the daughter of his protector. Ethelfrid, seeing in him a rival and a successor, em-

616.

Edwin,
brother-in-law of Ethelfrid,
but representing the ¹⁴¹ "Rex Scotorum qui Britanniam inhabitant." — BEDE, i. 34. See ante, p. 42.

¹⁴² See ante, p. 55.

¹⁴³ See ante, p. 193.

ployed by turns threats and bribes to induce Redwald to surrender the royal exile. The East Anglian prince was on the point of yielding, when one of the friends of Edwin came by night to apprise him of his danger, and offered to conduct him to a place of refuge, where neither Redwald nor Ethelfrid should be able to discover him. "No," replied the young and generous exile, "I thank you for your good will, but I shall do nothing. Why should I begin again to wander a vagabond through every part of the island, as I have too much done? If I must die, let it be rather by the hand of this great king than by that of a meaner man." Notwithstanding, moved and agitated by the news, he went out, and seated himself on a rock before the palace, where he remained for a long time alone and unnoticed, a prey to agonizing uncertainty.¹⁴⁴

All at once he beheld before him, in the midst of the darkness, a man whose countenance and dress were unknown to him, who asked him what he did there alone in the night, and added, "What wilt thou promise to him who shall rid thee of thy grief, by dissuading Redwald from delivering thee up to thy enemies, or doing thee any harm?" "All that may ever be in my power," answered Edwin. "And if," continued the unknown, "he promised to make thee king, and a king more powerful than all your ancestors, and all the other kings in England?" Edwin promised anew that his gratitude would be commensurate with such a service. "Then," said the stranger, "if he who shall have exactly foretold to you such great fortunes, offers you counsels more useful for your welfare and your life than any of your fathers or kinsmen have ever received, do you consent to follow them?" The exile swore that he would implicitly obey him by whom he should be rescued from such great peril and made king.

Thereupon the unknown placed his right hand upon his head, saying, "When a like sign shall be shown thee, then recall this hour—thy words and thy promise." With this he disappeared so suddenly, that Edwin believed he had spoken not with a man but with a spirit.¹⁴⁵ A moment after rival dynasty, takes refuge with the East Angles.

Vision and promise of Edwin.

¹⁴⁴ "Si ergo vis, hac ipse hora te educam. . . . Gratias quidem ago benevolentiae tuae. . . . Quin potius, si moriturus sum, ille me magis quam ignobilior quisquam morti tradat. . . . Solus ipse mœstus in lapide pervigil . . . cum diu tacitus mentis angoribus et cæco carperetur igni." — BEDE, ii. 12.

¹⁴⁵ "Quid mercis dare velis ei qui. . . . Quid si etiam regem te futurum . . . ita ut omnes qui ante te reges in gente Anglorum fuerant potestate transcendas. . . . Tum ille tertio: Si autem qui tibi tanta taliaque dona vera-his friend came running to announce that he had no longer anything to fear, and that King Redwald, having confided his project to the queen, had been dissuaded by her from his breach of faith.

This princess, whose name has been unfortunately forgotten, had, like most of the Anglo-Saxon women, an all-powerful influence in the heart of her husband. More happily inspired than when she had induced him to renounce the baptism which he had received when with Ethelbert,¹⁴⁶ she showed him how unworthy it would be to sell for gold his soul, and what is more, his honor, which she esteemed the most precious of all jewels.¹⁴⁷

Under the generous influence of the queen, Redwald not only refused to give up the exiled prince, but having sent back the ambassadors intrusted with the costly presents of Ethelfrid, he declared war against him. The result was that, Ethelfrid having been defeated and slain, Edwin was established as king in Northumbria by his protector Redwald, who was

616. now the chief of the Anglo-Saxon federation. The sons of Ethelfrid, although, on the mother's side, nephews of the new king, were obliged to fly, like Edwin himself in his youth. They went for refuge to the Dalriadian Scots, whose apostle Columba had been. We shall presently see what resulted from this exile, to Northumbria and the whole of England.

Like his brother-in-law Ethelfrid, Edwin reigned over the two united kingdoms of Deira and Bernicia; and, like him, he waged a vigorous war against the Britons of Wales.

624. Having thus become the dreaded chief of the Angles of the North, he found himself esteemed and sought after by the East Angles, who on the death of their king, Redwald, offered him the sovereignty. But Edwin preferred to repay the protection which he had received from Redwald and his wife by leaving the kingdom of East

Edwin becomes Bretwalda. Anglia to their son. He reserved, however, the military supremacy which Redwald had exercised, as well as the title of Bretwalda, which had passed from the citer prædixerit. . . . Cum hoc ergo tibi signum advenerit, memento hujus temporis, ac loquelæ nostræ, et ea quæ nunc promittis adimplere ne differas. His dictis, ut ferunt, repente disparuit." — BEDE.

¹⁴⁶ See ante, p. 199.

¹⁴⁷ "Postquam cogitationem suam reginæ in secreto revelavit, revocavit cum ille ab intentione . . . ammonens quia nulla ratione conveniat . . . immo fidem suam, quæ omnibus ornamentis pretiosior est amore pecuniæ perdere." — BEDE, loc. cit.

king of Kent to the king of East Anglia, but which, after being held by Edwin, was to remain always attached to the Northumbrian monarchy.

We have no precise information regarding the origin or the nature of the authority with which the Bretwalda was invested. It is apparent only that this authority, at first of a temporary and exclusively military character, extended, after the conversion of the different kingdoms of the Heptarchy, to ecclesiastical affairs. It is evident also that it added to the royal dignity the prestige of a real supremacy, all the more sought after that it was probably conferred, not only by the vote of the other kings, but of all the chiefs of the Saxon nobility.¹⁴⁸

Thus then was accomplished the mysterious prediction of Edwin's nocturnal visitor; he was now a king, and more powerful than any of the English kings before him. For the supremacy of the Bretwalda, added to the vast extent of country occupied by the Angles of the North and East, secured to the king of Northumbria a preponderance altogether different from that of the petty kings of the South who had borne the title before him. Having reached this unhopedor elevation, and having lost his first wife, a daughter of the king of East Anglia, he sought a second bride, and asked in marriage the sister of the king of Kent, the daughter of Ethelbert and Bertha, a descendant of Hengist and Odin through her father, and of St. Clotilda through her mother. She was called Ethelburga — that is, noble protectress; for this word Ethel, which appears so often in Anglo-Saxon names, is simply, as has been already remarked, the German edel, noble. Her

He marries the daughter of the first Christian king of Kent.

¹⁴⁸ The ealdormen — those whom Bede calls primates tribuni. Bede gives the following as the succession of chiefs of the Anglo-Saxon federation, up to the time when the title of Bretwalda became extinct: —

- | | |
|--------------------------------------|-------------------------|
| About 560, Ella, king of Sussex. | |
| " 577, Ceawlin, king of Wessex. | | | " 596, Ethelbert, king of Kent. | | | " 616, Redwald, king of East Anglia. | |
| " 624, Edwin, | } kings of Northumbria. | | " 635, Oswald, | |
| " 645, Oswy, | |

Lappenberg believes, with every appearance of reason, that after the death of Oswy, in 670, the authority of the Bretwalda passed to Wulfhere, king of Mercia, whose supremacy over the king of Essex is proved by Bede himself, iii. 30. Mackintosh interprets the term Bret-walda by that of dompteur or arbiter (wielder) of the Britons; but he gives no satisfactory reason for that etymology.

brother Eadbald, brought back by Archbishop Laurence to the Christian faith, at first refused the demand of the king of Northumbria. He answered that it was impossible for him to betroth a Christian virgin to a pagan, lest the faith and the sacraments of the true God should be profaned by making her live with a king who was a stranger to His worship. Far from being offended at this refusal, Edwin promised that, if the princess was granted to him, he would do nothing against the faith that she professed; but, on the contrary, she might freely observe all the rites of her religion, along with all who might accompany her to his kingdom — men or women, priests or laymen. He added that he would not himself refuse to embrace his wife's religion, if after having had it examined by the sages of his council he found it to be more holy and more worthy of God than his own.¹⁴⁹

It was on these conditions that her mother Bertha had left her country and her Merovingian family to cross the sea and wed the king of Kent. The conversion of that kingdom had been the reward of her sacrifice. Ethelburga, destined, like her mother, and still more than she, to be the means of introducing a whole people to the knowledge of Christianity, followed the maternal example. She furnishes us with a new proof of the lofty part assigned to women in the history of the Germanic races, and of the noble and touching influence attributed to them. In England as in France, and everywhere, it is ever through the fervor and devotion of Christian women that the victories of the Church are attempted or achieved.

But the royal virgin was intrusted to the Northumbrians, only under the guardianship of a bishop charged to preserve her from all pagan pollution, by his exhortations, and also by the daily celebration of the heavenly mysteries. The king, according to Bede, had thus to espouse the bishop at the same time as the princess.¹⁵⁰

This bishop, by name Paulinus, was one of those still surviving Roman monks who had been sent by St. Gregory to the aid of Augustin. He had been twenty-five years a missionary in the south of Great Britain, before ¹⁴⁹ "Nec abnegavit se etiam eandem subiturnum esse religionem si tamen examinata a prudentibus sanctor et Deo dignior posset inveniri." — BEDE, ii. 9.

¹⁵⁰ "Ordinatus episcopus . . . sic cum præfata virgine ad regem quasi comes copulæ carnalis advenit." — BEDE, ii. 9.

he was consecrated bishop of Northumbria by the third successor of Augustin at Canterbury. Having arrived with Ethelburga in Edwin's kingdom, and having married them, he longed to see the whole of the unknown nation amongst whom he had come to pitch his tent, espoused to Christ. Unlike Augustin, after his landing on the shores of Kent, it is expressly stated that Paulinus was disposed to act upon the Northumbrian people before attempting the conversion of the king.¹⁵¹ He labored with all his might to add some Northumbrian converts to the small company of the faithful that had accompanied the queen. But his efforts were for a long time fruitless; he was permitted to preach, but no one was converted.

In the mean time the successors of St. Gregory watched over his work with that wonderful and unwearying perseverance which is characteristic of the Holy See. Boniface V., at the suggestion, no doubt, of Paulinus, addressed two letters to the king and queen of Northumbria, which recall those of Gregory to the king and queen of Kent. He exhorted the glorious king of the English, as he calls him, to follow the example of so many other emperors and kings, and especially of his brother-in-law Eadbald, in submitting himself to the true God, and not to let himself be separated, in the future, from that dear half of himself, who had already received in baptism the pledge of eternal bliss.¹⁵² He conjured the queen to neglect no effort to soften and inflame the hard and cold heart of her husband, to make him understand the beauty of the mysteries in which she believed, and the rich reward which she had found in her own regeneration, to the end that they twain whom human love had made one flesh here below, might dwell together in another life, united in an indissoluble union.¹⁵³ To his letters he added some 625.

21st July,

Intervention of Pope Boniface V.
with the king of Northumbria.

22d Oct., 625.

¹⁵¹ "Totò animo intendens ut gentem quam adibat, ad cognitionem veritatis advocans, uni viro sponso virginem castam exhiberet Christo. . . . Laboravit multum ut . . . aliquos, si forte posset, de paganis ad fidei gratiam prædicando converteret." — BEDE, ii. 9.

¹⁵² "Gloriosam conjugem vestram, quæ vestri corporis pars esse dignoscitur, æternitatis præmio per sancti baptismatis regenerationem illuminatam." — Ibid.

¹⁵³ "Insiste ergo, gloriosa filia, et summis conatibus durtitiam cordis . . . insinuatione mollire dematura. . . . In undens sensibus ejus . . . quantum sit admirabile quod renata præmium consequi meruisti. Frigiditatem cordis . . . succende. . . . Ut quos copulatio carnalis affectus unum quodam modo corpus exhibuisse monstratur, hos quoque unitas fidei etiam post hujus vitæ transitum in perpetua societate conservet." — BEDE, loc. cit.

modest presents, which testified assuredly either his poverty or the simplicity of the times: for the king, a linen shirt embroidered with gold and a woollen cloak from the east; for the queen, a silver mirror and an ivory comb; for both, the blessing of their protector St. Peter.

But neither the letters of the pope, nor the sermons of the bishop, nor the importunities of the queen, prevailed to triumph over the doubts of Edwin. A providential event, however, occurred to shake, without absolutely convincing him. On the Easter-day after his marriage an assassin, sent by the king of the West Saxons, made his way to the king, and, under the pretext of communicating a message from his master, tried to stab him with a double-edged poisoned dagger, which he held hidden under his dress. Prompted by that heroic devotion for their princes, which among all the Germanic barbarians co-existed with continual revolts against them, a lord named Lilla, having no shield at hand, threw himself between his king and the assassin, who struck with such force that his weapon reached Edwin even through the body of his faithful friend.¹⁵⁴ The same night, the night of the greatest of Christian festivals, the queen was delivered of a daughter. While Edwin was rendering thanks to his gods for the birth of his first-born, the Bishop Paulinus began, on his part, to thank the Lord Christ, assuring the king that it was He who by His prayers to the true God had obtained that the queen should bear her first child without mishap, and almost without pain. The king, less moved by the mortal danger that he had just escaped, than by the joy of being a father without peril or hurt to his beloved Ethelburga, was charmed by the words of Paulinus, and promised to renounce his idols for the service of Christ, if Christ granted him life and victory in the war which he was about to wage against the king who had tried to procure his assassination. As a pledge of his good faith, he gave the new-born child to the bishop, that he might consecrate her to Christ. This first child of the king, the first native Christian of the Northumbrian nation,¹⁵⁵ was baptized on Whit-

Edwin
saved from the dagger
of an assassin.
20th April, 626.

Birth and
baptism of
the first-born of Edwin.

¹⁵⁴ "Missus a rege . . . nomine Cuichelmo . . . qui habebat sicam bipitem toxicatam. . . . Minister regi amicissimus . . . non habens seutum . . . mox interposuit corpus suum ante ictum pungentis, sed tanta vi hostis ferrum infixit, ut per corpus militis occisi etiam regem vulneraret." — BEDE, loc. cit.

¹⁵⁵ "Ut regina sospes absque dolore gravi sobolem procrearet. . . . Prima sunday (Pentecost), along with eleven persons of the royal household. She was named Eanfleda, and was destined, like most of the Anglo-Saxon princesses, to exercise an influence over the destiny of her country.

Edwin came back victorious from his struggle with the guilty king. On his return to Northumbria, though since giving his promise he had ceased to worship idols, he would not at once, and without further reflection, receive the sacraments of the Christian faith. But he made Paulinus give him more fully, what Bede calls, the reasons of his belief. He frequently conferred with the wisest and best instructed of his nobles upon the part which they would counsel him to take. Finally, being by nature a man sagacious and reflective, he passed long hours in solitude — his lips indeed closed, but discussing many things in the depths of his heart, and examining without intermission which religion he ought to prefer.¹⁵⁶

The history of the Church, if I mistake not, offers no other example of an equally long and conscientious hesitation on the part of a pagan king. They all appear equally prompt alike for persecution or for conversion. Edwin, as the testimony of an incontestable authority reveals him to us, experienced all the humble efforts, the delicate scruples, of the modern conscience. A true priest has said with justice: "This intellectual travail of a barbarian moves and touches us. We follow with sympathy the searcher in his hesitations; we suffer in his perplexities; we feel that this soul is a sincere one, and we love it."¹⁵⁷

Meanwhile Paulinus saw time passing away without the word of God which he preached being listened to, and without Edwin being able to bow the pride of his intelligence before the divine humility of the cross. Being informed of the prophecy and the promise which had put an end to the de gente Nordanhymbrorum." — BEDE, loc. cit. She married King Oswy, one of her father's successors. We shall see her take a part in the struggle between the monastic and the Celtic influence in Northumbria.

¹⁵⁶ "Non statim et inconsulte sacramenta fidei precipere voluit. . . . Verum primo diligentius . . . rationem fidei ediscere et cum suis primatibus quos sapientiores noverat, curavit conferre, quod de his agendum arbitrentur. Sed et ipse cum esset vir natura sagacissimus, sæpe diu solus residens, ore quidem tacito, sed in intimis cordis multa secum colloquens, quod sibi esset faciendum, quæ religio servanda tractabat." — BEDE, loc. cit.

¹⁵⁷ GORINI, Défense de l'Eglise, vol. ii. p. 87. Nothing in this excellent work can surpass the author's refutation, step by step, of M. Augustin Thierry's narrative of the conversion of the Anglo-Saxons. Compare FABER, Life of St. Edwin, 1844, in the series of Lives of the English Saints.

exile of the king, he believed that the moment for recalling them to him had come.¹⁵⁸ One day when Edwin was seated by himself, meditating in the secret of his own heart upon the religion which he ought to follow, the bishop entered suddenly and placed his right hand upon his head, as the unknown had done in the vision, asking him if he recognized that sign.¹⁵⁹ The king, trembling, would have thrown himself at the feet of Paulinus, but he raised him up, and said gently, "You are now delivered by God's goodness from the enemies that you feared. He has given you the kingdom which you desired. Remember to accomplish your third promise, which binds you to receive the faith and to keep its commandments. It is thus only that after being enriched with the divine favor here, you will be able to enter with God into the fellowship of the eternal kingdom."

Last effort of Paulinus.

The king
promises conversion
after having consulted Parliament.

Discussion
in the assembly.

"Yes," answered Edwin at length, "I feel it; I ought to be, and I will be, a Christian." But, always true to his characteristic moderation, he stipulated only for himself. He said that he would confer with his great nobles, his friends, and his councilors, in order that, if they decided to believe as he did, they should be all together consecrated to Christ in the fountain of life.

Paulinus having expressed his approval of this proposal, the Northumbrian Parliament, or, as it was then called, the council of sages (witena-gemot), was assembled near to a sanctuary of the national worship, already celebrated in the time of the Romans and Britons, at Godmundham, hard by the gates of York. Each member of this great national council was, in his turn, asked his opinion of the new doctrine and worship.¹⁶⁰ The first who answered ¹⁵⁸ According to M. Thierry, "this secret had probably escaped Edwin among the confidences of the nuptial couch." Bede says exactly the contrary, though without affirming anything. "Tandem ut verisimile videtur didicit (Paulinus) in spiritu, quod vel quale esset oraculum regi quondam cœlitus ostensum." — BEDE, ii. 12.

¹⁵⁹ "Cum videret difficulter posse sublimitatem animi regalis ad humilitatem . . . vivificæ crucis inclinari. . . . Cum horis competentibus solitarius sederet, quid agendum sibi esset, quæ religio sequenda sedulus secum ipse scrutari consuesset, ingrediens ad eum quadam die vir Dei." — BEDE, ii. 12.

¹⁶⁰ "Quibus auditis et rex suscipere se fidem et velle et debere respondebat. Verum adhuc cum amicis principibus, et consiliariis suis sese de hoc collaturum esse dicebat. . . . Habito enim cum sapientibus consilio, sciscitabatur singillatim ab omnibus, qualis sibi doctrina eatenus inaudita . . . videretur. . . . His similia et cæteri majores natu ac regis consilarii prosequabantur." — BEDE, ii. 13.

was the high priest of the idols, by name Coïfi, a singular and somewhat cynical personage. "My opinion," said he, "is most certainly that the religion which we have hitherto followed is worth nothing; and this is my reason. Not one of your subjects has served our gods with more zeal than I have, and notwithstanding, there are many of your people who have received from you far greater gifts and dignities. But if our gods were not good for nothing, they would have done something for me who have served them so well. If then, after ripe examination, you have found this new religion which is preached to us more efficacious, let us hasten to adopt it."¹⁶¹

One of the great chiefs held different language, in which are revealed to us that religious elevation and poetic melancholy wherewith the minds of these Germanic heathens were often imbued. "You remember, perhaps," said he to the king, "what sometimes happens in the winter evenings whilst you are at supper with your ealdormen and thanes;¹⁶² while the good fire burns within, and it rains and snows, and the wind howls without, a sparrow enters at the one door and flies out quickly at the other. During that rapid passage it is sheltered from the rain and cold; but after that brief and pleasant moment it disappears, and from winter returns to winter again. Such seems to me to be the life of man, and his career but a brief moment between that which goes before and that which follows after, and of which we know nothing. If, then, the new doctrine can teach us something certain, it deserves to be followed."¹⁶³

After much discourse of the same tendency, for the assembly seems to have been unanimous, the high priest Coïfi spoke again with a loftier inspiration than that of his first words. He expressed the desire to hear Paulinus speak of the God whose envoy he professed to be. The bishop, with permission of the king, addressed the assembly. When he had finished, the high priest cried, "For a long time I have understood the nothingness of all that we worshipped, for the more I endeavored to search for truth in it the less I found it; but now I declare without reserve that in this preaching I see the shining of the truth, which gives life and salvation and eternal blessedness. I vote, then, that we give up at once to fire and to the curse the altars which we have so uselessly consecrated.”¹⁶⁴ The king immediately made a public declaration that he adhered to the gospel preached by Paulinus — that he renounced idolatry and adopted the faith of Christ. “But who,” asked the king, “will be the first to overthrow the altars of the ancient gods, and to profane their sacred precincts?” “I,” replied the high priest; whereupon he prayed the king to give him arms and a stallion, that he might the more thoroughly violate the rule of his order, which forbade him to carry arms and to mount ought but a mare. Mounted on the king’s steed, girt with a sword, and lance in hand, he galloped towards the idols, and in the sight of all the people, who believed him to be beside himself, he dashed his lance into the interior of their temple. The profaning steel buried itself in the wall; to the surprise of the spectators, the gods were silent, and the sacrilege remained unpunished. Then the people, at the command of the high priest, proceeded to overthrow and burn the temple.¹⁶⁵

¹⁶¹ "Profiteor quia nihil omnino virtutis, nihil utilitatis religio illa quam hucusque tenuimus. . . . Si autem Dii aliquid valerent." — BEDE, ii. 13.

¹⁶² "Cum ducibus ac ministris tuis." "Mit thynem Ealdormannum and Thegnum," is King Alfred's Anglo-Saxon translation of the words of Bede.

¹⁶³ "Alius optimatum regis subdidit: Talis mihi videtur, rex, vita hominum . . . quale cum te residente ad cœnam accenso foco in media et calido effecto cœnaculo . . . adveniens unus passerum domum citissime pervolaverit . . . mox de hieme in hiemen regrediens." — BEDE, ii. 13.

These things occurred in the eleventh year of Edwin’s reign. The whole Northumbrian nobility and a large part of the people followed the example of the king, who was baptized with much solemnity on Easter-day (627) by Paulinus at York, in a wooden church, built in haste while the catechumens were prepared for baptism.¹⁶⁶ Immediately afterwards he built around this improvised sanctuary a large church in stone, which he had not time to finish, but which has since become the splendid Minster of York, and the metropolitan church of the north of England. The town of York had been already celebrated in the times of the Romans. The Emperor Severus and the father of Constantine had died there. The Northumbrians had made it their capital, and Edwin there

Baptism
of King
Edwin, and of the nobility.

12th April,
627.

¹⁶⁴ “Unde suggero, o rex, ut templa et altaria quæ sine fructu utilitatis sacravimus ocuis anathemati et igni contradamus.” — BEDE, ii. 3.

¹⁶⁵ “Ille respondit: Ego. . . . Rogavit sibi regem arma dare et equum emissarium quem ascendens . . . pergebat ad idola.” — BEDE, ii. 3. Compare the Saxon version quoted by Lingard, i. 30.

¹⁶⁶ “Accepit rex cum cunctis gentis suæ nobilibus ac plebe perplurima fidem et lavacrum. . . . Ipse doctori et antistiti suo Paulino sedem episcopatus donavit. . . . Baptizatus est ibi sed et alii nobiles et regii viri non pauci.” — BEDE, ii. 14.

placed the seat of the episcopate filled by his teacher Paulinus. Thus was realized the grand design of Gregory, who, thirty years before, at the commencement of the English mission, had instructed Augustin to send a bishop to York, and to invest him with the jurisdiction of metropolitan over the twelve suffragan bishoprics which in imagination he already saw founded in the north of the country conquered by the Anglo-Saxons.¹⁶⁷

The king and the bishop labored together for six years for the conversion of the Northumbrian people, and even of the English population of the neighboring regions. The chiefs of the nobility and the principal servants of the king were the first to receive baptism, together with the sons of Edwin's first marriage. The example of a king was, however, far from being enough, among the Anglo-Saxons, to determine the conversion of a whole people; and the first Christian king and the first bishop of Northumbria did not, any more than Ethelbert and Augustin, think of employing undue constraint. Doubtless it required more than one effort on their part to overcome the roughness, the ignorance, the indifference of the heathen Saxons. But they had, at the same time, much encouragement, for the fervor of the people and their anxiety for baptism were often wonderful. Paulinus having gone with the king and queen, who several times accompanied him on his missions, to a royal villa far to the north, they remained there, all three, for thirty-six days together, and during the whole of that time the bishop did nothing else from morning till night than catechize the crowds that gathered from all the villages around, and afterwards baptize them in the river which flowed close by. At the opposite extremity of the country, to the south, the name of Jordan is still given to a portion of the course of the river Derwent, near the old Roman ford of Malton, in memory of the numerous subjects of Edwin that were there baptized by the Roman missionary.¹⁶⁸ Everywhere he baptized in the rivers or streams, for there was no time to build churches.¹⁶⁹ However, he built, near Edwin's principal 627-633.

The king and bishop labor together for the conversion of the Northumbrians.

Baptism en masse by immersion.

¹⁶⁷ "Qui tuæ subiaceant ditioni . . . ita duntaxat ut si eadem civitas cum finitimis locis verbum Dei receperit, ipse quoque XII episcopos ordinet, et metropolitani honore perfruatur." — BEDE, i. 29.

¹⁶⁸ The Times of 17th March, 1865.

¹⁶⁹ The Glen in Northumberland, the Swale, and especially the Derwent, in Yorkshire, are still mentioned among the rivers in which the bishop baptized thousands of converts by immersion.

palace, a stone church, whose calcined ruins were still visible after the Reformation, as well as a large cross, with this inscription: Paulinus hic prædicavit et celebravit.¹⁷⁰

Passing the frontiers of the Northumbrian kingdom, Paulinus continued his evangelistic course among the Angles settled to the south of the Humber, in the maritime province of Lindsay. There also he baptized many people in the Trent; and long afterwards, old men, who had in their childhood received baptism at his hands, recalled with reverent tenderness the venerable and awe-inspiring stranger, whose lofty and stooping form, black hair, aquiline nose, and emaciated but imposing features, impressed themselves on every beholder, and proclaimed his southern origin.¹⁷¹ The beautiful monastic church of Southwell consecrates the memory of the

He commences the Cathedral of Lincoln scene of one of those multitudinous baptisms; and it is to the mission of Bishop Paulinus on this side the Humber that we trace the foundation of that magnificent Cathedral of Lincoln, which rivals our noble Cathedral of Laon in its position, and even surpasses it in grandeur, and perhaps in beauty.¹⁷²

And there consecrates the fifth Archbishop of Canterbury.

628.

It was in the stone church (Bede always notes this detail most carefully) built by Paulinus at Lincoln, after the conversion of the chief Saxon of that town, with all his house, that the metropolitan bishop of York had to proceed to the consecration of the fourth successor of Augustin in the metropolitan see of Canterbury. Honorius was, like Paulinus, a monk of Mount Coelius at Rome, and one of the first companions of St. Augustin in his mission to England. He was a disciple of St. Gregory, and had learned from the great pontiff the art of music, and it was he who led the choir of monks on the occasion of the first entrance of the missionaries, thirty years before, at Canterbury.¹⁷³ The Pope then reigning was also named Honorius, first of that name. He sent the pallium to each of the two metropolitans, and ordained that when God should take to himself one of the two, the 625 640.

¹⁷⁰ At Dewsbury, on the banks of the Calder. ALFORD, Annales Anglo-Saxonie, ap. BOLLAND., vol. vi. Oct., p. 118.

¹⁷¹ "Quemdam seniore . . . baptizatum a Paulino . . . præsentē rege Adwino. . . . Quoniam effigiem ejusdem Paulini referre esset solitus. . . . Vir longæ staturæ, paululum ineurvus, nigro capillo, facie macilenta, naso adunco perenni, venerabilis simul et terribilis aspectu." — BEDE, ii. 16.

¹⁷² All the most beautiful religious edifices of England — York, Lincoln, and Southwell — trace their origin to the episcopate of Paulinus. — FABER, op. cit.

¹⁷³ HOOK, Lives of the Archbishops, pp. 53, 111.

other should appoint a successor, in order to avoid the delay of a reference to Rome, so difficult by reason of the great distance to be travelled by sea and land. In the eloquent letter which accompanied the pallium, he reminds the new archbishop that the great Pope Gregory had been his master, and should ever be his model, and that the whole work of the archbishops, his predecessors, had been but the fruit of the zeal of that incomparable pontiff.¹⁷⁴

The Pope wrote also to King Edwin to congratulate him on his conversion and on the ardor and sincerity of his faith, and to exhort him to read much in the works of St. Gregory, whom he calls the Preacher of the English, and whom he recommends the king to take for his perpetual intercessor with God.¹⁷⁵ But when this letter reached England, Edwin was no more.

The six years which passed between his conversion and his death may certainly be reckoned among the most glorious and happy that it was ever given to any Anglo-Saxon prince to know. He speedily raised Northumbria to the head of the Heptarchy. On the south, his ardent zeal for the faith which he had embraced after such ripe reflection extended its influence even to the populations which, without being subjected to his direct authority, yet belonged to the same race as his subjects. The East Angles, as we have seen, had offered him their crown, and he had refused it. But he used his influence over the young king, who owed to him his elevation to the throne, to induce him to embrace the Christian religion, with all his subjects. Eorpwald thus expiated the apostasy of his father; and Edwin thus paid the ransom of the generous pity that the royalty of East Anglia had lavished on his youth and his exile.

Prosperity and beneficence of the reign of Edwin.

Conversion of the East Angles.

¹⁷⁴ "Dilectissimo fratri Honorio Honorius. . . Exoramus ut vestram dilectionem in prædicatione Evangelii laborantem et fructificantem sectantemque magistri et capitis sui sancti Gregorii regulam perpetui stabilitate confirmet (redemptor) . . . ut fide et opere, in timore Dei et caritate, vestra adquisitio decessorumque vestrorum quæ per Domini Gregorii exordia pululata convalescendo amplius extendatur . . . longa terrarum marisque intervalla, quæ inter nos ac vos obsistant, ac et nos condescendere coegerunt, ut nulla possit ecclesiarum vestrarum jaectura per cuiuslibet occasionis obtentum quoque modo provenire: sed potius commissi vobis populi devotionem plenius propagare." — Ap. BEDAM, ii. 18.

¹⁷⁵ "Prædicatores vestri . . . Gregorii frequenter lectione occupati, præ oculis affectum doctrinæ ipsius, quam pro vestris animabus libenter exercuit, habetote: quatenus ejus oratio, et regnum vestrum populumque augeat, et vos omnipotenti Deo irreprehensibiles repræsentet." — Ibid., ii. 17,

On the north he extended and consolidated the Anglo-Saxon dominion as far as the isthmus which separated Caledonia from Britain. And he has left an ineffaceable record of his reign in the name of the fortress built upon the rock which commanded the entrance of the Forth, and which still lifts its sombre and alpine front — true Acropolis of the barbarous north — from the midst of the great and picturesque city of Edinburgh (Edwin's burgh).

On the west he continued, with less ferocity than Ethelfrid, but with no less valor and success, the contest of the Britons of Wales. He pursued them even into the islands of the channel which separates Great Britain from Ireland; and took possession of the Isle of Man and another isle which had been the last refuge of the Druids from the Roman dominion, and which, after its conquest by Edwin, took the name of the victorious race, Angles-ey.

Within his own kingdom he secured a peace and security so unknown both before and after his reign that it passed into a proverb; it was said that in the time of Edwin a woman with her new-born child might traverse England from the Irish Channel to the North Sea without meeting any one who would do her the least wrong. It is pleasant to trace his kindly and minute care of the well-being of his subjects in such a particular as that of the copper cups which he had suspended beside the fountains on the highways, that the passers-by might drink at their ease, and which no one attempted to steal, whether from fear or from love of the king. Neither did any one ever reproach him for the unwonted pomp which distinguished his train, not only when he went out to war, but when he rode peacefully through his towns and provinces, on which occasions the lance surmounted with a large tuft of feathers¹⁷⁶ — which the Saxons had borrowed from the Roman legions, and which they had made the sacred standard of the Bretwalda and the ensign of the supreme sovereignty in their confederation — was always carried before him in the midst of his military banners.

But all this grandeur and prosperity were about to be engulfed in a sudden and great calamity.

¹⁷⁶ "Sicut usque hodie in proverbio dicitur, etiamsi mulier una cum recens nato parvulo vellet totam perambulare insulam a mari ad mare, nullo se lædente valeret. . . . Erectis stipitibus æreos caucos suspendi juberet. . . . Illud genus vexilli quod Romani Tufam, Angli vero Tunf appellant." — BEDE, ii. 16.

There were other Angles than those who, in Northumbria and East Anglia, were already subdued and humanized by the influence of Christianity: there remained the Angles of Mercia—the great central region stretching from the Humber to the Thames. The kingdom of Mercia was the last state organized out of the Anglo-Saxon conquest. It had been founded by that portion of the invaders who, finding all the eastern and southern shores of the island already occupied, were compelled to advance into the interior. It became the centre of the pagan resistance to, and occasional assaults upon, the Christian Propaganda, which was henceforth to have its headquarters in Northumbria. The pagans of Mercia found a formidable leader in the person of Penda, who was himself of royal extraction, or, as it was then believed, of the blood of Odin, and had reigned for twenty-two years, but who was inflamed by all the passions of a barbarian, and, above all, devoured with jealousy of the fortunes of Edwin and the power of the Northumbrians. Since Edwin's conversion these wild instincts were intensified by fanaticism. Penda and the Mercians remained faithful to the worship of Odin, whose descendants all the Saxon kings believed themselves to be. Edwin and the Northumbrians were, therefore, in their eyes no better than traitors and apostates. But more surprising still, the original inhabitants of the island, the Christian Britons, who were more numerous in Mercia than in any other Anglo-Saxon kingdom, shared and excited the hatred of the pagan Saxons against the converts of the same race. These old Christians, it cannot be too often repeated, always exasperated against the invaders of their island, took no account of the faith of the converted Angles, and would not on any terms hold communion with them.¹⁷⁷ The Welsh Britons, who maintained their independence, but who, for more than a century, had been constantly menaced, defeated, and humiliated by Ida, Ethelfrid, and Edwin, professed and nourished their antipathy with even greater bitterness.¹⁷⁸ Their chief, Ceadwalla or Cadwallon, the last hero of the Celtic race in Britain, at first overcome by Edwin and forced to seek refuge in Ireland and in Armorica,¹⁷⁹ had returned thence with rage redoubled, and with

Alliance of the heathen of Mercia
and the British Christians
against Edwin,

under Penda,

633-655,

and Cad-wallon.

¹⁷⁷ BEDE, ii. 20. See vol. i. p. 687, note.

¹⁷⁸ LAPPENBERG, vol. i. p. 159. LA BORDERIE, op. cit., p. 216.

¹⁷⁹ See his amusing adventures in RICHARD OF CIRENCESTER, vol. ii. p. 32.

auxiliaries from the other Celtic races, to recommence the struggle against the Northumbrians. He succeeded in forming an alliance with Penda against the common enemy. Under these two chiefs an immense army, in which the British Christians of Wales jostled the pagans of Mercia, invaded Northumbria. Edwin awaited them at Hatfield, on the southern frontier of his kingdom. He was there disastrously defeated, and perished gloriously, sword in hand, scarce forty-eight years of age, dying a death which entitled him to be ranked amongst the martyrs.¹⁸⁰ His eldest son fell with him; the younger, taken prisoner by Penda, who swore to preserve his life, was infamously murdered. Northumbria was ravaged with fire and sword, and its recent Christianity completely obliterated. The most barbarous of the persecutors was not the idolatrous Penda, but the Christian Cadwallon, who, during a whole year, went up and down all the Northumbrian provinces massacring every man he met, and subjecting even the women and children to atrocious tortures before putting them to death. He was, says Bede, resolved to extirpate from the soil of Britain the English race, whose recent reception of Christianity only inspired this old Christian, intoxicated with blood and with a ferocious patriotism, with scorn and disgust.¹⁸¹

It is not known why Northumbria, after the death of Edwin and his son, was not subjugated and shared among the conquerors; but it remained divided, enslaved, and plunged once more into paganism. Deïra fell to Osric, cousin-german of Edwin; Bernicia to Eanfried, one of the sons of Ethelfrid, who had returned from his exile in Scotland. Both had received baptism: the one with his cousin at York; the other at the hands of the Celtic monks of Iona. But a pagan reaction was the inevitable consequence of the overthrow of the first Christian king of Northumbria. The two princes yielded to that reaction, and renounced their baptism, but without gaining anything thereby. The king of Deira was killed in battle with the Britons; and the king of Bernicia was murdered at an interview which he had sought with the savage Cadwallon.

¹⁸⁰ Act. SS. Bolland., die 12 Octobris.

¹⁸¹ "Maxima est facta strages in Ecclesia vel gente Nordanhymbrorum. . . . Unus ex ducibus paganus, alter . . . pagano sævior. . . . Quamvis nomen et professionem haberet Christiani, adeo animo et moribus barbarus, ut ne sexui muliebri vel innocuæ parvulorum parceret ætati, quum universos atrocitate ferina morti per tormenta contraderet. . . . Totum genus Anglorum Britanniae finibus erasurum se esse deliberans; sed nec religioni Christianae quæ apud eos exorta erat, aliquid impendebat honoris." — BEDE, ii. 20. Compare iii. 1.

Bishop Paulinus did not consider himself called upon to remain a witness of such horrors. His one thought was to place in safety the widow of King Edwin — that gentle Ethelburga who had been confided to him by her brother for a different destiny: he brought her back by sea to her brother's kingdom, with the daughter and the two youngest sons whom she had borne to Edwin. Even beside her brother, the king of Kent, she was afraid to keep them in England; and wishing to devote her own widowhood to God, she intrusted them to the king of the Franks, Dagobert, her cousin,¹⁸² at whose court they died at an early age. As to Paulinus, who had left in charge of his church at York only a brave Italian deacon, of whom we shall speak hereafter, he found the episcopal see of Rochester vacant in consequence of the death of the Roman monk, who was the titular bishop, and who, sent by the primate to the Pope, had just been drowned in the Mediterranean. Paulinus was invested with this bishopric by the king and by the archbishop Honorius, whom he had himself consecrated at Lincoln; and there he died, far from his native land, after having labored during forty-three years for the conversion of the English.

Thus appeared to crumble away in one day and forever, along with the military and political pre-eminence of Northumbria, the edifice so laboriously raised in the north of England by the noble and true-hearted Edwin, the gentle and devoted Ethelburga, the patient and indefatigable Paulinus, and by so many efforts and sacrifices known to God alone. The last and most precious of Edwin's conquests was not

¹⁸² The following is the table of the relationship between the queen of Northumbria and the king of Austrasia: —

Dagobert mounted the throne of Austrasia in 628, three years after Ethelburga's marriage.

destined to survive him long. His young kinsman, the king of the East Angles, was no sooner converted than he fell beneath the poignard of an assassin; and, like Northumbria, East Anglia relapsed altogether into the night of idolatry.¹⁸³

After thirty-six years of continual efforts, the monastic missionaries sent by St. Gregory the Great had succeeded in establishing nothing, save in the petty kingdom of Kent. Everywhere else they had been baffled. Of the six other kingdoms of the Heptarchy, three — those of the Saxons of the South and of the West, and the Angles of the Centre¹⁸⁴ — remained inaccessible to them. The three last — those of the Saxons of the East, of the Angles of the East and North¹⁸⁵ — had successively escaped from them. And yet, except the supernatural courage which courts or braves martyrdom, no virtue seems to have been wanting to them. No accusation, no suspicion, impugns their all-prevailing charity, the fervent sincerity of their faith, the irreproachable purity of their morals, the unwearying activity, the constant self-denial, and austere piety of their whole life.

How, then, are we to explain their defeat, and the successive failure of their laborious efforts? Perhaps they were wrong in not sufficiently following the example of our Lord Jesus Christ and His apostles — in not preaching enough to the humble and poor — in not defying with proper boldness the wrath of the great and powerful. Perhaps they were wrong in addressing themselves too exclusively to the kings and warlike chiefs, and in undertaking nothing, risking nothing, without the concurrence, or against the will, of the secular power.¹⁸⁶ Hence, without doubt, these changes of fortune, these reactions, and sudden and complete relapses into idolatry, which followed the death of their first protectors; hence, also, these fits of timidity, of discouragement, and despair, into which we see them falling under the pressure of the sudden changes and mistakes of their career. Perhaps, in short, they had not at first understood the national character of the Anglo-Saxons, and did not know how to gain and to master their minds, by reconciling their own Italian customs and ideas with the roughness, the independence, and the manly energy of the populations of the German race.

¹⁸³ BEDE, ii. 15.

¹⁸⁴ Wessex, Sussex, Mercia.

¹⁸⁵ Essex, East Anglia, Northumbria.

¹⁸⁶ LINGARD, Anglo-Saxon Church, vol. i. pp. 40, 74.

At all events, it is evident that new blood was needed to infuse new life into the scattered and imperfect germs of Anglo-Saxon Christianity, and to continue and carry out the work of the missionary monks of Mount Cœlius.

These monks will always have the glory of having first approached, broken, and thrown seed upon this fertile but rebellious soil. Others must water with the sweat of their toil the fields that they have prepared, and gather the harvest they have sown. But the sons of St. Gregory will none the less remain before God and man the first laborers in the conversion of the English people. And, at the same time, they did not desert their post. Like mariners intrenched in a fort built in haste on the shore that they would fain have conquered, they concentrated their strength in their first and indestructible foundations at Canterbury, in the metropolitan monastery of Christ Church and the monastery extra muros of St. Augustin, and there maintained the storehouse of Roman traditions and of the Benedictine rule, along with that citadel of apostolic authority which was for centuries the heart and head of Catholic England.

BOOK XI.

THE CELTIC MONKS AND THE ANGLO-SAXONS.

CHAPTER I.

ST. OSWALD AND THE REVIVAL OF CHRISTIANITY IN NORTHUMBRIA.

The Celtic monks revive, in Northumbria, the work of conversion abandoned by the Roman monks. — Oswald, son of Ethelfrid, the Ravager, an exile among the Scots, is baptized according to the Celtic rite. — He returns to Northumbria, plants there the first cross, and gains the battle of Denisesburn over the Mercians and Britons. — He reigns over the whole of Northumbria, and makes it the predominant power in the Anglo-Saxon Confederation. His desire to convert his kingdom to Christ. — The Italian deacon, James, keeps Christianity alive in Deira; but in Bernicia everything has yet to be. — Oswald begs for missionaries from the Celtic monasteries. — Failure of the first missionary from Iona: he is succeeded by Aidan. — Bede's eulogy of the Abbots of Iona. — The religious capital of the north of England is fixed in the monastic isle of Lindisfarne: description of that island: its resemblance to Iona. — Authority of the abbots of Lindisfarne even over the bishops. — Virtues of the monk-bishop Aidan: his disinterestedness: his care of children and slaves. — King Oswald acts as assistant and interpreter to the missionary Aidan. — Oswald marries the daughter of the King of Wessex, and converts his father-in-law. — Note regarding the local and provincial opposition of the monks of Bardene. — War with Penda, chief of the coalition of the Britons and Mercians. — Battle of Maserfeld: Oswald is killed there at the age of thirty-eight. — Venerated as a martyr. — Miracles wrought at his tomb. — Prediction of Bishop Aidan with regard to his hand.

THE work of conversion among the English, though interrupted in the south by a pagan reaction, and buried, on the north, in the overthrow of the first Christian king of Northumbria, was to undergo but a momentary eclipse — the providential prelude of a more sustained effort and decisive triumph. The spiritual conquest of the island, abandoned for a time by the Roman missionaries, was now about to be taken up by the Celtic monks. The Italians had made the first step, and the Irish now appeared to resume the uncompleted work. What the sons of St. Benedict could only begin, was to be completed by the sons of St. Columba. The great heart of the first abbot of Iona, inspiring his spiritual descendants, was thus to accomplish the noble design of the holy Gregory. The spirit of unity, submission, and discipline, was to be instilled into their minds, somewhat against their will, by Wilfrid, a Saxon convert; and their unwearied activity and invincible perseverance were destined to triumph over every obstacle, stimulating and seconding the zeal of the Italian missionaries and reviving the sacred fire amongst the Benedictine monks, into whose ranks they finally fell. Thus wrought upon, moulded and penetrated on every side by monastic influence, the whole nation of the Anglo-Saxons was soon to acknowledge the law of Christ. Its kings, its monks, its bishops and saints, were to take a foremost place among the children of the Church, the civilizers of Europe, the benefactors of mankind, and the soldiers of the Cross. The history of this transformation we shall attempt to set forth in the narrative which follows.

Forty-eight years after Augustine and his Roman monks landed on the shores of pagan England, an Anglo-Saxon prince invoked the aid of the monks of Iona in the conversion of the Saxons of the north.

This prince was Oswald, son of Ethelfrid the Ravager, and of the sister of the martyred King Edwin. After the defeat and death of his father, the son of the great enemy and conquerer of the Scots had, while yet a child, sought a refuge, along with his brothers and a numerous train of young nobles, among the Scots themselves. He there found the same generous hospitality which, twelve centuries later, the descendants of the Anglo-Saxons showed to the French princes, descendants of a race continually and gloriously hostile to England. In that exile he passed the seventeen years of the reign of his uncle Edwin, as Edwin himself had lived in exile during the reign of his brother-in-law and persecutor Ethelfrid. But between these two representatives of the two dynasties which divided Northumbria, and succeeded each other in the sovereignty, there was this difference, that the young Edwin had sought and found an asylum among his pagan fellow-countrymen; while the banishment of Oswald led him into intercourse with people of a race and religion differing from his own. Since the apostolate of Columba, the Scots and Picts had become entirely Christian; and among

Oswald,
son of the King of Northum-
bria, an exile with the Scots.

them Oswald and his companions in misfortune learned the truths of Christianity, and were all baptized, but according to the rite of the Celtic Church, which differed from the Roman.¹

He is baptized according to the Celtic rite.

After the overthrow of Edwin and the Deirian dynasty, of which he was the head, the princes of the Bernician family returned to Northumbria, from which they had been banished for seventeen years.²

The elder, Eanfrid, as has been stated, fell by the sword of the Briton Cadwallon, after having renounced the Christian faith. But his younger brother Oswald was a man of a very different stamp. At the head of a small but resolute band, of whom a dozen at most were Christians like himself, he undertook to reconquer his country, and did not hesitate to carry on the struggle against the immense forces of the formidable Briton, nor even to attack him in pitched battle.

He undertakes to reconquer Northumbria from the British.

The two armies, so unequal in numbers, met near that great wall which the Emperor Severus had erected from sea to sea to keep back the Picts, and which divided Northumbria into two nearly equal parts. This rampart, which had neither restrained the Picts in their invasions of the south, nor the Saxons in their conquests to the north, was then, though not intact, still standing; as indeed even now its vast remains may be traced on the steep hill-tops and uplands, covered with heath, or strewn with basalt rocks, which give to that district of England an aspect so different from that of her ordinary landscapes. Flanked by a fragment of the Roman wall, the Anglo-Saxon prince occupied a height where his feeble forces could defy the attack of the numerous battalions of Cadwallon.³ On that height, which was

¹ "Filii præfati regis . . . cum magna nobilium juventute apud Scotos sive Pictos exulabant ibique ad doctrinam Scotorum catechizati et baptismatis sunt gratia recreati." — BEDE, iii. 1.

Fleury, Lanigan, and many other historians, have supposed that these expressions of Bede applied to the Irish, who, as we have seen above, bore the name of Scots long before that name had been communicated, by an Irish colony, to the inhabitants of Caledonia. But no valid proof is to be found in ancient authors to confirm this supposition.

² To help the reader to find his way through the labyrinth of the two Northumbrian dynasties, the history of which, here begun, will be largely followed up in this volume, we add (see Appendix VI., p. 752) a genealogical table, to which he will do well to make frequent reference.

³ See for the description of the battle-field a recent publication of the learned society which, under the name of a famous archæologist, Surtees, has for thirty years devoted itself to bringing to light the monuments of Northumbrian history, viz., The Priory of Hexham, edited by JAMES RAINE, 1864; vol. i., preface, page xi., and app. ii.

Oswald plants the first cross in Bernicia on the eve of the battle with the British.

afterwards called Heaven's Field,⁴ and which still bears the name of St. Oswald, on the eve of the day of decisive battle, the young and ardent warrior held erect with his own hands a large wooden cross, which had been hastily made by his orders, while his companions heaped the earth round it, to keep it firm in its position; then prostrating himself before it, he said to his brothers in arms, "Let us all fall on our knees, and together implore the living and true and Almighty God in His mercy to defend us against the pride and fierceness of our enemy; for that God knows our cause is just, and that we fight for the salvation of our nation. Yes, it is for our salvation and our freedom that we must fight to-day against those Britons, whom our fathers gloried in challenging, but who now prophesy the extirpation of our race."⁵

The Britons themselves might seem to have an equal right to offer this prayer, for they had long been Christians, and after all had only retaken their native soil from the grasp of foreign invaders.⁶ But a century of possession had given the latter a conviction of their right; and the bloody cruelties of Cadwallon had dishonored his patriotism. Oswald, moreover, represented the cause of advancing Christianity; for the Britons did nothing to convert their enemies, and the cross which he planted was the first which had been as yet seen in Bernicia.

⁴ "Vocatur locus ille in lingua Anglorum Hefenfelth, quod dici potest latine Cœlestis Campus." — BEDE, iii. 1. A chapel dedicated to St. Oswald marks the spot so well described by Bede, near the small town of the same name, a little to the north of Hexham and of the railway from Newcastle to Carlisle. The battle is known by the name of Denisesburn, from the brook on the bank of which the British king perished in his flight.

⁵ "Fertur quia facta cruce citato opere ac fovea præparata, ipse fide fervens hauc arripuerit ac foveæ imposuerit, atque utraque manu erectam tenuerit, donec, adgesto a militibus pulvere, terræ figeretur. . . . Flectamus omnes genua et Domini omnipotentem vivum ac verum in commune deprecemur, ut nos ab hoste superbo et feroce sua miseratione defendat; scit enim ipse quia justa pro salute gentis nostræ bella suscepimus." — BEDE, iii. 2. The more recent historians throw especial light on the patriotic side of this struggle. "Exprobrandi pudoris rem ventilari allegans, Anglos cum Britannis tam iniquo Marte configere, ut contra illos pro salute decertarent quos ultro pro gloria consueverunt lacerare. Itaque pro libertate audentibus animis et viribus effusis decertarent, nihil de fuga meditantibus: tali modo et illis provenire gloriam et annuente Deo patriæ libertatem. . . . Cædwallum, virum, ut ipse dictitabat, in exterminium Anglorum natum." — WILH. MALMESB., i. 44; RICARD. DE CIRENC., Spect. Hist. de Gest. Reg. Angl., ii. 36.

⁶ A. DE LA BORDERIE, Lutte des Britons Insulaires, p. 221.

On the evening of the same day, and during the night which preceded the contest which was to fix his destiny, Oswald, asleep in his tent, saw in a dream the holy St. Columba, the apostle and patron of the country of his exile and of the Church in which he had received his baptism. The warlike abbot of Iona, who had been dead for thirty-six years, appeared to him, shining with an angelic beauty; erect, and with that lofty stature that distinguished him in life, he stood and stretched his resplendent robe over the whole of the small army of exiles as if to protect it; then addressing the prince, he said, as God said to Joshua before the passage of the Jordan, "Be of good courage and play the man. At the break of day march to the battle: I have obtained for thee from God the victory over thine enemies and the death of tyrants: thou shalt conquer, and reign." The prince, on awaking, told his vision to the Saxons who had joined him, and all promised to receive baptism, like himself and the twelve companions of his exile, if he should return a conqueror.⁷ Early on the morrow the battle began, and Oswald gained a victory as complete as it was unlikely. Cadwallon, the last hero of the British race — victor, according to the Welsh tradition, in forty battles and in sixty single combats — perished in this defeat. The Britons evacuated Northumbria never to return, and withdrew behind the Severn. Those who remained to the north of the Dee, in the territory which has since been divided into the counties of Chester, Lancaster, and Westmoreland, submitted to the Northumbrian sway, which henceforth extended from the Irish Channel to the North Sea, tracing the line of the east coast as far as Edinburgh. There still remained, however, out of Wales and to the south of the Wall of Severus, in the region adjoining Caledonia, a district bathed by

Apparition
of St. Columba to Oswald.

Battle of Denises-burn.

—
Defeat and
death of Cadwallon.

⁷ "Pridie . . . in suo papillione supra pulvillum dormiens, sanctum Columbam in visu videt forma coruscantem angelica; cujus alta proceritas vertice nubes tangere videbatur . . . suum regi proprium revelans nomen, in medio castrorum stans, excepta quadam parva extremitate, sui protegebat fulgida veste. . . . Confortare et age viriliter, ecce ego tecum: hac sequente nocte de castris ad bellum procede; hac enim vice mihi Dominus donavit ut hostes in fugam vertantur tui. . . . Totus populus promittit se post reversionem de bello crediturum et baptismum suscepturum, nam tota illa Saxonia gentilitatis et ignorantiae tenebris obscurata erat, excepto ipso rege Oswaldo, cum duodecim viris, qui cum eo Scotos inter exulante, baptizati sunt." — ADAMNAN, Vita S. Columbæ, v. 1. He obtained this fact from his predecessor at Iona, the Abbot Faible, who had heard it told by Oswald himself to the fifth abbot of Iona.

the waters of the Solway, full of lakes and hills like Caledonia itself, and then, as now, known by the name of Cumbria or Cumberland, where the Britons continued independent, relying on the support of the Scots, and in alliance with the people of their own race who dwelt on the banks of the Clyde. But they fell, and, though subdued, agreed in bestowing upon the son of the Ravager—the grandson of the Burner—the Saxon who had nobly vanquished them, the name of Lamn-Gwinn; which means, according to some, “the Shining Sword,” according to others, “the Liberal Hand.”⁸ Oswald makes the two Northumbrian kingdoms into one, which becomes the leading power among the Anglo-Saxons.

—
635-642.

Nothing is known of the course of events which, after the defeat and death of the great British chief, confirmed Oswald in the undisputed sovereignty of the whole of Northumbria and the temporary supremacy of the entire Saxon Heptarchy; but we find him entitled Emperor of all Britain, by a writer almost contemporary with himself.⁹ Not only, says Bede, had he learned to possess in hope the heavenly kingdom which his forefathers knew not; but in this world God gave him a kingdom vaster than that possessed by any of his ancestors. He reigned over the four races who shared Britain among them—the Britons, the Scots, the Picts, and the Angles.¹⁰ No doubt this supremacy was but partially acknowledged, especially beyond the limits of the Anglo-Saxon territory; but Northumbria, when united under one king, could not fail to become at once the chief power of the confederation. Oswald, who was the great-grandson of Ina on his father's side, and grandson of Ella on his mother's,¹¹ had a natural right to unite the two realms of Deira and Bernicia, while at the same time delivering them from the humiliating and bloody yoke of the Britons and Mercians. He seems to have had a special affection for Bernicia, his father's country, in which he lived, and whose ancient boundaries on the Caledonian side he extended or re-established. But he succeeded, we are told by the Northumbrian Bede, in reconciling and binding into one state

⁸ A DE LA BORDERIE, op. cit. LAPPENBERG, p. 157.

⁹ Cumineus, half a century prior to Bede, says, in his Life of Columba, c. 25 — “Totius Britannie imperator a Deo ordinatur.”

¹⁰ “Non solum incognita progenitoribus suis regna cælorum sperare didicit; sed et . . . omnes provincias et nationes Britannie, quæ in quatuor linguas, id est Britonum, Pictorum, Scotorum, et Anglorum, divisæ sunt, in ditione accepit.” — BEDE, iii.

¹¹ See the genealogical table, Appendix I.

the two tribes which, although of the same race, had lived in continual conflict. He made of the two a real nation.¹²

Oswald was the sixth of the great chiefs or suzerains of the confederation who bore the title of Bretwalda,¹³ before whom was carried the tufa, or tuft of feathers, which was the emblem of supreme authority, and which after this was used by none save by the Northumbrian kings. It is supposed that this dignity was conferred or ratified by the suffrage, not only of all the kings of the Heptarchy, but also of the principal chiefs or barons of each tribe. It was at first exclusively military; but it became under Oswald and his successors, as it had already been with Ethelbert of Kent, a means of exercising great influence in religious matters. For Oswald was not only a true king and a gallant soldier, but also a good Christian, destined to become a saint; and in the power with which he found himself invested he saw chiefly the means of defending and propagating the faith which he had received with his baptism from the hands of the sons of Columba.

He is the sixth Bretwalda.

As soon as Oswald was established on his father's throne, his first and dearest thought was to bring back and to procure the triumph in his own country of that religion which had been the consolation of his exile. For this end missionaries, ministers of the word of God, were necessary above all things. It did not occur to him to seek them in the Church of Canterbury, the monastic centre which already existed on English soil, and whence ten years before had come Paulinus, the first apostle of Northumbria. He does not seem to have even thought of the noble and worthy Roman deacon, James, whom Paulinus, on abandoning his metropolitan see of York, had left alone behind him; and who, re-

Oswald seeks missionaries from the Celtic monasteries.

The deacon James.

¹² "Hujus industria regis, Deirorum et Berniciorum provinciæ, quæ catenus ab invicem discedebant, in unam sunt pacem et velut unum compaginatæ in populum." — Hist. Eccles., iii. 6.

¹³ The list of the Bretwaldas as given by Bede (ii. 5) may be quoted here:—

560. Ella, King of the South Saxons.

579. Peawlin, King of the West Saxons.

596. Ethelbert, King of the Jutes of Kent.

616. Redwald, King of the East Angles.

630. Edwin, King of the Northumbrians, or Northern Angles.

635. Oswald, King of the Northumbrians.

642. Oswy, King of the Northumbrians.

To this list Lappenberg thinks should be added the name of Wulphere, King of the Mercians, or Angles of the Middle, from 656 to 675.

maining gallantly at his post during the storm of invasion and havoc, had continued to baptize and preach, and to snatch his prey from the old enemy.¹⁴ This deacon, however, was the lieutenant of a bishop to some extent identified with the Deirian dynasty, and the family of King Edwin, which had exiled, robbed, and supplanted the family of Oswald, and which he had just supplanted in his turn. Was it for this reason, as has been supposed,¹⁵ that Oswald sought no aid from the Roman missionaries? Is it not more natural to conclude that he was chiefly influenced by his remembrance of the generous hospitality which he had found among the Scots, and of the instructions of those from whom in early manhood he received baptism and the other sacraments of the Church? Be this as it may, it was to the Scotie Church that he addressed himself—that is to say, to the heads of monasteries ruled by the traditions and institutions of Columba, that great abbot of Iona who appeared to him in his dream the night before the decisive battle, to promise him victory and a crown.¹⁶

Under the influence of that Celtic patriotism which inflamed the Britons against the conquering strangers, and which was no less unwilling to concede to them a share in eternal salvation than in the British soil, the Scotie or Irish Church seems up to this time to have refrained from all effort to spread the Gospel among the Saxons. But the time had come to adopt a different course. As though it had only awaited the signal given by Oswald, the Celtic Church, aided by the brave missionaries who sprang from that monastic reformation of which Iona was the centre, immediately began to light up with its radiance the whole northern region of Saxon Britain, from whence it went on into the territory where it had been preceded by the Roman missionaries, and where the two apostolic agencies finally met.¹⁷

The Scottish monks replied with heartiness to the appeal of the exile, now a conqueror and sovereign. But the first ¹⁴ "Virum utique industrium ac nobilem in Christo et Ecclesia . . . virum utique ecclesiasticum et sanctum, qui multo ex hinc tempore in ecclesia manens, magnas antiquo hosti prædas, docendo et baptizando, eripuit." — BEDE, ii. 16, 20.

¹⁵ VARIN. — FABER, Life of St. Oswald.

¹⁶ "Mox ubi regnum suscepit, desiderans to tamgentem Christianæ fidei gratia imbui. . . . Misit ad majores natos Scotorum, inter quos exsulans ipse baptismatis sacramenta cum his qui secum erant militibus, consecutus erat, petens, ut cujus doctrina ac ministerio gens quam regebat Anglorum dominicæ fidei et dona disceret et susciperet sacramenta." — BEDE, iii. 3.

¹⁷ VARIN, Deuxième Mémoire, p. 9.

effort of their zeal was not fortunate. Their first representative seems to have been animated by that spirit of pedantic rigor, by that stubborn and intolerant austerity, which have often shown themselves in the national character of the Scots along with Christian devotion and self-denial, and which culminated in the too celebrated Puritans. This missionary, by name Corman, attempted in vain to preach the Gospel to the Northumbrians, who heard him with opposition and dislike. After some time he returned to Iona; and in rendering an account of his mission to those who had sent him—that is to say, to the elders of the monastery—he declared that he could make nothing of the Angles, that they were a race of untamable savages, and of a stubborn and barbarous spirit. This report greatly disquieted and perplexed the fathers of the synod, who ardently desired to impart to the English people the gift of salvation which had been asked from them.¹⁸ They deliberated for a long time, until at length one of the assembly, Aïdan, a monk of Iona, said to the discomfited preacher, “It seems to me, my brother, that you have been too hard upon these ignorant people: you have not, according to the apostolic counsel, offered them first the milk of gentle doctrine, to bring them by degrees, while nourishing them with the divine Word, to the true understanding and practice of the more advanced precepts.”¹⁹ At these words every eye was turned to Aïdan: his opinion was thoughtfully discussed, and the debate ended in an acknowledgment that he was the man wanted for the mission, since he was endowed with that discernment which is the source of all virtues. There was, as we have seen, a bishop in the Monastery of Iona, so that Aïdan was at once consecrated missionary and bishop of Northumbria.²⁰

Failure of
the first
Scottish
missionary.

He is succeeded by Aïdan.

He received his mission from the whole brotherhood and from the Abbot of Iona, Seghen, the fourth successor of Co-

¹⁸ “Austerioris animi vir qui cum . . . prædicans nihil proficeretur, nec libenter a populo audiretur . . . in conventu seniorum retulerit, quia nil prodesse docendo genti . . . potuisset, eo quod essent homines, indomabiles, et duræ ac barbaræ mentis. . . . At illi . . . tractatum magnum in concilio quid esset agendum, habere cœperunt, desiderantes quidem genti quam petebant solutem esse, sed de non recepto prædicatore dolentes.” — BEDE, iii. 5.

¹⁹ “Lac mollioris doctrinæ . . . donec paulatim enutriti verbo Dei, ad capienda perfectiora et ad facienda sublimiora Dei præcepta sufficerent.”

²⁰ “Omnium qui considebant ad ipsum ora et oculi conversi . . . ipsum esse dignum episcopatu, ipsum ad erudiendos incredulos et indoctos mitti debere decernunt, qui gratia discretionis, quæ virtutum mater est, ante omnia probatur imbutus, sicque illum ordinantes, ad prædicandum miserunt.”

lumba, in the monastic metropolis of the Hebrides, the fourth of these great monks to whom Bede himself, somewhat prejudiced as he was against their holy founder, could not refuse the testimony that they were as illustrious for their self-denial as for their love of God and of strict monastic order. The venerable historian could find but one grievance wherewith to charge them and their delegate Aīdan — viz., their fidelity to Celtic observances as to the celebration of Easter, which the clergy of the south of Ireland had abandoned, to conform to the new usage of Rome,²¹ but which the Scots of the north of Ireland and of all Caledonia obstinately preserved as they had received it from their fathers.²²

Everything had to be done, or done over again, in the once Christian Northumbria. To the south, in Deīra, the ravages of Cadwallon and Penda do not seem to have left any traces of the mission of Paulinus except the solitary church at York, where the deacon James had maintained the celebration of Christian worship, and which, begun by Edwin, was completed by Oswald. In Bernicia we must conclude that the Roman Bishop restricted himself to itinerating missions, followed by those general baptisms of which we have spoken, but that he had not founded there any permanent station, since, until the cross was planted by Oswald on the eve of his victory over the Britons, it is said that no one had ever seen a church or an altar, or any emblem of the Christian faith.²³

It was thus a hard task, and one well worthy of a follower of Columba, which presented itself to the monk of Iona, trained in the school of that great missionary.²⁴

²¹ In 630, at the Synod of Leighlin, thanks to the efforts of two monks, Lasarian, superior of the 1500 monks of Leighlin, and Cummian, the disciple of Columba, and author of a famous letter, of which we shall presently hear more, in connection with this wearisome discussion. Compare LANIGAN, Ecclesiastical History of Ireland, vol. ii. chap. 15.

²² "Qualiscumque fuerit ipse . . . reliquit successores magna continentia ac divino amore regularique institutione insignes. . . . Ab hac ergo insula, ab horum collegio monachorum, ad provinciam Anglorum instituendam in Christo, missus est Ædan, accepto gradu episcopatus." — BEDE, iii. 4. 5.

²³ "Nullum Christianæ fidei signum, nulla ecclesia, nullum altare in tota Berniciorum gente erectum est, priusquam hoc sacræ crucis vexillum novus militiæ ductor, dictante fidei devotione, contra hostem immanissimum pugnaturus statueret." — BEDE, iii. 2, 11.

²⁴ That is to say, under his successors, for although Aīdan, ordained bishop in 635, might very well have seen and heard Columba, who died in 597, yet no proof can be found in support of Colgan's assertion, which ranks him, as well as his successors Finan and Colman, among the direct disciples of the great abbot (Trias Thaumaturga, pp. 487, 489). He bases this assertion

Aïdan had brought with him several of his brethren, and the number of Celtic monks who came to help him increased from day to day. It became necessary to assign to them, or rather to create for them, a centre of operations. The king left to Aïdan the choice of the seat of his bishopric. Although his diocese comprised the whole of Northumbria, he does not seem to have thought of occupying the vacant see of York. Whether he yielded in this to the prejudices and dislikes which separated the Scots from Roman usages, or whether he was unwilling to quit the northern district, where the mission of Paulinus had left the fewest traces, and where, consequently, he had most work to do, it is certain that he chose to place his episcopal monastery at a distance from the churches founded by the Roman monks in the southern part of the country. He preferred a position a little more central, near the royal residence of Oswald, and on the coast, but much nearer the Firth of Forth than the mouth of the Humber, which mark the two extreme limits of Oswald's kingdom to the north and south.

This choice of a residence shows that, as a monk of Iona, ambitious of following in every respect the example of the great apostle of his race, founder of the sanctuary whence he issued, Aïdan took pleasure in imitating St. Columba even in local particulars. Like him he settled his community in an island near the shore, almost as small, as insignificant, and as barren as Iona was when the holy exile from Ireland landed there. Its position was even in some sort a repetition, in the North Sea, and to the east of Great Britain, of the position of Iona upon the opposite coast, and on the shore of the Atlantic.

The monastic capital of Northumbria is fixed in the isle of Lindisfarne.

Amid the waves of the Northern Sea, opposite the green hills of Northumberland and the sandy beach which extends between the border town of Berwick on the north, and the imposing ruins of the feudal fortress of Bamborough on the south, lies a low island, flat and sombre, girt with basaltic rocks, forming a kind of square block, which terminates to the north-west in a long point of land stretching towards the mouth of the Tweed and Scotland. This Island bears the impress of melancholy and barrenness. It can never simply on the mention of three persons bearing these names in the biography of Adamnan. Colgan himself deprives this argument of all weight by proving that there are in the Irish calendar 23 saints of the name of Aïdan, and 109 of the name of Colman or Colomban.

have produced anything but the sorriest crops and some meagre pasturage. There is not a tree, not an undulation, not one noticeable feature, save a small conical hill to the south-west, now crowned by a strong castle of picturesque form, but recent construction. In this poor islet was erected the first Christian church of the whole district, now so populous, rich and industrious, which extends from Hull to Edinburgh. This was Lindisfarne — that is to say, the Mother Church, the religious capital of the north of England and south of Scotland, the residence of the first sixteen bishops of Northumbria, the sanctuary and monastic citadel of the whole country round — the Iona of the Anglo-Saxons. The resemblance of Lindisfarne to Iona, of the colony to the metropolis, the daughter to the mother, is striking. These two isles, once so celebrated, so renowned, so influential over two great and hostile races, have the same sombre and melancholy aspect, full of a wild and savage sadness. Religion only could people, fertilize, and tranquillize these arid and desolate shores.

The island chosen by Aïdan is, however, an island during only a portion of each day. As at Mont St. Michel in France, twice in the twenty-four hours the ebbing tide leaves the sands uncovered, and the passage can be made on foot to the neighboring shore,²⁵ though not always without danger, for many stories are told of travellers drowned in attempting to cross to the holy isle at low water. From this new abode Aïdan, looking southward, could descry far off the rock and stronghold of Bamborough, where Oswald, after the example of his grandfather Ida, had established his capital. His eye, like his heart, could there hail the young and glorious prince who was his friend, his helper, and his rival.

Nothing is known of the early history of St. Aïdan. When he first appears to us he is already a monk at Iona, and clothed with a certain authority among his brethren. Even when raised to the episcopate, he remained always a monk, not only in heart, but in life. Almost all his Celtic fellow-workers, whether from Ireland or Scotland, were monks like himself, and followed the cenobitical rule of their order and country. A hundred years after Aïdan, the system which he had established at Lindisfarne was still in full vigor; and, as in his day, the bishop was either himself the abbot of the insular community, or lived there as a monk, subject, like the other religious, to the authority of the abbot, elected with the consent of the brotherhood. The priests, deacons, choristers, and other officials of the cathedral church, were all monks.²⁶ But this monastic discipline and order would have availed little if the missionary-head of the institution had not possessed the character common to great servants of the truth, and been endowed with those virtues which the apostolical office demands.

²⁵ "Insula hæc, accedente reumate, quotidie his undis spumantibus maris alluitur, totiesque refluus maris sinibus, antiqua terra relinquitur." — REGINALDI MONACHI DUNELMENSIS, Libellus de Admirandis B. Cuthberti Virtutibus, c. 12.

Bede,²⁷ who was born twenty years after the death of the monk-bishop, and who lived all his life in the country which was fragrant with the memory of Aïdan's virtues, has made his character and life the subject of one of the most eloquent and attractive pictures ever drawn by the pen of the venerable historian. The praise which he awards to him is not only more expressive and more distinct than that given to any other of the monastic apostles of England, but also so much the less to be suspected of partiality, that it is qualified by the most energetic protests against his Celtic peculiarities. "He was," Bede tells us, "a pontiff inspired with a passionate love of goodness; but at the same time full of a surpassing gentleness and moderation." Faithful to all the noble teachings of his monastic cradle, he appeared to the future clergy of Northumbria as a marvel of self-denial and austerity. He was the first to practise what he taught, and none could ever reproach him with having failed to fulfil, to his best ability, all the precepts of the gospels, of the apostles, or the prophets.

Apostolic virtues of the monkbishop
Aïdan.

Indifferent to all worldly possessions, Aïdan expended in alms all that he received from the kings and rich men. To the astonishment of the Saxons, who were, like the modern English, excellent horsemen, and valued nothing more highly than the horse, it was always on foot that the bishop went through town and country, penetrating everywhere — now

²⁶ "Monachi erant maxime qui ad prædicandum venerant. . . . Monachus ipse episcopus Aëdan." — BEDE, Hist. Eccles., iii. 3. "Et monasticum cum suis omnibus vitam semper agere solebat; unde ab illo omnes loci ipsius antistites usque hodie sic episcopale exercent officium, ut regente monasterium abbate quem ipsi cum consilio fratrum elegerint, omnes . . . monastici per omnia cum ipso episcopo regulam servant." — BEDE, Vit. S. Cuthberti, c. 16.

²⁷ It is to Bede we owe all that is known of Aïdan, as of so many other personages of the seventh century. — Compare Act. SS. Bolland., vol. vi. Augusti, p. 688

among the rich, now among the poor — baptizing those who were still heathen, confirming in the faith those who were already Christians, and stimulating all to alms-giving and good works. All who accompanied him, monks or laymen, had to devote a certain portion of each day to meditation — that is to say, to reading the Bible and learning the Psalter. Unwearied in study, humble and peaceful, charitable and sincere, he was especially distinguished by zeal against the sins of the rich. Far from sparing any of their vices or excesses, he rebuked them with the greatest sharpness: and contrary to the received custom, he never made any present to the chiefs or nobles, restricting himself to simple hospitality when they came to visit him, and giving away to the first beggar whom he met the gifts which they heaped upon him. But the priestly courage which armed him against the pride of the powerful was transformed into tender and watchful solicitude when he had to defend the feeble, to relieve the needy, or to comfort the unfortunate. His, in a word, was the heart of a true priest and apostle, disdainful of all false grandeur and vain prosperity, and victorious over all the mean and perverse tendencies of his time, and of all times.²⁸

Aïdan retained nothing for himself of all the gifts of land which the generosity of the Saxon kings and nobles bestowed upon the Church, whose doctrines they had just embraced. He was content with Lindisfarne and the scanty fields of his poor little isle. But he reserved for himself, wherever it was possible in the vast villæ of the kings and nobles, a site for a chapel, with a small chamber attached, where he prepared his sermons, and in which he lodged during his incessant and prolonged journeys.²⁹

²⁸ “Scripsi hæc . . . nequaquam in eo laudans vel eligens hoc quod de observantia paschæ minus perfecte sapiebat, immo hoc multum detestans . . . sed quasi verax historicus. . . . Quantum ab eis qui eum novere didicimus, summæ mansuetudinis et pietatis et moderaminis virum. . . . Unde (ab Iona) inter alia vivendi documenta, saluberrimum abstinentiæ et modestiæ clericis exemplum reliquit. . . . Cuncta et urbana et rustica loca, non equorum dorso, sed pedum incessu. . . . Sive adtonsi, seu laici, meditari deberent, id est aut legendis Scripturis aut psalmis discendis operam dare. . . . Nunquam divitibus honoris sive timoris gratia, si qua deliquissent reticebat; sed aspera illos invectione corripbat. . . . Nullam potentibus seculi pecuniam, excepta solummodo cæsa si quos hospitio suscepisset, unquam dare solebat. . . . Animum iræ et avaritiæ victorem, superbiæ simul et vanæ gloriæ contemptorem . . . auctoritatem sacerdote dignam, redarguendi superbos ac potentes, pariter et infirmos consolandi, ac pauperes recreandi vel defendendi clementiam.” — BEDE, iii. 3, 5, 17.

²⁹ “In hoc habens ecclesiam et cubiculum, sæpe ibidem diverti ac manere, atque inde ad prædicandum circumquaque exire consueverat: quod ipsum

Like St. Gregory the Great, whom, though not his disciple, he emulated in well doing, he took an especial interest in the education of children and the emancipation of slaves. From the beginning of his mission he attached to himself twelve English youths, whom he educated with the greatest care for the service of Christ, and of whom one at least became a bishop. Every church and monastery founded by him became immediately a school where the children of the English received from Aïdan's monks an education as complete as that to be had in any of the great Irish monasteries.³⁰ As to slaves, he devoted principally to their redemption the gifts which he owed to the munificence of the Anglo-Saxons, endeavoring especially to save such as, to use Bede's expression, had been "unjustly sold," — which means, probably, those who were not foreign prisoners, or who had not been condemned to slavery as the punishment of crime. For it has been already stated, and it must be kept in mind, that the Saxons, as well as the Celts, made no scruple of selling their brethren and their children like cattle. The freedmen were carefully instructed by Aïdan, numbered among his disciples, and frequently raised to the priesthood.³¹ Heathen barbarism was thus assailed and undermined in its very citadel by monks, both from the north and from the south, and by slaves promoted to the rank of priests.

He takes especial care of the young and of slaves.

The king and the bishop rivalled each other in virtue, in piety, in ardent charity, and desire for the conversion of souls. Thanks to their mutual and unwearied efforts, every day saw the Christian religion spreading farther and taking deeper root; every day joyous crowds hastened to feed on the bread of the Divine Word, and to plunge into the waters of baptism; every day numerous churches, flanked by monasteries and schools, rose from the soil. Every day new gifts of land, due to the generosity of Oswald and the Northumbrian nobles, came to swell the patrimony of the monks and the poor. Every day, also, new missionaries, full of zeal and fervor, arrived from Ireland or Scotland to help on the work of King Oswald helper and interpreter to Bishop Aïdan.

in aliis villis regiis solebat, utpote nil propriæ possessionis, excepta ecclesia sua et adjacentibus agellis, habens." — BEDE, iii. 17.

³⁰ "Imbuebantur præceptoribus Scotis parvuli Anglorum una cum majoribus studiis et observatione disciplinæ regularis." — BEDE, iii. 3.

³¹ "Ad redemptionem eorum qui injuste fuerant venditi. . . . Multos quos pretio dato redemerat, suos discipulos fecit, atque ad sacerdotalem usque gradum erudiendo atque instituendo provexit." — BEDE, iii. 5.

Aïdan and Oswald, preaching and baptizing converts. And at the same time James the Deacon, sole survivor of the former Roman mission, redoubled his efforts to help forward the regeneration of the country in which he had already seen the faith flourish and decay. He took advantage of the restoration of peace, and the increasing number of the faithful, to add, like a true disciple of St. Gregory, the teaching of music to the teaching of religion, and to familiarize the English of the north with the sweet and solemn melody of the Roman chant, as already in use among the Saxons of Canterbury.³²

Oswald did not content himself with giving his friend Aïdan the obedience of a son and the support of a king, in all that could aid in the extension and consolidation of Christianity. He himself gave a personal example of all the Christian virtues, and often passed whole nights in prayer, still more occupied with the concerns of the heavenly kingdom than with those of the earthly realm which he had so ably won, and for which he was so soon to die. He was not only lavish in alms, giving of his riches, with humble and tender charity, to the humble and the poor, to the sick, to travellers, and to needy strangers who came to the bishop to be nourished with the Word of Life. In addition he constituted himself Aïdan's interpreter; "and it was," says Bede, "a touching spectacle to see the king, who had, during his long exile, thoroughly learned the Celtic tongue, translating to the great chiefs and the principal officials of his court, the eorls and thanes, the sermons of the bishop, who as yet spoke but imperfectly the language of the Anglo-Saxons."³³

The tender friendship and apostolic brotherhood which thus united the king and the bishop of the Northumbrians

³² "Exin cœpere plures per dies de Scotorum regione venire. . . . Construebantur ecclesiæ per loca, confluebant ad audiendum verbum populi gaudentes, donabantur munere regio. . . . Qui quoniam canendi in ecclesia erat peritissimus, recuperata postmodum pace in provincia et crescente numero fidelium, etiam magister ecclesiasticæ cantionis juxta morem Romanorum seu Cantuariorum multis cœpit existere." — BEDE, iii. 3, 11, 20.

³³ "Qui temporalis regni gubernacula tenens, magis pro æterno regno semper laborare solebat. . . . Pauperibus et peregrinis semper humilis, benignus et largus. . . . Semper, dum viveret, infirmis et pauperibus consulere, eleemosynas dare, opem ferre non cessabat. . . . Pulcherrimo sæpe spectaculo contigit, ut evangelizante antistite qui Anglorum linguam perfecte non noverat, ipse rex suis ducibus ac ministris interpretis verbi extiteret cœlestis, quia tam longo exilii sui tempore linguam Scotorum plene didicerat." — BEDE, iii. 12, 9, 6, 3.

has, perhaps more than anything else, contributed to exalt and hallow their memory in the annals of Catholic England.

Oswald was too active, too popular, too energetic, and too powerful not to make his actions and influence felt beyond the bounds of his own kingdom. Like Edwin, whom he resembles in so many points, notwithstanding the rivalry of their two families, he turned his thoughts and his steps to the south of the Humber. Edwin had converted, for a time at least, his neighbors and vassals, the East Anglians. Oswald went further, and contributed largely to the conversion of the most powerful kingdom of the Heptarchy, next to Northumbria — that of the Saxons of the West, Wessex — a kingdom which was destined to absorb and supplant all the others. The kings of this nation also professed to be of the blood of Odin; they were descended from a chief called Cerdic, perhaps the bravest of all the invaders of the British soil, and who had consolidated his conquests by forty years of craft and war. It was among this warlike race that Oswald sought a wife; but, contrary to ordinary precedent, it was, in this new union, the husband, and not the wife, who took the initiative in conversion. When he went for his bride, Kineburga, into the country of the West Saxons, the King of Northumbria met there an Italian bishop, who had undertaken their conversion, finding them entirely pagan. He did his best to second the laborious efforts of the foreign missionary, and the king, whose daughter he was about to wed, having consented to be baptized, Oswald stood sponsor for him, and thus became the spiritual father of him whose son-in-law he was about to become.³⁴ He took back to Northumbria with him the young convert, who soon bore him a son, little worthy of his sire, but yet destined at least to be the founder of a monastery which acted a part of some importance in the history of his people.

Oswald marries the daughter of the King of Wessex, and converts his father-in-law.

All this prosperity was soon to end, as all that is good and beautiful ends here below. The terrible Penda was still alive, and, under the iron hand of that redoubtable warrior, Mercia remained the stronghold of paganism, even as Northumbria had become under Edwin and Oswald the centre of Christian life in Great Britain. He had left unrevengeed the death of his

Invasion of Penda at the head of the Mercians and Britons.

³⁴ "Cum omnes paganissimos inveniret. . . Pulcherrimo et Deo digno consortio, cujus erat filiam accepturus in conjugem, ipsum prius secunda generatione Deo dictatum sibi accepit in filium." — BEDE, iii. 7.

ally, the Briton Cadwallon; he had done nothing to hinder the accession and establishment of a new Christian king in Northumbria. But when that king essayed to cross the river which formed the boundary of the two kingdoms, and to unite to his domains a province which had always belonged to the Mercians,³⁵ Penda, notwithstanding his age, resumed his old inveteracy towards those whom he saw — again like Edwin — deserting the worship of their common ancestor Odin, and claiming an insupportable supremacy over all the Saxons, Pagan or Christian. He accordingly renewed with the Britons the alliance which had already been so disastrous to the Northumbrians, and, placing himself at the head of the two combined armies, waged for two years a sanguinary war against Oswald, which ended in a decisive battle at Maserfeld, on the western border of Mercia and Northumbria.³⁶

Battle of
Maserfeld,
5th August,
642.
Oswald is
slain.

The struggle was fierce; the brother of Penda perished in the fight, but Oswald, the great and beloved Oswald, shared the same fate. He died on the field, in the flower of his years, at the age of thirty-eight. There he fell — the historian of the English Church says with emphasis — fighting for his country. But his last word, his last thought, was for heaven, and for the eternal welfare of his people. "My God," said he, on seeing himself encircled with enemies, overwhelmed by numbers, and already pierced by a forest of arrows and lances — "my God, save their souls."³⁷ The last cry of this saintly spirit, this young hero, remained long graven on the memory of the Saxon people, and passed into a proverb to denote those who prayed without ceasing in life and in death.

The ferocity of Penda was not even satisfied by the death of his young rival. When the dead body of the king of Northumbria was brought from the battle-field into his presence, the old savage caused the head and hands of the hero to be cut off, and set up on stakes, to intimidate both conquerors and conquered. The noble remains were thus exposed for a whole year, till his brother and avenger, Oswy, carried them away. The hero's head was then taken to Lindisfarne, to the great monastery which he had so richly endowed, and where his holy friend Aïdan awaited it; but his hands were deposited in a chapel in the royal fortress of Bamborough, the cradle of that Northumbrian dominion which the arms of his ancestors had founded, and which his own had so valiantly restored.

³⁵ Oswald, whether as a conqueror or only as bretwalda or chief of the confederation, had invaded that province of Lindsey, where Paulinus had founded the Cathedral of Lincoln, where the monks themselves reproached the sainted King of Northumbria, forty years after his death, with having wished to rule over them.

³⁶ According to some, near Winwick, in Lancashire; according to others, at Oswestry, in Shrewsbury.

³⁷ "Ubi pro patria dimicans a paganis interfectus est. . . . Vulgatum est autem et in consuetudinem proverbii versum quod etiam inter orationes vitam finierit. . . . Cum armis et hostibus circumseptus, jamjam videret se esse perimendum, oravit pro animabus exercitus sui. Unde dicunt in proverbio: Deus, miserere animabus, dixit Oswald cadens in terra." — BEDE, iii. 9, 12. "Cum stipatoribus fuscis ipse quoque ferratam silvam in pectore gereret." — WILHELM. MALMESB., De Gest., lib. i. c. 3.

Thus perished, at the age of thirty-eight, Oswald, ranked by the Church among her martyrs, and by the Anglo-Saxon people among its saints and heroes of most enduring fame. Through the obscurity of that thankless and confused age, the eye rests gratefully on this young prince, reared in exile among the hereditary enemies of his race, who was consoled for the loss of a throne by his conversion to Christianity: who regained the kingdom of his fathers at the point of the sword, and planted the first cross on his native soil, at the moment when he freed it from the usurper; crowned by the love and devotion of the people on whom he bestowed the blessings of peace and of supreme truth, spending his very life for its sake; united for a few short years to a wife whom, in marrying, he had made a Christian; gentle and strong, serious and sincere, pious and intelligent, humble and bold, active and gracious, a soldier and a missionary, a king and a martyr, slain in the flower of his age on the field of battle, fighting for his country and praying for his subjects. Where shall we find in all history a hero more nearly approaching the ideal, more richly gifted, more worthy of eternal remembrance, and, it must be added, more completely forgotten?

It was long, however, before his name was forgotten. During the whole Anglo-Saxon period, and even after the Norman Conquest, under the Plantagenets, this gallant soldier, great king, and generous Christian, continued to be the object of popular veneration. The chroniclers and poets of the time vied with each other in celebrating his fame. "Who, then," said one of them, with that mingling of classic associations and Christian ideas so habitual to the monks and all the writers of the middle ages—"Who, then, is Hercules? who is Alexander the Great? who is Julius Cæsar? We are taught that Hercules conquered himself, Alexander conquered the world, and Cæsar

Oswald is
venerated as a martyr.

the enemies of Rome; but Oswald conquered at once the world, his enemies, and himself.”³⁸

The monks of the great and magnificent Church of Hexham went in procession every year to celebrate the day consecrated to him at the site of the cross which he had planted on the eve of his first victory. But the love and gratitude of the Christian people gave a still greater glory to the place of his defeat and death. Pilgrims came thither in crowds to seek relief from their sufferings, and had each a miraculous cure to relate on their return. The dust which his noble blood had watered was collected with care and conveyed to great distances as a remedy for disease, or a preservative from the evils of life. By dint of carrying away this dust a hollow was scooped out of a man’s size, and which seemed the ever-open tomb of this martyr of his country. On seeing the turf around this hollow clothed with an unwonted verdure, more delicate and beautiful than elsewhere, travellers said that the man who had perished there must needs have been more holy and more pleasing in God’s sight than all the other warriors who rested beneath that sward.³⁹ The veneration of which his remains were the object spread not only among all the Saxons and Britons of Great Britain, but even beyond the seas, in Ireland, and among the Greeks and the Germans. The very stake on which the head of the royal martyr had been fixed was cut up into relics, the fragments of which were regarded as of sovereign efficacy in the healing both of body or of mind. These things provoke a pitying smile from the wise and witty, who in times and countries enslaved by the ascendancy of numbers and physical force are not forbidden to philosophize. But no safer or sweeter asylum has ever been found for humiliated patriotism, violated justice, or vanquished freedom, than the pious tenderness with which Christian nations once surrounded the tomb and relics of those who died for the faith and their rights.

³⁸ “Quis fuit Alcides? Quis Cæsar Julius? Aut quis Magnus Alexander? Alcides se superasse Fertur; Alexander mundum, sed Julius hostem. Se simul Oswaldus et mundum vicit et hostem.”

— Ap. CAMDEN, Britannia, iii. 493.

³⁹ “Contigit ut pulverem ipsum ubi corpus ejus in terram corruit . . . multi auferentes . . . qui mox adeo increbuit, ut paulatim ablata exinde terra fossam ad mensuram staturæ virilis reddiderit. Quidam de natione Britonum, iter faciens juxta ipsum locum, vidit unius loci spatium cetero campo venustius ac viridius: cœpitque sagæi animo conficere quod nulla esset alia causa insolitæ illo in loco viriditatis, nisi quia ibidem sanctior cetero exercitu vir aliquis fuisset interfectus.” — BEDE, iii. 9, 10.

A kind of prophecy, that Oswald's bones would become relics, had been made to him by Aīdan, on the following occasion : —

Prediction of Aīdan in regard to Oswald's
hand.

The bishop had made it a rule to accept very rarely those invitations to the royal table which were considered, among the Germanic races, as signs of the most marked distinction. When he did go he was present only at the beginning of the repast, after which he would hasten away to apply himself, with his monks, to reading or prayer. But one Easter-day the monk-bishop, being at dinner with the king, and seated beside him, had just raised his hand to bless a silver dish filled with delicacies which was placed before Oswald, when the officer to whom the charge of the poor was specially intrusted, suddenly entered to announce that there was a crowd of beggars in the street who besought alms of the king. Oswald immediately gave orders that the food, and the silver dish which contained it, the latter broken in pieces, should be divided among the beggars. As he stretched out his hand to give this order, the bishop seized it and cried, "May this hand never perish!"⁴⁰ The following year it was severed from his body, and picked up on the battle-field where he gave his life for God and his people; and the hand of the royal martyr, enshrined in the sanctuary of the ancient Northumbrian capital, continued entire and incorruptible for centuries, was seen and kissed by innumerable Christians, and disappeared only in that abyss of spoliation and sacrilege in which Henry VIII. ingulfed all the monastic glories and treasures of England.

⁴⁰ "Adceleravit ocius ad legendum aut orandum egredi. . . . Discus argenteus regalibus epulis refertus, jamjam essent manus ad benedicendum panem missuri. . . . Ministrum cui suscipiendorum inopum erat cura delegata. . . . Pontifex qui adsidebat . . . apprehendit dextram ejus et ait: Nunquam inveterascet hæc manus." — BEDE, iii. 5, 6. The Bollandists prove (vol. ii. Aug., p. 87) that the hand still existed in the sixteenth century.

CHAPTER II.

NORTHUMBRIA UNDER THE SUCCESSORS OF OSWALD — THE CELTIC BISHOPS — THE GREAT ABBESSES, HILDA AND EBBA.

Oswald's successors in Northumbria: Oswy in Bernicia; Oswin in Deira. — Oswin's intimacy with Bishop Aidan. — The son of the mare and the son of God. — New outrages of Penda. — Aidan stops the burning of Bamborough. — Struggle between Oswy and Oswin. — Murder of Oswin. — Death of Aidan twelve years after his friend. — The double monastery of Tynemouth, built above the tomb of Oswin. — The wife of the murderer dedicates a monastery to the expiation of the murder. — Reign of Oswy, who was venerated as a saint, notwithstanding his crime, because of his zeal for the truth. — Successors of Aidan at Lindisfarne, sent by the monks of Iona. — Episcopate of the Scot Finan. — He builds the Cathedral of Lindisfarne of wood. — Colman, second successor. — Novitiate at Melrose. — The young Anglo-Saxons go to study in Ireland. — The female monasteries of Northumbria. — Hefa, the first nun. — Hartlepool. — Aidan gives the veil to Hilda, princess of Deira: her rule of thirty years at Whitby. — Description of the place. — The six bishops who issued from the double monastery. Ceadmon, the cowherd, vassal of Hilda; the first Anglo-Saxon poet; precursor of Milton, he sings the Paradise Lost; his holy life and death. — The Princess Ebba, of the rival dynasty, sister of Oswald and Oswy, foundress and Abbess of Coldingham: she also rules for thirty years. — Notable disorders in her monasteries. — Fervor and austerity of the Northumbrian monks: extraordinary fasts: different characteristics of Lindisfarne, Coldingham, and Melrose. — A precursor of Dante. — Foundation of Lastingham: Cedd, monk of Lindisfarne. — Testimony borne by the Romano-Benedictine Bede to the virtue, disinterestedness, and popularity of the Celtic missionaries. — Nevertheless, resistance and opposition are not wanting. — Contrast and fickleness of character in the kings as in the people. — Joy of the natives of the coast on seeing the monks shipwrecked.

Oswald's
successors
in Northumbria.

ON the death of Oswald Northumbria fell a prey, first to the ravages of Mercian invasion, then to the complications and weakness of a divided succession. Like the Merovingian, and even the Carolingian Franks, although with a less fatal obstinacy, the Anglo-Saxons, and particularly the Angles of Northumbria, could not resist the inclination which led them to accept or to incite the division of a kingdom among several princes as soon as there appeared several heirs of a deceased king. It must be supposed that these divisions answered in England, as in France, to certain distinctions of race, or to certain exigencies of local or provincial self-government, which could not be reconciled with the existence of one supreme authority. Oswald left a son in childhood, whose claims were not at that moment taken into consideration. His brother Oswy, still in the flower of his youth, and, though much less saintly than Oswald, no less a good soldier and valiant captain, at once took his place in Bernicia — that is to say, in the northern part of Northumbria. As for Deira, it fell to a prince of the Deirian dynasty, grand-nephew to Ella, the founder of that race,⁴¹ and son of that ill-fated Osric who had reigned for a year only over Southern Northumbria after the downfall of his cousin Edwin in 633 — a short reign, which left him scarce time enough to renounce the baptism which he had received from the hands of Paulinus, and to perish under the sword of Cadwallon's Britons. His son, called Oswin, had been saved while yet a child by his friends, who sent him out of Northumbria, and had passed his youth in exile, like Edwin, and the two brothers Oswald and Oswy. Exile seems to have been the necessary and salutary apprenticeship of the Northumbrian kings.

Oswy in Bernicia.

Oswin, king
in Deira.
642-51.

On hearing of the death of Oswald he claimed his right of succession. The old subjects of his father and grand-uncle gladly received him.⁴² The principal nobles met in assembly, acknowledged his hereditary right, and proclaimed him King of the Deirians; and for seven years he governed them to the satisfaction of all. He was still very young, of lofty stature, endowed with remarkable comeliness and grace — a matter of no small importance in an age and among a people extremely sensible to external advantages. But he had, in addition, all the virtues which were then regarded as proofs of sanctity. His extreme gentleness, his charity, and, above all, his humility, were universally extolled. He was, moreover, so accessible, so courteous and generous, that the noblest ⁴¹ See the genealogical table, Appendix VI., p. 752.

⁴² "Audiens Oswinus exulans, quod, Oswaldo defuncto, regnaret Oswin pro fratre suo, inito cum suis consilio ad regnum Deirorum regressus, ab omni plebe latante recepitur. . . . Omnibus ejus beneficia postulantibus hilariter impendebat." — JOAN. TYNEMOUTH, ap. BOLLAND., t. iv. Aug., p. 63. "Parvo temporis intervallo principes primatesque regni convenerunt in unum communicatoque unanimiter consilio B. Oswinum hæredi tatis juris successorem Deirorum dominum in regem sublimantes." — Vita Oswini, p. 3, in the Publications of the Surtees Society, 1838.

lords of all Northumbria vied with each other in seeking the honor of serving among those officers of his household whom the Latin historians designate in England, as elsewhere, by the name of ministeriales.⁴³

Although Oswin had been exiled among the Saxons of Wessex, and not in Scotland, like his cousins and rivals Oswald and Oswy, and had been thus entirely out of contact with the Celtic monks, he was already a Christian when he returned to Northumbria, and did not hesitate to recognize the episcopal authority of Aïdan. During his whole reign the monk of Iona, now bishop of Lindisfarne, continued to travel throughout the two kingdoms which formed his immense diocese—not confining himself to preaching in the new churches, but going from house to house to foster beside the domestic hearth the seeds of the new-sown faith.⁴⁴ It was a special pleasure to him on such occasions to rest under the hospitable roof of the young king of Deira, with whom he always lived in as tender and thorough a union as that which had united him to Oswald.

His connection with Aïdan. An oft-repeated anecdote, which reveals at once the pleasant intimacy of their relations and the noble delicacy of their minds, has been left us by Bede. Aïdan, as we have said, performed all his apostolic journeys on foot, but it was the king's wish that he should have at least a horse to cross the rivers, or for other special emergencies; he gave him accordingly his best steed, splendidly caparisoned. The bishop accepted it, and made use of it; but being, as Bede calls him, "the father and worshipper of the poor," it happened ere long that, meeting a man who asked alms, he leaped down from his royal courser, and gave it, harnessed as it was, to the beggar. The king, being informed of this, said to Aïdan, as they were going to dinner together, "Lord bishop, what do you mean by giving my horse to that beggar? Had I not many other horses of less value, and property of every kind to give in alms, without the necessity of giving that horse that I had expressly chosen for your own special use?" "What is this you say?" replied Aïdan. "O king, the horse, which is the son of a mare, is it dearer to you than the man who is the son of God?" As he said this they entered the banqueting hall. Oswin, who had just returned from the chase, approached the fire with his officers, before sitting down at the table, and while he warmed himself, thought over the words of the bishop; then all at once taking off his sword, he threw himself at the feet of the saint, and implored his pardon. "No more," said he, "shall I speak of it, and never more shall regret anything of mine that you give to the children of God." After which, reassured by the kind words of the bishop, he sat down joyously to dine. But the bishop, on the contrary, became very sad, and began to weep. One of his priests inquired the cause of his sadness; upon which he replied in the Celtic tongue, which neither Oswin nor his attendants understood, "I know now that the king will not live long; never until now have I seen a king so humble; and this nation is not worthy of such a prince."⁴⁵

⁴³ "In maxima omnium rerum affluentia et ipse amabilis omnibus præfuit. . . . Aspectu venustus et statura sublimis et affatu jucundus et moribus civilis et manu omnibus nobilibus et ignobilibus largus. . . . Unde contigit ut . . . undique ad ejus ministerium de cunctis prope provinciis viri etiam nobilissimi concurrent." — BEDE, iii. 14.

⁴⁴ "Propter nascentis fidei teneritudinem provinciam circumeundo fidelium domos intrare verbique divini semina pro capto singulorum in agro cordis eorum cominus spargere." — Vit. Osw., p. 4.

This little tale, Ozanam truly says, forms a perfect picture; it discloses in those barbarous times a sweetness of sentiment, a delicacy of conscience, a refinement of manners, which, more than knowledge, is the sign of Christian civilization.

The sad foreboding of the saint was realized only too soon. But it was not, like his predecessors, under the assault of the fierce Penda and the coalition of Mercians and Britons that the amiable and conscientious Oswin was to perish. Penda, however, had resumed his devastating career, and continued for thirteen years longer to ravage Northumbria. But he seems to have entertained less unfriendly feelings to his neighbors the Deïrians and their king, than to the Bernicians, and Oswy the brother of his last victim. It is in the north of the two kingdoms that we again find him carrying everywhere fire and sword,⁴⁶ and attempting to give to the flames the royal fortress of Bamborough. There also we find Aïdan, the benefactor and protector of the country. Penda, not having been able to reduce the fortress either by assault or by investment, caused an enormous pile to be erected all round the rampart. He heaped on it all the wood of the surrounding forests, the driftwood from the beach, the beams, and even the thatch of the cottages in all the neighboring villages which he had destroyed; then, as soon as the wind blew from the west, he set fire to the mass, with the hope of seeing the flames reach the town. Aïdan was at the time in the islet of Farne, an isolated rock in the open sea, a little to the south of Lindisfarne, and nearly opposite Bamborough, to which he often went, quitting his episcopal monastery to devote himself in solitude and silence to prayer. While he prayed he saw a cloud of black smoke and jets of flame covering the sky above the town where his dear Oswald once dwelt. Lifting his eyes and hands to heaven, he cried, with tears, "My God, behold all the evil that Penda does us!" At the same moment the wind changed, the flames whirled round upon the besiegers, destroying many of them, and they speedily abandoned the siege of a place so evidently under Divine protection.⁴⁷

⁴⁵ "Desiliens ille præcepit equum ita ut erat stratus regaliter, pauperi dare: erat enim . . . cultor pauperum ac velut pater miserorum. . . . Quid voluisti, Domine Antistes, equum regium quem te conveniebat habere, pauperi dare? Numquid non habuimus equos viliores plurimos . . . qui ad pauperum dona sufficerent? . . . Quid loqueris, rex? Num tibi carior est ille filius equæ, quam ille filius Dei. . . . Porro rex (venerat enim de venatu) cæpit consistens ad focum calefieri cum ministris, et repente inter calefaciendum recordans verbum quod dixerat illi Antistes, discinxit se gladio suo . . . festinusque accedens ante pedes episcopi corruit. . . . Quia nunquam deinceps aliquid loquar de hoc, aut judicabo quid et quantum de pecunia nostra filiis Dei tribuas. . . . Lingua sua patria quam rex et domestici ejus non noverant. . . . Nunquam ante hoc vidi tam humilem regem." — BEDE, iii. 14.

Aïdan
saves the capital of Northum-
bria from being burnt
by Penda.

As if this formidable and pitiless enemy was not enough to desolate Northumbria, there arose in the heart of Oswy a jealous animosity which soon ripened into civil war. After seven years of union between the two kings of Bernicia and Deïra, occasions of estrangement, ever increasing, began to arise between them. These were owing, it cannot be doubted, to the preference which, we have already remarked, was shown by so many of the Northumbrian lords for the pleasant and cordial service of King Oswin. Oswy marched against the Deïrians. Oswin likewise put himself at the head of his army; but it was much less numerous than that of the king of Bernicia, and when the moment of battle arrived, he said to the chiefs and lords of his country that he was reluctant to make them risk their lives for him whom they had raised from the position ⁴⁶ "Cum cuncta quæ poterat ferro flammaque perderet." — BEDE, iii. 17.

⁴⁷ "Plurimam congeriem trabium, tignorum, parietum, virgarum et tecti fenei et his urbem in magna altitudine circumdedit . . . ventis ferentibus globos ignis ac fumum, . . . Vide, Domine, quanta mala facit Penda." — BEDE, iii. 16.

of a poor exile to be their king, and who now did not shrink either from renewed exile or death itself.⁴⁸ He then disbanded his troops and sought refuge with an earl on whom he thought he could rely, having just conferred on him, after many other bounties, the very manor of Gilling where he reckoned on finding an asylum. This wretched traitor gave him up to Oswy, who had the cruelty to kill him. One companion, Tondhere by name, alone remained to him. Oswin, resigned to his own death, besought that his friend might be spared; but he refused to survive his prince, preferring to sacrifice himself to that sentiment of passionate devotion which, among the Saxons, had preceded Christianity, and which justifies the title of knight prematurely applied to this brave and loyal adherent by one of the martyr's biographers.⁴⁹

Oswin is put to death.
20th Aug.,
651.

The king and his knight thus perished together; and twelve days afterwards the glorious Bishop Aïdan followed the king he loved to the tomb.⁵⁰ He fell sick during one of his innumerable missionary expeditions, and died under a tent which had been pitched in haste to shelter him at the back of a modest church which he had just built. He expired with his head resting against one of the buttresses of the church. It was a death which became a soldier of the faith upon his own fit field of battle.⁵¹

Aïdan dies
twelve days later.

The body of Aïdan was carried to his monastic cathedral of Lindisfarne. But that of his royal friend, Oswin, was deposited in a chapel dedicated to the blessed Virgin, and situated on a granite headland almost entirely surrounded by the sea, at the mouth of the Tyne, a river which was then the boundary line between the two Northumbrian states of Deïra and Bernicia, and which is now one of the principal arteries of the maritime commerce of England. Ere long, over the sacred remains of this martyr, who was beloved and honored by the Northumbrians of both kingdoms as their father and lord on earth, and their patron saint in heaven, there rose

The double monastery
of Tynemouth, founded on Oswin's
tomb.

⁴⁸ JOANN. TYNEMOUTH., l. c.

⁴⁹ "Maluit miles mortui succumbere quam mortuo domino, etiamsi copia daretur, supervivere." — Ibid. Compare BEDE, l. c.

⁵⁰ "Non plus quam duodecimo post occisionem regis quem amabat die." — Ibid.

⁵¹ "Tetenderunt ægrotanti tentorium, ita ut tentorium parieti adhæreret ecclesiæ. Adclinis destinæ quæ extrinsecus ecclesiæ pro munimine erat adposita."

one of those double monasteries which included both monks and nuns within two separate enclosures, but under one government.⁵² The nuns whose office it was to pray upon his tomb came from Whitby, which was already governed with a splendor as great as her authority was absolute, by the Abbess Hilda, herself sprung, like the martyred Oswin, from the Deirian dynasty and the race of Ella. The vicissitudes of this great monastery throughout the invasions of the Danes and Normans; the constant or ever-reviving veneration with which the remains of St. Oswin were regarded, even after the remembrance of his friend Aïdan was totally effaced; ⁵³ the protection which the poor, the afflicted, and oppressed long found under the shadow of his sanctuary, and under the shelter of what was called the Peace of St. Oswin, will possibly be related in the sequel of our narrative, or by other and more competent pens. We must content ourselves at present with merely pointing out the beautiful remains of the conventual church which was rebuilt in the thirteenth century, and which is enclosed within the fortress which defends the entrance of the Tyne. The seven great arcades, whose time-worn relics rise majestically against the sky from the height of their rock, produce a vivid effect on the traveller who arrives by sea, and nobly announce England's adoration of the ruins she had made.⁵⁴

Some years later, on the very spot where Oswin had perished, at Gilling, near Richmond, a monastery was reared in expiation of so foul a crime, by the wife of his murderer. This was no other than Eanfleda, daughter of King Edwin, she whose birth had contributed to the conversion of her father,⁵⁵ who had been the first-born of Christ in the Northumbrian kingdom, and who, after the overthrow of Edwin and the Roman mission in Northumbria, had been carried in her cradle by Bishop Paulinus into the country

Eanfleda, daughter of King Edwin, and wife of Oswy, consecrates a monastery in expiation of her husband's crime.

⁵² "Ut dominum et patrem in terris, defensorem reputarent in cœlis: unde processu temporis ad majorem martyris gloriam sanctimoniales virgines de cœnobio S. Hildæ abbatissæ ad corpus ejus introductæ, usque ad persecutionem Danicam . . . in supremo religionis culmine permauserunt." — MATH. WESTM., ad ann. 1065. Compare BOLLAND., t. iv. Aug., pp. 58, 59.

⁵³ "De sancto rege Oswino nonnulla dudum audieram, sed sancti Aydani episcopi nec nomen ad me pervenerat," says a traveller, miraculously cured in the twelfth century. — Vita Oswini, p. 32.

⁵⁴ There is a large and handsome recent work on the Monastery of Tynemouth, entitled, History of the Monastery founded at Tynemouth in the Diocese of Durham, to the honor of God, under the invocation of the B. V. M. and St. Oswin, King and Martyr, by WILLIAM SIDNEY GIBSON. London, 1846, 2 vols. 4to.

⁵⁵ See p. 210.

of her mother, Ethelburga, daughter of the first Christian king of Kent.

Oswy, who was as able as he was ambitious, readily perceived that it was not enough to murder a rival in order to secure himself in the exclusive sovereignty of Northumbria. He had previously wished to conciliate the opposing dynasty by a matrimonial alliance, as his father Ethelfrid had done.⁵⁶ In pursuance of this purpose, he had despatched to Canterbury, with Aïdan's approval and blessing, a priest respected for the gravity and sincerity of his character,⁵⁷ and abbot of one of the new monasteries,⁵⁸ to obtain from Queen Ethelburga, if she still lived, the hand of her daughter. His suit was granted, and the exiled princess returned to reign over the kingdom that she had quitted in her blood-stained cradle. In this double Northumbrian dynasty, the history of which is at once so dramatic and romantic, and so closely interwoven with the history of the conversion of the English, exile was almost always the forerunner of the kingly office, or of sainthood. Eanfleda, cousin-german of the murdered king, and wife of the king who killed him, obtained permission from her husband to build a monastery on the spot where the murder had been committed, that prayers might be offered there forever for two souls, that of the victim and that of the murderer. The government of this new foundation was intrusted to Abbot Trumhere, himself a scion of the family of Deïrian Trumhere. princes, and one of those Anglo-Saxons who, like the negotiator of Eanfleda's marriage, had been trained and raised to the priesthood by the Celtic monks.⁵⁹

Upon this noble daughter of Edwin, restored Reign of from exile to reign over the country of her ances- Oswy. tors as the wife of the cruel Oswy, the mind 642-670. rests with emotion. A natural desire arises to attribute to her influence the happy change which appears to have been wrought in the character of Oswy from the day on which she induced him to expiate the crime with which he was stained,

⁵⁶ See the genealogical table of the two races in Appendix VI., p. 752.

⁵⁷ "Utta, multæ gravitatis vir et ob id omnibus, etiam principibus seculi honorabilis." — BEDE, iii. 15.

⁵⁸ At Gateshead on the Tyne, opposite Newcastle. Compare Smith's notes on BEDE, iii. 21. There was still at Gateshead, in 1745, a Catholic chapel, which was burnt by the populace out of hatred to Prince Charles Edward. — CAMDEN'S Britannia, Gough's edition, vol. iii. p. 123.

⁵⁹ "De natione quidam Anglorum, sed edoctus et ordinatus a Scotis . . . propinquus et ipse erat regis occisi : in quo monasterio assiduæ orationes pro utriusque regis, id est, et occisi, et ejus qui occidere jussit, salute æterna fierent." — BEDE, iii. 24.

by founding this monastery. Forgetful of this crime, all the historians unite in extolling the virtues and exploits which distinguished the after portion of his prolonged and active reign. He did not continue at first, after the assassination of Oswin, the undisputed master of all Northumbria; he had to give up at least a part of Deira to the young son of his brother Oswald, Ethelwald by name. But he retained, notwithstanding, an evident preponderance, not only in Northumbria, but in all England, the dignity of Bretwalda having fallen to him uncontested. The great event of his reign is the overthrow of the fierce heathen, Penda of Mercia, an event which sealed the final victory of Christianity among the Anglo-Saxons. But both before and after this culminating point of his prosperity, Oswy displayed so ardent and consistent a zeal for the extension and establishment of the Christian religion, that he was finally admitted to a place, sometimes too easily accessible, in the English martyrology.⁶⁰

Aïdan's
successors
at Lindisfarne, sent by the monks of Iona.

Nevertheless, neither the zeal of Oswy, nor the purer ardor of his illustrious predecessor, could have prevailed against the various and formidable obstacles which the Gospel had to encounter among the Anglo-Saxons, had they not been directed, enlightened, and sustained by the admirable clergy whom Aïdan and his successors had trained in the cloisters of Lindisfarne and its dependent monasteries.

In regard to the succession of bishops in the new diocese of Lindisfarne, it is necessary to keep in mind the very significant difference between the usages followed by the Roman and those of the Celtic missionaries in the election of bishops. The first four successors of Augustine at Canterbury were all, as we have seen, chosen from among the Italian monks who had accompanied him to England: but they all belonged to that first mission, and were all freely chosen by their companions, old or new, in place of being successively sent from Rome, as the bishops of Lindisfarne were from Iona. In fact, at each vacancy in the see of Lindisfarne, the monks of Iona, who regarded that monastic cathedral, and perhaps the whole of christianized Northumbria, as their exclusive property, hastened to despatch a monk of their community to replace him who had rendered his soul to God. The Scottish monks, thus placed during thirty years at the head of the Church of the North of England, showed themselves thoroughly worthy of the saintly school whence they issued, and of the glorious mission to which they were consecrated. But it is, nevertheless, important to note that, either owing distance or some other cause, Rome left to her missionary communities, her apostolic colonies, a liberty which was not possible under the harsh discipline of the Celtic Church.

⁶⁰ 15th February: Compare Act. SS. Bolland., vol. ii. Feb., p. 801.

The first monk sent from Iona to replace the noble Aïdan, is known by the name of St. Finan.⁶¹ His episcopate was prosperous; it lasted ten years,⁶² and was not interrupted by any melancholy event, such as those which had troubled the life of Aïdan by taking from him his two royal friends. Finan always lived on good terms with King Oswy, and before going to join his predecessor in heaven, he had the happiness of introducing to the Church the heads of the two great Saxon kingdoms, who came to seek baptism at the gates of Lindisfarne. In that island-sanctuary, where we must remember that the bishop was often in ecclesiastical subjection to the local abbot of the monastic community, Finan caused a cathedral to be built, not of stone, like that which Paulinus and Edwin had commenced at York, but according to the Celtic custom, and like the churches built by Columba and his Irish monks: it was made entirely of wood, and covered with rushes, or rather with that long rough sea-grass, whose pivot-like roots bind together the sands on the sea-shore, and which is still found in great abundance on the island, as well as on the sandy beach which has to be crossed before the traveller can reach Lindisfarne.⁶³

Episcopate
of the Scot Finan.
651-661.

He builds of wood
the Cathedral of Lin-disfarne.

⁶¹ "Et ipse illo ab Hii Scotorum insula ac monasterio destinatus." — BEDE, iii. 25. Cf. Act. SS. Bolland., vol. iii. Feb., p. 21.

⁶² The Breviary of Aberdeen, quoted by the Bollandists, affirms that Finan's promotion to the episcopate was preceded by a kind of election or postulation proceeding from the clergy and people of Northumbria, the nuns included: "Congregatis cleri populi que concionibus, virorum et mulierum utriusque sexus, unanimiter S. Finanum in episcopum Lindisfarnensem Spiritus Sancti gratia eligi instanter postulaverunt et solemniter assumpserunt." But besides the fact of our finding no trace of any similar election in these ancient monuments, it appears to us incompatible with the formal testimony of the almost contemporary Northumbrian Bede: "Interea Aidano de hac vita sublato, Finan pro illo gradum episcopatus, a Scotis ordinatus ac missus, acceperat." — BEDE, iii. 25.

⁶³ "Fecit ecclesiam episcopali sede congruam: quam tamen more Scotorum, non de lapide, sed de robore secto totam composuit atque arundine textit." This herb is called in English bent, and the sandy flats which it covers, and which extend along all the coast of Northumbria and of southern Scotland, take the name of links.

Vast as was his diocese, which embraced the two great Northumbrian kingdoms, and great as must have been his influence over the other Saxon provinces, Finan seems farther to have preserved and exercised an authority not less complete over the country of his origin, the kingdom of the Dalriadan Scots. The Scots annalists all speak of a certain King Fergus, who, by his violence and exactions, had raised the indignation of the Scottish clergy, and called down upon himself a sentence of excommunication from the bishops of Lindisfarne, Finan and his successors.⁶⁴ These Celtic bishops were at all times far from courtly. Finan left among the Anglo-Saxons the reputation of a man rough and intractable,⁶⁵ and we shall see that his successor was no less difficult than himself.

Colman,
second successor of Aidan.
661-664.

He was succeeded by Colman, a monk of Iona, sent forth by that community, like Aidan and Finan, to govern the Northumbrian Church,⁶⁶ and to evangelize the Northern Anglo-Saxons. He is believed to have been born in Ireland, and on this account he is held in honor there. It has even been supposed that in him might be recognized one of those young disciples of Columba, whose rustic labors the great Abbot blessed and encouraged from the threshold of the cell in which he pursued his solitary studies.⁶⁷ True or false, this tradition accords with history, which shows us in Colman a pontiff penetrated with the same spirit as his predecessors, and always worthy of the monastic sanctuary which, for more than a century, was rendered illustrious by the genius and memory of Columba.

Novitiate
of Melrose.

Lindisfarne, as may easily be supposed, did not suffice for the training, or indeed for the shelter of the army of monks employed by the Celtic bishops in the spiritual conquest of Northumbria. To the north of the Tweed, the present boundary between England and Scotland, and about half-way from Lindisfarne to the Scots frontier, ⁶⁴ BOECE and LESLIE, ap. BOLLAND., l. c.

⁶⁵ "Quod esset homo ferocis animi." — BEDE, l. c.

⁶⁶ "Et ipse missus a Scotis. . . . Venit ad insulam Hii unde erat ad prædicandum verbum Anglorum-genti destinatus." — BEDE, iii. 23; iv. 4.

⁶⁷ ADAMNAN, ii. 16. It is very difficult, however, to admit the identity of the Colman of whom Adamnan speaks with Colman the bishop of Lindisfarne: supposing he had been but twenty years of age at the date of Columba's death in 597, he would have been above eighty at the time of his promotion to the episcopate in 661, and would have been nearly one hundred when he died in 675. Comp. LANIGAN, op. cit. vol. iii. pp. 59-61.

they established a kind of branch or establishment for novices, where the monks destined for the labors and trials of the apostolate were received and trained. Some of these, like their bishops, came from Iona, Ireland, and the land of the Scots, while others were taken from the ranks of the Saxon converts.⁶⁸ This outpost of Lindisfarne and Iona bore the name of Melrose — not the Cistercian Melrose, with the name of which Walter Scott has made us familiar, while its picturesque ruins attract all the visitors of the famous quadrilateral formed by the four most beautiful ruins in Scotland, Kelso, Jedburgh, Dryburgh, and Melrose — but a more ancient and more holy Melrose — whose memory has been too much effaced by its brilliant offspring. It was situated on a kind of rounded promontory almost completely encircled by the winding current of the Tweed, the banks of which at this part of its course are very abrupt and thickly wooded. The spot was one of profound solitude, as the very name indicates (Mail-ross or Mul-ross, desolate point);⁶⁹ and here was raised a sanctuary, which was for many years the centre of light and life to all the surrounding country, long frequented by pilgrims, whose paths are still pointed out, and from whence issued many of the saints most venerated in the south of Scotland and north of England.⁷⁰

The first Abbot of Melrose was Eata, one of the twelve young Saxons whom the first Celtic bishop chose for himself as the first-fruits of his episcopate.⁷¹ But neither the zeal of the pastors nor the fervor of the converts was satisfied with those fountains of life and knowledge which gushed forth in Northumbrian soil. Older and more abundant springs were necessary to them. A crowd of youths, some the sons of thanes or nobles, others of the lowest rank, left their country

The young Anglo-Saxons in the Irish monasteries.

⁶⁸ VARIN, second paper.

⁶⁹ The site is still called Old Melrose. It is occupied by a pretty country-house, which belonged in July, 1862, to a Mr. Fairholme. It is not more than three miles from the magnificent ruins of the celebrated Cistercian abbey of the same name, the richest and most powerful of all the Scottish abbeys, and which still contained one hundred monks in 1542, when it was destroyed by the Reformers. — MORTON'S Monastic Annals of Teriotdale; Edin. 1832, folio. WADE'S History of St. Mary's Abbey, Melrose, 1861, Edin.

⁷⁰ Boisil, first prior of Melrose, whose name is preserved in the neighboring village of Newtown St. Boswell's; Eata, first abbot of Melrose, then bishop of Lindisfarne; and especially the celebrated and popular Cuthbert, of whom more anon.

⁷¹ See preceding chapter, p. 239.

to cross the sea and visit the distant island which was the cradle of their bishops and missionaries — not the monastic isle of Iona, but the great island of Ireland, where Columba and most of his disciples were born. Of these young Anglo-Saxons, some, inflamed with the love of study or of penance, at once enrolled themselves in the crowded ranks of those great Irish communities where the monks were counted by hundreds and even by thousands; others travelled from monastery to monastery, from cell to cell, seeking the masters who suited them best, and giving themselves up under these masters to the delight of reading — that is to say, of study, without binding themselves by any other obligation. All were received with magnificent hospitality by the Scots of Ireland, who freely lavished on them not only food and clothing but books and instruction.⁷² All the students who remained in Ireland, as well as those who returned to England, continued to retain a natural prepossession in favor of the ancient insular rites, and to be imbued with that peculiar spirit which so long characterized the Christianity of the Celtic races.

Thus began, under the most honorable conditions, and motives as pure as they were generous, the first historical relations between England and Ireland — between the two races, Saxon and Celtic, who were destined by an unhappy mystery to tear one another in pieces even before religion divided them; one of whom, repaying these early benefits by the blackest ingratitude, has long tarnished the lustre of her glory by the perverse stubbornness of her despotism.

The convents of Northumbria. While so many young Northumbrians, as yet scarcely escaped from the darkness of idolatry, were thus rushing towards the very heights of ascetic life, or plunging with passionate enthusiasm into the studious and learned career of which Ireland was the great centre, and the Celtic cloisters the principal home, their sisters found asylums where peace and freedom were guaranteed to those whom the service of God and the vows of Christian virginity drew into them. Thanks to the solicitude of the missionary bishops of the line of Columba, the dignity, authority, and moral power which universal report from Tacitus downward agrees in according to the Germanic woman, assumes in the cloister a new, more durable, and universal form, without, however, lessening the duty and right which she was acknowledged to possess of occasional intervention in the gravest concerns and most solemn deliberations of the commonwealth.

⁷² See the text of Bede (iii. 27) already quoted, p. 126.

The principal monasteries destined to afford a home and stronghold to the noble daughters of the conquering Saxons were established on the coast of Northumbria, where already Bamborough and Lindisfarne, the military and the religious capitals of the country, were planted, as if the waves of that sea which their warlike ancestors had crossed, and which flowed direct from the coasts of Germany to beat upon the shores of the conquered island, were to be their safeguard against the dangers of the future. The first of these monasteries was built on the borders of Deira and Bernicia, on a wooded promontory where the deer then found a covert, and which has since become, under the name of Hartlepool, one of the most frequented ports on the coast.⁷³ It was founded by a Northumbrian, Heia by name, the first woman of her race who embraced conventual life, and who received the veil and religious consecration from the hands of Bishop Aidan.⁷⁴ The life of a community, and especially the functions of superior, soon, however, became fatiguing to Heia, who betook herself to a solitary retreat in the interior of the country. Aidan replaced her by a descendant of Odin and of Ella, a princess of the blood-royal and of the Deirian dynasty. This was Hilda, grand-niece of Edwin, the first Christian king of Northumbria, and father of the queen who shared the throne and the bed of Oswy.

Hartle-
pool.
About 645.

Aidan gives the veil to
the first Northum-
brian nun,
then to the Princess
Hilda.
649.

This illustrious lady seemed to be called by her genius and character even more than her rank to exercise a great and legitimate authority over her compatriots. Born in exile, during the sovereignty of Ethelfrid, among the Saxons of the West, where her mother died a violent death, she had returned with her father on the restoration of his race in 617. In her early youth she had been baptized, with her uncle King Edwin, by the Roman missionary Paulinus, which did not, however, prevent her from leaning during her whole life to the side of the Celtic missionaries. Before consecrating her virginity to God, she had lived thirty-three years very nobly, says Bede, among her family and her fellow-citizens. When she understood that God called her, she desired to make to Him a complete sacrifice, and forsook at once the world, her family, and her country.⁷⁵ She went into East Anglia, the king of which had married her sister, and whence she designed to cross over to France, in order to take the veil either at Chelles, where her widowed sister was one day to devote herself to God,⁷⁶ or in some of the monasteries on the shores of the Marne, which sprang from the great Irish colony of Luxeuil, and whither the Saxon virgins already began to resort.⁷⁷ She spent a whole year in preparations for her final exile, but she was not permitted to carry it out. Bishop Aïdan authoritatively recalled her to her own country, and settled her there, obtaining for her a small estate sufficient to support a single family, and situated on the banks of the Wear, a little river which has now become, like the Tyne, one of the greatest arteries of English shipping.

⁷³ "Heruteu, id est, insula cervi." — BEDE, iii. 24. Hert or hart, stag; eu, isle. We shall take leave throughout to use the modern names of towns and monasteries instead of the Saxon names, which divers erudite modern writers have tried to reintroduce. We shall then say Whitby and not Streaneschalch. Hartlepool and not Heruten, Hexham and not Halgulstadt.

⁷⁴ "Quæ prima feminarum fertur in provincia Nordanhymbrorum propositum vestemque sanctimonialis habitus, consecrante Aidano episcopo, suscepisse." — BEDE, iv. 23. It will be seen farther on whether it is possible to adopt the common opinion which confounds this first Northumbrian nun with St. Bega (St. Bees), the Irish princess, who is mentioned at another place.

Hilda,
Abbess of Hartlepool.
649.

There she lived as a nun with a very few companions until Aïdan summoned her to replace the foundress of the Monastery of Hartlepool, where she was invested with the government of a large community.⁷⁸

⁷⁵ "Desiderans exinde, si quo modo posset, derelicta patria et omnibus quæcunque habuerat, in Galliam pervenire. . . . Quo facilius perpetuam in cœlis patriam posset mereri." — BEDE, iv. 23.

⁷⁶ Bede seems to imply that Hereswintha, Queen of East Anglia, was already a nun at Chelles, when Hilda wished to take the veil there; which would be an impossibility, as Hilda became Abbess of Hartlepool before Aïdan's death in 651, and her sister could scarcely take the vows before the death of her husband, King Anna, slain in 654. It is then to the close of Hilda's cloister life that Bede's words must apply: "In eodem monasterio soror ipsius Hereswid . . . regularibus subdita disciplinis ipso tempore coronam expectabat æternam." — Cf. THOMAS ELIENSIS, ap. WHARTON, Anglia Sacra, t. i. p. 595. Besides, the Monastery of Chelles, which a vague tradition refers to St. Clotilda, was actually founded by the Saxon Bathilda, and she became Queen of Neustria only on her marriage with Clovis II. in 649. Some uncertainty, farther, rests on this Heriswida. Pagi (Critic. in Baronium ad an. 680) maintains that she became a nun in 647 — seven years before her husband's death. Various English historians give her for husband, not Anna, but one of the brothers of that prince, Ethelher or Edrie.

⁷⁷ See vol i. p. 614.

⁷⁸ The original monastery of Hartlepool, destroyed in the ninth century, like all others on the Northumbrian coast, by the Danes, was not restored, but replaced later by a convent of Franciscans. An ancient church, dedicated to St. Hilda, still exists, near which excavations carried on between

Nine years later, when the peace and freedom of Northumbria had been secured by the final victory gained by King Oswy over the Mercians, Hilda took advantage of a gift of land sufficient for ten families, which that prince had granted her, to establish a new monastery at Streaneshalch, now Whitby, a little to the south of her ancient abbey, and on the same coast.

Then
foundress
of Whitby.
658.

Of all the sites chosen by monastic architects, after that of Monte Cassino I know none grander and more picturesque than that of Whitby. It is even, in certain aspects, still more imposing than the Benedictine capital, as being near the sea. The Esk, which flows through a hilly country, unlike the ordinary levels of England, forms at its mouth a circular bay, commanded on every side by lofty cliffs. On the summit of one of these rocks, 300 feet above the sea, Hilda placed her monastery, on a platform of green and short seaside turf, the sides of which slope abruptly to the northern ocean. From this spot the eye wanders now over the uplands, valleys, and vast heaths of this part of Yorkshire, now along the rough precipices which line the coast, now on the wide horizon of the sea, whose foaming waves break against the perpendicular sides of the great rocky wall which is crowned by the monastery. The dull roar of the tide accords with the sombre tints of the rocks, which are rent and hollowed out by its force; for it is not here, as on the shores of the channel, where the whiteness of the cliffs has gained the name of Albion for the island of Great Britain. The precipices of the Yorkshire coast are, on the contrary, as dark in color as they are abrupt and rugged in outline.⁷⁹ Nothing now remains of the Saxon monastery: but more than half of the abbey church, restored by the Percies in the time of the Normans, still stands, and enables the marvelling spectator to form to himself an idea of the solemn grandeur

1833 and 1843 brought to light several Anglo-Saxon tombs, with the emblems and names of women — Hildithryth, Hildigyth, Canngyth, Berchtgyd, Bregusvid — which seem to have been those of nuns of the Anglo-Saxon community. The last of these names is that of the mother of Hilda, and several of the others are found in the correspondence of St. Boniface with the Saxon nuns. This discovery has given rise to an interesting work, without date or author's name, entitled Notes on the History of St. Bege and St. Hild. Hartlepool.

⁷⁹ Not so the rocks which border the inner bay formed by the embouchure of the Esk. They are of a brilliant white, and these bright cliffs in the midst of the great black rocks of the coast explain why the Danes, after having destroyed the monastery of Hilda, gave the name of Whitby (Whiteby, white dwelling) to the establishment they created there.

of the great edifice. The choir and the north transept are still complete, and offer one of the most beautiful models of English architecture. The two façades of the east and north each with three rows of three-pointed windows, are of unrivalled elegance and purity. The beautiful color of the stone, half worn away by the sea-winds, adds to the charm of these ruins. A more picturesque effect could not be imagined than that of the distant horizon of the azure sea, viewed through the great hollow eyes of the ruinous arches. These majestic relics are now preserved with the respect habitually shown by the English to the monuments of the past ; but they cannot always withstand the destroying action of time and the elements. The great central tower fell in 1830. Let the intelligent traveller lose no time, therefore, in visiting one of the oldest and most beautifully situated ruins in Europe, and let him there accord a prayer, or at least a remembrance, to the noble daughter of the Northumbrian kings, who of old erected on this desert rock a pharos of light and peace for the souls of men, by the side of the lighthouse designed to guide the mariners on that stormy sea !⁸⁰

The original name, Streaneshalch, signified The Isle of the Beacon, and it was probably by this service conferred on the people of the coast that Hilda inaugurated her reign on this promontory, for it was a true reign, temporal as well as spiritual. At Whitby, as at Hartlepool, and during the thirty years that she passed at the head of her two houses, she displayed a rare capacity for the government of souls, and for the consolidation of monastic institutions. This special aptitude, joined to her love of monastic regularity, and her zeal for knowledge and ecclesiastical discipline, gave her an important part to play, and great influence. Her society was sought by Bishop Aïdan, and all the religious who knew her, that they might learn those secrets of divine love and natural wisdom which dwelt

Her reign of thirty years.

⁸⁰ The principal details of this monastic church, which is of the beautiful order known as the Early English, are perfectly rendered in the magnificent folio published by Edmund Sharpe, an architect, and entitled Architectural Parallels selected from Abbey Churches, London, 1848, 121 plates. It was 300 feet long by 70 broad. It is marked by one curious peculiarity ; it describes a curve, slightly bending towards the south, so that the door in the western façade is not in an exact line with the central window of the choir. These ruins are now part of a farm belonging to Sir Richard Cholmondeley. The town of Whitby, situated at the foot of these ruins, on the Esk, is a very flourishing seaport, and much frequented by bathers.

in her. The kings even, and princes of her blood, or of the adjacent provinces, often came to consult her, asking enlightenment which they afterwards joyfully acknowledged themselves to have received. But she did not reserve for the great ones of the earth the treasures of her judgment and charity. She scattered around her everywhere the benefits of justice, piety, peace, and temperance. She was ere long regarded and honored as the mother of her country, and all who addressed her gave her the sweet name of mother, which she so well deserved. Not only in Northumbria, but in distant regions, to which the fame of her virtue and enlightenment had penetrated, she was to many the instrument of their salvation and conversion.⁸¹ And in her two communities especially she secured, during a rule of more than thirty years, the supremacy of order, union, charity, and equality, so much, that it became usual to say to the proud Northumbrians, that the image of the primitive Church, wherein was neither rich nor poor, and where all was common among the Christians, was realized at Whitby.

But the most touching particular of all in the enthusiastic narrative of the venerable Bede, is that which proves the passionate tenderness felt for her by her daughters, especially by the young virgins whom she prepared for religious life in a separate house, by the discipline of a novitiate establishment regularly constituted and attentively superintended.⁸²

Nor did the royal abbess confine herself to the government of a numerous community of nuns. According to a usage then very general, but principally prevailing in Celtic countries, a monastery was joined to the nunnery. And Hilda inspired the monks subject to her authority with so great a devotion to their rule, so true a love of sacred literature, and so careful a study of the Scriptures, that this monastery, ruled by a woman, became a true school of missionaries, and even of bishops.⁸³ Many ecclesiastical dignitaries, as remarkable for their virtue as for their learning, were sent forth by it; ⁸⁴ one of whom in particular, St. John of Beverly, attained a degree of popularity rare even in England, where the saints were of old so universally and so readily popular.

⁸¹ "Quam omnes qui noverant, ob insigne pietatis et gratiæ Matrem vocare consueverant . . . nam et episcopus Aidan et quique noverant eam religiosi pro insita et sapientia et amore divini famulatus, sedulo eam visitare . . . solebant. . . . Regularis vitæ institutioni multum intenta. . . . Tantæ autem erat ipsa prudentiæ, ut non solum mediocres in necessitatibus suis, sed etiam reges ac principes nonnunquam ab ea quærerent consilium et invenirent. . . . Quam omnes qui noverant, ob insigne pietatis et gratiæ Matrem vocare consueverant. . . . Etiam plurimis longe manentibus ad quos felix industriæ ac virtutis ejus rumor pervenit, occasionem salutis et correctionis ministravit."

⁸² "Cuidam virginum . . . quæ illam immenso amore diligebat. . . . In extremis monasterii locis scorsum posita ubi nuper venientes ad conversionem feminæ solebant probari, donec regulariter institutæ in societatem congregationis susciperentur."

But neither the kings nor princes who consulted the great abbess on her sea-girt promontory, nor the bishops, nor even the saints nurtured in her school, occupy in the annals of the human mind, or in the learned researches of our contemporaries, a place comparable to that held by an old cowherd who lived on the lands belonging to Hilda's community, and whose memory is inseparably connected with hers. It is on the lips of this cowherd that the Anglo-Saxon speech first bursts into poetry, and nothing in the whole history of European literature is more original or more religious than this first utterance of the English muse. His name was Ceadmon. He had already reached an advanced age, having spent his life in his humble occupation, without even learning music, or being able to join in the joyous choruses which held such a high place at the feasts and social gatherings of all classes, both poor and rich, among the Anglo-Saxons as among the Celts. When it was his turn to sing at any of these festal meetings, and the harp was handed to him, his custom was to rise from table and go home. One evening, when he had thus withdrawn from his friends, he went back to his humble shed and went to sleep by the side of his cattle. During his slumber he heard a voice, which called him by name, and said to him, "Sing me something;" to which he replied, "I cannot sing, and that is why I have left the supper and come here." "Sing, notwithstanding," said the voice. "But what, then, shall I sing?" "Sing the beginning of the world; the creation." Immediately on receiving this command, he began to sing verses, of which before he had no knowledge, but which celebrated the glory and power of the Creator, the eternal God, worker of all marvels, father of the human race, who had given to the sons of men the heavens for their roof, and the ⁸³ "Tantum lectioni divinarum Scripturarum suos vacare subditos . . . faciebat, ut facillime viderentur ibidem qui ecclesiasticum gradum, hoc est, altaris officium apte subirent, plurimi posse reperiri." — BEDE, iv. 23.

⁸⁴ Bede names six with the highest eulogies — "Quinque episcopos omnes singularis meriti ac sanctitatis viros. . . . Vir strenuissimus et doctissimus, atque excellentis ingenii vocabulo Tatfrid, de ejusdem abbatissæ monasterio electus."

earth for their dwelling-place. On awaking, he recollected all that he had sung in his dream, and hastened to tell all that had happened to him to the farmer in whose service he was.⁸⁵

The Abbess Hilda, when the story was repeated to her, called for Ceadmon and questioned him in the presence of all the learned men whom she could assemble around her. He was made to relate his vision and repeat his songs, and then different passages of sacred history and various points of doctrine were explained to him, that he might put them into verse. The next morning he was again called, and immediately began to recite all that had been told him, in verses which were pronounced to be excellent. He was thus discovered all at once to possess the gift of improvisation in his mother tongue. Hilda and her learned assessors did not hesitate to recognize in this a special gift of God worthy of all respect and of the most tender care. She received Ceadmon and his whole family within the monastic community of Whitby, and afterwards admitted him to the number of monks who were under her rule, and made him carefully translate the whole Bible into Anglo-Saxon. As soon, accordingly, as the sacred history and the gospel were narrated to him, he made himself master of the tale, ruminated it, as Bede said, as a clean animal ruminates its food, and transformed it into songs so beautiful that all who listened to him were delighted.⁸⁶ He thus put into verse the whole of Genesis and Exodus, with other portions of the Old Testament, and afterwards the life and passion of our Lord and the Acts of the Apostles.

His talent and his poetic faculty thus went on day by day to fuller development, and he devoted numerous songs to such subjects as were best calculated to induce his companions to forsake evil and love and practise the good: the terrors of the last judgment, the pains of hell, the joys of paradise, the action of Divine Providence in the world—all these great and momentous subjects were in their turn woven into his verse. The fragments that remain enable us to estimate the earnest and impassioned inspiration, strongly Christian and profoundly original, which characterized these first efforts of genius, barbarous, but subdued and baptized.

⁸⁵ "Nonnunquam in convivio cum esset lætitiæ causa decretum ut omnes per ordinem cantare deberent, ille ubi abpropinquare sibi citharam eernebat, surgebat a media cœna. . . . Dum relicta domo convivii egressus esset, ab stabula jumentorum . . . ibique membra dedisset sopori. Cædmon, canta mihi aliquid . . . at ille: Nescio cantare. . . . Canta principium creaturarum." — BEDE, iv. 24.

⁸⁶ "Ipse cuncta, quæ audiendo discere poterat, rememorando secum et quasi mundum animal ruminando in carmen dulcissimum convertebat; suaviusque resonando doctores suos vicissim auditores suos faciebat."

The precursor of Milton.

The Northumbrian cowherd, transformed into a monk of Whitby, sang before the abbess Hilda the revolt of Satan and Paradise Lost a thousand years earlier than Milton, in verses which may still be admired even beside the immortal poem of the British Homer.⁸⁷ Notwithstanding Bede's assertion that poetry cannot be translated from one language to another without losing its honor and dignity, we shall borrow from the nervous pen of one of our contemporaries a translation which conveys a just idea of the sombre and wild genius of this truly biblical poet.⁸⁸ "Why," says Satan, speaking of God, "should I implore His favor, or bow myself before Him with obedience? I can be a god like Him. Up with me, brave companions who will not fail me in the struggle? brave-hearted warriors who have chosen me for your chief! illustrious soldiers! With such warriors, in truth, one can choose a side; with such combatants one can seize a post. They are my zealous friends, faithful in the warmth of their hearts. I can, as their chief, govern in this kingdom; I have no need to flatter any one; I will be His subject no more!"

He is vanquished, and hurled into the city of exile — into the abode of groans and hatred — into the hideous eternal night, the darkness of which is broken by smoke and crimson flames. "Is this," he says, "the narrow spot in which my master shuts me up? How different from the dwellings that we know on high in the kingdom of heaven! Oh! if I had the free power of my hands, and if I could issue forth for once, for one winter only, I and my army! But bands of iron ⁸⁷ This fragment of Ceadmon's poem on the revolt of Satan, discovered by Archbishop Usher, and printed for the first time in 1655, has been preserved, and frequently published since that date. It has been republished with learned annotations by Dr. Bouterweck, De Cedmone poeta Anglo-Saxonum vetustissimo brevis Dissertatio, at Elberfeld, 1845. Sir F. Palgrave, one of the most competent critics of English history and literature, justly remarks that there are in this fragment passages so like the Paradise Lost that some of Milton's lines read like an almost literal translation. There was an interval of a thousand years between them, Ceadmon dying about 680, and Milton in 1674. Compare SHARON TURNER's History of the Anglo-Saxons, l. iv. c. 3.

⁸⁸ "Neque enim possunt carmina, quamvis optime composita, ex alia in aliam linguam ad verbum sine detrimento sui decoris ac dignitatis transferri."

surround me — chains bind me down helpless. I am without a kingdom. The fetters of hell shackle me so firmly, clasp me so tightly! Here are huge flames; above and below I have never seen so horrible a place. The fire never languishes — its heat ascends above hell. The rings that encircle me, the manacles that gnaw my flesh, keep me from advancing, and close the way before me; my feet are tied, my hands imprisoned. Thus has God shut me in." Since nothing can be done against Him, it is against His own creature, man, that the enemy must turn. To him who has lost all, revenge is still left; and in securing that, the vanquished may yet be happy and rest placidly even under the weight of the chains with which he is laden.⁸⁹

It would, however, be a totally mistaken idea to recognize in the Abbess Hilda's dependant nothing but a poet or literary pioneer; he was above all a primitive Christian, a true monk, and, in one word, a saint.⁹⁰ His mind was mild and humble, simple and pure; he served God with tranquil devotion, grateful for the extraordinary grace that he had received from heaven. But he was so full of zeal for monastic regularity that he opposed with great vehemence the transgressors of the rule — an error for which he seems to have felt some compunctions at the very point of death. No frivolous or worldly subjects ever inspired his verse; he composed his songs only that they might be useful to the soul, and their solemn beauty did even more for the conversion than for the delight of his countrymen. Many were moved by them to despise this world, and to turn with ardent love to the divine life. Many Englishmen after him, says Bede, have tried to compose religious poems; but no one has ever equalled the man who had only God for his master.⁹¹

⁸⁹ This translation is borrowed from L'Histoire de la Littérature Anglaise, by M. Taine. The author of that work, in which so much talent is mixed up with so many lamentable errors, says very justly of Ceadmon: "Thus is true poetry born. . . . It does but repeat, over and over, one passionate burden. These are the songs of the ancient servants of Odin, now tonsured and wrapt in a monk's frock. Their poetry remains unchanged. They think of God, as of Odin, in a succession of images, brief, crowded, impassioned, like successive flashes of lightning. The Satan of Milton exists in that of Ceadmon as a picture exists in a sketch, for both derive their picture from the race, and Ceadmon has found his materials in the warriors of the North, as Milton in the Puritans."

⁹⁰ The Bollandists have devoted a special article to him (vol. ii. Feb., p. 552), De S. Cedmono, cantore theodidacto; but they make no material addition to what we learn from Bede.

⁹¹ "Erat vir multum religiosus et regularibus disciplinis humiliter subditus. . . . Quadam divina gratia specialiter insignis. . . . Quicquid ex

His gentle
death.
About 680.

He died as poets seldom die. At the very beginning of his illness he desired his bed to be made in that part of the infirmary which was assigned to the dying, and while smiling and talking cheerfully with his brethren, asked for the viaticum. At the moment when he was about to administer the communion to himself, according to the usage of the period, and while holding in his hands the holy eucharist, he asked all those who were round him if any one had any grudge against him, or any complaint to make. All answered, No. Then said he, "I too, my children, have a mind at peace with all God's servants." A little after he had made his communion, as they were about to awaken the monks for matins, he made the sign of the cross, laid his head on the pillow, and fell asleep in silence, to awake no more.⁹²

Apart from the interest which attaches to Ceadmon from a historical and literary point of view, his life discloses to us essential peculiarities in the outward organization and intellectual life of those great communities which in the seventh century studded the coast of Northumbria, and which, with all their numerous dependants, found often a more complete development under the crosier of such a woman as Hilda than under superiors of the other sex. It is apparent that admission to the benefits of monastic protection and shelter was not confined to isolated monks, but was extended to whole families.⁹³ And the example of Hilda also discloses how earnest was the desire of the superiors of monasteries to instruct the ignorant masses, and to familiarize them, by instruction in the vulgar tongue, or by poetic paraphrases, with Holy Scripture and Christian doctrine.

divinis litteris per interpretes disceret hoc ipse post pusillum. . . . Verbis poeticis maxima suavitate et compunctione compositis in sua, id est, Anglorum, lingua proferret. . . . Alii post illum in gente Anglorum religiosa poemata facere tentabant, sed ei nullus equiparari potuit: non ab hominibus . . . sed divinitus adjutus gratis canendi donum accepit. . . . Unde nihil unquam frivoli et supervacui poematis facere potuit; sed ea tantummodo quæ ad religionem pertinent. . . . Simplici ac pura mente tranquillaque devotione Domino servierat." — BEDE, l. c.

⁹² "In proxima casa, in qua infirmiores et qui prope morituri esse videbantur, induci solebant. . . . Cum ibidem positus vicissim aliquo gaudente animo, una cum eis qui ibidem ante inerant, loqueretur et jocaretur. . . . Et tamen, ait, afferte mihi eucharistiam. Qua accepta in manu, interrogavit si omnes placidum erga se animum et sine querela controversiæ ac rancoris haberent. . . . Sicque se cælesti muniens viatico . . . reclinavit caput ad cervical, modicumque obdormiens, ita cum silentio vitam finivit."

⁹³ "Susceptum in monasterium cum omnibus suis fratrum cohorti adsociavit." — BEDE, l. c.

Whitby, with its lighthouse and its great monastery, was the most southerly place of refuge on that Northumbrian coast, still so formidable to sailors, which at that time was lined with so many sanctuaries. At the northern extremity of the same coast, beyond Lindisfarne, on what is now the frontier of Scotland, at Coldingham, rose also, as at Whitby, two monasteries — the one for men and the other for women — both founded and governed by one abbess. While Hilda, the Deirian princess, ruled her monasteries on the shores of her father's kingdom, Ebba, a princess of the rival dynasty, granddaughter of Ida the Burner, daughter of Ethelfrid the Ravager, but sister of the sainted King Oswald, and of Oswy the reigning king, formed on the sea-coast of Bernicia another manastic centre, which was yet to hold an important position, and to work out a stormy history. It had been the intention of her brother to give her in marriage to the king of Scots — a union meant undoubtedly to strengthen or to re-establish the alliance of the restored family of Ethelfrid with the Scottish dynasty which had offered the exiles such generous hospitality during the reign of Edwin, the chief of the race by which they had been exiled. Ebba, however, was obstinately opposed to this marriage. Her family had all embraced, during their banishment, the principles of the Christian faith, and it was now her desire to advance to the practice of the counsels of the Gospel. It was not from the hands of Aīdan, but from those of Finan, his successor at Lindisfarne, that she received the veil:⁹⁴ Oswy left her at liberty to devote herself to God, and gave her a piece of land on the banks of the Derwent where she might found her first monastery, which received the name of Ebba's Castle.⁹⁵ But the principal scene of her activities was Coldingham, in a situation which she seems to have chosen in emulation of that of Whitby. Her great and famous monastery was built, not on the spot now called by her name,⁹⁶ but on the summit of an isolated promontory which still bears the title of St. Abb's Head, or Cape, and which abruptly terminates the range of the Lammermoors, thrusting itself out into the German Ocean. From this headland, or rather precipice, which rises perpen-

Ebba, princess of Bernicia, becomes Abbess of Coldingham.

⁹⁴ Act. SS. Bolland., vol. v. August, p. 197.

⁹⁵ Ebbæ-Castrum, whence Ebbchester, a village in the county of Durham.

⁹⁶ It owes this name to a priory founded by a colony of monks from Durham in 1098, and very richly endowed by the kings of Scotland.

dicularly for more than 500 feet from the level of the sea, the view embraces, on the north, the Scotch coast to the farther side of the Forth, and, on the south, the English coast as far as the holy isle of Lindisfarne and the royal acropolis of Bamborough. A small ruined chapel is all that remains to mark the site of the great sanctuary of Ebba, who was, like Hilda, placed at the head of a double community of men and of women, and presided over the religious life of northern Northumbria with no less success, and for an equal length of time, taking her part, also during nearly thirty years, with no less authority in the affairs of her country.⁹⁷

She also reigns for thirty years 650-683.

She did not always succeed, however, in maintaining amongst her daughters the fervor and the regularity of which she herself gave an example. That relaxation of discipline from which, by a mysterious and terrible judgment of God, the religious orders have never been able to preserve themselves, and which was destined to invade so speedily the Anglo-Saxon cloisters, made its way into Coldingham even

Disorders noted in the community of Coldingham, by
the monk
Adamnan.

during the lifetime of the foundress. She was warned of this by a holy priest of her community who had come from Ireland with the other Celtic missionaries, and who was called Adamnan, like the historian and successor of Columba at Iona. As he went with the abbess through the vast and lofty buildings which she had erected upon her promontory, he said to her with tears, "All that you see here, so beautiful and so grand, will soon be laid in ashes." And as the astonished princess exclaimed against his prophecy, "Yes," continued he; "I have seen in my vigils an unknown one who has revealed to me all the evil that is done in this house, and the punishment that is prepared for it. He has told me that he has visited each cell and each bed, and that everywhere he has found the monks and the nuns either wrapt in a shameful sleep, or awake to do evil. These cells, intended for prayer or for study, are made use of sometimes for irregular repasts, sometimes for senseless gossip and other frivolities. The virgins consecrated to God, employ their leisure in weaving garments of excessive fineness, either to attire themselves as if they were the brides of men, or to bestow them on strangers. For this the vengeance of heaven will

⁹⁷ "Sanctimonialis femina et mater ancillarum Christi, nomine Ebba, regens monasterium . . . religione pariter et nobilitate cunctis honorabilis."
—BEDE, Vita S. Cuthberti, c. 10.

send fire to consume the place and chastise its inhabitants." It is evident that these scandals were not by any means so serious as many that occurred elsewhere and at a later period; but in the midst of the general fervor of the new Christians of England they seemed to deserve fire from heaven. Ebba, thus warned, did what she could to amend the state of affairs, and the fire which devastated for the first time her great community did not break out till after her death.⁹⁸

It is right to give this incident with some minuteness, for it is the only symptom of decay which we have discovered in the period. With this one exception, no cloud, of which history has preserved any record, obscures the renown of the regular clergy of Northumbria. The universal admiration won for the monastic capital of Lindisfarne by the regularity, the fervor, and the extraordinary austerity of its numerous inhabitants, is proved by all witnesses as with one voice. Their fasts, which came to them by tradition and obligation from Ireland, excited special wonder—fasts very much more meritorious in that raw, damp climate, than those of the fathers of the desert under the burning sky of the East, and which contrasted strangely with the habitual voracity of the Anglo-Saxons, whose sons began to people Lindisfarne and its dependencies. In Ireland the Cenobites, and especially the Anchorites, frequently lived on bread and water alone.⁹⁹ Two centuries later, a German¹⁰⁰ monk related to his wondering countrymen that the usage of the Scotie monks who inhabited Ire-

Fervor and austerity of the North-
umbrian
monks.

⁹⁸ "Cuncta hæc quæ cernis ædificia publica vel privata, in proximo est ut ignis absumens in cinerem convertat. . . . Singulorum casas ac lectos inspexi . . . omnes et viri et feminae aut somno torpent inerti, aut ad peccata vigilant. Nam et domunculæ quæ ad orandum vel legendum factæ erant, nunc in commissationum, potationum, fabulationum et cæterarum sunt illecebrarum cubilia conversæ, virgines . . . quotiescunque vacant, texendis subtilioribus indumentis operam dant. . . . Post obitum abbatissæ redierunt ad pristinas sordes, immo scelerationa fecerunt."—BEDE, iv. 25. Honest Bede, always so careful in stating the source of his narratives, does not fail to tell us that he had these details from a priest of Coldingham, who, after the fire, fled for refuge to the Monastery of Yarrow, in which the author of the Ecclesiastical History of the English composed his work. Let us add that regular discipline was promptly re-established in Ebba's monastery, and that in the following century, at the invasion of the Danes in 870, the nuns, in order that they might not attract the passion of these barbarians, cut off their noses and lips; thus, in saving their honor, winning the glory of martyrdom.

⁹⁹ BEDE, v. 12.

¹⁰⁰ RATRAMNUS CORBEIENSIS, Contra Græcos, lib. iv.

land was to fast all the year round, except on Sundays and feast-days, and never to eat before nones or vespers. Bishop Aïdan induced all the communities of monks and nuns in Northumbria to adopt the fast which he observed himself—namely, to eat nothing before nones on the Wednesdays and Fridays of every week, except those between Easter and Pentecost.¹⁰¹ At Lindisfarne, for more than a century, wine and beer were totally unknown; and the first relaxation of this severity was introduced in favor of a king of Northumbria who became a monk there in 737.¹⁰²

Elsewhere these customs were improved upon by still more notable austerities. At Coldingham, the Adamnan of whom we recently spoke, expiated a youthful fault by taking food only twice a-week, on Sundays and Thursdays, while, at the same time, he often passed the whole night in vigils. He adopted this system from remorse and fear of God, but the love of God at last transformed it into a delight.¹⁰³ At

Melrose, a monk was held in veneration who, having fallen into a trance, had one of those visions of heaven and hell which made many of the Celtic monks persecutors of Dante. It was his custom to plunge into the waters of the Tweed which flowed by the monastery, to pray there, and that even when the river was covered with ice, which he had to break before he could enter the stream. "Brother Drychthelme," some one called to him from the bank, "how can you bear such cold?" "I have seen it harder and colder," he quietly answered.¹⁰⁴

When a new monastery was to be founded, the Celtic missionaries and the monks trained in their school thought they could not better inaugurate it than by redoubling their fervor and austerity. The son of the sainted King Oswald, who held a kind of provincial royalty in Deira, determined to establish a monastery where he might hear the word of God, and, above all, where he

¹⁰¹ BEDE, iii. 5.

¹⁰² ROGER HOVEDEN, ap. LINGARD, i. 227.

¹⁰³ "Quod causa divini timoris semel ob reatum compunctus cœperat, jam causa divini amoris delectatus præmiis indefessus agebat."—BEDE, iv. 25.

¹⁰⁴ "De fluentibus circa eum semifractorum crustis glacierum, quas et ipse contriverat quo haberet locum standi sive immergendi in fluvio. . . . Mirum, frater Drychthelme, quod tantam frigoris asperitatem ultra rationem tolerare prævalet. . . . Frigidiora ego vidi . . . austeriora ego vidi."—BEDE, v. 12. Bede is careful to mention, as he always does when he relates his marvels, that he has the story from a certain Irish monk, who, as well as the wise Northumbrian King Aldfrid, had often visited and conversed with this Drychthelme.

might be buried, and be benefited after his death by the powerful help of the prayers of those who served God in that place. For this purpose he applied to a monk of Lindisfarne, who had become a missionary bishop among the Saxons of the East, persuading him to accept one of his estates as an endowment. This man of God — Cedd by name — chose a spot among the mountains as difficult of access as possible, and which seemed fit rather for the haunt of bandits or wild beasts than of men. He then proceeded to purify the spot he had selected by prayer and fasting, and asked leave from the king to remain there in prayer the whole of Lent. During this retreat he fasted every day except Sunday till evening, and then took only a little bread, an egg, and some milk and water. Such, said he, was the custom of those from whom he had learnt the rules of monastic discipline; ¹⁰⁵ and such was the beginning of the Monastery of Lastingham, between York and Whitby, which was established on the model of Lindisfarne. We shall hereafter see its abbots holding an honorable place in the annals of the Church of England. ¹⁰⁶

Let us quote once more, in evidence of the virtues of the monks and bishops who converted the north of England, the unquestionable testimony of the celebrated historian, who was at once their adversary and their successor, but who, notwithstanding his dislike, and his strangely exaggerated description of their special peculiarities, yet rendered to the services and virtues of the Celtic missionaries that signal homage which generous hearts delight to accord to the vanquished whom they honor. "The greatness of their disinterestedness and self-denial was very apparent," says Bede, "after their retreat." At Lindisfarne and elsewhere they had only such buildings as were absolutely necessary for existence and decency. ¹⁰⁷ They had neither money nor cattle: what the rich gave them they immediately distributed to the poor. They did not consider themselves bound to receive with

Testimony
borne by Bede to the virtues
of the Celtic missionaries.

¹⁰⁵ "Ne tunc quidem nisi panis permodicum, et unum ovum gallinaceum cum parvo lacte aquæ mixto percipiebat. Dicebat hanc esse consuetudinem eorum a quibus normam disciplinæ regularis didicerat. . . . Expleto studio jejuniorum et orationis, fecit ibi monasterium . . . et religiosis moribus, juxta ritus Lindisfarmensium ubi educatus erat, instituit." — BEDE, iii. 23. Whence we can see, says Fleury, that in that country neither milk, nor even eggs, were forbidden in Lent. — Hist. Eccl., l. xxxix. c. 4.

¹⁰⁶ There is still to be seen at Lastingham a beautiful church, believed to be one of the oldest in England.

¹⁰⁷ "Paucissimæ domus . . . illæ solummodo sine quibus conversatio civilis esse nullatenus poterat." — BEDE, iii. 26.

splendor the lords and nobles who came to their monasteries for the sole purposes of prayer and to hear the word of God. Kings themselves, when they came to Lindisfarne, brought no more than five or six attendants with them, and contented themselves with the ordinary fare of the brethren. These apostles desired to serve God only, and not the world — they sought to win men through the heart only, not through the stomach. Thus the monkish frock was held in great veneration. Wherever a clerk or a monk appeared he was received with welcome as a true servant of God. Those who met him by the way hastened to bow their heads before him and receive his benediction. Their discourses were listened to by attentive crowds. Every Sunday these crowds flowed into the churches of the monasteries, to gather there the seed of life. As soon as a priest appeared in a village, all the inhabitants clustered round him begging him to preach to them. The priests and clerks travelled through the country only to preach, to baptize, to visit the sick, to save souls. They were so entirely free from all desire of gain, that the princes and nobles had to force them to accept the lands and estates necessary for the founding of monasteries.¹⁰⁸

Opposition and resistance are not wanting.

It is not, however, to be supposed, that the conversion of Northumbria and of the six other kingdoms of the Heptarchy was carried through without hinderance and convulsions. The monastic historians have made the mistake of dwelling too lightly on the resistance and the revolts which their heroes had to encounter, and which added so much to the merit of what they achieved in the sight of God, as well as in that of man. But enough is visible to enable us easily to fill up what they have left untold. During the two centuries which separate the arrival of Augustine from the accession of Egbert, the perpetual conflict of the savage and uncontrollable nature of the Saxon kings with their new faith and the authority of the bishops and monks, is apparent. Changeable as Proteus, we see them constantly escaping by abrupt changes from all the efforts made to obtain a salutary influence over them. The king who to-day distinguished himself by the fervor of his devotions, and his munificence to the new establishments, would tomorrow abandon himself to all the debaucheries and excesses

Contrasts and uncertainty of character
among the kings,

¹⁰⁸ "Tota enim tunc fuit sollicitudo doctoribus illos, Deo serviendi, non sæculo; tota cura cordis excolendi, non ventris." — BEDE, iii. 26.

suggested, or pardoned, by heathen instinct. Others sought in the very monasteries, and among the virgins consecrated to God, a prey attractive beyond all other to their ungovernable sensuality. Intestine wars, usurpation, murder, pillage, abominable tortures, violence, and spoliation of every kind, sully at every turn the pages which have preserved to us so many pious and touching incidents. And it was And among the people. not the kings and chiefs only that were hard to win: the people presented the same difficulties, the same disappointments. In vain the holy bishops and monks, produced so rapidly and in such numbers by the Saxon race, endeavored to win souls and purify them by an exhaustless charity, bestowing with free hands on the poor all the treasures that they received from the rich. Frequently the revolt was open, and the apostle of a district found himself obliged to fly into solitude or exile, there to await the dawn of better days. Sometimes an unforeseen calamity, famine or pestilence, sufficed to convulse the minds of a people, who then in a body would abjure the faith of Christ, and return to their ancient gods. On one side the monks had to struggle without intermission against old customs, which all their zeal could not avail to extirpate, — against the inveterate belief in witchcraft, against the practice of the slave trade, with all its refinements of greed and debauchery; ¹⁰⁹ while, on the other, dull resistance, murmurs, and threats accompanied the work of salvation.

On the north-east coast of England, where the Celtic missionaries had just founded such illustrious monasteries, certain tribes of the coast took vows for their destruction. Bede himself, from whom we have just borrowed so striking a picture of the popularity which surrounded them in Northumbria, forgot, in that description, various particulars which he has recorded elsewhere. It is he who tells how, when the little vessels of the monks, abroad in foul weather, ran the risk of being swamped at the mouth of the Tyne, a crowd of spectators assembled on the shore exulting in their danger, mocking at their self-devotion, and crying with savage irony — “Well done! this will teach them to live differently from everybody else. Perish the fools who would take our ancient customs from us, imposing new ones which God knows how we can observe!” ¹¹⁰

Joy of the people of the coast at seeing the monks shipwrecked.

¹⁰⁹ TURNER, op. cit., book vii. c. 9, p. 53.

¹¹⁰ “Stabat in altera amnis ripa vulgaris turba non modica . . . cœpit

Nevertheless, truth and goodness conquered everything. In the long run the humble courage and generous perseverance of the missionaries triumphed over the fury, cunning, and opposition of fallen nature in these children of barbarism. The soldiers of Christ,¹¹¹ as from that time the monks were called, remained masters of the field of battle.

CHAPTER III.

PROPAGATION OF CHRISTIANITY BY THE KINGS AND MONKS OF NORTHUMBRIA. — FINAL TRIUMPH OF NORTHUMBRIA UNDER OSWY.

Influence of the three Northumbrian Bretwaldas and their Celtic clergy on the other kingdoms of the Heptarchy.

1. East Anglia. — Vicissitudes of Christianity. — The king, converted by Edwin, is assassinated. — His brother, exiled in France, returns a convert with the missionary bishop, Felix. — The king and the bishop evangelize East Anglia. — Supposed origin of Cambridge. — The Irish monk, Fursy, assists in their work. — The visions which make him a forerunner of Dante. — King Sigebert becomes a monk; he issues from his cloister to fight, armed with a staff, against Penda; and dies on the field of battle. — A king-monk among the Cambrians perishes in the same way fighting against the Saxons. — Anna, the successor of Sigebert, is, like him, killed by Penda.
2. Wessex. — Christianity is brought hither by King Oswald and the Italian bishop, Birinus. — Oswald, son-in-law and godfather of the King of the West Saxons. — Popular verses about Birinus. — The son of the first Christian king, who had continued a heathen, and had been dethroned by Penda, is converted during exile; re-established in Wessex, he summons thither as bishop a Frank who had been educated among the Celts, but afterwards desires a bishop acquainted with Anglo-Saxon. — Foundation

irridere vitam conversationis eorum, quasi merito talia paterentur, qui communia mortalia jura spernentes, nova et ignota darent statuta vivendi. . . . Rustico et animo et ore stomachantes. . . . Nullus, inquit, hominum pro eis roget, nullus eorum misereatur Deus, et qui veteres culturas hominibus tulere, et novæ qualiter observari debeant nemo novit." — BEDE, Vita S. Cuthberti, c. 3. This anecdote refers to the time when Cuthbert, though he had reached the age of adolescence, was not yet a monk. He became a monk at fifteen. He was born in 637. It was, therefore, about 650 or 651, and exactly at the time of the great Northumbrian foundations at Hartlepool, &c.

¹¹¹ "Milites Christi." — BOLLAND., t. ii. Jun., p. 236.

of Malmesbury and of Winchester. — An English abbot at Glastonbury. — The Anglo-Saxons begin to occupy the episcopal sees. — A West Saxon becomes the first English Archbishop of Canterbury. — Ercombert, King of Kent, destroys the idols.

3. Essex. — King Oswy converts his friend Sigebert, King of Essex, baptized by Finan in the villa of the Northumbrian king. — A monk of Lindisfarne becomes Bishop of London. — The first Christian king of Essex killed by his cousin, because he is too ready to forgive. — The first bishop dies of the plague, and thirty of his friends go to die on his tomb. — Relapse of the East Saxons into idolatry. — A new king and a new bishop, educated by the Celts, bring them back to the faith.
4. Mercia. — Influence of the King of Northumbria and of the Bishop of Lindisfarne on the conversion of the Mercians. — The son of King Oswy, married to a daughter of the King of Mercia, converts the brother of his wife, and marries him to his sister. — The Celtic missionaries in Mercia. — Unexpected tolerance of the ferocious Penda towards his son and his converted subjects. But he continues his devastations in Northumbria. — Last conflict between him and Oswy. — Battle of Winwæd. — Defeat and death of Penda, the last hero of Saxon Paganism. — Oswy offers his daughter to God in acknowledgment of the victory, and founds twelve monasteries. — Final triumphs of the Northumbrians and of Christianity. — Conquest and conversion of Mercia. — Its first five bishops issue from Celtic cloisters. — Opposition of the monks of Bardeneý to the worship of St. Oswald. — The Mercians, revolting against the Northumbrians, nevertheless remain Christians.

Summary. — Of eight Anglo-Saxon kingdoms, one only is exclusively converted by the Roman missionaries; four are converted by the Celtic monks alone; and two by the combined action of the Celts and of bishops sent from Rome. — Sussex alone remains to be won, where a Celtic colony resides without influence.

FROM the cloisters of Lindisfarne, and the heart of those districts in which the popularity of ascetic pontiffs such as Aïdan, and martyr kings such as Oswald and Oswin, took day by day a deeper root, Northumbrian Christianity spread over the southern kingdoms. Whether this gradual invasion is to be attributed to the preponderating influence of the last three Bretwaldas, all Christians and Northumbrians, or simply to the expansive force of Celtic missionary labor, can never be discriminated. But what is distinctly visible is the influence of Celtic priests and missionaries everywhere replacing or seconding the Roman missionaries, and reaching districts which their predecessors had never been able to enter. The stream of the divine word thus extended itself from north to south, and its slow but certain course reached in succession all the peoples of the Heptarchy. Life and light infused themselves through all, and everywhere, along with the immaculate sacrifice, the hymns of a people freed from the yoke of idolatry rose towards the living God.

The extension of Christianity by the Celtic monks of Northumbria in the other kingdoms of the Heptarchy.

Let us state rapidly the progress of the pacific invasion made by the Celtic monks, trained in the school of the great Columba, into the Anglo-Saxon kingdoms south of the Humber.¹¹²

I.

CONVERSION OF EAST ANGLIA.

Vicissitudes of Christianity in East Anglia.

We have seen how Edwin, the first Christian Bretwalda of Northumbria, employed his influence over the country where he had spent his exile to convert the king of East Anglia. Unfortunately this first conversion had not been more durable than that of Northumbria itself under Edwin. Eorpwald, the Christian king, had been assassinated soon after his conversion,¹¹³ and this important kingdom, which comprehended so large a part of eastern England, fell back into idolatry. The singular law which made exile the cradle of the faith and the apprenticeship of royalty to so many Anglo-Saxon princes, appears among the Angles of the East as well as among those of the North. Sigebert, the brother of the murdered king, exiled in France from his youth, was there baptized, and there too had come to admire and understand monastic life. Recalled to reign over his own country, he brought thither with him at once the true faith and the life of the cloister. He was accompanied by a Burgundian bishop of the name of Felix, who placed himself under the jurisdiction of Honorius, Archbishop of Canterbury, and was by him appointed missionary bishop of the East Angles.¹¹⁴ For seventeen years this foreign bishop ¹¹² In order to a full understanding of this chapter, the maps must be consulted.

¹¹³ In preference to the chronology of Bede's annotators, I follow, as far as regards East Anglia, that of the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle, which is also adopted by the Bollandists in the Life of St. Felix (vol. i. Mart., p. 780).

¹¹⁴ The seat of this bishopric was first established at Dunwich, then, that town having been ingulfed by the sea, was transferred successively to Elmham, to Thetford, and finally to Norwich, where it still exists.

diligently sowed the seed of eternal life in his new diocese.¹¹⁵ As in Northumbria, the king and the bishop labored in concert to extend religion and also Christian instruction, for they founded several schools for the literary education of the young English, in imitation of those that Sigebert had seen in France, and which Felix provided with masters obtained from the great monastic school of Canterbury.¹¹⁶ The origin of the celebrated University of Cambridge has been attributed by many to these monastic schools. Origin of the University of Cambridge.

But they were not content to imitate Northumbria at a distance; they entered into close relations with the new Celtic mission of that kingdom. The holy bishop Aidan became the object of the respectful emulation of the Burgundian Felix, who, like him, had come from across the seas to evangelize the English, and who was encouraged in his respect for the Celtic abbot by the example of the Archbishop Honorius himself, notwithstanding Aidan's obstinate attachment to Celtic custom in respect to the celebration of Easter as opposed to the Roman usage, of which the metropolitan church of Canterbury was the natural guardian in England.¹¹⁷

Ere long a Celtic missionary appeared to assist in the joint work of the king and the bishop. This was an Irish monk, named Fursy, of very noble birth, and celebrated from his youth in his own country for his knowledge and his visions. It would be pleasant to follow the example of Bede, to pause in the tale, and leave the vicissitudes of missionary history in England, to repose ourselves for a little amidst the wonderful revelations of this famed precursor of Dante. Bede had his account of these visions from an old East Anglian monk of his community, as pious as he was truthful, who had heard the Irish saint himself recount his visions. Their character was such that this wonderful man, though but scarcely covered by a thin garment during the rude winters of that English coast, frozen by the east winds, was covered with perspiration at ¹¹⁵ "Totam illam provinciam juxta sui nominis sacramentum, a longa iniquitate atque infelicitate liberatam, ad fidem et opera justitiæ ac perpetuæ felicitatis dona perduxit." — BEDE, iii. 15.

¹¹⁶ "Ea quæ in Gallia bene disposita vidit imitari cupiens. . . . Pædagogos ac magistros juxta morem Cantuariorum." — BEDE, iii. 18. Cf. WILHEL. MALMESB.; FLORENT. WIGORN; HENRIC. HUNTINGD.; BOLLAND., t. ii. Mart., p. 781.

¹¹⁷ "Hæc dissonantia paschalis observantiæ, vivente Ædano, patienter ab omnibus tolerabatur. . . . Ab omnibus etiam qui de pascha aliter sentiebant, merito diligebatur . . . ab ipsis quoque episcopis Honorio Cantuariorum et Felice Orientalium Anglorum venerationi habitus est." — BEDE, iii. 25.

the bare recollection of the moving and frightful trances which his spirit had passed through.¹¹⁸

Fursy's
visions of the punishments of hell.

In the chief of these visions, which Ampère and Ozanam agree in regarding as one of the poetic sources of the Divina Commedia, the Irish monk was permitted to contemplate the chastisements reserved for the most abominable sins of his times. "Look," said an angel to him — "look on these four fires that consume the world: the fire of falsehood, for those who renounce the promises of their baptism; the fire of avarice, for those who prefer this world's riches to the love of Heaven; the fire of discord, for those who fear not to injure souls for trifling cause; the fire of impiety, for those who scruple not to spoil and defraud the lowly and the feeble."¹¹⁹

This Irish monk came into East Anglia, as he had gone to other countries, to serve God in preaching the Gospel; but one of his visions determined him to remain here longer than was usual to him. The eloquence of his words and the example of his virtues contributed much to the conversion of the heathen, and the confirmation of the Christians in their new faith.¹²⁰ King Sigebert received him with great respect, and gave him a large estate surrounded with wood and near the sea, where he might found a monastery. The buildings and wealth of this foundation were afterwards much augmented by the kings and nobles of East Anglia.¹²¹

At a later period, King Sigebert, who was not only a great Christian and a great philosopher for his time, but also a great warrior, harassed with the contests and troubles of his earthly royalty, resolved to occupy himself no longer with any occupation save the things of the kingdom of heaven, nor to fight except for the King Eternal.¹²² Accord-

¹¹⁸ "De nobilissimo genere Scotorum. . . . Superest adhuc frater senior monasterii nostri qui narrare solet. . . . Adjiciam quia tempus hiemis erat acerrimum et glacie constrictum, cum sedens in tenui veste vir, ita inter dicendum propter multitudinem memorati timoris vel suavitatis, quasi ut media ætatis caumate sudaverat."

¹¹⁹ "Hi sunt quatuor ignes qui mundum succendunt. . . . Tertius dissensionis, cum animos proximorum etiam in supervacuis rebus offendere non formidant. Quartus impietatis, cum infirmiores exspoliare et eis fraudem facere pronihilo ducunt." — Act. SS. O. S. B., t. iii. p. 289.

¹²⁰ "Cupiens pro Domino, ubicumque sibi opportunum inveniret peregrinam ducere vitam. Angelica visione admonitus cæpto verbi ministerio sedulus insistere." — BEDE, iii. 19.

¹²¹ At Burghcastle, in the present county of Suffolk.

¹²² "Vir per omnia christianissimus atque doctissimus. . . . Tantumque rex ille cælestis regni amator factus est, ut ad ultimum relictis regni negotiis . . . atque accepta tonsura pro æterno rege militare curaret." — BEDE, ii. 16; iii. 18.

ingly he received the tonsure, and entered as a monk the monastery which he had bestowed on his Celtic friend, the Irish Fursy.¹²³ He thus set the first example, among the Anglo-Saxons, of a king abandoning secular life and sovereignty to enter the cloister; and, as we shall see, his example was not fruitless.

But he was not permitted to die as he hoped in the cloister. The terrible Penda, that scourge of the Saxon confederation, and unwearied leader of the heathen, hated his Christian neighbors in the east as well as those of the north. At the head of his numerous Mercians, reinforced by the implacable British, he invaded and ravaged East Anglia with as much fury and success as had attended him in Northumbria. The East Angles, terrified and very inferior in numbers, recollecting the exploits of their old king, sought Sigebert in his cell to place him at the head of their army, his valor and warlike experience being well-known to the soldiers. It was in vain to resist; he could not but yield to the solicitations of his former subjects; but that he might remain faithful to his recent vows he armed himself only with a staff, not with a sword. His devotion was useless; all that he could do was to die for his faith and his country. It was thus, with his staff in his hand, that the king-monk perished at the head of his troops under the sword of the enemy.¹²⁴

King Sige-
bert becomes a monk.

He dies
fighting for his country.
635.

We may appropriately recall here an incident altogether analogous to this Saxon king's self-sacrifice, the hero of which was a British king fighting against the Saxons. Both had become monks, and were forced in their own despite to leave the cloister and die on the battle-field. Both are too closely connected with our subject to be passed over in silence.

Like Sige-
bert, the king-monk Teudric
falls in battle, but against the Saxons.

Thirty years before the sacrifice of the king of East Anglia — about the year 610 — Teudric, a valiant Welsh king, conqueror in all the battles waged during his reign, abdicated the throne in order to prepare by a period of penitence for ¹²³ "S. Furseo dedit locum ad construendum monasterium, in quo et ipse post modum relicto regno monachus factus est." — GERVAS. DOROB., Act. Pont. Cantuar., p. 1636. But Bede says that he entered a monastery quod sibi fecerat, and which is supposed to have been that which has since been known by the name of St. Edmundsbury. — Cf. Liber Elicusis, p. 14, ed. 1848.

¹²⁴ "Sperantes minus animos militum trepidare, præsente duce quondam strenuissimo et eximio, sed ipse professionis suæ non immemor." — BEDE, l. c.

death. He concealed himself in an islet formed by the picturesque course of the Wye, in the wild and solitary spot to which the more recent ruins of the Cistercian abbey of Tintern have attracted crowds of sight-seers. But in the reign of his son, the Saxons of Wessex, under King Ceolwulf, crossed the Severn, which had formed their boundary for more than a century, and ravaged the country as far as the Wye. At his people's cry of distress the generous old man left the solitude where he had lived for ten years, and once more led the Christians of Wales to battle with the Pagan Saxons. He awaited the latter at the ford by which they meant to cross the river which bathed the banks of his solitude. A brilliant victory was the reward of his generous devotion. At the mere sight of the old king, armed at all points and mounted on his war-horse, a panic spread among the Saxons, long accustomed to fly before him; but in the flight one of them turned back and gave him a mortal blow. He perished thus in the arms of victory, his skull split open by a Saxon sword. A thousand years afterwards his heroic remains and venerated relics were identified by means of this shattered skull in the stone coffin wherein his faithful followers had buried him, at the confluence of the Severn and the Wye, six miles distant from the battle-field on which he gave up his life for the safety of his country.¹²⁵

King Anna,
successor of Sigebert, killed, like him, by Penda.
635-654.

Anna, Sigebert's successor, sprung like him from the race of Uffa, who founded the East Anglian kingdom, had a longer and less stormy reign. Like Sigebert, he was the zealous helper of Felix and Fursy, the Burgundian bishop and the Celtic monk, in the work of converting his kingdom. Like him, he founded numerous monasteries, and like him had the honor to die fighting for his people, invaded and decimated by the hateful Penda. Though he did not become a monk like Sigebert, he left a numerous offspring destined to adopt the life of the cloister, and thus to expiate the guilty weakness of his brother, who succeeded him, and who, although himself a Christian, became the ally of the heathen Penda in his attacks upon the Christians of Northumbria.¹²⁶

¹²⁵ F. GODWIN, De Præsulibus Angliæ, p. 593, ap. LINGARD, vol. i. p. 152; LAPPENBERG, p. 54; Liber Landavensis, pp. 133, 134; LA BORDERIE, op. cit., p. 54, who refers this occurrence to the year 575, while Lappenberg fixes it, after an Anglo-Saxon chronicler, on the 3d January, 610.

¹²⁶ Fursy, after having founded in East Anglia various double communities of monks and nuns according to the Celtic usage (De Virtutibus S. Fursei, ap. MABILLON, Act. SS. O. S. B., vol. ii. p. 296), quitted the ceno-

II.

CONVERSION OF WESSEX.

What Edwin had been to the Angles of the East, his saintly and generous successor, Oswald, was to the Saxons of the West, who under Cerdic, one of those bloodthirsty and warlike chiefs who were said to descend in a direct line from the great god Odin, had founded the most western colony of the Saxon immigration, a colony which had become a kingdom of much vaster extent than the kingdoms of the eastern or southern Saxons, or that of the Jutes of Kent. This realm, which extended from the Thames to the Severn, condemned by its position to endless struggles with the Britons of Wales and of Cornwall—a race always thrilling with patriotic hatred of the invader, and destined in the future to absorb the seven other kingdoms of the Heptarchy¹²⁷—was governed in the time of Oswald by two brothers, Cuichelm, from whose attempt at assassination Edwin had barely escaped, and Cyne-gils, the father of a princess whom Oswald had asked in marriage. When Oswald came in person for his bride, he met at the residence of the King of Wessex a missionary called Birinus.¹²⁸ This bishop—who was perhaps not a monk, and whose origin is unknown—had acquired the Saxon language at Genoa, a port much frequented by the Anglo-Saxons, where the bishop of the place had consecrated him. He had been commissioned by Pope Honorius I. to continue the work of the conversion of the Saxons, and had promised in return that he would sow the seed of life even beyond the territory of the Angles, where no preacher had yet penetrated. But landing on the coast of Wessex,¹²⁹ he found the population

Christianity carried to the Saxons of the West
by King
Oswald and Bishop
Birinus.

bitic life in order to become an anchorite. Then seeing East Anglia more and more ravaged by the incursions of the heathens of Mercia, he decreed the dissolution of his communities and departed to France, where he was well received at the court of Clovis II., that great protector of the Irish monks. He there founded the Monastery of Lagny, and died in 650. We have already spoken of him among the successors of St. Columbanus in France, and we shall find his brother and his disciples among the Irish missionaries in Belgium.

¹²⁷ "Britannos antiquæ libertatis conscientia frementes, et ob hoc crebram rebellionem meditantes."—WILHELM. MALMESB., i. 2.

¹²⁸ "An fuerit monachus non constat."—MABILLON, In SS. II. Sæc. Prætermisissis. Cf. SURIUS, De Probatis Sanctorum Vitis, t. vi. p. 771.

¹²⁹ In the existing counties of Dorset or Hants.

there, which no doubt he supposed to be already Christianized, still plunged into the darkness of utter Paganism, and devoted himself to their conversion, believing this to be the best way of keeping his promise.¹³⁰

The influence of the pious and zealous Oswald came most fortunately to aid the missionary's arguments; and when King Cynegils consented with all his people to be baptized, his son-in-law became his godfather.¹³¹ The baptism was performed at Dorchester, which was erected into a bishopric for Birinus by the twofold authority of Cynegils, as provincial king, and of Oswald, as Bretwalda or supreme head of the Saxon confederation.¹³²

The success of the mission of Birinus was rapid and complete. He founded many churches and converted multitudes. Many years after the close of his long and fruitful pontificate, popular songs intended for choral singing still celebrated the memory of the Roman exile,¹³³ who had come to emancipate the Saxons of the West from bondage to their idols, and blessed the day which had seen him land on their coasts.

¹³⁰ "Promittens se illo (Papa) præsentem in intimis ultra Anglorum partibus quo nullus doctor præcessisset, sanctæ fidei semina esse sparsurum. . . . Sed Gewissorum gentem ingrediens, cum omnes ibidem paganissimos inveniret." — BEDE, iii. 7.

¹³¹ "Cum rex ipse catechizatus, fonte baptismi cum sua gente ablueretur contigit . . . pulcherrimo prorsus et Deo digno consortio, cujus erat filiam accepturus in conjugem, ipsum prius secunda generatione Deo dicatum sibi accepit in filium." — BEDE, iii. 7.

¹³² Not the existing county town of Dorsetshire, but a place near Oxford, on the Thames. The episcopal see was, later, transferred to Lincoln. The Saxons of Wessex had two other celebrated bishoprics — Winchester, the cathedral of which Birinus is understood to have founded; and Sherborne, afterwards transferred to Salisbury. The clergy of all these cathedrals were monks.

¹³³ "*Dignus honore pater micat aureus ecce BIRINUS; Sanctus adest omni dignus honore pater.
Exul ad hunc populum qui venit ab urbe Quiritum; Pro Christo pergens, exul ad hunc populum. . . .
Hostica barbaries omnis sedatur in illo; Deque lupo fit ovis hostica barbaries. . . .
Liber adest populus, sub longo tempore servus; Nunc Christo famulans, liber adest populus. . . .
Sit benedicta dies in qua maris alta petisti; Huc quæ te duxit, sit benedicta dies.*"

This popular song has been published from a MS. of Alençon by M. Edouard du Méril (Poésies Inédites du Moyen Age; Paris, 1854, p. 277). The learned editor marks the systematic repetition of the first hemistich as a kind of refrain meant for a choir of singers. The same MS. contains poems in which he notes the same kind of rhythm, in honor of two other monastic apostles of the Anglo-Saxons — St. Ethelwald and St. Swithin.

The assassin Cuichelm himself was touched, and received baptism on his death-bed, with his son. But the son of Cynegils, Cenwalch, refused to renounce the religion of his ancestors; and when he succeeded to the throne, it might have been supposed that the work of Oswald and Birinus would be overturned by one of those pagan reactions which had already thrown back into idolatry the subjects of the first Christian king of Kent, as well as the Saxons and Angles of the East. But it does not appear that the new king originated any persecution, or indeed any change whatever; and, singular to say, it was the ferocious heathen Penda who was the instrument of Divine mercy in bringing the young unbeliever to the truth which he had refused to receive at his father's conversion. The terrible King of Mercia, whose sister Cenwalch had refused, avenged that injury by declaring war against him. The new converts of Wessex were no more able than those of Northumbria or East Anglia to resist the savage energy of the Mercian pagans; Cenwalch was defeated, dethroned, and exiled. But for him, as for Oswald and Oswy, exile was the cradle of the faith. He sought refuge with the pious King Anna, and in that family of saints ¹³⁴ he learned to know and to love the faith of Christ. When he was reinstated in his kingdom, he and his people held to their new religion with inviolable 648. fidelity, and during his reign of thirty years he lent active and intelligent assistance in the extension of the Christian faith and of the monastic order. On the death of 650. Birinus, who, notwithstanding his quality of missionary and bishop sent from Rome, has left no trace of his relations with the Roman colony of Canterbury, the Celtic element reappeared among the Saxons of the West, in the person of a Frank, named Agilbert, who had long studied in the Irish monasteries, ¹³⁵ from which he had newly arrived when he offered himself to King Cenwalch to carry on the work of the deceased bishop. In this he acquitted himself so well that the king, delighted with his learning and activity, induced him to agree to become the bishop of the kingdom. But at the end of ten years, the same king, who understood nothing but Saxon, grew tired

Cenwalch
wishes to have a bishop who

¹³⁴ "Nam et ipse apud quem exulabat rex erat vir bonus, et bona et sancta sobole felix." — BEDE, l. c.

¹³⁵ "Venit de Hibernia pontifex quidam, nomine Agilbertus, natione quidem Gallus, sed tunc legendarum gratia Scripturarum in Hibernia non parvo tempore demoratus." — Ibid.

can preach in Anglo-
Saxon.

of listening to sermons delivered either in Latin or in that Celtic tongue which he considered barbarous. He does not, however, seem to have been animated by any systematic hostility against the British Celts, who formed a numerous class amongst his subjects; for while he fulfilled a promise made at his father's death-bed, and founded for his Saxons at Winchester the great monastery which has become one of the most important monuments of English architecture,¹³⁶ he at the same time protected and favored the national sanctuary of the Celts at Glastonbury. A deed of gift exists in which he engages the monks of that British sanctuary to pray for the Saxon king beside the tomb of Arthur. In his reign, it is true, a Saxon for the first time became abbot of the great Celtic monastery;¹³⁷ but, on the other hand, it was also under him that the Celt Maïdulphe, a professed monk, and at the same time a distinguished philosopher,¹³⁸ came from Ireland or Scotland to lay the humble foundations of an abbey which preserves a trace of his name in the later splendors of Malmesbury.

Nevertheless King Cenwalch wanted a bishop who spoke Saxon,¹³⁹ and found him in the person of a certain Vini, who had been ordained in France; and for whom he constituted a new bishopric in connection with his recent monastic establishment of Winchester. Agilbert, however, instead of congratulating himself, as he ought to have done, on seeing the far too extensive field of his labors diminished, to the great profit of his flock, by the arrival of this fellow-workman native to the soil, was so irritated that he threw up his episcopate and returned to France, where he became Bishop of Paris.

The need of and wish for native bishops increased, however, more and more among the Anglo-Saxons. The first who was invested with the episcopal dignity was Ithamar, a native of Kent, who was summoned to succeed the aged Paulinus in the see of Rochester, where the latter had found an honorable retreat after his flight from Northumbria. It was the Archbishop Honorius of Canterbury, himself a Roman monk, like his four predecessors, who chose Ithamar, ac-

The Anglo-Saxons gradually obtain the episcopal sees.

644.

¹³⁶ DUGDALE, Monasticon Anglicanum, t. i. p. 31.

¹³⁷ Ibid., p. 12.

¹³⁸ "Natione Scotus, eruditione philosophus, professione monachus." — WILH. MALMESE., i. 2.

¹³⁹ "Rex qui Saxonum tantum linguam noverat, pertæsus barbaræ loquelæ, subintroducxit in provinciam alium suæ linguæ episcopum." — BEDE, l. c. knowledging him to be a man fully capable of rivalling both in knowledge and virtue the Roman bishops who had hitherto occupied the two Kentish bishoprics.¹⁴⁰

The small kingdom of Kent, which owed its importance, and perhaps the maintenance of its independence, to the possession of the metropolis of Canterbury, was at this time governed by Ercombert, grandson of the first Christian king, who showed himself even more zealous than his grandsire for the new religion. He enforced the observance of Lent by severe penalties, and gave orders for a general destruction of the idols and heathen temples which had been spared for the previous fifty years, notwithstanding the conversion to Christianity of the great majority of the inhabitants.¹⁴¹ It was in his reign that, on the death of the archbishop, the last survivor of Augustin's Italian mission, the rank of metropolitan was, after two years' hesitation and delay, conferred, for the first time, on an Anglo-Saxon. The newly converted realm of Wessex had the honor of furnishing to England her first native primate. This fifth successor of Augustin was named Frithona, but thought fit to change that Teutonic name for the purely Roman one of Deus-dedit. He was consecrated by the English Ithamar, and did not hesitate to remain in friendly relations, or rather to resume intercourse, with the Celtic bishops, who up to this time had scarcely recognized the supremacy of the Church of Canterbury.¹⁴²

640-661.

653.

Frithona, the West Saxon, is Archbishop of Canterbury. 6th March, 653.

III.

CONVERSION OF THE SAXONS OF THE EAST.

Whatever may have been the influence of the saintly King Oswald on the conversion of the West Saxons, it was assuredly less direct and less effectual than that of his brother and successor Oswy upon the Saxons of the East and the midland Angles. It must, indeed, be acknowledged that, of all the Northumbrian

Action of Northumbria on the kingdom of Essex.

¹⁴⁰ "De gente Cantuariorum, sed vita et eruditione antecessoribus suis æquandum." — BEDE, iii. 14.

¹⁴¹ "Cum avus et pater sitra destructionem idolorum fidem nostram coluissent." — WILL. MALMESB., De Gest. Reg. Angl., l. i. c. 1.

¹⁴² HOOK, op. cit., p. 131.

kings, it is Oswy, stained as he was with the innocent blood of King Oswin, who did most for the extension and defence of Christianity in England.

Sigebert, named the Good — king of those West Saxons whom we recently saw driving Mellitus from his bishopric of London, and renouncing the faith which had been urged on them by the preachings of that companion of Augustin, and the influence of the Bretwalda Ethelbert — was Oswy's special friend. Sigebert the Good had dethroned the posterity of those three princes who demanded the communion from the hands of the Christian bishop without having been baptized.¹⁴³ He frequently came into Northumbria to visit Oswy as a friend, but doubtless also as the Bretwalda, the sovereign of the confederation, who alone was able to protect the petty kingdom of Essex against its much more powerful neighbors of Wessex and Mercia. Oswy, on those occasions, spoke much to him on the subject of idolatry; he took pains to make him understand that gods could not be made by the hand of man of stone or wood, the rest of which might be put to the vilest uses; but that rather far he should believe in a God incomprehensible and invisible, but all-powerful and eternal, able to govern the world which He has created, and which He will judge, whose throne is in heaven, and not made of worthless metal, and who promises everlasting rewards to such as learn His will and do it on earth. Sigebert suffered himself to be won over by these brotherly and repeated exhortations. After long deliberation with his faithful counselors, according to the invariable custom of the Saxon kings, and fortified by their unanimous assent, he received baptism, along with his whole court,¹⁴⁴ at the hands of the Celtic bishop Finan, in a royal villa of the Northumbrian kings, called Ad Murum (on the wall), from its proximity to the famous rampart built by the Emperor Severus to restrain the incursions of the Caledonians.¹⁴⁵

¹⁴³ See above, p. 197. Compare LAPPENBERG, Genealogical Table B. of vol. i.

¹⁴⁴ "Fidem quam olim . . . abjecerant . . . instantia regis Oswin receperunt . . . frequenter solebat eum hortari . . . hæc et hujus modi multa cum rex Oswin regi Sigeberto amicabili et quasi fraterno consilio sæpe inculcaret; tandem juvante amicorum consensu credidit, et facto cum suis consilio cum exhortatione, faventibus cunctis et adnuentibus fidei baptizatus est." — BEDE, iii. 22.

¹⁴⁵ Ad Murum. This spot is believed to have been at Walton, or rather at Wallbottle, near Newcastle.

The new Christian was unwilling to return to his kingdom without being accompanied by missionaries commissioned to preach to his people the faith which he had just embraced. For these instructors he applied, naturally, to his friend and brother the king, whom he regarded as the author of his own conversion. Oswy gave him a monk of the great Celtic Monastery of Lindisfarne, named Cedd, a Northumbrian by birth, who had already distinguished himself in a mission to the pagans of Mercia.¹⁴⁶ Cedd accordingly went over the whole kingdom of Sigebert, and gathered in a first and ample harvest of souls; after which he returned to Lindisfarne, to be there consecrated bishop of the West Saxons, whose capital and episcopal see, formerly occupied by the Roman monk Mellitus, was at London. The monk of Lindisfarne succeeded where the monk of Mount Cœlius had failed. He ordained numerous priests and deacons to assist him in preaching and baptizing, and founded many churches and monasteries, in which he endeavored to induce the best of his converts to adopt the life of the cloister, as far at least as the rudeness of their habits would permit.¹⁴⁷ He himself made continued journeys to Lindisfarne, in his native Northumbria, to renew his spirit, and to draw from the stern penances and bracing traditions of his order the energy he needed to cope with the difficulties of his task.¹⁴⁸

A monk of Lindisfarne becomes Bishop of London. 653.

The end of King Sigebert the Good shows, with sufficient plainness, the nature of those difficulties, and the combination of firmness and sagacity which was required to overcome them. One of the earls, or principal lords of the country, a near kinsman of the king, having persevered in an illicit connection in spite of the repeated representations of the bishop, Cedd excommunicated him, forbidding any one to enter his house or to eat with him. The king took no notice of this prohibition, and at the invitation of the earl went to dine with him. As he left the house he met the bishop.

¹⁴⁶ BEDE, iii. 21. Compare Act. SS. Bolland., t. i. Jan., p. 373.

¹⁴⁷ "In quibus collecto examine famulorum Christi, disciplinam vitæ regularis, in quantum rudes adhuc capere poterant, custodire docuit." — BEDE, iii. 23.

¹⁴⁸ "Solebat . . . sæpius etiam suam, id est Northanhymborum, provinciam exhortandi gratia, revisere." — BEDE, iii. 23. It was in one of these journeys that he was detained by the son of King Oswald, who reigned over a part of Deira, and who had at his court as priest a brother of Cedd. This prince, Ethelwald by name, persuaded Cedd to accept an estate from him, in order to found a monastery, which might serve as the place of his burial — the Monastery of Lastingham, of which we have spoken above, p. 273.

Both were on horseback, and dismounted to greet each other. The king, affrighted, threw himself at the feet of the bishop, imploring pardon for his fault. The bishop, irritated, touched him with the staff which he carried in his hand, and said to him, "Since you have not chosen to abstain from entering

Death of
King Sige-
bert of Essex.
660.

the house of that reprobate, there you shall die."¹⁴⁹ And, in fact, some time after, the same earl and his brother slew the king, whose kinsmen they were.

When they were asked the reason of their crime, they assigned no other than the anger they felt at seeing the chief of their race pardon his enemies so readily — granting pardon as soon as it was asked, according to the precept of the Gospel. And certainly, adds honest Bede, we may believe that such a death sufficed, not only to expiate his disobedience to the bishop, but also to increase his merits in the sight of God.

Death of Cedd and of his thirty friends.
664.

This zealous prelate, whom we shall meet again farther on, survived his royal convert, whom he had so severely judged, and baptized Sigebert's successor. Afterwards, in one of his too frequent excursions to Northumbria, Cedd was seized with a contagious malady, and died at the Monastery of Lastingham, which he had founded, and of which one of his three brothers, like himself all priests and monks of Lindisfarne, was abbot. When the news of his death reached his diocese, thirty East Saxons, whom he had made monks, started in all haste for the north. They sought the monastery where lay the body of their father and founder, with the intention of living there near his remains, or dying and finding their last repose beside him, if such were the will of God. Their desire was quickly granted. At the end of a few days they all died of the same disease that had cut short the bishop's life.¹⁵⁰ How is it possible but to esteem, in spite of his severity, a bishop capable of inspiring such a rare affection? And how, also, is it possible not to love those rough Saxons, scarce converted, but moved even in the cloister by that passionate self-devotion, by that necessity of giving life for the beloved which, in the midst of their natural fierceness, continued the distinctive feature of the Anglo-Saxon race?

¹⁴⁹ "Episcopus pariter desiluit: sederat enim et ipse in equo. . . . Dico tibi quia noluisti te continere a domo perdit et damnati illius, tu in ipsa domo mori habes." — BEDE, iii. 22.

¹⁵⁰ "Cupientes ad corpus sui patris, aut vivere, si sic Deo placeret, aut morientes ibi sepeliri." — BEDE, iii. 23.

Yet, notwithstanding, these same Saxons, so easily gained and attached by the light and the virtue of the Gospel, often fell back with a lamentable and surprising facility into the depths of Paganism. Bishop Cedd and his thirty friends were scarcely dead when the people whose apostle and master he had been, apostatized almost in a body. The same disease which had taken from them their bishop, so terrified the East Saxons by its ravages that the king, nobles, and people rivalled each other in their eagerness to restore the temples and altars of offended Woden, hoping thus to ward off the contagion from themselves. Happily another king, named Sebbi, uncle and colleague of the apostate, stood firm, and succeeded in bringing back the whole nation to Christianity, with the aid of the Bishop of the Mercians, a Saxon by birth, but, like so many other pontiffs and missionaries, trained by the Celtic monks of Iona and Lindisfarne.¹⁵¹ The narratives of Bede, which serve to guide us across the maze of the races and dynasties of the Heptarchy, were taken by him from the lips of a priest who had accompanied this very active and zealous bishop in his unwearied journeys throughout all the corners of the kingdom of Essex, to preach the faith and raise up again the altars of Christ. According to his testimony, the inhabitants were turned back to idolatry less by hostility against Christianity than by indifference as to the future life, of which many denied the very existence. But as soon as the churches were reopened, a multitude of Christians reappeared, who loudly declared they would rather die in the faith of the resurrection of our Lord than live under the impure shadow of their idols.¹⁵²

Relapse of the East Saxons into idolatry.
King
Sebbi.

665.

¹⁵¹ "Iarumanus, Anglicus natione, sed a Scotis episcopis ordinatus." — Anglia Sacra, t. i. p. 425.

¹⁵² "Diligentes hanc vitam et futuram non quærentes, sive etiam non esse credentes. . . . Juxta quod mihi presbyter qui comes itineris ille et cooperator verbi extiterat, referebat. . . . Magis cum fide resurrectionis in illo mori, quam in perfidiæ sordibus inter idola vivere cupientes." — BEDE, iii. 30.

IV.

CONVERSION OF THE MERCIANS, OR MIDLAND ENGLISH.

Influence of the king and bishop of the Northumbrians in the conversion of the Mercians.

The personal influence of King Oswy as a preacher of the Gospel, the royal villa at the foot of the old Roman wall, scene of the baptism of the first converts, and the intervention of the Celtic bishop Finan as administrator of the sacraments — all these details, which impress a special character on the conversion of the Eastern Saxons, are identically reproduced in the history of the conversion of the Mercians. But it will be understood how much more difficult and important this task must have been, when the fierceness of the bloody wars, waged during the thirty years of Penda's reign against Christian Northumbria, is considered, and especially when the vast extent of the kingdom of Mercia, almost as large as Northumbria itself, and embracing all the country that lies between the Thames, the Humber, and the Severn, is called to mind. The population of this kingdom was composed of very diverse elements, — first, of great numbers of the conquered Britons; then of Saxon settlers;¹⁵³ and, finally, of Angles, especially concentrated on the south-west frontier of Northumbria.¹⁵⁴ Towards the end of his long reign, the ferocious Penda had intrusted the government of the Angles of the Middle to his eldest son Peada. It was through him that Christianity and the Northumbrian influence penetrated into Mercia, and succeeded in beginning operations upon this formidable remnant of darkness, encircled on all sides by newly Christianized states, which still offered a vast and inviolable asylum to Saxon Paganism.

The Mercian Prince Peada asks in marriage the daughter of King Oswy.

As elsewhere, love and marriage had a certain part to play in this revolution. During one of those truces which the sagacious policy of Oswy continued to obtain from ill-starred Northumbria, always bathed in blood or wrapt in flames by the implacable chief of the Mercians, the young Peada, who had

¹⁵³ Among others, the Wuiccas on the west, and the Girwas on the east, who are often mentioned by the historians of the period. They had their own kings, whose charters figure among the very limited number of those whose authenticity is recognized by Kemble.

¹⁵⁴ These Angles bore the name of Middle Angles, or English of the Middle, to distinguish them from the East Angles, or Angles of the East.

all the virtues and all the external advantages which the Saxons prized most highly in their kings, came into Northumbria to ask the hand of Alchflæda, the daughter of Oswy. Oswy replied that he could not give his daughter to an idolater, and that, in order to win her, Peada and the nation of Angles governed by him must be converted and baptized. The young prince then put himself under instruction, most probably by Bishop Finan; and from the moment when he understood the teachings, and especially the promises, of the Christian faith, the hope of the resurrection, and of that future and everlasting life which the Saxons of the East had been so unwilling to admit, he declared that he would become a Christian, even though the princess whom he sought to wed were refused to him.¹⁵⁵ But Peada seemed to be drawn towards the light of truth even less by his love to Alchflæda than by his friendship for Alchfrid, the brother of the princess. Alchfrid was already his brother-in-law, having married the King of Mercia's daughter, in whom he had found not only a Christian, but a saint,¹⁵⁶ destined to confirm by a new example the providential law, which, amidst the descendants of Odin, selected those who were most marked by the obstinacy and ferocity of their paganism as the progenitors of a race of saints, and especially of saintly women. It would be desirable to have fuller details of the circumstances which brought these two young princes together, and made them friends and brothers before they became related by marriage. We know only that it was Alchfrid who, of all the preachers of the truth, exercised the strongest influence upon the convictions of his friend. The future King of the Mercians received baptism from Bishop Finan at the villa near the Roman wall on the same spot, and almost at the same date, as the King of the West Saxons. The eorls, the thanes, and the men of war (called at a later period counts, lords, and knights) who had accompanied the young Peada to the Northumbrian court, were baptized all along with him, as were also their servants.¹⁵⁷

Oswy's son marries Peada's
daughter.

Union of the two brothers-
in-law.

Baptism of Peada.

653.

¹⁵⁵ "Juvenis optimus, ac regis nomine ac persona dignissimus . . . nisi fidem Christi et baptismum cum gente cui præerat, acciperet. At ille, audita prædicatione veritatis, et promissione regni cælestis, speque resurrectionis ac futuræ immortalitatis, libenter se Christianum fieri velle confessus est, etiamsi virginem non acciperet." — BEDE, iii. 21.

¹⁵⁶ Her name, like that of the wife of the heroic Oswald, was Kyneburgh, and, later, she became a nun along with her sister Kyneswitha.

¹⁵⁷ "Persuasus maxime ad percipiendam fidem a filio regis Oswin . . .

Missionaries from Lindisfarne
in Mercia.

When the Mercian prince, carrying back with him his young wife, returned a Christian from a country which had already been Christianized for twenty years, his companions formed a most precious and effectual nucleus for the complete conversion of Mercia. Oswy had added to their party, in the capacity of missionaries, four monks trained at Lindisfarne, and endowed with the knowledge and virtues which seemed to him needful for the evangelizing of the new province which was to be won over to Christianity. Three of them were Anglo-Saxons, and among these three was Cedd, whom Oswy almost immediately recalled, to intrust him with the mission to the Eastern Saxons. The fourth, named Diuma, was a Celt by birth, and it was he who became the first bishop of the Mercians. These missionaries obtained a rapid and un hoped-for success. The Middle Angles listened to them with manifest sympathy, and every day the nobles and the common people flocked in great numbers to be baptized.¹⁵⁸

The behavior of the savage Penda to his newly converted son and his companions was as singular as it was unexpected. It was to have been looked for that this fierce and unwearied enemy of the Christian kings and nations near him would

Penda's
toleration
of his Christian
subjects.

become the violent persecutor of his own Christian subjects. But it was not so; and, indeed, the history of his frightful ravages in Northumbria and elsewhere records no special indication of enmity against the Christians: no doubt he did not spare them, but there is no proof of his having persecuted them with a peculiar hatred. As to his own kingdom, not only did he take no steps to punish his eldest son and the other converts, but he allowed the Northumbrian missionaries freely to preach the Gospel to all who wished to hear them in those districts, the exclusive sovereignty of which he had reserved to himself. This barbarian ravager and pagan gave thus an example of toleration by which many Christians in ages more enlightened than his might be profited. He confined himself to evincing haughtily his dislike and contempt for those who, after having received the faith of qui erat cognatus et amicus ejus. . . . Baptizatus cum omnibus qui secum venerant comitibus ac militibus eorumque famulis universis." — BEDE, iii. 21.

¹⁵⁸ "Qui ad docendam baptizandamque gentem illius, et eruditione et vita videbantur idonei . . . prædicabant verbum et libenter auditi sunt, multique quotidie nobilium et infimorum, abrenuntiâtâ sorde idolatriæ, fidei sunt fonte abluti." — BEDE, iii. 21.

Christ, did not practise its works. "Those who despise," said he, "the laws of the God in whom they believe, must be despised as wretches."¹⁵⁹

Penda, however, continued none the less the pitiless foe of the princes and people of Northumbria. This bloodthirsty and stubborn hatred led him to his destruction.

It was only at the last extremity that Oswy resolved to engage in a final conflict with the terrible enemy who had conquered and slain his two predecessors, Edwin and Oswald. It has been seen that he married his son and his daughter to children of Penda; and he gave him another of his sons as a hostage. But Penda would not consent to any durable peace. During the thirteen years that had elapsed since the overthrow of Oswald and the accession of Oswy, he had periodically subjected Northumbria to frightful devastations. In vain Oswy, driven to desperation, offered him all the jewels, ornaments, and treasures of which he could dispose, as a ransom for his desolated and hopeless provinces. The arrogant and fierce octogenarian refused everything, being resolute, as he said, to exterminate the whole Northumbrian race, from first to last. "Well, then," said Oswy, "since this heathen contemns our gifts, let us offer them to one who will accept them — to the Lord our God."¹⁶⁰ He then made a vow to devote to God a daughter who had just been born to him, and at the same time to give twelve estates for the foundation of as many monasteries. After this he marched at the head of a small army against Penda, whose troops were, according to Northumbrian tradition, thirty times more numerous. Besides his Mercians, Penda led to battle a crowd of auxiliaries under the command of thirty chiefs who bore the title of king; first of all, the implacable Britons, his constant allies against the Angles of the North; then a body of East Anglians; and finally, by an inexcusable treason against his country and his uncle, the nephew of Oswy, the son of his brother, who had been killed by Penda, the same Ethelwald who reigned over a portion of Deira.

Last struggle between Oswy and Penda.

¹⁵⁹ "Nec prohibuit Penda rex quin etiam in sua, hoc est, Merciorum natione, verbum, si qui vellent audire, prædicaretur. Quin potius odio habebat et despiciebat eos quos fide Christi imbutos, opera fidei non habere deprehendit, dicens contemnendos esse eos et miseros qui Deo suo quem crederent obedire contemnerent." — BEDE, iii. 21.

¹⁶⁰ "Cum acerbas atque intolerabiles pateretur irruptiones . . . dummodo ille provincias usque ad internecionem vastare desineret . . . qui totam ejus gentem a parvo usque ad majorem delere atque exterminare decreverat. . . . Si paganus nescit accipere nostra donaria, offeramus ei qui novit, Domino nostro Deo." — BEDE, iii. 24.

Battle of Windwaed, 15th Nov., 655. Notwithstanding the enormous disparity of the forces, the battle, which was fought on the banks of a river near the site of the present town of Leeds, was lost by Penda. The traitor Ethelwald sought safety in flight as soon as the struggle commenced, but the other allies, Britons and East Anglians, were exterminated. The vanquished in their flight found the river in flood, so that a larger number perished in the waters than by the sword.

Death of Penda, the last champion of paganism. Penda was slain fighting valiantly in the mêlée. Thus perished at the age of eighty years, after a reign of thirty, the conqueror and murderer of five Anglo-Saxon kings,¹⁶¹ the last and indefatigable champion of paganism among the Anglo-Saxons, the ally and too effective instrument of the vengeance of the old British Christians against their converted invaders.¹⁶²

Final triumph of Northumbria and of the Christian cause. This battle decided the fate of England: it not only insured the emancipation and temporary preponderance of Northumbria; but it put a period to the struggle which for 200 years the British had maintained against the Anglo-Saxons. Henceforth there might be partial resistance and local conflicts, but there was no general attempt, with any chance of success, to repel the progress of invasion. All the little British kingdoms which occupied the existing counties of Chester, Lancashire, and Westmoreland, on the coast of the Irish Channel, were finally swept away and taken possession of by the Saxons of Northumbria.¹⁶³

Farther, it sealed the political and military triumph of the new religion, in the very bosom of the Heptarchy, over that external and official paganism which was the religious tradition of the nation. But this triumph was far from being sufficient for the designs of God, and for the deliverance of ¹⁶¹ Two kings of Northumbria, Edwin and Oswald; and three of East Anglia, Sigebert, Egeric, and Anna.

¹⁶² "Fertur quia tricies majorem pagani habuerint exercitum . . . triginta legiones ducibus nobilissimis instructas . . . duces regii triginta qui ad auxilium venerant pene omnes interfecti." — BEDE. Compare LA BORDERIE, op. cit., pp. 223–225. The battle-field is now called Winn Moor, and the river the Broad Are.

¹⁶³ LA BORDERIE, op. cit., p. 227. Cumbria alone remained to them: the country of the Kymri or Cumbrians, now Cumberland, formed a small kingdom which recovered its independence after the death of Oswy's sons, and maintained it till the tenth century, like the other small British kingdom of Strathclyde, between the Solway and the walls of Severus.

the souls of men. There was an inner paganism, infinitely more difficult to overcome—the paganism of the savage morals and uncurbed passions of a conquering race. The valiant sword of the Northumbrians might well gain the mastery over oppressors and ravagers; but the word, and above all, the virtue, of the monks was needed to propagate and consolidate the faith, and root it deeply in the heart and life of the victors.

Oswy faithfully kept his word to God and to the Christian people. He set apart the twelve estates to be thenceforth monastic property—six in the north and six in the south of his double kingdom—to form an endowment for monks who should substitute for the warlike service by which these domains were usually held an unceasing prayer for eternal peace.¹⁶⁴ He then took his daughter Elfreda, who was but yet a year old, and consecrated her to God by the vow of perpetual virginity. Her mother, the daughter of Edwin, first Christian King of Northumbria, had been thus dedicated to God from her birth, but only by baptism, and as a token of the gratitude of a still pagan father for the protection of the Christians' God. The daughter of Oswy was to be the price of a yet greater gift of Heaven—the conclusive victory of his race, and of the Christian faith in his country: the sacrifice thus imposed on her reminds us of that of Jephthah's daughter. It will be seen that, far from desiring to escape her vow, she showed herself, during a long life, always worthy of her heavenly bridegroom. The king took her from the caresses of her mother, to intrust her, not, as we might have supposed, to his sister the Abbess Ebba of Coldingham, but to Hilda, a princess of the rival dynasty, who nearly ten years before had been initiated into monastic life by bishop Aïdan.

How Oswy, when victorious, fulfilled his vow.

His daughter Elfreda a nun in her cradle.

After the overthrow of Penda, Oswy, now master of Mercia, in right of his victory, undertook with his accustomed zeal to effect the conversion of that kingdom. He left a portion of it to his son-in-law Peada, the son of his terrible opponent, whose ardor in the Christian cause seconded all his efforts for the extension of the true faith. The monk Diuma, born in Ireland, and one of the four missionaries whom Peada had Oswy achieves the conversion of Mercia.

The first five bishops of Mercia

¹⁶⁴ "In quibus, ablato studio militiæ terrestris ad exercendam militiam cœlestem, supplicandunque pro pace ejus æterna, devotioni sedulæ monachorum locus facultasque suppeditaret."—BEDE, iii. 24.

are Celtic monks. brought from Northumbria at the time of his marriage, was consecrated by the bishop of Lindisfarne, and appointed Bishop of all Mercia, including therein the nation of the Middle Angles already converted under Peda. It was necessary that two distinct races should thus be united in one diocese, because of the small number of priests who were worthy of promotion to the episcopate.¹⁶⁵ The pontificate of Diuma was short, but fruitful. At his death he was succeeded by another Irishman, Ceolach, who was reckoned among the disciples of Columba, the great Celtic missionary, as coming from the Monastery of Iona,¹⁶⁶ to which he returned after some years of a too laborious episcopate in Mercia, to seek the peace of cloistered life in that citadel of Celtic monachism. The third Bishop¹⁶⁷ of Mercia, Trumhere, an abbot in Northumbria, and an Anglo-Saxon by birth, came, like his brethren, from the Celtic cloisters, and was, like them, consecrated by the Bishop of Lindisfarne.¹⁶⁸ His two successors, Jaruman and Ceadda, had the same origin; the one was born in Ireland, and the other, a Saxon by birth, had been ordained by the Scots.¹⁶⁹

It is thus evident that the extension of Christianity and the government of the Church among the Saxons of Mercia were entirely under the influence of Scotch or Anglo-Celtic monks, disciples and spiritual descendants of St. Columba.

659.

This state of matters was not at all altered when the Mercians, rising under three of their principal chiefs, shook off the yoke of Oswy, and took as their king a youthful son of Penda, whom these three earls had kept in concealment since the overthrow of his father. They drove out the officials of the Northumbrian king, but they kept, with the bishop the faith which had come to them from Northumbria, and which was to them now no less dear than their freedom and their reconquered frontiers. They desired, ¹⁶⁵ "Paucitas enim sacerdotum cogebat unum antistitem duobus populis præfici." — BEDE, iii. 21. It should be observed that these two races were long before united under the same kings.

¹⁶⁶ COLGAN, Trias Thaumaturga, p. 488.

¹⁶⁷ Trumhere had been abbot of the Monastery of Gilling, founded by Queen Eanfleda, on the spot of her cousin King Oswy's murder. See above, p. 253.

¹⁶⁸ "Diuma, natione Scotus. . . . Ceollach et ipse de natione Scotorum . . . reversus est ad insulam Hii, ubi plurimorum caput et arcem Scoti habuere cœnobium. . . . Trumheri, de natione quidem Anglorum, sed edoctus et ordinatus a Scotis." — BEDE, iii. 21, 24.

¹⁶⁹ "Anglicus, sed a Scotis ordinatus." — Anglia Sacra, vol i. Cf. EDDIUS, Vita S. Wilfrid.

they said, to be free, with a king of their own race, on earth, without ceasing to serve Christ, the true and eternal King; so as to gain His kingdom of heaven.¹⁷⁰

Twenty years later, this stubborn repugnance of the Mercians to the yoke of their Northumbrian neighbors manifested itself with painful distinctness among the monks of one of the principal monasteries of the country. It was at Bardeney, in that province of Lindsay (Lincolnshire), the conquest of which had already cost good King Oswald his life. His niece, the daughter of Oswy had become queen of Mercia. It was her desire that this monastery, which was especially dear to her as well as to her husband, should receive the remains of her uncle. The bones of the sainted king arrived one evening, borne in a chariot, at the gate of the monastery, but the monks refused to receive them. "We know well," said they, "that he is holy; but he is not of our country, and in other days he subdued us by force."¹⁷¹ It was necessary to yield to this explosion of patriotic rancor, and the sacred body had to remain all night in the open air. The next morning the monks were told that a luminous column had descended from heaven on the car which bore the corpse of the Northumbrian king, and had been seen by all the country round about. Upon this they thought better of it, and opened the door of their church to the uncle of their protectress.

The Mercian monks of Bardeney refuse to receive the body of the holy Northumbrian king Oswald.

675.

His relics thenceforth remained there revered by all. A banner of purple and gold placed over his shrine betokened his twofold dignity as saint and king. But it is not the less necessary to note this first and instinctive outburst of a local and provincial patriotism, sometimes even more powerful than the popular devotion, a new explosion of which long after brought about the murder of the pious queen who had striven so anxiously to endow Mercia with the relics of the great Northumbrian saint.¹⁷² For the history of these times

¹⁷⁰ "Ejectis principibus regis non proprii, fines suos fortiter simul et libertatem receperunt. Sicque cum suo rege liberi, Christo vero rege pro semipiterno in cælis regno, servire gaudebant." — BEDE, iii. 24.

¹⁷¹ "Quia etsi sanctum cum noverant, tamen quia de alia provincia ortus fuerat et super eos regnum acceperat, veteranis cum odiis etiam mortuum insequabatur." — BEDE, iii. 11. It is plain that this passage does not favor the interpretation of Father Faber, who sees in the conduct of the monks of Bardeney a repugnance to the Celtic rite and the Scots saints. — Life of St. Oswald, p. 68.

¹⁷² "Ut regia viri sancti persona memoriam haberet æternam, vexillum ejus super tumbam auro et purpura compositum adposuerunt." — BEDE, and races never allows us to forget that barbarism was always ready to reclaim its ancient rights even amidst the blossoming of Christian virtues and monastic austerities.

The entire narrative is very confused, very obscure, in great measure unknown, and much forgotten. But across these darkling foundations of the primitive history of Christian races stirs everywhere a potent and heroic breath, the breath of life, of the true and noble life — that breath which has made out of the confused masses of barbarism those modern Christian nations, free and manly, among whom the place held by England is known to all.

V.

Summary
of the successive
conversion
of the kingdoms of the Heptarchy.
597-653.

In summing up the history of the efforts made during the sixty years between the landing of Augustin and the death of Penda to introduce Christianity into England, the results may be stated thus: Of the eight kingdoms of the Anglo-Saxon Confederation, that of Kent alone was exclusively won and retained by the Roman monks, whose first attempts among the East Saxons and Northumbrians ended in failure. In Wessex and in East Anglia the Saxons of the West and the Angles of the East were converted by the combined action of Continental missionaries and Celtic monks. As to the two Northumbrian kingdoms, and those of Essex and Mercia, which comprehended in themselves more than two-thirds of the territory occupied by the German conquerors, these four countries owed their final conversion exclusively to the peaceful invasion of the Celtic monks, who not only rivalled the zeal of the Roman monks, but who, the first obstacles once surmounted, showed much more perseverance and gained much more success.

All the kingdoms of the Heptarchy have thus passed under our review except that of Sussex, or the Saxons of the South. It was the smallest of all, but one of the earliest founded; ¹⁷³ and the first German invaders of the southern coast of Great

1. c. This daughter of Oswy was named Osthryda. She frequently lived at Bardeney, where she received the visits of the neighboring abbesses, whom she was able to interest in the veneration of her uncle. She was assassinated by the nobles of Mercia in 697. It will be seen farther on, that her husband King Ethelred afterwards became a monk.

¹⁷³ By Ælla in 477.

Britain were notorious among all the others for their ferocity and their invincible vigor. Although they were next neighbors to the kingdom of Kent, the Roman missionaries, Augustin's companions, have left no trace of their presence among them, if indeed they ever tried to penetrate there. The Celtic monks, more enterprising or more persevering, made their way thither to form a first station, an advanced post, as it were, of their future army. They founded the very small Monastery of Bosham, protected on one side by the sea, on the other by forests, and here vegetated five or six monks who came from East Anglia, the nearest Northumbrian province, under the leadership of an Irishman, the compatriot and disciple of that Fursy whose strange visions were everywhere narrated. There they served God as they best could, humbly and poorly ; but not one of the Saxons of the country would listen to their preaching, still less adopt their manner of life.¹⁷⁴ This is the only example known to us of a complete failure. And yet the people of Sussex, although the last of all the Saxons to receive the Gospel, owe, as we shall see, that blessing to a monk trained in the school of the Celtic missionaries. This monk, however, by forsaking the rule of his first masters, in order to connect himself more closely with Roman tradition and authority, produced in the new Church of England a revolution which it now remains for us to record.

¹⁷⁴ "Monachus quidam de natione Scotorum, vocabulo Dicul, habens monasterium permodicum. . . . In humili et paupere vita Domino famulantes. Sed provincialium nullus eorum vel vitam æmulari vel prædicationem curabat audire." — BEDE, iv. 13. Compare iii. 19.

BOOK XII.

ST. WILFRID ESTABLISHES ROMAN UNITY AND THE BENEDICTINE ORDER, 634-709.

"Sanctus haberi Justitiæque tenax, factis dictisque mereris ?
Agnosco procerem."—JUVENAL.

CHAPTER I.

BEGINNING OF WILFRID'S CAREER—ASSEMBLY OF WHITBY.

Birth and early years of Wilfrid. — Note on his biographer Eddi. — Protected by the Queen of Northumbria, he enters at Lindisfarne, then goes to Rome, where no Anglo-Saxon had yet been. — He passes by Canterbury and stops at Lyons, where he separates from his companion Benedict Biscop, and where the archbishop wishes to give him his niece in marriage. — Wilfrid at Rome. — In returning by Lyons he receives the Romish tonsure and escapes, against his will, from martyrdom. — Returned to England, he becomes the intimate friend of Alchfrid, son of King Oswy. — New monastery founded at Ripon, from whence the monks of the Celtic ritual are expelled. — Popularity of Wilfrid. — He is ordained priest by a French bishop. — Southern Ireland had already adopted the Romish computation for the celebration of Easter. — The dispute on this question revived by Wilfrid in Northumbria, and division of the royal family. — The King Oswy follows the Celtic ritual; his wife and son that of Rome. — Importance and nature of the Pascal difference. — Moderation of the Romish Church throughout the dispute. — A rivalry of influence mingles with the ritualistic dispute. — Assembly of Whitby, convoked by the king to end the controversy: composition of the assembly: the two chambers: principal persons; on the side of the Celts, the Abbess Hilda and her two communities, the Bishops of Lindisfarne and London; on the side of Rome, the young King Alchfrid, the old deacon James, and Wilfrid. — The authority of Columba unwisely invoked. — The king pronounces for the Romish Easter, and the assembly ratifies his decision. — Bishop Colman protests, abdicates, and returns to Iona, carrying with him the bones of his predecessor St. Aidan, the Celtic apostle of Northumbria.

WHILE the bishops and monks of Celtic origin were gradually establishing their authority, together with that of the Christian faith, in the greater part of the land of the Heptarchy, protected by the ægis of the Northumbrian kings, and without any ostensible relation either with Rome or with the Roman colony and its official metropolis of Canterbury, a young Anglo-Saxon, destined to transform the Church of England, was growing up unknown. More powerful than the missionaries sent from Rome, it was to be given to him, after many a struggle and many a defeat, to extend the authority of the Holy See over all Anglo-Saxon Christianity, to re-establish, even to his own prejudice, the supremacy of the metropolitan see instituted by Gregory, and to substitute everywhere the rule of St. Benedict for the observances and ascendancy of the sons of St. Columba.¹

Birth and
early years of Wilfrid.
634.

This young man was named Wilfrid, and belonged by birth to the highest nobility of Northumbria. He was born in 634, the day after the death of King Edwin, the flight of Bishop Paulinus, and the apparently irreparable downfall of the Romish mission in the north of England.

Of him, as of all the greater saints, and especially of St.

¹ The life of Wilfrid was written by one of his companions, the monk Eddi, surnamed Stephen, whose work is regarded as the most ancient monument of Anglo-Saxon literature after those of St. Adhelm. Venerable Bede did not write till later. He was evidently acquainted with the text of Eddi, which he has sometimes reproduced, but without quoting him, while extenuating to the utmost all the wrongs attributed to the bishops and kings with whom Wilfrid had to contend. This life, so curious and so important for the ecclesiastical history of the seventh century, had remained unknown to Mabillon and the Bollandists when they published, the former his volume of the Acta of this century in 1672, and the latter their third volume of April in 1675. Some time afterwards Mabillon was informed that the MS. of Eddi was found in the Cottonian Library at Oxford. It was communicated to him by Gale, a learned Englishman, and he published it in the supplement to his fifth volume. Gale republished it soon after in his collection of the Scriptores Historiæ Britannicæ XV. (Oxonii, 1691), with the new chapters discovered in a manuscript at Salisbury. They were reprinted by Mabillon in the last volume of his Acta Sanctorum Ordinis S. Benedicti, with a warm and touching homage to his English correspondents: "Sic integrum exhibemus opus tandiu desideratum omnibus litteratis, qui humanissimis et clarissimis viris Bernardo et Gaelo gratias mecum habebunt immortales." After this contemporary author, and Bede, who follows him so closely, the life of Wilfrid was written in Latin verse by an English Benedictine of the ninth century named Fridegod, whose poem, though ridiculous in style, contains some new details; then in the twelfth century by the celebrated Eadmer and by William of Malmesbury. Cf. Act. SS. O. B., vol. iii. p. 150, and vol. v. p. 632. The collection called Lives of the English Saints, published by the Puseyites in 1844, contains a Life of St. Wilfrid by the Rev. Mr. Faber, who died an Oratorian in 1864.

Columba and St. Bernard, it is related that his birth was accompanied by a prophecy of his future glory. The house where his mother lay appeared all at once enveloped in a flame which seemed to reach to heaven. The frightened neighbors rushed to extinguish the fire, when they were met by the attendants of the new mother, who said to them, "Be at ease, it is not a fire, but only this child who is just born." Such a prodigy naturally drew attention to the infant, and all the more because his father was one of the principal nobles of the country, and the boy himself, as he grew up, displayed a singularly gracious nature. While he was still in the cradle, he lost his pious mother, and his father having married a second time, he resolved at thirteen years of age to escape the persecutions of a harsh and haughty stepmother by leaving home and devoting himself to God. For this the consent, not only of his father, but also of King Oswy as chief of the nation, was necessary. At his age a young Anglo-Saxon noble was already treated as a man; he asked and obtained accordingly from his father a suit of armor, with horses and servants in sufficient number to enable him to appear at court in a manner worthy of his rank. Thus equipped he went to seek, not King Oswy, but his queen. He found her surrounded by the leaders of the nobility whom he was accustomed to see and to wait upon at his father's house, and who were already disposed in his favor on account of his intelligence and modesty. They presented him to the young queen, who was only seven or eight years older than himself, and whose heart he gained as much by his youthful grace as by the refinement and truthfulness of his intellect.²

He is protected by Queen Eanfleda. 648.

The queen herself was no other than that Eanfleda whose baptism, it may be remembered, had given the signal for the conversion of Northumbria,³ and who had been the first Christian of the kingdom. Her father was the martyr King Edwin, and her mother Ethelburga, daughter of the royal ² "De inclyta gentis Anglorum prosapia . . . nobilitate natus." — EADMER, Vita, n° 4. "De utero matris suæ valde religiosæ. . . . Omnes concito cursu pavidī advenerunt. . . . Sustinete . . . ecce modo infans hic natus est. . . . Omnibus in domum patris sui venientibus aut regalibus sociis aut eorum servis edocte ministravit. . . . Privigna (noverca, FRIDEGODUS) enim molesta et inmitis. . . . Pergens itinere usquedum invenirent reginam regis . . . et per nobiles viros quibus ante in domo patris sui ministrabat laudatus præsentatusque est reginæ . . . erat decorus aspectu et acutissimi ingenii." — EDDIUS, c. 1, 2. "Ut merito a majoribus quasi unus ex ipsis amaretur, veneraretur, amplecteretur." — BEDE, v. 19.

³ See p. 210.

convert of Augustin, who still lived in the monastery of Lymington, where she had passed her widowhood in retirement. Eanfleda herself was destined to end her days in the cloister under the crosier of that daughter whom she dedicated to God in order to obtain the defeat of the tyrant Penda. The antecedents and the character of the Queen of Northumbria naturally influenced her in favor of the young noble's desire. She granted him, or prevailed with her husband to grant him, authority to renounce all public and military service in order to enter upon a religious life, in which

He obtains from the king permission to become a monk at Lindisfarne.
648.

she promised to watch over him. She then confided him to the care of a favorite follower of the king, who himself afterwards retired from the world. This aged warrior conducted his young and noble charge to the great monastic sanctuary of Northumbria at Lindisfarne. There Wilfrid won all hearts as he had won the queen's. His humility and ardor for monastic rule, no less than his passion for study, marked him out for the affectionate admiration of the cenobites. He soon learned the whole Psalter in the version of St. Jerome, and made the contents of all the other books which he found in the library of the monastery his own.⁴

Thus the years of his youth flowed on at Lindisfarne; but before he yielded the half of his long hair to the scissors, which, cutting bare the upper part and front of his head, would have impressed on him the monastic tonsure according to the Irish fashion, he began to find out that all was not perfect in those Celtic rules and traditions of which Lindisfarne was the centre and stronghold in England.

He undertakes a journey to Rome,
where no Anglo-
Saxon had yet been.

With a sagacity much admired by his historians, he determined to make a journey which no other Anglo-Saxon had yet undertaken, and to go to Rome, not merely to obtain the remission of his sins and the blessing of the Mother of the Churches, but also to study the monastic and ecclesiastical observances which were followed under the shadow of the See of St. Peter. The monks of Lindisfarne being informed by their pupil of this extraordinary project, not only used no attempts at dissuasion, but actually encouraged him to accomplish it;⁵

⁴ "Concedit in quod petierit, ut sub suo consilio et munimine serviret. . . . Quidam nobilis ex sodalibus regis valde sibi amabilis et fidelis, Cudda. . . . Omnibus statim in amore factus est. . . . Omnem psalmorum seriem memorialiter et aliquantos libros didicit." — EDDIUS, c. 2.

⁵ "Adhuc laicus capite. . . . Adhuc inatritam vitam genti nostræ tentare in cor adolescentis ascendit." — EDDIUS, c. 23. "Nedum quidem adtonsus, nothing could better prove their good faith and implicit subordination to Catholic unity. Wilfrid then went to ask his father's blessing, and to confide his plans to his royal protectress. Queen Eanfleda, who, after the murder of her father, had taken refuge in the country of her mother at Canterbury, was too much the spiritual daughter of the Romish missionaries not to approve of Wilfrid's design. She sent him with warm recommendations to her cousin-german Ercombert, King of Kent,⁶ praying that prince to keep the young pilgrim with him until he should be able to find suitable companions for so long a journey.

On his arrival at Canterbury Wilfred exercised the same fascination upon the King of Kent as upon all those who had known him from his childhood. Seeing the young and handsome Northumbrian wholly given up to prayer and study, Ercombert conceived for him the most ardent attachment, and kept him at his court for a whole year. Wilfrid took advantage of this interval to study and adopt the Romish usages as they could be learned in the Roman colony at Canterbury, which was still governed by a missionary brought over by St. Augustin, Archbishop Honorius, now his fourth successor. He took the trouble to substitute, in his happy and flexible memory, the fifth edition of the old version of the Psalter, which was then used in Rome, for the version corrected by St. Jerome, which he had learned by heart at Lindisfarne, and which was used in the Celtic Church as well as in the Churches of Gaul and Germany.⁷ Meantime the 652.

Passes
through Canterbury.
627-633.

verum eis quæ tonsura majores sunt virtutibus, humilitatis et obedientiæ non mediocriter insignitus. . . . Animadvertit paulatim adolescens animi sagacis, minime perfectam esse virtutis viam quæ tradebatur a Scottis proposuitque animo venire Roman, et qui ad sedem apostolicam ritus ecclesiastici sive monasteriales servarentur, videre. . . . Laudaverunt ejus propositum eumque id . . . perficere suadebant." — BEDE, 1. c.

⁶ ETHIELBERT, first Christian king, died in 613, married BERTHA, granddaughter of ST. CLOTILDE.

⁷ "Rex vero . . . servum Dei . . . mirifice diligebat . . . Psalmos quos prius secundum Hieronymum legerat, more Romanorum juxta quintam editionem memorialiter transmutavit. . . . Secundum petitionem reginæ languentis tædio. . . . Perrexit cum benedictione parentum suorum. . . . Omnibus affabilis . . . corpore strenuus . . . pedibus velox . . . tristia ora nunquam contraxit . . . alacer et gaudens navigio." — EDDIUS, c. 3. "Super-venit illo alius adolescens de nobilibus Anglorum." — BEDE, 1. c.

Queen of Northumbria, impatient for the return of her favorite, urged upon King Ercombert that Wilfrid should commence his pilgrimage, and soon afterwards the monarch gave him leave to depart, sending with him another young Northumbrian noble, Biscop Baducing, equally distinguished by his zeal for study, equally inflamed with the desire of visiting Rome, and whom, under the name of Benedict Biscop, we shall afterwards see filling an important part in the monastic history of his own province.

Thus they started; and it is easy to imagine the joy and ardor of these young and brave Christians, when, after having rapidly crossed the Straits, they began their journey through France. Wilfrid especially, with all the enthusiasm of his age, pursued his way, strong and unwearied, with an affability and gayety which nothing could alter. His companion, a little older, was of a more austere temper; thus it was impossible that they should long agree.⁸ On their

634.

At Lyons, he parts from his companion, St. Benedict Biscop. arrival at Lyons, Biscop proceeded immediately to Rome, while Wilfrid remained some months with the Archbishop Delphinus. Here also was displayed the marvellous empire which this youth obtained over the hearts of the most different persons, from the young queen of his own country and the warlike comrades of his father, to this Gallo-French prelate who was so charmed with him, with the pure and candid soul which was well reflected in the serene beauty of his countenance, that he offered to adopt him as his son, giving him his niece in marriage, and the government of the whole of an adjoining province. But Wilfrid replied, "I have made a vow; I have left, like Abraham, my kindred and my father's house in order to visit the Apostolic See, and to study there the rules of ecclesiastical discipline, that my nation may profit by them. But if God gives me life I will return this way and see you again."

The archbishop, recognizing the earnest sincerity of his vocation, let him depart for Rome with all his suite; for the young and high-born Northumbrian did not travel as a simple pilgrim, but with all kinds of guides and baggage.⁹

⁸ "Decedente ab eo austeræ mentis duce." — EDDIUS, c. 3.

⁹ "Videns in facie serena quod benedictam mentem gerebat. . . . Si manseris mecum fiducialiter, dabo tibi vicinam partem Galliarum ad regendum virginemque filiam fratris mei in uxorem, et te ipsum adoptivum filium habebis. . . . Sunt vota mea Domino . . . ut visitem sedem apostolicam et ecclesiasticæ disciplinæ regulas didicerim in augmentum regis nostræ. . . . Cum ducibus et opibus." — EDDIUS, c. 4. "Cunctis simul quæ necessitas poscebat itineris largiter subministratis." — BEDE, l. c. This Archbishop

On entering Rome, his first thought was to hurry to the Church of St. Andrew, from whence Augustin and the first missionaries to England had set out. Kneeling before the altar, where there was a copy of the Gospels, he implored the Apostle St. Andrew, for the love of that God whom he had confessed by his martyrdom, to open his mind, and to atone for the rustic plainness of his Saxon tongue by giving him grace to study, to understand, and to teach the English nation the eloquence of the Gospel. After which, as he began to visit, one by one, all the sanctuaries of the Eternal City, he met with a wise and holy man, Archdeacon Boniface, one of the principal counsellors of the Pope, who took pleasure in instructing the young stranger as his own child, carefully explaining to him the four Gospels, the ecclesiastical discipline, and the calculation of Easter, which the Celts of Britain and Ireland refused to admit. Finally he presented him to the Pope, to whom he explained the object of the journey of this youthful servant of God: the Pontiff placed his hand upon the head of the young Englishman, blessed, and prayed for him. Thus Wilfrid left Rome, assuredly without suspecting the harsh and cruel trials which were fated to bring him back thither so often again.¹⁰

Wilfrid at Rome.
634.

In returning from Rome, Wilfrid, as he had promised, again stopped at Lyons to see the archbishop, who received him with all his former tenderness, still insisting upon making him his heir. He even remained three whole years with this prelate, occupied in completing his ecclesiastical education among the learned doctors whom he found at Lyons, as if his desire had been to arm himself completely against Celtic usages, by comparing the teaching received at Rome with the venerable traditions of the earliest Gallican Church. Here, too, he received from the hands of the archbishop the tonsure which he preferred,

Wilfrid receives the Romish
tonsure at Lyons.

Delfin or Delphinus is one of the most disputed personages in the history of the seventh century; see the article consecrated to him by the Bollandists in vol. vii. of September, p. 720 to 744. It is he who is venerated in the diocese of Lyons under the name of St. Annemond or St. Chamond.

¹⁰ "De remissione peccatorum suorum, pro qua instantius orabat, per hoc certificari postulabat, si de ingenii sui tarditate et linguæ suæ rusticitate, ipsius interventu, absolvi mereretur." — RICARDI HAGULSTADENSIS, Hist., c. 3. "Ut pro sua intercessione Dominus ei legendi ingenium et docendi in gentibus eloquentiam Evangeliorum concedisset. . . . Qui ponens manum benedictam super caput adolescentuli servi Dei, cum oratione benedixit eum." EDDIUS, c. 5. The Pope was probably Eugenius I., elected in 654, during the exile of the holy martyr Pope Martin I.

no longer that Celtic tonsure which shaved the top and front of the head from one ear to the other, leaving the hair to hang down behind, which the Romans, it is not known why, called the tonsure of Simon the Magician; nor the Oriental tonsure, which completely bared the head, and which was believed to be that of St. Paul; but the Roman tonsure; that of St. Peter, which removed all the hair except a circle round the skull, representing the form of the crown of thorns.

The extreme importance attached to this difference of tonsure, puerile and insignificant as it is in our eyes, will no longer astonish us when we remember the great significance of long hair among all barbarous races, and above all among our Merovingians. Long hair in men was not only the mark of royal or very noble birth, but also a sign of power, daring, and pride. Apart even from the question of ritual unity, Wilfrid and the Romans, without doubt, saw in the persistence of the Celts in wearing long hair, at least at the back of their heads, a vestige of pride and want of discipline incompatible with the ecclesiastical profession, and especially with the life of the cloister.

Wilfrid's visit to Delphinus was cut short by the death of the archbishop, who perished a victim to the tyranny of Ebroïn, then governor of Neustria and Burgundy in the name of the Regent Bathilda, the French queen, once an English slave, who was afterwards to become a nun and a saint. Delphinus was seized in his metropolitan city by the soldiers of Ebroïn, who dragged him to Chalons, and there put him to death. Wilfrid followed him, in spite of the entreaties of the martyr; with the incomparable enthusiasm and heroism of youth, he hoped to partake the fate of his protector. "What could be better," he said, "than to die together, father and son, and to be with Christ?" After the murder of the archbishop, when Wilfrid, stripped of his vestments, waited his turn, the chiefs of the party asked who this handsome youth, so eager for death, might be? and when they were told that he was a foreigner, of the race of those famous conquerors of Great Britain who were feared all over the world, they resolved to spare him. After this, as soon as he had superintended the burial of his spiritual father, he returned to England.¹¹

Despite himself he escapes martyrdom.

¹¹ "Amor magis ac magis crescebat inter eos. . . . A doctoribus valde eruditus multa didicit. . . . Tonsuræ de ore apostoli formulam, in modum coronæ spinæ caput Christi cingentis . . . libenter suscepit. . . . Nihil est

These details may perhaps appear too minute; but they will be pardoned on account of the interest which attaches to the early years of a man destined to exercise, throughout half a century, a preponderating influence over his country, and, through her, over the power and freedom of the whole Church. Nor is it a matter without interest to seize in their very birth the manifestations of that mysterious and disinterested attraction which drew towards Rome, and towards Roman ideas and practices, this noble and daring scion of a barbarous race, this champion whose impassioned constancy contributed so powerfully in the future to link the destinies of England, and, by her means, of Germany and the whole west, to the foot of the apostolic throne.

On his return to England, Wilfrid, from the first, by the crown-like form of his tonsure, set up a visible and permanent protest against the ascendancy of Celtic customs. He thus signified his intention to enter upon the struggle as soon as the opportunity should present itself. It is not known whether he returned to Lindisfarne — at any rate he did not remain there. He was soon summoned to the court of the young Alchfrid, son of King Oswy, whom the latter had just associated in the kingdom. We have already noticed the touching friendship of Prince Alchfrid for the son of the cruel enemy of the Northumbrians, Penda of Mercia, and his influence on the conversion of the Mercians.¹²

Wilfrid, after his return to England, becomes the intimate friend of the son of Oswy.

melius quam pater et filius simul mori et esse cum Christo. . . . Quis est iste juvenis formosus qui se præparat ad mortem? . . . Transmarinus de Anglorum gente ex Britannia. . . . Parcite illi et nolite tangere eum." — EDDIUS, c. 6. "Quod tunc temporis magno terrori quamplurimis erat, sua scilicet Anglorum natio." — EADMER, n. 11.

¹² Most historians have confounded this Alchfrid, eldest son of Oswy, with his younger brother Aldfrid. Bede, however, has carefully distinguished them by the orthography of their names, and Lappenberg has put this distinction beyond a doubt. Alchfrid, the eldest, who married a daughter of Penda in 653, and was the friend of Wilfrid, died before his father; Aldfrid, probably a natural son of Oswy, educated and for a long time protected at Iona, only returned to succeed Egfrid, the second son and successor of Oswy, and to be the implacable adversary of Wilfrid. See the genealogical table Appendix VI., p. 752. It must be allowed, however, that the confusion which prevails throughout the primitive history of the Anglo-Saxons is greatly augmented by the fondness they had for giving to the children of one family names almost identical: thus, Oswald, Oswin, Oswulf, Osred, Osrie, Ostrytha, in the dynasty of Northumbrian kings; Sebert, Sigebert, Sigehere, Sigeherd, in that of the kings of Essex; Cæwlin, Ceolric, Ceolwulf, Ceanwalch, Ceadwalla, in that of the kings of Wessex; Penda and Peada in Mercia, &c. This custom was not peculiar only to the royal families; the Bishop Ceadda had three brothers, Cedd, Cælin, and Cynnbill, all monks like himself.

This young prince, the son of a father who had been instructed in the school of the Scottish monks, and of a mother baptized and educated by the Romish missionaries, had inclined from his cradle to the religious exercises of his mother. He had always loved and sought to follow the Roman rules. At the news that the favorite of his mother, the young and noble Wilfrid, already so well known by his piety at Lindisfarne, had arrived from Rome, and was teaching the true Easter with all the regulations of the Church of St. Peter, Alchfrid sent for him, received him like an angel come from God, and fell at his feet to demand his blessing. Then, after discussing thoroughly the usages of the Roman Church, he conjured him, in the name of God and St. Peter, to remain with him, and instruct both himself and his people. Wilfrid willingly obeyed. To the irresistible attraction which, in his earliest youth, he had exercised over all hearts, there was now joined the authority of a man who had travelled, studied, and seen death and martyrdom close at hand. This increase of influence did but increase the affection of Alchfrid. The young prince and the young monk, one in soul, became still more one in heart; they loved each other with a passionate tenderness, which every day increased. The friendship of David and Jonathan, so often quoted by monastic annalists, appeared to the Northumbrians to be reproduced in that which existed between the son of their king and his youthful countryman.¹³

New monastery of Wilfrid at Ripon, from which the monks who adhere to Celtic rites are expelled.

Wilfrid, with his Roman tonsure, and his ideas still more Roman, could not remain at Lindisfarne. Alchfrid therefore sought not merely to retain him near to himself, but also to create for him a great monastic establishment of which he should be the head, and from whence his influence might spread itself over the Northumbrian Church.¹⁴ The young king had already founded a new monastery at Ripon, in a fine situation, at the confluence of two rivers, and in the very heart of Deira; he had given it to monks of the Celtic ritual, all the religious communities in the country being composed either of monks of Scottish origin or of Northumbrians educated by the Scots. The first occupants of Ripon had come from Melrose, under the conduct of Abbot Eata, one of the twelve young Saxons whom St. Aidan, the first Celtic missionary to Northumbria, chose for his future fellow-laborers; and had among them, in the capacity of steward, a young monk named Cuthbert, who was also destined to fill a great position, and to eclipse Wilfrid himself in the devotion of the northern English.¹⁵

¹³ "Catholicas Ecclesie regulas sequi semper et amare didicerat." — BEDE, v. 19. "Audiens servum Dei. . . . Verum Pascha prædicantem et S. Petri ecclesie disciplinam multiplicem didicisse, quam maxime rex diligebat. . . . Mirifice anima utriusque in alterum conglutinata erat, sicut animam David et Jonathæ in alterum compaginatam legimus . . . dedie in diem inter eos amor augebatur." — EDDIUS, c. 7.

¹⁴ Eddi and Bede mention a former donation given by the young king to Wilfrid, and situated at Stanford or Stamford. But no important foundation resulted from this, and they do not even agree as to the position of the domain. We will merely remark that it supported only ten families, while that of Ripon sufficed for forty, according to the Saxon mode of valuing land.

Alchfrid had endowed this foundation with a domain so large that it was inhabited by forty families. But soon, under the influence of those Roman predilections which the return of Wilfrid developed in his mind, he required the new community of Ripon to celebrate Easter at the date fixed by Rome, and to renounce the other customs in which the Celtic Church differed from that of Rome. They unanimously declared that they would rather go away and give up the sanctuary which had just been given them, than abandon their national traditions. Alchfrid took them at their word, and gave them their dismissal. Abbot Eata and the future St. Cuthbert returned to Melrose, and Wilfrid was installed in their place by his royal friend, with the express intention of thus giving him the means of propagating the rules and doctrines which he preferred. Thus the war commenced — a war of which Wilfrid did not live to see the end, although he carried it on for more than half a century.¹⁶

661-664.

Wilfrid was now at the brightest moment of his life. He employed the bounty of his friend to carry out the generous impulses of his heart, and scattered round him abundant ¹⁵ "Famulus Domini Cuthbertus officio præpositus hospitum." — BEDE, Vita S. Cuthberti, c. 7.

¹⁶ Nothing can be more singular than the different manner in which the same historian gives an account of the same events in two different works. And this historian is no other than the Venerable Bede! In his Ecclesiastical History he seems to treat the expelled monks as obstinate rebels: "Quia illi (qui Scottos sequebantur) data sibi optione maluerunt loco cedere quam mutare suam consuetudinem et Pascha catholicum cæterosque ritus canonicos juxta Romanæ et apostolicæ ecclesiæ consuetudinem recipere, dedit (Alchfridus) hoc illi quem melioribus imbutum disciplinis ac moribus vidit." — Hist. Eccles., iii. 25, v. 19. In his life of Cuthbert he honors them as the victims of an unexpected storm: "Quia fragilis est et mare freti volubilis omnis seculi status, instante subito turbine, præfatus abbas Eata cum Cuthberto et ceteris quos secum adduxerat fratribus, domum repulsus est, et locus monasterii, quod considerat, aliis ad incolendum monachis datur." — C. 8.

alms; he saw the ideas so dear to him spreading and strengthening themselves; he rejoiced in the protection of a prince who was to him at once a brother and a son; and, to sum up all, he was almost as dear to the people of Deira as to their king. The nobles and other Northumbrians idolized him, and regarded him as a prophet.¹⁷

Wilfrid is ordained priest by a Frankish
bishop.

The young abbot, however, was not yet a priest; and it was the earnest desire of Alchfrid that his friend should be his confessor, and remain in some degree attached to his person.¹⁸ The whole of Northumbria was then under the rule of Colman, the Celtic Bishop of Lindisfarne; but it was not from him that Wilfrid could have willingly received the sacrament of ordination. However, at this juncture the king received a visit from Agilbert, a Frenchman by birth, educated in Ireland, who, having become Bishop of the kingdom of Wessex, had lost half of his diocese because the king of the country, weary of listening to sermons which were not in Saxon, had chosen to constitute another bishop without Agilbert's consent. He therefore, not willing to sanction this abuse of power, had renounced his see.¹⁹ Although the King of Wessex was the intimate friend of Alchfrid, it was to the Northumbrian court that the displaced bishop first came to seek a refuge before returning to his own country. Alchfrid made known to him the virtue and good repute of Wilfrid, enlarging upon his humility, his fervor in prayer, his prudence, goodness, and sobriety — the latter being a virtue always greatly admired by the Anglo-Saxons, who practised it very little — and last, and above all, the gift which he had of commanding with authority and preaching with clearness. "Such a man is made to be a bishop," said Agilbert, who did not hesitate to ordain him priest in his monastery at Ripon, and, as Alchfrid had requested, for the personal service of the prince and his court.²⁰

639-663.

The influence of Wilfrid must have grown rapidly during the four or five years which followed his ¹⁷ "Non solum rex sanctum abbatem diligebat, sed omnis populus, nobiles et ignobiles eum habebant quasi prophetam Dei, ut erat." — EDDIUS.

¹⁸ "Desiderante rege ut vir tantæ eruditionis et religionis sibi specialiter individuo comitatu sacerdos esset ac doctor." — BEDE, v. 19.

¹⁹ See above, p. 286. Cf. BEDE, iii. 7.

²⁰ "Dicens virum esse . . . sobrium . . . plenum auctoritatis . . . non vinolentum . . . et bene docentem sermone puro et aperto: ideo rogo te ut imponas super eum presbyteri gradum et sit mihi comes individuus. . . . Talis utique debet episcopus fieri." — EDDIUS, c. 9.

return to England, and he must have displayed great energy in his attack upon the Celtic spirit of the nation, to have brought about so promptly the decisive crisis which we are about to record. It must be remarked that he alone took the initiative and the responsibility. In this conflict, the object of which was to secure preponderance of Rome, we can find no trace of any mission or impulse whatever from Rome. The Roman colony of Canterbury, whose chief was an Anglo-Saxon, lent no direct assistance; and in Northumbria, as in the neighboring kingdoms, — converted to Christianity by Celtic apostles, — Wilfrid found no aid except the recollection of the abortive efforts of the first Romish missionaries, or the limited influence possessed by priests who had accompanied princesses of the race of Hengist, when they entered by marriage other dynasties of the Anglo-Saxon descendants of Odin; unless it were the testimony of travellers who, arriving from Canterbury or France, might express their astonishment to see the northern Christians, converts of Scottish missionaries, celebrating Easter at a different time from the rest of Christendom.²¹

There was indeed one fact which might encourage him to attempt again, in another region and under circumstances far less favorable, the enterprise in which Augustin had failed. Of the four countries in which the Celtic Church reigned Ireland, Wales, Scotland proper, and Northumbria, with their four monastic citadels of Bangor on the sea, Bangor on the Dee, Iona, and Lindisfarne, Ireland, the cradle and chief home of Celtic traditions, had begun in heart to return to Roman unity. Thirty years before, a council had been held at Leighlin, in the south of the island, at the suggestion of Pope Honorius I., who had invited the Scots of Ireland to celebrate Easter according to the common practice of the Church. The fathers of this council, after much animated discussion, had decided that wise and humble men should be sent to Rome, as sons to their mother, to judge of the ceremonies there. These deputies declared, on their return, that they had seen the faithful from all parts of the world celebrating Easter on the same day at Rome. On their report the Romish cycle and rules relative to the paschal calculations were adopted by all the south of Ireland. This decision had been chiefly brought about by the efforts of a disciple and spiritual descendant of

Southern
Ireland
adopts the Romish
Easter.

²¹ BEDE, l. c.

Columba, a monk named Cummian, then abbot of one of the Columbian monasteries in Ireland. Abbot Cummian²² had been obliged to defend himself against the attacks which his partiality for Roman usages brought upon him, by an apologetic letter, still preserved, where his erudition displays itself in an innumerable throng of texts and calculations. He sums up in these decisive words: "Can there be imagined a pretension more perverse and ridiculous than that which says: Rome is mistaken, Jerusalem is mistaken, Alexandria is mistaken, Antioch is mistaken, the whole world is mistaken; the Scots and the Britons alone make no mistake?"²³ But the example of the south of Ireland did not affect the north of the island, and still less the Picts and Scots of Caledonia. The arguments of Cummian could not convince the direct successor of Columba, the Abbot of Iona.²⁴ He, and all his community, obstinately retained the Irish computation; and as it was precisely at this period that the missionaries sent from Ireland relighted in Northumbria the light of the faith, extinct since the death of King Edwin and the flight of Bishop Paulinus, it is easily apparent how it happened that the erroneous calculation of Easter, according to the Celts, took root everywhere together with the new doctrine. It is not even certain that Wilfrid was aware that anything favorable to his views had occurred in that part of Ireland which was furthest from Northumbria, for we do not find any mention of it in his acts or discourses.

The usage in Northumbria as to the celebration of Easter before Wilfrid.

As long as St. Aïdan, the first Celtic apostle of Northumbria, lived, the idea of finding fault with his method of celebrating the greatest feast of that religion which he taught and practised so well, had entered into no man's mind. Whether he himself was ignorant of the difference of ritual, or whether, knowing it, he did not choose to withdraw himself from the usages of his race and of the parent monastery of Iona, he was not the less the object of universal confidence and ven-

²² He must not be confounded with Cumin called the White (Cumineus albus), Abbot of Iona from 657 to 669, author of the oldest biography of St. Columba.

²³ "Quid pravius sentire potest de ecclesia matre quam si dicamus: Roma errat, Hierosolyma errat, Alexandria errat, totus mundus errat; soli Scoti et Britones rectum sapiunt!" — CUMMIANUS HIBERNUS, Epist. de Controversia Paschali, in USSERII Sylloge, ii.

²⁴ Segienus, descendant in the fourth degree from the grandfather of Columba, and fourth Abbot of Iona, from 623 to 652. — Cf. LANIGAN, Eccles. Hist. of Ireland, ii. 389. DÖLLINGER, Kirchengeschichte, p. 221.

eration.²⁵ Under his successor, Bishop Finan, the question had been raised by one of the Lindisfarne monks, Irish by birth, who had travelled and studied in France and Italy. This monk, named Ronan, became involved in a violent quarrel with the Bishop of Northumbria upon the subject. He had led back a few to the Roman observance of Easter, and persuaded others to study the matter; but the bishop, harsh and passionate as Columba himself had sometimes been, far from being convinced, was only embittered by the remonstrances of Ronan, which served chiefly to make him a declared adversary of the Roman cause.²⁶

When Finan died, leaving Bishop Colman — like himself, Irish by birth and a monk of Iona — as his successor at Lindisfarne, the dispute became at once open and general. Wilfrid had succeeded in sowing agitation and uncertainty in all minds; and the Northumbrians had come so far as to ask themselves whether the religion which had been taught to them, and which they practised, was indeed the religion of that Christ whose name it bore.²⁷

The two Northumbrian kings mingled in the struggle on different sides. Oswy, the glorious vanquisher of Penda, the liberator of Northumbria, the conqueror and benefactor of Mercia, the Bretwalda or military and religious suzerain of the Anglo-Saxon confederacy, naturally exercised a much greater influence from that of his young son, whom he had associated with himself in the kingdom. And the mind of Oswy, who had been baptized and educated by Celtic monks, who spoke their language perfectly, and was probably desirous of conciliating the numerous Celtic populations who lived under his rule from the Irish Sea to the Firth of Forth, did not go beyond the in-662.

Division in the royal family as to Easter.

²⁵ The judgment of Bede on this aspect of the life of Aidan deserves to be quoted at length, as much on account of its reserve as of its praises: — “Quod autem pascha non suo tempore observabat, vel canonicum ejus tempus ignorans, vel suæ gentis auctoritate ne agnatum sequeretur devictus, non adprobo, nec laudo. . . . Hæc dissonantia paschalis observantiæ vivente Ædano patienter ab omnibus tolerabatur qui patenter intellexerant, quia etsi pascha contra morem eorum qui ipsum miserant facere non potuit, operam fidei, pietatis et dilectionis, juxta morem omnibus sanctis consuetum, diligenter exsequi curavit: unde ab omnibus etiam his qui de Pascha aliter sentiebant, merito diligebatur.” — iii. 17, 25.

²⁶ “Quin potius, quod esset homo ferocis animi, acerbiores castigando et apertum veritatis adversarium reddidit.” — BEDE, iii. 25.

²⁷ “Unde movit hæc questio sensus et corda multorum, timentium ne forte, accepto Christianitatis vocabulo, in vacuum currerent aut cucurrissent.” — BEDE, iii. 25.

structions of his early masters.²⁸ Notwithstanding he had to contend within the circle of his family, not only with his son Alchfrid, excited in behalf of the Romish doctrine by his master and friend Wilfrid, but also with his queen, Eanfleda, who did not need the influence of Wilfrid to make her entirely devoted to the Roman cause, since, on returning from exile to marry Oswy, she had brought with her a Canterbury priest — Romanus by name, and Roman in heart — who guided her religious exercises. Under the direction of Romanus, the queen and all her court followed Roman customs. Two Easter feasts were thus celebrated every year in the same house; and as the Saxon kings had transferred to the chief festivals of the Christian year, and especially to the greatest of all, the meeting of their assemblies, and the occasion which those assemblies gave them of displaying all their pomp, it is easy to understand how painful it must have been for Oswy to sit, with his earls and thanes, at the great feast of Easter, at the end of a wearisome Lent, and to see the queen, with her maids of honor and her servants, persisting in fasting and penitence, it being with her still only Palm Sunday.²⁹

This discord, as Bede says, with regard to Easter, was the capital point of the quarrel which divided the Anglo-Saxons into two bodies according as they had received the faith from Roman or Celtic missionaries. The differences remarked by Augustin in his struggles with the British clergy appear henceforward reduced to this one. The great reproach addressed to the Celtic clergy by the envoy of Pope Gregory, that they despised the work of converting the Saxons, is no longer in question. Our Celts of the North had succeeded only too well, according to Wilfrid, in converting and even in ruling two-thirds of Saxon England. Nor at this phase of the quarrel is there any further mention either of baptismal ceremonies, or of the customs contrary to ecclesiastical celibacy,³⁰ or of any of the other points formerly contested. The

²⁸ "Illorum lingua optime imbutus, nihil melius quam quod illi docuissent aestimabat." — BEDE, l. c.

²⁹ "Observabat et regina Eanfleda cum suis juxta quod in Cantia fieri viderat. . . . Et cum rex Pascha dominicum soltis jejuniis faceret, tunc regina cum suis persistens adhuc in jejunio diem Palmarum celebrare." — BEDE, l. c.

³⁰ It is now clearly shown that, in the Celtic Church, the deacons and priests never strayed from the Romish doctrine of celibacy. Their continence has been attacked, as that of the Briton clergy by Gildas, but no one has been able to prove that they regarded marriage as a remedy for this incontinence. There were depraved priests, there were also clerks not having difference of the two tonsures to which Wilfrid attached such great importance, and which must have struck from the first the eyes and attention of the Anglo-Saxon converts, is not even named in the long discussions of which we still possess a record.³¹ All turn exclusively on the celebration of Easter.

Nothing could be more fanciful and more complicated than this Pascal calculation; nothing more difficult to understand, and especially to explain. Let us try, however, to draw forth some clear ideas from the depths of the endless dissertations of contemporary authors and even of more recent historians. Since the earliest days of Christianity a division had existed as to the proper date for the celebration of Easter. Some churches of Asia Minor followed the custom of the Jews by placing it on the fourteenth day of the first lunar month of the year. But all the churches of the West, of Palestine, and of Egypt, fixed upon the Sunday after the fourteenth day of the month nearest to the vernal equinox, so as not to keep the feast along with the Jews, and the general Council of Nice erected this custom into a law of the Church. Those who had not accepted this law, but persisted in celebrating the fourteenth day, were held as heretics and schismatics, under the name of quartodecimans. The imputation of complicity in this heresy made against the Celtic Church by the chiefs of the Roman clergy in a bull addressed in 640, during the vacancy of the Holy See, to the bishops and abbots of the north of Ireland, was most unjust.³² The only mistake made by the Celts was that of neglecting to keep themselves informed of the difficulties which arose as to the manner of determining the commencement of the first lunar month, which ought to be the Pascal month. As has been already said in respect to the dispute between St. Augustin and the Britons of Cambridgia,³³ they had remained faithful to the custom which prevailed at Rome itself when Patrick and the other missionaries to the British Isles brought thence the light of the Gospel. At that period, in Rome and in all the West, the ancient Jewish cycle of eighty-four years was universally followed to fix this date. The Christians of Alexandria, however, bet-received the higher orders who lived with their wives — but nothing more, and especially no excuse for setting up, either as a doctrine or as a regular habit, the marriage of priests.

In what the difference with regard to Easter consisted.

³¹ However, Bede, who has preserved all these discussions, says, in speaking of the tonsure: "Et de hoc questio non minima erat." — iii. 26.

³² BEDE, ii. 19.

³³ See p. 175.

ter astronomers than those of Rome, and specially charged by the Council of Nice to inform the Pope of the date of Easter of each year, discovered in this ancient cycle some errors of calculation, and after two centuries of disputes they succeeded in making the Roman Church adopt a new Pascal cycle, that which is now universally received, and which limits the celebration of Easter to the interval between the 22d of March and the 24th of April. The Celtic churches had no knowledge of this change, which dated from the year 525 — that is to say, from a time when the invasions of the Saxons probably intercepted their habitual communications with Rome: they retained their old Jewish cycle of eighty-four years, and adhered obstinately to it. They celebrated Easter always on Sunday, but this Sunday was not always the one which had been appointed by the Romish Church after the new calculations. Thus it happened that King Oswy was eight days in advance of his wife, and complained of having to rejoice alone in the resurrection of Christ, while the queen was still commemorating the commencement of the passion in the services for Palm Sunday.

On this diversity, then, which was in appearance so slight and trifling, turned the great dispute between the Celtic and Roman monks, between those who had first begun the conversion of the Anglo-Saxons, and those who had so happily completed it. It is amazing to note the vehemence and the duration of a dispute so bitter on a subject so insignificant. Certainly there was something painful in being unable to persuade the new believers to celebrate the greatest festival of their religion on the same day; but, on the other hand, it is evident that all these Catholics must have been profoundly agreed as to the important questions of faith and practice, since they could attach so much weight to a difference of astronomical calculation.

Moderation of the Romish Church during all this struggle.

Let us at the same time remark that throughout this controversy the Roman Church displayed an exemplary moderation, and always acted in conformity with the paternal instructions given by St. Gregory the Great to St. Augustin. She did not impose upon Wilfrid the mission he had taken upon himself. It was not at Rome, but at Lyons, that he received that tonsure which the Romans themselves do not seem to have taken much pains about. Rome never treated as schismatics or heretics those Celtic dissidents, the most illustrious of whom,

Columbanus of Luxeuil and Aïdan of Lindisfarne, have always had a place in her martyrology. She never proceeded otherwise than by way of counsel and exhortation, without insisting on violent measures, and patiently awaiting the returning calm of excited spirits, giving to all an example of prudence, moderation, and charity.³⁴

On the other hand, it is clearly evident that under the veil of a question purely ritual, was hidden one of political and personal influence. The precocious greatness of Wilfrid and his ambitious fervor might well awaken hostility among the clergy and nobles of Northumbria; his pretensions, which seemed so many audacious innovations, were of a kind to wound a people but recently converted, and instinctively inclined to attach great importance to the external forms of the new faith. But it was above all a struggle of race and influence. On one side the Celtic spirit, proud, independent, and passionate, of which the great Abbot of Iona was the type, and of which his sons, the apostles of Northumbria, were the representatives; on the other, the spirit of Rome, the spirit of discipline and authority, imperfectly personified by its first envoys, Augustine and Paulinus, but endowed with a very different degree of vigor and missionary energy, since the moment when an Anglo-Saxon of the type of Wilfrid had constituted himself its champion. England was the stake of this game. All the future of that Christianity which had been so laboriously planted in the island, depended on its issue.

It is this which gives a truly historical interest to the famous conference of Whitby, convoked by King Oswy, for the purpose of regulating and terminating the dispute which troubled his kingdom and the neighboring countries. He desired that the question should be publicly debated in his presence, and in that of the Witenagemot, or parliament, composed not only of the principal ecclesiastics and laymen of the country, but of all those who had a right to sit in the national councils of the Anglo-

A competition for influence mingles with the ritualistic dispute.

Parliament of Whitby. 664.

³⁴ "Der Römische Stuhl benahm sich im ganzen auch hier mit der ihm eigenen unsichtigen Weisheit und Liberalität." This is the testimony rendered by the illustrious Döllinger in his excellent account of this controversy, Handbuch der Kirchengeschichte, i. 2, 227. The learned historiographer of the Irish Church, Lanigan, professor of theology at Pavia, who wrote about 1828, quotes the excesses of the ultra-orthodox English converts, who would admit nothing to be good, or even tolerable, except what was practised at Rome, even in matters which the Romans themselves held of no importance, vol. iii. p. 68.

Composition of the assembly.

Saxons. It is to be remarked that here, for the first time in the history of these assemblies, a sort of division into two chambers like that which has become the fundamental principle of parliamentary institutions is visible. Bede states that the king consulted the nobles and the commoners, those who were seated and those who stood round, precisely like the lords and commons of our own days.³⁵

The Celtic
party.

The place chosen for the assembly was on the sea-coast, and in the centre of the two Northumbrian kingdoms, at Streaneshalch or Whitby, in the double monastery of monks and nuns governed by the illustrious Hilda, a princess of the Northumbrian blood-royal, who was now fifty years of age, and thus joined to the known sanctity of her life³⁶ maturity of age and experience sufficient for the government of souls. Although baptized by Bishop Paulinus at the time of the first Romish mission to the court of her grand-uncle King Edwin, she was completely devoted to Celtic traditions, doubtless from attachment to the sainted Bishop Aidan, from whom she had received the veil. Her whole community were of the same party which had been hitherto favored by King Oswy, and was naturally represented by Colman, Bishop of Lindisfarne, at that time the only prelate in the vast kingdom of Northumbria. He, with all his Celtic clergy, attended the council, as well as Cedd, a monk of Lindisfarne, who had become Bishop of the East Saxons, among whom he had re-established the episcopal see of London, after the expulsion of the Romish missionaries. Bishop Cedd, Anglo-Saxon by birth, but educated in Ireland before he became a monk in the Hiberno-Scottish monastery of Lindisfarne,³⁷ was to act as interpreter in the conference between the Celts on one side and those who spoke only Latin or English on the other, and he acquitted himself of these functions with a most watchful impartiality.

³⁵ "Hæc dicente rege, elevatis in cælum manibus, faverunt adsidentes quique, sive adstantes, majores una cum mediocribus." — BEDE. "Beisitzende und umstehende, Adel und Gemeine." — LAPPENBERG, p. 165. This reminds one of the famous passage of Tacitus: "De minoribus rebus principes consultant; de majoribus omnes: ita tamen, ut ea quoque quorum penes plebem arbitrium est, apud principes pertractentur." — De Mor. Germ.

³⁶ "Præsenti Sancta-Monialii piissima Hilda." Such is the testimony borne to her by Eddi, the biographer of Wilfrid, whose adversary she always was.

³⁷ At least this is to be supposed from the comparison of different passages of Bede (iii. 23, 28; iv. 3), on the youth of the two brother bishops, Cedd and Ceadda.

The side opposed to the Celts had at its head the young King Alchfrid and the Bishop Agilbert; the latter, though educated in Ireland, not having hesitated to embrace the cause of those Roman customs which prevailed in France, his native country. Wilfrid was the soul of the discussion he had so warmly desired, and its special orator: he appeared in the arena in all the glow of youth and talent, but supported by two venerable representatives of Roman missions to England—the priest Romanus, who had accompanied the Queen from Canterbury; and James, the aged, courageous, and modest deacon, sole relic and sole surviving witness of the first conversion of Northumbria under the father of Eanfleda, who had remained alone, after the flight of St. Paulinus, for nearly forty years, evangelizing Northumbria and observing Easter according to the Roman custom, with all those whom he had preserved or restored to the faith.

All being assembled, perhaps in one of the halls of the great monastery of St. Hilda, but more likely, from the great numbers, in the open air on the green platform which then, as now, surmounted the abrupt cliffs of Whitby, and from whence the eye wanders far over those waves which bore the Saxons to the shores of Great Britain; King Oswy opened the proceedings by saying that as they all served the same God and hoped for the same heaven, it was advisable that they should follow the same rule of life and the same observance of the holy sacraments, and that it would therefore be well to examine which was the true tradition they ought to follow. He then commanded his bishop, Colman, to speak first, to explain his ritual, and to justify its origin. "I have," said the Bishop of Lindisfarne, "received the Pascal usage which I follow from my predecessors who placed me here as bishop; all our fathers have observed the same custom; these fathers and their predecessors, evidently inspired by the Holy Ghost, as was Columba of the Cell, followed the example of John the apostle and evangelist, who was called the friend of our Lord. We keep Easter as he did, as did Polycarp and all his disciples of old. In reverence for our ancestors we dare not, and we will not, change."³⁸ Then the king gave leave to Agilbert to speak, that he might describe the reasons of his

The Roman party.

The king opens the conference.

³⁸ "Patres nostri et antecessores eorum manifeste Spiritu Sancto inspirati, ut erat Columelle. . . . Nec hoc audemus pro patribus nostris, nec volumus mutare." — EDDIUS, c. 10.

